have been able to find in the Reports, is in Territory v. Benoit, 1 Mart. (La.) 142, by the supreme court of Louisiana. The indictment was for a capital offense, and the motion was to have the defendant bailed. The court said: "It cannot be done. Bail is never allowed in offenses punishable by death, when the proof is evident or the presumption great." In Hight v. United States, reported in Morris (Iowa) 407, 43 Am. Dec. 111, Mr. Chief Justice Mason, speaking of this provision as it appears in the ordinance of 1787, says: "The ordinance of 1787, the benefits of which have been transmitted to us, declares that 'all persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great.' . . .

prisoner is to be bailed or not rests in the discretion of the court. But this discretion is a judicial discretion, and the court should be guided in its exercise by the circumstances of the case, and the rules of law applicable to such circumstances. People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. 168.

The courts possess the power to let to bail for murder, even after indictment, but they never exercise it unless, after a trial and a disagreement of the jury, there appears to be great doubt of a conviction ever being obtained. Re Collins, 11 Abb. Pr. 406.

Where the right to bail in capital cases has not been embodied in the fundamental law, the duty of affording protection in proper cases is nevertheless imperative, and in determining whether the particular case is proper or not, the constitutional principle of sister states in favor of liberty may be adopted, and bail be allowed unless the proof is evident or the presumption great. People v. Perry, supra.

The court will in all cases, capital or otherwise, exercise its discretionary powers, and admit to bail when, from the testimony under which the accused is held, it is indifferent whether he is innocent or guilty, —in other words when, upon an examination of the testimony, the presumption of guilt is not strong; and they are particularly called upon to bail in all cases when the presumptions are decidedly in favor of the innocence of the accused. People v. Baker, 10 How. Pr. 567; People v. Hylar, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570.

b. Constitutional rule.

In most of the states of the United States, the rule of the common law, as is pointed out in Re Thomas, has been materially modified in all except capital offenses, by constitutional enactments providing that all persons shall be entitled to bail unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Under such Constitutions the accused, even in a capital case, is entitled to bail as a matter of right, where the proof of his guilt is not evident or the presumption not great.

The ordinance of 1787, the benefits of which have been transmitted to us, declares that "all persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses where the proof shall be evident or the presumption great." Hight v. United States, Morris (Iowa) 407, 43 Am. Dec. 111.

"All persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great." Declaration of Rights, § 17. See also Code of 1876, § 4842." Ex parte Nettles, 58 Ala. 268.

The defendant is entitled to bail as a matter of right, unless the court is of opinion, on the evidence, that he is guilty of murder in the degree which may be punished capitally, that is, in the first degree. Ala. Const. art. I. § 17. Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 89.

The proof not being evident or the presumption great that the accused is guilty of the offense of murder punishable capitally, he is entitled to bail. Ex parte Dykes, 83 Ala. 114, 3 So. 306.

The 16th section of the Arkansas Declaration of Rights provides "that all prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless in capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great." Ex parte White, 9 Ark. 222.

Where the proof is not evident or the presumption strong of the guilt of the accused, he is entitled to bail in Indiana. Ex parte Walton, 79 Ind. 600; Ex parte Kendall, 100 Ind. 599.

In Kentucky the accused is entitled to bail on the charge of murder where the proof is not evident or the presumption great. Ullery v. Com. 8 B. Mon. 3.

One accused of a capital offense in Louisiana may be admitted to bail if the proof of the crime is not evident or the presumption great. State v. Zummo, 115 La. Ann. 456, 39 So. 442.

In Missouri every offense is bailable except capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Shore v. State, 6 Mo. 640,

This is no new provision, but is in express terms incorporated into the Constitutions of at least one half of the states of the Union, and is the rule of action in all the rest. It is merely declaratory of the common law of the United States."

By the common law all offenses, including treason, murder, and other felonies, were bailable before indictment found. Certain restrictions were, however, enforced upon justices of the peace concerning their right to let to bail; but in the court of King's bench bail was not a matter of right in capital felonies, being limited by judicial discretion exercised according to the degree of proof of guilt. Rex v. Marks, 3 East, 157; Ex parte Baronnet, 16 Eng. L. & Eq. Rep. 361; 2 Hale, P. C. 129.

These principles of the common law are materially modified, in all except capital offenses, by our constitutional provision quoted above, and now, instead of all cases being bailable in the discretion of the court, and not as a matter of right, under § 17 of the Bill of Rights all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, as a matter of right, except for capital offenses when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. "If the offense is not shown by evident proof or great presumption to be one for the commission of which the law inflicts capital punishment, bail is not a matter of mere discretion with the court, but of right of the prisoner." Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

The policy pervading our jurisprudence

The 8th section of the Mississippi Bill of Rights introduces a material modification of the common law. It makes bailable all crimes "except capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great." Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

Under the Bill of Rights, bail before conviction is a matter of right, and not of discretion, for all offenses except those that are capital "where the proof is evident or the presumption great." Ibid.

In Montana all persons are bailable by sufficient sureties except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great. (Const. art. III. § 19.) State ex rel. Murray v. District Ct. 35 Mont. 504, 90 Pac. 513.

Any person charged with an offense punishable with death has the right, in Nevada, to be admitted to bail before conviction, if the proof of his guilt is not evident or the presumption of it is not great. Ex parte Finlen, 20 Nev. 141, 18 Pac. 827.

The Constitution of Ohio, in article 8, § 12, provides "that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses, where the proof is evident or the presumption great." State v. Summons, 19 Ohio, 139.

In § 8, article 2, of the Oklahoma Constitution, persons charged with capital offenses are bailable by sufficient sureties, except when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. Ex parte Westmoreland, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 512, 103 Pac. 370.

In § 5770, Willson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, the accused in a capital case is entitled to bail on habeas corpus, where the evidence shows that the proof of guilt is not evident and the presumption of guilt is not great. Ex parte Holland, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 581, 100 Pac. 50.

All persons are bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. Ex parte Watson, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 595, 99 Pac. 161.

The clause in the Constitution of 1798, copied in the Pennsylvania Declaration of Rights, provides that "all prisoners shall 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great." Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittab. 362.

By the 9th section of the Bill of Rights in the Constitution of the state of Texas, it is provided that "all prisoners shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident or presumption great." (O. & W. Dig. 14.) McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520; Ex parte Evers, 29 Tex. App. 539, 16 S. W. 343.

In Texas, if it is not evident that the accused is guilty as charged, he is entitled to bail. Re Wilson, — Tex. App. —, 13 S. W. 609; Ex parte Cosby, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 54 S. W. 587.

The purpose of the constitutional provision that "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great," is to secure the right to bail in all cases except those in which the facts and circumstances show with reasonable certainty that the accused is guilty of a capital offense. Ex parte Nathan, — Fla. —, 50 So. 38.

If the proof is not evident and the presumption is not great that the defendant is guilty of the crime charged, he is entitled to bail as a matter of right. State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468.

Where, upon the evidence introduced at the hearing on the application for bail, the appellate court cannot say that the accused is guilty of murder in the first degree, he is entitled to bail as a matter of right, in Alabama. Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 89.

Under a constitutional provision that "all persons shall be bailable upon sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where proof is evident or presumption great," the accused is entitled to bail as a matter of right where the proof is not evident or the presumption great. State v. Kauffman, 20 S. D. 620, 108 N. W. 246.

A constitutional provision that "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, is to commit as little as possible to judicial discretion, presuming that "that system of laws is best which confides as little as possible to the discretion of the judge, —that judge is best who relies as little as possible upon his own opinion." In pursuance to this policy, even since the provisions, "that all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great," became a part of the settled constitutional and statutory law of nearly all the states of the Union, the courts have endeavored, with more or less success, to formulate some stable rule to guide their judgment in cases like the one at bar. Thus it was said by the court of common pleas of Philadelphia county in an early case, construing exactly the same provision in the Pennsylvania Constitution: "A safe rule, where a malicious homicide is charged, is to refuse bail in all cases where a judge would sustain a capital conviction if pronounced by a jury on such evidence of guilt as was exhibited to him on the hearing of the application to admit to bail." Com. ex rel. Chauncey v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227.

This doctrine is approved in a per curiam opinion in Re Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231, where the court adopts the above excerpt from the Pennsylvania case as part of its syllabus. Simrall, J., in Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1, cites the rule laid down in the same case, approvingly, saying:

unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumptions great," guarantees the right to bail before trial in capital cases, unless the proof of the commission of the capital offense is evident or the presumption thereof is great. State ex rel. West v. Collins, 10 N. D. 464, 88 N. W. 88; 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 41.

One charged with a capital offense is entitled to bail as an absolute right, "unless the proof of guilt is evident or presumption thereof great." State v. Hartzell, 13 N. D. 356, 100 N. W. 745.

Where, on the application for bail, the testimony on the subject of incentive was of such a character as to induce the belief that it was not a case in which proof was evident or the presumption great, the prisoner was held entitled to bail. Zembrod v. State, 25 Tex. 519.

Where an indictment against the accused is framed with reference to a statute under which the defendant cannot be convicted for a higher offense than murder in the second degree, although he may be guilty of murder in the first degree, and although he might have been convicted on that evidence under an indictment for murder framed according to common law or the Code, he is entitled to the bail as a matter of right. Ex parte Howard, 30 Ala. 43.

The accused is entitled to bail as a matter of right, when the only evidence against him is circumstantial, unless it excludes to a moral certainty every reasonable hypothesis but that of his guilt. Ex parte Acree, 63 Ala. 234.

In Ex parte Rothschild, 2 Tex. App. 560, the defendant was refused bail although the evidence against him was circumstantial.

A statute providing that "no person charged with the commission of an offense capitally punished shall be admitted to bail as a matter of right, when he is not tried at the first term of the court at which he was properly triable, if the failure to try his case proceeded from the nonattendance of the state's witnesses, where an affidavit is made satisfactorily accounting for their absence," etc., does not entitle the accused as a matter of right to admission to bail 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the absence of such affidavit. Ex parte Chaney, 8 Ala. 424.

As stated in Re Thomas, where the proof of the defendant's guilt is evident or the presumption is great, although bail may still be granted, it is not a matter of right, but a matter of discretion.

If the proof is evident or the presumption great, if the evidence is clear and strong, leaving a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that the offense has been committed, that the accused is the guilty agent, and that he would probably be punished capitally if the law is administered, bail is not a matter of right. Ex parte McAnally, 53 Ala. 495, 25 Am. Rep. 646.

All persons have the constitutional right to be bailed, except when the proof is positive or the presumption great that they have been guilty of a capital offense; and even when the proof against them is of this character, they may be admitted to bail within the sound discretion of the presiding judge, if there be exceptional circumstances that seem to demand it, such as serious and probably fatal injury to health, or unusual and protracted delay upon the part of the state in bringing the prisoner to trial. Ex parte Bridewell, 57 Miss. 39.

A constitutional provision that "excessive bail shall not be required, and all persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or presumption great" (Bill of Rights, § 8), makes the granting of bail mandatory in all cases not excluded by the exception, but does not prohibit it in cases falling within the exception. Ibid.

A constitutional provision that "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great," does not forbid bail in a capital case where the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. The Constitution is silent as to granting or withholding bail in a capital case where the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. On the one hand, the Constitution

"There is much force in the words of the Pennsylvania court in the case of Com. ex rel. Chauncey v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 234." Street v. State, supra, was in the supreme court on a writ of error issued to the district court of Yazoo county, and Justice Simrall stated as a reason for adopting the Pennsylvania rule, that "it would be going very far in the appellate court to reverse the judgment of the court who saw, heard, and observed the witnesses." Ohio, in State v. Summons, 19 Ohio, 139, Indiana, in Lumm v. State, 3 Ind. 293, California, Re Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231, Texas, in Ex parte Foster, 5 Tex. App. 625, 32 Am. Rep. 577, and possibly one or two other cases, refer to the Pennsylvania case approvingly. But most of these cases were in the supreme courts on appeal, and in others of them the rule has since been disapproved by the highest courts of the same states.

Another line of decisions hold that the terms, "when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great," are as definite to the legal mind as any words of explanation could make them. In the states where this rule prevails, the courts, when they refuse bail, do so with the statement "that bail should be refused where the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great;" and when bail is granted, by the statement, "that where the proof of guilt is not evident, nor the presumption thereof great, bail should be allowed in capital cases." Thus, in Cali-itself does not give the right to bail in the class of cases last mentioned; and on the other hand, the Constitution does not inhibit the legislature from doing so. State v. Collins, 10 N. D. 464, 88 N. W. 88, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 41.

Although the facts presented to the court on the application for bail as a matter of right may not be sufficient to entitle the accused thereto, this does not mean that he may not present facts which might move the court to admit him to bail as a matter of discretion. Ibid.

In case the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great, the granting or refusal of bail is a matter of judicial discretion. State v. Hartzell, 13 N. D. 356, 100 N. W. 745.

Prisoners charged with offenses punishable by death are not admitted to bail in Minnesota where the proof is evident or the presumption great. State v. Bartlett, 70 Minn. 199, 72 N. W. 1067.

A statute rendering the admission to bail a matter of discretion where the punishment is death, and forbidding admission to bail when the proof is evident or the presumption great, conflicts with a constitutional provision that "all persons shall be bailable by sufficient securities, unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident and the presumption great." People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77.

III. Who may admit to bail.

As has been pointed out, it is the court of King's bench in England which has the power to grant or refuse bail. See supra, II. a.

In Arkansas, judges of the county courts, justices of the peace and sheriffs have no authority to admit to bail in capital cases after indictment. Ex parte Kittrel, 20 Ark. 499. The court said: "The finding of an indictment against a person after a capital offense raises such presumption of his guilt, for the purpose of capture and detention for trial, as to preclude him from the right of bail until the presumption thus 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) raised against him is rebutted by an affirmative showing on his part. To hear the showing and determine upon the sufficiency in cases of so much magnitude is a matter of the greatest importance, both to the accused and to the state, and would seem to be the appropriate province of the court or judge intrusted, by the Constitution, with the trial of such causes; and in the absence of any clear and explicit act attempting to confer upon inferior officers authority to hear and determine a matter of so much consequence in the progress of capital cases, we are disposed to doubt that such was the intention of the legislature."

A judge of the circuit court only has power, after indictment for a capital offense, to grant bail, and he can make an order in term time or vacation. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Williams, 97 Ark. 243, 133 S. W. 1017.

In State v. Abbot, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 244, it was held that a judge of the superior court of Georgia may exercise all the powers in relation to bail which appertain to the court of King's bench of England or a judge thereof in vacation.

A circuit court commissioner has power to admit to bail a respondent committed for trial upon a charge of murder in the first degree, except in cases where the proof is evident or the presumption great. Elder v. Garner, 97 Mich. 617, 55 N. W. 460.

In People v. Shattuck, 6 Abb. N. C. 33, the court said that the power of the superior court of the city of Buffalo to bail in a capital case was undisputable, and that this power was incident to the power to hear and determine the case.

The power of the supreme court, or of a justice thereof, to bail in all cases, whether it be treason, murder, arson, or any other offense, is indisputable. People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. 158; People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27.

The court of general sessions, like the court of King's bench, has the power of bailing in all cases. State v. Hill, 3 Brev. 89.

The Supreme Court of the United States has power to admit to bail on a charge of fornia, in Ex parte Walpole, 85 Cal. 362, 24 Pac. 657, Fox, J., without commenting on the rule laid down in Re Troia, supra, says: "On the question of admission to bail, the offense charged is punishable with death, unless the jury fix it at imprisonment for life. The defendant, therefore, cannot be admitted to bail if the proof of his guilt is evident or the presumption thereof great." Colorado, Kansas, Kentucky, and Texas in several cases have followed this rule.

This court does not look with favor on either of the above rules. The first one seems to us to be unmindful of the inherent right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness of the citizen, and casts burdens upon those charged with capital offenses high treason. United States v. Hamilton, 3 Dall. 17, 1 L. ed. 490.

The judiciary act of 1789 provides that the Supreme Court or a judge of a district court of the United States may, in any case, even in capital punishment, taking into consideration all the circumstances, admit to bail, exercising a sound discretion. If an indictment was found against the prisoner under a law by which he could not be punished with death, then, as a matter of right, he could give bail. Re Davis, Chase, Dec. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 3,821a.

In Rex v. Fortier, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 13 B. R. 251, 1 Ann. Cas. 10, a forgery case, it is said: "All superior courts of criminal jurisdiction or one of their judges, and also in this province a judge of the superior court, have authority and power to admit persons accused of any crime whatsoever (including treason and capital offenses), to bail; but, as respects indictable offenses which, before the enacting of the Criminal Code, were felonies, it is within their discretion to admit or refuse the application for bail; while with respect to indictable offenses which were formerly misdemeanors, it must be allowed, as the accused is entitled to it as a matter of right. In all cases except misdemeanors, the granting or refusing bail is a matter which rests in the sound discretion of the court or judge, and is not as of right."

An appeal does not lie from a judgment of the district court refusing bail. Yarbrough v. State, 2 Tex. 519.

A prisoner charged with an offense punishable by death cannot be admitted to bail by a justice of the peace, in Minnesota. State v. Bartlett, 70 Minn. 199, 72 N. W. 1067.

In Oklahoma, a justice of the peace is without authority of law to admit to bail upon arrests in criminal cases where the punishment may be death. Section 5770, Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. (Okla.) 1903, provides: "Bail, by sufficient sureties, may be admitted upon all arrests in criminal cases where the punishment may be death, unless the proof is evident or the presumption great; and in such cases it shall be not contemplated by the law. The second is too general to be useful as a guide to the judgment of the court in weighing the evidence when the liberty of the citizen is in the balance. Primarily a person charged with a capital offense cannot demand bail as a matter of right, since, upon ascertaining the character of the charge against the accused, the next question would be as to the degree of proof and the nature of the presumption of guilt. Upon an application to the supreme court for bail, by writ of habeas corpus, after commitment for a capital offense by a justice of the peace, the burden is upon the petitioner to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty. Ex parte Hammock, 78 Ala. 414; Ex parte Rhear, 77 Ala. 92; Ex parte taken only by the supreme court or a district court or by a justice or judge thereof. . . ." Ex parte Westmoreland, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 512, 103 Pac. 370.

IV. Bail before indictment.

On the question of bail before indictment, the examination before the coroner should be looked into to ascertain whether a crime has been committed, and, if so, the strength of the proof to support it. People v. Beigler, 3 Park. Crim. Rep. 316.

In all cases, on habeas corpus, previous to indictment, the court will look into the depositions before the magistrate, or before the coroner's inquest, and, though the commitment be full and in due form, yet, if the testimony proves no crime, the court will discharge or bail; and though the commitment be defective, yet, if the deposition contain evidence of an offense not bailable, the prisoner will be remanded. Savage, Ch. J., in Ex parte Taylor, 5 Cow. 39.

Where the examination before the coroner shows that, although the defendant is charged with murder, his crime, if any, does not exceed the grade of manslaughter, and fair doubt exists whether the defendant has committed any felony, he should be admitted to bail. People v. Beigler, supra.

The court may refuse to admit to bail although the coroner's jury has failed to charge a felonious homicide. State v. Abbot, R. M. Charlit. (Ga.) 244.

The fact that the charge against the accused has been presented to the grand jury, which has failed to find an indictment, does not necessarily entitle him to bail. The court said: "Ordinarily, the fact that a grand jury has investigated the charge and refused to find a bill ought to be sufficient to satisfy a court that the proof is not evident nor the presumption great, but, notwithstanding such action upon the part of the grand jury, the court, in a case like this, would have the right, and it would be its duty, upon the application of petitioner, to hear the testimony and decide for itself whether the proof of the defendant's guilt was evident or the presumption great. This Vaughan, 44 Ala. 417. On this question there is little conflict in the authorities. Alabama, California, Florida, Indiana, Nevada, New Jersey, New York, Utah, and Wyoming all support the proposition. Texas seems to be the only state placing the burden of proof upon the state to show that the offense is a capital one and that the proof is evident; but even there the doctrine of the text prevailed until it was upset in the case of Ex parte Newman, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 164, 70 Am. St. Rep. 740, 41 S. W. 628.

We believe that, with the burden of proof on the petitioners, if, after hearing the whole evidence introduced on the application for bail, it is insufficient to generate in the mind of the court a reasonable doubt whether the accused committed the act charged, and in doing so they were guilty of a capital offense, bail should be refused. But we do not wish to be understood as laying this down as a hard and fast rule, to which there may be no exceptions. There may be exceptional circumstances, such as the serious and probably fatal injury to health, or unusual and protracted delay upon the part of the state in bringing the prisoner to trial, that may warrant the court hearing all the evidence to admit to bail, when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof is great. The admission to bail, however, under these circumstances, is not a constitutional right, but a matter resting in the sound judicial discretion of the trial judge, who should not is a question upon which courts and judges are invested with a legal discretion, which is, at all time, to be exercised with sound judgment, upon a full consideration of all the facts and circumstances of each particular case; and when it appears that the presiding judge has acted, no other judge would be warranted in discharging the petitioner or admitting him to bail, unless it clearly appeared that the presiding judge had acted arbitrarily in the premises, and thereby abused his discretion. Ex parte Isbell, 11 Nev. 295.

V. Bail upon indictment.

Under the common-law practice, bail was generally refused after indictment, because the court could not know on what evidence the grand jury acted. Under Constitutions containing the usual provisions with reference to bail, some courts hold that the accused will be admitted to bail after indictment, the indictment rendering the presumption of the defendant's guilt sufficiently great to prevent him from demanding his release as a matter of right.

At common-law, bail, it appears, in all felonies, was a matter of discretion in the court of King's bench. The return of the officer holding the person in custody was conclusive of the facts stated in the return. Before indictment found, an inquiry was had based upon certain written testimony taken on preliminary examinations, but after an indictment for a capital offense, the accused was presumed guilty for all purposes, except that of a trial before a petit jury; and this presumption was so strong as to preclude the party to bail unless in very exceptional cases. The usual practice was to deny bail after a grand jury had returned an indictment for a capital offense, and this practice was based upon the consideration that the testimony before the grand jury was not preserved, and never permitted to be divulged. Rigdon v. State, 41 Fla. 308, 26 So. 711.

The practice of the courts and judges under the habeas corpus act of Charles II., and of the American courts and judges 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where the common law was not modified, was to remand to custody where the return showed that the prisoner was under indictment for a capital crime, and they would not hear affidavits or witnesses in exculpation. Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

The "usages of the law" had so shaped and regulated the discretion of the courts that generally bail was denied after indictment for a felony, unless some special motive was shown, though the felony was not capitally punished; and that in capital cases the motive or reason for bail must arise in point of time after indictment, such as the delay by the prosecution to bring on the trial, the danger to the life of the accused occasioned by the imprisonment, etc. Ibid.

According to the English practice, the court looks alone to the written evidence under which the defendant is held, and cannot receive extrinsic testimony; all offenses are bailable before indictment, unless from an examination of the depositions taken before the committing magistrate, it appears that the defendant is guilty of a capital felony; and after an indictment for an offense punishable capitally, the court cannot inquire into the merits, for the reason that the evidence on which the indictment was found is not in writing, and, if it were, could not be disclosed, and the court, having no means of ascertaining otherwise, will therefore always imply that the grand jury has not indicted on insufficient proof, and so refuse to bail. Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

At the present day, bail is usually refused in England after the grand jury have returned a true bill for murder. Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittsb. 362.

The court will not admit the prisoner to bail after the grand jury has found an indictment against him for murder. Reg. v. Chapman, 8 Car. & P. 558.

In Reg. v. Guttridge, 9 Car. & P. 228, the court refused to bail the accused after indictment for rape.

After an indictment is found, the court will not go behind it, to inquire into the merits. Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

grant it save under extraordinary circumstances. The rule herein laid down is supported by an array of well-settled cases. Those we particularly rely on are Ex parte McAnally, 53 Ala. 495, 25 Am. Rep. 646; Ex parte Bridewell, 57 Miss. 39; Ex parte Smith, 23 Tex. App. 100, 5 S. W. 99. In Ex parte McAnally, Brickell, Ch. J., states the rule thus: "If the evidence is clear and strong, leading a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that the offense has been committed, that the accused is the guilty agent, and that he would probably be punished capitally if the law is administered, bail is not a matter of right." In Ex parte Bridewell, Chalmers, J., states the rule as follows: "Upon an application for bail by writ of habeas corpus, the burden is upon the relator to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty. . . . If, upon the whole testimony adduced . . . [the court] entertains a reasonable doubt whether the relator committed the act, or whether in so doing he was guilty of a capital crime, he should admit him to bail in such sum and with such sureties as will in his opinion certainly insure his appearance."

We wish here to quote with approval the language of Chalmers, J., in rejecting the Pennsylvania rule laid down in Com. ex rel. Chauncey v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227: "The error of the Pennsylvania rule is in failing to give due effect to a verdict of conviction, or in overlooking the vast change it effects in Admission to bail cannot be claimed as a matter of right under an indictment for a capital offense. Ex parte White, 9 Ark. 222.

An indictment furnishes no presumption of guilt against a prisoner when he is upon his trial; but so far as it regards all intermediate proceedings between the indictment and trial, it furnishes the very strongest possible presumption of guilt, if a grand jury is the appropriate organ of the law to decide in the first instance upon the guilt or innocence of the accused, and their finding of a true bill is conclusive, so far as to put him upon his trial and to control all the intermediate proceedings. Hight v. United States, Morris (Iowa) 407, 43 Am. Dec. 111.

A habeas corpus act providing that "the officer before whom the party shall be brought on such writ shall immediately after the return thereof proceed to examine into the facts contained in such return and into the cause of the confinement or restraint of such party; whether the same shall have been upon commitment for any criminal or supposed criminal matter or not," — was held to contemplate cases where no indictment had been found. Ibid.

In Louisiana the court will not go into the merits of the case after the finding of an indictment against a prisoner charged with a capital crime, except under circumstances of the most extraordinary character. State v. Merrick, 10 La. Ann. 424.

The constitutional provision that all persons shall be bailable, unless for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great, is common to every Constitution this state has had, and its uniform judicial interpretation has been that the finding of a bill for a capital offense creates a presumption of guilt sufficiently strong to preclude further inquiry into the merits of the prisoner's defense on an application for bail, and this presumption extends to all purposes except to that of a fair and impartial trial before a petit jury. State ex rel. Hunter v. Brewster, 35 La. Ann. 605.

The fact that a grand jury has found a bill for a capital offense is of itself a sufficient presumption of guilt to preclude an inquiry into the merits of the prisoner's case upon a habeas corpus, or upon an application to be bailed. Ibid. To the same effect. State ex rel. Rice v. Butler, 40 La. Ann. 3, 3 So. 350.

In Territory v. Benoit, 1 Mart. (La.) 142, it was held that after indictment for a capital offense the prisoner could not be bailed. The court said: "Bail is never allowed in offenses punishable by death when the proof is evident or the presumption great. On a coroner's inquest finding a person guilty of a capital crime, the judges have often looked into the testimony which the coroner is bound to record, and when they have been of opinion that the jurors had drawn an illogical conclusion, admitted the party to bail. But as the evidence before the grand jury is not written, and cannot be disclosed, the same discretion and control cannot be exercised, and the judges cannot help considering the finding of the grand jury as too great a presumption of the defendant's guilt to bail him. We recollect no case in which it was done."

Affidavits or oral testimony as to the guilt or innocence of the accused cannot be received to repel the presumption of guilt arising from the indictment, unless special and extraordinary circumstances exist to require it. People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77.

The granting of bail after indictment in the exceptional cases is a matter of discretion on the part of the court. Territory v. McFarlane, 1 Mart. (La.) 216, 5 Am. Dec. 706.

Bail will not be allowed after indictment, where the accused stood by and saw a companion beat the deceased with a stick, and urged him to beat the deceased well, it appearing that the accused and his companion were gamblers who had been informed against by the deceased, and it not being shown how the assailant's anger was excited. Ibid.

When the grand jury find a bill for a capital offense, the party charged lies, from the finding alone, under such a violent the attitude of the party. By it the legal presumption of innocence is overthrown, all doubtful questions of fact are resolved in favor of the state, and the credibility or noncredibility of witnesses is conclusively established." "A verdict of conviction where no error of law has intervened will never be set aside unless manifestly wrong, or, as is sometimes said, if there be any evidence to support it. To say that bail will only be granted where there is no evidence showing guilt, or where the proof of guilt is so slight upon the whole testimony that a conviction would be manifestly wrong, is plainly inconsistent with the constitutional requirement that it shall be granted in all cases except where the proof is evident or the presumption great."

suspicion of guilt that the court will instantly commit him, if he be present, or direct a capias against him; and as the trial in the ordinary course is not long delayed, it is the practice of the court not to lend its ear to a motion for bail. Ibid.

Upon an application for bail, the court cannot go behind the indictment. People v. McLeod, 1 Hill, 377, 37 Am. Dec. 328.

The court cannot after indictment look beyond the minutes of the grand jury. People v. Shattuck, 6 Abb. N. C. 33.

Generally speaking, bail will be refused after indictment in any case where the punishment is death or a degrading imprisonment because the indictment makes a strong presumption of guilt, and experience teaches that in such cases the accused will attempt to elude the demands of justice. But where it stands indifferent, whether the prisoner be guilty or innocent, bail ought in most cases to be allowed. People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27.

In Burr's Trial, Colonel Burr was admitted to bail before indictment; and after the grand jury had returned a bill against him for treason, he again moved to be admitted to bail, and after considerable discussion, Chief Justice Marshall said that the act of Congress, in express terms, enabled the court to bail a prisoner arrested for treason. That there was no distinction between treason and other criminal cases, as to the power to bail upon arrest; but that an arrest might be after a finding by a grand jury, in which case the finding of the grand jury would be evidence on which the court would have to judge whether the party arrested ought to be bailed. That they were to exercise their discretion "according to the nature and circumstances of the offense, and of the evidence and usages of law." That "usages of law" were to be found in the common law and the practice of courts; but that he doubted extremely whether the court had the right to bail any person after an indictment for treason had been found against him by a grand jury, especially in a case where the government was heard with its testimony, and there were no extraordinary cir-

Both of the foregoing cases were reviewed in Ex parte Smith, supra. Mr. Justice Willson, speaking of the rule laid down in the case of McAnally, supra, said: "With regard to the second rule, it is not, as we can perceive, objectionable. It is, as we understand it, in harmony with the constitutional requirement that bail shall be granted unless the proof is evident. It is, in effect, the same rule stated as a correct one in Bridewell's Case, supra, but in different language."

We approve the Alabama rule, as stated in the McAnally Case, in the main; but we believe that the part reading, "and that he would probably be punished capitally if the law is administered," is a little more liberal in favor of the accused than a fair circumstances (as an alibi clearly proved) to repel the effect of the finding of the jury; and that he wished authorities produced to satisfy the court that it had the power.

The chief justice insisted on the production of authorities, and, none being produced by Colonel Burr or his counsel, the prisoner was committed. 1 Burr's Trial, 306, 312.

In a number of jurisdictions, however, the indictment does not furnish conclusive evidence that the proof of the defendant's guilt is evident or the presumption great.

The general rule is that bail will be refused after indictment in capital cases; for the indictment furnishes a strong presumption of guilt, and it is supposed the accused will almost always attempt to leave and elude the demands of justice. Hence, in all such cases there must be facts and circumstances which counteract or overcome this presumption, before bail will ever be admissible. Re Alexander, 59 Mo. 598, 21 Am. Rep. 393. To the same effect, Ex parte Goans, 99 Mo. 193, 17 Am. St. Rep. 571, 12 S. W. 635.

Under the Arkansas Constitution the court has the right to go behind an indictment for a capital offense to investigate the merits of the case with a view of letting the prisoner indicted to bail. Ex parte White, 9 Ark. 222.

The law requires the accused to make an affidavit of merits to warrant the court in going behind the indictment, and the affidavit must state the particular facts relied on. A general allegation of innocence is not sufficient. Ibid.

The court may in capital cases go behind the indictment on the application for bail. State v. Hill, 3 Brev. 89.

The petitioner is entitled, upon habeas corpus, where he is indicted for murder or other capital offense, to produce such evidence as may operate to convince the court that he is guilty, if at all, of an offense of such grade that he is entitled to be discharged on bail, or that there are such strong doubts that, upon the cases as presented, a jury should not convict of the capital offense. Finch v. State, 15 Fla. 633.

construction of the provision under discussion warrants. Under the statutes of Oklahoma the jury have the power in all cases of murder to determine whether the punishment shall be death or imprisonment for life; but this does not make the offense less capital. It would seem to us that a rule that would require the court to speculate as to what punishment a jury might probably inflict upon any given state of facts would be more harmful than helpful. Speaking of the rule of the Pennsylvania case, supra, Justice Willson, in Ex parte Smith, said: "With respect to the first rule, we are convinced that it is wrong and should no longer be recognized as a guide. It is ably and justly criticized in Bridewell's Case, 57 Miss. 39."

The indictment charging a capital offense is not conclusive upon such application, under the statute, as to the character of the testimony. Holley v. State, 15 Fla. 688, 2 Am. Crim. Rep. 250.

Until the decision in Wray's Case, 30 Miss. 681, the practice in that state was not uniform. In some of the circuits the judges held the indictment for a capital felony as raising conclusively the "presumption great," and declined to examine witnesses. Since Wray's Case, the practice has become uniform and evidence abounds the indictment is received and this has been considered as settled. Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

The accused is entitled to go behind the indictment to establish facts which he alleges, to show that his crime, if any, is not a capital offense, so as to entitle him to bail as a matter of right. Ex parte Finlen, 20 Nev. 141, 18 Pac. 827.

The prisoner may be admitted to bail after indictment, where the evidence produced at the hearing satisfies the judge that the offense is not capital. Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittsb. 362.

An indictment for murder in the first degree is not conclusive against bail, especially where the grand jury have no right to distinguish between the degrees of murder, so that the court cannot know whether the grand jury record the crime as murder in the first or second degree. Ibid.

The great weight of authority is in favor of the view that an indictment for a capital offense is strong prima facie showing that the accused is rightly held in custody, and not entitled to bail. That the indictment is not conclusive has been decided and fully recognized by this court. Rigdon v. State, 41 Fla. 308, 26 So. 711.

An indictment for murder duly returned implies prima facie that the parties indicted have no right to bail. Ex parte Kendall, 100 Ind. 599.

Under a Constitution in the usual form, the legislature cannot make an indictment conclusive evidence that the proof is evident or the presumption great, although it may be made prima facie evidence of

And the doctrine of this case is not without support from the courts where the common-law rule prevails. The law is laid down to the same effect in 4 Bl. Com. 299; and in Rex v. Marks, 3 East, 165, the rule is advanced in these cautious and qualified terms: "The court will bail whenever there is any doubt on the law or the facts in the case." And again in New York, a state following the common-law rule, we find the following in relation to a case similar to the one at bar: "If there be no reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt, he ought not to be bailed." Ex parte Tayloe, 5 Cow. 39. The same doctrine is sanctioned in State v. McNab, 20 N. H. 160, and State v. Rockafellow, 6 N. J. L. 332. The rule is practically the same in the Federal that fact. State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468.

The indictment, while not of itself conclusive against the right to bail, may be taken into consideration by the court, together with the evidence, in determining the question of admission to bail. It may, in a doubtful case, have the effect of turning the scale. It should not be entirely ignored, but it is a circumstance, like any other, to be taken into consideration for whatever effect in the light of the other facts, and together with them, it may have upon the mind of the court or judge. Ibid.

But where an indictment has been found, courts and judges should proceed with great caution in their examination of the facts, that the prisoner may not be improperly admitted to bail, and only in case he is clearly entitled to such relief. Lynch v. People, 38 Ill. 494.

The presumption is in favor of the correctness of the action of the grand jury. State v. Herndon, 107 N. C. 934, 12 S. E. 268.

An indictment returned by properly constituted authorities stands with all presumption in favor of its truth, until its force is broken by showing that the grand jury acted upon insufficient evidence. This showing may be made by fairly disclosing the knowledge of the witnesses of the state. Brown v. State, 147 Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34.

On the application for bail after indictment, the inquiry should not be limited to determining the probable degree of the homicide. Such inquiry should include the determination of the character of the proof, or the strength of the presumption respecting whether or not the defendant did the killing or was connected with it as a guilty agent. State v. Crocker, supra.

Under a statute (Code § 1161) providing "that any justice of the supreme court or judge of the superior or criminal court shall have power to bail persons committed to jail charged with crime in all cases," the court has the right to go behind the indictment and examine the evidence. The court said: "It may happen, courts: "On testimony given in court on the return of a writ of habeas corpus, if it is clear to the mind of the judge that a conviction for murder should not take place, he will order the prisoner to give bail for his appearance." United States v. The Marshal, 2 Hayw. & H. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 15,725a.

The point is made that, as there is a conflict in the testimony adduced at the hearing, the proof of guilt cannot be said to be evident or the presumption thereof great. This contention cannot be sustained. "To the mind of the tribunal passing upon the evidence the guilt of the applicant of a capital offense may be evident, that is, clear, strong, not admitting of a reasonable doubt, and yet there may be evidence in conflict with such inculpatory evidence. It is not all conflicting exculpatory evidence that will have the effect to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt, and destroy or and often does, that, upon hearing the state's evidence only, the conviction is ample to justify the grand jury in finding a true bill for murder; yet, upon the examination of the witnesses for both sides by a judge, upon the writ of habeas corpus, it may appear that there was no probable cause as to the charge of murder, but that it is a case of manslaughter, and therefore bailable, or excusable homicide, or it may be that there is no probable cause, upon the whole evidence, that the defendant was the guilty party. The defendant should not be deprived of this right guaranteed to him by the Constitution, and be compelled to lie in jail, probably for months, when an intelligent judge, upon hearing the whole evidence, the benefit of which is denied to a grand jury, might properly adjudge that there was no probable cause as to the capital offense at least, and admit the defendant to bail." State v. Herndon, supra.

The reasons for the English rule that bail should be refused after indictment, — that is, that the testimony before the grand jury is not obtainable, — is inapplicable in the United States, where the testimony before the grand jury is written and obtainable by the court; but the court may still deem the presumption of guilt raised by the indictment so strong as to bring the accused within the exception to the constitutional rule that all persons are entitled to bail. The strongest reason for not going behind the indictment seems to be that it practically necessitates a double trial. Texas furnishes many cases of this kind. See infra, VIII. c.

In Reg. v. Andrews, 2 Dowl. & L. 10, 1 New Sess. Cas. 199, 13 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 113, 8 Jur. 779, bail was refused after indictment for murder, on the ground that the court could not discover upon what evidence the jury acted.

In Mohun's Case, 1 Salk. 104, it is said that if a man be found guilty of murder by the coroner's inquest, the court sometimes bails him, because the coroner proceeds upon depositions taken in writing which the court may look into. Otherwise if a man be found guilty by the grand jury, because the court cannot take notice of their evidence, which they by their oaths are bound to conceal.

The prisoner cannot be admitted to bail after indictment, on affidavits tending to show that he was not guilty of the crime charged. State v. Dew, 1 N. C. 88 (Taylor, 142). The court said: "When a man is 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

found guilty by a coroner's inquest, the court may look into the depositions returned; and if it appear that the jury have drawn wrong inferences, may admit the prisoner to bail; but the secrecy which accompanies the evidence delivered to the grand jury precludes the court from knowing its amount."

Even before indictment the right of inquiry is limited to the depositions and proofs on which the commitment was ordered. People v. McLeod, 1 Hill, 377, 37 Am. Dec. 328.

Where the court has access to the minutes of the grand jury, the question of bail is open to consideration to the same extent as it would be if applied for before indictment, for the court can know on what testimony the indictment was found. People v. Hyler, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570.

In People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. 158, it is said: "The evidence taken by the grand jury is not now secret, and they are not by their oath required to conceal it. (2 Rev. Stat. 811, 3d ed. §§ 30, 31.) Grand juries now, under the provisions of the Revised Statutes (2 Rev. Stat. 811, § 30), appoint a clerk to take minutes of the evidence given before them, and these minutes are delivered to the district attorney. On an application to admit a prisoner to bail in a case of felony, after indictment, I see no more objection to the court's looking into the minutes of the evidence kept and preserved by the grand jury, and delivered by the district attorney, than there is in their looking into the depositions taken by a coroner or a committing magistrate, on a like application made before indictment. We therefore think that, under the Revised Statutes, an indictment should not, on an application to admit to bail, be regarded as any more conclusive as to the guilt of the prisoner, than the coroner's inquest or the adjudication of a committing magistrate."

In Hight v. United States, Morris (Iowa) 407, 43 Am. Dec. 111, it is said: "In the first place, the officer who issues the writ of habeas corpus, if he can look behind the indictment and go into original proof, to ascertain whether the grand jury had sufficient grounds for their action, may discharge the prisoner altogether. A judge would thus become an appellate tribunal to reverse or affirm the decisions of grand juries, and may thwart the action of that body all together, if he sees proper. Again, if the finding of a grand jury does not supersede the necessity of a reinvestigaimpair the force of 'evident proof' made by inculpatory evidence. It is for the judge or court who hears the testimony to consider the evidence as a whole, and if, by the entire evidence, a reasonable doubt of the applicant's guilt of a capital offense is not generated, the proof is evident and bail should be denied." Ex parte Smith 23 Tex. App. 127, 5 S. W. 102.

We will not comment upon the evidence, lest our comments should influence the final trial. To decline to do so seems to be the uniform practice, as it has always obtained in such cases. We will only say that, applying the rules herein enunciated to the facts as shown by all the evidence before us, we are of the opinion that the proof of guilt is evident and the presumption thereof is great. We do not wish to be understood as saying that the petitioners are guilty of murder, or that their innocence of the offense charged, or of a lower tion of the original evidence by the judge, much less would a previous examination of the case under a writ of habeas corpus issued by that same judge, or one of his associates, have this effect. What then is to prevent a prisoner from having a new examination every day of his confinement, until, having wearied out the witnesses and the prosecutor, or for some other cause, there becomes a failure of evident proof, or great presumption of guilt? When that failure takes place, must not the prisoner be discharged, independent of all the knowledge which the officer has acquired by former examinations, for why require an examination of original testimony, unless the officer is to be governed thereby?"

An indictment, being an accusation based upon legal testimony of a direct and positive character, and requiring the concurring judgment of at least twelve of the grand jurors, furnishes of itself a presumption of the guilt of the accused too great to entitle him to bail under the Constitution as a matter of right, or as a matter of discretion under the statute. People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77. The court said that it created a presumption of guilt for all purposes except trial before a petit jury. Indeed, if the affidavit did not create such presumption, the defendant held under it, or by virtue of a warrant based upon it, without other evidence of his guilt, would be entitled to his discharge absolutely. If it furnished no such presumption, it would not justify the exaction of bail, or the detention of the defendant.

Very strong reasons, however, have been advanced, why the indictment should not be held conclusive against the accused in the question of bail.

In Re Losasso, 15 Colo. 163, 10 L.R.A. 847, 24 Pac. 1080, it is said: "Most, if not all, of the state Constitutions, now contain provisions substantially similar to § 19 of our Bill of Rights, which reads as follows: 'That all persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses when the proof is evident or the presumption great.' It will be observed that this constitutional provision is entirely silent as to the status of the prosecution. It does not say that upon indictment for a felony or for a particular kind of felony, the beneficent privilege conferred is withdrawn. On the contrary, its terms are broad enough to include persons accused of any crime whatever, after as well as before indictment. The only exception expressly made has reference to capital offenses, but this exception is wholly inoperative if the proof of guilt be not evident and the presumption great. Had the framers of the Constitution intended to provide that the indictment should be conclusive in capital cases, they would, in all probability have said so. A simple declaration to this effect would have avoided all doubt and embarrassment."

In the same case it is said: "The English cases, and the American cases adopting the English rule, all concede the right to be heard upon an application for bail after commitment by a coroner's inquest or an examining magistrate. The character and scope of the inquiry are in many instances circumscribed, yet the right to be heard is nevertheless unquestioned. But, under our practice, it would ordinarily accord more nearly with justice to hold the finding of a coroner's inquest or a committing magistrate conclusive as to the clearness of guilt, than the report of a grand jury. In the former cases the accused may appear in person and by counsel. He may be heard in argument, may produce evidence, and make his own statement. But the proceedings of a grand jury are inviolably secret and wholly ex parte, evidence for the state being alone received. The accused is not present, and in many instances is ignorant of the fact that charges against him are being considered. He cannot be represented by counsel, or be heard upon the legality or bearing of the evidence adduced. The officer employed by the state to prosecute exercises a large influence in the selection of witnesses to testify, gives the only legal advice, unless the court be called upon, and usually directs to a considerable extent the entire proceeding. The rule that the proof of guilt thus offered and weighed should be pro forma treated as 'evident,' and that the presumption thus arising should in the same manner be pronounced 'great,' is largely a legal fiction. It finds little support in reason."

In Lynch v. People, 38 Ill. 494, the court said: "We know that a party may, under an indictment for murder, be convicted of manslaughter, and doubtless grand juries are often controlled by that consideration, in refusing, as is generally the case, to find indictments for the lesser offense. It would be very hard, when the law declares that if the offense be of a lower grade than murder, it shall be bailable, that the accused should be concluded upon degree of homicide, may not be made to appear most fully upon their final trial. We are only passing upon the sufficiency of the evidence exhibited in this record, and upon it alone is our opinion predicated.

It follows that bail must be refused.

Dunn and Turner, JJ., concur.

Hayes, J., concurs in the reasoning and the rules enunciated, but dissents from the conclusion refusing bail to petitioner John F. Thomas. Williams, Ch. J., dissents from some of the reasoning and some of the rules enunciated, but concurs in the conclusion refusing bail.

that question, until final trial, upon the mere finding of a grand jury, which is necessarily based, for reasons of public policy, upon a mere ex parte examination."

Every indictment for murder in the first degree includes several lesser offenses. Under it the accused may be convicted of murder in the second degree, or of voluntary or involuntary manslaughter. In legal effect, therefore, every such indictment charges four crimes, three of which are lawfully bailable. Why should not the prisoner be permitted to show, if he can, that his offense belongs to one of the lower grade? In Re Losasso, supra.

Indictments are found upon ex parte testimony, and hence often upon an incorrect understanding of the case; and further, upon an indictment for murder in the first degree, the accused may be convicted of murder in the first or in the second degree, or of manslaughter. An indictment for murder in the first degree is therefore in reality an indictment for some one of three offenses, upon either of which the defendant may, according to the evidence, be convicted. Prosecuting attorneys are consequently tempted, as a matter of policy, to draw their indictments covering the highest offense, — thus including the inferior, — rather than for either of the lower, which does not include the superior. The indictment, therefore, should not be taken as conclusive of the grade of offense, in determining the question of bail. Lumm v. State, 3 Ind. 293.

In State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468, in holding that an indictment is not conclusive evidence that the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption great, in an application for bail in a capital case, the court said: "The grand jury does not determine, and are not clothed with the power to decide, the question of bail in any case. The court or judge is to exercise that power in all cases; necessarily, then, the authority which fixes the bail and who is to settle that matter must determine the right to bail. That authority, then, must decide, and in that authority alone resides the duty and right to decide, as to whether or not the proof is evident or the presumption great. Is this to be determined for the court in all capital cases by a grand jury, generally unskilled in the law, incapable of judging as to the materiality or admissibility of testimony? We cannot so conclude. No doubt the finding of an indictment is prima facie evidence that the proof is evident, and that the presumption is great, and if not so, the legislature may well so provide, thus throwing the burden of proof upon the defendant to establish the contrary."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Certain exceptions to the common-law rule in relation to bail in capital cases are recognized. Among these exceptions may be mentioned serious illness of the prisoner; delay by the state in bringing him to trial; consent of the prosecuting attorney to the taking of bail; the existence of public excitement at the time of the finding of the indictment, likely to prejudice the grand jury; the confession of another that he did the killing, and the like. These exceptions are, in the main, prompted by considerations of actual or probable hardship. Courts sometimes exercise a sound judicial discretion, and admit to bail in such cases, even when the proof appears to be evident or presumption great. But it occasionally happens that, by means of malicious or of prejudiced or perjured testimony, or upon wholly insufficient proofs, indictments are procured charging the crime of murder, and a long period must elapse before a trial can be had. The same promptings of humanity, reinforced by strong considerations of justice, would also sanction the hearing of proofs on the question of bail, where such matters, or some of them, are allowed as a ground of the application. Re Losasso, supra.

In Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittsb. 362, the court said: "Suppose after indictment found for a capital offense, circumstances render it perfectly apparent that the prisoner is innocent. Take a case which has actually occurred,—the man supposed to be murdered has only absconded and afterwards returns in full life, and stands before the judges as a witness upon the hearing, would it not be barbarous to keep the prisoner in jail until the trial, simply because an indictment has been found?"

VI. Bail after indictment.

a. Mistrial.

A mistrial does not establish per se that the accused is entitled to bail. Coupled with other circumstances it furnishes proper matter for the court to consider in exercising its discretion as to the admission of the prisoner to bail. State ex rel. Vickers, 47 La. Ann. 662, 17 So. 296.

Failure of a petit jury to find a verdict against the accused is not in itself sufficient to entitle him to bail. Ex parte Pattison, 56 Miss. 161.

A mistrial upon a disagreement of the jury as to a verdict in a capital case does not per se establish that the proof is not evident. Ex parte England, 23 Tex. App. 90, 3 S. W. 714, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 225.

The mere fact that the jury has failed to agree upon a verdict will not entitle the accused to bail, especially when bail has been refused after a hearing on evidence in a habeas corpus proceeding. Webb v. State, 4 Tex. App. 167.

One or even two mistrials will not furnish the accused the absolute right to give bail. Ex parte Goans, 99 Mo. 193, 17 Am. St. Rep. 671, 12 S. W. 635.

But if there has been a mistrial, that fact may be shown, as it is a matter to be considered in determining whether the court should exercise its discretionary power to admit to bail. People v. Cole, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 695, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 280.

That a man has been indicted for murder in the first degree, and tried twice, and the jury has been unable to agree, though not conclusive, is a strong consideration towards removing the presumption existing against him. Re Alexander, 59 Mo. 598, 21 Am. Rep. 393. The court said: "The imprisonment of the accused before trial forms no part of the punishment affixed to the crime. The whole object and end of imprisonment before trial is to secure the forthcoming of a person charged with the commission of a crime. Where a jury has disagreed twice upon the question of guilt, a doubt may well be raised, and where it is satisfactorily shown that the attendance of the accused to stand his trial will certainly follow, in the exercise of a sound discretion, the court may admit bail."

In People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27, where there had been two disagreements of trial juries, the accused was admitted to bail.

In Ex parte McLaughlin, 41 Cal. 211, 10 Am. Rep. 272, the application of the prisoner for bail was allowed where the jury had disagreed and had been discharged without the consent of the accused, where he had been subjected to a long imprisonment before the trial.

In People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77, it is said obiter that bail may be taken where upon trial the evidence for the prosecution and defense has been produced, and there has been a disagreement among the jurors; or where, after verdict, a new trial has been obtained for the insufficiency of the evidence to warrant a conviction. Cases of this kind justify the allowance of bail in the discretion of the court, without hearing other evidence as to the guilt or innocence of the accused.

Where the prisoner had had a disagreement with the deceased, and had sent him a certain message which the latter thought demanded an explanation, and the deceased and certain of his friends armed themselves and went to meet the accused, and as soon as the deceased stepped up to the accused the latter struck the deceased and a fight ensued, the deceased receiving mortal wounds with the bowie-knife, the accused also attacking and killing a friend of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the deceased who took hold of him during the struggle, and the accused had been tried on an indictment for killing one of the men, and the jury had disagreed, it was held that he was entitled to bail. Beall v. State, 39 Miss. 715.

Where the accused immediately surrendered after the offense, and there had been two mistrials, and the accused had refused to break jail when he had the opportunity to do so, and his whole conduct evidenced a determination to stand his trial, it was held that the court, in the exercise of a sound discretion, would admit him to bail. Re Alexander, supra.

Where the accused gave himself up immediately after the homicide, and the coroner's jury found that he killed the deceased in self-defense, and he was discharged on the preliminary examination by the justice, and two terms of the court intervened before the finding of an indictment, at each of which a grand jury was impaneled, and after indictment there was a mistrial, and where he had shown himself to be a model prisoner, refusing to break jail when he had an opportunity, it was held that he was entitled to bail, although it was shown by undisputed evidence that the accused went towards the deceased with his gun when he knew the deceased was in a great rage. Ex parte Goans, supra.

But where the evidence showed that the accused had provided himself with a pistol, and had gone to the office of a hotel and instantly killed the deceased, whom he believed to have been destroyer of his domestic peace, and there had been a protracted trial, which resulted in six of the jurors standing for conviction and six for guilt, the court refused to admit the prisoner to bail. People v. Cole, supra.

In State v. Summons, 19 Ohio, 139, the court, in refusing bail after a disagreement of the jury, said: "The fact that the testimony given on the trial did not produce full conviction of guilt in the minds of the twelve jurors would be a strong circumstance to urge to the court when invoked to the exercise of so high a discretion as that of admitting to bail a prisoner charged with the crime of murder; this fact would come with redoubled force, if, as in the present instance, a second jury should fail to agree upon a verdict, with the same evidence applied to another indictment for the same offense. But, however numerous such results, they could never amount to a rebuttal of the fact that 'the proof was evident or the presumption great.'"

In State ex rel. Vickers, 47 La. Ann. 662, 17 So. 296, the accused had a mistrial, and after his application for bail had been granted he escaped, and the order for bail was revoked. Upon subsequent confinement his trial was continued for five months against his objection, the court refusing an application for bail. The prisoner offered to show before the district court that he had voluntarily surrendered himself, but the court refused to hear the testimony, and no attempt was made in the supreme court to show this fact, which was merely asserted. It was held that the bill of exceptions taken in the district court did not per se establish such fact.

Under a statute providing that "the judgment rendered on the first trial of any writ of habeas corpus shall be conclusive until reversed as hereinafter provided, and, whilst so in force, shall be a bar to any other proceedings to bring the same matter again in question, except by appeal," etc. (§ 1413, Code of 1871), the court has jurisdiction to entertain an application for bail, even after an adverse decision on one writ, where, since such decision, there has been a disagreement of a trial jury, and a serious impairment of the relator's health. Ex parte Pattison, 56 Miss. 161.

The object of imprisonment previous to trial is not punishment, but the security of the person of the alleged offender to await the judgment of the law. In ordinary cases this object is supposed to be attainable by the exaction of sufficient and reasonable bail. But, as a general proposition, in cases of murder, as conviction of the offense results in taking the life of the offender, the temptation to flee from justice is supposed to outweigh all inducements to remain growing out of pecuniary obligation, no matter to what amount. And often, perhaps generally, though not always, in the case of consciousness of guilt or of probability of conviction, this is so. This probability may be naturally supposed to decrease, though it is not always so, as the efforts to convict prove unavailing. Hence, the result of a previous trial is very proper to be considered in determining the probability of a future conviction, and in determining also the probability of the prisoner's guilt. People v. Cole, 6 Park. Crim. Rep. 695, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 280.

b. Delay, continuance, appeal

In People v. Tinder, 19 Cal. 539, 81 Am. Dec. 77, it is said obiter that bail may be allowed if the trial of the prisoner has been unreasonably delayed. And under the California statute, if the trial be postponed, even upon sufficient reasons, from term to term, the court may discharge the defendant on his own recognizance or on bail; and so, also, bail may be allowed where any event has happened postponing indefinitely the further prosecution of the action, as the repeal of the statute giving the jurisdiction of the court to try the indictment (where such jurisdiction depends upon statute) without provision for its transfer to any other tribunal. So also where the law creating the offense charged has been repealed without a reservation of the penalty for past offenses.

Where the accused is charged with assault with intent to kill, and it appears that the victim will die within such time as will raise the offense to murder, the prisoner is not entitled to bail because no indictment 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

has been found against him, although two terms of the court at which he might have been indicted have passed, unless the facts of the case made by the prisoner are such that, in the event of the death of the person wounded, the prisoner would be entitled to bail. Ex parte Andrews, 19 Ala. 582.

The accused is not entitled to bail on the ground that his case has been continued at the instance of the state, where the trial has thereby been postponed only for a month. State ex rel. Rice v. Butler, 40 La. Ann. 3, 3 So. 350.

Failure to prosecute at the succeeding term is not ground for admitting the prisoner to bail, where it is not shown to have been the means of oppression. State v. Abbot, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 244.

Under a statute providing that, "if a defendant in a capital case demand a trial, and it appeared that more than one continuance has been granted to the state, and that the defendant has not applied for a continuance, he shall be entitled to be admitted to bail, and unless it appear from the written statement of the district attorney, or by the oath of some credible person, that a material witness of the state had been prevented from attendance by the procurement of the defendant or some person acting in his behalf," the defendants are entitled to bail where the case has been twice continued on the application of the state, although the defendants have not made formal demand for trial. Ex parte Walker, 3 Tex. App. 668.

In Territory v. M'Farlane, 1 Mart. (La.) 216, 5 Am. Dec. 706, it is said: "In case of a mistrial or of a continuance at the instance of the territory, as the confinement may be extended to a considerable length, there would be no impropriety in listening to a motion for bail; but when the attorney general is ready for trial, the court, except in a very extraordinary case, will not admit the application."

The facts that the prisoner had a crop which needed his attention, and that he would be ruined financially by being confined and denied an opportunity to pursue his industrial vocation, and that his wife was frail and delicate, are not sufficient to warrant the court to release him on bail pending appeal. Hill v. State, 64 Miss. 431, 1 So. 494. The court said: "Manifestly the law does not tolerate bail after conviction of felony on any such ground as this. It denies bail to a convict of felony, except in the discretion of court or judge, 'to be exercised with the greatest caution, and only when the peculiar circumstances of the case render it proper in the opinion of such court or judge.'"

In State v. Key, 93 Miss. 115, 46 So. 75, in holding that bail was improperly granted to the accused on continuance of the case, the court said that unless the case was brought clearly within the rule laid down in the last-mentioned case, bail should have been refused.

Where the trial was set down a month from the date of the application for bail, the court refused to reverse the decision of the trial court, refusing to hear testimony on the application for bail, although the prisoner alleged a killing in self-defense and that he was confined in an unhealthy jail. Martin v. State, 17 Ohio C. C. 406, 9 Ohio C. D. 621.

If the prisoner is charged with a capital crime, and the cause is twice continued by the state, without the fault of the prisoner and without his assent, he is, as a matter of right, entitled to bail, under a statute which provides that "no person charged with the commission of an offense capitaly punished shall be admitted to bail as a matter of right, when he is not tried at the first term of the court at which he was properly triable, if the failure to try his case proceeded from the nonattendance of the states witnesses, where an affidavit is made satisfactorily accounting for their absence, or where there is an entire failure to hold the court, or where the trial is delayed in consequence of the sickness of the judge or some member of his family, or where there is a premature adjournment of the court for either of the last-mentioned or other sufficient cause, or where the judge from any cause is legally incompetent to try the accused, or where the term allowed by law is so short that the case of the accused, according to the accustomed course of proceeding, could not be tried, or where it was found impracticable to obtain a jury for his trial, or where the trial was not completed in consequence of the sickness of a juror, or where there was a mistrial for any cause, or where the delay proceeds from the fault or misfortune of the prisoner. But if the accused shall not be tried at the next stated term of the court, and the failure to try his case shall not be occasioned from his fault or misfortune, or on his application, or with his assent, he shall be discharged on giving good and sufficient bail." Ex parte Stiff, 18 Ala. 464.

When a trial for homicide has begun, the defendant is in the custody of the court, and must so remain until the verdict is rendered and the prisoner discharged by due course of law, unless it shall appear to the court during the trial, or the district attorney shall so state to the court, that the case is not one of murder, when it is in the discretion of the court to admit the defendant to bail. Com. v. Rusk, 7 W. N. C. 486.

In Hull v. Reilly, 87 Mich. 497, 49 N. W. 869, a conviction of the accused of murder having been reversed, the prisoner was admitted to bail, but on his second trial, was ordered into custody and the supreme court refused to interfere.

VII. Application for bail on special grounds.

a. In general.

In People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 9, the accused 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

were charged with burning certain Indian lodges and with killing several Indians, but were admitted to bail on the ground that the district court was not yet organized, and that there was no secure place in which the prisoners could be kept until brought to trial.

A person charged with the crime of murder in the first degree, at a time when the statute prescribed the penalty of death for the offense, is not, where the proof is evident or the presumption great, entitled to bail, although the prosecution for the offense may have been commenced after the repeal of that penalty and the enactment of an amendment imposing the penalty of imprisonment for life. Re Schneek, 78 Kan. 207, 96 Pac. 43; Re Stewart, 78 Kan. 885, 96 Pac. 45.

In Com. v. Trask, 15 Mass. 277, the accused, having dangerously wounded another so that he was likely to die, was remanded until it should properly appear that the danger was over.

But in Dunlap v. Bartlett, 10 Gray, 282, 69 Am. Dec. 320, it was held that the fact that the person assaulted might die was not ground for refusing bail, but that there was danger that the assault might result in a homicide was to be considered in fixing the amount of bail.

In People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. 158, the court admitted the accused to bail mainly on the ground that the prosecuting attorney consented thereto, saying that if there was no ground to apprehend the escape of the prisoner, the case came within that of Lord Baltimore, who was let to bail by the court of the King's bench on the charge of rape, then a capital crime, on the sole ground that he had indicated no intention of absconding from justice. The court declared that if it could be ascertained to a moral certainty that the accused would appear and stand his trial, there would be no valid objection to admitting him to bail, as the object of imprisonment before trial is not punishment, but to secure the appearance of the accused.

In People v. Porter, 8 Barb. 168 (note by reporter), the prisoner voluntarily appeared on the coming in of the indictment, and by his counsel offered to give bail for his appearance at the next oyer and terminer to be held in said county in June thereafter. The grounds, as disclosed in several affidavits, were a defense on the merits; the absence of material evidence; the feeble state of the prisoner's health, which would not endure a protracted imprisonment; and he proposed also to disclose the nature of his defense. The district attorney consented that the court might admit him to bail, if they had the power to bail after indictment for murder. He consented, also, that the court might look into the evidence taken before the grand jury, and the affidavits furnished by the prisoner disclosing his defense. The court, after examining the several documents submitted to them, decided that they had the power to admit to bail, and accordingly let the prisoner to bail in the sum of $5,000, to appear at the nextoyer and terminer.

The court or judge in vacation should proceed by hearing the evidence to determine the character of the proof and the extent of the presumption, where the defendant files in the cause, and presents to the court, his written and sworn application, alleging "that he is not guilty of any offense charged in the said indictment; that the proof against him . . . is not evident and is wholly insufficient to authorize or support a conviction for any crime or offense whatever; that there is not presumption of his guilt of any offense charged in such indictment arising from the proof or otherwise; that this cause is one in which the defendant is entitled to bail under . . . the Constitution, . . . and that . . . [he] is able and desirous to give bail herein with sufficient sureties in any reasonable sum or amount." State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468.

In those states and countries where the power to pardon may be exercised at any time, the court has sometimes admitted to bail accomplices who have testified fairly and fully against their confederates, in order that they might the more conveniently make application for that mercy to which, by their disclosures, they have become entitled. Ex parte Birch, 8 Ill. 134.

Since in Illinois the governor cannot pardon before conviction, one who has not been convicted or who does not admit his guilt cannot be admitted to bail on the theory that he is entitled to the privileges of an accomplice who has assisted the state in the trial of the other offenders. Ibid.

Prosecuting attorneys in Texas cannot make an agreement entitling one turning state's evidence to bail, and the fact that the court approves the agreement makes no difference. Ex parte Greenhaw, 41 Tex. Crim. Rep. 278, 53 S. W. 1024. The court said: "Where two parties are indicted for murder, one of whom turns state's evidence, this forms and constitutes, under our law, a continuous contract, the good faith of which must be kept by both parties. Being a continuous contract, the terms and conditions are not consummated until the final trial of the party or parties accused, against whom the accomplice agrees to testify. After he has testified against the parties and they have been convicted, and if appeals are prosecuted, and these appeals have been affirmed by this court, then the accomplice is entitled to his release under the terms of the contract; but not until then."

The accused, by waiving his preliminary examination, not only waives the right to be let to bail, but also to have the fact and circumstances of the alleged offense examined on a writ of habeas corpus. Re Malison, 36 Kan. 725, 14 Pac. 144.

Where, under well-grounded apprehension of personal violence, the preliminary examination is waived, no estoppel against the accused arises pursuant to such waiver. Ibid.

Where, at the time of the arrest of the accused, great excitement prevailed, and it appeared that large bodies of armed men were in town, that many threats of violence were made by the friends of the deceased, that, in fear of further bloodshed, the adjutant general went to the county where the defendants were, and he and other citizens counseled them to waive examination, and they did so,—it was held that this would not prevent them from afterwards having the charge investigated on an application for bail. Ibid.

In Indiana murder in the second degree is not bailable where the proof is evident or the presumption strong of the guilt of the accused. Ex parte Colter, 35 Ind. 109.

Where the prisoner is acquitted of the charge of murder in the first degree, and can no longer be tried for that crime, but only for a lesser degree, his offense ceasing to be capital, he is, of course, entitled to bail. Ex parte Moore, 46 Tex. Crim. Rep. 417, 80 S. W. 620.

One indicted for murder may be let to bail upon proof that he is guilty of a bailable homicide. Lumm v. People, 3 Ind. 293.

An accessory before the fact to murder is, in Florida, guilty of a capital offense, and therefore the rules with reference to the admission to bail of persons accused of capital offenses apply. Ex parte Nathen, — Fla. —, 50 So. 38.

And in Arkansas the crime of accessory before the fact is capital, and therefore not bailable where the proof is evident or the presumption great. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Williams, 97 Ark. 243, 133 S. W. 1017.

The rules with reference to bail were held to apply in the case of a slave charged with a capital crime in Ready v. Com. 9 Dana, 38.

Capital punishment was abolished in Wisconsin in 1853, and under a Constitution in the usual form one charged with murder is entitled to bail. Re Perry, 19 Wis. 677.

b. Health of accused.

Bail should not be granted on the ground of bad health, unless it be rendered probable by testimony that confinement has produced, or is likely to produce, fatal or serious results. Slight sickness is not sufficient, since there are few persons who will not be injuriously affected by imprisonment. There must be strong grounds for apprehending a fatal result or permanent impairment of health. Ex parte Pattison, 56 Miss. 161.

In Aylesbury's Case, 1 Salk. 103, the accused was bailed where it appeared that he had been long in prison, where his trial had been delayed, and his life was in danger.

On an application for bail on the ground that the continued imprisonment would put the prisoner's life in great jeopardy, it was held that the court did not abuse its discretion in refusing bail where the certificate of the physicians who examined him only showed that he was "suffering from a deranged state of his heart, and his general health impaired." Lester v. State, 33 Ga. 192. The court said that to grant bail in such a case would be a most dangerous precedent, for there are few men whose health is not impaired by close confinement in a prison sufficiently strong and close to prevent their escape.

It is good cause for admitting to bail a prisoner confined to jail for a capital offense, that such prisoner is then suffering with pneumonia and other ailments caused by his imprisonment and likely to be aggravated by the continuance of such confinement, and that it will probably terminate fatally. Ex parte Watson, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 595, 99 Pac. 161.

On application to the criminal court of appeals for bail by writ of habeas corpus, after commitment of a capital offense by a justice of the peace, when it is made clearly to appear, by the testimony of competent, reputable physicians who have examined the physical condition of the prisoner at the time the application is made, that there is strong ground for the opinion that continued confinement would cause the disease from which the prisoner is then suffering to terminate fatally, he should be released on bail. Ibid.

If it is made clearly to appear, by the testimony of competent, reputable physicians who have examined the physical condition of the prisoner at the time the application is made, that there is strong ground for the opinion that continued confinement would cause the disease from which the prisoner is then suffering to terminate fatally, he should be released on bail. Ex parte Smith, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 24, 99 Pac. 893.

Where the accused contracted a painful and dangerous disease in consequence of having been for a long time in a small, damp, and badly ventilated room, which disease had reduced him to so low a state as to render the continuance of his case necessary, and he had since that time contracted another disease which, if the confinement was continued, would in probability result fatally, it was held that he should be admitted to bail. Com. v. Semmes, 11 Leigh, 865.

In United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 224, Fed. Cas. No. 15,495, it was shown that the health of the accused was bad, his complaint pulmonary, and that further confinement would be dangerous. The court said: "The humanity of our laws, not less than the feelings of the court, favor the liberation of a prisoner upon bail, under such circumstances. It is not necessary, in our view of the subject that the danger which may arise from his confinement should be either immediate or certain. If, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the opinion of a skilful physician, the nature of his disorder is such that confinement must be injurious, and may be fatal, we think he ought to be bailed."

But affidavits of physicians stating that, in their opinion, confinement in jail will result disastrously to the petitioner, and which state no facts upon what such opinion is based, make no sufficient showing for the admission of the prisoner to bail. Re Fraley, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 295.

That the accused is suffering more or less from melancholia, and that this is produced by his confinement, together with the charge against him, does not bring his case within the provision of a statute which authorizes bail if he is so diseased that further confinement will necessarily endanger his life. Ex parte Johnson, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 50, 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 916, 131 S. W. 316.

In Texas under statutes entitling the prisoner to a writ of habeas corpus in cases of necessity, as when the party is in legal custody and is inflicted with a disease rendering his removal necessary, and giving the prisoner a second writ in case of newly discovered important testimony which it was not in his power to produce at the first hearing if the first writ is heard before indictment, the party is entitled to the second writ after indictment, but only in a case coming under such statute. Ex parte Wilson, 20 Tex. App. 498.

c. Discretionary penalty.

The mere fact that a crime punishable by death may also be punishable by imprisonment does not entitle the defendant as a matter of right to be admitted to bail.

A capital offense is one that may be punished by death. Ex parte Dusenberry, 97 Mo. 504, 11 S. W. 217.

A capital offense, within the meaning of the constitutional provision with reference to bail, is an offense punishable by death. Com. v. Lemley, 2 Pittsb. 362.

Under a statute providing that "in all cases where any person or persons, upon conviction of crime, shall or may be punishable with death, the jury may, in their discretion, in their verdict, declare that the penalty or punishment shall be imprisonment for life; but if the jury shall omit to so declare the penalty in their verdict, then the court shall pronounce the death penalty," an indictment for an offense theretofore capital must be still regarded as a capital offense, so as to prevent the accused from demanding bail as a matter of right. Ex parte Fortenberry, 53 Miss. 428.

So the crime of rape, under a statute providing that every person convicted of this charge "shall suffer death or be punished by imprisonment in a penitentiary not less than five years, in the discretion of the jury," is a capital offense, and therefore not bailable as a matter of right. Ex parte Dusenberry, supra.

The fact that the jury has the power to fix the penalty for murder in the first degree as death or imprisonment for life does not render it bailable as an offense not capital. Ex parte McCrary, 22 Ala. 65. The court said: "The nature of the inquiry before the magistrate, on a question of bail, is in no respect changed. It was, before the adoption of the Penal Code, and still is, whether the offense charged is one which may be capitally punished; and if it may, and the proof is evident or the presumption great, it is not bailable. Juries have always had the power, although not the right, to reduce murder in the first degree to manslaughter; but because they had this power, and chose at times to exercise it, it does not follow that the offense, when the charge was first preferred, was bailable."

This power conferred upon the jury, of deciding whether or not a homicide shall be punished capitally, undoubtedly increases the chances to the murderer of escaping capital punishment. But until he is tried, the offense, in law and in the eye of the Constitution, is as much capital as it was before the adoption of the Penal Code. As long as it may be punished capitally, it must be considered a capital offense. Ibid.

Where it cannot be known until after conviction whether death will be the punishment, the question in legal contemplation on the application for bail is whether the offense is of a character that may be punished capitally. Ex parte McAnally, 53 Ala. 495, 25 Am. Rep. 646.

VIII. Burden of proof.

a. General rules applicable thereto.

In most jurisdictions the burden of proof is on the accused on an application for bail. Rigdon v. State 41 Fla. 308 26 So. 711; Ex parte Jones 55 Ind. 176; Ex parte Kendall 100 Ind. 559; Brown v. State, 147 Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34, Re Fraley, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 295.

On habeas corpus application for bail in a capital case after commitment upon examination before a justice of the peace, the burden of proof is on the defendant to show that he is illegally restrained of his liberty. Ex parte Smith, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 24, 99 Pac. 893.

Upon an application for bail by writ of habeas corpus after commitment for a capital offense, the burden is upon the petitioner to show facts sufficient to entitle him to bail, when those facts do not appear from the evidence adduced on the part of the prosecution. Ex parte Dykes, 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 162, 117 Pac. 724. To the same effect, Ex parte Belville, 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 145, 117 Pac. 725; Re Fraley, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 295.

Upon the hearing after indictment the burden of proof is on the defendant, and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

both parties are entitled to compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses. State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468.

Where the accused admits that he killed the deceased, the burden of proving that he acted in self-defense and that the proof of his guilt of the charge of murder is not evident or the presumption strong is upon him. Ex parte Richards, 102 Ind. 260, 1 N. E. 639.

The early decisions in Texas are in favor of the rule as to the burden of proof adopted in other states; but at present the rule in that state is that the burden of showing that the defendant is not entitled to bail is on the people.

The burden is upon the accused to show that he is entitled to bail. Ex parte Johnson, 30 Tex. App. 279, 17 S. W. 410.

The rule is the same whether the indictment charges the offense severally or jointly against the parties. Ibid.

The burden is upon the accused after indictment to show himself entitled to bail on the ground that the proof is not evident. Ex parte Randon, 12 Tex. App. 145.

After indictment for a capital offense, the burden is upon the accused to show that he has a constitutional right to bail because the proof of his guilt is not evident. Ex parte Jones, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 422, 20 S. W. 983.

When a person is brought before a court of competent jurisdiction on a writ of habeas corpus, if it appear by the return of the papers attached that he is indicted for a capital offense, it is incumbent on him to show that he is entitled to bail: if he declines to introduce any evidence, bail should not be allowed him. And the same rule applies when the return to the court shows that he is held by virtue of a commitment from an examining court, for a capital offense. Ex parte Scoggin, 6 Tex. App. 546.

But in Ex parte Newman, 38 Tex. Crim. Rep. 164, 70 Am. St. Rep. 740, 41 S. W. 628, it was held that the indictment furnishes no proof of the guilt of the accused, and the burden is on the state to show that the proof is evident.

In this case the earlier decisions were overruled, the court saying: "We hold that the general rule is in favor of bail, but that there is an exception to this general rule, and that the party relying upon the exception must prove it. The exception is in favor of the state. Unless the case be a capital one, and the proof is evident of this fact, and unless the proof is evident that the prisoner is guilty of a capital crime, he is entitled to bail. He stands upon the Constitution of this state, which grants bail to all prisoners with sufficient sureties; and, as before stated, the party relying upon the exception must prove it."

It does not follow because the legislature gives the relator in a habeas corpus proceeding the right to open and conclude the argument, that the burden of proof is upon him. The statute merely guarantees to the applicant an additional advantage as an exception to the general rule, for if the burden were upon him, he would have the right independently of statute. Ibid.

An indictment raises a presumption against the accused for all the purposes of his capture and custody, and for such purposes it is conclusive until rebutted. Ex parte White, 9 Ark. 222.

On an application for bail by a prisoner who is shown to be under indictment for murder, he is presumed to be guilty of the charge in the highest degree, and that presumption must be overcome by proof. Ex parte Vaughan, 44 Ala. 417.

In proceedings to obtain bail, it is well settled that the production of an indictment found by a grand jury makes a prima facie case of guilt in the highest degree of which the defendant could be convicted under the indictment. Ex parte Hammock, 78 Ala. 414.

An indictment for murder duly returned implies prima facie that the prisoner has no right to bail. Ex parte Jones, 55 Ind. 176.

In Ex parte Smith, 23 Tex. App. 100, 5 S. W. 99, the court said: "If an indictment for a capital offense does not prima facie establish a nonbailable offense, the accused party would be entitled to bail the moment he was arrested, and the officer who would have the temerity to refuse him bail when tendered, would be guilty of false imprisonment, and liable to prosecution and punishment for that offense, as well as liable in a civil suit for damages. An indictment for a capital offense, for all the purposes of a habeas corpus proceeding, carries with it the presumption that it is founded upon proof evident. For reasons apparent to the legal mind, no presumption of guilt arises from an indictment when the case comes to be heard upon the final trial. Then the presumption of innocence attaches and continues throughout the trial, because then the state, and not the accused, is the plaintiff, the actor, the party who holds the affirmative of the issue, and who must assume the burden of proving the offense alleged."

In the same case Hurt, J., dissenting, said: "What presumptions, then, it is again asked, arise from the indictment? As none arise upon final trial, so do none upon a hearing for bail; for the presumption of innocence follows the accused until his guilt is fixed by legal evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. The officer having the accused in custody should look to the nature of the charge, whether his prisoner be indicted or not, with a view of regulating the care and means to be used for his safe-keeping. What presumption he or others may draw from the existence of an indictment can never be a practical matter bearing upon the subject. Whether indicted by a grand jury, charged by complaint, or committed by a magistrate, the prisoner's right to a hearing remains the same. And upon the hearing of the evidence 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) his right to bail is determined; determined by the testimony heard, and not by the indictment or the nature of the charge. Presumptions of guilt before hearing for bail may or may not be drawn, for they are comparatively innocuous; but when the hearing begins they must step aside and give way to the evidence."

Where the charge is of a capital felony, which is prima facie not bailable, the courts are very show to admit to bail, for there is shrewd authority that "all that a man hath will he give in exchange for his life," and after indictment found, it is only in a clear case and with great caution that a judge will admit to bail, for, while the indictment is no presumption of guilt on the trial before the petit jury, it is otherwise in the application for bail. State v. Herndon, 107 N. C. 934, 12 S. E. 268.

This, however, is but a presumption in the absence of all other proof. Ex parte Hammock, supra.

When exculpatory evidence is produced, such testimony must be weighed, together with the presumption raised by the indictment; and the decision must be pronounced on the entire case as thus presented. Ibid.

Prima facie, under an indictment for murder, the offense is not bailable, and this presumption is not overcome by any order made on a preliminary trial. Where a party under indictment for murder in the first degree sues out a writ of habeas corpus, upon production of the indictment the defendant must overcome the presumption of the law by legitimate evidence and the order of the magistrate prescribing bail is not legal evidence in the case. Ex parte Robinson, 108 Ala. 161, 18 So. 729.

The court will not indulge the presumption, in the absence of evidence warranting it, that the accused were rightfully in the place of conflict which resulted in the death of the deceased, that they acted in their proper self-defense, that the killing was unintentional, or in the mistaken belief that the deceased was another; nor can the court presume from the absence of evidence that any of the elements of the charge are not subject to proof which is strong. Brown v. State, 147 Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34. The court said that if it were otherwise, the case of the accused would be made stronger by the least searching inquiry into the state's evidence.

When the homicide is proved or admitted the court on an application for bail, will not presume for the prisoner either justification or mitigation merely because the evidence for the prosecution fails to show their absence. Unless the evidence for the prosecution shows the presence of facts tending to justify, excuse, or mitigate the offense, the burden is on the petitioner to show them. Re Fraley, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 295.

On the application for bail on the ground that the case was continued without the consent of the accused, because of the absence of a material witness for the prosecution, on an affidavit which did not satisfactorily account for the absence of the witness, the court will not presume that the affidavit did not satisfactorily account for the absence of the witness in the absence of anything in the record to show it. Ex parte McCrary, 22 Ala. 65. The court said that if the affidavit did not contain all that the law required, it should have been incorporated in the record and made a part of the petitioner's case.

It being clear from the weight of authority that the burden is upon the accused, under a capital charge, to show that the proof is not evident nor the presumption great, a pertinent inquiry is, What proof is it that he must show is not evident or what presumption is it that must appear not to be great? The section in the Florida Bill of Rights does not declare what proof it is, and in its application consideration must be had to the nature of the inquiry before the judge and the character of the proceedings. After indictment found for a capital offense, and on application for bail, the judgment of the court is that it devolves upon the accused to take the initiative, and show from the testimony in the case, including that of the state, that the proof is not evident nor the presumption great. There may be exceptional cases recognized by the courts, such as extreme sickness, caused or increased by imprisonment, and the like, that will not be concluded by this rule, and the rule as to them need not now be stated. Rigdon v. State supra.

When names of state witnesses are placed upon the indictment, the presumption is that all of the witnesses relied on by the state are named and the accused should not be required to produce the testimony of any other witnesses on behalf of the state. Where no witnesses are placed on the indictment, it is incumbent on the state attorneys, on application for bail, to furnish the accused with a list of the witnesses relied on by the state in due time to secure their presence or testimony; otherwise he could not know what was the testimony upon which the state relied. In case no witnesses are placed upon the indictment and a list is duly furnished by the prosecuting officer, the accused should produce the witnesses for the state in connection with his own, if he had any, in order that the judge may determine from all the testimony in the case whether the proof was not evident or the presumption not great. Ibid.

Under a Constitution in the usual form, when an application is made for bail in a capital case, the county attorney, if he resists the application, should make some showing that the proof is evident or the presumption great, thus bringing the case within the exception mentioned in the Constitution. On failure to make such showing, the defendant is entitled to bail in all cases; but, if such showing is made, the court or judge should refuse bail without hesitation. State ex rel. Murray v. District Ct. 35 Mont. 504, 90 Pac. 513.

Upon the application to the supreme court for a writ of habeas corpus for the purpose of securing bail the petitioner will not, in addition to the report of evidence taken in the police court, be allowed to introduce testimony of witnesses not examined, in order to impeach some of the witnesses of the people, and to prove facts otherwise tending to his exculpation. Ex parte Curtis, 92 Cal. 188, 28 Pac. 223. The court said that there may be cases in which new facts have been developed or new evidence discovered after the conclusion of the preliminary examination, in which it would be proper to hear additional testimony on the application for bail. But in such case the petitioner should set out the discovery of such new facts or evidence among the grounds of the application, and the application itself should be addressed to the superior court or a judge of the proper county.

In People v. Hyler, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570, upon an application based on the testimony taken before the coroner and grand jury it was held that the prisoner would not be allowed to furnish proof by affidavit or oral testimony. The court said: "It has not been the practice heretofore either in this country or in England, nor can such a precedent be established without making an application for bail substantially a trial upon the merits; for if the prisoner can produce such evidence in his own behalf, the public prosecutor should be permitted to controvert it, which in effect would transform a motion to bail into an examination into the guilt or innocence of the prisoners. The rule seems to be well settled to the contrary, and with reason, because, to open the whole question of guilt or innocence to proof, on a motion to admit to bail, would be attended with most serious public inconvenience. In most cases there will be extant on the files of the court the preliminary examination of the accused, or the testimony before the coroner, or that before the grand jury; in some cases all. True, as in this case, a party may sometimes by casualty be deprived of the benefit of a preliminary examination, but the hardship in a particular instance should not induce the establishment of a precedent which would prove of great public inconvenience.

On the application for bail, the indictment is all the state is required to produce on the hearing unless in rebuttal. It is not required to introduce evidence to show on what state of facts the indictment was found, or to show whether the indictment was found on a state of facts constituting murder in the first degree or in the second degree, and the defendant must take the initiative and show by evidence that the offense was less than murder in the first degree. Ex parte Rhear, 77 Ala. 92.

The application will be denied where the prisoner offers no evidence in his own behalf, and there is a finding of the grand jury against him and his admission that he did the killing. Ex parte Vaughan, 44 Ala. 417.

Upon the hearing it is proper to require the prisoner to begin the evidence, although it imposes upon him the necessity of producing evidence upon which the state intended to rely for his conviction on the final trial. But the accused will not by this procedure be denied the opportunity of cross-examining the people's witnesses. Ex parte Heffren, 27 Ind. 87. To the same effect, Rigdon v. State, 41 Fla. 308, 26 So. 711; Ex parte Nathan, — Fla. —, 50 So. 38.

Evidence of a witness of the prisoner that the deceased, a saloon keeper, sold liquor to the witness on various occasions, of such a poisonous character that it fired his brain and made him wild was held inadmissible on the hearing for admission to bail. Ex parte Halpine, 30 Ind. 254.

The right of the prisoner to bail established on the hearing, or refusal of the state to introduce testimony in rebuttal of that offered by the accused, cannot be denied on review of the application by the introduction of additional testimony. The prosecution, having failed to introduce testimony on the trial, must abide by its election. The only question open is the amount of bail. Ex parte Hammock, supra.

The proof of the guilt of the accused may be evident although the testimony is in conflict. Ex parte Jones, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 422, 20 S. W. 983.

A mere conflict of testimony, even upon a vital issue, does not of itself entitle a defendant held for murder to be admitted to bail. The evidence must be considered as a whole; and when so considered, unless a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt of murder is generated, bail should be denied. Re Ballin, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 725, 109 Pac. 288.

On a conflict of evidence as to the condition of the mind of the accused at the time of the homicide, it was held that the court could not say that the proof of the guilt of a capital offense was evident, and the accused was therefore admitted to bail. Ex parte Miller, 41 Tex. 213.

To the mind of the tribunal passing upon the evidence, the guilt of the applicant of a capital offense may be evident—that is, clear, strong, not admitting of a reasonable doubt,—and yet there may be evidence in conflict with such inculpatory evidence. It is not all conflicting, exculpatory evidence that will have the effect to raise a reasonable doubt of guilt, and destroy or impair the force of "evident proof" made by inculpatory evidence. Ex parte Evers, 29 Tex. App. 539, 16 S. W. 343.

Where the evidence was such that, standing by itself, it made a case of "evident proof" within the letter of the Constitution, which would deny to the defendant the privilege of bail and there was testimony which, if believed, tended strongly to show that the defendant could not have committed the murder, the refusal of the judge of probate to admit the accused to bail will not be set aside. Ex parte Weaver, 55 Ala. 250.

Where the evidence is conflicting, the prisoner should have the benefit of such reasonable doubt as arises in the mind of the court when it attempts to reconcile the testimony. In case a reasonable doubt is entertained, the accused should be admitted to bail. Ex parte Jones, 20 Ark. 9.

Where, from the transcript of the evidence heard before the committing magistrate, a judge of the superior court of the state, the appellate court could not say that the refusal of the lower court to admit to bail was not correct, the prisoner was remanded. Ex parte Walpole, 85 Cal. 362, 24 Pac. 657.

Where the admission to bail was demanded on the ground that the deceased was killed in a mutual combat which would make the crime manslaughter, and there was great conflict of evidence as to whether there was such a fight, and as to whether the deceased had fought at all, bail was refused. Ex parte Finlen, 20 Nev. 141, 18 Pac. 827.

Where there are favorable circumstances in the case, and there is a presumption that the prisoner is guilty only of manslaughter, the court will exercise its discretion by admitting the accused to bail. State v. Wicks, R. M. Charl. (Ga.) 139.

Under the 17th section of the Alabama Bill of Rights, which declares that "all persons shall, before conviction, be bailable by sufficient securities, except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great," and under the Alabama statutes upon the hearing of applications for bail, either before or after indictment, the court is not, as according to the practice in England, confined to the written evidence taken down before the committing magistrate; but the case is heard de novo the solicitor and prosecutor are notified to attend, and witnesses are subpoenaed both for the state and for the defendant, and examined before the court, which is to decide the application upon the evidence produced. Code §§ 3721, 3722, 3732, 3733, 3745, 3746, 3669, 3673. Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270.

In forming an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of any one of the persons accused, we, of course, look alone to so much of the evidence as, according to legal rules, would be admissible against him, if tried separately from his codefendants. Ibid.

b. Tests for determining whether burden has been sustained.

It is a question of some difficulty to determine what test should be applied in deciding whether the prisoner has made out a case for bail.

An examination of the decided cases as to what is meant by the expressions "proof is evident," "presumption is great," says the court in Ex parte Curtis, 92 Cal. 188, 28 Pac. 223, discloses a wide variance of opinion upon this point, some courts and judges holding that the prisoner is entitled to bail unless the evidence against him is such as ought to satisfy a trial jury of his guilt beyond any reasonable doubt; others, that bail should be denied when the evidence is sufficient to warrant a grand jury in bringing in an indictment, or, which practically amounts to the same thing, when the evidence is sufficient in law to sustain a capital conviction.

On the return of a writ of habeas corpus to determine whether the accused shall be admitted to bail, the issue is not whether he is guilty or innocent, but whether the presumption of his guilt is great or the proof evident. Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

In Rex v. Fortier, Rap. Jud. Quebec 13 B. R. 251, 1 Ann. Cas. 10, a forgery case, it is said: "The propriety of admitting to bail for indictable offenses, which were formerly classified as felonies, should be determined with reference to the accused person's opportunities for escape, and to the probability of his appearing to take his trial, which is the object of bail, and not with reference to the supposed guilt or innocence of the party. In determining whether or not to admit an accused person to bail, the principal thing to be considered is therefore the probability of his appearing for trial, and to determine this question, it is proper to consider the nature of the offense charged and its punishment, the strength of the evidence against the accused, his character, his means, and his standing. Where a serious doubt exists as to the guilt of the accused, and he is entitled to the benefit of every reasonable doubt, his application for bail should be granted. Then, again, if, on the evidence, it stands indifferent whether the accused is guilty or innocent, the rule generally is to admit him to bail; but if, on the contrary, his guilt is beyond dispute, the general rule is not to grant the application for bail, unless the opportunities to escape do not appear to be possible, and the probability of his appearing for trial is consequently considerable, if not sure."

In Com. ex. rel. Chauncey v. Keeper of Prison, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 227, where the evidence showed that the deceased was killed in an attempt to procure an abortion, it was held insufficient under this rule to support a conviction of murder in the first degree, so that the accused was entitled to bail, where the right to bail exists in all cases not capital. The court said: "It would seem a safe . . . [rule,] to refuse bail in a case of malicious homicide, where the judge would sustain a capital conviction, pronounced by a jury, on evidence of guilt such as that exhibited on the application to bail; and to allow bail, where the prosecutor's evidence was of less efficacy. This appears to afford a practical test, by which the question of admitting to or refusing bail in malicious homicide may be readily solved." This test has been frequently approved.

We think that the best rule in ultimately determining whether the prisoner should be admitted to bail or not is that bail should be refused in all cases where a judge would sustain a conviction for murder in the first degree, if pronounced by a jury, on such evidence of guilt as is exhibited on the hearing for bail; and where the evidence is of less efficacy to admit to bail. State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468.

To the same effect, People v. Baker, 10 How. Pr. 567, s. c. People v. Hyler, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570; Ex parte Bonner, 100 Ala. 114, 14 So. 648; Ex parte Allen, 55 Ala. 258; Ex parte Warrick, 73 Ala. 57; Ex parte Sloane, 95 Ala. 22, 11 So. 14; Re Losasso, 15 Colo. 163, 10 L.R.A. 847, 24 Pac. 1080; Thrasher v. State, 26 Fla. 526, 7 So. 847; Ex parte Claunch, 71 Mo. 233; Ex parte Beacom, 12 Tex. App. 318; Ex parte Jones, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 422, 20 S. W. 983.

This rule applies where the evidence on the part of the people tends to show that the accused is guilty as charged, and the evidence on the part of the accused tends to show an alibi. Ex parte Richardson, 96 Ala. 110, 11 So. 316.

Where it is clear to the mind of the court that a conviction for murder should not be had, the accused should be bailed. United States ex rel. Herbert v. The Marshal, 2 Hayw. & H. 205, Fed. Cas. No. 15,726 A.

In Re Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231, in refusing bail, the court said: "We ought not to anticipate the action of the jury by discharging the prisoner from actual custody, with or without bail, upon evidence which we are not prepared to say is so insufficient as that a verdict requiring a capital sentence, based upon it, should not be permitted to stand."

In People v. Shattuck, 6 Abb. N. C. 33, application for bail was refused where the testimony before the grand jury, if believed, was sufficient to warrant a conviction for murder.

In Moore v. State, 36 Miss. 137, the court said: "We wish it understood that, on application for bail, we may grant the application even in cases where the jury might, and perhaps ought, on the same evidence, to render a verdict of guilty for murder. So much depends on the incidents of a trial by jury, the manner of the witnesses, their intelligence, their seeming bias or fairness, that cannot be brought before this court, which yet should have a material bearing on the weight of evidence, that we deem it unsafe that the opinion of the high court in granting or refusing bail should be adopted as a criterion for the jury by which to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused."

This is a proper rule to follow, especially in a court of the last resort. Ex parte Claunch, 71 Mo. 233.

The Pennsylvania rule was criticized in Ex parte Bridewell, 57 Miss. 39, in which the court said: "A verdict of conviction where no error of law has intervened will never be set aside unless manifestly wrong, or, as is sometimes said, if there be any evidence to support it. To say that bail will only be granted where there is no evidence showing guilt, or where the proof of guilt is so slight upon the whole testimony that a conviction would be manifestly wrong, is plainly inconsistent with the constitutional requirement that it shall be granted in all cases except where the proof is evident or the presumption great. The error of the Pennsylvania rule is in failing to give due effect to a verdict of conviction, or in overlooking the vast change it effects in the attitude of the party. By it the legal presumption of innocence is overthrown, all doubtful questions of fact are resolved in favor of the state, and the credibility or noncredibility of witnesses is conclusively established. As before remarked, where no error of law has been committed to the prejudice of the accused, the verdict will not be set aside, unless the court can say that it is without evidence to support it, or that, upon a review and inspection of all the evidence, the finding is plainly erroneous. To apply such a test to a proceeding for bail, and to declare that it will be denied unless the relator has demonstrated that the evidence against him is of a like unsatisfactory character, is to reverse the constitutional requirement that it shall be granted unless the proof of guilt be evident or the presumption great."

Referring to the statement in Moore's Case, supra, and Beall v. State, 39 Miss. 715, that the court might admit to bail "even in cases where the jury might, or perhaps ought, on the same evidence, to render a verdict of guilty for murder," the court in Ex parte Bridewell, supra, said that, "if by this it was meant that this court or the presiding judge, on the hearing of a writ of habeas corpus, might, in its discretion and under the exceptional circumstances alluded to above, grant bail, even though the relator had not made out a case by which he was constitutionally entitled to demand it, we approve the remark; but if it was meant that the applicant, in the absence of such exceptional circumstances, can ever be said to have established a legal right to demand enlargement by testimony which would make it the duty of a jury to convict him of a capital crime, we dissent from it. A jury ought not to convict if there is a reasonable doubt of guilt, and therefore, to say that the accused is constitutionally entitled to bail, when there is no reasonable doubt of his guilt, is manifestly to nullify the provision of the Bill of Rights, which limits the absolute right to cases where the proof is not evident nor the presumption great. It would be difficult to give a meaning to these words, if they do not embrace a case where guilt has been established beyond all reasonable doubt."

The Pennsylvania rule is also said in RE 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

THOMAS to be unmindful of the inherent right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness of the citizen, and to cast a burden upon those charged with capital offenses not contemplated by the law.

The criticism of the rule in the Bridewell Case, supra, was also approved in Ex parte Smith, 23 Tex. App. 100, 5 S. W. 99.

If, when all the testimony is weighed, the court can satisfactorily affirm that "the proof is evident or the presumption great," that the petitioners are guilty of the offense charged in that degree which is not bailable, bail should be denied. If, on the other hand, the testimony is such as to disprove the defendant's guilt of the offense in the nonbailable degree, or if, when duly weighed, it is such that a fair-minded man would entertain a reasonable doubt of guilt in such degree, then the petitioner is entitled to bail. Ex parte Hammock, 78 Ala. 414.

Upon an application for bail by writ of habeas corpus, the burden is upon the relator to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty; and the officer hearing the case should require the production of all the available testimony for the prosecution, and should if necessary, postpone the hearing until it can be obtained. If, upon the whole testimony adduced before him, he entertains a reasonable doubt whether the relator committed the act, or whether in so doing he was guilty of a capital crime, he should admit him to bail. Ex parte Bridewell, supra.

The same rule will be applied by the appellate court in keeping in mind the prima facie legal presumption that the action of the judge below was correct. Ibid.

If, upon the consideration of all the evidence introduced on the application for bail, the court is of opinion that it is insufficient to create a reasonable doubt of the petitioner's guilt of a capital offense, bail will be refused. Ex parte Dykes, 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 162, 117 Pac. 724; Ex parte Smith, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 24, 99 Pac. 893.

In order to deny bail it is not necessary that the evidence should be so convincing as to justify a verdict against the suspected party; but it is sufficient if it points to him and induces the belief that he may have committed the offense charged. Ex parte Winthrop, — Cal. —, 40 Pac. 751.

Under a Constitution in the usual form, where the proofs go no further than to establish a "probability" of guilt, the accused is entitled to bail. Gainey v. State, 42 Fla. 607, 29 So. 405, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 32.

In an application for bail for a person charged with a capital offense, the burden is upon the accused to show that he or she is entitled to bail. The quantum of proof required is a sufficiency to show from a fair consideration of all the evidence that the proof is not evident and the presumption is not great that the accused is guilty of a capital offense. The character and extent of the proof to make the necessary offense depend upon the circumstances of each case. Ex parte Nathan, — Fla. —, 50 So. 38.

Where the testimony is of less probative force than is necessary under the circumstances of the case to show evident guilt or a great presumption of guilt of a capital offense, the accused is entitled to bail. Where the proofs establish only a probability of guilt, bail should be allowed. Ibid.

On a charge of capital felony, the rule is, "When the guilt is manifest or the presumption strong, the party should be committed to jail; when the evidence does not produce entire conviction, but makes in the mind a belief of the party's guilt, security to answer the charge should be required." State v. Wiley, 64 N. C. 821.

If there is probable cause for charging the accused with murder, he will not be admitted to bail after commitment by the coroner, and pending the hearing before the grand jury. Re Collins, 11 Abb. Pr. 406.

Where circumstantial and contradictory statements of the accused pointed strongly to his guilt of the charge of murder, the court refused to admit him to bail. Ex parte Corriveau, 6 Lower Can. Rep. (Dec. des Tribunaux) 249.

Upon an application for bail before an indictment, if the prosecuting attorney resisting the application, makes no showing that the proof is evident or the presumption great of the guilt of the accused, he is entitled to bail. State ex rel. Murray v. District Ct. 35 Mont. 504, 90 Pac. 513.

In Texas the testimony must make it evident that the accused is the guilty party or he is entitled to bail. Ex parte Jasef, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 24 S. W. 421.

The court believing the evidence to show a deliberate, wanton killing of the deceased by the accused, bail was refused. Cash v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 24 S. W. 408.

Where the record did not show that sedate mind and deliberate, preconceived purpose, which indicate express malice, and the court did not discover those circumstances which point with unerring certainty to malice express, the accused was admitted to bail. Ex parte Cooper, 31 Tex. 185.

The terms, "proof is evident or presumption great," are as definite to the legal mind as any words of explanation could make them; and are intended to indicate the same degree of certainty, whether the evidence be direct or circumstantial. The design is to secure the right of bail in all cases except in those in which the facts might show, with reasonable certainty, that the prisoner is guilty of a capital offense. McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520.

The rule in Texas for determining whether or not bail should be granted is as follows: "If the evidence is clear and strong, leading a well-guarded and dispassionate judgment to the conclusion that the offense has been committed; that the accused is the guilty agent; and that he would probably be punished capitally if the law is administered, bail is not a matter of right." Ex parte Evers, 29 Tex. App. 539, 16 S. W. 343. To the same effect, Ex parte Foster, 5 Tex. App. 625, 32 Am. Rep. 577; Ex parte Smith, 23 Tex. App. 100, 5 S. W. 99; Ex parte Coldiron, 15 Tex. App. 464.

Stated in another form, it is thus laid down: "If, upon the whole testimony adduced, the court or judge entertains a reasonable doubt whether the relator committed the act, or whether in doing so he was guilty of a capital crime, bail should be granted." Ex parte Evers, supra.

This rule applies when the case is considered on appeal, the court keeping in mind the prima facie legal presumption that the action of the trial judge was correct. Ibid.

Unless it plainly, clearly, and obviously appears by the proof that the accused is guilty of the charge against him, he is entitled to bail, by virtue of the Texas Constitution providing, "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties unless for capital offenses when the proof is evident." (Bill of Rights, § 11.) Ex parte Boyett, 19 Tex. App. 17.

So, where robbery committed by the exhibition and use of fire arms is made a capital offense, if the proof is evident that the robbery was committed, and that the accused are the guilty parties, and that fire arms were used in its commission, they are not entitled to bail. Ex parte Epps, 35 Tex. Crim. Rep. 406, 34 S. W. 113.

A case of murder in the first degree having been made against the accused beyond any controversy, bail was held properly refused. Ex parte Wright, 39 Tex. Crim. Rep. 193, 45 S. W. 593.

In Ruston v. State, 15 Tex. App. 324, although the prosecuting witness charged the accused with rape, the court said that the evidence was not of that satisfactory, evident, and conclusive character which authorized it to deny bail.

It not being evident from the facts presented to the court on the application for bail, that the accused is guilty of murder in the first degree, he is entitled to bail. Ex parte Cook, 2 Tex. App. 388.

When the facts show with reasonable certainty, that a murder, with express malice, has been committed, bail should be refused. McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33, 78 Am. Dec. 520; Drury v. State, 25 Tex. 45.

c. Illustrative cases.

1. Bail granted.

The following cases will illustrate circumstance under which bail has been granted.

Where, on the hearing for admission to bail, the state introduced the indictment and then the prisoners gave oral exculpatory evidence, and the state refused to introduce evidence in rebuttal, it was held that the accused should have been admitted to bail in such reasonable sum as would be likely to insure their appearance. Ex parte Hammock, 78 Ala. 414.

In Ex parte King, 86 Ala. 620, 5 So. 863, the accused was held entitled to bail, although it appeared that previous to the homicide he was heard to say that if the deceased "ever made a break at him he would kill him," where the testimony showed clearly and unmistakably that the accused did not provoke the difficulty, but that to all appearances he desired to avoid it; that the deceased was the aggressor; that he was both violent and boisterous; that he struck the accused with sufficient force to stagger him, when the accused immediately shot and killed the deceased. The court said that under this state of the evidence, it was unable to say that the proof was evident or the presumption great that there had been a deliberate, premeditated killing.

Although the accused was indicted for murder, where it appeared that the alleged crime was committed in an attempt to procure an abortion, and there was no evidence of an intent to kill, it was held that the prisoner was entitled to bail. Ex parte Wolff, 57 Cal. 94.

Where the testimony showed merely that the body of a murdered person was found; that a few days before the discovery of the crime the person charged as principal was with the deceased when she left a house where she boarded; that the principal took deceased's clothes from her boarding place early the morning after she left; that some of the clothes were found in petitioner's home, near where the body was found; that the actions of petitioner after the discovery of the crime were such as to arouse suspicion; that something resembling blood was found on the floor of petitioner's home, and the floor was scoured soon after the discovery of the crime; that the petitioner is a married woman living with her husband and others in the same house, it indicates a probability that the petitioner knew something of the crime; but it is not evident proof, nor does it justify a great presumption, that the petitioner, as an accessory before the fact, aided, counseled, hired, or otherwise procured the murder to be committed. Under such circumstances bail is proper. Ex parte Nathan, — Fla. —, 50 So. 38.

The evidence being that the accused shot the deceased in a saloon; that no one had shot the accused before he went into the saloon, but that when he came out he had two pistol balls in his head, ranging backwards and slightly upwards; that there was no one in the saloon except the deceased, his father, and brother, who could have done the shooting; that just as the accused left the saloon, he was fired at and returned the fire; that he immediately exclaimed: "They shot me," and, "Who would not shoot who had been shot at twice?" that the accused had fired only four shots, and that at least five shots were heard by several disinterested witnesses; that a ball extracted from the head of the accused was of the same weight as that used for a pistol such as the deceased, or his father or brother, used, and of too small a caliber for the weapon of the accused,—it was held that the accused was entitled to bail. Ex parte Heffren, 27 Ind. 87.

Where the evidence showed that there had been no quarrel between the deceased and the accused, until one had broken out while they were together in a saloon; that the deceased, who was the stronger man, had perpetrated violence and indignity on the accused, who was intoxicated, in such a manner as to provoke him to extreme anger; that the accused, as soon as he could, left the saloon and returned within five minutes with a revolver, and immediately, on re-entering the saloon, shot the deceased,—it was held that it could not be fairly said that it was clear that there was sufficient time between the provocation and the act for the passion to cool and the reason to resume control, or that the proof was evident or the presumption strong that the killing was malicious. Ex parte Moore, 30 Ind. 197.

Where the killing was shown to have been the result of a combat entered into upon a sudden quarrel, and without any previous acquaintance between the petitioner and the deceased, it was held that the petitioner was entitled to bail. Ex parte Hock, 68 Ind. 206.

In State v. Start, — Kan. App. —, 54 Pac. 22, the evidence was that the deceased saw the accused holding another man whom he supposed to be his son, and, upon going to his assistance, was shot by the accused when within four or five steps of where the two men were struggling, there being no enmity between the deceased and the accused, and no reason shown for the killing. It was held that the defendant was entitled to bail.

Where it appeared that the deceased and the accused had quarreled, and that the accused, while walking in the street with a friend, met the deceased and a friend, the deceased remarking: "This is the young man who was going to whip me;" that the deceased then said to the accused that if he would take the rocks out of his pocket, he would fight him; that after some remarks of this nature the accused drew a revolver and shot the deceased, it was held that he was entitled to bail. State v. Bell. — Kan. App. —, 54 Pac. 504.

Where the evidence showed that the prisoner, who was greatly agitated over the punishment of his brother by the deceased, a school teacher, had armed himself, and had then sought the deceased for an explanation, and had met him after school on the latter's way home; that they had engaged in an angry conversation, and that the deceased, who was a larger man than the accused, began beating the latter with a whip; that the accused retreated, and that the deceased followed up his attack, until the accused drew a bowie-knife from his pocket and stabbed the deceased to death, it was held that the prisoner was entitled to bail. Ex parte Wray, 30 Miss. 673.

Where the evidence was that the accused shot the deceased while the latter was advancing on him, threatening to use a heavy board, and that the deceased was much superior in strength to the accused, and was infuriated at him because he had attempted to interfere with the deceased when the latter threatened to beat his son, and that the accused happened to have a gun at the time because he had been out hunting, it was held that he was entitled to bail. Ex parte Majors, — Miss. —, 34 So. 151, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 37.

Where, on the hearing of an application for bail, seven of the nineteen witnesses whose names were indorsed on the indictment, and seven others, failed to testify to anything inculcating the accused, and there was nothing to suggest that the witnesses not in attendance had any knowledge of the case not possessed by those examined, it was held that the prisoner's application should have been granted. Ex parte Floyd, 60 Miss. 913.

Upon the simple showing that the accused stood indicted for the crime of rape, a capital felony, together with the proof that he had property of the value of $500, the court held that he was entitled to bail. Ex parte Arthur, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 47 S. W. 365.

Where the testimony of accomplices made out a case of coldblooded murder against the accused, but the evidence corroborating them was circumstantial, consisting of declarations and conduct of the accused, the proof of the prisoner's connection with the crime not being absolutely clear and conclusive beyond a reasonable doubt, it was held that he was entitled to bail. Ex parte Locklin, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 72 S. W. 585, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 35.

The evidence showing that the cause of the killing was an insult to a female relative, which would require a charge of manslaughter, it was held that the accused was entitled to bail. Ex parte Proctor, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 99 S. W. 1010.

The evidence failing to show conclusively that the deceased died from wounds inflicted by the accused, it was held that the prisoner was entitled to bail. Ex parte Pettis, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 288, 131 S. W. 1081.

The judge below is in far better situation to determine the credibility of witnesses on the application for bail than the appellate court, and therefore great deference must be paid to the construction placed upon the testimony by him. Drury v. State, 25 Tex. 45.

The evidence showing that the shooting was probably the result of a sudden affray, the accused was held entitled to bail. Ex parte Dickson. 20 Tex. App. 332.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where upon the hearing the prisoner procured as many of the witnesses whose names were indorsed on the indictment as he was able to, and they failed to identify him as the murderer, or to connect him with the homicide, it was held that he was entitled to bail. Ex parte Randon, 12 Tex. App. 145.

The accused is entitled to bail after indictment, where there is nothing in the testimony to connect him in any manner with the crime. Ex parte Bomar, 9 Tex. App. 610.

2. Bail refused.

The following cases show circumstances under which bail has been refused:

In Ex parte Nettles, 58 Ala. 268, the defendant shot the deceased at his place of business, and accosted him there, the tendency of the testimony being that the accused had an open knife in his hand. There was short quarrel, followed by a fatal stab with the knife. Under one construction of the evidence the offense was not bailable, under the other, that is, that the killing was not capital, the offense was bailable. The primary court having refused bail, the appellate court refused to disturb its ruling.

Upon an application for bail, exculpatory circumstances related by the accused in his confession of the homicide, not supported by other testimony or by a strong presumption of their truth arising from the confession itself, are not in themselves sufficient ground for admitting the prisoner to bail. State v. Abbot, R. M. Charl't. (Ga.) 244.

The evidence establishing without conflict that the accused shot and killed the deceased, that there were previous threats by the prisoner to do so, that the weapon used was one of a dangerous and deadly character, and that, in addition to such threats and the character of the weapon used, there were circumstances clearly manifesting the existence of malice, it was held that the accused had not discharged the burden of showing that the proof was not evident and that the presumption of guilt was not strong. Schmidt v. Simmons, 137 Ind. 93, 36 N. E. 516.

In Brown v. State, 147 Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34, it was held that the prisoners were not entitled to bail, the evidence showing that they went to the house where the deceased was just before daybreak, claiming to be United States marshals in search of a man; that after they called one man, the deceased, who was in the house, took a shotgun and went out of the kitchen door to a smoke house; that the accused, when they heard the opening of the door, went around the rear of the house and saw the deceased, whom they could not recognize on account of the darkness, standing in the smokehouse door holding a shotgun in his hand; that he raised it up; that the prisoners said: "Hands up!" that the deceased said: "I haint, I haint;" that immediately a shot was fired by one of the accused which killed the deceased,—the court saying that the evidence did not warrant the conclusion that the accused were not trespassers, or that, at the time the shot was fired, they or either of them were in imminent peril of life or of great bodily harm, or that they might reasonably have believed themselves to be in such peril.

Where the facts established to the satisfaction of the court that the two prisoners accused of killing the deceased were riding, together with others, in a wagon, when one of them, seeing the deceased, who was his enemy, and, finding an opportunity to confront him alone, attacked and killed him without the assistance of any of the others and without legal justification, it was held that the assailant should be denied bail, but that the other prisoner should be admitted to bail. Ex parte Hamilton, 65 Miss. 147, 3 So. 241.

In Re Bell, 113 Mo. 506, 21 S. W. 221, the supreme court refused bail before indictment, where the only evidence was that offered at the preliminary examination, at which the accused gave no evidence, the facts presented by the prosecution being without explanation or extenuation.

Where the evidence of guilt was strong and the prisoner had been retaken after an escape, the court refused to exercise its discretionary powers to bail. State v. Rockefeller, 6 N. J. L. 332.

Where the evidence showed that the deceased, while in conversation with a man in front of a store, was approached by the accused, who said, "Hello, Dan," and without other warning fired two shots into the deceased in quick succession; that the deceased fell, and the accused fired four more shots into him; that the accused then walked off, came back, and putting his pistol close to the head of the deceased, snapped it once or twice, and with an oath said: "I told you I'd kill you. You killed my boy;" it was held not sufficient to show that the killing was in the heat of passion, so as to entitle the prisoner to bail. Re Fraley, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 719, 139 Am. St. Rep. 988, 109 Pac. 295.

The evidence showing that, in a dispute over a fence, the deceased and accused had violent words, that the prisoner walked off a few steps, opened his knife, and came back and made a remark to the deceased, who started for the prisoner, but stopped 3 or 4 feet from him, and made no further advance; that the accused said, "Come on with it, and if you are going to do it, do it," and immediately stabbed him in the heart, it was held that he was not entitled to bail. Re Rollin, 3 Okla. Crim. Rep. 725, 109 Pac. 288.

The testimony indicating that the killing was done in a riot by a body of men who had a common understanding or agreement that they should resist all who opposed them, to the extent of taking life if necessary to accomplish their purpose; that the defendant was a party to this combination, and that he was present upon the ground with full knowledge of the proceedings of the rioters, giving them his encouragement, it was held that bail was properly refused. Com. v. O'Donnell (O. & T.) 12 Pa. Co. Ct. 142.

It appearing that there had been bitter feelings between the deceased and the accused, owing to the fact that the accused had dunned the deceased for pay for certain cigars he had sold him, and that they met in a saloon and quarreled over the matter, and the accused shot the deceased under circumstances which made it improbable that he acted in self-defense, it was held that bail was properly refused. Randle v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 22 S. W. 49.

Where the accused claimed to have shot the deceased in self-defense, but his account of the affair made after the shooting, and that told on the application for bail, were materially different, and certain physical facts made it certain that the shooting could not have occurred as the accused said, he was refused bail. Ex parte Pace, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 20 S. W. 922.

Where the only question on the application for bail was as to the identity of the person committing the murder, which was with express malice, the court refused to reverse the judgment refusing bail. McKinney v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 20 S. W. 363.

Where the testimony of one witness made it doubtful whether or not the case was one in which the accused was entitled to bail, while the testimony of another, if true, made it evident that the killing was upon express malice, and the salient points in the latter's narrative were not contradicted, and where if untrue, it was in the power of the accused to show it, bail was refused. Price v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 26 S. W. 624.

The testimony for the state being positive and unequivocal that the accused, in company with another, killed the deceased by shooting him through a window at night, the defense being an alibi, it was held that the prisoner was properly refused bail. Ex parte Cabrera, 53 Tex. Crim. Rep. 466, 110 S. W. 898.

Where the accused and the brother of the deceased had a dispute, and the accused called the brother, "A d—d liar," and while the brother, unarmed and in his shirt sleeves, was in the act of dismounting from his horse, the accused shot at him, and the deceased, who was unarmed, seeing the danger of his brother, started toward the accused with hands uplifted in an imploring attitude, and the accused shot him, and then fired another shot at the brother, it was held that the accused was not entitled to bail. Moore v. State, 31 Tex. 572.

Where the accused was the seducer of the wife of the deceased, and had been implored by the latter to leave the neighborhood, the deceased saying that unless he did go one or the other of them must die, and it appeared that the accused armed himself with three pistols and a double-barreled shotgun, and waylaid and killed the deceased, it was held that he was not entitled to bail. Ex parte Mosby, 31 Tex. 566, 98 Am. Dec. 547.

Where the evidence was that the deceased and a companion were riding on horseback, and were stopped by several persons who were armed, and the deceased was ordered to give up his pistol, and he gave it to his companion, who, in obedience to orders from the assaulting party, laid it on the ground, and afterwards escaped and was fired on several times in so doing, and that soon afterward he heard four shots, it appearing that the body of the deceased was found a few hours later on the ground with four bullets in it, and that a short distance away one of the assailants was found severely wounded, shot, according to the companion of the deceased, by another of the assailants, it was held that the proof of the defendant's guilt was evident and the presumption great, so that they were not entitled to bail. Herrin v. State, 33 Tex. 638.

That the accused was drunk at the time of the homicide does not entitle him to bail on the theory that there must arise doubt as to whether the proof is evident of a sufficient intent to justify a capital conviction. Ex parte Evers, 29 Tex. App. 539, 16 S. W. 343.

Where several persons met at the house of the deceased at night, and while the accused was engaged in beating the deceased with a pistol, another shot and killed him, it was held that notwithstanding the facts did not in terms show an actual agreement to kill, and did not show that the parties to the killing went to and left the place of the homicide in company with each other, the court would not presume that their meeting was accidental, and that, while there, they acted with different intents in committing the homicide, and that, because the accused did not shoot the deceased when he had an opportunity to do so, he was not the principal offender. The burden of showing this was held to be on the accused in order to entitle him to bail. Ex parte Johnson, 30 Tex. App. 279, 17 S. W. 410.

Where the accused killed the deceased because of the fact that his wife told him she had been raped by the latter twenty years before, at a time when she was not the wife of the accused, the defense being that the killing was done under uncontrollable passion, it was held that bail was rightfully refused. Ex parte Jones, 31 Tex. Crim. Rep. 422, 20 S. W. 983.

The accused is not entitled to bail on mere proof that threats were made by the deceased against his life, which threats he had good reason to believe would be carried into execution. Ex parte Taylor, 33 Tex. Crim. Rep. 531, 28 S. W. 957.

IX. Amount of bail.

In determining the amount of bail to be demanded in capital offenses, the courts 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

endeavor to fix upon such sum as is deemed sufficient to secure the presence of the accused at the trial, and in doing so they will take into consideration the pecuniary ability of the defendant.

In Re Losasso, 15 Colo. 163, 10 L.R.A. 847, 24 Pac. 1080, it is said: It must be borne in mind that the legal penalty for crime is inflicted only upon conviction, and that the object of imprisonment before trial is safe-keeping, not punishment. If the presence of the accused for trial could be otherwise assured, imprisonment would doubtless be entirely dispensed with. So anxious were the framers of the Constitutions, state and Federal, to guard against abuses in this direction, that they prohibited the exaction of "excessive bail." i. e., more than will be reasonably sufficient to prevent evasion of the law by flight or concealment. It is likewise to be remembered that trial does not and cannot, as a rule, so speedily follow presentment, in this and other rapidly growing western commonwealths, as in England, where the common-law doctrine under consideration had its origin.

In State v. Crocker, 5 Wyo. 385, 40 Pac. 681, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 468, it is said: "It must be borne in mind that our laws are intended to be framed upon the humane idea that no man is to be punished until he has been convicted; that an accused is only confined in jail before trial and conviction to secure his presence at the trial, and, if convicted, that he may be compelled to undergo sentence; that, however, if, by sureties, his presence can as well be secured, it is deemed wise and just that he shall, until trial and conviction, be allowed his liberty, except in capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great, in which cases it is deemed that the offense is so grave that it is not safe to allow the presence of the accused to be secured by bail."

The bail must be fixed at such sum as will be likely to secure the attendance of the accused at the trial. Ex parte Heffren, 27 Ind. 87; Ex parte Bridewell, 57 Miss. 39.

The amount of bail should be graded somewhat by the pecuniary ability of the prisoner. Ex parte Hammock, 78 Ala. 414.

This should be determined in the county from which the case comes, and not by the appellate court. Ibid.

In Ex parte Banks, 28 Ala. 89, it is said that the fact that the prisoner is a man of fortune may be taken into consideration in fixing the amount of bail. The bail in this case was fixed at $20,000.

The record should furnish the court with information as to the pecuniary circumstances of the accused. Ruston v. State, 15 Tex. App. 324; Ex parte Coldiron, 15 Tex. App. 464.

Upon a record showing that the accused had property of the value of $500, the court fixed his bail at $5,000. Ex parte Arthur, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 47 S. W. 365.

In Moore v. State, 36 Miss. 137, where it was shown that the prisoner had very little property and was in bad health, bail was fixed at $2,000.

In Ex parte Wilson, 20 Tex. App. 498, the accused being very poor and having few friends, bail was reduced from $7,000 to $3,500.

There being nothing in the record to show the ability of the accused to give bail, the court declared that it was not proper to say that a $3,000 bond was excessive. Ex parte Hanson, 27 Tex. App. 591, 11 S. W. 641.

Where bail was fixed in a certain sum on preliminary examination, it was held that after indictment the accused had no right to demand admission to bail in the sum fixed at the preliminary hearing. Ex parte Robinson, 108 Ala. 161, 18 So. 729.

In Ex parte Cochran, 20 Tex. App. 242, the record showing that the prisoner charged with murder, and being entitled to bail, could give a bond in the sum of $2,500, bail was fixed at that amount.

Bail has been fixed in various amounts, ranging from $100,000 to $500. The following cases will illustrate the practice of the courts in this respect:

In Davis's Case, Chase, 1, Fed. Cas. No. 3,621a, where the charge was treason, bail was fixed at $100,000.

In Com. v. Semmes, 11 Leigh, 665, where the condition of the prisoner's health was such as to render his further imprisonment dangerous to his life, he was admitted to bail in the sum of $25,000.

Where the proof on the application for bail was not considered strong enough by the court to justify the conviction against certain defendants, they were admitted to bail in the sum of $20,000. People v. Baker, 10 How. Pr. 567, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570.

In People v. Perry, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 27, after two disagreements of trial juries, the prisoner was admitted to bail in the sum of $20,000.

Bail fixed at $15,000. Ex parte Coldiron, 15 Tex. App. 464; Re Alexander, 59 Mo. 598, 21 Am. Rep. 393 (after two mistrials).

Bail fixed at $13,000. Ex parte Matlock, 18 Tex. App. 227.

Bail fixed at $12,000. Ex parte Strange, 59 Cal. 416.

Bail fixed at $10,000. State v. Bell, — Kan. App. —, 54 Pac. 504; State v. Start, — Kan. App. —, 54 Pac. 22; Ex parte Jack, — Miss. —, 22 So. 188; Ex parte Holland, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 581, 100 Pac. 50; Ex parte Westmoreland, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 512, 103 Pac. 370; Ex parte Hay, 23 Tex. App. 585, 5 S. W. 98; Thompson v. State, 25 Tex. Supp. 395; Ex parte Miller, 41 Tex. 213 (upon agreement); Ex parte Callaher, 25 Tex. App. 455, 8 S. W. 481 (murder of two persons); People v. Baker, 10 How. Pr. 567, 2 Park. Crim. Rep. 570 (where the court did not consider the evidence sufficient to have warranted the finding of an indictment against the accused); Ex parte Goans, 99 Mo. 193, 17 Am. St. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 571, 12 S. W. 635 (after discharge by coroner's jury and the committing magistrate, and after one mistrial); United States v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 224, Fed. Cas. No. 15,495 (charge piracy).

Bail fixed at $8,000. Ex parte Hayes, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 1149; Ex parte Lochlin, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 72 S. W. 585, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 35; Ex parte Rice, 26 Tex. App. 343, 9 S. W. 615; Ex parte Rankin, 30 Tex. App. 71, 20 S. W. 202; Ex parte Wolff, 57 Cal. 94.

Bail fixed at $7,500. Ex parte Wilson, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 110 S. W. 66.

Bail fixed at $6,000. Ex parte Bice, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 90 S. W. 505; Ex parte Duncan, 27 Tex. App. 485, 11 S. W. 442.

Bail fixed at $5,000. Ex parte Patterson, — Miss. —, 22 So. 186; State v. Wiley, 64 N. C. 821; People v. Van Horne, 8 Barb. 158; People v. Porter, 8 Barb. 168, note; Ex parte Dickson, 20 Tex. App. 332; Ex parte Terry, 20 Tex. App. 486; Ex parte Allen, 22 Tex. App. 201, 2 S. W. 588; Ex parte McDowell, 23 Tex. App. 679, 5 S. W. 187; Ex parte Henson, 24 Tex. App. 305, 5 S. W. 684; Ex parte Suddath, 25 Tex. App. 426, 8 S. W. 479; Ex parte Smith, 26 Tex. App. 134, 9 S. W. 359; Re Puryear, — Tex. App. —, 11 S. W. 32; Ex parte Hanson, 27 Tex. App. 591, 11 S. W. 641; Re Foulk, — Tex. App. —, 13 S. W. 746; Ex parte Bates, 29 Tex. App. 138, 15 S. W. 406; Ex parte Albitz, 29 Tex. App. 128, 15 S. W. 173; Ex parte Hope, 29 Tex. App. 189, 15 S. W. 602; Ex parte Thompson, — Tex. App. —, 15 S. W. 912; Ex parte Moore, — Tex. App. —, 16 S. W. 764; Ex parte Jasef, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 24 S. W. 421; Ex parte Fatherree, 34 Tex. Crim. Rep. 594, 31 S. W. 403; Ex parte Winters, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 32 S. W. 897; Ex parte Dartner, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 38 S. W. 770; Ex parte Spencer, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 138 S. W. 703.

Bail fixed at $4,000. Ex parte Pettis, 60 Tex. Crim. Rep. 288, 131 S. E. 1081; Ex parte Kunde, 22 Tex. App. 418, 3 S. W. 332.

Bail fixed at $3,000. Ex parte Catron, — Miss. —, 21 So. 1029; Ex parte Schamberger, 19 Tex. App. 572.

Bail fixed at $2,500. Ex parte Proctor, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 99 S. W. 1010; Ex parte Bryant, 21 Tex. App. 639, 2 S. W. 891; Ex parte Jones, 26 Tex. App. 597, 10 S. W. 114; Ex parte Cosby, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 54 S. W. 587.

Bail fixed at $2,000. Ex parte Williams, 18 Tex. App. 653.

Bail fixed at $1,000. Ex parte Majors, — Miss. —, 34 So. 151, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 37; Ex parte Manley, — Miss. —, 20 So. 1023.

Bail fixed at $500. Ruston v. State, 15 Tex. App. 324 (charge rape).

In Reg. v. McNaughten, 14 Cox. C. C. 576, where it appeared that a homicide was committed by officers in repelling an unlawful assembly or riot, the accused were admitted to bail on their own recognizances in the sum of £100.

In Ex parte Bryant, 34 Ala. 270, where four persons were accused of murder in the first degree, and the proof not being evident or the presumption great as to three of the prisoners, they were admitted to bail in the sums of $3,000, $1,000, and $500 respectively.

In Re Wilson, — Tex. App. —, 13 S. W. 609, bail was fixed for various defendants at $5,000, $3,000 and $2,000.

In People v. Smith, 1 Cal. 9, the defendants, who were charged with burning several Indian lodges and killing several Indians, were each permitted to enter into a recognizance in the sum of $3,000.

X. Rules governing appellate court on application for bail.

The appellate courts in some states will not interfere with the action of the lower court upon an application for bail, unless there has been a manifest abuse of its power or discretion. In others the appellate court will weigh the evidence, but in all courts great deference is paid to the decision of the lower court, on the ground that the judge has had the opportunity to see and hear the witnesses.

Whether based on a prima facie case of murder, on evidence of probable guilt, on the sickness or physical condition of the defendant, or on other cause, the granting or refusal of bail in capital cases is peculiarly within the discretion of the judge of the superior court, and will not be controlled unless it has been manifestly and flagrantly abused. Jernagin v. State, 118 Ga. 307, 45 S. E. 411, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 45.

When the right to bail depends upon the hearing of testimony, the rule of the appellate court is not to reverse the finding of the primary court. Ex parte Allen, 55 Ala. 258.

If, after indictment, there is no doubt from the evidence offered at the hearing on habeas corpus that a murder has been committed, that the issue is as to the guilty complicity of the relator with the perpetrator, and that issue has been passed upon in the court below on the credibility of witnesses, the appellate court will not reverse the judgment of the lower court refusing bail. Street v. State, 43 Miss. 1.

The granting or refusal of bail being a matter in the sound discretion of the court below, an appellate court will not control that discretion, unless it has been flagrantly abused. Lester v. State, 33 Ga. 192.

When the appellate court sits in revision of a judgment of the lower court, it acts on the conviction made upon it by a perusal of the testimony in the record giving to the judgment of the inferior court that prima facie presumption of correctness which attaches to all courts of competent jurisdiction, strengthened in this class of cases by the fact that the judge of the lower court has seen the witnesses and heard them testify under circumstances which made it his duty to attend to their bearing and determine their credibility. Ex parte Bridewell, 57 Miss. 39.

When the question is presented to a revisory court, much is due to the judgment of the primary tribunal. The witnesses are personally before it, and the examination is usually had near the scene of the alleged offense, and in the midst of the circumstances attending the transaction. In all investigations of criminal accusations, much depends upon the manner in which the witnesses testify, the feeling of partiality or prejudice they may manifest, and their general demeanor. These the primary court has the opportunity of observing, and it should be clear that it has erred in its judgment, or a revisory court shall abstain from interference. Ex parte Sloane, 95 Ala. 22, 11 So. 14.

Where the evidence on the part of the people tends to show that the accused is guilty as charged, and that on the part of the prisoner tends to show an alibi, the appellate court will not grant bail where it has been denied by the primary magistrate on oral evidence, unless such denial appears from the record to have been manifestly and clearly erroneous. Ex parte Richardson, 96 Ala. 110, 11 So. 316.

The appellate court will not interfere after the district court has acted, unless it clearly appears that the defendant is entitled to bail. State v. Zummo, 115 La. Ann. 456, 39 So. 442.

If the appellate court cannot say that it is convinced that the probate court clearly erred in refusing bail, the renewed application of the prisoner in the higher court for admission to bail will be refused. Ex parte McAnally, 53 Ala. 495, 25 Am. Rep. 646.

In Re Troia, 64 Cal. 152, 28 Pac. 231, the court said: "If, on habeas corpus, we are ever authorized to determine the credibility to be accorded to the testimony of witnesses whose material statements conflict, it is only when the testimony of the material witnesses for the people is clearly shown to be false that we can be justified in discharging the prisoner with or without bail."

But the rule that the appellate court will not set aside a decision of the circuit judge refusing to admit the accused to bail, where he has had the opportunity to see and hear the witnesses, does not apply where the denial of bail is made on the record of the evidence before the committing magistrate. Ex parte Jones, 20 Ark. 9.

In Indiana, the appellate court, upon an application for bail, will weigh the evidence. Ex parte Moore, 30 Ind. 197; Ex parte Sutherland, 56 Ind. 595; Ex parte Walton, 79 Ind. 600; Ex parte Kendall, 100 Ind. 599; Ex parte Richards, 102 Ind. 260, 1 N. E. 639.

It is the duty of the appellate court to weigh the evidence and pass upon its conflict as a trial court. Brown v. State, 147, Ind. 28, 46 N. E. 34.

Upon the appeal of the accused from a decision of the court below, the appellate court, will not treat the finding of the judge below as having the same legal effect as if it had been a finding on the final trial on an ordinary cause, but the judges of the higher court will consider and weigh the evidence. Ex parte Heffren, 27 Ind. 87.

The appellate court in Texas examines the evidence on appeal from a judgment in habeas corpus proceedings denying bail. Ex parte McKinney, 5 Tex. App. 500. To the same effect. Ex parte Williams, 18 Tex. App. 653.

In Ex parte Matlock, 18 Tex. App. 227, the evidence was examined by the appellate court, and the applicant admitted to bail after indictment, the decision of the lower court being reversed.

While great deference will be paid to the judgment of the court below, it will not be binding on the appellate court in any state of the case, where the court might be impressed with reasonable doubt, or could not willingly concur in its correctness. Ex parte Moore, 5 Tex. App. 103.

It would only be in an extreme case in which it was evident that the judge below erred, that the appellate court would reverse his judgment upon a matter of the conflict of evidence and the credibility of witnesses. Ex parte Beacom, 12 Tex. App. 318.

The appellate court, in passing upon the applicant's right to bail, will not comment on the evidence. Ex parte McKinney, 5 Tex. App. 500.

In State ex rel. West v. Collins, 10 N. D. 464, 88 N. W. 88, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 41, the court said: "We have also reached the further conclusion that any extended presentation or discussion of the evidence at the hands of this court, in advance of the trial of the case upon the merits, would be manifestly improper. In capital cases the question of whether the homicide resulted from the premeditated act of the accused is ordinarily one of fact, to be determined by the jury under proper instructions to be given to the jury by the trial court. In such cases the pivotal question of the grade of the homicide ought not, in our judgment, to be made the subject of collateral inquiry and determination in advance of the trial, except in cases where there is little or no ground for a difference of opinion as to the grade or degree of the homicide. In our opinion this court would be trenching upon delicate and dangerous ground should it attempt to pass upon the crucial question to be determined hereafter by the jury impaneled to try and decide upon the entire matter of the guilt or innocence of the accused, including the matter of the nature and the degree of the homicide. Upon such considerations we are constrained to refrain from any discussion of the evidence or the law applicable thereto."

In Louisiana, whether a prisoner charged with a capital crime shall be admitted to mail is discretionary with the judge empowered to issue a writ of habeas corpus, and a mandamus will not therefore be issued to compel the district court to admit the accused to bail. State v. Merrick, 10 La. Ann. 424. H. C. S.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

THOMAS J. ADAMS

v.

J. W. PORTER, Plff. in Certiorari.

(129 La. 1085, 57 So. 526.)

Vendor and purchaser — deficiency — supply.

When there is a deficiency of land in a sale per aversionem, the court cannot order the vendor to supply the deficiency out of land not included in the tract intended to be sold.

(January 15, 1912.)

CERTIORARI to the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Parish of Caddo to review a judgment modifying a judgment of the Judicial District Court in a suit brought to recover possession of certain real estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hall & Jack and Liverman, & Pollock for applicant.

Messrs. Lee, Pegues, & Atkinson for respondent.

Breaux, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This suit was brought by plaintiff to recover the following described tract of land, to wit: Commencing in the center of Wilson's Ferry, and running in a southeasterly direction along Bayou Pierre, to a dry bayou south of a cabin, at or near the east and west line of section 5, divid-

Headnote by BREAUX, Ch. J.

Note. — May vendor be required to make good deficiency in tract sold out of other lands.

The decision in ADAMS v. PORTER, to the effect that where lands are sold per aversionem or in gross, the vendor cannot be compelled to supply the deficiency out of other lands, even where it is assumed that some remedy exists, is supported by the authorities. Thus, in Gladstone Realty Co. v. Currie, 126 La. 115, 52 So. 237, as is set out in the ADAMS CASE, it was held that the right of action by a purchaser for a deficiency of acreage was not for a supplement of area, but that, in case of a shortage, the remedy was for a diminution of price, under Civ. Code, Art. 2494, en-ing the N. $\frac{1}{2}$ and the S. $\frac{1}{2}$ of S. E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of section 5, and running thence east between parallel lines to the east boundary of the section, containing 80 acres, more or less.

The facts are slightly complicated. They are in the main that on the 22d day of December, 1908, Thomas J. Adams, the plaintiff, sold to Joseph W. Porter, the defendant, a tract of land of 33 acres for the price of $1,200, represented by the note of J. W. Porter in favor of the plaintiff, payable on January 1, 1910, secured by a vendor's mortgage and privilege. On the face of the papers, this was a complete deed.

Subsequently the parties by their agreements beclouded the issues. The defendant, Porter, agreed with plaintiff to transfer to the latter, Adams, the land described (which was mortgaged at the time to a Mr. Marsden) in exchange for plaintiff's land, sold as above mentioned, and for the price for which a note had been executed. In order to enable Porter, the defendant, to make title to Adams to the 80 acres of land above described, a note secured by mortgage and vendor's privilege, as above mentioned, was assigned to Porter to enable him to pay the vendor's privilege and mortgage due by him (Porter) on the land which he promised to transfer to the plaintiff in exchange. The note was placed in the hands of Mr. K. M. Reeves to pay the note and vendor's privilege due by Porter to Marsden. The note was taken up by Reeves for account of Adams, and titling the purchaser thereto, in case of a shortage of $\frac{1}{20}$ part or more of the measure expressed in the contract. So, in Clark v. Farnsworth, 7 Kan. App. 167, 53 Pac. 93, it was held that a party purchasing lots on the margin of a town site purchases only the land contained within such lots, and that he cannot recover from the grantor a sufficient amount of land owned by such grantor adjoining the purchased lots, and outside the limits of the town site, to make up a deficiency in the area of the purchased lots, but that the remedy, if any, lay in other directions.

In Wright v. Wright, 34 Ala. 194, where the deed contained a complete description of government surveys and metes and bounds, followed by a designation of a number of acres as mere matter of description, the court, in holding that the purchaser was not even entitled to an abatement in the purchase money, said that "the vendor in the absence of fraud, is not bound to make good the deficiency, and the vendee is not required to surrender any excess. In sales made in gross this rule is of more general application than when the sale is made per acre."

And the general rule is not only that the vendor cannot be compelled to make up any deficiency from other lands, where the sale is in gross, but that the vendee cannot be compelled to take land not lying within the purchased tract in lieu of a deduction for a deficiency. Thus, in Barton v. Bird, 1 Overt. 66, where a certain tract estimated to contain a certain number of acres was sold with a stipulation that a deduction should be made at a certain rate for any deficiency, it was held that the vendee could not be compelled to take lands not lying within the tract sold, as delineated on a plat with reference to which the sale was made.

But where the sale is by the acre, and not in gross, or, as it is sometimes stated, one of hazard, it seems that, in some instances at least, the vendee is entitled to have a deficiency made up from adjoining lands. Thus, in Norfolk Trust Co. v. Foster, 78 Va. 414, where a tract supposed 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to contain a certain number of acres was sold at a specified sum per acre, with provision that the boundaries set forth in the deed were not accepted as strictly correct, and reference was made to a survey to be made, and with the further provision that if the land conveyed contained more than the estimated acreage, such excess should be paid for at a certain rate, it was held that equity would decree the purchaser the deficiency of land from the adjoining land, or, at his option, the value thereof.

And where the sale is of a specified part of a larger tract, it has been held that the deficiency must be made up. Thus, in Lee v. Durret, 4 Bibb, 20, where A purchased a specified number of acres from a larger tract, and B subsequently, and with notice of the prior purchase of A, purchased the residue of the original tract, it was held, the part set off to A falling short of the purchased acreage, that B must convey to him sufficient of the residue to make up the deficit. But in Lebeau v. Bergeron, 14 La. Ann. 494, where adjoining tracts with an established dividing line were purchased from a common vendor, it was held that if either purchaser has not the amount of land called for by his deed, he cannot recover the deficiency from the purchaser of the adjoining tract.

In Quebec the question seems affected by statute. Thus, in St.-Aubin v. Brunet, Rap. Jud. Quebec, 40 C. S. 83, where the vendor of one parish lot owned an adjoining lot, and the statutes required the vendor to deliver the amount mentioned in the contract, it was held that he could be compelled to deliver the amount called for by the deed, by taking the shortage from the adjoining unsold lot, and that he could not limit the vendee to a reduction in price for the deficiency.

And the vendee of realty may expressly contract that, in case a certain tract of land sold does not contain a specified number of acres, the deficiency will be made up from adjoining lands, and such a contract will be enforced at the suit of the purchaser. Latimer v. Marchbanks, 57 S. C. 267, 35 S. E. 481.

G. J. C.

it remained in the hands of Reeves to guarantee the faithful performance on the part of Porter according to the terms of the contract; that is to say, to guarantee the valid deed and title to the tract of land which he had promised to exchange with plaintiff for the land sold as first above mentioned.

It appears on the face of the papers as a sale, but in reality this sale was a step toward the exchange. Some time after these agreements, defendant, Porter, delivered two mules to the plaintiff, for the value of which he received 45 acres of land, the very land that he had under private signature agreed to make title to plaintiff in exchange of the first land above described, but which he had not yet delivered in accordance with the agreement. The mules transferred for the land had been in plaintiff's possession and use several months when this suit was brought. There is no question but that the transaction between the plaintiff and the defendant involving the two mules and 45 acres of land is complete and irrevocable. The judge of the district court so considered this part of the transaction, and so did the circuit court of appeal.

Plaintiff, in bringing this suit, ignored entirely the exchange of land for mules; made no allegation in that respect. We are of opinion that we must give effect to this part of the exchange between the parties. Had the defendant undertaken, instead of the transaction about lands, to pay the \$1,200 note, and had transferred the two mules in part payment, observing the proportion of the 45 acres to the 80 acres as the basis of value, the defendant would then have paid $\frac{11}{20}$ of the note; that is, in the proportion of $\frac{9}{20}$ to $\frac{11}{20}$, the value of the land. The defendant informed the plaintiff that he would take possession of the 45 acres. He had them surveyed, and became the owner of a separate tract of the east side of the tract he had promised to transfer to plaintiff in exchange.

But the transaction took another shape, and from it grew the difference between the parties. The plaintiff, we have seen, was to receive 80 acres of land in exchange for the $1,200 note, which is the same thing in this case as an equivalent for the 33-acre tract of plaintiff, as before mentioned. But this transfer of the 80-acre tract was impossible for the reason that the tract as described contained only 50 acres. It was not possible to carve out of 50 acres two tracts—one of 45 acres, and another of 35 acres, the last number being the number of acres plaintiff now claims as due him as a balance of land on 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the exchange made. The number of acres remaining is 5 acres.

Defendant's contention is that the tract was to be transferred by metes and bounds, and that, when the agreement was signed, it was expressly understood that the plaintiff would accept the number of acres without the reference to the actual number described in the deed. This is not denied by the plaintiff. On the contrary, it is admitted by him as a witness. The circuit court of appeal undertook to settle this difference between the parties by decreeing that the 35 acres of land should be taken from the 45 acres for which defendant had conveyed two mules, as before stated. In this opinion we are unable to agree with our learned brothers of the circuit court of appeal. Defendant had acquired as absolute right, and title, and the land was not subject to any further claim in the part of plaintiff. He could not be made to supplement a deficiency of measurement in that way. It would have been taking other land to supply an alleged deficiency.

A very similar question was decided in Gladstone Realty Co. v. Currie, 126 La. 115, 52 So. 237, in which it was decided that lands other than those included in the metes and bounds of the tract sold could not be taken and applied in satisfaction of any deficiency.

These 45 acres of land by effect of the agreement between the parties were taken out of the metes and bounds of the tract which defendant had promised to convey to the plaintiff in exchange. The same principle applies here which was laid down in the cited case. We do not think we would be justified in undoing that which the parties had done in recalling a complete transaction for the purpose of adjusting misunderstandings (if there was misunderstanding). As this was an important point, that relating to the consent of plaintiff, we will transcribe here the evidence upon the subject. The defendant in testifying said: "That plaintiff understood what he was getting, and that the description covered, and that he would take what there was according to lines from one point to the other on Bavou Pierre, extending back east to the section line."

We infer that one of the principal objects of plaintiff, as stated by him, was to become the owner of Wilson's Ferry, which it appears is a part of the remaining 5 acres. When plaintiff was questioned as a witness on cross-examination, he was asked if defendant, Porter, advised him that he was falling into a mistake against his interests. His answer was that he was so advised by the defendant. The question was then propounded to him: "Did you not tell him that you did not care if you got 30 acres so you got the land you wanted?" The answer was: "Just as I got the land I showed him. I did not care." That he wanted the land from one point of the bayou to the other. Witness concludes by stating that he made an exchange with defendant for a certain number of acres on the Douglas place for the land described in the contract. The action should be for an amount in money representing the deficiency.

From any point of view, plaintiff would not be entitled to relief in this case. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the circuit court of appeal, sitting in the parish of Caddo, is avoided, annulled, and reversed, the costs in that court to be paid by plaintiff. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the judgment of the district court, the decretal part of which reads, in substance, as follows: That defendant, J. W. Porter's, deed to plaintiff, Thos. J. Adams, conveys the land contained within the metes and bounds as described in said contract, less 45 acres on the east boundary, being stiff land, accepted from plaintiff for a pair of mules delivered to and accepted by plaintiff, plaintiff to pay all the costs of this suit. It follows from the foregoing that plaintiff is the owner of the 5 acres mentioned, and that, in case the defendant neglects or refuses to make deed to these 5 acres, then this judgment to be considered equivalent to a title between parties from the date of its rendition and among all parties after it will have been recorded as required.

The judgment of the District Court is reinstated, and made the judgment of this court, at the costs of plaintiff, and it is remanded to the District Court for execution.

Petition for rehearing denied February 12, 1912.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF MINNESOTA EX REL. JOHN KINSELLA

v.

ADOLPH O. EBERHART, Governor.

(116 Minn. 313, 133 N. W. 857.)

Certiorari — removal from office — decision of governor.

1. Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the decision of the governor in removing a county official from office.

Headnotes by LEWIS, J.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Officer — removal — malfeasance.

2. The specifications charging relator with malfeasance and nonfeasance in the office of county attorney constitute legal and substantial grounds, and the evidence reasonably tends to sustain the decision of the governor in removing him from office.

(December 22, 1911.)

CERTIORARI to review the action of respondent in removing relator from the office of county attorney for nonfeasance and malfeasance in office. Writ discharged. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John B. Richards, Jr., for relator: An act essentially "judicial," within the definitions, vitally affecting private right, Note. — Power of court to review action of governor in removing officer.

The cases make it plain that the courts will not review the governor's determination that the incumbent's neglect or misconduct is such as is made a ground for removal. But it seems that the courts will look into the questions of the governor's power and jurisdiction, and of the legality or existence of the ground assigned by the governor.

Thus, it has been held that the governor, in removing an officer, as authorized by the legislature, does not act in a judicial capacity within the meaning of the Constitution, and that the exercise of the power by him cannot be inquired into by a court in a proceeding in quo warranto, although he may have erred in exercising the power. The only question which the court can consider is whether charges involving official conduct have been preferred, whether the parties had notice, and whether the governor acted upon the charges, and removed the respondent for the reason stated in the charges. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228.

But attention is directed to a holding that the action of the President of the United States, under a statute authorizing him to remove a justice of the peace of the District of Columbia for cause, cannot be reviewed by the supreme court of the District for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of the causes which induced the removal; and that the court cannot presume that the President acted without cause simply because none is specified in the order of removal. United States ex rel. Garland v. Oliver, 6 Mackey, 47.

The action of the governor in suspending a railroad commissioner until the next meeting of the general assembly, as authorized by statute, upon giving him notice to appear and answer, is due process of law, and the courts cannot go behind the governor's action. State ex rel. Caldwell v. Wilson, 121 N. C. 425, 28 S. E. 554.

And since a governor, in refusing to reinstate a military officer relieved by him cannot, under our system of government, be beyond review by the judicial department of our government.

McConaughy v. Secretary of State, 106 Minn. 392, 119 N. W. 408; Cooke v. Iverson, 108 Minn. 388, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 122 N. W. 251; Bagg's Case, 11 Coke, 93; Chamberlain v. Sibley, 4 Minn. 309, Gil. 228; State ex rel. Banning v. Berry, 3 Minn. —, Gil. 190; Hayne v. Metropolitan Trust Co. 67 Minn. 245, 69 N. W. 916; State ex rel. Hart v. Duluth, 53 Minn. 238, 39 Am. St. Rep. 595, 55 N. W. 118; Townsend v. Sauk Centre, 71 Minn. 379, 74 N. W. 150; State ex rel. Hardy v. Clough, 64 Minn. 380, 67 N. W. 202; State ex rel. Clapp v. Peterson, 50 Minn. 239, 52 N. W. 655; State ex rel. Childs v. Dart, 57 Minn.

in his official capacity as commander in chief of the state troops, acts, not in a merely ministerial capacity, but in a matter involving the exercise of judgment and discretion in respect of the efficiency of the military service, the course of the governor cannot be controlled by a writ of mandamus directing the reinstatement of the officer. State ex rel. Higdon v. Jelks, 138 Ala. 115, 35 So. 60.

The power of the governor to remove an officer for cause upon his own investigation is, in its proper sense, an administrative function, and not judicial in the sense that the officer is entitled to have the question of cause determined by the courts in the first instance, or by appropriate appellate proceedings. State ex rel. Churchill v. Hay, 45 Neb. 321, 63 N. W. 821.

And the power of the governor under a statute providing that certain officers shall hold office for a certain time "unless sooner removed by the governor" is not a judicial function, and the mere fact that an officer exercises judgment in deciding a matter does not make his decision of a judicial character, so that it may be reviewed by certiorari. The power conferred is essentially a political, governmental, and executive duty, and therefore beyond the control of the judiciary. State ex rel. Rawlinson v. Ansel, 76 S. C. 395, 57 S. E. 185, 11 Ann. Cas. 613.

In determining whether charges against a public officer are worthy of credit, so as to warrant his dismissal, a governor exercises judgment and discretion; and since, therefore, in such circumstances, he acts officially, and not in a purely ministerial matter, he cannot be compelled by mandamus to revoke an order suspending an officer upon charges preferred. Householder v. Morrill, 55 Kan. 317, 40 Pac. 664.

The following language was used in Dubuc v. Voss, 19 La. Ann. 210, 92 Am. Dec. 526: "That the power to remove is incident to the power to appoint, we are not aware has ever been contended for as appertaining to the governors of states. The character of their functions is not, in all respects, analogous. Their power of re-261, 59 N. W. 190; State ex rel. Childs v. Griffen, 69 Minn. 311, 72 N. W. 117; State ex rel. Douglas v. Megardien, 85 Minn. 41, 89 Am. St. Rep. 534, 88 N. W. 412; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 379, 398; Dullam v. Willson, 53 Mich. 392, 51 Am. Rep. 128, 19 N. W. 112; People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187, 45 N. W. 78; Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648; State ex rel. Police Comrs. v. Pritchard, 36 N. J. L. 101; Honey v. Graham, 39 Tex. 1.

The court will look into the evidence to determine the question as to whether there was a "legal cause" and a "substantial basis" for an order of removal.

State ex rel. Hart v. Duluth, 53 Minn. 238, 39 Am. St. Rep. 595, 55 N. W. 118; Townsend v. Sauk Centre, 71 Minn. 379, removal, we apprehend, is generally limited to particular cases provided for by statutory enactments. It would seem to derogate from the efficiency of the chief executive officer of a state, and to lower the dignity of his office, if the grounds upon which he makes removals should be needlessly subject to the scrutiny of the courts, and liable for slight reasons to be annulled by judicial decrees. But there must somewhere be protection to the honest and faithful incumbent, if, unhappily, his right to hold office should be recklessly violated by the head of the executive department. To the judiciary, in such a case, would attach the delicate and ungrateful duty of inquiring whether the executive had infringed the law. Such cases, we may hope, will be of rare occurrence." It was held in this case that where the governor issued a commission for an office which recited that a person holding a previous commission was removed, the presumption was that the removal was effected for causes provided by the statute, and that, in the absence of evidence to overcome the presumption, the later commission would supersede the former one. The same result was reached in State ex rel. Dayries v. Yoist, 25 La. Ann. 396; and it was reiterated in State ex rel. Richardson v. Graham, 25 La. Ann. 73, that the mere removal of the incumbent raises the presumption that it was effected for a proper cause specified by the statute; and in Evans v. Populus, 22 La. Ann. 121, that the presumption prevails in the absence of countervailing evidence.

Where the governor has authority to remove an officer for specified causes, his action must be deemed conclusive as to the existence of the cause in so far as the right to the office is concerned. Whether correct or not, there is no authority to revise it, and consequently it is not reversible by the court. Keenan v. Perry, 24 Tex. 253.

So the Louisiana court holds that the legislative grant of power to the governor to remove an officer for a certain cause implies authority to judge of the existence of that cause; and that, however erroneous the decision of the governor as to that 74 N. W. 150; People ex rel. Haines v. Smith, 45 N. Y. 777; People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187, 45 N. W. 78; People ex rel. Dumahaut v. Fire Comrs. 96 N. Y. 672; Triplett v. Munter, 50 Cal. 644; Smith v. Ling, 68 Cal. 324, 9 Pac. 171; Ponting v. Isaman, 7 Idaho, 581, 65 Pac. 434; State ex rel. Bradford v. Scates, 43 Kan. 330, 23 Pac. 479; Com. v. McPeck, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 215, 20 S. W. 220; Re Adam, 113 App. Div. 534, 99 N. Y. Supp. 273; People ex rel. Trayer v. Bingham, 120 App. Div. 350, 110 N. Y. Supp. 414; People ex rel. Lathers v. Raymond, 129 App. Div. 477, 114 N. Y. Supp. 365; State ex rel. Herod v. Pidgeon, 8 Blackf. 132; Minnesota C. R. Co. v. McNamara, 13 Minn. 508, Gil. 468; Throop, Pub. Off. § 392.

Messrs. B. F. Fowler, John Dwan, and Alfred W. Mueller, with Mr. George T. Simpson, Attorney General, for respondent:

The action of the governor was not a judicial act.

23 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 428; Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 186; Donahue v. Will County, 100 Ill. 94; Lynch v. Chase, 55 Kan. 367, 40 Pac. 666; McMaster v. Herald, 56 Kan. 231, 42 Pac. 697; Keenan v. Perry, 24 Tex. 255; Murphy v. Webster, 131 Mass. 482; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Hawkins, 44 Ohio St. 98, 5 N. E. 228.

Proceedings neither judicial nor quasi judicial in their nature cannot be reviewed on certiorari.

Re Wilson, 32 Minn. 145, 19 N. W. 723; question may be, it is not subject to examination by the court. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Doherty, 25 La. Ann. 119, 13 Am. Rep. 131, indorsed in State ex rel. Weber v. Fisher, 26 La. Ann. 537, and State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Barrow, 29 La. Ann. 243; State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Lamantia, 33 La. Ann. 446; State v. Abbott, 41 La. Ann. 1096, 6 So. 805; State ex rel. Winder v. Cahen, 28 La. Ann. 645. This principle has been recognized in cases disposed of on other grounds. State ex rel. Kuhlman v. Rost, 47 La. Ann. 53, 16 So. 776 and State ex rel. Keller v. Rost, 47 La. Ann. 61, 16 So. 663. And the appointment of a person to an office by a paper reciting that the previous incumbent is removed is the proof of the existence of sufficient cause for removal, the finding of which is discretionary with the governor. State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Barrow, 29 La. Ann. 243.

For, since the law does not specify the manner of or form for removing an officer, the judiciary is without power to prescribe one, and if in the commission for the office words are used which make it plain that the previous incumbent is or has been removed, and that the party appointed is to act in the place of such previous incumbent, this is sufficient to operate as a removal, and to entitle the party to take possession of the office. So held in State v. Abbott, 41 La. Ann. 1096, 6 So. 805, holding that a commission appointing a certain person to an office "vice" the previous incumbent was a sufficient removal of the latter.

In Atty. Gen. ex rel. Taylor v. Brown, 1 Wis. 513, holding that the courts cannot inquire into the motives of the governor when he removes an officer under a statute authorizing him to do so "when he shall believe that the best interests of the state demand such removal," the court had this to say: "The policy of our Constitution and laws has assigned to the different departments of the state government distinct and different duties, in the performance of which it is intended that they shall be entirely independent of each other; so that whatever power or duty is expressly given to, or imposed upon, the executive department, is altogether free from the interference of the other branches of the government. Especially is this the case where the subject is committed to the discretion of the chief executive officer, either by the Constitution or by the laws. So long as the power is vested in him, it is to be by him exercised, and no other branch of the government can control its exercise. But it would be alike unbecoming and unwarranted on our part, to inquire into the motives of the governor, in the exercise of a discretion given to him alone, in any case. He is responsible for his acts in such case, not to the courts, but to the people; and whenever experience shall have demonstrated the impolicy or impropriety of clothing the chief executive officer of the state with a power of removing inferior officers, at his discretion, or 'when he shall believe the best interests of the state demand such removal,' it may then be the time for the people, in whose hands alone is the remedy, to eradicate the supposed evil. But courts are created to construe the laws as they are, not to declare what they should be."

Power conferred by a provision of the state Constitution, that the governor may remove a public officer after "giving to such officer a copy of the charges against him and an opportunity of being heard in his defense," is executive, and not judicial, and was intended to be vested exclusively in the governor; and when these two requirements are complied with, the courts cannot inquire into the merits of the removal. Re Guden, 171 N. Y. 529, 64 N. E. 451.

The courts are without power to inquire into the sufficiency of the proof of charges in the governor's hearing, and his findings are not reviewable by any court so long as his action is within the limit of the power conferred upon him by the statute. Cameron v. Parker, 2 Okla. 277, 38 Pac. 14.

A similar declaration in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Johnson, 30 Fla. 433, 18 L.R.A. 410, 11 So. 845, was placed upon the grounds not only that the courts were not given such power to review, but also Lemont v. Dodge County, 39 Minn. 385, 40 N. W. 359; Christlieb v. Hennepin County, 41 Minn. 142, 42 N. W. 930; Moede v. Stearns County, 43 Minn. 312, 45 N. W. 435; State ex rel. Hardy v. Clough, 64 Minn. 378, 67 N. W. 202; Minnesota Sugar Co. v. Iverson, 91 Minn. 30, 97 N. W. 454; Mayor v. Morgan, 7 Mart. N. S. 1, 18 Am. Dec. 232; State ex rel. Holden v. Lamber-ton, 37 Minn. 362, 34 N. W. 336; State ex rel. St. Louis County v. Dunn, 86 Minn. 301, 90 N. W. 772.

Certiorari is not the proper remedy, but the relator should have proceeded by quo warranto.

Burke v. Leland, 51 Minn. 355, 53 N. W. 716; Delahanty v. Warner, 75 Ill. 185, 20 Am. Rep. 237; State ex rel. Addison v.

Williams, 25 Minn. 340; State v. Sibley, 25 Minn. 387; State ex rel. Bryant v. Guiney, 26 Minn. 313, 3 N. W. 977; State ex rel. Railson v. Sanderson, 26 Minn. 333, 3 N. W. 984; State ex rel. Probstfield v. Sharp, 27 Minn. 38, 6 N. W. 408; Barnum v. Gilman, 27 Minn. 466, 38 Am. Rep. 304, 8 N. W. 375; State ex rel. Simpson v. Dowlan, 33 Minn. 536, 24 N. W. 188; State ex rel. Bend v. Harrison, 34 Minn. 526, 26 N. W. 729; State ex rel. Derusha v. McMartin, 42 Minn. 30, 43 N. W. 572; Taylor v. Sullivan, 45 Minn. 309, 11 L.R.A. 272, 22 Am. St. Rep. 729, 47 N. W. 802; Burke v. Leland, 51 Minn. 355, 53 N. W. 716; State ex rel. Childs v. Holman, 58 Minn. 219, 59 N. W. 1006; Trautmann v. McLeod, 74 Minn. 110, 76 N. W. 964; State ex rel. Douglas v.

that the state senate had been granted such power. In commenting upon the nature of the power of the governor under the provision of the state Constitution that certain officers might be suspended from office by the governor for malfeasance or misfeasance or neglect of duty in office, or the commission of any felony, or for drunkenness or incompetency; that the cause of suspension should be communicated to the officers and to the senate at its next session; that the governor, by and with the advice of the senate, might remove any officer not liable to impeachment for any cause above named; and that if the senate should refuse to remove, or fail to take action before its adjournment, the officer suspended should resume the duties of his office,—the court said: "It is, however, entirely unnecessary to ascertain whether the nature of the power is strictly judicial, or quasi judicial, or administrative, or what is its precise classification, since we are altogether satisfied that it is not a power given to the courts by the fourth, or judiciary, article, which provides that the judicial power of our state shall be vested in the courts there designated. If the power is judicial in its character, the fact, nevertheless, is that it has been given to the governor by the section of the executive article under discussion, and not to the courts, and the governor exercises it as a member of the executive department of the government, and not as a court, or member of the judiciary department; and the courts enumerated in the judiciary article, §§ 1 and 34, as the depositories of the judicial power of the state, cannot exercise it any more than they can the power of trying an officer under impeachment; and for any such court to attempt it would be a no less bald usurpation of the constitutional power of the chief executive, than an attempt to entertain an impeachment trial would be a lawless assumption of the exclusive functions of the senate, under the 29th section of the legislative article, to try impeachments."

And it was held in Gray v. McLendon, 134 Ga. 224, 67 S. E. 859, that where the 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

legislature creates an office and provides that the incumbent may be suspended by the governor and removed by the general assembly for such causes as to them may seem satisfactory, the court is powerless to review the action of the governor in suspending, or that of the general assembly in removing, the incumbent, the court saying that where the power of removal rests in the discretion of any officer or body of officers, the exercise of such discretion will not be controlled by the courts, since the officers charged with the duty of determining the sufficiency of the causes of removal and fitness of the party removed to continue in office are presumed best qualified to pass upon these questions, unless by statute their power is limited to removal for due cause.

Power conferred by the state Constitution upon the legislature to provide by law for the removal of county officers in such manner as to it shall seem just and proper is in its nature political, and has reference exclusively to the polity of government, which would be inherently defective if no remedy of a summary nature could be had to remove from office a person who, after his election, had been convicted of crime, or who neglected his duty, or who was guilty of malversation in the administration of his office. Under such a constitutional provision, the legislature is to prescribe the mode in which it shall be done, and this includes everything necessary for the accomplishment of the object. The causes, the charges, the notice, the investigation, and the determination, and by whom these shall be conducted and the removal adjudged, are all in the discretion of the legislature, and the power to exercise these functions may by it be conferred upon the governor. People ex rel. Clay v. Stuart, 74 Mich. 411, 16 Am. St. Rep. 644, 41 N. W. 1091; People ex rel. Metevier v. Therrien, 80 Mich. 187, 45 N. W. 78. It appears in the latter case, however, that the legislature not only vested the governor with power of removal, but provided that before removal, the charges must be made in writing by affidavits and exhibited to Wilder, 75 Minn. 547, 78 N. W. 83; State ex rel. Douglas v. Ritt, 76 Minn. 531, 79 N. W. 535; State ex rel. Getchell v. O'Connor, 81 Minn. 79, 83 N. W. 498; State ex rel. Olsen v. Board of Control, 85 Minn. 165, 88 N. W. 533; State ex rel. Douglas v. Westfall, 85 Minn. 437, 57 L.R.A. 297, 89 Am. St. Rep. 571, 89 N. W. 175; State ex rel. Douglas v. Grabarkiewicz, 88 Minn. 16, 92 N. W. 446; State ex rel. Murphy v. Bernier, 98 Minn. 1, 38 N. W. 368; State ex rel. Young v. Hayes, 105 Minn. 399, 117 N. W. 615.

Lewis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In response to a petition filed in the office of the governor, charging relator with malfaisance and nonfeasance in the office of county attorney of Lake county, a special commissioner was appointed under the provisions of § 2668, Rev. Laws 1905, the evidence was taken and reported, and relator was removed from office by the governor. Thereupon relator sued out a writ of certiorari, directed to the governor, requiring him to return and certify to this court all the files and proceedings in the matter, to the end that his action be reviewed. Without admitting the jurisdiction of the court, the governor complied with the order, made complete return of the proceedings, and at the hearing moved to quash the writ, on the ground that the court was without jurisdiction. The questions thus presented are: Has the court the power to review the governor, and that the attorney general or prosecuting attorney, who may be directed by the governor to make the inquiry, shall give certain notices to the accused. The court declared that such an officer cannot be deprived of the office without due process of law, and that this requires notice, a hearing, and a determination. The court went on to say: "It is claimed by respondent's counsel that, the governor having passed upon the sufficiency of the charges, his jurisdiction thus assumed cannot be questioned by this court. This is not so. The governor cannot, by any act of his own, enlarge the power granted him by the legislature; nor can the legislature, by any act, deprive a person of a right to hold an office to which he had been elected or appointed, and whose duties he has assumed, except by constitutional methods, by due process of law. The governor cannot foreclose the right of the courts to preserve to such officers their constitutional rights. He cannot order an inquiry upon charges of misconduct not embraced within the statute granting him power to act; nor can he act upon a general charge of official misconduct, as is the third charge here, without any specifications under it, informing the executive or the accused in what particular thing or things this official misconduct consists. And while he had authority, under the charges filed with and exhibited to him, to order an inquiry into the habitual drunkenness of Metevier, and the fact of his laboring at that time under delirium tremens, caused by excessive drink, he could not, because he entertained jurisdiction for this purpose, and had a right to do so, extend his jurisdiction further, and go outside of the charges made to him in the statutory way; nor could he supplement and aid defective and imperfect charges by the act of the prosecuting attorney, or other officer conducting the inquiry, in serving upon the accused at the inquiry, or any number of days before, less than eight, more complete and specific allegations of wrongdoing."

Where the state Constitution simply gives to the governor the power to remove in case of incompetency, any officer whom he may appoint, it rests with him to determine for himself whether the cause of removal exists; and no mode of inquiry being prescribed for him to pursue, it rests with him to adopt that method of inquiry which his judgment may dictate, acting under his official responsibility; and it is not for the courts to dictate to him in what manner he shall proceed, as his action is not subject to their revision; and therefore, it is no proper objection to the removal to contend that it should have been exercised according to judicial methods; that is, by way of a specific charge, notice, opportunity for defense, hearing, and proof. Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 186.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A statute vesting the power of removing officers in the governor, under a constitutional provision that the legislature may provide for the removal of officers for malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of their duties, is not open to the objection that it unconstitutionally confers upon the executive powers which should have been vested in the judiciary. State ex rel. Clapp v. Peterson, 50 Minn. 239, 52 N. W. 655.

The governor's power to remove police, fire, and excise commissioners of a city whom he is authorized to appoint by a statute providing that all such appointments shall be made "with power of suspension or removal at any time for cause" is derived from the provision of the statute itself, and not from the provision of the state Constitution, that the governor shall nominate and appoint all officers whose offices are established by the Constitution or which may be created by law, and whose appointment or election is not otherwise provided for, "and may remove any such officer for incompetency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office;" and therefore, the governor is not confined to the causes of removal specified in the Constitution, and is at liberty to adopt such mode as to him shall seem proper, without interference on the part of the court. The act of removal is not judicial or quasi the action of the chief executive of the state in proceedings of this character? And, if it has, does the record show a legal and substantial basis for the action taken?

1. The uncertainty as to what the rule is in this state with reference to the control by the judiciary over the executive department of the government was noted in Cooke v. Iverson, 108 Minn. 388, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 122 N. W. 261, and the decisions on that subject were reviewed and analyzed. That was an action to enjoin the state auditor from issuing warrants under a law claimed to be unconstitutional, and the governor was not a party, and hence it may be claimed that what was said with reference to the chief executive was unnecessary to the decision. This makes it necessary to briefly review the history of this question, for the purpose of determining the scope of the decision in Cooke v. Iverson.

The law under consideration in Rice v. Austin, 19 Minn. 103, Gil. 74, 18 Am. Rep. 330, authorized the governor to convey certain swamp lands to commissioners when satisfied that the commissioners had constructed the road as provided by law. The court held that this duty was imposed on the governor in his official capacity, and the decision was based on the broad ground: of noninterference by the judicial department with the executive, whether ministerial or otherwise, although, as noted in Cooke v. Iverson, the duty imposed on the governor was not of purely ministerial character. In State ex rel. County Treasurer judicial in character, for no mode of inquiry being prescribed, the cause that may be sufficient for removal is to be determined by the governor as he shall see fit, and he is not bound to examine witnesses under oath, nor is his refusal to allow counsel fatal to his action, since he might have proceeded ex parte. Trimble v. People, 19 Colo. 187, 41 Am. St. Rep. 236, 34 Pac. 981. Subsequently the same court refused, in an ex parte proceeding in response to an executive question, to inquire into the right of the police commissioner to retain his office notwithstanding the governor's attempted removal, in Re Fire & Excise Comrs. 19 Colo. 482, 36 Pac. 234. In rendering this decision, the court used the following language by way of explaining the Trimble Case: "The words 'without interference on the part of the courts,' as the context shows, have reference to the procedure only; that as to this, the executive could adopt such mode as he might deem proper and suited to the occasion; that it was not contemplated by the act that he should be required to institute an inquiry in its nature judicial. No question was then mooted as to the power of the courts to entertain any appropriate proceeding to ascertain the title to the office in case the incumbent should attempt to hold over in opposition to the executive order. On the contrary, in that case, the jurisdiction of the court was invoked by the removed official, and his right to the seat was denied as a result. So, also, the following language, used in the Trimble Case, viz.: 'The governor having determined that a sufficient cause for removal existed, and having exercised the power confided to him, relator is without remedy in this proceeding,' had reference to the facts then before the court. The contestants, by petition and answer, had brought the facts relied on fully to the attention of the court for its judgment thereon; there was no pretense that anything further could be shown material to the issue. The court did not say to the petitioner, 'You had no right to test the validity of the removal in this proceeding;' but it did 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

say, in effect, 'The facts shown by the record are not sufficient to warrant a decision in your favor, and the judgment of ouster entered by the district court was unwarranted and must be set aside.' That no further doubt may exist upon this question, we say, without hesitancy, that if the executive order of removal is questioned by the incumbent, the courts have the power, and it is exclusively within their province, to pass upon such objections, and determine, as between the respective claimants, the right to the office in question; and the law provides a plain and adequate procedure for that purpose; and a speedy determination of such question is insured by express statute. Mills's Anno. Stat. (Colo.) p. 830. All law-abiding citizens will, and all others should be required to, submit such controversies to these tribunals for settlement. The district attorney is empowered by statute to bring an action for that purpose. Code, 289." The decision of the court was, as already noted, that it would not, in an ex parte proceeding in response to an executive question, determine who was entitled to the office.

In still another case involving the same situation, the Colorado court held that the words forbidding the removal of officers "for political reasons" in the charter authorizing the governor to make such removals "at any time for cause, to be stated in writing," could not be given any practical effect except by operating on the conscience of the executive, and did not permit the court to review his action on the ground that a removal was in fact made by him for political reasons, where, in his written statement of the case, he disclaimed such reasons. People ex rel. Engley v. Martin, 19 Colo. 565, 24 L.R.A. 201, 36 Pac. 543. In this case, the court said: "While it is easy to perceive the purpose of the additional words in the charter of 1893, forbidding removals for political reasons, it is not so easy to determine how to give practical effect to such additional words. It is a presumption of law that every public officer does his duty. This presumption is especially strong in the

v. Dike, 20 Minn. 363, Gil. 314, the writ of mandamus was directed to the state treasurer and the secretary of state. Rice v. Austin was followed, and jurisdiction was refused, on the ground that courts could not control the actions of any member of the executive department. The decision in St. Paul & C. R. Co. v. Brown, 24 Minn. 517, was based on the same general principle, and the court held that the duties sought to be enforced were duties belonging to the governor as an executive, and that the court had no jurisdiction over him. Again, in Western R. Co. v. De Graff, 27 Minn. 1, 6 N. W. 341, the action was in part to enjoin the governor from selling certain lands, and the court applied the same principle; and Cornell, J., writing for the court, said: "Every act done or attempted to be done by any officer of the executive department in his official, and not in his individual, capacity, is shielded from all judicial interference or control, either by mandamus or injunction, even though such act may be founded in an error of judgment, or an entire misapprehension of the official duty under the law." To the same effect are State ex rel. Thompson v. Whitcomb, 28 Minn. 50, 8 N. W. 902, and State ex rel. Tuttle v. Braden, 40 Minn. 174, 41 N. W. 817.

In State ex rel. Tuttle v. Braden it was case of the governor,—the chief executive officer of an independent state. If any court should attempt to institute an inquiry into the reasons or motives which have controlled the official action of the governor, great difficulties would be encountered. These difficulties are all the greater in cases where improper political motives are charged; and this, for the reason that that the persons making such charges may themselves be actuated by improper political motives. Charges of improper motives are easily made, are often untrue, and are always hard to prove. When such charges are made in respect to an act not wrong in itself,—an act expressly authorized for cause to be determined by the officer performing the act,—an act which is wrong only when prompted by an improper reason or motive,—it is practically impossible to determine judicially that the act done was illegal, on the sole ground that it was prompted by an improper motive or unlawful reason; and this is especially true where the officer is required by law to state in writing the cause for his act, and his written statement shows no unlawful reason."

Thus it is held that the limit of judicial interference in such cases is to protect the officer in his right to a hearing on specific charges; or, in other words, to require the governor claiming the right of removal to keep within his jurisdiction. State ex rel. Churchill v. Hay, 45 Neb. 321, 63 N. W. 821.

And the opinion in State ex rel. Atty. Gen. v. Johnson, supra, was referred to in a subsequent opinion in the same case (30 Fla. 499, 11 So. 855) as settling the proposition that there is but one inquiry which the court can make, and that is, whether or not the act for which the alleged suspension was made is, as a matter of law, a ground for removal within the grant of power made to the governor. In this case the court added that where the governor, in pursuance of his constitutional power, had suspended a tax collector, questions such as the proper office hours for the collector, the law having established none, and the bona fides of a tax debtor's tender of taxes for refusing to accept which the officer was suspended, are considerations which address themselves exclusively to the governor in forming his judgment as to suspension, and that the senate, and not the court, has the power to consider them and review his judgment thereon.

With respect to this question the court said in Page v. Hardin, 8 B. Mon. 648, that where the governor has a discretionary power, or where on any ground his act is made conclusive as to all rights involved, it is not within the province of a court to inquire into the propriety or impropriety of the act; but that the question whether there is such a power in a given case, or whether any particular power or act is of the character referred to, is a judicial question whenever the right in litigation before a judicial tribunal depends upon it and requires its decision. "If any office," says the court, "be held at the will of the governor, the appointee could not complain of the violation of any legal right by the revocation of his appointment, however sudden or groundless. But if the governor were to attempt to displace any officer at his mere will, he might undoubtedly make the question in a legal contest with a proper party, whether the governor had such power, and whether his right to the office was terminated. The question of right on his part, and of power on the part of the governor, would be the same. And as he might unquestionably assert this right by appropriate legal remedy, the question of power would necessarily be brought within the cognizance of the court. And so any power claimed or exercised by the governor may be brought in question before a judicial tribunal, if it be relied on and material, either in opposition to any right asserted by legal remedy, or in support of it."

Generally as to mandamus to the governor, see the notes in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 750, and 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 355.

As to whether mandamus will issue to restore to office one who has been illegally removed, see the note to State ex rel. Moyer v. Baldwin, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 49, and particularly subdivision III. thereof, relating to the immunity of heads of the state.

L. A. W.

attempted to compel the state auditor to issue a permit to the highest bidder at a public land sale. Demurrer to the petition was sustained, on the broad ground that the courts had no jurisdiction to control the auditor in the performance of his official duties. Chief Justice Gilfillan wrote the opinion, and announced the rule as follows: "In Chamberlain v. Sibley, 4 Minn. 309, Gil. 228, it was held otherwise in respect to official acts which the court styled 'not necessarily pertaining to the duties of the executive,' and which, if the law so provided, might as well be done by one officer as another. The court, however, decided in Rice v. Austin, supra, that because the Constitution makes the different departments of the government distinct and independent of each other, neither being responsible to the other for the performance of its duties, neither can enforce the performance by the other of its duties; and it was also decided that where a duty, even such as may be called ministerial, is cast by law upon an executive officer eo nomine, the performance of it is an official act, although its performance might have been intrusted to some other officer. This has ever since been accepted as the law of this state, and was followed in State ex rel. County Treasurer v. Dike, and Western R. Co. v. De Graff, supra.

The next case in point of time is Hayne v. Metropolitan Trust Co. 67 Minn. 245, 69 N. W. 916. It is important, in that it marks a radical departure from the broad principle upon which the previous decisions were based. Up to that time no distinction was made between the governor and other members of the executive branch of the government. All stood upon the same ground, and were considered absolutely immune by constitutional segregation from judicial control. In the Hayne Case a peculiar situation was presented. The state auditor declined to turn over to the court certain funds which he held in trust for private parties. Justice Mitchell expressed the views of the court, and called attention to the previous cases, and stated that this court had undoubtedly gone further than any other in holding executive officers of the state exempt from the control of the courts in the performance of their official duties, especially as to executive officers other than governor. But it was deemed unnecessary to consider whether the rule should be modified, since the case could be distinguished upon the ground that the state had no interest in the fund.

In Cooke v. Iverson the present chief justice calls attention to this change of position, and, after referring to certain cases wherein this court entertained proceedings against the secretary of state to direct him with reference to the making up of the official state ballot, says: "These election cases and the case of Hayne v. Metropolitan Trust Co. necessarily hold that such officer may be controlled by the courts in the discharge of purely ministerial duties. They well illustrate the necessity and justice of such control." This line of thought was emphasized by calling attention to the power of the secretary of state to determine whom the electors may or may not vote for, if the Constitution placed his action beyond the control of the courts. And the conclusion reached was stated as follows: "Upon principle, and a full consideration of the previous decisions of this court relevant to the question, we hold that courts cannot, by injunction, or mandamus, or other process, control or direct the head of the executive department of the state in the discharge of any executive duty involving the exercise of his discretion; but where duties purely ministerial in character are conferred upon the chief executive, or any member of the executive department, as defined by our Constitution, and he refuses to act, or when he assumes to act in violation of the Constitution and laws of the state, he may be compelled to act, or restrained from acting, as the case may be, by the courts, at the suit of one who is injured thereby in his person or property, for which he has no other adequate remedy."

"Official duty" is no longer the criterion which absolves members of the executive branch of the government from judicial control. The courts of last resort in this country have been radically divided on the question. As this court formerly stood, it was in line with Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Texas, and Massachusetts. The fundamental principle upon which the decisions holding that view rests is that, under the provisions of the Constitutions of the several states, the executive and judiciary are absolutely independent of each other within the sphere of their respective powers. This court is now in accord with the courts of last resort in Alabama, California, Colorado, Kansas, Kentucky, Maryland, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, North Carolina, and Wyoming. In these jurisdictions, duties imposed by law upon the chief executive, which are purely ministerial in their nature, and which do not necessarily pertain to the functions of the office, and which might have been imposed upon any other state officer, are subject to judicial control. Note to State ex rel. Irvine v. Brooks, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 750. The difference is radical. One line of cases recognizes no such thing as purely ministerial duties, as distinguished from political duties, and Judge Cooley's remarks in People ex rel. Sutherland v. The Governor, 29 Mich. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 89, are often quoted in support of this line of reasoning. On the other hand, reasons of public policy and adequacy of remedy have been considered sufficient to indicate that a complete separation of the judiciary and the executive was not contemplated by the Constitution. As expressed by Justice Field in People ex rel. McCauley v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11: "No officer, however high, is above the law, and when duties are imposed upon him in regard to which he has no discretion, and in the execution of which individuals have a direct pecuniary interest, and there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, he can be required to perform these duties by the compulsory process of mandamus." And again, in speaking of the independence of the departments of the state government: "There is no such thing as absolute independence. Where discretion is vested in terms, or necessarily implied from the nature of the duties to be performed, they are independent of each other, but in no other case. Where discretion exists, the power of each is absolute; but there is no discretion where rights have vested under the Constitution or by existing laws."

Much controversy has arisen over the difficulty of distinguishing between so-called political or executive duties, which may be exercised in the discretion of the executive, and those which are definitely defined to be performed in some particular manner. We realize the delicacy of the task which may be presented to the courts in some cases in concluding when jurisdiction should be assumed, but the difficulty of so doing is not conclusive that no jurisdiction lies for the purpose of determining the doubt. It has been suggested that the judiciary should not assume jurisdiction in any case involving the action of the governor, for the reason that the court might not be able to enforce obedience to its orders. By virtue of his position as the commander in chief of the state's military forces, the governor might possibly successfully resist enforcement of the court's writs; but, as stated in State ex rel. Irvine v. Brooks, supra, the jurisdiction of the court does not rest upon its physical ability to enforce its judgments. Jurisdiction depends upon the right of the court to hear the matter in controversy and to declare the law. The governor, under his oath of office, is bound to enforce the law, and it will not be presumed that he would refuse to perform duties which the court of last resort declared to be imposed upon him. On the contrary, it will be presumed that, in doubtful cases, he would desire to be enlightened and guided by the judgment of that tribunal charged with the duty of declaring the law. The wisdom of such a course is illustrated in the present case. Being doubtful as to the extent of the powers conferred upon him by law, as defined by the decisions of this court, the chief executive responded to the writ and moved that it be quashed, for the purpose of securing the judgment of the court.

Although the governor was not a party to the action in Cooke v. Iverson, and the question was not directly raised, there is no substantial distinction between the governor and other members of the executive department in the application of the principle. The Constitution imposes certain duties and powers upon the governor, while the duties of the other members of the executive [department] are left for legislative enactment. But additional duties to those prescribed by § 4, art. 5, may be imposed on the governor by the legislature. State ex rel. Clapp v. Peterson, 50 Minn. 239, 52 N. W. 655. In either case immunity from judicial direction depends upon the nature of the act to be performed. The distinction is marked between the nature of those duties which necessarily pertain to the office of the chief executive, as defined by the Constitution, and those additional duties which are imposed by law upon the governor, but which might have been delegated to some other official. But it is not necessary at this time to determine whether any of the constitutional duties of the governor may be of such a nature in their execution as to be subject to judicial review. The present case does not call for a consideration of that question. Although the chief executive was selected as the official to cause removals from office, that duty might have been delegated to some other proper official, such as the attorney general. Was such duty judicial in character and subject to review by the court?

Section 2668, Rev. Laws, 1905, authorizes the governor to remove any county attorney from office whenever it appears to him by competent evidence that he has been guilty of malfeasance or nonfeasance in the performance of his official duties, first giving to such officer a copy of the charges against him and an opportunity to be heard. Section 2669 provides that, when charges are preferred against any such officer, the governor shall appoint a special commissioner to take and report the testimony. The governor then has before him the evidence bearing upon the question, and he is called upon to consider it and pass judgment upon the issues presented. It is apparent, therefore, that the discretion exercised in this instance was not in the performance of an official duty as defined by the Constitution; but it does not follow that every act of the chief executive which involves the exercise of discretion is final, and not subject to review by the courts. The general test to determine whether such acts are final or subject to review is whether they are judicial or quasi judicial in their nature. In State ex rel. St. Louis County v. Dunn, 86 Minn. 301, 90 N. W. 772, it was held that the construction and application by the state auditor of the personal property tax law amounted to the exercise of judicial functions, and that his action was subject to review. So in Minnesota Sugar Co. v. Iverson, 91 Minn. 30, 97 N. W. 454, we held that the action of the state auditor in refusing to allow certain sugar bounties was quasi judicial and reviewable by writ of certiorari. Proceedings for the removal of a public official by the governor are clearly of judicial character.

2. We now come to the second question, and will proceed to consider whether the governor was justified in the action taken. The rules by which the court is guided in such proceedings are fully stated in State ex rel. Hart v. Duluth, 53 Minn. 238, 39 Am. St. Rep. 595, 55 N. W. 118, and other cases, and it will only be necessary to briefly refer to them. It is sufficient if the charges are stated with substantial certainty, and appraise the officer of the grounds upon which the charges are based. The specifications and evidence must relate to the administration of the office,—must relate to something of a substantial nature directly affecting the rights and interests of the public. Charges which directly involve the qualifications of the officer as a fit person to hold office involve the rights and interests of the public. The decision will not be reversed if there is any evidence of a legal and substantial basis reasonably tending to support it. Rulings on evidence may be considered, but a strict compliance with legal procedure is not required. The charges are, in brief: (1) That the relator refused and neglected to advise the board of county commissioners in reference to certain specified matters; (2) that he failed and neglected, when requested by the sheriff, to prosecute violations of the liquor laws; (3) that seven indictments had been returned against the relator, for libel and for circulating obscene literature. The statute does not authorize removal of a county attorney simply because of his ignorance of the law, for, strange as it may seem, the Constitution does not require such officers to be attorneys at law, or that they be learned in the law. State ex rel. Knappen v. Clough, 23 Minn. 17. There is nothing to prevent a layman, absolutely unqualified from the standpoint of knowledge and experience, from holding the office of county attorney, and then securing the necessary legal assistance from an attorney. The statute and Constitution, however, do not justify the election and retention in office of a county attorney disqualified in other respects. The officials of the county are entitled to legal advice from that source in the performance of their duties. The prosecution of offenders against the law is placed in his hands, and to a certain extent, at least, by virtue of his standing as the legal adviser of the county and public prosecutor, the county attorney should be a man of fair standing as a citizen and fully in sympathy with the proper administration of his office and the enforcement of the laws. The terms "malfeasance" and "non-feasance" have no technical meaning in the sense in which they are employed. Conviction of a crime is not essential. General incompetency and neglect of duty constitute sufficient ground for removal.

We do not propose to consider each specification in detail. There is some evidence reasonably tending to show that relator refused and neglected to give personally, if he were able, or to furnish, proper legal advice for the benefit of the county commissioners. The evidence tends to show that he wholly failed to comprehend the duties required of him in the prosecution of liquor cases, and that he neglected and refused to take the proper steps to see that the laws were properly enforced. The fact that indictments had been returned against him, standing alone, did not constitute sufficient evidence of incompetency, or stamp him as an offender against the laws; but we are not prepared to state that the return of the indictments, together with the obscene pamphlet circulated by him, were not proper for the consideration of the governor in passing upon the relator's attitude as a defender of the laws. However that may be, there was other sufficient evidence upon that point, and its introduction cannot be considered as prejudicial. The evidence in a proceeding of this character must necessarily take a wider range than permissible in a court of law under the technical rules of pleading.

While some of the instances relied on at the hearing to prove neglect of duty were not particularly specified in the petition, it does not appear that the relator was prejudiced. He was given ample opportunity to place before the governor all the facts which might tend to explain his conduct.

Writ discharged.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS & MERCHANTS IRRIGATION COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

S. J. HILL.

(90 Neb. 847, 134 N. W. 929.)

Water — irrigation ditch — grantee of land — maintenance fee.

A purchaser of land from one who holds a water right contract thereon with an irrigation company, and who takes title thereto by a deed containing the ordinary covenants of warranty, with no reference to the question of water rights, and who refuses to accept water from the company, is not personally liable for the maintenance fee mentioned in the water right contract

Headnote by HAMER, J.

Note. — Personal liability of purchaser of land on contract under which it is supplied with water.

The question here presented is whether a purchaser of land necessarily assumes personal liability upon contracts entered into by his grantor with reference to supplying water to the land; it does not include the question whether, by taking one parcel of land which is subject to an easement or servitude apparent and continuous in favor of another parcel, the grantee assumes the burden of such easement.

By the limitations of this subject, cases are excluded which deal with the personal liability of a purchaser of land on a contract under which his grantor was to supply water to other land, or under which the land purchased was subject to water privileges in favor of other land.

No other case has been found passing upon this precise point. The general principle involved was discussed, however, in Cole v. Hughes, 54 N. Y. 444, 13 Am. Rep. 611, which was a case of a party wall. The grantor, one Voorhees, had contracted with an adjoining owner, named Dean, that the latter might erect the wall for their common benefit, one half on each lot, and that whenever he [the grantor], his heirs or assigns, should use the same, he or they would pay Dean, his heirs or assigns, for such part of the wall as should be thus used. The court held that since Voorhees conveyed no land, and no interest in land, Dean's right of compensation was in no way charged upon the Voorhees lot; and there was consequently no privity of estate between them, but simply privity of contract; and that under such conditions the burden of the covenant did not run with the Voorhees lot. "There is a wide difference between the transfer of the burden of a covenant running with the land, and of the benefit of the covenant; or, in other words, of the liability to fulfil the covenant, and of the right to exact its fulfilment. The benefit will pass with the land to which it is incident, but the burden of liability will between his grantor and the irrigation company; and an action cannot be maintained against him to recover a personal judgment therefor.

(February 29, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Dawson County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the maintenance fee for an irrigation ditch to use water from which land granted to defendant was entitled. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. A. Cook, for appellant:

The water right attaches to the land, and thereby passes with the transfer of the land.

Farmers' Canal Co. v. Frank, 72 Neb. 138, 100 N. W. 286.

be confined to the original covenantor unless the relation of privity of estate or tenure exists or is created between the covenantor and covenantee at the time when the covenant is made. The obligation of all contracts is ordinarily limited to those by whom they are made, and if privity of contract be dispensed with, its absence must be supplied by privity of estate."

The court, in Cole v. Hughes, supra, quotes from 2 Washburn on Real Property, § 1205, to the effect that when one who makes a covenant with another in respect to land, neither parts with nor receives any title or interest in the land, at the same time with and as part of making the covenant, it is at best a mere personal one, which does not bind his assignee; and that such covenants, and such only, run with the land as concern the land itself, in whosoever hands it may be, and become united with and form a part of the consideration for which the land or some interest in it is parted with between the covenantor and covenantee.

A covenant that no one should be allowed to erect a gristmill upon a water privilege conveyed was held to be a personal covenant, and binding only the covenantors and their personal representatives. It granted no interest in the premises, and created no charge thereon. The covenantees did not derive title from the covenantors, but the covenant was an independent and personal contract, made upon and for a money consideration, in no way connected with the title. It was not a covenant running with the land, charging an unnamed assignee. Harsha v. Reid, 45 N. Y. 415.

Where several adjacent mill owners contracted for themselves, their heirs and assigns, that they would use wheels of a certain kind, it was held that since there was no grant of any interest in the real estate of either party to which the covenant could be annexed, the covenant did not run with the land so as to bind the grantee of one of the mills. Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 459.

H. C. Sh.

The water right being attached to the land at the time of the conveyance, and being of record, the appellee had knowledge of such water right, and when he bought the land he took it charged with all obligations created by the water right deed.

Kinney, Irrigation, § 267; 2 Devlin, Deeds, § 863; 3 Cyc. 565; Frey v. Drahos, 6 Neb. 2, 29 Am. Rep. 353.

Messrs. H. M. Sinclair and W. A. Stewart, for appellee:

This contract is for the payment of money only, and purports to be a personal contract between the appellant on the one hand and appellee's grantor on the other. The personal promise of the maker of the contract did not pass and attach its obligations to the appellee by operation of law.

Cole v. Hughes, 54 N. Y. 444, 13 Am. Rep. 611; Brewer v. Marshall, 18 N. J. Eq. 337; Plymouth v. Carver, 16 Pick. 183; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 11 Am. Rep. 335; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L.R.A. 111, 43 N. W. 469; Miller v. Noonan, 83 Mo. 343; Wheeler v. Schad, 7 Nev. 204; Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 646, 26 N. E. 611; Pendleton v. Fodick, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 795; Middletown v. Newport Hospital, 16 R. I. 319, 1 L.R.A. 191, 15 Atl. 800; Columbia College v. Lynch, 47 How. Pr. 273; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112, 22 Pac. 53; Fresno Canal & Irrig. Co. v. Dunbar, 80 Cal. 530, 22 Pac. 275.

The ground of privity of estate is property, not personal relation.

Bailey v. Sundberg, 1 C. C. A. 387, 1 U. S. App. 101, 49 Fed. 583; Educational Soc. v. Varney, 54 N. H. 376; Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 646, 26 N. E. 611; Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374, 74 Am. Dec. 68; Patton v. Pitts, 80 Ala. 373; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L.R.A. 111, 43 N. W. 469.

Hamer, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This in an appeal from the judgment of the district court for Dawson county, dismissing the plaintiff's action. A trial was had to the court, and the result was a judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial upon the ground that the findings and judgment were not supported by sufficient evidence, that they were contrary to the evidence, and that the court erred in dismissing the action.

The plaintiff, the Farmers and Merchants Irrigation Company (appellant in this court), commenced an action in the district court of Dawson county against the defendant, S. J. Hill, to recover a judgment for $750 and interest for a water maintenance fee for the years 1907, 1908, and 1909.

The plaintiff alleged that it owned and operated an irrigation canal and furnished water to lands upon which water rights were held, and that the defendant owned section 5 in township 10 N., of range 21 W., in Dawson county, and that one of the main ditches of the plaintiff passed through said land; that there was attached to said land a water right which was evidenced by a "water right deed" for 500 acres of said land lying under said ditch, which deed was of record at the time the defendant purchased the land; that in this water right deed there was a provision which required the payment of 50 cents an acre as an annual maintenance fee; that the plaintiff was engaged in furnishing water to water users under its said canal; that the land of the defendant was susceptible of irrigation; that no part of said maintenance fee had been paid; and that there was due the plaintiff from the defendant $750 and interest. The defendant answered that he was the present owner of the land, but denied all the other matters alleged.

Upon the trial the plaintiff offered in evidence the deed for the land described in the petition, together with the indorsements thereon, all of which were received without objection. There was also offered and received in evidence a "water right deed" containing the covenants upon which plaintiff predicates its right of action. The deed for the land is one of general warranty running from the Nikaniss Company to the defendant, and contains only the ordinary and usual covenants in such a deed. The water right deed from the plaintiff to the Nikaniss Company contains the following conditions: "That the said party of the first part [The Farmers & Merchants Irrigation Co.], for and in consideration of the sum of $1,750 to it in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and of the further annual payment hereinafter mentioned and provided for, to be made at the times named in this deed, have sold subject to the limitations and conditions hereinafter named, and by these presents does sell and convey, unto the said party of the second part [Nikaniss Company], and to its heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, the right to use water from the canal of the said party of the first part, during the irrigation season of each and every year, in an amount not exceeding the rate of one cubic foot per second of time for each 70 acres of land hereinafter described, to be used upon and for the purpose of irrigating the said land, only, the same being situated in the county of Dawson, state of Nebraska, to wit: All that part of section 5, in township 10 north, of range 21 west, lying south of the main canal of the party of the first part (except that part taken up by slough), containing 500 acres. The said party of the second part, its heirs, assigns, and legal representatives, agree to pay to the party of the first part, its successors and assigns, as a part of the consideration of this grant, annually in advance, on or before the 1st day of March in each and every year, the further sum of $250, the same being in addition to the consideration above expressed, and the amount named is hereby agreed upon as a liquidated sum as compensation to the first party for maintaining and operating said canal which it hereby promises and agrees to do, and the said party of the second part agrees to make said payments well and truly, at the times herein named, and it is hereby expressly agreed that in case the second party shall fail to make said payments promptly, then the first party may, at its election, collect said sum or sums with 8 per cent interest thereon from and after default in payment of the same by suit in law or equity. It is further agreed that if the first party shall elect to take judgment in a court of law for any sum or sums due on said annual payments, that the same shall not be a bar to a suit in equity to foreclose the lien herein given. . . . It is further stipulated and agreed, and this conveyance is made upon the express condition, that if the said party of the second part, its heirs, assigns, shall at any time fail, neglect, or refuse to make any of the annual payments hereinbefore provided for at the time the same shall become due and payable, according to the terms hereof, the said first party shall have the election, without notice, to furnish the supply of water, and to sue for said annual payment in law or equity, at its election, or upon such default to shut off such supply and to cease to furnish water, under the provisions of this deed, until payment is made of all such defaulted annual payments to the party of the first part, with 8 per cent interest thereon, from the date of default until the date of payment, and upon such payment, said second party shall be reinstated, with all the rights and privileges theretofore conferred by this deed, and it is expressly stipulated and agreed that said second party shall not maintain any suit at law nor in equity against the party of the first part, based upon the provisions of this contract, while in default of any of the annual payments hereinbefore referred to, the payment of such annual payments being a condition precedent to the performance on the part of the first party." The deed from the Nikaniss Company to Silas J. Hill is of the date April 6, 1906, and was filed for record 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

May 10, 1906, The "water right deed" from the Farmers & Merchants Irrigation Company to the Nikaniss Company is of the date February 13, 1904, and was filed for record February 24, 1904. On the trial it was stipulated that the plaintiff was a corporation, and that the defendant had paid no part of the maintenance fee claimed by plaintiff in the petition, that the defendant owned the land at the time of the commencement of the action, and that he has owned it at all times since he purchased the same. It was also stipulated, for the purposes of the case, that at all times mentioned in the petition the plaintiff has been willing and able to furnish water as provided in the "water right deed," but that the defendant at all times refused to recognize any rights or liabilities by reason of such deed, and refused to ask for water or to accept water thereunder. It was also agreed that the "water right deed" was duly indexed against the land therein described at the time the same was filed for record.

It is the contention of the plaintiff that the "water right deed" attached to the land and passed with the change of title, and that therefore the defendant was liable to pay the maintenance fee for each year as it matured. It is said in plaintiff's brief that under the rule established by this court, the water right deed attached to the land, and cannot be severed from it. The appellee, the owner of the land, is the only person who can receive any benefit from this water right, and he, in turn, should be held liable to pay the annual maintenance fee." Counsel for the plaintiff contends in his brief "the sole question in this case is, Can appellant maintain a cause of action against appellee to recover this maintenance fee, there having been no expressed assumption of the obligation in the deed conveying the land to the appellee?" The defendant contends that he cannot be held personally liable, and the district court adopted that view and dismissed the case.

The question to be determined is whether the defendant has assumed the obligations of the contract entered into between the irrigation company and the Nikaniss Company, the original owners of the land. The defendant bought the land and received a deed which was in the ordinary form of a warranty deed, and did not mention or refer to the contract sued upon. By the purchase of the land and by receiving the deed does the defendant assume the contract of his grantor, and is he personally charged with the obligations of such grantor?

It is argued that § 6825, Anno. Stat.

1909, obligates the ditch company to keep its canal in repair, and that therefore the duty which the legislature fixes upon the ditch company creates an obligation on its patrons to provide the funds necessary for the performance of the duty. The contract sought to be enforced is executory. The suit brought is in personam. It is brought against the person instead of against the thing, and is not a suit against the land to enforce an alleged lien, but it is an action against the defendant; and the theory upon which it is sought to be maintained of necessity would seem to imply the personal promise of the defendant to pay the money. The conveyance made by the Nikaniss Company to the defendant, Hill, may have transferred to him all the property rights which the Nikaniss Company had in the land conveyed, but, if the grantee did not promise in any manner to assume the obligation of his grantor, how can he be bound?

The argument of counsel for plaintiff is that "there was no reservation or suggestion of reservation in the deed from the Nikaniss Company to appellee, Hill. That deed, 'Exhibit B,' it is submitted, carried with it the water right attached to this land as an appurtenance to the land. The acceptance of the deed by appellee, Hill, from the Nikaniss Company was an acceptance of all the incidents attached to or belonging to the land transferred to appellee (defendant), and charged him with the conditions written therein." The defendant, Hill, is a stranger to the original contract made between the Farmers & Merchants Irrigation Company and the Nikaniss Company. If it may be properly said that the defendant, Hill, received the deed to the land from the Nikaniss Company with notice that the ditch is an easement, and with notice of all the rights of the ditch company (Arterburn v. Beard, 86 Neb. 733, 126 N. W. 379), and therefore he is charged with such notice, as is said in Seng v. Payne, 87 Neb. 812, 128 N. W. 625, yet it would seem that that does not in any way tend to establish the personal liability of the defendant. Counsel for the plaintiff seems to have been unable to find any case directly in point which supports his contention.

We have attempted to carefully examine each of the several irrigation acts passed by the legislature, and in not one of these acts do we find any attempt to charge the grantee of land purchased under an irrigation ditch with the obligation of his grantor to personally pay for the maintenance of the ditch. The first irrigation law passed was approved February 19, 1877, and is entitled, "An Act to Enable Corporations Formed for the Construction and Operation of Canals for Irrigation and Other Purposes, to Acquire Right of Way, and to Declare Any Such Canals Works of Internal Improvement." Laws 1877, p. 168; Comp. Stat. 1881, chap. 16, §§ 158, 159. The next irrigation act is chapter 68, Laws 1889. This was followed by chapter 40, Laws 1893. In 1895 a comprehensive irrigation act was passed. Laws 1895, chap. 69. Section 46 of this particular act is the section referred to in appellant's brief as § 6825, Anno. Stat. 1909. In that section it is said: "It is hereby made the duty of the owner or owners of any such ditch or canal to keep the same in good repair and to cause the water to flow through the said ditch or canal to the extent of its capacity during the period between April 15 and November 1 each year, if the same be demanded and the supply at its source be sufficient." We call attention to the language of the statute to the effect that the water is only to be furnished by the ditch owner when "the supply at its source be sufficient." In Crawford Co. v. Hathaway (Crawford Co. v. Hall) 67 Neb. 325, 60 L.R.A. 889, 108 Am. St. Rep. 647, 93 N. W. 781, this court held that the act of 1877 was an implied recognition of the right to appropriate the waters of the public domain according to the custom prevailing in the arid states immediately west of us, and that the irrigation acts of 1889 and 1895 expressly recognized and prescribed the rights of those who had appropriated the public waters and applied them to agricultural uses. By §§ 42, 43, chap. 69, Laws 1895 (Comp. Stat. 1911, chap. 93a, art. 2, §§ 42, 43), it is provided: "The water of every natural stream not heretofore appropriated, within the state of Nebraska, is hereby declared to be the property of the public, and is dedicated to the use of the people of the state, subject to appropriation as hereinbefore provided." And in the next section it is said: "The right to divert unappropriated waters of every natural stream for beneficial use shall never be denied." These sections would seem to make the water in the natural streams of the state the property of the public; that is, the property of the state, subject, however, to appropriation for beneficial uses. This would seem to be specifically said by Judge Sedgwick in Castle Rock Irrig. Canal & Water Power Co. v. Jurisch, 67 Neb. 377, 93 N. W. 690. Section 6924x2, Anno. Stat. 1911, provides: "Irrigation works constructed under the laws of this state are hereby declared to be common carriers." The further provision contained in the section is: "The owner or operator of any works for the storage, carriage, or diversion of water, except irrigation districts, must deliver all water legally appropriated to the parties entitled to the use of the water for beneficial purposes, at a reasonable rate, to be fixed by the state railway commission, according to the law in such cases relating to common carriers."

From the statutes and decisions referred to it would seem that the waters in the running streams of the state are public property, subject to be diverted and applied for beneficial uses. That ditches may be constructed to carry the water to agricultural lands for a reasonable compensation would seem proper, and the owner of the land may undoubtedly obligate himself to assist in the construction and maintenance of the ditch. If the owner of the land, after incurring an obligation of this kind, sells and conveys it, is there any obligation upon the part of his grantee to keep up a maintenance fee, although he has not undertaken to do so by any personal promise? We think that the following authorities tend to show that the defendant is not personally liable, and some of these decisions perhaps tend to show that he is not liable as grantee for any burden unless he and the plaintiff in the case are privies in estate. 17 Vin. Abr. of Law and Equity (Privy) p. 534; 2 Bouvier's Law Dict.; Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 459; Educational Soc. v. Varney, 54 N. H. 376; 2 Washb. Real Prop. 6th ed. §§ 1203, 1205; Cole v. Hughes, 54 N. Y. 444, 13 Am. Rep. 611; Scott v. McMullan, 76 N. Y. 141; Nesbit v. Nesbit, 1 N. C. 90 (Taylor, 57); Webb v. Russell, 3 T. R. 393, 1 Revised Rep. 725; Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517, Coop. t. Brougham, 278; 4 Kent, Com. *473; Mygatt v. Coe, 124 N. Y. 212, 11 L.R.A. 646, 26 N. E. 611; Pool v. Morris, 29 Ga. 374, 74 Am. Dec. 68; Patton v. Pitts, 80 Ala. 373; Kettle River R. Co. v. Eastern R. Co. 41 Minn. 461, 6 L.R.A. 111, 43 N. W. 469; Bloch v. Isham, 28 Ind. 37, 92 Am. Dec. 287; Weld v. Nichols, 17 Pick. 538; Bally v. Wells, 3 Wils. 25. In Fresno Canal & Irrig Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112, 22 Pac. 53, it was held: "Where a grantee of the covenantor had notice of the water right when he purchased the land, but did not know its terms, such knowledge was sufficient to put him upon inquiry; and a failure to do so will not relieve him of the obligation upon the land." In the same case it was held: "Under Civil Code (Cal.) §§ 1460-1462, specifying what covenants run with the land, the covenants under the contract in question do not run with the land, not being contained in the grant of the estate, and no personal judgment can be had against defendant, but the lien must be foreclosed against the land; he not being a bona fide purchaser without notice of the lien." An examination of the Civil Code of California shows that proceedings against the land by foreclosure of the alleged lien are dependent upon the Code of that state. Civil Code (Cal.) §§ 1460, 1462, 2882, 2884. It will be seen from the foregoing California case that, although the statutes of that state make the lien created by the contract follow the land, yet the court said: "There can be no judgment against defendant personally for money, but the lien can be enforced by foreclosure against the land, and every grantee who is not a bona fide purchaser without notice."

Counsel for the plaintiff cites Farmers' Canal Co. v. Frank, 72 Neb. 136, 100 N. W. 286. We think that case cannot properly be applied to the consideration of this one. It required in its determination the consideration of § 6782, Anno. Stat. 1903. It was a consideration of the statement required in an application to the state board of irrigation for a permit to appropriate water. This court held that it was necessary to state in such application a description of the land to be irrigated. The thing determined was not whether there was a personal liability for the maintenance of a ditch. It was merely directory concerning the method of appropriating water for irrigation purposes. If A. purchases a tract of land upon which there is a mortgage, he does not necessarily assume payment of the mortgage, nor does he become liable in an action at law upon the original note which the mortgage secures. Of course, if he does not pay the note and thereby satisfy the mortgage, he may lose his title to the land by foreclosure. Notwithstanding the fact that he may lose the land, he does not become personally liable upon the note. This is so plain that the citation of any authority would seem to be unnecessary. In Lexington Bank v. Salling, 66 Neb. 180, 92 N. W. 318, it is held that the conveyance of land subject to outstanding encumbrances imposes upon the purchaser no obligation to pay such encumbrances. In discussing the case the court said: "It has long been settled in this state that the acceptance of a deed which, in express terms, conveys land subject to an encumbrance, does not impose upon the grantee a personal obligation to pay the debt. He is in such case interested in discharging the encumbrance, but he owes neither the grantor nor the encumbrancer any duty arising ex contractu. The transaction being nothing more than the purchase of an equity of redemption, no implied agreement is deducible from it."

We approach the determination of this case with a full realization of the importance of irrigation to the state. While the great bulk of farming in Nebraska is done upon agricultural lands which are not irrigated, yet a very considerable section must always depend upon the successful application of water to agricultural uses. This section of our state is already prosperous, and is destined to support a dense population. Irrigation is to be encouraged and protected in every legitimate way. While the plaintiff may be obliged to furnish the defendant with water for irrigation purposes if he demands it, and the plaintiff has it, yet the refusal of the defendant to accept the water does not create a personal liability against the defendant. It is contended by the plaintiff that the maintenance fee is, by the terms of the "water right deed," made a charge upon the land, and that the defendant by his purchase of the land became personally liable for the payment of such maintenance fee. The trouble with this contention is that neither the terms of his deed nor the several irrigation acts impose upon him any such personal liability. We are of opinion that the trial court correctly determined the question before it.

The judgment of the District Court is right, and it is affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

POCOMOKE GUANO COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

CITY OF NEW BERN.

(158 N. C. 354, 74 S. E. 2.)

Tax — inspection — license — statutory conflict.

1. A statute imposing a tonnage tax for purposes of inspection on fertilizers, and forbidding "any other tax to be levied by county, city, or town," does not forbid a municipality from imposing a license tax on the business of dealing in such products.

Note. — Warehouse used exclusively for owner's goods or products as subject of license tax.

There appears to be little authority upon the question of whether the maintenance of a storehouse for one's own convenience is a trade or occupation upon which a license tax may be imposed.

In W. W. Cargill Co. v. Minnesota, 180 U. S. 452, 45 L. ed. 619, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 423, it was held that the requirement of a license for a warehouse by a statute regulating elevators and warehouses on railroad rights of way, or lands used in connection with a railway at stations and sidings, was not forbidden by the 14th Amendment 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Same — license — storage warehouse.

2. Charter authority to impose a tax on trades permits the imposition of a tax on the maintenance by a foreign manufacturer of a warehouse for the storage, within the municipality, of its products pending deliveries by agents, to whom the orders are forwarded from the home office in another state.

(Brown and Allen, JJ., dissent.)

(March 13, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Craven County holding it liable in an action submitted without controversy to determine the liability of plaintiff for a license tax which had been imposed by the defendant city. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peatross & Savage and Moore & Dunn, for appellant:

The designation of the objects of taxation is a limitation of the objects that could be taxed.

Plymouth v. Cooper, 135 N. C. 1, 47 S. E. 129.

The commissioners of an incorporated town have no right to impose any tax, except such as are expressly authorized by the acts of incorporation.

Asheville v. Means, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 406.

Mr. R. A. Nunn, for appellee:

Plaintiff is not exempt from the payment of the privilege tax for doing business in the city.

F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. Tarboro, 126 N. C. 71, 35 S. E. 231; Holland v. Isler, 77 N. C. 1; Wilmington v. Macks, 86 N. C. 88, 41 Am. Rep. 443; State v. Worth, 116 N. C. 1007, 21 S. E. 204; State v. Irvin, 126 N. C. 989, 35 S. E. 430.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action submitted without controversy to determine whether the plaintiff, of the Federal Constitution, in case of a warehouse used exclusively for the storage of the grain of the owner, where the warehouse was used for the purpose of buying grain from the public and was a sort of a public market, and the warehouseman acted as a market master, weighmaster, inspector, and grader of the grain. The court quoting from the opinion of the state court, which upheld the constitutionality of the act, said: "If the business carried on at this warehouse consisted of nothing more than storing defendant's own grain, we would concede that such business would warrant but little interference or regulation of it by the state. But that business does consist of something more. It was conceded

Guano Company, is liable for the license tax of $50 prescribed by the board of aldermen of the city of New Bern, for carrying on business as fertilizer agents or dealers, for twelve months succeeding the date of the levy. Rev. § 2924, authorizes any municipal corporation to "annually lay a tax on all trades, professions, and franchises carried on or enjoyed within the city, unless otherwise provided by law."

Such license tax upon a trade or profession is not forbidden because a tonnage tax for purposes of inspection has been levied by the state under a statute which forbids "any other tax to be levied by county, city, or town." That provision simply forbids any other tonnage tax. It does not forbid an ad valorem tax upon the goods stored in town, nor a license tax upon the calling or occupation of manufacturing or dealing in fertilizers. F. S. Royster Guano Co. v. Tarboro, 126 N. C. 68, 35 S. E. 231; Pocomoke Guano Co. v. Biddle, 158 N. C. 212, 73 S. E. 996.

The power of the legislature to authorize the levy of license taxes upon trades, professions, and franchises has been discussed and sustained also in Wilmington v. Macks, 86 N. C. 88, 41 Am. Rep. 443; State v. Worth, 116 N. C. 1007, 21 S. E. 204; State v. Irvin, 126 N. C. 989, 35 S. E. 430; State v. Hunt, 129 N. C. 686, 85 Am. St. Rep. 758, 40 S. E. 216. The only question that arises, therefore, is whether the occupation or calling exercised by the plaintiff comes within the terms of the ordinance which levies a tax of $50 upon callings and professions, naming among others, "fertilizer manufacturers, agents, or dealers."

The facts agreed on are that the plaintiff is a company engaged in manufacturing and selling fertilizer and fertilizer material; that it has no factory in New Bern, and that the orders for the goods are received solely at Norfolk, Virginia, and from thence are sent to its agents, who maintain a warehouse in the city of New Bern, where its fertilizers and fertilizing material are stored, and thence are shipped out upon the orders thus sent to them from the general office in Norfolk, Virginia; no sales being made in New Bern.

on the argument, and is fairly to be inferred from the findings and stipulation of facts, that the grain is purchased, weighed, graded, and delivered at the warehouse, and that defendant, with its own scales and appliances, weights and grades the grain. Under these circumstances, the warehouse is a sort of public market place, where the farmers come with their grain for the purpose of selling the same, and where the purchaser, a party in interest, acts as market master, weighmaster, inspector, and grader of the grain. Surely such a business is of a public character, and is sufficiently affected with a public interest to warrant a very considerable amount of regulation of it by the state. The business carried on by defendant at its warehouse is similar to that carried on at a large number of other warehouses and elevators in this state. The grain crops of this state constitute by far the most important part of its commerce and its greatest resource. It is important to see that correct weights are had; that uniform grades are given; that the proper amount of dockage and no more is taken; that no dishonest practices are allowed, and no undue advantage is permitted to be taken. Said chapter 148 requires the person operating such an elevator or warehouse to procure a license to be issued by the state railroad and warehouse commission, for which a fee of $1 per year must be paid. The act also provides that such license may be revoked by the commission if the warehouse or elevator is operated in violation or in disregard of the laws of this state. Section 2 provides that any person attempting to run such an elevator or warehouse without a license may be enjoined in a suit for that purpose. Section 3 provides that the commission may 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

make suitable and necessary rules and regulations for the government of public country warehouses and elevators. Then follow other provisions. There are undoubtedly many provisions in the act which apply only to warehouses and elevators in which grain is stored for others or for the public, and which provisions do not and cannot apply to such warehouses as the one here in question. There are, perhaps, provisions in the act which it would be unconstitutional to apply to such a warehouse as this. But such matters need not be considered at this time. The provision requiring a license is not one of these. This disposes of the only question argued which it is necessary to consider."

In Arlington v. Central of Georgia R. Co. 127 Ga. 721, 56 S. E. 1015, where the municipality had no power to tax a railroad as a common carrier, it was held that a warehouse used only to store goods which were in its custody as a common carrier was a mere incident to its business as such, and could not be segregated and made subject to an occupation tax.

In State v. Walker, 28 La. Ann. 636, it was held that where a statute required a license tax to be paid by "each keeper of a warehouse, cotton or lumber yard, or other place of public storage for hire," the tax could not be exacted of one who had the usual appendage of all sawmills doing a considerable amount of business, upon which the lumber sawed at the mill was stacked for sale, where it appeared that he did not keep lumber on storage for hire.

For a note on power of municipality to make consistent elements or operations of a business independent subjects of license tax, see note to Southern Exp. Co. v. R. M. Rose Co. 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 619. J. T. W.

Upon these facts, it is clear that the plaintiff is a manufacturing company maintaining an agency in the city of New Bern, through which it deals in fertilizers and fertilizing material, storing the same and shipping out and distributing the fertilizers and fertilizing material upon receipt of orders which are taken and accepted at Norfolk, Virginia. It is not material that no fertilizers are manufactured in New Bern and that no sales are made there. The dealing consists in storing and keeping the goods on hand, and shipping them out from time to time to the parties who have brought the same. The tax is upon the occupation or calling or business, whatever it may be termed, from which it is reaping a profit. Like other businesses, professions, and callings that are taxed because carried on there, this plaintiff, being protected in the exercise of such occupation or calling by the city, is subject to this license tax as the pro rata which the city is authorized to levy upon it in return for such protection. Holland v. Isler, 77 N. C. 1.

We concur in the judgment below.

Brown, J., dissenting:

I am unable to agree with the conclusions of the court that the tax levied by the city of New Bern upon the plaintiff was valid. The facts, as I gather them from the records, are that the plaintiff, a corporation doing business in the city of Norfolk, leases a warehouse in the city of New Bern for the storage of its own goods only, consisting of fertilizers and fertilizing material. None of these goods are sold in the city of New Bern, but the sales offices of the plaintiff are outside of the state of North Carolina, at which offices it receives orders from the purchasers of fertilizer through traveling salesmen, and in some instances by mail. The plaintiff is not engaged in the selling of fertilizer in New Bern, or in the business of a warehouseman. A "warehouseman" is one whose storage facilities are open to the public. Whereas, the warehouse of the plaintiff is used exclusively for the storage of its own property.

I do not gainsay the right of the general assembly to tax trades, professions, and franchises; but, according to the facts of this case, the plaintiff is not engaged in the exercise of either within the city of New Bern. The case came before the superior court in the form of a controversy submitted without action, in which it appears affirmatively that the plaintiff is not engaged in the sale of fertilizer in North Carolina, but that the warehouse in question is used exclusively for the private storage of its own material, and that deliveries are made from that upon orders received from the company's offices in Norfolk.

We have at this term held that this company is liable for the ad valorem tax upon the value of its fertilizers stored in the city of New Bern, which tax the company will be compelled to pay, but upon the facts agreed I find no warrant whatever to tax it either as trader or as warehouseman. In addition to the heavy ad valorem tax adjudged against this plaintiff as this term, it is well to remember that it also pays a tonnage tax of 20 cents per ton upon this very fertilizer. To permit the city to tax this plaintiff as dealer or warehouseman, when in fact it is not engaged in either capacity in this state, is piling Pelion on Ossa in the matter of taxation.

Allen, J., concurs in dissent.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

E. H. CHEWNING et al.

v.

F. C. EASON et al., Appts.

(158 N. C. 578, 74 S. E. 357.)

Will — power of disposal — estate created.

A devise of property to one for life, and then "to dispose of as she sees proper," does not convey a fee.

(April 3, 1912.)

Note. — Power to create remainder after life estate with absolute power of disposal.

This note is supplemental to one in 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, bearing the same title, to which reference is made for the earlier decisions on the question.

The question as to what intention in regard to the nature of the estate to be taken by a devisee may be deduced from a power of disposition is considered in a note to Re Weien, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 463.

Rule where power of disposal is not considered to be property.

In Cross v. Hendry, 39 Ind. App. 246, 79 N. E. 531, where testator gave all his property to his wife, "to be hers during her lifetime," adding, "and at her death I wish what property is left to be applied" in a certain manner, it was held that as a life estate was given in certain and express terms, the power of disposition annexed did not operate to create an estate in fee.

In Beatson v. Bowers, — Ind. App. —, 88 N. E. 966, affirmed in 174 Ind. 601, 91 N. E. 922, it was held that under a deed by which property was conveyed to the APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Anson County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to determine ownership to certain lands under the will of Thomas Chewning, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Gullledge & Boggan, F. J. Cox, and W. E. Brock, for appellants:

The law strongly favors the creation of a fee or an estate of inheritance, especially by will, instead of a life estate in the first taker.

Leeper v. Neagle, 94 N. C. 338; Re Whitney, 69 Misc. 131, 124 N. Y. Supp. 909; Terhune v. Commercial Nat. Safe Deposit Co. 245 Ill. 622, 92 N. E. 532; Hoxie v. Chamberlain, 228 Pa. 31, 76 Atl. 423; Mc-Knight v. McKnight, 120 Tenn. 431, 115 S. W. 134; Hale v. Marsh, 100 Mass. 468.

Messrs. Robinson & Caudle, for appellees:

The devise created a life estate only.

Harrison v. Battle, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 214; Alexander v. Cunningham, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 433; Bass v. Bass, 78 N. C. 375; Patrick v. Morehead, 85 N. C. 62, 39 Am. Rep. 684; Jackson ex dem. Livingston v. Robins, 16 Johns. 537; Long v. Waldraven, 113 N. C. 337, 18 S. E. 251; Parks v. Robinson, 138 N. C. 269, 50 S. E. 649; 31 Cyc. 1089; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1097; Morgan v. Morgan, 60 W. Va. 327, 55 S. E. 389, 9 Ann. Cas. 943; Steiff v. Seibert, 128 Iowa, 746, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1186, 105 N. W. 328; Gardner, Wills, p. 476; grantee during her life, with power of disposition, the limitation for life controlled the operation of the power, and prevented the estate from enlarging into a fee.

And in Foudray v. Foudray, 44 Ind. App. 444, 89 N. E. 499, it was held that as a will by which testator devised to a daughter certain real estate for and during her natural life, with full power of disposition, gave the devisee a life estate by certain and express terms, the vesting of the power of disposition would not enlarge the estate given into a fee.

In Paxton v. Paxton, 141 Iowa, 96, 119 N. W. 284, a will devising to testator's wife all his property, "to be used by her and enjoyed as she may choose during her natural life, and at her death, if any property is remaining, to be divided equally among my children," was held not to give her a fee-simple title, the court saying: "A devise which passes only a life estate may nevertheless be coupled with a provision giving the devisee unlimited power of disposal. The devise in remainder vests at once in the devisees thereof a fee-simple title to whatever may remain undisposed of under this power, subject only to the life estate of the first devisee."

In Hamilton v. Hamilton, 149 Iowa, 321, 128 N. W. 380, it is said that the doctrine that a life estate may be created with a power annexed authorizing the life tenant to defeat or extinguish the remainder over by sale and conveyance of the fee, is too well settled in Iowa and in most of the states to admit of serious argument.

In McCormick v. McCormick, — Ky. —, 121 S. W. 450, it was held that a power of sale given by a will to a tenant for life in no wise enlarged her life estate.

In Woodward v. Anderson, 145 Ky. 134, 140 S. W. 57, it is held that although where property is devised absolutely, with power of unlimited disposition, and by a subsequent part of the will the testator undertakes to devise over an undisposed-of remainder of the property, the limitation over is void, yet where a life estate only is devised, with power of disposition, then the limitation over of such of the devised 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) property as should remain undisposed of at the death of the life tenant is valid.

In Marden v. Leimbach, 115 Md. 206, 80 Atl. 958, the court, in holding that there was no inconsistency between the granting clause of a deed conveying an estate for life and the habendum clause which gave the grantee the right during life to convey absolutely, said that the power of disposition annexed by the latter provision does not enlarge the estate conveyed to a fee, it being a well-settled doctrine of law, sustained by all the authorities, that where an estate is given to a person generally or indefinitely, with power of disposition, such gift carries the entire estate; but where the property is given expressly for life, and a power of disposition of the reversion is annexed, the rule is different, and the first taker has but an estate for life with the super-added power.

In Warren v. Ingram, 96 Miss. 438, 51 So. 888, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 422, it is said that the authorities are uniform to the effect that a devise of land to one indefinitely, and to do with the same at his discretion, will invest him with the fee; but if the devise is for life only and to do with at his discretion, the devisee is invested with a life estate only, with an added power.

In Tisdale v. Prather, 210 Mo. 402, 109 S. W. 41, it is said to be well settled that a conveyance which confers an absolute power of disposition creates a fee-simple estate in the grantee if by deed, or in the devisee if by will, in the absence of an expressed intention to devise a life estate only.

In Threlkeld v. Threlkeld, 238 Mo. 459, 141 S. W. 1121, it is held that an absolute and unrestricted power of disposition is not inconsistent with a life estate, and that a limitation over is good, although the first taker has such power.

And in Romjue v. Randolph, — Mo. App. —, 148 S. W. 185, it is said that the power of absolute disposal over property will not operate as the devise of a fee in realty, and of an absolute title in personality, where a life estate only is devised; and that in such case the life estate is not enlarged by an unrestrained power of sale, but such Mansfield v. Shelton, 67 Conn. 390, 52 Am. St. Rep. 288, 35 Atl. 271; Peckham v. Lego, 57 Conn. 553, 7 L.R.A. 419, 14 Am. St. Rep. 130, 19 Atl. 392.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a controversy between the parties to this action, arising out of the following facts: Plaintiffs, who are the heirs of Thomas Chewning, claim that they are the owners of the tract of land which is the subject of the controversy; and defendants, who are the heirs of Martha Chewning, dispute this claim and assert ownership in themselves. The land was owned by Thomas Chewning, who, by his will, devised it to his wife, Martha Chewning, in these words: "I give and bequeath (after all my just debts shall have been paid) all of my real and personal property, together with all debts owing my estate, to my wife, Martha Chewning, during her natural life, and then to dispose of as she sees proper." If, under this clause of the will, Martha Chewning acquired a life estate only, with power of disposal, the plaintiffs are entitled to the land, as she failed to exercise the power; but if the grant of the power enlarged the estate for life, which is expressly given, into an estate in fee, then the defendants are the owners of the land. The court below was of opinion with the plaintiffs, and rendered judgment accordingly, from which the defendants appealed.

There is a marked distinction between power is merely one of appointment, which, if not exercised, leaves the estate in remainder.

In Loosing v. Loosing, 85 Neb. 66, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 920, 122 N. W. 707, the court said: "While cases are not lacking to sustain the proposition that a power of sale added to a life estate in real property vests the donee with an estate in fee simple, we think the weight of authority is to the contrary."

In Parker v. Travers, 74 N. J. Eq. 812, 71 Atl. 612, it is said that the rule is well established in New Jersey that when to a life estate with a remainder over of what may be undisposed of, there is added a power of disposition, the property right or interest of the life tenant is not thereby enlarged, but the devisee takes a life estate only, with a power of disposal, to be exercised by the devisee during the continuance of the estate, for his benefit.

In Southern Pine Lumber Co. v. Arnold, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 139 S. W. 917, and in the same case on former appeal, 123 S. W. 1162, it is held that under a deed conveying land to a husband in trust for his wife for life, and in trust to hold the remainder in fee for such persons as she might appoint by will or deed, and giving her a power of disposition during life, the wife acquired a life estate which was not enlarged by her power of disposal.

The rule that an absolute power of disposition may be annexed to a life estate without enlarging it into a fee is also recognized and acted upon in Pool v. Napier, 145 Iowa, 699, 124 N. W. 755; Ironside v. Ironside, 150 Iowa, 628, 130 N. W. 414; Greenwalt v. Keller, 75 Kan. 578, 90 Pac. 233; Sutton v. Johnson, — Ky. —, 127 S. W. 747; Huerkamp v. Huerkamp, 145 Ky. 144, 140 S. W. 182; Park v. McCombs, 146 Ky. 327, 142 S. W. 401; Richards v. Morrison, 101 Me. 424, 64 Atl. 768; Reed v. Reed, 194 Mass. 216, 80 N. E. 219; Murdoch v. Murdoch, 97 Miss. 690, 53 So. 684.

It makes no difference in the application of this doctrine that the subject of the gift is personal property. Park v. McCombs, 146 Ky. 327, 142 S. W. 401. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rule where power of disposal and life estate are considered incompatible.

On the other hand, in McKnight v. McKnight, 120 Tenn. 431, 115 S. W. 134, the court, following the doctrine laid down in the earlier Tennessee decisions, stated it to be a well-established rule of property that where a life estate is conveyed or devised, coupled with the absolute and unqualified power of disposition in the conveyee or devisee, the law converts the estate into a fee because of the incompatibility and inconsistency of the estate given and the power of disposition of it; but that where the power of disposition is dependent upon a contingency, is qualified, limited, or restricted, only a life estate is vested, the obnoxious incompatibility not being in such cases.

And in Randall v. Harrison, 109 Va. 686, 64 S. E. 992, it was held, in accordance with the doctrine of the earlier Virginia decisions, that a gift of a life estate with absolute power of disposal vests in the first taker a fee simple in lands, and an absolute estate in personalty, and that a gift over of "what may be left" is void.

The doctrine that if the first taker is given an estate for life, coupled with an unlimited power of disposition, the fee or absolute estate vests in the first taker, and the limitation over is void, is also recognized in Emert v. Blair, 121 Tenn. 240, 118 S. W. 685, and Newman v. Newman, 60 W. Va. 371, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 370, 55 S. E. 377.

Rule as modified by statute.

The word "purchaser," as used in the Wisconsin statute of 1898, which provides that when an absolute power of disposition is given to the owner of a life estate, such estate shall be changed into a fee absolute as to the rights of creditors and purchasers, but subject to any future estates limited therein in case the power shall not be executed or the land sold for the satisfaction of debts,—is not used in its technical sense, but must be understood, according to the common and approved usage of the language, as meaning a purchaser for a valuproperty and power. The estate devised to Mrs. Chewing is property; the power of disposal, a mere authority, which she could exercise or not, in her discretion. She had a general power annexed to the life estate, which she derived from the testator under the will. If she had exercised the power by selling the land, the title of the purchasers would have been derived, not from her, who merely executed the power, but from the testator, or the donor of the power. "The appointor is merely an instrument; the appointee is in by the original deed. The appointee takes in the same manner as if his name had been inserted in the power, or as if the power and instrument executing the power had been expressed in that giving the power. He does not take from the donee, as his assignee." 2 Washb. Real Prop. 320; 1 Sugden, Powers, 1856 ed. 242; 2 Sugden, Powers, 22; Doolittle v. Lewis, 7 Johns Ch. 45, 11 Am. Dec. 389. "In the execution of a power, there is no contract between the donee of the power and the appointee. The donee is the mere instrument by which the estate is passed from the donor to the appointee, and, when the appointment is made, the appointee at once takes the estate from the donor as if it had been conveyed directly to him." Norfleet v. Hawkins, 93 N. C. 392. It does not follow, because she could sell and convey the land under the power, that she thereby became the owner in fee. We must ascertain the intention of the testator, for that is the prevailing consideration and the supreme rule of interpretation, keeping in mind, of course, the rules of construction as our guide, and looking at the will in its entirety. If the testator, in this case, intended to devise the fee to his wife, it is strange that he should have expressly and definitely limited the estate to one for her life. Naturally, he would have given it to her without restriction. The reasonable meaning of the clause is that she should have and enjoy the property for the term of her life, with a general power of appointment or disposal of the reversion by her will, or, at least, subject to her life estate, if she chose to exercise it, and the great weight of authority sustains this construction. The doctrine was clearly expressed by Chancellor Kent: "If an estate be given to a person generally or indefinitely, with a power of disposition, it carries a fee, unless the testator gives to the first taker an estate for life only, and annexes to it a power of disposition of the reversion. In that case the express limitation for life will control the operation of the power, and prevent it from enlarging the estate to a fee." 4 Kent, Com. 520, 521; Jackson ex dem. Livingston v. Robins, 16 Johns. 537. It has been held that a devise to A., with power to dispose at pleasure, is considered as conveying property, not as conferring power; for the words of power will not be permitted to take away what, without them, is expressly given. 2 Preston, Estates, 81, 82; Bradley v. Westcott, 13 Ves. Jr. 453. But where there is an express and inconsistent estate for life able consideration. Perkinson v. Clarke, 135 Wis. 584, 116 N. W. 229.

Extent of life tenant's power.

The power of disposal given by a will devising property to one for life, with full power of disposition, and further providing that at the death of the devisee, should any property be left or remain, such remaining property should go to others, cannot be considered as applying only to the disposition of the life estate, as such construction would not only require that the language of the testator be given a forced and unnatural meaning, but also would make the power meaningless, since, in the absence of restriction therein, the owner of a life estate may sell it as other interests in land are sold. Foudray v. Foudray, 44 Ind. App. 444, 89 N. E. 499.

Under a will by which testator bequeathed to his widow all his real estate and personal property, "to have and to hold during her life, and to do with the same as, in her judgment, she may deem best," the power conferred is a power to dispose of the fee, and not the life estate only. Warren v. Ingram, 96 Miss. 438, 51 So. 888, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 422.

On the other hand in Brady v. Fuller, 78 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Kan. 448, 96 Pac. 854, a power of disposition contained in a deed reserving a life estate in the grantor, and further reserving "the power to mortgage, encumber, sell, lease, convey, or otherwise dispose of said real estate at any time," was held to be limited to a control and disposition of the life estate, as otherwise it would be a nullity.

And in Wardner v. Seventh Day Baptist Memorial Board, 232 Ill. 606, 122 Am. St. Rep. 138, 83 N. E. 1077, where testator provided that his wife should "have all that remain of the property which I shall die seised, and after paying . . . [certain legacies] is to use, dispose of, and control according to her own judgment during her natural life, and if she shall have children by me they shall have at their majority, or their survivors of them, the same amount each as is bequeathed to my son. . . . At the decease of my said wife . . . [name] all that remains after paying the legacies made to my children and grandchildren shall be divided among the three societies as named in my will," it was held that there being no words in the will clearly indicating that a larger power was intended, the wife was given only a power of disposition coextensive with her life estate.

E. S. O.

given, the construction of the instrument is altogether different; for the express estate for life negatives the intention to give the absolute property, and converts these words into words of mere power, which, standing alone, would have been construed to convey an interest. This appears to be very clearly established by the cases which further lay it down, that where an interest, and not a mere power, is conferred, the absolute property is vested, without any act on the part of the legatee; but, where a power only is given, the power must be executed, or it will fail. We may therefore take the rule to be settled that where lands are devised to one generally, and to be at his disposal, this is a fee in the devisee; but where they are devised to one expressly for life, and afterwards to be at his disposal, only an estate for life passes to the devisee, with a bare power to dispose of the fee. Anonymous, Leon. pt. 3, p. 71; Leife v. Saltingstone, 1 Mod. 189; Tomlinson v. Dighton, 1 Salk. 239, 1 P. Wms. 149, 10 Mod. 31, Comyn's Rep. 194; Burleigh v. Clough, 52 N. H. 267, 13 Am. Rep. 23 (where many of the cases are collected and reviewed and there is a learned discussion of the question); Stuart v. Walker, 72 Me. 145, 30 Am. Rep. 311; Collins v. Wickwire, 162 Mass. 143, 38 N. E. 365; 31 Cyc. 1089; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1097; Steff v. Seibert, 128 Iowa, 746, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1186, 105 N. W. 328.

The text writers thus state the general rule: "A devise of a life interest in express terms, coupled with a power in the life tenant to dispose of the fee simple in the property by his will, either absolutely and at his full discretion among a class of objects to be selected by him, or among a class of objects pointed out by the testator, gives the first taker a life estate only, but with a power to appoint the fee simple by his will." 2 Underhill, Wills, § 688. "A general power of disposition includes a power to dispose of the property by deed or will, and practically clothes the donee with all functions of ownership. In view of this fact, it has occasionally been provided by statute, and a few courts have reached the conclusion, without the help of the legislature, that the devisee of a life estate, with a general power of disposition, takes a fee simple, and that a limitation over is void. But, by the overwhelming weight of authority, no fee results from the union of the life estate and the power, but both remain distinct, and the limitation over is good unless defeated by the exercise of the power by the life tenant." Gardner, Wills, p. 476. This doctrine 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) has been adopted and applied by this court in several cases. It is stated in Patrick v. Morehead, 85 N. C. 62, 39 Am. Rep. 684, to have been settled upon unquestionable authority that, if an estate be given by will to a person generally, with a power of disposition or appointment, it carries the fee; but if it be given to one for life only, and there is annexed to it such a power, it does not enlarge his estate, but gives him only an estate for life. The case of Long v. Waldraven, 113 N. C. 337, 18 S. E. 251, seems to be directly in point. The property, in that case, was given to the testator's wife during her natural life, and after her death to be divided among the heirs of her brothers and sisters, except as to one third thereof, which was left "at the disposal of his wife, to be left as she may will." The court held that she acquired but an estate for life, and "that an express estate for life to the wife, with a power to dispose of the fee, shall not turn her estate for life into a fee," citing Shermer v. Shermer, 1 Wash. (Va.) 266, 1 Am. Dec. 460, Bass v. Bass, 78 N. C. 374, Patrick v. Morehead, 85 N. C. 62, 39 Am. Rep. 684, and Second Reformed Presby. Church v. Disbrow, 52 Pa. 219, and stating that the principal case should be added to the long line of those which established the same doctrine. See also Harrison v. Battle, 21 N. C. (1 Dev. & B. Eq.) 214; Alexander v. Cunningham, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 433; Parks v. Robinson, 138 N. C. 269, 50 S. E. 649; Morgan v. Morgan, 60 W. Va. 327, 55 S. E. 389, 9 Ann. Cas. 943; Mansfield v. Shelton, 67 Conn. 390, 52 Am. St. Rep. 288, 35 Atl. 271. Revisal, § 3138, manifestly has no application. It appears in our case that the testator intended to pass an estate of less dignity than a fee. That section only establishes a rule between the heir and the devisee, in respect to the beneficial interest of the latter. Alexander v. Cunningham, 27 N. C. (5 Ired. L.) 430.

The case of Herring v. Williams, 158 N. C. 1, 73 S. E. 218, decided at the last term, did not involve the question now presented. The question there was whether there was a power of appointment or a power of disposal, while here the question is, the power being conceded, whether it enlarged the life estate into a fee. In the Herring Case, the donee had sold and conveyed the land by deed, or attempted to do so, while in this case she failed altogether to exercise the power.

The reversion in the land belongs to the heirs of Thomas Chewning, and not to the heirs of the donee of the power, and the judgment of the court is therefore correct.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

MCALISTER-EDWARDS COAL COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA EX REL. SAM J. MARSHALL et al.

(31 Okla. 629, 122 Pac. 194.)

Mandamus — to compel official action.

The proper function of a writ of mandamus is to compel the doing of a specific thing, something which can be neither diminished nor subdivided, and is not an appropriate remedy to compel a general course of official conduct or a long series of continuous acts, as it is impossible for the Headnote by DUNN, J.

Note. — Mandamus to compel performance of continuous acts or control general course of official conduct.

For a note on mandamus to compel public officials to enforce the liquor law, see People ex rel. Bartlett v. Busse, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 246.

The present note does not cover the question whether mandamus is a proper remedy to compel public service or quasi public corporations to perform their respective duties.

The decision in MCALISTER-EDWARDS COAL CO. v. STATE, to the effect that a writ of mandamus is not an appropriate remedy to compel a general course of official conduct or a series of continuous acts, is in accord with the weight of authority, although there are decisions to the contrary. The reason upon which these cases are founded is the practical impossibility of the courts overseeing the performance of a long series of continuous acts, and the fact that a course of conduct extending over a considerable period necessarily involves the exercise of discretion which is vested in an official.

Thus, in People ex rel. National Cigar Co. v. Dulaney, 96 Ill. 503, it was held that mandamus was not a proper remedy to compel the commissioners of a penitentiary to perform executory contracts for convict labor for a number of years. The court said: "It is only practicable by mandamus to compel the performance of specific acts where the duty to discharge them is clear and well defined, and when no element of discretion is involved in the performance. In the case in hand the duties to be coerced, if this writ is allowed, arise out of a contract that requires a series of years for its performance, and must of necessity involve in some degree the exercise of discretion, or, what is the same thing, judgment in the management of the business to which the contract refers. In such cases mandamus is not an appropriate remedy."

And a writ of mandamus will not be issued to compel aldermen to attend meetings of the common council and perform court to oversee the performance of such duties.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the District Court for Pittsburg County to review a judgment in favor of relators in a mandamus proceeding to compel defendants to furnish to relators such timbers, props, and cap pieces as are necessary to keep their working places in safe condition. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stuart, Gordon, & Liedtke, for plaintiffs in error:

'The writ of mandamus did not lie in this cause, for the reason that it was not a proper remedy.

their general official duties. People ex rel. Fitzgerald v. Whipple, 41 Mich. 548, 49 N. W. 922. The court said: "Mandamus would be entirely ineffectual in reaching the mischief complained of, as no court by such means could keep up a continuous or repeated attendance. Courts are not created to conduct the municipal affairs of cities, and nothing short of any such general supervision would reach such cases as the present. The remedy, if there is one, is not judicial. This is not a case where there is some specific right involved, but is a general violation of public duty."

And in People ex rel. Cady v. Ihnken, 129 Mich. 466, 89 N. W. 72, it was held that mandamus would not lie to compel a village clerk to attend the meetings of the council.

So, a writ of mandamus will not be issued at the instance of the owner of half of the stock of a corporation, against one who owns the remainder, commanding the latter to allow the former at all times free and unrestrained access to all the books, papers, accounts, mills, offices, and other property of the company in his possession or under his control, and to permit the applicant at all times to have a share and control in the management and direction of all the affairs and business of the company. State ex rel. Rosenfeld v. Einstein, 46 N. J. L. 479. The court said: "The proper province of writs of mandamus is to enjoin the doing of particular specified acts, and not to constrain a person to regulate his whole course of conduct according to some general principle. The latter, however, seems to be the design which the relator has in view."

And the court will not compel a press association by mandamus to enter into a contract for the supplying of news to a newspaper, since it cannot compel the making of a contract, because the element of the specific act to be performance is lacking, and for the further reason that a contract of this kind would necessarily involve and require for a long time the exercise of judgment, continuous supervision, special experience, and business discretion. State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press,

Atlanta v. Wright, 119 Ga. 207, 45 S. E. 995; Ward v. Beaufort County, 146 N. C. 534, 125 Am. St. Rep. 489, 60 S. E. 418.

Mandamus is not proper to be used as a means of enforcing a continuous line of action, or for carrying on, through the agency of the court, the conduct of a general business.

19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 724; Ward v. Beaufort County, 125 Am. St. Rep. 496, note; State ex rel. Hawes v. Brewer, 4 Ann. Cas. 197, and note, 39 Wash. 65, 109 Am. St. Rep. 858, 80 Pac. 1001; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314; People ex rel. Bartlett v. Dunne, 219 Ill. 346, 76 N. E. 570; State ex rel. Bross v. Carpenter, 51 Ohio St. 83, 46 Am. St. Rep. 556, 37 N. E. 261.

159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91.

And a writ of mandamus will not issue at the suit of one of the newly elected bailiffs of a militia district, to compel the justice of the peace elected in that district to make an apportionment of the papers, writs, and other processes issuing from the justice's court or returnable, thereto, and to turn over any particular part of them to the constable. Jackson v. Cochran, 134 Ga. 396, 67 S. E. 825, 20 Ann. Cas. 219. The court said: "While the writ of mandamus will issue to compel a due performance of official duties, it will not be granted to compel the performance of such a series of acts as that, in enforcing the observance of the writ, the court issuing the same would have to undertake to oversee and control the general course of official conduct of the party to whom the writ is directed."

Under the well-established doctrines set forth above, relative to the scope of the writ of mandamus, it is clearly not a remedy appropriate to the wrongs of which the applicant in the present case makes complaint. In the first place, he is not asking that the magistrate against whom he seeks the writ be compelled to perform some specific act or fulfil some specific official duty; but it is manifest that, if he were entitled to the writ on his petition, he would obtain a writ regulating and controlling the magistrate in his general course of official conduct. Not only would a long series of official acts upon the part of the magistrate be ordered, but the acts sought to be compelled are of such a character that the magistrate has a very large discretion relatively to the demand of the defendant in error in regard to them. For, even of no exigency has arisen which would authorize the appointment of special constables under § 4085 or 4086 of the Civil Code, certainly, as between the applicant for the writ of mandamus and the other regularly elected constable for the district, the magistrate would have a large discretion in apportioning the writs and processes to be served."

In Mossy v. Harris, 25 La. Ann. 623, where 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Lester & Hammond for defendants in error.

Dunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents error from the district court of Pittsburg county. September 13, 1909, defendants in error, as plaintiffs, filed their petition, in which it is alleged that the defendant the McAlester-Edwards Coal Company is a corporation, and that Jones Keener and Arthur Craig are mine foremen thereof; that the said coal company is engaged in the business of mining coal, and has employed the plaintiffs as coal miners; that, in order to perform their duties in safety, it is necessary to have sufficient props, caps, and timbers of suit-a writ of mandamus was sought to compel the tax collector to accept certain warrants in payment of license taxes, the court said: "It is the province of courts to pass on real contests between parties, enforce or protect specific rights, and redress actual wrongs, and not to issue general orders regulating or defining the duties of public officers. Certainly, this last is not the purpose of the writ of mandamus. To authorize it there must appear a specific ministerial duty which the applicant has a direct right or interest in having enforced. The relator does not show any such right, nor that he will suffer any particular wrong by the alleged refusal of the defendant to receive the said warrants."

In State ex rel. Broussard v. Henderson, 117 La. 209, 41 So. 496, where the sheriff denied that the district attorney was entitled to a commission on fines in criminal cases, and refused to pay such commission on certain fines already collected, and declared his intention not to pay a commission on future fines, it was held in a mandamus suit to compel the payment of the commission, that the only amount in dispute was the commission on the fines already collected, and that, for determining the jurisdiction of the court, the commission on future fines could not be taken into consideration, since courts can decide only actual controversies, and mandamus will not lie to compel a general course of official conduct.

In Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314, where an application was made for a writ of mandamus to compel the holder of the county office of register of deeds to permit the agent of a foreign corporation to have access to the records of the office, in order to ascertain and state the character of the titles of all the real estate in the county, and to construct a complete abstract of such title for the benefit of the corporation, the court said: "A single consideration of a practical nature may be suggested here. Granting that no other difficulties appear, it seems evident that in any case where the claim is for a continuous use of the record able size and length at the face of their respective working places, with which to timber the mine and make it safe; that under the law it is made the duty of the said coal company to employ a competent, practical mine foreman to see that plaintiffs have props, caps, and timbers of suitable size and of proper length sent into the mine and delivered to the working face; that they have requested the said coal company and Keener and Craig to perform this duty, which they have failed to do. The prayer is as follows: "Wherefore relators pray that the court grant an alternative writ of mandamus requiring the said McAlester-Edwards Coal Company and Jones Keener and Arthur Craig to furnish to your relators, and all other miners working in their said mine, at Edwards, Oklahoma, at all times, such timbers, props, and cap pieces as are necessary to keep their working places in a safe condition, and that they be required to deliver them at the face of their working places, in said mine," etc.

On this petition, an alternative writ of mandamus was issued, to which the de-office and its public contents from day to day and week to week, and not merely for a single occasion, with all its material facts defined, there must be great, if not insuperable, difficulty in enforcing the claim by mandamus. The register has rights and duties which must be respected; so the general public have rights, as well as the claimant; and the conditions are not steadily the same. They are subject to variation. On every occasion each must act reasonably, and with proper regard for the rights and duties of the others. As the circumstances vary the conduct must vary, so as to secure conformance to the rule of reasonable action by which the right is to be regulated. When the case presents a single occasion, and calls for an act which is presently determinate, it is entirely practicable to direct the act by mandamus. But where the case contemplates something continuous, yet variable in its conditions and aptitudes, the remedy by that process seems an unfit one. It is the office of mandamus to direct the will, and obedience is to be enforced by process for contempt. It is therefore necessary to point out the very thing to be done; and a command to act according to circumstances would be futile."

And in Webber v. Townley, 43 Mich. 534, 38 Am. Rep. 213, 5 N. W. 971, where a writ of mandamus was sought by abstracters to compel the register of deeds to allow them to inspect and copy the public records, it was refused; and it was held that no right to use the records for speculative purposes existed, the court pointing out the inconvenience and need of additional facilities which would probably arise if all persons were allowed such use of these offices.

But in Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 7 L.R.A. 73, 44 N. W. 282, a writ of mandamus was issued at the instance of an abstract maker against the city treasurer to compel him to permit the inspection and examination of the records and files of his office, which were by statute public records. The court said that they did not agree with the opinion of the court in Webber v. Townley, supra, nor anticipate that hardly any, if any, of the results imagined by the writer of that opinion, would ever occur; and the case of Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, supra, was distinguished upon the ground that the relator in that case was not a citizen nor an inhabitant, or even a domestic corporation, of the state, but a foreign corporation whose capacity to buy lands or hold them or deal in them was not shown.

In Barber v. West Jersey Title & Guaranty Co. 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 Atl. 222, 371, it was held that an individual or a corporation has the right of access to the public records of the county clerk's office for the purpose of examining any title in which he is interested without paying fees to the clerk, and that the right might be enforced by mandamus. The court said: "The proper province of writ of mandamus is to enjoin the doing of particular acts, and not to constrain a person to regulate his whole course of conduct according to some general principle. . . . In this case the duty of the clerk being restricted to the performance of a specific act, a complete remedy will be afforded by the writ of mandamus; the rights of the parties being settled, if the clerk refuses to accede to a proper demand made upon him, the court of law may impose such a penalty as will command obedience to the law."

And in State ex rel. Milwaukee v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 144 Wis. 386, 140 Am. St. Rep. 1025, 129 N. W. 623, it was held that mandamus would issue to compel a street railway company to sprinkle the street between and on either side of its track, where such a duty is required by a city ordinance. The court said: "Neither do we see any good reason for saying that relief should not be afforded by mandamus because the duty to sprinkle is a continuous one. If the legal duty on the part of the appellant is clear, the relator should not be denied an appropriate remedy because the right sought to be enforced is not of a temporary nature. There can be no more objection to a court of law granting permanent relief by mandamus in an appropriate action, than there is to a court of equity granting relief in a proper case by a mandatory injunction. The cases of State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W. 91; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314; State ex rel. Rosenfeld v. Einstein, 46 N. J. L. 479; and People ex rel. National Cigar Co. v. Dulaney, 96 Ill. 503, cited by the appellant, are for the most part cases where, under the established facts, the right to the continuous or perpetual relief sought was not sufficiently clear to warrant the judgments prayed for."

J. T. W.

fendants filed answer setting up, among a number of other defenses, that the matters and things set out in the petition were not sufficient to justify or authorize the issuance of the writ of mandamus against them. After trial had, the court issued its peremptory writ, and the case, after motion for new trial was filed and denied, has been brought, on appeal, to this court for review.

Conceding that all claims made by plaintiffs are found in their favor, and all the other defenses presented by the defendants are adjudged against them, the determination of the issue presented by that portion of the answer of the defendants above noted, in our judgment, is conclusive of the entire proceeding.

Is the writ of mandamus available to plaintiffs to compel the defendants to furnish them, at all times, such timbers, props, and caps as are necessary to keep their working places in safe condition, and to require them to deliver the same at the face of their working places?

The statute relied upon by plaintiffs, and which, for the purpose of this hearing, is assumed to be valid, is found in the Session Laws of Oklahoma for the year 1909, at pages 383, 384, and is § 2 of article 1 of chapter 23, and reads as follows: "The mine foreman shall see that all miners in said mine are supplied at all times with such timbers, props, and cap pieces as are necessary to keep his working place in a safe condition. Such timber to be sawed square as near as possible, in proper length to fit the working place. All such timbers, props, and cap pieces shall be delivered at the face of the miners' working place in said mine by company men. Timbers in this section shall mean all wood to be used by said miner, and if from any cause, the timbers cannot be supplied where required, the said mine foreman shall instruct the person to vacate all said working places until supplied with the timber needed, and shall see that all water be drained or hauled out of all working places before the miner enters, and as far as practicable, kept dry while the miner is at work. The term, 'company men' as used in this act shall mean those employed regularly as day hands and paid by shift wages."

The penalty for the violation of any of these duties is made a misdemeanor. Under the foregoing statute, it will be noted that the timbers, props, and cap pieces which are to be furnished are such as are necessary to keep the miners' working place in a safe condition; and that the same are to be sawed square, as nearly as possible, and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of proper length to fit the working place. And that if from any cause the timbers cannot be supplied where required, it is made the duty of the foreman to instruct the persons to vacate the working places until supplied with the timber which is needed. It will be seen at a glance that the performance of the duties required by this act would be as varying in their measure, quantity, and necessity, as all the different conditions in the various mines might or would present; and that there is no definite, certain, specific act to be done, upon which the court may place its judicial finger and say that herein is a definite duty owed, and a thing to be done, which has been neglected. If any writ could be made effective, it would be essential to determine in every instance, first, whether or not there was a necessity for the props and timbers to keep any particular working place in a safe condition, and second, what should be considered to be the proper length and size to fit the working place, so as to make it safe; and these varying and uncertain elements would of necessity further depend, not upon a specific mandate of the law, but upon the judgment and opinion of the different mine operatives as they might differently view these things at the time, both from their actual contact at the time and place, as well as from their experience. The writ would therefore virtually make of the court an overseer of all these contingent and varying duties, which, from the nature of things, it could not assume. Furthermore, it is to be noted that the duty demanded to be performed is a continuing one, for it is sought to require defendants to furnish these props and timbers at all times.

That mandamus is not the proper remedy, and is not available in this class of cases, is, we believe, declared by all of the courts. The rule is stated in 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 724, as follows: "Mandamus is not an appropriate remedy to compel a general course of official conduct or a long series of continuous acts, as it is impossible for the court to oversee the performance of such duties. The proper function of a mandamus is to compel the doing of a specific thing; something which can be neither diminished nor subdivided." See 13 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 497; State ex rel. Hawes v. Brewer, 39 Wash. 65, 109 Am. St. Rep. 858, 80 Pac. 1001, 4 Ann. Cas. 197; Jackson v. Cochran, 134 Ga. 396, 67 S. E. 825, 20 Ann. Cas. 219; State ex rel. Star Pub. Co. v. Associated Press, 159 Mo. 410, 51 L.R.A. 151, 81 Am. St. Rep. 368, 60 S. W.

91; People ex rel. Lehmaier v. Interurban Street R. Co. 177 N. Y. 296, 69 N. E. 596; People ex rel. National Cigar Co. v. Dunaney, 96 Ill. 503; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314; Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ala. 498, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 So. 449.

The supreme court of Washington, discussing this question in the case of State ex rel. Hawes v. Brewer, 39 Wash. 65, 109 Am. St. Rep. 858, 80 Pac. 1001, 4 Ann. Cas. 197, says: "The demand is for a continuing course of action. The writ cannot be any more specific than the petition, and the writ, which must necessarily issue under a petition of this kind, and which was peremptorily issued, is no more effective than the statute. Each equally commands the officer to perform his duty. One is the announcement of the law by the lawmaking power; the other is the announcement of the law by the court. The remedy by mandamus contemplates the necessity of indicating the precise thing to be done. It is not adapted to cases calling for continuous action, varying according to circumstances. It is the office of mandamus to direct the will, and obedience is to be enforced by process for contempt. It is therefore necessary to point out the very thing to be done, and a command to act according to circumstances would be futile."

This case is distinguished from the case of Oklahoma City v. Oklahoma R. Co. 20 Okla. 1, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 651, 93 Pac. 48, in that therein there was a definite, specific, certain service to be performed, which was neither increased nor diminished nor rendered uncertain by the circumstances under which it was to be performed, and in such cases courts have held that the writ will issue.

The statute fixed its own sanction; it provided the violation of the act should be a misdemeanor. Such a trial is readily available in a court always open; while no court could keep a case open for months or, perhaps, years, to hear, from time to time, proceedings for contempt. Iron Age Pub. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 83 Ala. 498, 3 Am. St. Rep. 758, 3 So. 449.

And relators have a better and more available remedy within the statute than would be open to them through the writ. The decision of the courts are all against the use of the writ in a case of this kind.

The judgment of the trial court is accordingly reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to dismiss the same.

Turner, Ch. J., and Kane and Hayes, JJ., concur. Williams, J., absent.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

T. C. JOPLING

v.

BLUEFIELD WATERWORKS & IMPROVEMENT COMPANY, Plff. in Err.

(— W. Va. —, 74 S. E. 943.)

Water — public supply — rules — effect on contract.

1. The rules of a waterworks company, adopted for the government of its relations with its patrons, do not become parts of a contract between it and a patron, made in terms and upon conditions not contemplated by such rules and regulations, and radically different therefrom.

Same — adoption — mode.

2. Such rules and regulations, to be applicable and effective, must enter into the contract by express or implied adoption at its inception. They cannot be ingrafted upon a contract, complete in itself and independent of them, except by the assent of both parties.

Damages — punitive — basis for.

3. To sustain a claim for punitive damages, the wrongful act must have been done maliciously, wantonly, mischievously, or with criminal indifference to civil obligations. A wrongful act done under a bona fide claim of right, and without malice in any form, constitutes no basis for such damages.

(April 16, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Mercer County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful act of defendant in cutting off the water supply from plaintiff's storeroom. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sanders & Crockett for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Ross & Kahle and D. E. French for defendant in error.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On this writ of error, to a judgment against a waterworks company for damages for cutting the water off from plaintiff's storeroom, justification of the act com-

Headnotes by POFFENBARGER, J.

Note. — Right to shut off water from whole building because of one tenant's delinquency.

The earlier cases upon the question stated are treated in the note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33, at pages 107 et seq.

Since the compilation of that note but one case, aside from JOPLING v. BLUEFIELD plained of is asserted on the one side, and denied on the other, in the arguments to overthrow, and sustain the verdict, on the ground of sufficiency and insufficiency of the evidence, and as the basis for contentions respecting the propriety of rulings on instructions. Assuming the act to have been done without right, the motive of the defendant becomes an important inquiry in passing upon instructions respecting the award of punitive damages.

The plaintiff, occupying the ground floor of a certain building, had contracted with the defendant for a supply of water, and paid the rent therefor in advance, as required by a rule of the company. Another tenant having taken up his residence on the second floor of the same building, and refused to pay the water rent in accordance with the rule, the defendant cut off all the water from the building, whereupon this action was brought. The single service pipe, passing through the ground floor and on up to the second, was equipped with a cut-off, just above the spigot used by the ground floor tenant, and he gave the defendant permission to enter the room and there cut the water off from the second floor; but the appliance was such that any person could have turned the water on again without the knowledge of the company. Accordingly, it refused to turn it off there and continue the supply to the lower room, but offered to continue it, if the pipe should be disconnected above the spigot. This was not done, by either the tenant or the owner, and the water was cut off agreeably to notice of intent to do so, after demand for the rental from both tenant of the ground floor and the owner of the building.

The company's rules 1, 8, and 22 are relied upon for justification of the act complained of, as being reasonably within the legal definition of the term, and as having entered into and become a part of the contract. Rule 1 required the owner of the property in every case to sign a permit, subject to the rules of the company. Rule 8 reserved right to render the bill to the owner of the property for the entire supply of water thereto, in case of occupancy by more than one person and consumption of water by all through a single tap, and to look to the owner for the entire rent for all water used in the building, and gave notice of intention not to attempt to collect rent from tenants, unless hydrants and pipes should be so arranged and supplied with stop keys as to give the agents of the company perfect and absolute control over the supply to each individual at all times; and then to shut off the water from all, if any refused to pay. Rule 22 required all flat rate rentals to be paid three months in advance, and all meter rentals within one month after the rendition of the service, and reserved the right to cut off the water for noncompliance.

As the contract here involved was made with a single tenant, and not with the WATERWORKS & IMPROV. CO., seems to have passed directly upon the question. In that case, Cox v. Cynthiana, 123 Ky. 363, 96 S. W. 456, it was held that the regulation that when water shall be supplied to one or more parties through a single tap, the whole bill would be made to the owner of the estate, and that in case of nonpayment the water supply would be shut off notwithstanding one or more parties have paid their proportion of the cost of the supply,—was reasonable and valid, and warranted the city authorities in cutting off the whole supply of a building supplied through a single tap as against a tenant who had paid his rate to the city, the city returning or tendering back such payments, and there being other tenants in arrears. The decision was upon the ground that the single tap clause rendered the regulation valid, it being said that "in order to supply appellant [tenant who had paid], it would be necessary for the water to pass through the pipes which were also used by the other tenants, and which would have permitted them to have used the water therefrom without paying for it or complying with the city's regulations as to payment in advance. The court is of opinion that under these circumstances it was not an unreasonable regulation for the city to require that where the building is supplied through a single tap, all of the water that passed through that tap into that building should be paid for as a condition precedent to supplying water to any of its occupants."

The general subject, "Establishment and regulation of municipal water supply," is extensively treated in the note to State ex rel. Hallauer v. Gosnell, 61 L.R.A. 33. And for a treatment of the general question of discontinuing service to compel payment of water bills, see note to Mansfield v. Humphreys Mfg. Co. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 301.

As to right to compel property owner to pay for water furnished to former occupant of premises, see Linne v. Bredes, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 707, Covington v. Ratterman, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 923, and the note appended to Chicago v. Northwestern Mut. L. Ins. Co. 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 770. And as to right to discontinue service to compel payments of unpaid claim against former occupant, see note to Mansfield v. Humphreys Mfg. Co. 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 303.

As to validity of statute holding property owner liable for water furnished tenant, see note to East Grand Forks v. Luck, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 198.

And as to right of water company to refuse to deal with tenant, see note to Bourke v. Olcott Water Co. 33 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1015.

G. J. C.

owner of the building, as contemplated by the rules, the position assumed for the plaintiff in error is untenable. There was no contract with the owner, no written contract with anybody, nor an agreement by any person to pay for water furnished to persons other than himself. The plaintiff may have had knowledge of the company's rules. Conceding this, he knew equally well the company could make a special contract with him. His money had been accepted and the water furnished. If the agent who made the special contract had no authority to make it, restoration of the money, or a portion of it equal to the unearned rental, was a condition precedent to release from its obligation; and it was neither refunded nor tendered.

To say these rules became a part of the contract, under the circumstances, would permit them to be used for a purpose wholly different from that for which they were made and promulgated. They require the owner to obtain a permit and agree to be liable for all rentals accruing against his tenants. The owner might be willing thus to bind himself for some tenants, but not for others, and he has the right to assume, in case water is furnished to his tenant without such an agreement, that the company looks to the tenant for the rental. To begin a supply of water under such circumstances, and then attempt to apply and enforce the rule, works surprise, injustice, and hardship. The rules do not contemplate action of that sort. If they are so burdensome upon property owners, or so inconvenient to the company, as to create confusion or make trouble in their application and enforcement, the remedy is a revision of the rules, not to put in water without any reference to them and then attempt to apply them. As the contract here involved was a separate, single, and complete contract, not within nor under the rules, breach thereof by the company is clear, and the rules are not at all involved. Hence there is no occasion to say whether they are reasonable, and such as the company could lawfully prescribe and enforce.

The jury found a verdict for $126, reciting an allowance of $1 for actual damages and $125 for punitive damages. This finding and two instructions given by the court, over the objection of the defendant, on the subject of punitive damages, necessitate inquiry as to whether any evidence justifying a verdict for such damages was adduced. One of these instructions authorized the finding of such damages, if the jury should believe the action of the company was wilful, wanton, or in reckless disregard of the rights of the plaintiff; and the other instructed them not to find such damages unless defendant's action was malicious, oppressive, wanton, or wilful, or its conduct reckless. There is no evidence of any violence or reprehensible conduct on the part of the defendant. It merely demanded from the plaintiff and the owner of the property the payment of rental in advance for water to be supplied to Johnson, tenant of the second floor, who had refused to pay, declining further to furnish water for the first floor with the water cut off from the second, as proposed by the plaintiff, and then cut off the water from the building. Nothing in the evidence indicates the action of the company was oppressive in any peculiar sense. Ample opportunity had been given the plaintiff to secure water by paying a small amount for a short time that it did not justly owe and for the benefit of a third party. Had he paid this, he would no doubt have been entitled to recover it back. On the whole, the evidence indicates nothing more than a purpose on the part of the company to test the validity of its claim of the right, under the circumstances of the case, to compel such payment as it demanded, or to cut off the water on refusal thereof. Nothing indicates any intent beyond this. In other words, nothing indicates intention to cut off the water merely to injure the plaintiff, or to enforce a right and also injure the plaintiff otherwise than incidentally. The sole purpose was the assertion of a claim of right on the part of the defendant. Under such circumstances, there is no right to a verdict for exemplary or punitive damages. To justify the recovery of such damages, there must be evidence in some form of malice. It may consist of abusive language, violence, invasion of another's right with knowledge thereof, or some other circumstance from which malice can be implied. Fink v. Thomas, 66 W. Va. 487, 66 S. E. 650, 19 Ann. Cas. 571, states the rule as follows in an action for assault and battery: "In an action for assault and battery, punitive damages cannot be found unless the act is unjustifiable, wilful, wanton, and reckless, manifesting malice." The court has thus stated the principle or basis of the allowance of such damages. In the opinion in that case, Judge Brannon said: "All the books say that, to warrant punitive damages, there must be malice, oppression, or wanton, wilful, and reckless conduct. . . . There must be gross fraud, malice, oppression, or wanton, wilful, or reckless conduct, or criminal indifference to civil obligation." All the decisions of this court on the subject are to the same effect. Pollock on Torts, pp. 185, 186, marks the distinction. This author says punitive damages are such as are intended to express indignation at the defendant's wrong, and then proceeds as follows: "Damages awarded on this principle are called exemplary or vindictive. The kind of wrongs to which they are applicable are those which, besides the violation of a right or the actual damage, import insult or outrage, and so are not merely injuries, but injuriæ in the strictest Roman sense of the term." He then quotes the following as indicating the basis of such damages, from Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Arms, 91 U. S. 489, 23 L. ed. 374: "The tort is aggravated by the evil motive." Cooley on Torts, 3d ed. p. 1511, marks the distinction thus: "Motive generally becomes important only when the damages for a wrong are to be estimated. It then comes in as an element of mitigation or aggravation, and is of the highest importance." Numerous cases cited amply sustain the text.

In most of the opinions delivered by courts, and the text-books, the limits of the rule are defined by the principle of inclusion, stating what conduct will authorize recovery of such damages. In Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Prentice, 147 U. S. 101, 37 L. ed. 97, 13 Sup. Ct. Rep. 261, the court went beyond this and applied the principle of exclusion, saying: "In this court the doctrine is well settled that in actions of tort the jury, in addition to the sum awarded by way of compensation for the plaintiff's injury, may award exemplary, punitive, or vindictive damages, sometimes called smart money, if the defendant has acted wantonly or oppressively, or with such malice as implies a spirit of mischief or criminal indifference to civil obligations. But such guilty intention on the part of the defendant is required in order to charge him with exemplary or punitive damages." In Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Quigley, 21 How. 202, 16 L. ed. 73, a verdict was set aside for allowance of exemplary damages in the absence of malice, and the court said: "Whenever the injury complained of has been inflicted maliciously or wantonly, and with circumstances of contumely or indignity, the jury are not limited to the ascertainment of a simple compensation for the wrong committed against the aggrieved person. But the malice spoken of in this rule is not merely the doing of an unlawful or injurious act. The word implies that the act complained of was conceived in the spirit of mischief, or of criminal indifference to civil obligations." Sutherland on Damages, §§ 392, 393, reviewing the whole subject, shows the weight of authority to be in accord with these decisions as well as those of our own court. As there was no evidence of malice or intent to bring injury upon the plaintiff beyond what was necessarily incident to the assertion of the claim of right in good faith, it was improper to give any instruction on the subject of exemplary damages, other than one inhibiting the finding of any.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

A peremptory instruction to find for the defendant was properly refused for reasons stated. Instructions Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 10, predicated defense upon the rules of the company, were also properly refused, since the rules are in no way involved. Instructions Nos. 6 and 7, limiting the right of recovery to actual damages, should have been given, and the court erred in refusing them. Instruction No. 9, limiting recovery to $1, was properly refused, and the court erred in giving instruction No. 8, limiting the recovery to $1 for actual damages. The quantum of damage is a question for the jury, not for the court.

For the errors noted, the judgment will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

PENALOSA STATE BANK

v.

JAMES F. MURRAY, Impleaded, etc.,
App't.

(86 Kan. 766, 121 Pac. 1117.)

Will — devise — lien of existing judgment.

Where a will contains a provision purporting to devise real estate to several persons, followed by a direction that it be

Headnote by MASON, J.

Note. — Conversion by directing sale after devising land.

There seem to be very few cases in which the effect, upon the operation of the doctrine of equitable conversion, of a direct gift of property to the persons who are to receive the proceeds of its sale, has been expressly considered. As the doctrine of equitable conversion is not a fixed rule of law, but proceeds upon equitable principles, so that its application is somewhat affected by the connection in which it is invoked, the ultimate question involved in sold by the executor and that the proceeds be divided equally among them, the right with respect to such property acquired by one of them is subject to the lien of a judgment existing against him at the time of the testator's death.

(March 9, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Reno County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to enjoin the sale of the interest of a devisee in certain real estate which had been transferred to the plaintiff bank. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. S. Lewis, with Mr. W. G. Fairchild, for appellant.

Messrs. F. F. Prigg and C. M. Williams for appellee.

Mason, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Samuel Sallee died January 20, 1909, owning the tract of land hereafter referred to. He left a will, all the material part of which, aside from the appointment of executors, was comprised in these two paragraphs:

"I devise bequeath and give to my beloved children, Adresta Blanchet, Ellen Moore, Mary Devoe, Delilah Hafstrom, Emma Murrah and John J. Sallee all of my Homestead located on the S. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ Sec. 28 Town 26 Range 9 West Reno Co. Kans. To be disposed of by appraisalment or Sale each of the following decisions has been indicated in the statement thereof, wherever the report of the case has made it possible to do so:

A conclusion directly opposite to that in PENALOSA STATE BANK v. MURRAY was reached in Robison v. Botkin, 181 Ill. 182, 54 N. E. 915, where a will provided: "The remainder of my property, both real and personal, to be equally divided amongst my beloved children [naming them] deducting, however, from the share of either any obligation or indebtedness they may owe the estate. In case the heirs can agree to divide the real estate I desire that they do so. If this cannot be done, it is my desire and wish that the executor sell the land,"—it was held that as the duty enjoined upon the executor to sell and distribute the proceeds was an absolute one, there was an equitable conversion by the will of real into personal property, and therefore that the children took no title to the land which was the subject of levy and sale. With reference to the feature of the case which brings it within the scope of this note, the court said: "It is contended, however, that by the third clause of the will, the land is in terms devised to Ira Botkin and the other four children of the testator therein named, and that that clause should prevail over the subsequent one in conflict with it. It is a cardinal rule that the entire will should be construed together and be made to harmonize, and effect be given to every part, if possible; and that the intention of the testator as expressed in the will should be ascertained and carried into effect. We find no necessary conflict between the two clauses. It is evident from the third clause that the testator intended that the indebtedness of any one of his children to the estate should be deducted from his share of the estate, and that they should thus be made equal; and from both the clauses together, that the division and distribution should be made in personal property altogether, unless they agreed among themselves that as to the land they would take it as land."

In Wayne v. Fouts, 108 Tenn. 145, 65 S. W. 471, in which the question before the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court was whether the share of a beneficiary who had died before the sale took place passed as real property to her heirs, or to her husband as personalty, it was held that under the terms of the will, which follow: "I will, devise, and bequeath all the balance of my property, real and personal to [certain persons]. . . . Said property, real and personal, . . . shall be sold to the best advantage and on such terms as my executors shall deem advisable, and the proceeds paid over to the devisees and legatees hereinafter indicated,"—an equitable conversion took place at the time of the testator's death, notwithstanding the fact that in the disposing clause testator spoke of the property dealt with as both "real and personal" and the fact that the legal title and the beneficial interest passed to the same persons by the terms of the will, the court saying: "It is true that, in the disposing clause, he speaks of the property dealt with as both 'real and personal,' and that he gives a definite undivided part thereof to each of the beneficiaries, yet in the next sentence he provides that all of 'said property, real and personal, shall be sold' by his executor, and that the 'proceeds [be] paid over' to those indicated. If it be conceived that the two provisions are in conflict, the last named, being subsequent in position, will prevail.

. . . It certainly was not contemplated that the beneficiaries should take and hold the property in specie, but, on the contrary, that they should only receive the proceeds of its sale in money. . . . The fact that the legal title and the beneficial interest passed to the same persons by the terms of the will did not, of itself, prevent a conversion; for, notwithstanding that fact, it is entirely obvious that the testator intended the executor to convert the land into money; and that intention, being lawful, must prevail, unless and until it shall appear that those benefited made an election to retain the realty as such, thereby affecting as equitable reconversion. The coincidence of the legal title and beneficial interest in the same individuals until sale could be made, was a part of the testamentary scheme, and so long as they acquiesced in and all moneys Received from Such disposition to be divided equally among the aboved Persons or their legal heirs.

"All the Rest and Residue of my Estate Real & Personal & mixed of which I shall die seized & possessed or to which I shall be entitled at my decease I give devise and bequeath to be equally divided among my above named children or their legal heirs."

Prior to the death of the testator, James F. Murray obtained a judgment against Emma Murray, under her present name of Emma Corley, which is still in force. In June, 1909, Mrs. Corley, transferred to the Penalosa State Bank all her rights of every character acquired under the will. In August, 1909, Murray caused an execution to be issued upon his judgment, under which he sought to sell the interest of Mrs. Corley in the land described, claiming that at the death of her father she had become the owner of an undivided one sixth thereof, and that the lien of his judgment at once attached thereto. The bank procured an injunction enjoining the sale upon the ground that under the will Mrs. Corley acquired no title to the real estate, but merely a right to a share of the proceeds of its sale, which was to be made by the executors. Murray appeals.

Ordinarily, where land is directed by a will to be sold, the proceeds to be divided among several persons, it is regarded as converted into personalty at the instant of death, upon the principle that equity regards that which ought to be done as al-

the provision as made, the duty of converting the land into money rested upon the executor, and the notional change of the character of the property was effective for all purposes of transmission and descent. To hold that such coincidence of itself defeated the equitable conversion would be to destroy the most important feature in the scheme of the will, and reverse the universally acknowledged rule that the expressed intention of the testator must control, when not in contravention of some principle of law or sound public policy."

On the other hand, in Eneberg v. Carter, 98 Mo. 647, 14 Am. St. Rep. 664, 12 S. W. 522, where testator directed his residuary estate to be equally divided between his children, adding: "I desire that my executor will dispose of all of my real estate as soon as it can be done without loss to my estate,"—it was held that the fee not being devised to the executor, either directly or by necessary implication, it remained in the heirs at law, both by the devise to them as well as by the statute of descents, until it should be devested by a sale by the executor under the terms of the will; that until such sale no conversion could occur; and therefore that the son had such an interest in the land pending the exercise of the power of sale as was subject to levy and sale under an execution.

In Wood's Estate, 9 Pa. Co. Ct. 429, in which the ultimate question was as to the devolution of the share of a deceased beneficiary, the testator gave his residuary estate, both "real and personal," to his children and grandchildren, further giving his executors a power of sale, and authorizing and directing them "to have an appraisement of my estate made as soon as possible after my death, and that the Delaware Rolling Mill property may be taken at the appraisement by either of my said sons, the eldest having the first choice and so on down to the youngest, and if not taken by either of them then to be sold," it was held that, read in connection with what precedes, and especially in view of the clear gift, with appropriate words of inheritance, of the real estate, as real estate, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) contained in the residuary clause, the clause last above quoted would not be held to work a conversion.

In Mellen v. Banning, 72 Hun, 176, 25 N. Y. Supp. 542, where a testator devised all his real estate to his wife and children, and gave his executors a power of sale for the purposes of a division or distribution, or for any other purpose that they in their judgment should think proper, it was held that there was no equitable conversion of the land into personalty out and out, and that the power was no bar to an action for partition.

In Re Bingham, 127 N. Y. 296, 27 N. E. 1055, it was held that the language used in a will by which the testator gave the residue of his estate to his "heirs and next of kin in the same portions in which" it "would be divided or distributed" in case of his death intestate, directed it to be distributed and paid in cash in five years from his decease, and for that purpose gave to the executors a power of sale, did not import that the testator intended the real should be treated as personal property; but that the contrary was fairly indicated by his giving the property to his heirs as well as the next of kin, to be divided as if no will was made.

But in Smith's Estate, 4 Phila. 181, where a testator in one item of his will devised his estate, real and personal, to his children, their heirs and assigns forever, share and share alike, and in another item empowered his executors to sell and convey such parts of his estate as they might deem necessary for the payment of his debts, or to secure a fund for the support and education of his children, it was held that the legal estate did not vest in the children by the terms of the will, but that the direction to sell worked a conversion, broke the descent, and vested the legal estate in the executors.

Where the power to sell real estate specifically devised is discretionary, the doctrine of equitable conversion will not operate constructively to convert the real estate into money as of the time of the death of testator, so as to prevent a mechanics' lien attaching thereto before the execution of ready accomplished, and the beneficiaries are conceived as taking personal property, instead of real estate. In that situation the doctrine has often been held to prevent the land being taken in execution upon a judgment against one of the legatees (9 Cyc. 851, 852), although that application of the rule is refused in Indiana (Comer v. Light, — Ind. —, 93 N. E. 660, Id. 94 N. E. 325). A distinction is sometimes made where the sale is directed to be postponed until the happening of some event, as until the death of the holder of a life interest. The cases bearing especially on that feature of the matter collected in a note in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 65, 69, illustrate the conflict of opinion upon other phases as well. A distinction has been made between a devise to an executor, with directions to sell and divide the proceeds, and the conferring on him of a mere naked power of sale, with directions to execute it in that manner. See Williams v. Lobban, 206 Mo. 399, 104 S. W. 58, and cases there cited. It is not necessary to attempt to reconcile or to choose between the various views that have received judicial support. The theory of equitable conversion is a fiction invented to promote justice by carrying out the purpose of the testator, and it should be applied with that purpose in view. We think that here, upon a consideration of the entire instrument, it is evident that the testator intended that upon his death his children should become owners of the land devised, that they did so, and that the judgment lien attached to the interest of Mrs. Corley.

This case differs from any of those in which the provision of a will directing the sale of real estate has been held to effect an equitable conversion, in this: Here the testator expressly devised the land to the persons who are to receive the proceeds. While he may be regarded as having given a power of sale to his executors, with directions to exercise it, he gave them nothing more. He not only omitted explicitly to vest the title in them, he explicitly vested it in his son and daughters. His purpose in this regard was not expressed casually or incidentally, but in such a way as to characterize it as the matter holding the first place in his thoughts. The only question is how far his language in this regard is to be regarded as modified by what followed. The inquiry is, Just what did he mean by the addition, "To be dis-the power, and to its proceeds thereafter (Ness v. Davidson, 49 Minn. 469, 52 N. W. 46); or so as to affect the rights of persons claiming through a deceased legatee. (Re Tatum, 169 N. Y. 514, 62 N. E. 580).

And in Re Sollday, 175 Pa. 114, 34 Atl. 548, where a will provided: "All the estate, real and personal, of which I may die seized, possessed, or entitled to, I give, devise, and bequeath to my four children," and appointed executors "with full power to settle up my estate. But my real estate shall not be sold until ten years after my death,"—it was held that as the power of sale given the executors was purely discretionary, and there being no bequest of the proceeds of sale specifically as such, and hence no implication of a necessity to sell for that purpose, there was no conversion; and therefore that the share of a devisee was subject to the lien of judgment against him.

And in Sheridan v. Sheridan, 136 Pa. 14, 19 Atl. 1068, where testator provided as follows: "I direct that all my estate, real, personal, and mixed (except as hereinbefore disposed of), and all the rest, residue, and remainder thereof, of whatsoever kind, and wheresoever situate, shall be divided into four equal shares or portions; and I give, devise, and bequeath unto," etc., and further authorized and empowered his executors to sell and dispose of the whole or any portion of his real and personal property "if they find it necessary to do so in order to make a fair and equitable division of my estate," it was held that the power of sale, being contingent, worked no such conversion as to preclude the maintenance of a bill for partition.

So also, in Dunshoe v. Dunshoe, 234 Pa. 550, 83 Atl. 422, where a testator directed his residuary estate to be divided among his children, and further provided: "My executors may sell my real estate and make deeds to the purchasers, or divide the whole or what remains after this between my heirs," it was held that as the direction to sell was not absolute, and as there was no necessity therefor to carry out the provision of the will, and as there was nothing in the will to indicate an intention that the real and personal estate should be so blended as to create a fund to be bequeathed entirely as money, there was no such conversion of the realty as to preclude the maintenance of a bill for partition.

There are a number of instances involving the question of equitable conversion in which a direct gift of property was followed by a provision for its sale, but in which the fact of such gift seems to have played no part in the conclusion reached. Some of these are appended as being of possible interest in this connection.

In Talbot v. Snodgrass, 124 Iowa, 681, 100 N. W. 500, where the ultimate question was as to the rights of legatees under a will by which testator devised and bequeathed the remainder of his estate, real and personal, to his children, and in a subsequent paragraph provided: "If I should die seized of any real estate I authorize by executor or executors to sell the same at public or private sale as may be deemed best by him, and to execute conveyances therefor, and to posed of by appraisement or Sale and all moneys Received from Such disposition to be divided equally among the aboved Persons or their legal heirs?" The use of the word "or" suggests that by "appraisement" he may have meant a partition by agreement, the respective shares to be made equal by appraisement. Assuming, however, that "or" should be read "and," the intention being that the sale should be made by the executors, the result is much the same. Even on the theory of an equitable conversion, the persons among whom the proceeds were to be divided, being the same persons who were entitled to the property if it were regarded as real estate, had a right by unanimous agreement to accept it in kind, and thus avoid a sale. 9 Cyc. 855. They could therefore by united action have divided the land, or sold it themselves and divided the money. The sole restraint placed upon them by the will, the only restriction that left their relation to the land short of a full ownership, was this: No one or more of them—fewer than all—could maintain an action for partition, and by that means compel either a division in kind or a judicial sale. Unless the par-divide the proceeds as herein provided equally among my children after paying my debts," it was held that, for the purpose of determining the validity of a limitation over, the case would be regarded as relating entirely to the distribution of personal property.

In Fisher v. Banta, 66 N. Y. 468, where testator by his will directed his executors, after his youngest child should arrive at the age of twenty-three, to divide his real estate equally between two sons, and by codicil directed his executrix to sell and dispose of all his real estate, it was held that such direction operated as a conversion of the real estate into personalty from the time of testator's death; and therefore that upon the death of a son before actual sale his interest passed to his personal representatives.

In Green v. Johnson, 4 Bush, 164, where a testator provided: "All the rest and residue of my estate, not otherwise directed, I devise and require to be equally divided among my three above-named daughters," and further directed his executors to sell and convey all his lands, with certain exceptions, it was held that the will made an equitable conversion of the realty into money, and therefore that, upon the death of a legatee, her interest in the land was personalty, to which her administrator was entitled.

In Goldsmith v. Cone, 7 Ky. L. Rep. 520, where a testatrix devised her estate to her husband for life, and provided that after his death it should be divided into two portions "which are given, devised, and 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ties in interest should agree otherwise, a sale would have to be made by the executors. On account of this limitation, their control of the land fell by so much short of complete and absolute dominion. This was not enough to prevent their being properly regarded as the owners of the land. Holding under a will which in so many words devised it to them, their enjoyment of the devise being burdened by only so slight a condition, they could not fairly be said to have no title or interest in it.

The statute makes a judgment a lien upon the "real estate" of the debtor (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 6011 [Code Civ. Proc. § 416]), and that phrase includes "lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interest therein, equitable as well as legal." Gen. Stat. 1909, § 9037, subd. 8. We think the equitable if not the legal title to the land was in the testator's children, that the judgment was a lien upon Mrs. Corley's interest, and that by a sale thereunder her rights and obligations would be transferred to a purchaser.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to deny the injunction against the sheriff's sale.

bequeathed in this my will as follows," and further directed a sale of all her real and personal estate "to secure a division and distribution thereof as in this section of my will provided," it was held that the gift was in equity one of personalty, and not of land, and therefore that upon the death of one of the remaindermen his portion passed as personalty.

In Shaw v. Chambers, 48 Mich. 355, 12 N. W. 486, where testator, after making a provision for his wife and any children that they might have, further directed that for the more efficient execution of the provisions of his will and for the purpose of securing a larger income for the beneficiaries, the property of the estate should be exchanged by the executor for money or interest-bearing securities, etc., it was held that the direction worked an absolute conversion for the purposes of the will; but did not render realty personal property so as to give equity jurisdiction of a controversy between one claiming it through a legatee and one claiming as heir at law of the decedent.

In Dundas's Appeal, 64 Pa. 325, where a testator provided: "All the remainder of my estate, real, personal, and mixed, I order and direct to be divided into 40 equal parts or shares, which I give and devise as follows;" and further gave to his executors full power and authority to sell the whole or any part of his estate, it was said, obiter, that the effect of such a power of sale was to convert the realty into personalty, leaving the legatees but an interest in the proceeds.

E. S. O.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COMMONWEALTH OF KENTUCKY,
Appt.,
v.

PETER PAUL APKINS.

(148 Ky. 207, 146 S. W. 431.)

Jurisdiction — venue — murder — act done in another state.

The courts of one state have no jurisdiction to try one for the murder of a person who dies there as the result of an act done in another state after the performance of which the deceased removes from one state to the other.

(May 7, 1912.)

APPPEAL by the Commonwealth from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jessamine County sustaining a demurrer to an indictment charging defendant with murder. Affirmed.

Note. — Jurisdiction of homicide where mortal wound is inflicted in one state or country and death occurs in another.

As to locality of crime committed by shooting or striking across state boundary, see note to State v. Hall, 28 L.R.A. 59.

At common law it was doubtful whether the killing of one who died in England of a blow received in foreign parts, and vice versa, could have been inquired of. But Parliament interposed, and put the question to rest by passing the statute of 2 Geo. II. chap. 21, which provides that when the stroke has been given in England and the death occurs out of England, or the reverse, the killing may be inquired of in that part of England where either the death or stroke shall happen respectively. 1 East, P. C. 366.

And now in England: "If a person is feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt upon the sea or at any place out of England or Ireland, and dies of such stroke, etc., in England or Ireland, or, being feloniously stricken, etc., in England or Ireland, dies of the same at sea or at any place out of England or Ireland, the offender, whether principal or accessory, may be indicted in the county or place in England or Ireland in which the death, stroke, poison, or hurt happened." 9 Laws of England (Halsbury) 289, citing offenses against the person act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. chap. 100), § 10. But the foregoing law has no application where the injury which causes death is inflicted upon a foreigner, outside of the jurisdiction of the King, by another foreigner. Reg. v. Lewis, 7 Cox, C. C. 277, Dears. & B. C. C. 182, 3 Jur. N. S. 525, 28 L. J. Mag. Cas. N. S. 104, 5 Week. Rep. 572; Reg. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q. B. 425, per Lord Russell of Killowen, Ch. J., at p. 430, 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 227.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James Garnett, Attorney General, and B. A. Crutcher, for the Commonwealth:

If one puts into operation a force, potion, or agent in another state or country on any person, for the purpose of producing death, and if said force, potion, or agent does not spend its force, and become latent or cease to operate upon said person before coming within our jurisdiction, it is a continuous offense and follows the one assaulted so long as the force or agent remains active.

Jackson v. Com. 100 Ky. 269, 66 Am. St. Rep. 336, 38 S. W. 422, 1091; Com. v. Parker, 108 Ky. 679, 57 S. W. 484; Com. v. Van Tuyl, 1 Met. (Ky.) 1, 71 Am. Dec. 455; Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 110; 12 Cyc. 208; Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 1, 100 Am. Dec. 89; Simpson v. State, 92 Ga. 41, 22 L.R.A. 248, 44 Am. St. Rep. 75, 17 S. E. 984; State v. Hall, 114 N. C. 909,

In Parmele's Wharton on the Conflict of Laws, § 825 a, it is stated that the general principle is that an offense is deemed to be committed in the jurisdiction in which the acts, or series of acts, of which it is predicated, culminate or take effect.

But the mere fact that the death occurred in a particular state does not, in general, confer jurisdiction of the offense upon that state; nor withdraw the case from the jurisdiction of the state where the fatal blow was inflicted. Ibid. § 825 b.

"It is undoubtedly true that the courts of the latter place [place of death] do sometimes have jurisdiction. But we are satisfied that when this is so it is not because the crime is to be regarded as having been committed there, but because some rule of law, statutory or otherwise, expressly confers such jurisdiction. The modern and more rational view is that the crime is committed where the unlawful act is done, and that the subsequent death, while it may be sufficient to confer jurisdiction, cannot change the locality of the crime." State v. Kelly, infra.

It is well settled that the courts of the state where the mortal wound is inflicted, although the death occurs in another state, may indict and punish the criminal. State v. McCoy, 8 Rob. (La.) 545, 41 Am. Dec. 301; State v. Foster, 7 La. Ann. 255, reaffirmed in 8 La. Ann. 290, 58 Am. Dec. 678; State v. Garrison, 147 Mo. 548, 49 S. W. 508; Roberson v. State, 42 Fla. 212, 28 So. 427; Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 495.

And the following cases, as additional authority in support of the rule, are sufficiently set out in Com. v. APKINS: United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247; Guiteau's Case, 10 Fed. 161; Green v. State, 66 Ala. 40, 41 Am. Rep. 744; Com. v. Ball, 126 Ky. 542, 104 S. W. 325; State v. Kelly, 76 Me. 331, 19 Am. Rep. 620, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 343; Stout v.

28 L.R.A. 59, 41 Am. St. Rep. 822, 19 S. E. 602.

Mr. Alpha Hubbard, for appellee:

The crime of felonious homicide consists in the striking of the deadly blow, and the subsequent death of the deceased constitutes no part of the crime itself.

Com. v. Ball, 126 Ky. 542, 104 S. W. 325; State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 499.

The offender had to be tried in the county where the crime was committed.

Rex v. Hargrave, 5 Car. & P. 170; United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247; Green v. State, 66 Ala. 40, 41 Am. Rep. 744; Stout v. State, 76 Md. 317, 25 Atl. 299, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 398; People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 637; State v. Gessert, 21 Minn. 369; State v. Kelly, 76 Me. 331, 49 Am. Rep. 620, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 343; Ex parte McNeeley, 36 W. Va. 84, 15 L.R.A. 229, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831, 14 S. E. 436; State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 500; Robbins v. State, 8 Ohio St. 166.

State, 76 Md. 317, 25 Atl. 299, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 398; State v. Gessert, 21 Minn. 369.

Under Florida Rev. Stat. § 2360, the circuit court of the county in which the homicide is commenced has jurisdiction, although it is consummated in another state. Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 So. 822.

And the same conclusion is reached in State v. Bowen, 16 Kan. 475, upon an indictment for murder, where the statute was silent upon the question of jurisdiction where the wound is given in the state and death ensues without, or the reverse. It was said: "It seems to us . . . reasonable to hold that as the only act which the defendant does towards causing the death is in giving the fatal blow, the place where he does that is the place where he commits the crime, and that the subsequent wanderings of the injured party, uninfluenced by the defendant, do not give an ambulatory character to the crime; at least, that those movements do not, unless under express warrant of the statute, change the place of offense; and that while it may be true that the crime is not completed until death, yet that the death simply determines the character of the crime committed in giving the blow, and refers back to and qualifies that act."

Where the mortal wound was inflicted in Oklahoma territory it was held in Moran v. Territory, 14 Okla. 544, 78 Pac. 111, that the crime was committed there, and that the death, which occurred in Indian territory, merely determined the character of the crime, that is, referred back to and qualified the homicidal act, so that the jurisdiction of the crime was properly laid in Oklahoma territory. To the same effect see Havill v. United States, 5 Okla. Crim. Rep. 334, 115 Pac. 119, appeal dismissed in 113 Pac. 991.

But in an early case in Virginia, Com. v. Linton, 2 Va. Cas. 205, it was held that 39 L.R.A. (N.E.)

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Peter Paul Apkins was indicted by the grand jury of Jessamine county for the wilful murder of Lizzie Young Apkins by administering poison to her and also by striking her. While the indictment charged that the offense was committed in Jessamine county, it was conceded by the commonwealth that the evidence would show that the blows were struck and the poison administered in Cincinnati, Ohio; and therefore the case was submitted on an agreed statement of facts to the court with a view of determining whether or not the Jessamine circuit court had jurisdiction. Upon consideration the court entered the following order: "It is admitted by the attorney for the commonwealth that the blows inflicted and poison administered that caused the death of Lizzie Young Apkins were inflicted and administered to the said Lizzie Young Apkins in the city where a person was fatally stabbed in Virginia and died in another state, he could not be tried for the murder in the former state. Now, however, this is not the law, as statute, Virginia Code, 3637, gives the courts of Virginia jurisdiction.

So it was held in United States v. Bladen, 1 Cranch, C. C. 548, Fed. Cas. No. 14,605, where the mortal stroke was given in the county of Alexandria, District of Columbia, and the death happened in Maryland, that the United States circuit court of the District of Columbia was without jurisdiction of the crime as homicide, since it was not completed in that county, but it possessed jurisdiction over the offense as an assault and battery.

And in Com. v. Linton, supra, while it was held that the defendant could not be tried in Virginia for the crime for which he was indicted, he could be examined, indicted, and tried for the felonious stabbing in the county where the blow was inflicted.

Where the indictment charged the defendant with inflicting the mortal blows in New York, and the death ensued in New Jersey, the court held that no act was done in that state by the defendant, inasmuch as he sent no missile or letter or message that operated as an act within the state, but the coming of the party injured into the state afterwards was his own voluntary act, and in no way the act of the defendant; and that therefore the prisoner was not triable in the courts of that state, there being no statute applicable to such a case. State v. Carter, 27 N. J. L. 499. Vredenburg, J., said: "It is said that if we do not take jurisdiction, the defendant will go unpunished, inasmuch as, the party injured not dying in New York, he could not be guilty of murder there. But New York may provide by law for such cases, and if she does not, it is their fault, and not ours. The act done is against their sovereignty, of Cincinnati, in the state of Ohio, but the death resulted from the same in the state of Kentucky within a year and a day thereafter. In view of said admission by the attorney for the commonwealth, it is the opinion of the court that this court does not have jurisdiction and for that reason the demurrer is sustained, to which the commonwealth excepts and prays an appeal to the court of appeals, which is granted."

The commonwealth admits that if the agency or means used, to wit, the poison which appellee is alleged to have employed to do death, did all of its active work while the deceased remained in the state of Ohio, the offense would in legal contemplation have been committed in that state, and that the courts of this commonwealth would have no jurisdiction. It is further admitted that it is not enough to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of this commonwealth that death resulted from an unlawful act occurs in this state. But it is insisted that where one puts into operation a force in another state, having in view an unlawful purpose, and that such force does not manifest itself upon the person affected until such person has come within the jurisdiction of this state, but that it does thereafter manifest itself in this state by producing death to the one affected thereby, then the party setting said force in operation has committed a crime in contemplation of law within this commonwealth.

Applying this principle to the facts in the case at bar, it is the contention of the commonwealth that although appellee administered the poison in Cincinnati, in the state of Ohio, inasmuch as it did not take effect and produce death until after the victim came to Kentucky, in legal contemplation the poisoning was in effect, if not in fact, done in this state, and the courts of this commonwealth have jurisdiction. It is admitted that no authority directly in point has been found in support of this theory. But it is urged that the case of Jackson v. Com. 100 Ky. 239, 66 Am. St. Rep. 336, 38 S. W. 422, 1091, which was cited with approval in Com. v. Parker, 108 Ky. 679, 57 S. W. 484, illustrates and supports this position. In that case two young men administered cocaine to Pearl Bryan in Cincinnati, Ohio; and, believing her to be dead, brought her over into Kentucky to a point back of Newport, and there severed her head from her body. It developed that she was not dead, so, of course, death was not due to the cocaine administered to her, although that of itself might later have caused death. But the immediate cause of death in her case was the severing of her head from her body. Hence the crime for which the defendants in that case were tried was the murder of this unfortunate girl in Kentucky, and not for the taking of her life by administering cocaine in Ohio.

Reliance is also had upon the case of Com. v. Van Tuyl, 1 Met. (Ky.) 1, 71 Am. Dec. 455. Van Tuyl was indicted for obtaining money by false pretense. It developed upon the trial that, while in the state of Ohio with a negro whom he represented to be a runaway slave belonging to him, he sold the negro to one Jenkins for $500, which was to be paid when they arrived in Kentucky. After arriving in Kentucky, Jenkins paid the $500 and took a receipt, and if she does not choose to avenge it, it is not for us to step in and do it for them."

It has been held that the legislature of the state may extend its jurisdiction to embrace a case where the mortal injuries are inflicted without the state and the death occurs within. Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 1, 100 Am. Dec. 89; Tyler v. People, 8 Mich. 320; State v. Caldwell, 115 N. C. 794, 20 S. E. 523; Ex parte McNeely, 36 W. Va. 84, 15 L.R.A. 226, 32 Am. St. Rep. 831, 14 S. E. 436.

State v. Carter, supra, however, sustains the point that the legislature is not invested with the ability to pass a law to punish foreign murder where the death of the person slain happens within the jurisdiction of the state. But in Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 495, Chief Justice Beasley says that the view indicated by the justice in delivering the opinion in State v. Carter was "entirely extra-judicial," and he commends the courts sustaining statutes that give jurisdiction to states where the death may happen to take place.

And in Com. v. Macloon, 101 Mass. 1, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

100 Am. Dec. 89, Mr. Justice Gray, in answering the argument against the exercising of jurisdiction by the courts of the state where the death may happen, said: "The most plausible form of the argument against jurisdiction is, that the coming into the state is the act not of the wrongdoer, but of the injured person, and therefore should not subject the former to the jurisdiction, merely because the latter happens to die there. But it is the nature and the right of every man to move about at his pleasure, except so far as restrained by law; and whoever gives him a mortal blow assumes the risk of this, and in the view of the law, as in that of morals, takes his life wherever he happens to die of that wound; and may be there punished if the laws of the country have been so framed as to cover such a case."

And, of course, a statute like that presented in Green v. State, 66 Ala. 40, 41 Am. Rep. 744, which is sufficiently set out in Com. v. Atkins, is a proper exercise of legislative power and violative of no constitutional provision.

E. M. S.

in which Van Tuyl covenanted that he was the lawful owner of the negro, who was a slave for life. It developed that the negro was not a slave, but free. The lower court instructed the jury that, if the negro was sold and delivered to Jenkins in the state of Ohio, the defendant could not be convicted in this state. In reversing this ruling upon appeal here the court said: "The false pretense employed is only the means by which the offense is perpetrated. . . . The crime is not committed until the money is obtained. The fraud in this case was concocted in the state of Ohio, and the representations were there made which were designed to render it successful, but it became mature and took effect in this state; for here the scheme was consummated, the sale evidenced by writing, and the money obtained from the person defrauded. The crime was therefore committed in this state, and not elsewhere, and the defendant was properly indicted therefor in the county of Carroll, where the money was paid to him."

The gravamen of the offense in that case was obtaining money by false pretense. The transaction was had in Kentucky, although the scheme for carrying it out, as said by the court, was laid in Ohio.

In Com. v. Ball, 126 Ky. 542, 104 S. W. 325, this court had under consideration a question involving facts just the reverse of those here presented. In that case Ball and others were indicted by the grand jury of Bell county for killing Meade Cottrell. It was shown that the shooting occurred in this state, but that, after Cottrell was shot and wounded, he was put upon an engine and carried across the state line into Tennessee, where he died. It was insisted for the defendants that the Kentucky court was without jurisdiction, and the lower court adopted this view. The commonwealth appealed, and, upon consideration here, it was held that the lower court erred in instructing the jury to find for the defendants. The court in reaching this conclusion cited with approval the following excerpt from Robertson on Criminal Law, § 214: "At common law the state in which the mortal wound was given has jurisdiction in cases of homicide, so that, if a mortal wound be given in this state, and death ensues in another, the courts of this state have jurisdiction to try the offender; the going of the injured party into another state being his own voluntary act, and not the act of the defendant." The court also quoted from Bishop on Criminal Law, § 113, as follows: "The reader perceives that, according to these cases, the crime in felonious homicide consists in inflicting the blow, while the act of dying, which is performed by the injured person, does not constitute any part of it, or at least such a part as to lay the foundation for a jurisdiction over the offense. This accords with what was before held in England, that a homicide is committed in a county if the blow is inflicted in it, though the death takes place elsewhere." The opinion then concludes by stating that these citations from Robertson and Bishop are "correct statements of the law." They are, in fact, but declaratory of the common law, which declared that the offender had to be tried in the county where the crime was committed, and that the crime was committed where the blow was struck.

In Rex v. Hargrave, 5 Car. & P. 170, decided in 1831, one Richard Dodd was indicted for the crime of manslaughter in the county of Kent. The indictment charged that he assaulted and beat one James Cox in the county of Middlesex, and that Cox afterwards languished and died in the county of Kent. The court, in holding that the accused must be tried in the county of Middlesex, where the blows were struck, said: "The giving of the blows which caused the death constitutes the felony. The languishing alone, which is not any part of the offense, is laid in Kent. The indictment states that the prisoners were then and there present, aiding and abetting in the commission of said felony. That must, of course, apply to the parish . . . where the blows which constitute the felony were given."

In Alabama there is a statute giving the state jurisdiction in felony cases, although the injured party may die in another state. In Green v. State, 66 Ala. 40, 41 Am. Rep. 744, one Green was indicted for murder. The question of jurisdiction was raised, and the court, in disposing of the matter, said: "We need not rest the decision of this question, however, on this particular construction of the statute. Our view is that the crime of murder consists in the infliction of a fatal wound, coupled with the requisite contemporaneous intent or design, which legally renders it felonious. The subsequent death of the injured party is a result or sequence, rather than a constituent, elemental part of the crime. This principle is correct, we think, so far as affects the question of jurisdiction."

In Tennessee there is a statute requiring all criminal cases to be tried in the county in which the offense may have been committed, and the supreme court of that state in Riley v. State, 9 Humph. 646, held that the offense was committed at the place where the blow was struck, though the death may have occurred elsewhere; the court saying: "That [the blow] alone is the act of the party. He commits this act, and the death is only a consequence. Therefore, when the legislature enacts that the party shall be tried in the county where the offense may have been committed, they intended where the active agency of the perpetrator was employed."

In People v. Gill, 6 Cal. 637, the court held that the crime of murder is committed at the time when the fatal blow is struck.

In Stout v. State, 76 Md. 317, 25 Atl. 299, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 398, the accused was being tried for murder committed by poisoning. The poison was administered in Maryland, and the victim died in Pennsylvania. The question of jurisdiction was raised, and the court said: "In such case it is the law of Maryland that is violated, and not the law of the state where the death may happen to occur. By the felonious act of the accused, not only is there a great personal wrong inflicted upon the party assaulted or mortally wounded while under the protection of the law of the state, but the peace and dignity of the state where the act is perpetrated is outraged; and, though death may not immediately follow, yet, if it does follow as a consequence of the felonious act within the year, the crime of murder is complete. In inflicting the mortal wound then and there the accused expends his active agency in producing the crime, no matter where the injured party may languish, or where he may die, if death ensues within the time and as a consequence of the stroke or poison given. The grade and characteristics of the crime are determined immediately that death ensues, and that result relates back to the original felonious wounding or poisoning. The giving of the blow that caused the death constitutes the crime."

In State v. Gessert, 21 Minn. 369, the accused was indicted for the murder of one Savazy. The evidence showed that the wound which produced death was given in Minnesota, but the death occurred in Wisconsin. The court held that the death in Wisconsin was only a consequence of the act committed against the law of Minnesota, and that the courts of Minnesota had jurisdiction to try the case.

In State v. Kelly, 76 Me. 331, 49 Am. Rep. 620, 5 Am. Crim. Rep. 343, the same rule is announced.

In United States v. Guiteau, 1 Mackey, 498, 47 Am. Rep. 247, it was held that the supreme court of the District of Columbia had jurisdiction to try the accused, charged with the murder of James A. Garfield, although the latter died in New Jersey. The shot was fired in Washington. The death 59 L.R.A. (N.S.)

occurred in New Jersey. The supreme court, in an elaborate opinion, held that the crime was committed where the shooting was done.

Thus it appears that, not only at the common law, but in states where the question of jurisdiction is regulated by statute, courts have, with a degree of uniformity, held that the crime is committed at the place where the act is done which results in the injury or death; and that the prosecution for such act is properly conducted at the place where the act is done, and not where the death may occur. Here it is conceded that the assault was made and the poison administered in the city of Cincinnati, state of Ohio. At that time both the victim and the wrongdoer were in the state of Ohio. The wrong was done there. It was a completed transaction so far as the appellee was concerned, as much so as though he had shot her or otherwise inflicted upon her person a mortal wound, and, according to the well-recognized rule, the courts of that state alone have jurisdiction to punish the offense. The trial court correctly so held.

Judgment affirmed.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

CHRISTOPHER ROUSSEL

v.

JOSEPH B. DORNIER et al

(130 La. 367, 57 So. 1007.)

Voter — primary election — eligibility of candidate.

1. A Democratic parish committee has no power to pass upon the eligibility of candidates for public office, as they are not charged with judicial functions nor clothed with juridical power.

Same — testing right — party plaintiff.

2. If one who is ineligible has received the majority of votes in a primary election, his right to hold office cannot be tested in a suit brought by an unsuccessful candidate, Headnotes by BREAUX, Ch. J.

Note. — Power to determine eligibility to office of one nominated at primary election.

But two cases aside from ROUSSEL v. DORNIER have been found which have considered the question of the power to determine eligibility to office of one nominated at a primary election.

In Fuller v. Corey, 18 Idaho, 558, 110 Pac. 1035, the county auditor refused to place on the official ballot a nominee under the direct primary, on the ground that as he had failed to file an expense account seeking to be declared entitled to the office, but the question of his eligibility must be tested in a suit brought in the name of the state.

3. As the Democratic parish committee is without legislative authority to decide question of eligibility, this court cannot order it to do so, and under the law regulating primaries this court is without authority to decide the question of eligibility of any candidate.

(March 11, 1912.)

APPPLICATION for writs of mandamus and certiorari to review the action of defendants in refusing to omit the name of Joseph B. Dornier from the primary ballot as candidate for the office of sheriff, and compel them to do so. Dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. R. Forman for relator.

Breaux, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Relator and three other citizens were candidates for the Democratic nomination for the office of sheriff of the parish of St. James. Two of the candidates, Emile Dickey and Louis Le Bourgeois, withdrew as candidates for the office prior to the 23d day of January last. There remained two candidates,—relator, Christopher Roussel, and Joseph B. Dornier.

The relator, Roussel, timely objected to the candidacy of the latter on the ground that he (Dornier) was a deputy registrar of voters, in the actual exercise of the duties of that office, and as such officer was in control of the registration of the parish of St. James; that he issued certificates of registration within three months previous to his becoming a candidate for the Democratic nomination of sheriff; that as Emile Dickey and Louis Le Bourgeois had withdrawn their candidacy before the 23d day of January, and as Dornier was ineligible for reason stated, he (Roussel) was the only eligible candidate.

Relator protested against the refusal of the Democratic committee to recognize him as the only candidate. Notwithstanding his protest, the committee permitted Joseph B. Dornier to become a candidate, and his name was accordingly printed on the official ballot, is substantially the statement of the relator for a writ of mandamus and certiorari; and, further, the complaint of relator is that, as Dornier was ineligible, he (Roussel) should have been declared the nominee by the committee, as he was the only eligible candidate, and that the refusal of the committee to grant his application to be thus declared was an illegal act on the part of the Democratic committee. He (Roussel) sought to have the alleged illegality corrected by applying to the district court for St. James parish.

Joseph B. Dornier filed an exception to within ten days after the date of the primary election, he was, by provision of the nomination law, ineligible to become a candidate for the office for which he was nominated. The court held that as such candidate had been duly and regularly certified by the canvassing board to the county auditor as having received the nomination of his party, the auditor was without power to adjudge such nominee ineligible, and issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing him to place such name on the official ballot as the nominee of his party. In rendering its opinion the court said: "The only question with which we have to deal at this time is that of the power of the county auditor to refuse to have the name of a candidate printed on the official ballot where he has been declared by the canvassing board to be the nominee of his party. On this question there can be but little doubt. The duty of the auditor is purely ministerial; he is vested with no judicial powers or functions in the matter. He cannot sit in judgment on the candidate, and, without a hearing, declare him guilty of a misdemeanor, and inflict the penalties. . . . It is clearly the duty of the auditor to perform the duties required of him by law, and until the candidate has been judicially declared ineligible to have his name placed upon the ticket, the auditor has but one duty to perform, and that is to cause the candidate's name to be printed on the official ballot along with all the other nominees for the respective offices. If the candidate has violated the law and is subject to its penalties, that must be determined in the orderly and due process of law."

In Whitaker v. Swanner, 121 Ky. 281, 89 S. W. 184, a mandatory injunction was asked to compel the removal from the official ballot of the name of the one accorded the nomination at the primary on the ground that he had obtained the certificate of nomination by the use of money and whisky, and so being guilty of bribery, he was, under the statute, excluded from office and suffrage. In affirming the dismissal of the action by the circuit court for want of jurisdiction, the court said: "We think the circuit court was also without jurisdiction to determine in this action the further question raised by the petition, viz., that in securing his nomination by the purchase of votes with money and whisky appellee Swanner disqualified himself for holding the office of sheriff, if elected, and forfeited his right to the nomination. If he secured votes at the primary election by bribery, and appellant in a contest before the county committee had made proof of that fact to the satisfaction of the commit-the jurisdiction of the court; this exception was sustained, and relator Roussel's suit dismissed on the 29th day of February, 1912. On the 2d day of March, 1912, this court, on relator's motion, ordered the papers to be forwarded in order to examine into the legality and validity of the proceedings. Whether the courts have jurisdiction to decide the question now at issue is now before us for decision.

As relates to form, relator has complied with every requirement; he has timely protested and applied to the court, setting forth the rights he claims.

In the absence of jurisdiction conferred by legislative action, the political committee, appointed under the statute regulating primary elections, are without the power, and the courts are without the jurisdiction, to determine who shall be the candidate or who shall not be the candidate because of the eligibility of the one and the ineligibility of the other. The question is limited to authority conferred or not conferred by the primary election law, and is not before the court under the remaining laws (unrepealed) relating to contested elections.

The committee has enumerated powers; but not one relates to the power of passing upon the eligibility of a candidate, and of directing that his opponent shall be the candidate. A candidate may protest and assert many rights before the committee; but his protest cannot be made to serve the purpose of compelling the committee to pass upon the eligibility of his opponent, to the end that he may be declared the only candidate.

tee, it would have been their duty to determine to what extent the fairness and validity of the primary was affected thereby, or whether appellee Swanner should have been refused the nomination as the Republican candidate for sheriff by reason thereof. The question of whether or not he was guilty of the offense of bribery in connection with the primary election cannot be collaterally inquired into, as here attempted, but can be determined in a direct proceeding and trial by jury under indictment.

"As appellant's right to have his name placed on the ballots and under the Republican party device is dependent upon whether he received at the hands of his party the nomination for the office of sheriff at the primary election, and the statements of his petition make it certain that the governing authority decided and declared that appellee Swanner was, in that election, nominated by the Republican party as their candidate for that office, it follows that the general demurrer to the petition should 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

To grant the protest here, the committee would have had to pass upon the ineligibility of the protestee, and at the same time rule that the protestant, a minority candidate, was the candidate. Such a declaration by the committee could only be made under the act to which it owes its existence. The committee not being invested with the power to pass upon the qualification of candidates, the courts are without jurisdiction to compel the committee to decide, or to assume jurisdiction of questions not within the committee's power to decide.

The candidate has certain personal rights, it is true; but they are not unlimited; at any rate, as relates to the eligibility of an opponent. The alleged ineligibility of the candidate raises a question in which the state is concerned. She cannot be entirely ignored. In her name, only, inquiry can be made into the eligibility of the one who seeks to be an officer. In case of ineligibility, in her name it may be ascertained whether the election is null, and that another election should be ordered, or whether the minority candidate was the legal candidate. It is not left to private action by private person. It must be sought by the state and private persons acting with the state. It does not lie with the committee to decide that a minority candidate shall be the local executive officer of the state, or, at any rate, not before a statute is adopted conferring the power of jurisdiction.

For reasons assigned, the order nisi is recalled and discharged, and relator's demand is denied and his petition dismissed.

have been sustained, and the action dismissed, as was adjudged by the lower court." Thus it would seem that the county committee would have had authority to adjudge as to the eligibility of the candidate on satisfactory proof alone of the facts alleged; and it would seem that the same proof ought to have been available in the action for injunction; otherwise, if a conviction cannot be had until after the election, and such nominee is successful, it will result either that the election will be declared void, or a minority candidate will be given the election, according as the statute may provide in such cases; either of which results could be avoided by having the question settled by the court before the election, when such question is presented. And the same might be said as to the result of the decision in ROUSSEL v. DORNIER, as it is apparent from that decision that power is vested nowhere to determine the eligibility of a nominee to office until after election, even though the non-eligibility is plainly disclosed. J. H. B.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

GERMAN UNION FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

FRED G. CLARKE COMPANY.

(116 Md. 622, 82 Atl. 974.)

Appeal — failure to raise question — statutory effect.

1. Failure to raise the question of the effect of failure to prove payment of premium in an action on an insurance policy is within a statute providing that in no case shall the appellate court decide any question which does not plainly appear to have been raised and decided below.

Insurance — cancellation — notice — sufficiency.

2. The mailing of a notice of an intention to cancel an insurance policy five days later, which is not received until two days after the mailing, is not, in case no notice of cancellation is given, sufficient to render valid the cancellation on the day named, under a provision in the policy permitting cancellation upon giving five days' notice thereof.

Same — tender of unearned premium — necessity.

3. A tender or return of the unearned premium is necessary to effect the cancellation of an insurance policy, under a provision in a policy providing that when the policy is canceled by the company it shall retain only the pro rata premium.

(December 6, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas of Baltimore City in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Arnold L. Davis and George A. Finch, for appellant:

Note. — From what time does notice of cancellation of fire insurance become effective.

As to necessity that notice of maturity of premiums or assessments sent through the mail be received, see note to Kavanaugh v. Security Trust & L. Ins. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 253.

On the question as to return of premium as condition of cancellation of insurance, see note to Davidson v. German Ins. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884.

As to waiver by the assured of the return of the premium upon a cancellation of the policy by the insurer, see note to Buckley v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889.

The majority of the fire policies used at present reserve the right to the parties to terminate the insurance at their option.

The usual provision for cancellation is that a certain number of days' notice must be given the insured of an intention on the part of the insurer to cancel the same.

The New York standard form of fire policy contains the following cancellation clause: "This policy shall be canceled at any time at the request of the insured; or by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation."

In the absence of express stipulation as to the required notice, it has been held that reasonable notice must be given. Karelsen v. Sun Fire Office, 16 N. Y. S. R. 239, 1 N. Y. Supp. 387; McLean v. Republic F. Ins. Co. 3 Lans. 421; Chadbourne v. German-American Ins. Co. 31 Fed. 533; and see Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 16 N. Y. S. R. 231, 1 N. Y. Supp. 384, where the reasons for this rule are forcibly presented, but which was reversed in 121 N. Y. 458, 8 L.R.A. 719, 24 N. E. 699.

But in Lipman v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 121 N. Y. 454, 8 L.R.A. 719, 24 N. E. 699, it was held that the cancellation of an insurance policy which provides that it may be terminated on notice, is effected eo instanti on notice given in good faith by the insurer, if no premium has been paid. To the same effect is Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. McKinnon, 59 Tex. 507.

In Mueller v. South Side F. Ins. Co. 87 Pa. 399, the policy contained a stipulation that for any cause "it shall be optional with the company to terminate the insurance after notice given the assured or his representative, of their intention to do so." The company gave notice that the policy was canceled for nonpayment of the premium. The court said: "The notice was sufficient, and the cancellation took effect from the service. Had the premium been tendered and refused, within a reasonable time, a question might exist which is not now in the case. There was no offer to pay."

In Cain v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 27 U. C. Q. B. 453, it was held, under a provision in the policy that, "if for any other cause the company shall so elect, it shall be optional with the company to terminate the insurance after notice given to the insured or his representatives of their intention to do so, in which case the company shall refund a ratable proportion of the premium," the notice to insured, together with a tender of the unearned premium, terminated the insurance. The trial court held that the notice and termination of the insurance could not be contemporaneous, that it was essential that some interval of time should elapse between the notice and termination of the risk; and the insured contended that the notice contemplated by the condition was a notice giving to insured a reasonable time to afford him an opportunity of effecting a new insurance previous to the termination of the defendants' policy; but the court said: "We cannot accede to that interpretation, for were we to do so we would be adding a term to the condition some-insurance policy which provides that it may be terminated on notice, is effected eo instanti on notice given in good faith by the insurer, if no premium has been paid. To the same effect is Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. McKinnon, 59 Tex. 507.

To make effective the written notice of cancellation sent by the insurer to the insured, it was not necessary that the same should be accompanied by a tender of the amount of the unearned premium.

Phoenix Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brecheisen, 50 Ohio St. 542, 35 N. E. 53; Schwarzchild & S. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 115 Fed. 653, 59 C. C. A. 572, 124 Fed. 52; Davidson v. German Ins. Co. 74 N. J. L. 487, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884, 65 Atl. 996, 12 Ann. Cas. 1065; Webb v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. 164 Mich. 139, 129 N. W. 19; Hopkins v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 78 Iowa, 346, 43 N. W. 197; Newark F. Ins. Co. v. Sammons, 11 Ill. App. 230; El Paso Reduction Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 121 Fed. 937; Waltheart v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 2 App. Div. 328, 37 N. Y. Supp. 857; Parsons v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 133 Iowa, 532, 110 N. W. 907; Vance, Ins. § 183; Backus v. Exchange F. Ins. Co. 26 App. Div. 91, 49 N. Y. Supp. 877; Stone v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 105 N. Y. 543, 12 N. E. 45.

what inconsistent with its object and intention, viz., the right to put an end to the risk at any time. The notice contemplated by the condition is a mere signification of the will and exercise of the option reserved to the defendants, and such notice, together with the refunding of the ratable proportion of the premium, terminates the insurance."

In the absence of any stipulation in the contract as to the manner in which notice shall be given, actual personal notice must be had. Potomac Ins. Co. v. Atwood, 118 Ill. App. 349; Farnum v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 83 Cal. 246, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233, 23 Pac. 869 (holding notice of cancellation sent by mail which was not received by the insured ineffective).

So, where the policy provides for a specified number of days' notice, the time begins to run from the receipt of the notice by the insured. American Glove Co. v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 15 Cal. App. 77, 113 Pa. 688; Potomac Ins. Co. v. Atwood, 118 Ill. App. 349; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Colonial Assur. Co. v. National F. Ins. Co. 110 Ill. App. 471; Citizens' Ins. Co. v. Henderson Elevator Co. 123 Ky. 478, 124 Am. St. Rep. 371, 96 S. W. 601, rehearing denied in 123 Ky. 484, 124 Am. St. Rep. 375, 97 S. W. 810; Continental Ins. Co. v. Daniel, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1501, 78 S. W. 866; Rosen v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 106 Me. 229, 76 Atl. 688; American F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Md. 22, 34 Atl. 373; Chrisman & S. Bkg. Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 75 Mo. App. 310; Scheel v. German-American Ins. Co. 228 Pa. 44, 76 Atl. 507; Philadelphia Linen Co. v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 8 Pa. Dist. R. 261; Emmott v. Slater Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 562; Schwarzchild & S. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 59 C. C. A. 572, 124 Fed. 52, affirming 115 Fed. 53.

And this rule is also recognized in the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

No affirmative act of cancellation beyond the giving of the notice was necessary.

American Glove Co. v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 15 Cal. App. 77, 113 Pac. 688; Philadelphia Linen Co. v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 8 Pa. Dist. R. 261; Emmott v. Slater Mut. F. Ins. Co. 7 R. I. 562; 3 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2794.

Messrs. Gans & Haman and Charles Markell, for appellee:

Cancellation of a New York standard form of fire policy cannot be effected, at the instance of the company, without a return or tender of the unearned premium.

American F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Md. 22, 34 Atl. 373; Runkle v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 6 Fed. 143; Mohr & M. Distilling Co. v. Ohio Ins. Co. 13 Fed. 74; Lattan v. Royal Ins. Co. 45 N. J. L. 453; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 91, 30 L.R.A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457, 33 Atl. 429; Nitsch v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 152 N. Y. 635, 46 N. E. 1149; Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 163, 40 L.R.A. 765, 49 N. E. 664; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v.

following cases: National Conduit & Cable Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 135 App. Div. 136, 120 N. Y. Supp. 7, affirmed without opinion in 203 N. Y. 580, 96 N. E. 1122; Yoshimi v. Fidelity F. Ins. Co. 99 App. Div. 69, 91 N. Y. Supp. 393; Globe & R. F. Ins. Co. v. Emil Willbrandt Surgical Mfg. Co. 128 Ill. App. 262; Wicks Bros. v. Scottish Union & Nat. Ins. Co. 107 Wis. 606, 83 N. W. 781; Northern Pine Crating Co. v. Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. 143 Wis. 433, 128 N. W. 70; Dominion Grange Mut. F. Ins. Asso. v. Bradt, 25 Can. S. C. 164; Bank of Commerce v. British America Assur. Co. 18 Ont. Rep. 234.

The reason for this construction is that the notice is designed to give the insured an opportunity to procure other insurance. Bard v. Fireman's Ins. Co. 108 Me. 506, 81 Atl. 870; Rosen v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 106 Me. 229, 76 Atl. 688; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Continental Ins. Co. v. Daniel, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1501, 78 S. W. 866.

So, a letter containing a notice mailed November 29, but not received until December 2, the day before the fire, and not opened until the day thereafter, does not operate as a cancellation of the policy, under a provision that the policy may be canceled by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation. Partridge v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 13 App. Div. 519, 43 N. Y. Supp. 632, affirmed without opinion in 162 N. Y. 597, 57 N. E. 119.

The stipulation in a fire policy for five days' notice of cancellation is governed by the general rule of law for computing time, by excluding the first day and counting the days as legal days beginning and ending at midnight, notwithstanding another stipulation in the policy that the insurance under it shall begin at noon and expire at noon of the days named. Penn Plate Glass

Cameron, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 45 S. W. 158; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. McKenzie, 70 Ill. App. 615; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Chrisman & S. Bkg. Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 75 Mo. App. 310; Gosch v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 496; Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2801; Buckley v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 188 N. Y. 399, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 889, 81 N. E. 165; Baldwin v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 206 Pa. 248, 55 Atl. 970; Philadelphia Linen Co. v. Manhattan F. Ins. Co. 8 Pa. Dist. R. 261; Kinney v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 141 Ill. App. 543; Peterson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 87 Ill. App. 567, 187 Ill. 395, 58 N. E. 1095, 111 Ill. App. 466; Williamson v. Warfield, P. & H. Co. 136 Ill. App. 168; Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg. Co. 92 Tex. 297, 49 S. W. 222; Taylor v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 25 Okla. 92, 138 Am. St. Rep. 906, 105 Pac. 354; Continental Ins. Co. v. Daniel, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1501, 78 S. W. 866; Southern Ins. Co. v. Williams, 62 Ark. 382, 35 S. W. 1101; Davidson v. German Ins. Co. 74 N. J. L. 487, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 884, 65 Atl. 996, 12 Ann. Cas. 1065; Webb v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. 164 Mich. 139, 129 N. W. 19; Schwarzschild & S. Co. v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 115 Fed. 653; El Paso Reduction Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 121 Fed. 937.

The statement in the cancelation notice, that the premium due would be held subject to the order of the insured and the return of this policy, is not sufficient.

Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 163, 40 L.R.A. 765, 49 N. E. 664; Runkle v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 6 Fed. 143; Mohr & M. Distilling Co. v. Ohio Ins. Co. 13 Fed. 74; American F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Md. 34, 34 Atl. 373; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, 2801.

Stockbridge, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case involves no conflict of testi-

Co. v. Spring Garden Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 255, 69 Am. St. Rep. 810, 42 Atl. 138.

Accordingly it was held in the above case that an affidavit of defense was insufficient which averred that notice of cancelation was served on the 7th, where the loss occurred at 10:30 P. M. on the 12th of the same month; especially as the hour of the service of the notice was not given. Ibid.

Mailing a letter inclosing policies for cancelation under a provision in the policy that the "insurance may be terminated at any time, at the request of the assured," will effect such cancelation only when it is actually received by the insurer or his representative; and the policies will be binding in case of loss while the letter is in the mails. Crown Point Iron Co. v. Aetna Ins. Co. 127 N. Y. 608, 14 L.R.A. 147, 28 N. E. 653.

So, under a statutory provision that the insurance may be terminated by giving written notice to that effect to the insurer, a letter requesting that the insurance be terminated takes effect from the time of its receipt by the insurer, and not from the time of its being posted. Skillings v. Royal Ins. Co. 23 Can. Law Times Occ. N. 294, 2 Ont. Week. Rep. 123, 6 Ont. L. Rep. 401, affirming 22 Can. Law Times Occ. N. 258, 1 Ont. Week. Rep. 411, 4 Ont. L. Rep. 123.

In Arnfeld v. Guardian Assur. Co. 172 Pa. 605, 34 Atl. 580, it was held that the cancelation of a fire policy was effected immediately upon the taking by the insured of a policy in another company for the same amount, upon receiving notice that the first company intended to cancel their policy within five days in accordance with its terms, where his purpose in doing so was not to increase his insurance, but to substitute the policy for that in the first company, notwithstanding the loss occurred before the expiration of the five days after 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

the receipt of the notice, and the first policy was still in the possession of the insured, and the insured had the right to take out additional insurance if he saw fit.

But the mere procurement of another policy on the same property and for the same amount, after the notice and within the five-day limit, does not disclose an intention on the part of the insured to cancel the earlier policy, or to relieve the company from liability thereon; but to have such effect the insured must have consented and agreed to the cancelation and the substitution of the later for the earlier policy. Scheel v. German-American Ins. Co. 228 Pa. 44, 76 Atl. 507.

So a delivery by the insured of a policy to an agent for the purpose of having a new policy issued in lieu thereof does not effect a cancelation until the new policy is issued, where it is clear that such was the intention of the parties. Hickey v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 92 Hun, 192, 36 N. Y. Supp. 329.

Of course there may be an immediate cancelation by a subsequent agreement, though the policy provides for the giving of notice for a certain number of days. Home Ins. Co. v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co. 126 Ga. 334, 55 S. E. 11 (five days' notice); Cox v. Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 133 Ga. 175, 65 S. E. 409 (thirty days notice); Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Rosen v. German Alliance Ins. Co. 106 Me. 229, 76 Atl. 688 (ten days' notice); Springer v. Anglo-Nevada Assur. Corp. 33 N. Y. S. R. 543, 11 N. Y. Supp. 533.

And a reply letter accepting a proposition for the cancelation of the policy takes effect from the time it is sent. Home Ins. Co. v. Chattahoochee Lumber Co. 126 Ga. 334, 55 S. E. 11.

A. L. R.

mony, but raises three questions of law, upon the answer to which its determination depends. The suit is upon an insurance policy to recover the amount named in the policy; a loss having occurred of the property insured.

In the brief and at the oral argument, it was urged on behalf of the company that there could be no recovery, for the reason that the plaintiff had offered no affirmative proof of the payment of the premium, which constituted the consideration for the issuance of the policy. A careful examination of the record fails to disclose that any question of the payment of the premium was raised at the trial of the case below, though the payment of the premium is recited in the declaration to have been made by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the policy offered in evidence recites as the consideration for it "$25 premium." This language in the policy and the recital in the declaration, in the absence of any pleading or evidence denying the payment of the premium, might fairly be assumed to be an admission of such payment, if the question were properly before us; but article 5, § 9, of the Code, expressly provides that in no case shall this court "decide any point or question which does not plainly appear by the record to have been tried and decided by the court below," and the numerous applications of this provision, of which the case of Baltimore v. Austin, 95 Md. 93, 51 Atl. 824, is but an illustration, clearly show that this defense to a recovery on the policy, not having been passed upon by the court below, cannot properly be considered upon an appeal.

The ground of defense upon the part of the company is the cancellation of the policy before the loss occurred, and presents two questions. The first of these is whether the notice, as given by the company, was a sufficient notice, and, if not, whether the notice was void in toto, or merely defective with regard to a matter which the period that intervened between the notice and the loss may have cured; and, secondly, whether a return or tender of the pro rata portion of the premium was a prerequisite to a valid cancellation of the policy. The clause providing for cancellation was what is known as the New York standard form, and reads as follows: "This policy shall be canceled at any time at the request of the insured; or by the company by giving five days' notice of such cancellation. If the policy shall be canceled as hereinbefore provided, or becomes void or ceases, the premium having been actually paid, the unearned portion shall be returned on surrender of this policy or last renewal; this company retaining the customary short rate; except that when this policy is canceled by this company by giving notice it shall retain only the pro rata premium."

The notice in this case bore date July 15, '09, and was as follows: "The German Union Fire Insurance Company herewith gives five days' formal notice of its intention to cancel policy No. 35,069 issued to owner and mortgagee for $1,000, covering property located at 48-54 River street, Cleveland, Ohio, in accordance with the stipulations and provisions embraced in lines Nos. 51 to 55, both inclusive of the printed conditions of said policy, to wit." Then follows a transcript of the cancellation clause of the policy, after which the notice continues: "Please take notice that all liability of said company under said policy will absolutely cease at noon July 20, '09, unless surrender thereof to the company be made sooner, and that the unearned premium due, if any, will be held subject to your order and return of the policy."

This notice was mailed in Baltimore, by registered mail, on the day of its date, July 15, 1909, as appeared from the registration receipt issued by the Baltimore postoffice. The return card, showing the receipt of this notice by the addressee, offered in evidence, shows the date of delivery of the notice of cancellation to have been July 17, 1909. The insured, therefore, from the face of the papers, had not five, but three, days' notice of the intention of the appellant company to cancel the policy. What happened after that does not very clearly appear from the record, but apparently the policy was canceled at some date, presumably the 20th of July, 1909, upon the records of the company; but no notice of the fact of cancellation was ever communicated to the appellee. In this condition of facts, the relative positions of the parties are well defined by the opinion rendered by this court in the case of American F. Ins. Co. v. Brooks, 83 Md. 22, 34 Atl. 373, where, in a similar case, it was said that, "if it shall be canceled by the company, the clause further provides that if the premium has been paid the 'unearned portion shall be returned on surrender of the policy,' etc., 'except that when the policy is canceled by this company by giving notice it shall retain only the pro rata premium. These are conditions upon which the right of the company to cancel rests; they must be strictly construed and strictly performed. Runkle v. Citizens' Ins. Co. (C. C.) 6 Fed. 143; Lattan v. Royal Ins. Co. 45 N. J. L. 453. Five days' notice . . . is therefore a condition precedent. . . . It is clear that the mere service of such a notice as this, if the premium had in fact been paid or the insured was chargeable with its receipt, would not ipso facto work a cancelation. The policy would have to be canceled by the insurer by some act clearly indicating that he had done so; . . . and this act could not be effectually performed under the provisions of the policy until the five days had expired."

In the Brooks Case, the notice was not received by the insured until one day before the time named for cancelation, and it is said that "this was not within the right reserved in the policy, and was an utterly void act. Had the attempt to cancel been made later on, another question would have arisen, upon which we have now no occasion to comment. No other attempt was made, and what was done . . . was nugatory and void."

This language is equally applicable in every respect with regard to the conditions contained in the policy and the notice given, or attempted to be given, in the case before us, and would of itself be necessarily conclusive of this case, without some evidence tending to show a cancelation in fact, not earlier than July 22, of which the insured had notice, or a waiver upon the part of the insured; and there is no evidence of any such waiver. To effect a valid cancelation of a policy, there must be a present purpose carried out, not a mere intent of future action (Chrisman & S. Bkg. Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 75 Mo. App. 310); or, as was said in John R. Davis Lumber Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 95 Wis. 226, 37 L.R.A. 131, 70 N. W. 84, "there must be an actual notice of cancelation . . . not a mere notice of a desire to cancel, or a notice that the policy will be canceled, or a notice to cancel; and the notice must be served on or given to the proper person."

There remains to be considered that which is probably the most important question in the case, to wit, whether a return or tender of the pro rata part of the premium was a prerequisite to any valid cancelation of the policy. In the very able argument and briefs submitted in this case, practically all of the authorities in this country in any way bearing upon this question have been presented to the court, and those authorities present some divergence of views. The cancelation clause has not been uniform in all policies, and in a number of cases which have passed upon this question the decision was rested upon a precise construction of the particular language of the policy before the court. In so far as the adjudicated cases have dealt with policies where the cancelation clause was different from that in the standard form, they afford but little real assistance upon this question. Reference will be made, therefore, only to cases where the provision for cancelation was identical with the contained in this policy.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In the Federal courts, there has been a general uniformity of decisions to the effect that the return or tender of the pro rata portion of the premium, where the notice of the cancelation had been given by the company, is not a prerequisite or condition precedent to the termination of the policy, and the same view has been adopted in New Jersey, Iowa, and Michigan. Davidson v. German Ins. Co. 74 N. J. L. 487, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 884, 65 Atl. 996, 12 Ann. Cas. 1065; Parsons v. Northwestern Nat. Ins. Co. 133 Iowa, 532, 110 N. W. 907; Webb v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. 164 Mich. 139, 129 N. W. 19.

A contrary view was expressed by the court of appeals of New York in the case of Nitsch v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 152 N. Y. 635, 46 N. E. 1149, cited in Davidson v. German Ins. Co. 74 N. J. L. 487, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 886, 65 Atl. 996, 12 Ann. Cas. 1065, and this was followed later by the case of Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 163, 40 L.R.A. 765, 49 N. E. 664. This latter case is chiefly noteworthy for the dissenting opinion, filed by Parker, Ch. J., and which dissenting opinion has been the basis of most of the adjudication since, which have taken the view that the return or tender of the pro rata portion of the unearned premium was not a prerequisite to cancelation. The prevailing view in the Tisdell Case, however, that such return or tender was a condition precedent was reaffirmed by a unanimous court in the case of Buckley v. Citizens' Ins. Co. 188 N. Y. 399, 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889, 81 N. E. 165; and, while the inferior courts of New York have not always followed those cases, because of some slight variation of phraseology of the cancelation clause, as in the case of Waltheur v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. 2 App. Div. 328, 37 N. Y. Supp. 857, they have never denied the principle, but have sought to distinguish the cases before them by reason of the varied phraseology.

The conclusion of the New York court of appeals, as announced in Tisdell v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co. supra, and reaffirmed in Buckley v. Citizens' Ins. Co. supra, has been adopted in John R. Davis Lumber Co. v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 95 Wis. 226, 37 L.R.A. 131, 70 N. W. 84; Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Munger Improved Cotton Mach. Mfg. Co. 92 Tex. 297, 49 S. W. 222; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. McKenzie, 70 Ill. App. 619; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Cameron, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 237, 45 S. W. 158; Peterson v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 87 Ill. App. 572; Petoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Botto, 47 Ill. 516; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Maguire, 51 Ill. 342; Hollingsworth v. Germania, N. H. & R. F. Ins. Cos. 45 Ga. 294, 12 Am. Rep. 579; Taylor v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 25 Okla. 92, 138.

Am. St. Rep. 906, 105 Pac. 354; Davison v. London & L. F. Ins. Co. 189 Pa. 132, 42 Atl. 2; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Tewes, 132 Ill. App. 321; Williamson v. Warfield, P. & H. Co. 136 Ill. App. 168; Kinney v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 141 Ill. App. 543; and the same view is adopted by such text writers as May, Wood, Joyce, and Cooley.

While some of these cases have been decided by divided courts, nevertheless the great weight of authority is in support of the view that the return or tender of the unearned premium is a condition precedent to the right of cancellation upon the part of the company, with which view we concur. Entertaining this view of the law applicable to the case, it does not seem necessary to consider in detail the several prayers presented to the trial court; and it will be sufficient to say that we find no reversible error in the rulings of the learned judge who heard this case. The judgment will therefore be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed, with costs to the appellee.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

J. C. PUGH et al.

v.

A. N. SAMPLE, Applicant for Certiorari.

(123 La. 791, 49 So. 526.)

Subrogation — judgment — claimant.

1. Where one, not the maker, places his

Headnotes by MONROE, J.

Note. — Merger of mortgage by conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee or revival thereof after such conveyance, where there are intermediate encumbrances upon the property.

I. General rule, 834.

II. Merger as a question of intention.

a. In general, 837.

b. Where mortgage is discharged or surrendered.

1. Doctrine that discharge or surrender does not affect priority, 838.

2. Doctrine that priority is lost, 840.

3. Where discharge is procured by fraud, 841.

4. Where mortgage previously assigned as collateral, 841.

c. Where mortgagee gives or receives additional consideration, 841.

d. Where deed to mortgagee is invalid, 842.

e. Recitals in deed, 842.

f. Where intention is expressed, 843.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

name on a negotiable promissory note, without "clearly indicating, by appropriate words, his intention to be bound in some other capacity," his rights and obligations are those of an indorser, and the maker of the note is the primary and principal debtor. When, therefore, a party who is condemned by a judgment for a certain amount executes his note which is indorsed by other parties (who have been condemned by the same judgment as his sureties), for the purpose of borrowing money with which to pay such judgment, the proceeds of the discount must be regarded as loaned to the maker, and the payment as such proceeds in satisfaction of the judgment, as a payment by the maker.

Mortgage — destruction — merger — revival.

2. Whilst one cannot be, at the same time, owner and mortgagee of the same property, if the title which, apparently conveying perfect ownership, is supposed to destroy the mortgage by confusion, turns out to be no title or an imperfect title, the mortgage, which was suspended, and thus apparently destroyed, upon the assumption of perfect ownership, revives; the cause of its suspension and supposed destruction no longer existing. "The effect cannot have a longer duration than the cause."

(April 26, 1909.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of certiorari to review a judgment of the Court of Appeal, Second Circuit, reversing a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of Caddo in defendant's favor in an action brought to subject certain lands to a judgment lien. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

I. General rule.

For a discussion of the question of revival of or subrogation to a discharged mortgage in favor of the assignee of the equity of redemption, who pays it as against junior lien, see note in 16 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470.

See also note in 58 L.R.A. 788, on right to reinstatement of mortgage when released or discharged by mistake.

The general rule is that the lesser estate in land will merge in the greater whenever the two estates are owned by the same person. This rule, however, does not apply where such merger would be inimical to the interests of the owner, hence, unless an intention to merge with knowledge of a junior lien or liens clearly appears, no merger results from the acquirement by the holder of the senior mortgage of the interests of the mortgagor, and the senior mortgage retains its priority as against all junior or intervening liens upon the mortgaged property; and this is true whether the interest of the mortgagor is the legal title to the land or the mere equity of redemption.

Messrs. Hall & Jack, for applicant:

Where a creditor holds a first duly recorded conventional mortgage upon real estate for much more than its value, and his debtor transfers the property to such creditor, the consideration being such first mortgage debt, and such creditor has to relinquish the property to be sold under execution made upon him at the suit of a junior mortgage creditor by hypothecary action against him as a third possessor, the mortgage rights of such creditor, which he held on the property before his possession of it, are renewed, after his relinquishment or after the sale under execution made upon him.

Millaudon v. Allard, 2 La. 547; Chaffe v. Morgan, 30 La. Ann. 1307; New Orleans Ins. Asso. v. Labranche, 31 La. Ann. 841; Spencer v. Goodman, 33 La. Ann. 909; Gates v. Gaither, 46 La. Ann. 286; 15 So. 50; St. Charles Street R. Co. v. Fairrex, 46 La. Ann. 1030, 15 So. 421; Harrison v. Ottman, 111 La. 740, 35 So. 844; Merlin, Repertoire 13, Verbo, Subrogation de Personnes, § 4.

Messrs. T. Alexander, J. A. Thigpen, and S. L. Herold, for respondents:

The conventional mortgage was completely extinguished by the purchase by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property.

Copes v. Guillebeau, 34 La. Ann. 1036; Murphy v. Factor's & T. Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 463; Wilmot v. The Ouachita Belle, 32 La. Ann. 611; McIlvaine v. Legare, 34 La. Ann. 926; Chaffe v. Ludeling, 34 La. Ann. 967; Abbeville Rice Mill Co. v. Shambaugh, 115 La. 1047, 40 So. 453.

U. S.—Factors' & T. Ins. Co. v. Murphy, 111 U. S. 738, 28 L. ed. 582, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679.

Ala.—Fouche v. Swain, 80 Ala. 151.

Ark.—Cohn v. Hoffman, 45 Ark. 376; Garretson v. White, 69 Ark. 603, 65 S. W. 115.

Cal.—Brooks v. Rice, 56 Cal. 428; Rump v. Gerkens, 59 Cal. 496; Scrivner v. Dietz, 84 Cal. 295, 24 Pac. 171; Davis v. Randall, 117 Cal. 12, 48 Pac. 906; Hines v. Ward, 121 Cal. 115, 53 Pac. 427.

Colo.—Fassett v. Mulock, 5 Colo. 466.

Fla.—McAdow v. Wachob, 45 Fla. 482, 33 So. 702.

Ga.—Woodside v. Lippold, 113 Ga. 877, 84 Am. St. 267, 39 S. E. 400; Coleman & B. Co. v. Rice, 115 Ga. 510, 42 S. E. 5.

Ill.—Campbell v. Carter, 14 Ill. 289; Jarvis v. Frink, 14 Ill. 398; Fitts v. Davis, 42 Ill. 391; Edgerton v. Young, 43 Ill. 464; Fowler v. Fay, 62 Ill. 375; Huebsch v. Scheel, 81 Ill. 281; Richardson v. Hockenhull, 85 Ill. 124; Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheeney, 87 Ill. 602; Shaver v. Williams, 87 Ill. 469; Rogers v. Herron, 92 Ill. 583; Lowman v. Lowman, 118 Ill. 582, 9 N. E. 245; Watson v. Gardner, 119 Ill. 312, 10 N. E. 192; Moffet v. Farwell, 222 Ill. 543, 78 N. E. 925.

Ind.—Troost v. Davis, 31 Ind. 34; First Nat. Bank v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144; Hanlon v. Doherty, 109 Ind. 37, 9 N. E. 782; Coburn v. Stephens, 137 Ind. 683, 45 Am. St. Rep. 218, 36 N. E. 132; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; Swatts v. Bowen, 141 Ind. 322, 40 N. E. 1057.

Iowa—Wickersham v. Reeves, 1 Iowa, 413; Vannice v. Bergen, 16 Iowa, 555, 85 Am. Dec. 531; Lyon v. McIlvaine, 24 Iowa, 9; Linscott v. Lamart, 46 Iowa, 312; Stimpson v. Pease, 53 Iowa, 572, 5 N. W. 760; Pike v. Gleason, 60 Iowa, 150, 14 N. W. 210; Weidner v. Thompson, 69 Iowa, 36, 28 N. W. 422; Smith v. Swan, 69 Iowa, 412, 29 N. W. 402; Gray v. Nelson, 77 Iowa, 63, 41 N. W. 566; Bush v. Herrington, 113 Iowa, 158, 84 N. W. 1036.

Kan.—Shattuck v. Belknap Sav. Bank, 63 Kan. 443, 65 Pac. 643, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

La.—Perret v. Sanarens, 26 La. Ann. 593.

Me.—Freeman v. Paul, 3 Me. 260, 14 Am. Dec. 237; Carll v. Butman, 7 Me. 102; Thompson v. Chandler, 7 Me. 381; Crosby v. Chase, 17 Me. 369; Campbell v. Knights, 24 Me. 332.

Mass.—New England Jewelry Co. v. Merriam, 2 Allen, 390; Tucker v. Crowley, 127 Mass. 402; Keith v. Wheeler, 159 Mass. 163, 34 N. E. 174.

Mich.—Snyder v. Snyder, 6 Mich. 470; Cooper v. Bigly, 13 Mich. 463; Tower v. Divine, 37 Mich. 443; Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610, 55 N. W. 1019; Gibbs v. Johnson, 104 Mich. 120, 62 N. W. 145; Quick v. Raymond, 116 Mich. 15, 74 N. W. 189.

Mo.—Collins v. Stocking, 98 Mo. 290, 11 S. W. 750; Wilson v. Vanstone, 112 Mo. 315, 20 S. W. 612; Sieberling v. Tipton, 113 Mo. 373, 21 S. W. 4; Williams v. Brownlee, 101 Mo. 309, 13 S. W. 1049; Hayden v. Lauffenburger, 157 Mo. 88, 57 S. W. 721; Walker v. Goodwill, 54 Mo. App. 631.

Neb.—Miller v. Finn, 1 Neb. 254; Chapell v. Smith, 50 Neb. 116, 69 N. W. 748; Peterborough Sav. Bank v. Pierce, 54 Neb. 712, 75 N. W. 20; Topliff v. Richardson, 76 Neb. 114, 107 N. W. 114.

Nev.—Grellet v. Heilshorn, 4 Nev. 526.

N. H.—Stanton v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272; Green v. Currier, 63 N. H. 563, 3 Atl. 428.

N. J.—Parker v. Child, 25 N. J. Eq. 41; Hoppock v. Ramsey, 28 N. J. Eq. 413; Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127.

N. Y.—Vanderkemp v. Shelton, 11 Paige, 28; Sheldon v. Edwards, 35 N. Y. 279; Brockway v. Tayntor, 5 N. Y. S. R. 73; Zarowski v. Schroeder, 71 App. Div. 526, 75 N. Y. Supp. 1021; Townsend v. Provident Realty Co. 110 App. Div. 226, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1091.

Ohio—Bell v. Tenny, 29 Ohio St. 240.

Or.—Watson v. Dundee Mortg. & Trust Invest. Co. 12 Or. 474, 8 Pac. 548; Katz v. Obenchain, 48 Or. 352, 120 Am. St. Rep. 821, 85 Pac. 617.

Pa.—Hatz's Appeal, 40 Pa. 209; Pease v. Doane, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 6,

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:—

It appears that the defendant, A. N. Sample, held a mortgage for nearly $60,000 on Cotton Point Plantation, in Red river parish, executed by the owners, Mrs. Sophie R. Stringfellow, H. C. Stringfellow, and Miss Georgia Robinson; that in October, 1906, Samuel Light obtained judgment for $1,000, with interest, against the parties last named as makers, and against the plaintiffs herein, J. C. Pugh and J. D. Wilkinson, as indorsers, of a promissory note; that H. C. Stringfellow furnished in cash part of the money needed to pay the judgment so obtained, and, in order to get the balance, executed another note, which was also indorsed by Pugh and Wilkinson, and was discounted by one of the banks, the proceeds being placed to the credit of the account of Wilkinson, who thereupon drew his check in payment of the judgment. When the note last mentioned matured, Stringfellow paid the interest and substituted another note similarly indorsed, in its place, and the same thing was done, from time to time, until February, 1908, when Pugh and Wilkinson paid the note maturing at that time, amounting to $791.38. In this connection, we make the following excerpts from the testimony of Mr. Wilkinson: After stating that Stringfellow furnished some cash for the payment of the judgment, he says: "The balance of the money was raised on a note

Tex.—Silliman v. Gammage, 55 Tex. 366.
Vt.—Belknap v. Dennison, 61 Vt. 520, 17 Atl. 738; Howard v. Clark, 71 Vt. 424, 76 Am. St. Rep. 782, 45 Atl. 1042.

Wash.—Hitchcock v. Nixon, 16 Wash. 281, 47 Pac. 412; Fitch v. Appelgate, 24 Wash. 25, 64 Pac. 147.

Wis.—Scott v. Webster, 44 Wis. 185.
Eng.—Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. Jr. 384, 11 Revised Rep. 222, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 380; Adams v. Angell, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 634, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 352, 36 L. T. N. S. 334, Hayden v. Kirkpatrick, 34 Beav. 645, 11 Jur. N. S. 836, 13 L. T. N. S. 56, 13 Week. Rep. 1010.

Where a person holding the mortgage in trust for another receives a deed of the property in trust for a different person, there is no merger. Scrivner v. Dietz, 84 Cal. 295, 24 Pac. 171.

A distinction is made in Weidner v. Thompson, 69 Iowa, 36, 28 N. W. 422, between the doctrine of merger as applied to a mortgagee who accepts a deed of the mortgaged property, and a subsequent purchaser from such mortgagee, and while, as to the former, it is said that the estates are not merged as against a junior encumbrance, yet, as to the latter, they are held to be merged; and it is pointed out that the purchaser from the mortgagee does not stand in the position of a mortgagee acquiring the mortgaged land, since he did not purchase the mortgage debt, and the mortgage note and debt were not transferred to him, but were canceled. It is not intended in this note to consider the question of merger as to purchasers from the mortgagee, or as to subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers from the mortgagor, relying upon the recorded discharge of the encumbrance held by the senior mortgagee, since such cases as a rule raise the question whether purchasers or encumbrancers from the mortgagor have a right to rely upon the record, especially where the record also discloses a deed of the mortgaged property from the mortgagor to the mortgagee, and assume therefrom that the titles have met in the mortgagee and have merged.

Where the mortgagor executes a conveyance of the mortgaged land to the mortgagee, upon the latter's agreement to cancel the note and mortgage, the latter, after having been in possession of the property for sometime under the conveyance, is entitled to have his title cleared as to a junior encumbrance of which he had no knowledge at the time he released his note and mortgage, it appearing that the amount due on the senior mortgage exceeds the value of the lien. Garretson v. White, 69 Ark. 603, 65 S. W. 115.

A junior mortgagee cannot complain where the senior mortgagee takes a conveyance of the legal title to the mortgaged premises, where the amount due on the mortgage exceeds the value of the land. Perret v. Sanarens, 26 La. Ann. 593.

It does not constitute a merger where the mortgagor practises fraud and deceit on the mortgagee in inducing the latter to accept a conveyance of the mortgaged property. Cook v. Foster, 96 Mich. 610, 55 N. W. 1019.

Since a claimant cannot rely upon a mortgage though it is prior in date to a judgment, in a claim of title, to defeat the title of the judgment creditor based on an execution sale, a deed of the property to the mortgagee subsequently to the judgment is of no avail in behalf of the latter. MacIntyre v. Ferst, 101 Ga. 682, 28 S. E. 989.

It has been held that a mortgage is extinguished by the acquirement by the mortgagee of the mortgaged property at a trustee's sale in bankruptcy, and hence such mortgage is no defense to the lien of a junior mortgage. Murphy v. Factors' & T. Ins. Co. 33 La. Ann. 454.

In South Carolina a merger will be held to result from the acquirement by the mortgagee of the equity of redemption, unless there has been an express agreement to the contrary. Agnew v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 24 S. C. 18, 58 Am. Rep. 237. Applying this rule, it has been held to constitute a merger for the mortgagee to accept a conveyance of the mortgaged premises in satisfaction of the mortgagor's debt, where he formally delivers up the note and mortgage, although he accepts the conveyance and designed by Judge Pugh and myself and H. C. Stringfellow, I think as agent."

Cross-examination:

Q. Have you any of those notes?

A. I have but one, and that is the last one.

Q. Mr. Wilkinson, they are all made the same way that this one is made?

A. Yes, sir; similar to that one. I would not be sure that Stringfellow signed them all as agent.

Q. This one appears to be signed as agent?

A. Yes, sir; the first note was for more than that amount, and that occurred [resulted?] in my overpaying the judgment $100, and after I found it out Mr. Land gave me his check, and that note had credit for that amount. I think it was $100.

Q. The notes were all similar to this in form, and indorsed, unless some were signed H. C. Stringfellow, without saying "Agent?"

A. Yes, sir; The first note was indorsed by Judge Pugh himself. I indorsed some of the notes afterwards, per me.

There is no suggestion that Stringfellow was acting for anyone else than himself, his wife, and Miss Robinson. In the meanwhile (between the date of the payment of the judgment and the payment of the last note, that is to say, in March, 1907) the judgment had been recorded, and is said to have taken effect as a judicial mortgage, livers up the instrument of indebtedness in ignorance of junior liens upon the land. Bleckley v. Branyan, 26 S. C. 424, 2 S. E. 319.

The doctrine of these cases is questioned in Glenn v. Rudd, 68 S. C. 102, 102 Am. St. Rep. 659, 46 S. E. 555, and it is said that this view is at variance with most other jurisdictions, and indeed not in accordance with the authorities cited with approval in the leading opinion in Agnew v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co.; and the court points out that "even in those states where, as in this state, the mortgagee has not title to the land, but merely a lien for the debt, it has been generally held that a merger will not result from conveyance of the land to the mortgagee, where there is an intervening encumbrance, even where there is no evidence of any agreement to that effect, because, unless there is actual proof of an intention to satisfy the mortgage, it is presumed the mortgagee does not intend to release his security when it is necessary for his protection against such intervening encumbrance."

II. Merger as a question of intention.

a. In general.

Although the mortgaged property is subject to junior liens, generally the question as to whether or not a senior mortgage is merged in a subsequently acquired equity of redemption or title to the mortgaged property is to be determined from the intention of the parties. Brooks v. Rice, 56 Cal. 428; Huebsch v. Scheel, 81 Ill. 281; Richardson v. Hockenull, 85 Ill. 124; Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheeney, 87 Ill. 602; Lowman v. Lowman, 118 Ill. 582, 9 N. E. 245; Chase v. Van Meter, 140 Ind. 321, 39 N. E. 455; Swatts v. Bowen, 141 Ind. 322, 40 N. E. 1057; Wickersham v. Reeves, 1 Iowa, 413; Lyon v. McIlvaine, 24 Iowa, 9; Linscott v. Lamart, 46 Iowa, 312; Pike v. Gleason, 60 Iowa, 150, 14 N. W. 210; Shattuck v. Belknap Sav. Bank, 63 Kan. 443, 65 Pac. 643; Williams v. Brownlee, 101 Mo. 309, 13 S. W. 1049; Hayden v. Lauffenburger, 157 Mo. 88, 57 S. W. 721; Walker v. Goodsill, 54 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mo. App. 631; Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127; Townsend v. Provident Realty Co. 110 App. Div. 228, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1091; Howard v. Clark, 71 Vt. 424, 76 Am. St. Rep. 782, 45 Atl. 1042.

The mortgage will be kept alive in favor of the mortgagee if this appears to have been the intention of the parties, and justice is thereby subserved. Mulford v. Peterson, 35 N. J. L. 127.

In Factors' & T. Ins. Co. v. Murphy, 111 U. S. 738, 28 L. ed. 582, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 679, the doctrine is asserted that "where an encumbrancer by mortgage or otherwise becomes the owner of the legal title or of the equity of redemption, the merger will not be held to take place if it be apparent that it was not the intention of the owner, or if, in the absence of any intention, said merger was against his manifest interest."

Unless the intention to merge is expressly stated, in many jurisdictions, the rule obtains that where there is an intervening encumbrance, it will be presumed, as a matter of law, that no merger was intended by the mortgagee in accepting from the mortgagor a conveyance of the mortgaged premises. Wilson v. Vanstone, 112 Mo. 315, 20 S. W. 612; Green v. Currier, 63 N. H. 563, 3 Atl. 428; Belknap v. Dennison, 61 Vt. 520, 17 Atl. 738.

In Campbell v. Knights, 24 Me. 332, it is stated as a general rule that the mortgage may be considered as still subsisting when it is for the interest of the party that it should be, to protect himself against another charge or encumbrance upon the estate; when, however, this presumption would be inequitable, or contrary to the clear intention of the parties, or conducive to fraud, the mortgage is regarded as extinguished.

This rule is based upon the presumption, as a matter of law, that the party must have intended to keep on foot his mortgage title, when it is essential to his security against an intervening title, or for other purposes of security; and it is immaterial that the mortgagee, through ignorance of the intervening title, or through inadvertence, actually discharged the mortgage inferior in rank to the special mortgage held by Sample on Cotton Point Plantation, and in January, 1908, the owners and mortgagors made a conveyance of the plantation to Sample, in consideration of the surrender and cancelation of the notes held by him and secured by the mortgage mentioned. In April following Pugh and Wilkinson brought this hypothecary action to subject the plantation to the alleged judicial mortgage resulting from the inscription of the Light judgment, to the extent of the $791.38 which they had paid in February,—their position in the matter being that it was they who had paid the Light judgment: that, by virtue of such payment, they became subrogated to the judicial mortgage resulting from the inscription of that judgment; that upon the conveyance of the mortgaged property to Sample, the superior mortgage held by him became extinguished by confusion, and the judicial mortgage thus held by them was advanced to the first rank, and is now to be satisfied out of the property as though the Sample mortgage had never existed.

Defendant, Sample, for answer denies that plaintiff paid the Light judgment, and alleges that it was paid by the other judgment debtors, and ceased from that time to be a debt. In the alternative, and in case the court should hold that the judgment in question could, after thus being paid, operate as a judicial mortgage on the property of the judgment debtor, and canceled the notes, and really intended to extinguish them; if it is made to appear that such intervening title existed, the law will presume conclusively that the mortgagee could not have intended to postpone his mortgage to the subsequent title. Indeed, it may properly be said that when there is an intervening estate, there can be no merger from the mere union of the equitable and legal estates, since the doctrine of merger springs from the fact that, when the entire equitable and legal estates are united in the same person, there can be no occasion to keep them distinct, for ordinarily it could be of no use to the owner to keep up a charge upon an estate of which he was seised in fee simple; but if there is an outstanding intervening title, the foundation for the merger does not exist, and as matter of law, it is so declared. Of course, if the purpose to extinguish the mortgage, notwithstanding an intervening title, is clearly manifested, as when the very object is to postpone the first to a second mortgage, and the mortgagor is willing to surrender his interest to effect that object, it would be unjust to the mortgagor to uphold the mortgage, and it would not be done. Stanton v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272.

In the absence of an expressed intention to the contrary, the intention to keep the two estates separate will be implied and presumed when this is for the interest of the mortgagee, and there are many cases in which, in order to prevent injustice, equity will presume against a merger, although all the essential elements of a technical merger are present. Katz v. Obenchain, 48 Or. 352, 120 Am. St. Rep. 821, 85 Pac. 617.

So, in the absence of proof of actual intent on the part of the mortgagee that his mortgage lien be merged in the subsequently acquired equity of redemption, the court will presume against such merger, where the facts and situation of the parties render such presumption proper. Grellet v. Heilshorn, 4 Nev. 526.

Where, because of the interest of a junior lien upon the mortgaged property, it is advantageous for the holder of the senior mortgage, who acquires the equity of redemption, to preserve his mortgage lien, and no actual intention is expressed, or, as in the case of an infant mortgagee, the mortgagee is incapable of expressing an intention, the court will consider what is the most advantageous to the mortgagee, and will hold the mortgage to be merged or not in accordance with such interest. Forbes v. Moffatt, 18 Ves. Jr. 384, 11 Revised Rep. 222, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 380; Bell v. Tenny, 29 Ohio St. 240.

In the absence of fraud and unfairness, equity will presume against the merger of a mortgage in a subsequently acquired equity of redemption, where such presumption is necessary for the security of the mortgagee. Silliman v. Gammage, 55 Tex. 356.

And an intention not to merge may be inferred from the fact that there are outstanding junior liens which would take precedence if the senior mortgage merged in the equity of redemption. Townsend v. Provident Realty Co. 110 App. Div. 226, 96 N. Y. Supp. 1091.

So, a deed by a mortgagor in satisfaction of a deed of trust does not constitute a merger entitling the holder of a junior encumbrance to priority over a subsequent purchaser from the grantee, where there is no evidence of any intention to merge any other interest of the holder, if the first trust deed would be prejudiced by a merger. Collins v. Stocking, 98 Mo. 290, 11 S. W. 750.

But this presumption is not conclusive; it may be rebutted by evidence that would warrant a jury in finding that a merger had been expressly agreed to, or that the mortgagee's conduct and action were such as could be only fairly ascribed to an intention to merge. Pease v. Doane, 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 6, Stanton v. Thompson, supra.

b. Where mortgage is discharged or surrendered.

1. Doctrine that discharge or surrender does not affect priority.

Where the intention of the parties as to whether the mortgage title shall merge in then defendant alleges that such mortgage was inferior in rank to that held by him, which latter was recorded in 1905, and was the consideration of the transfer to him of the property affected by it; and he prays that his mortgage be recognized as superior to the other, and be enforced accordingly.

The note upon which the money was obtained with which the Light judgment was paid was made payable to the order of the bank, was signed by H. C. Stringfellow (either individually or as agent, we are unable to say), and bore the indorsement in blank of the plaintiffs. Under the law, as it now stands,—“a person placing his signature upon an instrument otherwise than as a maker, drawer, or acceptor, is deemed to be an indorser, unless he clearly indicates, by appropriate words, his intention to be bound in some other capacity.” Act No. 64, p. 157, of 1904, § 63.

As plaintiffs placed their names on the note in question (not being the makers) without indicating that they intended to be otherwise bound, their rights and obligations were those of indorsers, and ordinarily they would have been liable to the payee or subsequent holders only on proof of presentment and demand for payment and notice of dishonor. It appears that they waived presentment for payment, demand, notice, pleas of division, and discussion, etc.; but the fact remains that, apart from such waiver (which is included in the printed form upon which the title conveyed subsequently by the mortgagor is not expressly stated, it becomes a question of fact, although, as already seen, the very fact of the existence of a junior encumbrance raises a presumption against an intention to merge the title under the senior mortgage in that subsequently conveyed. The question has frequently arisen as to the effect of the circumstances or character of the transaction by which the title of the mortgagor passed to the mortgagee upon this presumption or in showing the intention of the parties. In considering these questions, the court has not always made it clear whether it was being considered as a question of fact or of law. The cases, however, are all grouped according to the character of the transaction or other circumstances, without reference to the manner in which the question was treated by the court.

By the weight of authority, a discharge by the mortgagee of his lien and the surrender of the evidence thereof to the mortgagor, in consideration of a conveyance of the interests of the latter to the former, does not operate as an extinguishment of the lien as against junior or intermediate encumbrances, and the senior lien still retains its priority. Different theories to sustain this doctrine are advanced by the cases, but with few exceptions they all reach this result.

It has been asserted that even though the mortgagee, through ignorance of the junior lien or through inadvertence, actually discharges his mortgage and cancels the notes secured thereby, with the intention to extinguish them, nevertheless, if it is made to appear that such intervening title exists, the law will presume conclusively that the mortgagee did not intend to postpone his mortgage to the subsequent title. Stanton v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272.

In Seiberling v. Tipton, 113 Mo. 373, 21 S. W. 4, holding that merely satisfying of record a deed of trust on receipt of a conveyance of the mortgaged premises does not operate as a merger as against a junior encumbrance existing at the time, but unknown to the holder of the senior encumbrance, it is said that, aside from giving notice, the statutory entry of satisfaction of a mortgage or deed of trust has no greater force or effect than a receipt acknowledging payment of the debt; the entry makes prima facie evidence of payment, but, like a receipt, it is open to explanation, and it may be shown by parol that the entry of satisfaction was made through some mistake of fact.

And the doctrine has been asserted that the holder of the purchase money mortgage does not waive satisfaction of or discharge his lien by taking a conveyance of the equity of redemption, although upon receipt of the conveyance he cancels the mortgage and note, since he previously held the mortgage to secure the debt, but afterwards he holds the land in place of the debt, which was satisfied. If the equity of redemption came to him burdened with a lien junior to the lien of his mortgage, he still holds the land with his prior preferred lien, notwithstanding the satisfaction of the debt by taking the equity of redemption. Fitts v. Davis, 42 Ill. 391.

And that, although a mortgagee releases his mortgage and cancels it of record on receipt of a conveyance of land in payment thereof, nevertheless the mortgage will be considered in existence as against a junior encumbrance of the existence of which the senior mortgagee had no knowledge at the time he released the mortgage. Woodhurst v. Cramer, 29 Wash. 40, 69 Pac. 501.

When there is nothing in a deed conveying the mortgaged premises from the mortgagor to the mortgagee showing an intention to merge the two estates, such intention is not proved by the surrender of the note and the release of the mortgaged property by the mortgagee, upon receipt of the deed. Moffet v. Farwell, 222 Ill. 543, 78 N. E. 925; Farrand v. Long, 184 Ill. 100, 56 N. E. 313; Richardson v. Hockenhull, 85 Ill. 124.

And merger is not established by the fact that the mortgagee accepted the deed in full satisfaction of his debt, and surrendered his note and mortgage. Silliman v. Gammage, 55 Tex. 366.

the note before us was executed), they were liable as indorsers only upon the failure of the maker to pay, and they acquired no rights against him until they did pay. The maker was therefore the principal debtor, and the circumstances that they aided him, by their signatures, to borrow the money from the bank, and bound themselves, as stated, for the debt, does not affect that question. The mortgage that was obtained from the bank was not theirs to do with as they pleased. It was obtained for the purpose of paying a judgment for which all the parties were bound, and could not have been used for any other purpose, and, having been used for that purpose, the fact that plaintiffs were subsequently compelled, on Stringfellow's default, to make good their indorsement to the bank, did not make it any the less a

That the mortgagee, upon accepting a conveyance of the mortgaged premises from the mortgagor, surrendered to the latter the notes secured by the mortgage, is no evidence of an intention to merge the mortgage in the after-acquired title. Hayden v. Lauffenburger, 157 Mo. 88, 57 S. W. 721.

So, the fact that the mortgagee took the property in full for his mortgage, and entered a discharge of the mortgage upon the record, is not a material circumstance in determining the question of merger, and does not affect the rule that a senior mortgage does not merge as against a junior lien where it is clearly against the interest of the holder of the former to presume an intention to merge. Stimpson v. Pease, 53 Iowa, 572, 5 N. W. 760.

But see Beacham v. Gurney, infra, 2, as to effect of release of senior mortgage with knowledge of junior lien.

Where all the evidence shows that, on account of subsequent liens upon the land, the mortgagee intended to and did hold the mortgage to protect himself against their enforcement, there is no merger, although the deed to the mortgagee recites that the consideration thereof is a satisfaction of the mortgage, and the mortgage is surrendered. Smith v. Swan, 69 Iowa, 412, 29 N. W. 402; Linscott v. Lamart, 46 Iowa, 312.

As against a junior encumbrance, the lien of the trustee is not in equity extinguished by a conveyance of the encumbered land to the holder of the trust deed; and this is true although the lien is formally released on the record. Sullivan v. Saunders, 66 W. Va. 350, — L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 66 S. E. 497, 19 Ann. Cas. 480.

Although a mortgage is discharged of record, equity will keep it alive when justice so requires, and it is not the intention of the parties that the mortgage be merged in a subsequent executed deed. Hanlon v. Doherty, 109 Ind. 37, 9 N. E. 782.

It is not necessary to prove that the entry of satisfaction was by mistake, for merger in such cases does not take away the first lien, even though all the evidences of the debt are purposely destroyed. Ibid.

In Lowman v. Lowman, 118 Ill. 582, 9 N. E. 245, it is asserted as a general rule that the doctrine of merger will not apply where a mortgagee receives a conveyance of the mortgaged property and discharges the mortgage, if he retains possession of the mortgage.

2. Doctrine that priority is lost.

It has been held that, in the absence of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

any proof of fraud, when the mortgagee intentionally cancels his mortgage and accepts a deed from the mortgagor of the mortgaged land, he takes subject to a junior recorded encumbrance, although he had no actual knowledge of the same. Frazee v. Inslee, 2 N. J. Eq. 239. In this case the mortgage held entitled to priority was a renewal of a mortgage which was originally the senior mortgage, but the priority of lien of which had been lost by the execution of the renewal, being the mortgage in question. By the holding equity was done in that the original senior mortgage was restored to priority by holding the renewal thereof had gained priority by the discharge of what had formerly been the junior mortgage, but which had gained priority by the renewal of the senior mortgage. This fact undoubtedly influenced the opinion.

And although a mere conveyance of the mortgaged premises to the mortgagee will not constitute a merger of the estates, yet, where the mortgagee discharges his mortgage of record and surrenders up the mortgage indorsing the same satisfied, the estates are merged, although the mortgagee is laboring under the mistaken belief that the holder of the junior encumbrance made no claims upon the land; and equity will refuse to restore the lien, since the mortgagee was guilty of culpable and inexcusable negligence in not ascertaining whether or not the junior encumbrancer would enforce his mortgage. Woodside v. Lippold, 113 Ga. 877, 84 Am. St. Rep. 267, 39 S. E. 400.

The conclusion is also reached in Errett v. Wheeler, 109 Minn. 157, 26 L.R.A. (N.S.) 816, 123 N. W. 414, that a mortgagee who releases and discharges his mortgage upon receipt of the conveyance of the mortgaged premises, with knowledge of an outstanding adverse claim, is not entitled to have his mortgage reinstated or the release and satisfaction set aside, in order that it take priority over such outstanding title; and the rule is asserted that while there can be no doubt of the authority of a court of equity in a proper case, to reinstate a satisfied mortgage or other lien upon real estate when it appears to have been given under a mistake, inadvertence, or procured by fraud, nevertheless, when it is voluntarily given by the mortgagee or other lawful owner of the mortgage, without payment being made, or when not necessary to protect some other interest, the equitable doctrine of subrogation can have no particular application in proceedings to set it payment with money borrowed by Stringfellow on their indorsement. Plaintiffs' position, so far as we can see, is no better, because of their having loaned their credit, than it would have been if they had loaned the money itself. And if they had taken the money from their pockets and loaned it to Stringfellow, and he and Mrs. Stringfellow and Miss Robinson had paid the Light judgment with it, that judgment would have been satisfied, and would at once have ceased to be a debt against those by whom it was thus paid, and, not being a debt, it could not have operated as a mortgage on their property. The judgment obtained by Light, after condemning the different parties, reads: "And it is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that sureties, J. C. Pugh and J. D. Wilkinson, be, and they are hereby, subrogated to all aside, except perhaps by analogy. It is not entirely clear what theory the court adopted in reaching its conclusion, since the distinction is apparently in the mind of the court and is drawn between substitution or subrogation, and the right to have a discharge of the mortgage set aside and canceled; but the question whether a discharge or release of the mortgage under the circumstances presented would constitute an extinguishment of the lien so as to prevent the holder of the mortgage from relying thereon, as against the outstanding title, seems not to have been considered, and was apparently not presented, the case being tried upon the theory of the applicability of the doctrine of subrogation, which, as the court points out, is not applicable to such a case.

Where it is agreed that the debt to the mortgagee shall be in full for all claims against the mortgagor, including the mortgage debt, which is to be satisfied and the note and mortgage delivered up, and this agreement is made with the full knowledge of the existence of a junior encumbrance on the mortgaged property, the senior mortgage is merged in the deed, and no longer takes priority over the junior mortgage. Beacham v. Gurney, 91 Iowa, 621, 60 N. W. 187.

3. Where discharge is procured by fraud.

Equity will cancel and set aside a satisfaction of a mortgage, and foreclose the same in behalf of the mortgagee, who was induced to cancel the mortgage in reliance upon a deed of the premises, without knowledge of a judgment lien thereon, the title being represented as clear. Hines v. Ward, 121 Cal. 115, 53 Pac. 427.

And although it appears that the mortgagee intended to accept a deed of the equity of redemption in consideration of the discharge of the mortgagor's debt, nevertheless, if he was induced to accept the deed in payment and discharge of his debt, through fraudulent representations of the mortgagor that the premises were otherwise free from encumbrance, equity will relieve him from the unconscionable position in which this fraud has placed him, by reinstating him in his rights under his note and mortgage as they existed before the taking of the deed. Howard v. Clark, 71 Vt. 424, 76 Am. St. Rep. 782, 45 Atl. 1042.

And where the discharge of a mortgage and the acceptance of a deed of the mortgaged land is procured by the fraud of the mortgagor acting in connection with the holder of the subsequent encumbrance as against such encumbrance, equity will set aside the cancellation and reinstate the mortgage. Young v. Hall, 31 N. J. Eq. 429.

Even though the mortgagee receives a deed of the mortgaged property with the understanding and upon the agreement that the mortgage debt is thereby satisfied, yet where this agreement is based upon false representations and assertions and covenants in the deed that the property is unencumbered, the mortgagee, as against a subsequent judgment lien, in equity will be permitted to revive his mortgage, and recover thereon as though the deed had not been made and the mortgage released. Vannice v. Bergen, 16 Iowa, 555, 85 Am. Dec. 531.

4. Where mortgage previously assigned as collateral.

A conveyance from the mortgagor to the original mortgagee does not constitute a merger where the latter had previously assigned it to a third person as collateral security, even though he discharged the mortgage. Brown v. Blydenburgh, 7 N. Y. 141, 57 Am. Dec. 506. Cases are not included which pass upon the question of merger by a conveyance to the original mortgagee after he has parted with all title to the mortgage.

c. Where mortgages gives or receives additional consideration.

In Illinois if the mortgagee accepts from the mortgagor a deed in foreclosure of his mortgage, it does not constitute a merger. Worcester Nat. Bank v. Cheeny, 87 Ill. 602. Nor where the purpose of the deed is to give the mortgagee additional security. Huebsch v. Scheel, 81 Ill. 281. Nor where there is no additional valuable consideration accruing to the mortgagee (see Illinois cases, supra, I.); but where the mortgagee receives other valuable consideration in addition to the equity of redemption, as the relinquishment of a contingent right of dower of the wife of the mortgagor or covenants of warranty by the mortgagor, the intention to merge will be presumed. Campbell v. Carter, 14 Ill. 286; Richardson v. Hockenhull, 85 Ill. 124; Shaver v. Williams, 87 Ill. 469.

In Campbell v. Carter, 14 Ill. 286, the mortgagee, after having recovered judgment the rights of plaintiff herein, on payment of the amount of this judgment, together with all costs."

In addition to which it appears that plaintiffs, a few days later, when the judgment was paid, obtained an instrument purporting to be a subrogation from the plaintiff. But the provision for the subrogation contained in the judgment was superfluous, since, upon payment of the judgment, they would have been subrogated by operation of law; and the instrument that they obtained from plaintiff was of no use, since plaintiff had no power to subrogate them to his rights in a judgment which they were paying for, and with money borrowed by, the other plaintiffs. What plaintiffs have paid, and all that they have paid, was, not the judgment in question, but a debt represented by a note dated January 15, 1908, made payable in thirty days, and signed by H. C. Stringfellow, agent, due to the Commercial National Bank, upon which note they were indorsers. The judgment in question had been paid in the manner stated, nearly eighteen months before.

Even, however, were it conceded that the Light judgment survives and operates as a judicial mortgage, the most that plaintiffs on his notes and the mortgage securing the same was endeavoring to enforce satisfaction thereof when he made arrangements with the mortgagor by which the latter conveyed to him by warranty deed the mortgaged premises, and in which the wife of the latter joined in order to bar her dower, this conveyance to be in satisfaction and discharge of the mortgage debt; and upon accepting the conveyance the mortgagee entered satisfaction of the judgment. This was held to be evidence of a merger, entitling the holder of a junior encumbrance to priority.

The fact that the mortgagee gave money consideration for the conveyance to him of the equity of redemption, and also surrendered the mortgage note, does not establish a merger as against the junior encumbrance, where the jury found as a matter of fact that the mortgage debt was not paid, and that the parties did not intend the transaction to operate in discharge of the mortgage. New England Jewelry Co. v. Merriam, 2 Allen, 390.

In the preceding case the court, after remarking that the finding of fact by a jury that there was no intention of merging a mortgage in a deed of the mortgaged property, although the mortgage was surrendered and a cash consideration also given for the deed, was conclusive on the question of merger, said that the mortgage and equity of redemption would not merge on account of the intervening junior encumbrance, and also that, as the mortgagee took possession of the premises after condition broken, his legal estate remained, notwithstanding the mortgage debt might have been afterwards paid or satisfied, unless discharged or reconveyed, and any remedy against him would be in equity, and not at law.

A deed to the mortgagee of the mortgaged premises, in consideration of some money and the release of the mortgage, does not merge the mortgage as against a junior lien. Rumpp v. Gerkens, 59 Cal. 496.

Nor does a conveyance by the mortgagor of the mortgaged premises to the assignee of the senior mortgage, in consideration of the sum due on the mortgage and a further sum paid, have the effect of extinguishing §9 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the mortgage debt and the lien of the mortgage. Bell v. Tenny, 29 Ohio St. 240.

And it does not constitute a merger for the mortgagee to purchase the equity of redemption, although he paid a valuable consideration therefor, but did not discharge the mortgage or surrender the same to the mortgagor. Gray v. Nelson, 77 Iowa, 63, 41 N. W. 566.

d. Where deed to mortgagee is invalid.

A mortgage is not merged where the deed conveying the equity of redemption to the mortgagee is invalid because fraudulent as to the creditors of the mortgagor. Hoyt v. Dimon, 5 Day, 479; Coleman & B. Co. v. Rice, 115 Ga. 510, 42 S. E. 5; First Nat. Bank v. Essex, 84 Ind. 144; Ladd v. Wiggin, 35 N. H. 421, 69 Am. Dec. 551. In the latter case it is said that avoiding the fraudulent conveyance revives the former lien and restores the parties to their original position.

Even though a mortgage would be merged in an unauthorized or fraudulent conveyance of the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, were the conveyance to stand, it would not merge where the conveyance is set aside. Corwin v. Collett, 16 Ohio St. 289.

e. Recitals in deed.

Where the intent to keep the mortgage alive appears upon the face of the instrument conveying the mortgaged property, this intent will be sustained. Hatz's Appeal, 40 Pa. 209. When not expressed, the question of intention is to be determined by the terms of the deed conveying the equity of redemption to the mortgagee, together with the surrounding facts and circumstances. Adams v. Angell, L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 634, 46 L. J. Ch. N. S. 352, 36 L. T. N. S. 334. But the mere recital in a deed conveying the mortgaged property to the mortgagee, that it is made subject to described junior encumbrances, does not operate to merge the senior mortgage as against such junior encumbrances. Ibid.

If no intention is expressed upon the face of the deed that the mortgage is to be could claim would be that the property be sold, subject to Samples mortgage as it existed at the date of the conveyance to him, as in such case his mortgage, which had been in a condition of suspended animation, would revive, and, as it seems to be understood that the property would fall considerably short of satisfying it, plaintiffs would get nothing. This view seems to have been first expressed by this court in the case of Millaudon v. Allard, 2 La. 547, where Martin, J., said: "But the appellant's counsel urges that the mortgage creditor who purchases the premises is as if subrogated to himself, and preserves his mortgage in regard of a posterior mortgage, and the confusion which results from the purchase suspends, indeed, his mortgage, but does not absolutely destroy it. He cannot have a mortgage on his own estate. This principle appears to us to be correctly established by Merlin. 13 Repertoire, verbo subrogation de personnes, § 4. He says the effect cannot have a longer duration than the cause. If the latter be temporary only, the former cannot be perpetual."

Which means that, whilst one cannot be, at the same time, owner and mortgagee of the same property, if the title which, apparently conveying perfect ownership, is discharged, and there is nothing in the circumstances of the case requiring that such an intention be imputed to the parties upon equitable grounds, the mere conveyance of land to a person holding a senior encumbrance thereon will not operate to merge the latter's mortgage as against a junior encumbrance, although the deed recites that it is given subject to the latter mortgage. Fowler v. Fay, 62 Ill. 375.

The mortgage will not merge in the subsequently acquired title of the mortgagor where the deed recognizes the mortgage, and the situation of the parties clearly indicates that there is no intention to allow a subsequent lien to take priority. Walker v. Goodsell, 54 Mo. App. 631.

Although a deed from the mortgagor to the mortgagee recites that the consideration thereof is a satisfaction of the mortgage, and the mortgage is surrendered, the titles are not merged where it clearly appears that, on account of subsequent liens upon the land, the mortgagee intended to and did hold the mortgage to protect himself against their enforcement. Smith v. Swan, 69 Iowa, 412, 29 N. W. 402; Linscott v. Lamart, 46 Iowa, 312.

And although a deed recites that it is executed to cancel a mortgage, the mortgage is not merged therein as to a subsequent lien, where, by agreement between the mortgagor and mortgagee, the latter retains the note and mortgage as a protection against such lien. Crosby v. Chase, 17 Me. 369.

But where the first mortgagee purchases the mortgaged premises, and takes a deed in which he assumes and agrees to pay other mortgages thereon, and hold the grantor remediless with reference thereto, his mortgage is merged in his deed, and the junior encumbrance is no longer affected thereby. Kneeland v. Moore, 138 Mass. 198.

So, acceptance of a warranty deed of the mortgaged land containing a clause that the mortgagee assumes a junior mortgage and agrees to pay the same, and the cancellation of the note and mortgage and delivery thereof to the mortgagor, will operate as a merger as to the junior mortgage. Ernst v. McChesney, 186 Ill. 617, 58 N. E. 399.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

f. Where intention is expressed.

If the intention is expressed, that will control; if not, the intention of the mortgagee will be presumed in accordance with his interests. Belknap v. Dennison, 61 Vt. 520, 17 Atl. 738.

Although ordinarily the fact of the existence of a junior lien raises a presumption that the holder of the senior mortgage does not intend to merge the same in a subsequently acquired title in the lienor, yet this presumption may be rebutted by clear proof that it was the intention of the parties that the mortgage should merge in the subsequently acquired title, as where the very object is to postpone a senior to a junior mortgage, and the mortgagor, in order to effectuate that object, surrenders or conveys to the holder of the senior mortgage his interest in the mortgaged property. Stanton v. Thompson, 49 N. H. 272.

So, where the mortgagee takes a deed of mortgaged premises and agrees to pay both prior and subsequent mortgages on the property, his lien will be regarded as merged in his deed, and the subsequent encumbrance will take priority. Brown v. Stead, 5 Sim. 535, 2 L. J. Ch. N. S. 45.

The conveyance by the mortgagor to the mortgagee of the former's interest in the mortgaged premises does not merge the titles, where the parties have expressly stipulated that the conveyance shall not have that effect. Agnew v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 24 S. C. 18, 58 Am. Rep. 237; Abbott v. Curran, 98 N. Y. 665.

And a mortgage does not merge in a subsequently acquired title to the property, where it is expressly agreed that the mortgagee shall hold the note and mortgage for the protection and fortification of his title against a junior lien on the property. Hulshoff v. Bowman, 19 Ohio C. C. 554, 10 Ohio C. D. 343.

So, a special agreement between the mortgagor and the mortgagee made upon the latter receiving a conveyance of the mortgaged premises from the former, that the estates are to be kept separate in order to enable the mortgagee to foreclose his mortgage and thus cut off a junior encumbrance, precludes the merger. Gibbs v. Johnson, 104 Mich. 120, 62 N. W. 145.

A. G. S.

supposed to destroy the mortgage by confusion, turns out to be no title or an imperfect title, the mortgage, which was suspended and apparently destroyed, upon the assumption of perfect ownership in the mortgagee, is revived; the cause of the supposed destruction no longer existing. This principle, we take it, underlies the decisions: In Judice v. Kerr, 8 La. Ann. 462, in which it appears that, though a conveyance from the husband to the wife was set aside, the right of the wife to assert her legal mortgage on the property so conveyed was reserved. In Wilson v. Curtis, 13 La. Ann. 601, where, it having been found that a sale by one Blacketer to Wilson of certain property which had been attached by Curtis on a claim against Blacketer was simulated and fraudulent, it was held that Wilson was entitled to be heard in the assertion of certain mortgage and privileged claims on the same property. In Chaffe v. Morgan, 30 La. Ann. 1307, in which it was held (quoting from the syllabus): "The setting aside, for any cause of the sale of an immovable, made by a debtor to his creditor, who had a mortgage on the immovable, will not impair any legal rights on the property which the creditor had in virtue of his mortgage."

In New Orleans Ins. Asso. v. Labranche, 31 La. Ann. 841, where the court said:

"Our [Revised Civil] Code provides, in article 3409, which is similar to Code Napoleon 2147: 'The servitudes and incorporeal rights which the third possessor holds on the property, before his possession of it, are revived, after his relinquishment or after the sale made under execution against him.' Under this unambiguous provision were Montegut evicted, by the benevolence of the lawmaker, would come the restitutio ad integrum. The annulment or rescission of the sale would have the effect of placing the parties in the position they held before the sale; each party being restored to the rights he then had, and abandoning those which had, ineffectually, been transported [transferred] to him."

And in the cases of Spencer v. Goodman, 33 La. Ann. 909; Dawson v. Thorpe, 39 La. Ann. 366, 1 So. 686; Gates v. Gaither, 46 La. Ann. 289, 15 So. 50; Harrison v. Ottman, 111 La. 740, 35 So. 844. And so, in the instant case, if the defendant did not, by virtue of the conveyance to him, get a perfect, unencumbered title to the property in question, his mortgage was not destroyed by confusion.

If he did get such a title, then the property is not encumbered by the judicial mortgage set up by plaintiffs.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

We therefore conclude that there is error in the judgment of the Court of Appeal, reversing the judgment of the District Court in favor of the defendant, and it is accordingly ordered, adjudged, and decreed that said judgment of the Court of Appeal be avoided and reversed, and that the judgment of the District Court be affirmed; plaintiffs to pay all costs.

Petition for rehearing denied May 24, 1909.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF LOUISIANA

v.

JOHN KEATINE, Appt.

(130 La. 434, 58 So. 139.)

Sunday — receiving verdict — validity.

There is nothing in act No. 6 of 1904 which adds to the pre-existing prohibitions against the performance of judicial acts on Sunday, and since the passage of that act, as before, though no judicial acts done on Sunday are valid, ministerial acts are. Hence, when a criminal case has been given to a jury, the verdict may be returned into, and received by, the court, on Sunday, though no judgment can be rendered thereon on that day.

(March 11, 1912.)

Headnotes by MONROE, J.

Note. — Receiving verdict on Sunday.

Earlier cases on this subject may be found in notes to Parsons v. Lindsay, 3 L.R.A. 658, and Henderson v. Reynolds, 7 L.R.A. 327.

By the common law Sunday was a non-judicial day, dies dominicus non est dies juridicus, and authorities which have looked upon the receiving of a verdict as a judicial act have held its reception on Sunday invalid. Nabors v. State, 6 Ala. 200; Weldon v. Colquitt, 62 Ga. 449, 35 Am. Rep. 128 (obiter); Shaw v. McCombs, 2 Bay, 232; Harper v. State, 43 Tex. 431.

But a distinction is made between judicial acts and those of a ministerial character; and it seems to be generally held that, in the absence of a statute, ministerial acts performed on Sunday are valid; consequently where a verdict is deemed a ministerial act, its reception on Sunday is held valid. Hodge v. State, 29 Fla. 500, 10 So. 556; State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 443; State v. Cauty, 41 La. Ann. 589, 6 So. 338; Burrage v. State, — Miss. —, 58 So. 217; Territory v. Nichols, 3 N. M. 103, 2 Pac. 78; State v. Straub, 16 Wash. 111, 47 Pac. 227.

So, some cases hold that a verdict may be received on Sunday on the ground of

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Judicial District Court for the Parish of St. John the Baptist convicting him of a felonious assault. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. H. N. Gautier for appellant.

Mr. G. A. Gondran, with Messrs. Walter Guion, Attorney General, and L. H. Marrero, Jr., for the State.

necessity (State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 443; Burrage v. State, — Miss. —, 58 So. 217; Territory v. Nichols, 3 N. M. 103, 2 Pac. 78; even though it is a judicial act (Hiller v. English, 4 Strobb. L. 486); and see note 7 L.R.A. 327.

And in some states the reception of a verdict is authorized by statute, either expressly (State v. Wilson, 121 Mo. 434, 26 S. W. 357; State v. Crisp, 126 Mo. 605, 29 S. W. 699; State v. Rover, 13 Nev. 17; Pulling v. People, 8 Barb. 384; Ex parte Tice, 32 Or. 179, 49 Pac. 1038); or by construction (Meece v. Com. 78 Ky. 586; Miligan v. Territory, 2 Okla. 164, 37 Pac. 1059).

Other cases, without discussing explicitly the grounds of their decisions, have held that verdicts were not invalid because received on Sunday. Stone v. United States, 167 U. S. 178, 42 L. ed. 127, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 778, affirming 12 C. C. A. 451, 29 U. S. App. 32, 64 Fed. 667; Chamblee v. State, 78 Ala. 466; Simmons v. State, 129 Ala. 41, 29 So. 929; Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S. E. 1, affirmed in 201 U. S. 638, 50 L. ed. 899, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 560, 5 Ann. Cas. 783; Baxter v. People, 3 Ill. 368; Joy v. State, 14 Ind. 139; Jones v. Johnson, 61 Ind. 257; State v. Atkinson, 104 La. 570, 29 So. 279 (obiter); Tuttle v. Tuttle, 146 N. C. 484, 125 Am. St. Rep. 481, 59 S. E. 1008; State v. Penley, 107 N. C. 808, 12 S. E. 455; State v. Varnado, 126 La. 732, 52 So. 1006; Shearman v. State, 1 Tex. App. 215, 28 Am. Rep. 402 (obiter); McKinney v. State, 8 Tex. App. 626; Powers v. State, 23 Tex. App. 42, 5 S. W. 153; Brown v. State, 32 Tex. Crim. Rep. 119, 22 S. W. 596; Moore v. State, 49 Tex. Crim. Rep. 499, 96 S. W. 321.

Where in a capital case a verdict is brought in and read on Sunday, in the presence of the associate judge, sheriff, jury, and defendant, and the jury discharged; and on the following Monday, the defendant being in open court, the verdict is there read and entered by the court and judgment pronounced,—such proceeding is regular. Sanford v. State, 143 Ala. 78, 39 So. 370.

So, where the court below commenced the final charge to the jury before 12 o'clock on Saturday night and concluded it after that hour, and the jury remained in their room until after the Sabbath had passed away and then returned their verdict, it was held in Gholston v. Gholston, 31 Ga. 625, that this did not vitiate the verdict, notwithstanding there may have been reason to believe that they had come to an

Monroe, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was charged with felonious assault by shooting, and, having been convicted and sentenced, presents his case to this court by means of certain bills of exception and an assignment of error, from which latter and from the face of the record it appears that the trial was in progreement on the Sabbath day, and notwithstanding the judge caused the jury, by consent of the parties, to come into court on the Sabbath, but, upon the withdrawal of the consent by one party, remanded them before the verdict had been read.

So, where claimant consented that a verdict might be returned into court in her absence, the fact that it was so returned on the Sabbath day is not cause for a new trial; it appearing that the jury had been previously sent out to make up their verdict and they did not agree upon the same until after the Sabbath began. Bernstein v. Myers, 99 Ga. 90, 24 S. E. 854.

And where in a justice's court a case on appeal was tried and submitted to a jury on Saturday, and, being unable to agree before the intervention of Sunday, the jury continued their deliberations until Sunday evening, when, having agreed, the court was opened, the verdict received, and the jurors discharged, such verdict so rendered and received was held legal. Weaver v. Carter, 101 Ga. 206, 28 S. E. 869.

In Johnston v. People, 31 Ill. 469, the court, in holding a recognizance taken on Sunday valid and binding, said that generally judicial acts cannot be performed on Sunday, yet, verdicts of juries have been received on that day and held valid.

Where the accused was tried at a special term of the court which expired Saturday night at 12 o'clock, and the jury, still being in the jury room, returned their verdict soon after that time, it was held in Bales v. Com. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 297, 11 S. W. 470, that the verdict was properly received, since the regular term having begun on the following Monday, the court did not lose jurisdiction of the case by the expiration of the special term.

Where the term legally expired at midnight Sunday, unless, in point of fact the court had adjourned earlier, the reception of the verdict on Sunday was, in Taylor v. Ervin, 119 N. C. 274, 25 S. E. 875, held legal.

In Hoghtaling v. Osborn, 15 Johns. 119, it was held proper to receive the verdict on Sunday, presuming that the jury were impeached before that day commenced.

So, in Hiller v. English, 4 Strobb. L. 486, it is held that where Sunday falls within a term, a verdict received on that day is valid.

In Huffman v. State, 28 Tex. App. 174, 12 S. W. 588, it was held not error to receive a verdict on Sunday, and in the absence of defendant's counsel, the defendant himself being present.

J. D. C.

ress on Saturday, June 17, 1911, and, save for two short recesses, continued, without interruption, until quite late that night, when the jury, having received the charge of the court, retired to deliberate upon their verdict, "and the court took a recess."

The minutes then continue as follows:

It being 12:15 A. M., the recess being over, the court resumed its business.

Present, counsel for the state; also present, the accused and his counsel. The jury came into court in charge of the sheriff, and, on being called and all present, through their foreman, presented the following verdict, to wit: "June 17, 1911—Guilty as charged. [Signed] J. N. Gaudet, Foreman."

The jury was then polled, the verdict on motion of the district attorney recorded, the accused remanded, and the jury discharged.

According to the minutes as we interpret them, the jury retired and found the verdict before midnight of Saturday, but the verdict was returned into and received by the court on Sunday morning, after a recess, which terminated at 12:15 A. M. The learned counsel for defendant contends that under the law as it now stands the verdict should be set aside, and he cites act No. 6 of 1904, which reads: "That, whenever the impaneling of a jury or the taking of evidence, on the trial of any case, shall have been begun, but not concluded, at the time at which there shall intervene any legal holiday or legal half holiday, it shall be lawful for the presiding judge, and within his discretion, to order said trial to be proceeded with upon said legal holiday, if not a Sunday or Christmas Day, or upon said legal half holiday, and all proceedings, thereafter had in the trial of said case, shall have the same force and effect as though had on a day not a legal holiday or legal half holiday."

And all laws in conflict are repealed.

We find nothing in the statute cited which adds to the pre-existing prohibitions against the performance of judicial acts on Sunday, the evident purpose being merely to allow such acts to be performed, under the conditions stated upon legal holidays, other than Sunday and Christmas Day.

In State v. Ford, 37 La. Ann. 466, however, in which the verdict though received and announced before midnight, was recorded a few minutes after that hour, on Sunday morning, this court quoted with approval the rule stated by Mr. Bishop, as follows: "Though Sunday is dies non juridicus, wherein no judicial act is valid, but ministerial acts are, a verdict received on Sunday is good, yet not a judgment on the verdict. And on Sunday the court may find that the jury cannot agree, and discharge them."

The ruling so made was approved in State v. Cauty, 41 La. Ann. 589, 6 So. 338, and in State v. Atkinson, 104 La. 570, 29 So. 279, though in the case last mentioned the verdict was returned on Thanksgiving Day. In State v. Varnado, 126 La. 742-743, 52 So. 1006, the verdict was received and recorded and the jury discharged on Sunday, and this court said: "It is settled beyond controversy that the receiving and recordation of a verdict on a Sunday or other dies non juridicus is permissible."

That it was not the purpose of act No. 6 of 1904 to change the rule upon the subject is evident from the language: "Whenever the impaneling of a jury or the taking of evidence, on the trial of any case, shall have been begun, but not concluded," etc.

In a case therefore such as this, where the impaneling of the jury and the taking of the evidence has been concluded, and the jury has found the verdict, before the advent of the dies non juridicus, the law finds no application. In State v. Duncan, 118 La. 702, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 791, 43 So. 283, 11 Ann. Cas. 557 (to which the learned counsel refers), the point presented for decision, and decided, was that act No. 3, of 1904, making "general election" days legal holidays, did not render void judicial proceedings held on a day upon which was held an election less than a general election. And, whilst it was said that a sanctity is attributed to Sunday, apart from any statutory enactments, there is nothing in the opinion from which the idea can be deduced that, therefore, the return of a verdict on that day would be unlawful.

A motion for new trial was filed on the ground that one of the veniremen, selected as a juror, had, before being called to serve, expressed an opinion as to the guilt of the defendant, and had said that, if he were chosen as a juror, he would find guilty as charged. But, on the hearing of the motion, defendant entirely failed to sustain the allegation to that effect.

Defendant was allowed to amend his motion on the hearing of it in order to charge that one of the jurors was asleep during the trial; and there was some testimony given to that effect, as, also, some to the contrary. The trial judge, in signing what are called "the consolidated bills of exception," says: "The court will reiterate what it said in its oral reasons for refusing the new trial relative to the charge that Dr. Winceslas Lions, one of the jurors, slept during the trial of the case. The court said that this charge was a myth; that this juror sat on the front bench, at the very feet of the judge, where he could be seen at all times during the progress of the trial; and that such an attempted misconduct on his part, or on the part of any other juror, would have met with a most severe reprimand at the hands of the court."

The juror who sat next to Dr. Lions fully corroborates the statement of the judge. We are therefore, of opinion that the charges contained therein were not well founded, and that the motion for new trial was properly overruled. There are some other matters presented by bills of exception, but they have been practically abandoned, and are without merit.

The judgment appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied, April 8, 1912.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

HERBERT A. FOGG

v.

LINWOOD C. TYLER.

PETITION OF GEORGE W. MAXFIELD.

(— Me. —, 82 Atl. 1008.)

Bank — special deposit — recovery from receiver.

1. A package of bills marked with the owner's initials, and delivered to a bank

Note. — When is a bank deposit special.

For the earlier cases upon the question when a deposit in bank is special so that the title remains in the depositor, see note to Mutual Acci. Asso. v. Jacobs, 16 L.R.A. 516.

"A special deposit is where the whole contract is that the thing deposited shall be safely kept, and that identical thing returned to the depositor." 1 Morse, Banks & Bkg. 4th ed. § 183.

"It is only where the special money or thing deposited is received by the bank to be kept to itself and returned in corpore on demand, that the deposit can be claimed to be special." Re Mutual Bldg. Fund Soc., 2 Hughes, 374, Fed. Cas. No. 9,976.

"If the agreement between the parties is that the identical coin or currency shall be laid aside and returned, then it is a special deposit. But if the agreement is that the money shall be returned not in the specific coin or currency deposited, but in an equal sum, it is a general deposit. In either case the money is deposited for safe-keeping, and the only distinction between the two kinds of deposit is in the character of the return that is to be made thereof to the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for safe-keeping, and for which a receipt stating that fact is executed by the cashier, is a special deposit, which the owner is entitled to have returned to him in case the assets of the bank pass into the hands of a receiver.

Trusts — following trust funds — identification.

2. That a package of bills delivered to a bank for safe-keeping as a special deposit cannot be identified when the assets pass into the hands of a receiver does not destroy the prior right of the owner to payment out of such assets, if the cash on hand never fell below the amount of the deposit after it was made.

(April 8, 1912.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Penobscot County for the opinion of the Law Court of a petition for an order directing the receiver of the bankrupt firm of Tyler, Fogg, & Company to deliver to petitioner a special deposit of money which he had made in the bank. Granted.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. C. Ryder, for petitioner:

The deposit by the petitioner of the package of money for safe-keeping was a special deposit, and the title to the property remained in the petitioner.

3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 824; Mutual Acci. Asso. v. Jacobs, 141 Ill. 261, 16 L.R.A. 516, 33 Am. St. Rep. 302, 31 N. E. 414; Dawson v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 297; Alston v. State, 92 Ala. 124, 13 L.R.A. 659, 9 So. 732; McLain v. Wallace, 103 Ind. 562, 5 N. E. 911; Pattison v. Syracuse Nat. Bank, 80 N. Y. 82, 36 Am. Rep. 582; depositor, whether it shall be returned in the identical thing deposited, or in kind." Warren v. Nix, 97 Ark. 374, 135 S. W. 896.

So, it has been held that the deposit of a sum of money in a bank to secure the purchase of certain city bonds, in the event they are awarded to the bank, the money to be returned to the depositor in the event the bonds are not awarded to the bank, or upon the depositor's taking up the last bond of the issue, in the event the bonds are so awarded, is a special deposit which may be recovered from a receiver of the bank, subsequently appointed, after the depositor has bought and taken up from the bank all of such bonds as are offered for delivery. Miami v. Shutts, 59 Fla. 462, 51 So. 929.

And a sum of money in gold coin, delivered to the acting president of a bank in his room, as a pledge to protect the bank from liability or loss under a contract to furnish a bail bond, for which coin a certificate of deposit or receipt is executed by the vice president and teller of the bank, stating that it is payable only on release of bond and not subject to check, and which coin afterwards, but without the knowledge or consent of the depositor, goes into

State v. Carson City Sav. Bank, 17 Nev. 146, 30 Pac. 703.

Tyler, Fogg & Co. became a trustee of the fund and answerable as such to the petitioner.

Lynam v. Belfast Nat. Bank, 98 Me. 448, 57 Atl. 799; Boettcher v. Colorado Nat. Bank 15 Colo. 16, 24 Pac. 582.

So far as appears, all other moneys received on deposit by the firm prior the time its vaults were closed, became the property of the firm.

National Mahaiwe Bank v. Peck, 127 Mass. 298, 34 Am. Rep. 368; Wasson v. Lamb, 120 Ind. 514, 6 L.R.A. 191, 16 Am. St. Rep. 342, 22 N. E. 729; Camp v. First Nat. Bank, 44 Fla. 497, 103 Am. St. Rep. 173, 33 So. 241; Reynes v. Dumont, 130 U. S. 354, 32 L. ed. 934, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep.

486; Clark v. Northampton Nat. Bank, 160 Mass. 26, 35 N. E. 108; Straus v. Tradesmen's Nat. Bank, 122 N. Y. 379, 25 N. E. 372; School Dist. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Mass. 174; Grissom v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 87 Tenn. 350, 3 L.R.A. 273, 10 Am. St. Rep. 669, 10 S. W. 774.

If the money deposited by Mr. Maxfield can be traced into the general fund of the bankrupt firm, and at no time was that fund less than the amount of the special deposit, the petitioner need go no further.

Houghton v. Davenport, 74 Me. 590; Cushman v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 353, 50 Atl. 50; First Nat. Bank v. Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. 108 Me. 79, 79 Atl. 4.

A special deposit cannot be used or appropriated by a bank without a breach of trust.

the bank vaults through the regular channels, is a special deposit, to the return of which the depositor is entitled, upon the release of the bond, after the bank has become insolvent. Anderson v. Pacific Bank, 112 Cal. 598, 32 L.R.A. 479 53 Am. St. Rep. 228, 44 Pac. 1063.

And money deposited in a bank by a prospective purchaser of a machine, to be paid over to the vender provided the machine fulfils the guaranty, after trial, and for which the bank cashier executes a certificate of deposit payable to the vender, provisionally, which certificate is retained by the bank, the depositor receiving no deposit slip, certificate of deposit, or other writing for the money deposited, is a special deposit which may be recovered as a preferential claim, in case of the appointment of a receiver for the bank. Shopert v. Indiana Nat. Bank, 41 Ind. App. 474, 83 N. E. 515.

Likewise, money or checks for a part payment on the purchase price of real estate, placed by the depositor in a bank for safe-keeping until the approval of the abstract of title, or the happening of some other contingency, and not to be checked out by him; or placed in the bank under an agreement that it shall act as bailee or agent, and deliver the money to the seller under certain conditions, or apply it to some special purpose,—is a special deposit, which the bank, as agent or bailee, has no right to use or mingle with its own funds. Covey v. Cannon, — Ark. —, 149 S. W. 514.

And money left with a bank to be paid to a certain person on presentation by him of a warranty deed conveying certain land to the depositor, with an abstract showing good title in the grantor, for which money the bank gives a receipt, reciting that it is received for such purpose, constitutes a special deposit which the owner is entitled to recover in case the assets of the bank pass into the hands of a receiver, although the money, without the knowledge or consent of the owner, is treated by the bank the same as any general deposit and is mixed with the general funds of the bank. Kimmel v. Dickson, 5 S. D. 221, 25 L.R.A. 309, 49 Am. St. Rep. 869, 58 N. W. 561.
su L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where a debtor, desiring to pay a creditor in another city, deposited the amount of his debt in a bank, to be by it transmitted and paid to the creditor, and the bank ordered another bank in the creditor's city to pay the amount to the creditor and charge the same to it, the refusal of the creditor, upon demanding payment of the amount from the second bank, to accept from the latter in payment either credit upon his own account with it or exchange on the first bank, fixes the character of the order of the first bank to the second as a special deposit for the creditor, for which, as such, he is entitled to maintain an action against a receiver of the second bank. Moreland v. Brown, 30 C. C. A. 23, 56 U. S. App. 722, 86 Fed. 257.

And a draft sent to a bank, which is the correspondent of a certain other bank, for the credit of the account of the latter bank, for the use of the depositor's agent, is a special deposit, which may be recovered by the depositor from the first bank, in case of the insolvency of the second before the deposit has been actually transmitted to it, or drawn out by it, for the use of the agent of the depositor. American Exch. Nat. Bank v. Loretta Gold & S. Min. Co. 165 Ill. 103, 56 Am. St. Rep. 233, 46 N. E. 202.

And a remittance to a bank for the account of another bank, of which the first bank is correspondent, with instructions to the second bank to pay the amount thereof to a third bank, is a special deposit, made for a particular purpose, and in the nature of a bailment, the amount of which the remitter, never having parted with his title thereto, is entitled to recover from the bank which received credit therefor, in case the latter, being insolvent, but having more than the amount of this special deposit in its vaults at all times after the receipt thereof, has suspended payment and closed its doors without having paid the amount as instructed. Montagu v. Pacific Bank, 81 Fed. 602.

A deposit is also special, so that it can

Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78, 14 Am. St. Rep. 332, 16 Atl. 497.

Trust money mingled with trustee's money may be followed.

2 Lewin, Tr. 894; 2 Perry, Tr. 837, 838; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; First Nat. Bank v. Hummel, 14 Colo. 259, 8 L.R.A. 788, 20 Am. St. Rep. 257, 23 Pac. 986; Independent Dist. v. King, 80 Iowa, 497, 45 N. W. 908; Carley v. Graves, 85 Mich. 483, 24 Am. St. Rep. 99, 48 N. W. 710; Frith v. Cartland, 2 Hem. & M. 420, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 301, 11 Jur. N. S. 238, 12 L. T. N. S. 175, 13 Week. Rep. 493; Pennell v. Deffell, 4 De G. M. & G. 382, 1 Eq. Rep. 579, 23 L. J. Ch. N. S. 115, 18 Jur. 273, 1 Week. Rep. 499.

In equity money may be followed which has no earmarks.

Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 415, 42 L. T. N. S. 421, 28 Week. Rep. 732; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215; Harrison v. Smith, 83 Mo. 210, 53 Am. Rep. 571; Taylor v. Plumer, 3 Maule & S. 562, 2 Rose, 415, 16 Revised Rep. 361; Lynam v. Belfast Nat. Bank, 98 Me. 448, 57 Atl. 799.

Mr. Charles H. Bartlett, receiver in propria persona:

The transaction disclosed by the evidence was simply a gratuitous bailment.

4 Words & Phrases, 3160; Black's Law Dict. 2d ed. 114.

be recovered from a receiver of the bank in preference to claims of general creditors, where a certified check, which a bank refuses to receive on general deposit to the credit of an undesirable customer, is left, indorsed payable to the bank, for the specific purpose of taking up a check of like amount which the customer has drawn against the bank, with the paying teller, who gives a receipt therefor, and for more than four months carries the check in his cash, with a memorandum expressing the purpose thereof, after which he sends the check forward through the clearing house for collection, and in its place causes a certificate of deposit to be made out, reciting that the bank has deposited the amount of the check, and showing by indorsement on the back that it represents the said check, and which is retained until it comes into the hands of the receiver. Star Cutter Co. v. Smith, 37 Ill. App. 212.

And a fund placed in a trust company to the credit of a bank for the sole purpose of paying drafts drawn by a construction company on the bank in payment of items of construction in connection with a certain railway, the bank having agreed that the fund shall be used for no other purpose, constitutes a special deposit, to which the holders of such drafts for construction work are entitled, to the extent of the amount of their respective drafts, upon the failure of the bank. McBride v. American R. & Light-ing Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 229.

But a bank deposit is not necessarily special and may be shown to be general, although the pass book given by the bank to the depositor describes the deposit as a special deposit, and the bank also furnishes the depositor with a form of a filled out check to be used in drawing on the deposit, upon which is written the words "special deposit." Carr v. State, 104 Ala. 43, 16 So. 155.

And a deposit of money paid into a savings bank over the counter, no pains being taken to keep it separate from other money or to preserve its identity, is not a special deposit, though made pursuant to an advertisement of a bank, which had suspended payments over its counter, that it would resume business "by receiving special, separate deposits in trust to new account, pledging the bank to use the deposits only in payment of checks against that new account." Re Mutual Bldg. Fund Soc. 2 Hughes, 374, Fed. Cas. No. 9,976.

So, money deposited in a bank by the clerk of a court, who is also register in chancery, pursuant to a statute authorizing him to deposit in bank all moneys brought into court and paid to him by or for any suitor, which money is not treated by the bank as a special deposit, but is mingled with the general funds of the bank, does not constitute a special deposit. Retan v. Union Trust Co. 134 Mich. 1, 95 N. W. 1006.

And money deposited in a bank by an executor to the credit of the estate of the deceased, subject to checks drawn by the executor in his official capacity, and without any promise on the part of the bank to keep the identical money and to return it to him, is not a special deposit, although made with the knowledge of the bank that the money is a trust fund held by the executor. Officer v. Officer, 120 Iowa, 389, 90 Am. St. Rep. 365, 94 N. W. 947.

Where, pending litigation over the question of title and ownership of certain land in the possession of a tenant, it was agreed between the parties that the tenant should deposit in a certain bank the money representing the landlord's share of the rentals arising from the land during the pendency of the litigation, to abide the final decision of the controversy over the title, and then to go to the successful party, and there was no express agreement or understanding between the claimants and the bank that the deposit should be special, it is merely a general deposit. Minard v. Watts, 186 Fed. 245.

And money left with a bank for future investment in a real estate mortgage, which is entered and posted in the books of the bank the same as any regular deposit, and mingled with the funds of the bank, and for which

A special deposit must be traced like other trust property.

Butler v. Sprague, 66 N. Y. 392; Italian Fruit & Importing Co. v. Penniman, 100 Md. 698, 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 252, 61 Atl. 694.

If the petitioner be entitled to receive his property, it must be on the ground of identification, and not on the ground of preference as a creditor.

Bromley v. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Wis. 562, 79 N. W. 741; Re First State Bank, 149 Iowa, 662, 129 N. W. 70; Crawford County v. Strawn, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1100, 84 C. C. A. 553, 157 Fed. 49; Wetherell v. O'Brien, 140 Ill. 146, 33 Am. St. Rep. 221, 29 N. E. 904.

The burden is on the petitioner to identify his property or at least to trace it into some specific fund on which equity can impress a trust.

Goodell v. Buck, 67 Me. 514; Portland & H. S. B. Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370; Houghton v. Davenport, 74 Me. 590; Cushman v. Goodwin, 95 Me. 353, 50 Atl. 50; First Nat. Bank v. Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. 108 Me. 79, 79 Atl. 4; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L.R.A. 570, 23 N. E. 1005; Lowe v. Jones, 192 Mass. 94, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487, 116 Am. St. Rep. 225, 78 N. E. 402, 7 Ann. Cas. 551; Hewitt v. Hayes, 205 Mass. 356, 137 Am. St. Rep. 448, 91 N. E. 332; Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352, 27 Atl. 443; Moore v. Taylor, 251 Ill. 468, 96 N. E. 229; Bishop v. Mahoney, 70 Minn. 238, 73 N. W. 6; Jones v. Chesebrough, 105 Iowa, 303, 75 N. W. 97; Twohy Mercantile Co. v. Melbye, 78 Minn. 357, 81 N. W. 20; Bradley v. Chesebrough, 111 Iowa, 126, 82 N. W. 472; Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; Re Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, 49 L. J. Ch. N. S. 415, 42 L. T. N. S. 421, 28 Week. Rep. 732; Re Mulligan, 116 Fed. 715; 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1120; 1 Perry, Tr. 6th ed. § 128; 2 Perry, Tr. 6th ed. § 828, note p. 1361; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 1048, note F.

When the funds of several cestuis que trust are commingled, in the absence of evidence, withdrawals from the fund are presumed to be made in the same order in which they were deposited.

28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 1116, note 4; Hewitt v. Hayes, 205 Mass. 365, 137 Am. St. Rep. 448, 91 N. E. 332; Clayton's Case, 1 Meriv. 572.

Mr. Edgar M. Simpson for committee of unsecured creditors.

Whitehouse, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition filed by George W. Maxfield in the matter of the receivership of the depositor receives an ordinary pass book, in which the money is credited to him and charged to the bank, does not constitute a special deposit, which the depositor is entitled to recover from an assignee of the bank after its insolvency, in preference to other creditors. Wetherell v. O'Brien, 140 Ill. 146, 33 Am. St. Rep. 221, 29 N. E. 904, reversing 41 Ill. App. 142.

Likewise, a deposit of money in a bank to secure a surety on a bond, for which the depositor receives a duplicate deposit slip bearing a written memorandum to that effect, and against which he subsequently draws a check payable to "certificates of deposit," for which he receives two certificates of deposit, one to be held by the surety and the other to secure another set of bondsmen,—is not a special deposit, although the depositor did not understand the force and effect of the duplicate deposit slip and of the check when he received the one and signed and delivered the other, but thought the papers were merely receipts for the money. Dearborn v. Washington Sav. Bank, 13 Wash. 345, 42 Pac. 1107.

And a roll of bills, neither wrapped nor tied nor inclosed within any kind of receptacle, left at a bank by the owner, without expecting a return of the identical roll of bills, but with the statement that he believes he will leave it for a few days and that he wants the bank to keep it for a few days, for which he is given an ordinary pass book in which the transaction is entered 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

as an ordinary deposit, no request being made that the money be kept apart from the funds of the bank, no special agreement being made as to the character of the deposit, and ordinary deposit slips being prepared at the time, from which the books of the bank are afterward written up,—is not a special deposit, to the return of which the depositor is entitled upon the failure of the bank and the appointment of a receiver therefor, although he says at the time of the deposit, that he does not want a check book, because he intends drawing all the money in a few days, and that it is not necessary that he have a bank book; and further, that he does not want to become a regular depositor at the bank. State ex rel. Coleman v. Dickerson, 71 Kan. 769, 81 Pac. 497.

A deposit of a draft in a bank to the credit of a pledgee of goods which the depositor desires to purchase, made for the sole purpose, which is made known to the bank, of obtaining the release of the goods from the custody of the pledgee, but without special instructions to the bank in regard to it, is not a special deposit, in the nature of a bailment, which will entitle the owner to priority over other general creditors of the bank, in case the bank fails and is placed in the hands of a receiver before the proceeds of the draft, which is forwarded for collection and duly paid, are returned to the bank. Schofield Mfg. Co. v. Cochran, 119 Ga. 901, 47 S. E. 208.

of Tyler, Fogg, & Company, asking the court to issue an order directing the receiver of that firm to restore to him a package of money containing $500 in bills, which the petitioner deposited with the cashier of the firm for safe-keeping April 22, 1911.

It is contended on the part of the petitioner that this was a special deposit, which was not to be mingled with the general funds of the bank and form a part of its disposable capital, but was to be kept by it, and be specifically returned. On the other hand, it is contended in behalf of the receiver that this was an ordinary general deposit of money with the bank, which transferred the title to the bank and created the relation of debtor and creditor between the bank and the petitioner.

It is not in controversy that on the 22d day of April, 1911, the petitioner, George W. Maxfield, hastily entered the banking rooms of Tyler, Fogg, & Company, and delivered to the cashier a package of bills containing $500, taking from him a receipt of the following tenor:

April 22, 1911.

Received of George W. Maxfield $500 for safe-keeping.

$500. P. pro. Tyler, Fogg, & Co.,
Ralph P. Preble, Cashier.

And a sum of money deposited in a bank, with a contract for the drilling of a well, to secure the payment to the contractor of the agreed consideration for the performance of the contract, which sum is not intended to be kept separate from the other funds of the bank, but is treated the same as moneys received from other depositors, is not a special deposit, although entered by the bank on its books in what it calls a "trust fund account." Butcher v. Butler, 134 Mo. App. 61, 114 S. W. 564.

Where a bank, having an excess of currency, but being short of exchange, draws a draft upon another bank, where the conditions are the reverse, and sends it currency to meet the draft when it is returned in the course of business, the currency thus sent does not constitute a special deposit. Bank of Blackwell v. Dean, 9 Okla. 626, 60 Pac. 226.

And a general deposit, evidenced by an ordinary certificate of deposit, does not become special, so that it may be reclaimed out of the general funds of the bank in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of creditors, by reason of a mere unfulfilled promise of the bank to put away the amount thereof in a separate package and keep it until the depositor shall come again for it as he needs it. Bayor v. American Trust & Sav. Bank, 157 Ill. 62, 41 N. E. 622.

But a certain sum in currency, delivered to one of a partnership conducting a bank, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

According to the testimony of the petitioner, the deposit was made under the following circumstances: He received a telegram in the early afternoon of Saturday, April 22d, requesting his presence in New York the next morning, and, in order to comply with this request, it would be necessary for him to take the 1:50 train at Bangor in seventeen minutes from the time he received the telegram. He had lately received the package of $500 in bills from the Augusta Trust Company, with the ordinary bank wrapper around it marked "$500." On this wrapper, he marked his initials, "G. W. M.," with a pencil, and on his way to the railroad station stepped into the banking rooms of Tyler, Fogg, & Company, and delivered the package to the cashier, Mr. Preble, stating that he wanted to leave that money there; that he didn't want to buy anything, and didn't want to sell anything; that he simply wanted to leave that package there until he got back from New York. The cashier replied: "Mr Maxfield, you can have the money any moment you call for it." The petitioner testifies that the cashier started to open the package, and he said to him: "Don't meddle with that. Don't meddle with that. That is all right." "He says, 'All right, I just wanted to count it,' and he counted in his private office at the bank, by one about to lease property, to be held as security for the faithful performance of the covenants of the lease, for which a receipt stating that fact is executed by the partner in the name of the partnership, and which is afterwards, though without the knowledge or acquiescence of the parties to the lease, turned over to one of the tellers and by him mingled with the funds of the bank, and accounted for on the books of the bank by a certificate of deposit, payable to the bankers, which is never delivered to anyone, but is pinned to the duplicate, in the possession of the bank, of the receipt given to the depositor, while not a special deposit in the sense that the transaction is a mere bailment for the safe-keeping of the money for the depositor, where the identical thing is to be returned to him, does constitute a trust fund, and does not belong to the bank as a part of its general fund, and may be recovered, in case of the failure of the bank, if the fund, though not the identical money, can be traced and identified. Woodhouse v. Crandall, 197 Ill. 104, 58 L.R.A. 385, 64 N. E. 292.

As to the measure of care required of a bank in keeping special deposits, see note to Gray v. Merriam, 32 L.R.A. 769.

As to the duty of a bank as to the payment of money held as bailee, see note to People's Nat. Bank v. Wheeler, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 816.

A. C. W.

it and wrote the receipt pretty fast; for I had only seven minutes."

There is no necessary conflict between the testimony of the petitioner and that of the cashier in relation to the material facts. The cashier does not recollect seeing the initials of Mr. Maxfield upon the bank wrapper, but would not say they were not there. He also admits that it would be his natural course to put a strap around the bills and put them away as a package, but would not say that he did not put the same strap around the package, if he took it off. The cashier also states that he does not recollect the petitioner's request that he should not meddle with the package.

The petitioner returned from New York on the next Saturday afternoon, April 29th, but not in season to call for his package of money that day. The great fire of April 30th occurred the next day (Sunday), and rendered it impossible to open the vault of the firm until May 25th. But, before the vault was opened, the petitioner made a demand upon the senior member of the firm for his money, and was informed that it would be delivered to him as soon as the vault was opened. But, before the opening of the vault, the firm was dissolved by a decree of court, and a receiver appointed, who took over all the assets of the firm. From the time the money was deposited with the firm, April 22d until the close of the banking hours on April 29th, cash was received and paid out by the firm in the usual course of its banking business. When the vault was opened by the receiver, there was on hand in the vault in cash $1,620.21, and at no time after the petitioner's deposit to the time the assets were taken over by the receiver was there less than $500.

At the time the vault was opened, there were two $500 packages in it; but the cashier was unable to state whether either of them had the petitioner's initials upon it or not. The cash was kept in the vault, and the checks received were deposited daily with the Kenduskeag Trust Company; and at the time the receiver took possession there was on deposit in that company the sum of $2,859.55 in addition to the amount of cash, above stated, in the vault of Tyler, Fogg, & Company. The cashier expressly states that, after he counted the petitioner's money, he deposited it in the cash drawer, where all the cash receipts were deposited that were received during the week following the deposit in question; but there is no evidence that any other package of money was deposited that week expressly "for safe-keeping," or under circumstances similar to §9 L.R.A. (N.S.) those of the petitioner's deposit. So far as appears, all other moneys received by the firm prior to the closing of its vault were general deposits, which created the relation of debtor and creditor between the depositor and the firm.

In response to an inquiry by counsel for the defendant whether, in his opinion, judging from all he knew of the dealings in the bank, the petitioner's package was in the bank at the time the vault was closed, the cashier says: "Couldn't state; I have no opinion on that subject."

At the close of the testimony, by agreement of the parties, the questions involved were reported for the determination of the law court.

It is well-recognized and familiar law that "deposits made with bankers are either general or special. In the case of a special deposit, the bank merely assumes the charge or custody of property, without authority to use it; and the depositor is entitled to receive back the identical money or thing deposited. In such case, the right of property remains in the depositor, and, if the deposit is of money, the bank may not mingle it with its own funds. The relation created is that of bailor and bailee, and not that of creditor and debtor." Alston v. State, 92 Ala. 124, 13 L.R.A. 659, 9 So. 732; 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 824; McLain v. Wallace, 103 Ind. 562, 5 N. E. 911, 912; Pattison v. Syracuse Nat. Bank, 80 N. Y. 82-90, 36 Am. Rep. 582.

In Mutual Acci. Asso. v. Jacobs, 141 Ill. 261, 16 L.R.A. 516, 33 Am. St. Rep. 302, 36 N. E. 414, the court said: "As we understand the question, there is a wide difference between a special and a general deposit, as those terms are understood, not only by bankers, but by the public who are transacting business daily with banks. Where money of any description is deposited in a bank, and the identical gold, silver, or bank bills which were deposited are to be returned to the depositor, and not the equivalent, the deposit will be special. . . . Where . . . a package of bills or currency is received in the bank as a special deposit, the identical money to be returned, the bank has no authority to use the money in its business."

So, in National Mohaiwe Bank v. Peck, 127 Mass. 298, 34 Am. Rep. 368, the court said: "Money deposited in a bank does not remain the property of the depositor, upon which the bank has a lien only; but it becomes the absolute property of the bank. . . . The bank being the absolute owner of the money deposited, and, being a mere debtor to the depositor for his balance of account, holds no property in which the depositor has any title or right." See also Grissom v. Commercial Nat. Bank, 87 Tenn. 350, 3 L.R.A. 273, 10 Am. St. Rep. 669, 10 S. W. 774; School Dist. v. First Nat. Bank, 102 Mass. 174; Clark v. Northampton Nat. Bank, 160 Mass. 26, 35 N. E. 108. In Boettcher v. Colorado Nat. Bank, 15 Colo. 16, 24 Pac. 582, the court thus speaks of a special deposit: A deposit is not general, but a trust fund, when there is an expressed agreement to that effect, or there are circumstances which give to the transaction the nature of a special deposit.

When these well-settled rules of law, which are well understood by men of affairs and constantly observed in the practical management of banking business, are applied to the facts and circumstances, above stated, in the case at bar, it is the opinion of the court that the plaintiff's contention must be sustained, and that his delivery of the package of $500 in bills to the cashier of Tyler, Fogg, & Company, must be deemed a special deposit, which created the relation of bailor and bailee between the parties, and not a general deposit, which created the relation of debtor and creditor between them. It became a special trust fund, to be held by the bank for the petitioner, and restored to him on demand a few days later. It did not become a part of the general funds of the bank, to be used in the conduct of its business.

The law prescribes no particular formula for the contract involved in making a special deposit. Like all true contracts, it grows out of the mutual intention and understanding of the parties; and the sources of evidence and means of proof are no more difficult or complex than in most other inquiries constantly arising in the courts. The purpose and terms of the deposit may be explicitly stated, or the intention of the parties may be inferred from their declarations, considered in connection with their conduct and all of the circumstances. In this case, the declarations of the petitioner at the time of the delivery of the money to the cashier unmistakably show that he understood the deposit to be a special one; and that the identical money was to be returned to him on demand. The receipt written by the cashier himself, stating expressly that the money was received "for safe-keeping," is of the highest significance in its tendency to prove that the cashier had the same understanding of it. The term "safe-keeping" aptly expressed the duty imposed upon the cashier as bailee of a special deposit, but was wholly inappropriate and superfluous as applied to a general deposit, which was to be mingled with other funds and become a part of the property of the bank. The evidence cannot be consistently reconciled with the proposition that the money was left as a general deposit, but fully warrants the conclusion that the package was received "for safe-keeping," to be held in trust as the property of the petitioner.

But it has been seen that neither of the $500 packages found in the vault after it was opened, nor any other money found there has been identified by any distinguishing marks as the money deposited by the petitioner; and it is contended in behalf of the defendant that, in any event, the petitioner is not entitled to recover the sum of $500 in this proceeding, for the reason that his money, having been mingled with the moneys of other depositors and paid out indiscriminately, can no longer be identified in the hands of the receiver. But it has been seen that all of the moneys received from depositors after the receipt of the petitioner's package were general deposits, which became the property of the bank; and that the cash in the vault was not less than $500 at any time during that week. The petitioner's package was the only special deposit and the only trust fund held by the firm at that time. The petitioner's difficulty arising from a failure to identify his money by distinguishing marks is therefore readily solved by an application of the established principle of equity that, "when one makes a draft from a fund composed partly of his own money and partly of money of another, . . . the presumption is the draft was intended to be made and was made from the drawer's own funds." Hall v. Otis, 77 Me. 125. In Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, it was decided that, if money held by a trustee has been mingled with his private funds in his bank account, the cestui que trust can follow it, and has a charge on the balance in the banker's hands. It was further held that the rule attributing the first drawings out to the first payments in does not apply, except as between the moneys of different cestuis que trust, whose moneys are commingled by the common trustee; and that, as between the individual funds and trust funds, the drawer must be taken to have drawn his own money in preference to the trust money. The principle is thus stated in 2 Perry on Trusts, 2d ed. §§ 837, 838: "If trust money is mixed in the same parcel with the trustee's own money, it may be said that the trust money has run into the general mass, and has become absorbed, and that the cestui que trust has no lien; but such cannot be the case. . . . Although every identical piece of coin cannot be ascertained in a given mass, yet, there being so much trust money in the parcel, the cestui que trust is entitled to so much of it. . . . If a trustee deposits trust moneys in bank to his own credit . . . the court will disentangle the accounts and give the cestui que trust what belongs to him." This principle has received the emphatic approval of the Supreme Court of the United States in Central Nat. Bank v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693, and of our own court in Houghton v. Davenport, 74 Me. 596; see also Lynam v. Belfast Nat. Bank, 98 Me. 448, 57 Atl. 799; First Nat. Bank v. Eastern Trust & Bkg. Co. 108 Me. 79, 79 Atl. 4; Farmers' & M. Nat. Bank v. King, 57 Pa. 202, 98 Am. Dec. 215; Harrison v. Smith, 83 Mo. 210, 53 Am. Rep. 571.

It thus appears from this beneficent doctrine of equity that, when trust money is mingled in the same parcel with the trustee's own funds, the question is not necessarily whether the trust money can be identified by distinguishing earmarks, but whether it can be traced into the hands of the trustee, "either in its original or its altered state." The petitioner's money was received by the firm of Tyler, Fogg, & Company in a fiduciary capacity, and mingled with its private funds. Moneys paid out during the week following April 22d are presumed to have been paid from the private funds of the firm, and not from the petitioner's trust money. The entire amount of cash on hand at the time the vault was opened was charged with a trust in favor of the plaintiff. The presumption is that $500 of the $1,620.21 in money found in the vault and turned over to the receiver belonged to the petitioner. As trustee of the petitioner for his $500, the firm would have been bound to restore that sum to him on demand, if a receiver had not been appointed. A demand was made by the petitioner upon the receiver for the return of his money soon after the latter took possession of the assets of the firm on the 9th day of June, 1911. The receiver is now bound to restore to the petitioner the sum of $500, deposited with the firm by him April 22, 1911; and it is ordered that the sum of $500 be paid to the petitioner by the receiver, with interest thereon from the 5th day of September, 1911, the date of the petition. The certificate must accordingly be:

Petition sustained.

Claim for $500 and interest allowed.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 1.)

DAVE SCHONWALD et al., Pliffs. in Err.,
v.

JAMES G. RAGAINS.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 203.)

Contract — inducing breach — liability.

1. Legitimate competition, by fair means, is always lawful, and no cause of action accrues to one who is unable to compete with his stronger competitor, notwithstanding his business be injured by the competitive strife. But unfair competition is, and always has been, frowned upon by the law, and the trend of the decisions sustains the proposition that it is a violation of a legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognized by law, if there be no sufficient justification for the interference.

Unfair trade — competition — legality.

2. It is impossible to formulate any general rule or definition whereby one may determine with accuracy what is fair competition, and what is not. Each case must depend, for its correct solution, upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances.

Contract — inducing breach — malice.

3. It is an actionable tort for one to maliciously interfere with a contract between two parties, and induce one of them to break that contract, to the injury of the other.

Same — persuasion — legality.

4. It is not unlawful for one, by fair means and lawful argument or persuasion, to interfere with the contractual relations of another, and without doubt one person has the legal right to persuade another to leave his employer's service, or to quit trading with another, provided always such persuasion and argument is fair, and not unlawful, and is made with the honest intent and purpose of fairly bettering one's own business, trade, or employment, and not for the primary object of wrongfully destroying honest competition, or wrongfully injuring one's competitor.

Definition — malice.

5. "Malice," in the sense used herein, means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse.

(March 12, 1912.)

Headnotes by ROBERTSON, C.

Note. — As to right of action for damages for inducing a breach of contract, see notes to Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gardiner Dairy Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 746, and Swain v. Johnson, 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 615, and related notes there referred to. See also, in this connection, the case of Sleeper v. Baker, post, 864. Generally, as to the effect of bad motive to make actionable what otherwise would not be, see note to Passaic Print Works v. Ely & W. Dry-Goods Co. 62 L.R.A. 673.

ERROR to the District Court for Kay County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for alleged malicious interference with plaintiff's business. Affirmed.

Statement by Robertson, C.:

In the winter of 1904-05, Ragains, the plaintiff below, took from the Chickaskia river and stored in the city of Blackwell a large quantity of merchantable ice, with intent to sell the same at retail to the merchants and other customers in said city. In pursuance of such intent, he solicited and procured contracts with a large number of such customers, and made all necessary arrangements for the complete establishment of a retail ice business in said city, and, in fact, began to distribute ice among his customers. Schonwald, one of the defendants below, who was also the general manager and agent of the Blackwell Ice Company, the other defendant, according to the averments of the petition, with a malicious, wrongful, and unlawful intention of injuring plaintiff in and about his said business, and of wholly destroying his said business and depriving said plaintiff of his customers for the sale of his ice, and for the purpose of procuring the purchasers of plaintiff's ice, with whom plaintiff had contracts, to disregard their said contracts and to refuse to accept plaintiff's ice thereunder, did, during the months of February, March, April, and May, 1905, acting jointly and in conjunction, one with the other, and with various other ice companies (naming them), represent to the persons with whom plaintiff had contracts for the sale of ice and with the customers of his retail ice business that plaintiff was not a member of the combination or association of ice dealers, and could not, therefore, purchase from the manufacturers of ice in that and the adjacent territory any amount with which to supply his customers, and that if they, the said customers and consumers, and the persons with whom plaintiff had contracts, purchased ice from plaintiff, that they, the said defendants, and each of them, and all other persons engaged in the sale of ice in the city of Blackwell, would refuse to sell or deliver ice to any such person so purchasing from plaintiff, and further represented to plaintiff's customers and the persons with whom he had contracts for the sale of ice that plaintiff would be unable to purchase ice from any manufacturer on account of combinations and understandings had with such manufacturer by defendants, and that at such time as his customers had exhausted the supply of natural ice stored by plaintiff, such customers and persons with whom plaintiff had contracts would be unable to procure or purchase from defendants or any other person any ice for their use, and that, in furtherance of the design on the part of the defendants in carrying out the threats and representations so made, the said defendants, and each of them, did refuse to sell to persons who bought ice from plaintiff, and said defendants and each of them did refuse to sell ice to any person with whom plaintiff had contracts for the sale of ice, unless and until said persons and said customers had agreed and promised to disregard their contract of purchase which they had made with the plaintiff, and would further agree not to accept any further delivery of ice from said plaintiff; that said false and malicious representations, threats, and intimidating statements, as above related, so made by Schonwald and the Blackwell Ice Company, by and through its officers, agents, and employees, did intimidate, coerce, and influence the persons with whom plaintiff had contracts for the sale of ice, and the customers of plaintiff's retail ice business in the city of Blackwell, to break the said contracts had with plaintiff, and did cause all of them to refuse to purchase or accept the delivery of ice from plaintiff, and that thereby said defendants by their said wrongful, illegal, and malicious representations, intimidating statements, and conduct, did wholly and completely ruin and destroy plaintiff's retail ice business in the city of Blackwell; and that said defendants did wrongfully, unlawfully, and maliciously, and with a malicious intent to destroy plaintiff's business and to injure him, influence all persons manufacturing ice for sale to the inhabitants of the city of Blackwell and vicinity to refuse to sell or deliver any ice to plaintiff for sale to the residents of said city, all to his great damage, etc.

The court, in its instructions to the jury, held that there was not sufficient evidence to support the allegations of conspiracy by defendants and other ice companies, and therefore withdrew that issue from their consideration; and no finding was made by the jury upon that question, and the same will therefore receive no further consideration.

The answers of defendants were in effect general denials. Trial was had to a jury, and a general verdict was returned in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendants, which verdict was by the trial court approved and judgment in accordance therewith was duly entered, from which said judgment defendants bring error.

Mr. C. G. Hornor, for plaintiffs in error:

No action will lie for interference with trades, callings, and contracts, in the way of ordinary competition.

Cooley, Torts, 497; Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor [1892] A. C. 25, 61 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 295, 66 L. T. N. S. 1, 40 Week. Rep. 337, 7 Asp. Mar. L. Cas. 120, 56 J. P. 101, affirming L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 598, L. R. 21 Q. B. Div. 544; Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 163, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 119, 77 L. T. N. S. 717, 46 Week. Rep. 258, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 285; Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Hollis (Bohn Mfg. Co. v. Northwestern Lumbermen's Asso.) 54 Minn. 223, 21 L.R.A. 337, 40 Am. St. Rep. 319, 55 N. W. 1119; J. F. Parkinson Co. v. Building Trades Council, 154 Cal. 581, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 550, 98 Pac. 1027, 16 Ann. Cas. 1165; Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 21 L.R.A. 233, 33 Pac. 492; Chambers v. Baldwin, 91 Ky. 121, 11 L.R.A. 545, 34 Am. St. Rep. 165, 15 S. W. 57; Bourlier Bros. v. Macauley, 91 Ky. 135, 11 L.R.A. 550, 34 Am. St. Rep. 171, 15 S. W. 60; Glencoe Land & Gravel Co. v. Hudson Bros. Commission Co. 138 Mo. 439, 36 L.R.A. 804, 60 Am. St. Rep. 560, 40 S. W. 93; Lewis v. Huie-Hodge Lumber Co. 121 La. 658, 46 So. 685; Passaic Print Works v. Ely & W. Dry Goods Co. 62 L.R.A. 673 and note, 44 C. C. A. 426, 105 Fed. 163; Macauley Bros. v. Tierney, 19 I. 255, 37 L.R.A. 455, 61 Am. St. Rep. 770, 33 Atl. 1; Robison v. Texas Pine Land Asso. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 40 S. W. 843; Baker v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1174, 55 L.R.A. 275, 64 S. W. 913; Payne v. Western & A. R. Co. 13 Lea, 507, 49 Am. Rep. 686; Vegelahn v. Guntner, 167 Mass. 92, 35 L.R.A. 722, 57 Am. St. Rep. 443, 44 N. E. 1077; Chambers v. Baldwin, 11 L.R.A. 545, and note, 91 Ky. 121, 34 Am. St. Rep. 165, 15 S. W. 57.

Messrs. John S. Burger and Moss, Turner, & McInnis for defendant in error.

Robertson, C., filed the following opinion:

There is but one question in this case that demands the consideration of the court. Was it an actionable tort for Schonwald and the Blackwell Ice Company to procure, induce, and cause, as charged in the petition, the persons who had contracts with Ragains for the purchase of his ice at retail to ignore and violate their contracts under the facts and circumstances of this case? The general verdict of the jury was a finding on all the facts as alleged in the petition necessary to sustain the judgment, so that the real inquiry may be narrowed down to the issue raised by counsel for plaintiffs in error, viz., that the petition did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The question involved is of more than passing interest to the people of this state, the correct solution of which requires not only careful consideration of the immediate questions primarily involved, but also the careful consideration of the so-called "business interests" of the state, as contradistinguished from the interests of all the people of the state, for all will, in a greater or lesser degree, be primarily affected. In order to better understand the real issue as submitted to the jury by the court, we will insert the two instructions which deal directly with the question under consideration. They are as follows:

"You are instructed that if you believe from a preponderance of the evidence that the plaintiff in this case, James G. Ragains, in the winter of 1905 made certain contracts and agreements with parties in the city of Blackwell, as alleged in his petition, to agree to purchase ice of and from said plaintiff, and that the defendant, the Blackwell Ice Company, through its agent and representative, Dave Schonwald, or by Dave Schonwald alone, with the malicious, wrongful, and unlawful intention of injuring this plaintiff, and destroying his business, and depriving plaintiff of customers for the sale of the said ice, and for the purpose of procuring purchasers of plaintiff's ice with whom the plaintiff had contracts to disregard the same, and to refuse to carry out the contracts theretofore made with the said plaintiff, and that the said patrons did refuse, by reason of the wrongful acts of the defendants, their agents or employees, to purchase ice of and from the plaintiff, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff and against the defendants, and each of them, for such sums as you believe will fairly and reasonably compensate him for damages sustained, not to exceed the amount prayed for in plaintiff's petition.

"You are instructed that the material and controlling questions for you to determine in this case are: First. Was there a contract by and between the plaintiff and certain customers, as alleged in plaintiff's petition, or any of them, whereby it was agreed by and between the plaintiff and his said customers that the said customers were to purchase of and from the plaintiff ice that he was to deliver upon his delivery of the same? Second. Were the customers of the plaintiff knowingly induced by the defendants, or either of them, or by their agents and employees, under their direction, to break said contracts with the plaintiff, intending thereby to injure said plaintiff and derive a benefit therefrom? Third. Did injuries result to the plaintiff?"

If these instructions fairly and correctly state the law applicable to the case at bar, then the judgment of the trial court is right, and must be affirmed; for, while there are other errors assigned, such as the admission and rejection of testimony, yet it is tacitly agreed by counsel that the question first above alluded to is the real and controlling question in the case.

In Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. McConnell (C. C.) 82 Fed. 65, Judge Clark said: "It needs no extended statement to make it manifest that the right to carry on a business without interference, without fraud, and without obstruction, is one of the most valuable of all rights. Indeed, in the commercial world, the right of greatest value is the right to freely carry on a lawful business without unlawful interruption. It is a substantial right, which may be protected by any remedy known to the court as fully as a constitutional or statutory right, and as fully as a right in the ordinary forms of property." Nims, on Unfair Business Competition, p. 347, in discussing this question, says: "It has long been a recognized principle of common law that the prevention and curbing of competition is an unlawful act. The restriction of the freedom of trade is considered to be against public policy, and injurious to general welfare. During the past few years there has been a growing demand made on courts and legislatures that they take measures to limit the freedom of competition of the so-called trusts, and also that they take other measures to give the small dealer larger protection and freedom in competition. All these demands are made for the benefit of those who are not able to cope with the great powers of the commercial world that have come into existence under the law as it now exists. These demands are socialistic in their nature. Freedom of competition, under modern conditions, seems to lead to a monopoly,—the very evil which the common law sought to avoid. This condition has been reached, in part, by the application of the very rules laid down by the common law to prevent monopoly. The discussion of these questions by the courts is to be found largely in cases dealing (a) with the right which it is claimed every man has to carry on his trade or calling without molestation or interruption,—cases dealing principally with rights of labor organizations as to boycott, strikes, lockouts, etc.; (b) with the right of persons under contract with each other as against one who intentionally causes a breach of that contract. Cases of this sort are not usually classed as unfair competition cases, but the principles involved in them go straight to the question of fairness and honesty in business competition. If the limits to the right of one merchant to interfere with, to block, harass, and to injure, the trade of a competitor, are not defined clearly, it means that the freedom of use of capital in commercial enterprises will be hampered and restricted unnecessarily. If the business world is not certain of its rights as against those who intentionally and wrongfully procure the breaking of contracts for their own gain, public confidence in the binding force of contracts, which is now none too strong, will be weakened."

Legitimate competition, by fair means, is always lawful, and no cause of action accrues to one who is unable to compete with his stronger competitor, notwithstanding his entire business be swept away by the competitive strife. But unfair competition is, and always has been, frowned upon by the law, and the trend of the decisions from Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 463, 17 Jur. N. S. 827, 1 Week. Rep. 432, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 706, to the present time seems to sustain the proposition that it is a violation of a legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognized by law, if there be no sufficient justification for the interference. Prof. Bruce Wyman, in his Control of the Market, tersely states the situation as it now exists, as follows: "Generally speaking, a state of free competition has been for several centuries considered to be for the best interest of society; and therefore, in modern times, almost every business has been opened to almost every man; but at all times in economic history both restriction and freedom are to be found in the law; the proportion, however, changing greatly. In one epoch there is much legal limitation with little freedom left; in another age it is almost universal competition with some little regulation to be found.

. . . But the modern conclusion, after some bitter experience, is that freedom can be allowed only where conditions of virtual competition prevail, for, where there is monopoly without stern restriction, there is always great mischief. . . . Undoubtedly, therefore, the spirit of our present age demands that the great business enterprises shall be conducted in accordance with the requirements of society. The present program of organized society is to see to it that those who have gained a substantial control of the market shall not be left free to exploit those who look to them to supply their needs. Men now see clearly that freedom of action may, even in the industrial world, work injuriously for the pub-lie, and it must then be restrained in the public interest. We have seen the results of unrestrained power, and we must not wish those who have control of our destinies be left to do with us as they please. . . . The attempt in every modern case of this sort is therefore to show something more than mere competition,—to show in the particular case there are some special circumstances which bring the case outside the ordinary course of competition.” And, as illustrative of this idea, he cites us a striking instance, the case of Passaic Print Works v. Ely & W. Dry-Goods Co. 62 L.R.A. 673, 44 C. C. A. 426, 105 Fed. 163, wherein the defendant company was sought to be enjoined from selling certain brands of calico at a price less than that fixed by the manufacturer. The court, speaking through Mr. Justice Thayer, decided against the manufacturer, and among other things said: “The owner of property, real or personal, has an undoubted right to sell it and to offer it for sale at whatever price he deems proper, although the effect of such offer may be to depreciate the market value of the commodity which he thus offers, and incidentally to occasion loss to third parties who have the same kind or species of property for sale.” The point is made in that case that competition is an absolute justification, regardless of the circumstances. But this means fair competition. On the other hand, the case of Tuttle v. Buck, 107 Minn. 145, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 599, 131 Am. St. Rep. 446, 119 N. W. 946, 16 Ann. Cas. 807, held the other way, that being the case where a banker, a man of great wealth and influence in the community, maliciously established a barber shop and engaged a barber to carry on the business, and used his personal influence to attract customers from the plaintiff’s shop, not for any legitimate purpose of his own, but to injure the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Elliott, speaking of the principle involved, said: “It must be remembered that the common law is the result of growth, and that its development has been determined by the social needs of the community which it governs. It is the resultant of conflicting social forces, and those forces which are for the time dominant leave their impress upon the law. . . . For generations there has been a practical agreement upon the proposition that competition in trade and business is desirable; and this idea has found expression in the decisions of the courts, as well as in statutes. But it has led to grievous and manifold wrongs to individuals, and many courts have manifested an earnest desire to protect the individual from the evils which result from unrestrained business 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

competition. The problem has been to so adjust matters as to preserve the principle of competition, and yet guard against its abuse to the unnecessary injury to the individual. . . . To divert to one’s self the customers of a business rival by the offer of goods at lower prices is in general a legitimate mode of serving one’s own interest, and justifiable as fair competition. But when a man starts an opposition place of business, not for the sake of profit to himself, but regardless of loss to himself, and for the sole purpose of driving his competitor out of business, and with the intention of himself retiring upon the accomplishment of his malevolent purpose, he is guilty of a wanton wrong and an actionable tort.” This case, while undoubtedly stating the law applicable to the peculiar facts there existing, goes farther than most of the courts in the enunciation of the principle which guarantees the rights of an individual to protection from an unfair competition. However, under our present economic and industrial conditions, there can be no doubt of the soundness of the doctrine therein announced.

In the case of London Guarantee & Acci. Co. v. Horn, 206 Ill. 493, 99 Am. St. Rep. 185, 69 N. E. 526, Horn was a servant of Arnold & Company, and in the course of his employment by an accident he sustained a severe injury to his hand. His employers protected themselves from such accidents by a policy in the London Guarantee & Accident Company. Horn brought suit against Arnold & Company, and recovered $3,500 damages. Pending appeal, the agent of the insurance company attempted to settle with Horn, and, failing, told him that he would procure his discharge from Arnold & Company, unless he settled. Horn still refused to settle. Whereupon the agent of the insurance company did secure Horn’s discharge by Arnold & Company by the threat to cancel the entire policy in case they refused to discharge him. In an action by Horn against the insurance company for wrongfully interfering with his contract of employment with Arnold & Company, it was held that he could recover, and Mr. Justice Scott, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: “It follows, therefore, that the act of the defendant, complained of, was wrongful and in the legal sense of the term, malicious,” because without justification. In Moran v. Dunphy, 177 Mass. 485, 52 L.R.A. 115, 83 Am. St. Rep. 289, 59 N. E. 125, it was said: “We apprehend that there no longer is any difficulty in recognizing that a right to be protected from malicious interference may be incident to a right arising out of a contract, although a contract, so far as performance is concerned, imposes a duty only on the promisor. Again, in the case of a contract of employment, even when the employment is at will, the fact that the employer is free from liability for discharging the plaintiff does not carry with it immunity to the defendant, who has controlled the employer's action to the plaintiff's harm." In Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A. C. p. 495 (which effectually answers and disposes of Allen v. Flood, 87 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 119, [1898] A. C. 163, 77 L. T. N. S. 717, 46 Week. Rep. 258, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 285, the strongest case supporting the contrary doctrine), it is said: "It is a violation of legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognized by law, if there be no sufficient justification for the interference." The earliest reported case dealing with this question, so far as we have been able to discover, is Lumley v. Gye, supra. In that case a Miss Wagoner had contracted with Lumley to sing at his theater. Gye induced her to break her contract and sing for him. The decision is to the effect that the inducement of Gye was a legal wrong. Mr. Justice Erle in his opinion said: "He who maliciously procures a damage to another by violation of his right ought to be made to indemnify, and that whether he procures an actionable wrong or a breach of contract. He who procures the nondelivery of goods according to contract may inflict an injury the same as he who procures the abstraction of goods after delivery; and both ought, on the same ground, to be made responsible." This case, notwithstanding the dissenting opinion of Lord Coleridge (upon which all cases holding that such interference is not actionable appear to be based), seems to state the law as followed by the courts of England even unto the present time, and is cited with approval and followed in all the reported cases that sustain the doctrine herein contended for. The case of Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation [1903] 2 K. B. 545, decided in 1903, is one of the later English cases upholding this same view, and, in the course of the opinion in that case as written by Lord Justice Stirling, it is said: "The justification set up seems to me to amount to no more than this,—that the course which they took, although it might be to the detriment of the masters, was for the pecuniary interest of the men; and I think it wholly insufficient. The defendants took active steps to carry this policy into effect, and, as I have said, interfered to bring about the violation of legal rights." A careful investigation of the cases shows that the rule announced in Lumley v. Gye, supra, which may be said to have established the English doctrine, has also been adopted and followed by a majority of the courts of the American states, and without doubt is the law of the land on the subject.

It is exceedingly difficult, however, to determine with accuracy what is fair competition and what is not, and what acts are malicious and unjustifiable. It seems to be impossible to formulate any general rule or definition that will answer for all cases, but each must depend, for its correct solution, upon its own peculiar facts and circumstances. Thus, in Keeble v. Hickeringill, 11 East, 574, note: Plaintiff owned a decoy pond, and put upon it decoy ducks, nets, etc., for taking fowl. "Defendant, knowing which, and intending to damnify the plaintiff in his vivary, and to fright and drive away the wild fowl, used to resort thither, and, to deprive him of his profit, did . . . resort to the head of the said pond and vivary, and did discharge six guns laden with gunpowder, and with the noise and stink of the gunpowder did drive away the wild fowl then being in the pond. . . . The defendant with design to damnify the plaintiff . . . did place himself with a gun near the vivary and there did discharge the said gun several times, . . . whereby the wild fowl were frightened away and did forsake the said pond." Sir John Holt, in the opinion in that case, said: Making a decoy is lawful; using the ground for that purpose is profitable. If man hath a property, he may employ it for his pleasure and profit, as for alluring and procuring ducks to come to his pond. "To learn the trade of seducing other ducks to come there in order to be taken is not prohibited either by the law of the land or the moral law. . . . When a man useth his art or his skill to take them, to sell and dispose of for his profit, this is his trade, and he that hinders another in his trade or livelihood is liable to an action for so hindering him. Why otherwise are scandalous words spoken of a man in his profession actionable when, without his profession, they are not so? Though they do not effect any damage, yet they are mischievous in themselves, and therefore in their own nature productive of damage, and therefore an action lies against him. Such are all words that are spoken of a man to disparage him in his trade that may bring damage to him. . . . How much more when the defendant doth an actual and real damage to another when he is in the very act of receiving profit by his employment. . . . Where a violent or malicious act is done to a man's occupation, profession, or way of getting a livelihood, there an action lies in all cases." This case is frequently cited as authority that a right of action existed at common law on account of injury to a man in his trade or calling. To our minds no possible doubt exists but that the common law has been, and is now, sufficiently comprehensive to furnish a full and complete remedy for the wrong complained of in the petition in the case at bar. So, also, is it our belief that the common law in these later days, with the ever-increasing demands made upon it for protection to the individual by reason of our material developments along industrial and economic lines, is sufficiently broad and comprehensive to relieve against such unfair and oppressive acts as those charged in the petition, and its applicability cannot be doubted. Wyman on Control of Market, p. 8, says: "No one can carefully study the authorities on the subject without feeling that we are just entering upon an important development of the common law. What branches of industry will eventually be of such public importance as to be included in the category of public concerns, and to what extent the control of the courts will be carried in the effort to solve by law the modern economic problems, it would be rash to predict. Enormous business combinations, virtual monopolization of the necessities of life, the strife of labor and capital, now the concern of the economist and the statesman, may prove susceptible of legal control through the doctrine of this special law. General doctrines have been established; and upon their successful working out depends to a large extent the future economic organization of the country. Only if the courts can adequately control the established monopolies in all contingencies may the business of these concerns be left in private hands." We need not, therefore, concern ourselves further as to whether or not the relief afforded by the common law is adequate, for without doubt it is amply sufficient; but let us continue our investigation to the ascertainment of whether or not the facts of the instant case warrant the relief, which the law, at all times, has stood and now stands ready to give.

In Quinn v. Leathem, supra, Lord Macnaghten said: "An act which does not amount to a legal injury cannot be actionable because it is done with a bad intent." That, in my opinion, is the sum and substance of Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 1, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 119, 77 L. T. N. S. 717, 46 Week. Rep. 258, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 285;" and Lord Lindley in the same case said that Allen v. Flood, supra, established the fact that Allen "infringed no right of the plaintiffs, even although he acted maliciously." The question was later considered 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by the House of Lords in 1901, when it was held that a combination of two or more persons, without excuse and without justification, to injure a man in his trade by persuading or inducing his customers not to trade with him, or his servants or customers to break his employ, is actionable, provided he suffers damage. Freedom for fair competition is guaranteed to all, and, even though this competition results in the ruin of the competitor's business and the loss of all his property, there can be no right of action unless the successful competitor has done some malicious, intentional wrong, which is unjustifiable, and which is the cause of damage to the injured or complaining party. The American cases present a seemingly hopeless conflict of opinion on the subject, yet, with the above rule as a guide, it may safely be said that the doctrine as announced in Lumley v. Gye, supra, is recognized and followed by the majority of the American courts, and is amply sustained, in our opinion, by the weight of authority, as it certainly is by the better reason, as viewed in the light of our present industrial and economic conditions. The leading American case involving and sustaining this principle is Angle v. Chicago, St. P. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240. The opinion is by Mr. Justice Brewer, and among other things he says: "It has been repeatedly held that, if one maliciously interferes in a contract between two parties, and induces one of them to break that contract, to the injury of the other, the party injured can maintain an action against the wrongdoer. Green v. Button, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 707, 1 Gale, 349, 1 Tyrw. & G. 118, 5 L. J. Exch. N. S. 81, in which the defendant by falsely pretending to one party to a contract that he had a lien upon certain property prevented such party from delivering it to the plaintiff, the other party to the contract, and was held responsible for the loss occasioned thereby. Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 463, 17 Jur. N. S. 827, 1 Week. Rep. 432, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 706, in which a singer had entered into a contract to sing only at the theater of the plaintiff, and the defendant maliciously induced her to break that contract, and was held liable to the damages sustained by the plaintiff in consequence thereof. Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 333, 337, 17 Eng. Rul. Cas. 285, in which it was held that an action lies against a third person who maliciously induces another to break his contract of exclusive personal service with an employer, which thereby would naturally cause, and did in fact cause, an injury to such employer. In the opinion of Brett, L. J., it was said:

"That wherever a man does an act which in law and in fact is a wrongful act, and such an act as may, as a natural and probable consequence of it, produce injury to another, and which in the particular case does produce an injury, an action on the case will lie. This is the proposition to be deduced from the case of Ashby v. White, 2 Ld. Raym. 938, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 521. If these conditions are satisfied, the action does not the less lie because the natural and probable consequences of the act complained of is an act done by a third person, or because such act so done by the third person is a breach of duty or contract by him, or an act illegal in his part, or an act otherwise imposing an actionable liability on him." Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, in which a manufacturer was held entitled to maintain an action against a third party who, with the unlawful purpose of preventing him from carrying on his business, wilfully induced many of his employees to leave his employment, whereby the manufacturer lost their services and the profits and advantages which he would have derived therefrom. Benton v. Pratt, 2 Wend. 385, 20 Am. Dec. 623. Rice v. Manley, 66 N. Y. 82, 23 Am. Rep. 30, in which a party had contracted to sell and deliver to plaintiffs a quantity of cheese, but, having been made to believe through the fraud of the defendant that the plaintiffs did not want the cheese, sold and delivered it to him, and it was held that an action could be maintained against the defendant for the damages which the plaintiffs sustained from failing to get the cheese. Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355, 356, in which the court said: "It was decided in Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780, that, if a person maliciously entices laborers or croppers to break their contracts with their employer and desert his service, the employer may recover damages against such person. The same reasons cover every case where one person maliciously persuades another to break any contract with a third person. It is not confined to contracts for service." Under these authorities, if the Omaha Company had by its wrongful conduct simply induced the Portage Company to break its contract with Angle, it would have been liable to him for the damages sustained thereby." The essence of this decision is found in the syllabus, which reads: "If one maliciously interferes in a contract between two parties and induces one of them to break that contract to the injury of the other, the party injured can maintain an action against the wrongdoer. Where one railroad company by its wrongful conduct induced another railroad company to break its contract with a contractor for its construction, it is liable to him for the damages sustained thereby; a fortiori, when it not only induces a breach of the contract by the latter company, but also disables it from performance." In the case of Walker v. Cronin, supra, used approvingly by the Supreme Court of the United States in Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. supra, it was held that "it is a familiar and well-established doctrine of the law upon the relation of master and servant that one who entices away a servant or induces him to leave his master may be held liable in damages therefor, provided there exists a valid contract for continued service, known to the defendant. It has sometimes been supposed that this doctrine sprang from the English statute of laborers, and was confined to menial service. But we are satisfied that it is founded upon the legal right derived from the contract, and not merely upon the relation of master and servant, and that it applies to all contracts of employment, if not to contracts of every description." In Rice v. Manley, 66 N. Y. 82, the supreme court said in the syllabus: "S. agreed to sell and deliver to plaintiff a quantity of cheese. Defendant, by fraudulent and false representations, induced S. to sell and deliver the cheese to him. The agreement between S. and plaintiff was not in writing, and was void under the statute of frauds, but it would have been performed by S. but for defendant's fraud. Held, that plaintiff could maintain an action against defendant for the damages sustained." 23 Am. Rep. 30. In Gore v. Condon, 87 Md. 368, 40 L.R.A. 382, 67 Am. St. Rep. 352, 39 Atl. 1042, is found the following: "The right to maintain the action can also be sustained upon the doctrine that a man who induces one of two parties to a contract to break it, intending thereby to injure the other or to obtain a benefit for himself, does the other an actionable wrong." In Lucke v. Clothing Cutters' & T. Assembly No. 7507, K. L. 77 Md. 396, 19 L.R.A. 408, 39 Am. St. Rep. 421, 26 Atl. 505, it is said in the syllabus: "If a contract would have been performed but for the false and fraudulent representations of a third person, an action will lie against him although the contract could not have been enforced by action. Interference with the free exercise of another's trade or occupation or means of livelihood by fraud or force, such as preventing people, by threats or intimidation, from trading with or continuing him in their employment, is an actionable wrong." In Chipley v. Atkinson, 23 Fla. 206, 11 Am. St. Rep. 367, 1 So. 934, Mr. Justice Raney says: "An employee may maintain an action for damages against a third party maliciously procuring an employer to discharge him from employment under a legal contract for a certain period, pending such period, provided damages result to the employee from his discharge; and under the same circumstances the action may be maintained, though the employment is not for a fixed period. Though no contract exists between the master and servant, and no legal right as between them is violated, still the servant may maintain an action for damages against a third person who has maliciously procured his discharge." While in Doremus v. Hennessy, 176 Ill. 608, 43 L.R.A. 797, 802, 68 Am. St. Rep. 203, 52 N. E. 924, 54 N. E. 524, the supreme court of Illinois says: "The common law seeks to protect every person against the wrongful acts of others, whether committed alone or by combination; and an action may be had for injuries done which cause another loss in the enjoyment of any right or privilege or property. . . . Losses wilfully caused by another from motives of malice to one who seeks to exercise and enjoy the fruits and advantages of his own enterprise, industry, skill, and credit will sustain an action. It is clear that it is unlawful and actionable for one man, from unlawful motives, to interfere with another's trade by fraud or misrepresentation, or by molesting his customers or those who would be customers, or by preventing others from working for him, or causing them to leave his employ by fraud or misrepresentation or physical or moral intimidation or persuasion, with an intent to inflict an injury which causes loss." It must be observed that the case last cited holds that it is unlawful and actionable for a man, for unlawful motives, to interfere with another's trade, etc., by fraud or misrepresentation or physical or moral intimidation or persuasion, with intent to inflict an injury which causes loss.

That case does not hold it to be unlawful for one, by fair and lawful argument and persuasion, to interfere with the contractual relations of another, and without doubt a person has the legal right to persuade one to leave his employer's service, or to quit trading with another, provided, always, such persuasion and argument is fair and not unlawful, and is made and done with the honest intent and purpose of fairly bettering one's own business, trade, or employment, and not for the primary object of wrongfully destroying honest competition. In the instant case, had the conduct of Schonwald and the ice company been directed and governed solely by the desire to legitimately eliminate Ragains's retail ice business by fair competition, no action could have been maintained against them; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

but it is plainly evident that they were not so limited, directed, or actuated. The threats, coercions, and intimidating statements made by them to the customers of Ragains had for their sole and primary object, not the building up of their own legitimate business, but the destruction of Ragains's business; and that, too, by the most unreasonable, unfair, coercive, and unjustifiable methods. The only legitimate result of their conduct, as is plainly shown by the testimony, from the commencement of the troubles between them, was to injure unfairly, and without sufficient excuse or justification, the business of Ragains. They did not sell their ice cheaper. They did not claim to have a better grade or quality of ice. They did not offer better delivery facilities. They did not offer any inducement by way of credits, or time, in payment of accounts. They did not show by any legitimate or reasonable or justifiable method that the customers by patronizing them would obtain better results, or better service, than Ragains could furnish, and their sole and only excuse was that they enjoyed a monopoly of the ice business in Blackwell and vicinity, and thereby controlled the ice market, and that, unless the customers who had contracts with Ragains would forthwith break and violate these contracts, they could not have or purchase any ice from said defendants in case Ragains's ice supply, for any reason, should become exhausted; and they further informed said customers that Ragains could not, in the event of his supply becoming exhausted, purchase ice from any other person who supplied said city with ice, on account of combinations and understandings had by said defendants with other ice companies, the benefits of which said combination were denied Ragains, and that therefore the said customers would be unable to procure any ice at all. There was no possible excuse or justification for such conduct. The actions of defendants without doubt were malicious and unwarranted.

By the term "malicious" we do not mean that defendants were actuated by motives of ill will against Ragains personally, but by it is meant an unreasonable and wrongful act, done intentionally, without just cause or excuse. In 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 2d ed. 1112, the reason for stating these acts to be malicious is given as follows: "Breach of contract gives a cause of action against the contracting party guilty of the breach, and is therefore a wrongful or unlawful act. The procurement of a breach of contract is wrongful; and, if the procurement is intentional and without excuse, it follows that it is malicious." The reasons for this definition have been objected to as containing a step which assumes too much, in that the procurement of an act which gives a cause of action against the actor is universally wrongful. Subject to the limitations and restrictions hereinbefore alluded to, we are not willing to assent to this criticism. However, there is another definition of the term "malicious," in the adjudicated cases, which is not open to this objection, and it is sufficiently comprehensive to meet the requirements of the present case. Brett, L. J., in Bowen v. Hall, L. R. 6 Q. B. Div. 338, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 717, defines a malicious act "as one done for the indirect purpose of injuring the plaintiff or benefiting the defendant at the expense of the plaintiff." In Keeble v. Hickeringill, 11 East, 574, note, it was held that malice, or the intent to injure, will, under certain circumstances, cause an act, otherwise legal, to become illegal. Lord Watson, in Allen v. Flood [1898] A. C. 92, said: "The existence of a bad motive in the case of an act which is not in itself illegal will not convert that act into a civil wrong for which reparation is due. A wrongful act done knowingly and with a view of its injurious consequences may, in the sense of law, be malicious; but such malice derives its essential character from the circumstance that the act done constitutes a violation of the law." And in the same case, in discussing what would excuse a man from the charge of malice, he said: "He shall act honestly . . . and shall not be prompted by a desire to injure the person who is affected by his act." Bowen, L. J., in Allen v. Flood, supra, said: In order to justify the intentional doing of "that which is calculated, in the ordinary course of events, to damage, and which does in fact damage another, in that other person's property or trade . . . [you must have some] just cause or excuse." Which was afterwards characterized by Lord Chancellor Halsbury as "exactly accurate." Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes said that "when a responsible defendant seeks to escape liability from an act which he had notice was likely to cause temporal damage to another, he must show justification." In 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 623, it is said: "Malice" in its legal sense "means a wrongful act done intentionally, without just cause or excuse." Lord Campbell, in Ferguson v. Kinnoull, 9 Clark & F. 321, said: "'Malice' in the legal acceptance of the word is not confined to personal spite against individuals, but consists in a conscious violation of the law, to the prejudice of another." In Page v. Cushing, 38 Me. 523, "malice" is defined as: "Acts wilfully and designedly done which are unlawful are malicious in respect to those to whom they 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) :

are injurious." Bowen, L. J., in Mogul S. S. Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 23 Q. B. Div. 612, said: "Maliciously means and implies an intention to do an act which is wrongful, to the detriment of another."

Viewed in the light of the above definitions, we are willing to, and do, say that the acts of the defendants under the facts and circumstances of the case at bar were malicious and were without proper or sufficient justification or excuse. The learned trial judge happily stated the correct rule of law applicable to this case in his instructions to the jury. The jury resolved the question in favor of the plaintiff on conflicting testimony, which, however, was sufficient to sustain the verdict. The verdict being general, it is presumed that a finding was made on every question necessary to sustain the same. Should the conclusion as reached in this case be otherwise, under our present industrial and economic conditions, gross wrongs could, and doubtless would, be committed in the name of commercial freedom or legal competition. Great interests—financial, industrial, or other—could, by the strength of an unfair and wrongful combination, disguised as competition, arbitrarily and unjustly control the markets of the state as to all commodities. The result would be the elimination of fair and honest competition, without which there can be no freedom in the commercial world, or in other lines of human endeavor. It therefore becomes the duty of the courts to protect the weak from the intentional and unjustifiable wrongs of the powerful, and for that purpose the beneficent provisions of the ever-growing and developing common law are amply able to correct the evils complained of. It is peculiarly the duty of the state to control by proper regulation all businesses which are of common and public interest. As was well said by Prof. Wyman in his Control of the Market: "All businesses, both great and small, are subject, to be sure, to that general police power of the state, whereby in any civilized society an effort is made to so order things that one may not use his own so as to injure another. But the comparison of the large amount of regulation which is considered proper for the state to impose upon a monopolized business which the small amount of regulation which is considered proper for the state to enforce in regard to competitive business is in itself significant enough. The difference which is shown is more than one of degree. It becomes one in kind. In the ordinary business where regulation by competition is still sufficient the law cannot question the decision of the proprietor to refuse to sell to a particular applicant, or to discriminate in his prices. But where the business is in the hands of a monopolistic combination, refusal to sell may become a conspiracy, and discrimination may be held illegal." It therefore becomes the duty of the courts to guard with jealous care all the various interests of our commercial and industrial world, to the end that every man may, so far as possible, be guaranteed entire freedom of competition in every field of human activity, so far as the same may be consistent with the larger common interests of the whole.

Having reached this conclusion, it is unnecessary to consider the other assignment of error. The judgment of the District Court of Kay County should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

NORTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

S. H. SLEEPER, Appt.,

v.

G. W. BAKER et al., Respts.

(— N. D. —, 134 N. W. 716.)

Trial — motion to exclude evidence — sufficiency.

1. An objection to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action must specially point out wherein the complaint is defective.

Same — defects reached.

2. An objection to the evidence, which is based upon and calls attention to substantial defects in a count of a complaint merely, will not reach a misjoinder of actions or formal defects in pleading.

Pleading — sufficiency to admit proof.

3. As against such a motion to exclude all of the evidence, one count, although misjoined, if otherwise stating a cause of action, will be allowed to stand.

Conspiracy — to induce breach of contract — liability.

4. The civil action of conspiracy is a tort action, and cannot, in general, be maintained for inducing a third person to break his contract with the plaintiff; the consequence at law being only a broken contract for which the party to the contract may have his remedy by suing upon it. In order to sustain such an action, it is generally necessary that there shall be an averment and proof of the commission of an act which, if done by one alone, would, at the common law, constitute a ground for an action on the case. The action will not generally lie for merely inducing another to break his contract, except where direct fraud or force or coercion has been used.

(December 19, 1911.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Ward County in defendants' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the breach of two contracts for the sale of certain lands, and for alleged conspiracy to break said contracts. Reversed.

Statement by Bruce, J.:

Facts: This action was brought by S. H. Sleeper, appellant, to recover damages for the breach of two contracts, one with the defendants G. W. Baker and C. E. Brace, copartners, known as "Baker & Brace," and the other with Frank D. Banta and Lincoln Banta, copartners, known as "Banta Brothers," and joining these defendants and each of them as individuals in a tort action by reason of an alleged conspiracy to break said contracts. The trial court sustained a motion to exclude all of the testimony under the complaint, on the grounds that no cause or causes of action were therein set forth. This motion specifically stated wherein the several counts failed to state causes of action, but made no point as to misjoinder of actions or as to any other defects in the pleadings. After the granting of this motion and the exclusion of the testimony, another motion was made to dismiss the action "on the ground and for the reason that the complaint failed to allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action." This request was also granted, and the action was dismissed, but without prejudice to the plaintiff. The error complained of, and for which a reversal is asked on this appeal, is the action of the court in granting such motions.

The first count of the complaint is in contract against the defendants Baker & Brace. It first sets up a contract between the plaintiff, S. H. Sleeper, and the defendants Banta Brothers, made on the 1st day of May, 1906, wherein and whereby it was agreed that the plaintiff, Sleeper, "should furnish lands for sale to purchasers to be furnished by said defendants (Banta Brothers), and that, for each acre sold to purchasers furnished by said Banta Brothers, the plaintiff should allow them the sum of $3 per acre, and a refund of $29 railroad fare for each purchaser who actually purchased land shown by the said Sleeper, plaintiff herein, to said defendants Headnotes by BRUCE, J.

Note. — As to the right of action for damages for inducing a breach of contract, see Schonwald v. Ragains, ante, 854, and the annotations referred to in the footnote thereto.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

or their customers. That in the months of August and September, 1906, the plaintiff, having listed and inquired about and arranged for the sale of a large amount of lands to customers of said Banta Brothers, did show to defendants Banta Brothers, large quantities of said lands so to be had for their said customers, and which this plaintiff had the right, as agent, to sell, and for which he had the right to procure customers under contract hereinafter more particularly set forth, together with other lands also shown to customers of said defendants, Banta Brothers, in the months of August and September of the year 1906. That said lands were so exhibited to defendants, wherein and whereby it was agreed number, in said months of August and September, and large quantities of land hereinafter more specifically set forth were, by reason of said showing and exhibition, sold to the customers of the defendants Banta Brothers, all of the land in this complaint mentioned being so sold; and the said lands were exhibited to said customers at an expense to this plaintiff of not less than $630.50. That in the month of July, A. D. 1906, and for the purpose of carrying out the contract between the defendants Banta Brothers, and the plaintiff, Sleeper, the said Sleeper made and entered into a certain contract, partly oral and partly written, with Baker & Brace, the other defendants, wherein and whereby it was agreed that the said Baker & Brace would, and did, by the terms of said contract, give authority to said plaintiff, Sleeper, to sell any of the lands which they had in their hands as agents for sale, to any person whomsoever, and that, as compensation to said Sleeper if said sale was made, he, the said Sleeper, should receive the difference between the price given him upon the said lands and a net price by said last-named defendants, Baker & Brace, or that, in case of a sale by Baker & Brace to any customers furnished by said S. H. Sleeper or procured or introduced to said Baker & Brace by said Sleeper, they (Baker & Brace) were to pay to said Sleeper $1.50 an acre. That under the terms of said contract with Baker & Brace, the plaintiff, Sleeper, exhibited 5,080 acres of land (in said complaint particularly described) to said Banta Brothers, and a number of other persons, 'all of said persons as aforesaid being furnished by said S. H. Sleeper to Baker & Brace under the terms and provisions of the contract before set forth, and that Baker & Brace sold to said persons the said land, amounting in all to 5,080 acres of land,' and that the plaintiff, Sleeper, was entitled to receive from said Baker & Brace $1.50 per acre for such land, amounting in all to the sum of $7,620, with interest thereon from the 1st day of March, 1907, and amounting in all to the sum of $8,642.35, no part of which has been paid."

The second count is in contract against Banta Brothers, and is substantially as follows: "That in the sale of said lands this plaintiff is informed and verily believes the fact to be that Banta Brothers & Company, a copartnership hereinbefore named as defendants, and Frank D. Banta and Lincoln Banta, received as commission on the sale of said lands and retained lands by way of commission, in the sum of not less than $35,000. That of said commissions so received by the said Frank D. Banta, Lincoln Banta, and Banta Brothers & Company, the sum of $19,760 is justly due and owing from said Lincoln Banta, Frank D. Banta, and Banta Brothers & Company under the terms and provisions of the contract between plaintiff and said defendants in this paragraph mentioned, no part of which has been paid, though payment thereof has been demanded, and no accounting for which has been rendered the plaintiff, though a demand for an accounting has been made upon the defendants in this paragraph mentioned and each of them. That the said amount of $19,760 and interest from the 1st day of March, 1907, is justly due and owing, as this affiant is informed and verily believes, by said defendants in this paragraph mentioned, to the plaintiff, said interest amounting, at the date hereof, to the sum of $2,651.14, making a total now justly due and owing of $22,411.14, no part of which has been paid, though payment thereof has been demanded.

The third count purports to be an action in conspiracy, and is as follows: "That, in reliance upon the said contracts with the several defendants named in this action, and depending in good faith upon the same, and fulfilling the same on the part of this plaintiff in good faith, the plaintiff expended large sums of money and time for the purpose and in showing prospective purchasers the lands alleged hereinbefore to have been sold, and in furnishing buyers to said Baker & Brace and furnishing lands to said Frank D. Banta, Lincoln Banta, and Banta Brothers & Company, and did, in all things, comply with the terms of the two said contracts in this complaint mentioned, and performed in all things the said contracts, and did earn, as this plaintiff is informed and verily believes, the sums of money hereinbefore alleged to be due and owing, and the said services and sums of money so expended were of reasonable value to the defendants in this action of the sums claimed to be due and owing this plaintiff under the terms of said contracts. That heretofore, and in pursuance and performance of said contracts, this plaintiff did procure and introduce to Baker & Brace, as purchasers for lands, all persons hereinbefore named, and others, about the month of August or September, in the year 1906; and by reason of said procuring of said lands for said Banta Brothers & Company, Frank D. Banta, and Lincoln Banta, so sold and purchased as aforesaid, this plaintiff did in all matters and things comply with the terms of said contracts with all of the defendants hereinbefore named. That the said Frank D. Banta, Lincoln Banta, and Banta Brothers & Company, and G. W. Baker and C. E. Brace, disregarding the terms of said contracts hereinbefore set forth and alleged, which were then known to all the defendants, and with the intent to cheat and defraud this plaintiff, did, in the months of August and September, A. D. 1906, and afterwards, and prior to the date hereof, falsely, fraudulently, and with the intent to cheat and defraud the plaintiff, conspire together to prevent this plaintiff from collecting any of the moneys due to this plaintiff, as hereinbefore alleged, by ignoring this plaintiff as the agent of all of said parties under the terms of said contracts, and by dealing directly with each other without the intervention or the agency of this plaintiff, and by pretended sales of various and sundry of the said lands hereinbefore described, prior to the actual and bona fide sales which were thereafter made, after said pretended sales, and by various and sundry unlawful and deceitful schemes to deceive, each and all of said defendants have conspired together for the purposes of defeating and cheating this plaintiff out of moneys alleged to be due and owing by fraud and deceit as aforesaid. That this plaintiff did not know for about the period of one year or more after the consummation of said conspiracy aforesaid, that the same existed; does not know exactly how much land was sold, but believed that large amounts were sold on which this plaintiff is entitled to commissions in addition to those hereinafter set forth and alleged. That the plaintiff was deceived by said defendants and each of them to his damage in the sums hereinbefore alleged to be due and owing, having relied on the honesty and integrity of the said defendants and each of them, by false and fraudulent transactions and statements hereinbefore made in pursuance of and carrying out the said conspiracy in this paragraph alleged; and that said defendants and each of them did profit, and have kept and retained, for the use and benefit of said defendants and each of them, commissions and lands received by them as commissions by reason of the agency and performance of the contract hereinbefore set forth, by plaintiff, the said sums of money hereinbefore alleged to be due and owing by defendants to plaintiff in the respective sums alleged against them and each of them, together with the other and large commissions, aggregating much more than the amounts alleged to be due, and that said defendants were entitled to keep and retain."

The prayer for relief is as follows: "Wherefore plaintiff prays judgment in his favor, and against Frank D. Banta, Lincoln Banta, and Banta Brothers & Company, for the sum of $22,411.14, and against G. W. Baker, C. E. Brace, and G. W. Baker and C. E. Brace, copartners, as Baker & Brace, for the sum of $8,622.45, and against all of the defendants herein for the sum of $31,000, with interest from this date until paid at the rate of 7 per cent per annum, and that the defendants Baker & Brace be enjoined, pending this litigation, from collecting the judgment in favor of Baker & Brace and against this plaintiff; that the defendants and each of them be compelled to render a full and complete account of all of said transactions set forth in this complaint by order of this court; and that the plaintiff have such further relief as to the court seems just and meet in the premises."

Messrs. LeSueur & Bradford and Ryerson & Nash for appellant.

Messrs. Winslow Evans and Bowen & Adams for respondents.

Bruce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Three causes of action are intended to be set forth in the complaint. Two are separate and distinct actions upon the contract, against separate and distinct defendants, and one is an action of tort against all of the defendants.

It is for this court to determine whether such complaint is vulnerable to a motion to exclude all of the testimony for the failure of the several counts to state sufficient causes of action, and which motion, though specifically pointing out wherein such failure consists, raises no objection to the misjoinder of the parties or of the actions, nor to the form of the pleadings.

We are of the opinion that the first count of the complaint states a cause of action in contract against the defendants Baker & Brace, and that the trial court erred in excluding all of the evidence thereunder, and in directing a dismissal of the action in so far as this count was concerned. There is, it is true, a question as to whether the joinder or attempted joinder of two causes of action upon the contract with separate and distinct defendants, and with another separate and distinct action in tort against all of the defendants, does not render the complaint defective; but, since this point was not raised by motion or demurrer preliminary to the trial in the court below, nor even by a specific objection pointing out the defect in the motion to exclude the evidence, or in the motion to dismiss on that trial, we hold that these objections, if any, were waived, and that the lower court erred in excluding all of the evidence under the complaint. "If there is but one righteous man in Sodom, the city may stand,"—and there appears to be at least one righteous count in this complaint. James River Nat. Bank v. Purchase, 9 N. D. 280, 83 N. W. 7.

We now come to the second count in the complaint, which also is on the contract. This count is against the defendants Banta Brothers. The causes of action against Baker & Brace and against Banta Brothers are separate and distinct, and should be separately stated (see § 6877, Rev. Codes, 1905), even if they can be properly joined, and there is some doubt as to whether the former portions of the complaint can be prefixed to the paragraphs just quoted and be made a part thereof, so as to constitute a cause of action. Even if they could, however, no cause of action in contract is stated against Banta Brothers. The complaint, indeed, as we view it, does not allege that Banta Brothers owe Sleeper anything on the contract, but rather that Sleeper owes Banta Brothers commissions at the rate of $3 per acre. The fact, if fact it be, that Banta Brothers received thereunder $35,000 commission from other parties, is, under this count, no concern of the plaintiff. No cause of action on the contract is stated in the complaint against Banta Brothers.

The next count, if count it be, is a count in tort or for conspiracy, and, although on the oral argument counsel for appellant hardly mentioned the subject, it was the sufficiency of this count that furnished the main matter in controversy both on the trial below and in the printed briefs of counsel on this appeal.

We must remember at the outset that, although the complaint seeks to establish a conspiracy, mere opprobrious epithets do not change, in any way, the nature of the action. The action is a civil and not a criminal one. Indeed, as was said by Lord Holt in the case of Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 374: "Though in the old books such actions are called conspiracies, yet they are nothing in fact but actions upon the case." It is generally only when men conspire to violate the primary, and not the mere contractual, rights of another that the civil action of conspiracy will lie. As one authority puts it: "An act which, if done by one alone, constitutes no ground of an action on the case, cannot be made the ground of such action by alleging it to have been done by and through a conspiracy of several." "The quality of the act, and the nature of the injury inflicted by it," the courts say, "must determine the question whether the action will lie." Kimball v. Harman, 34 Md. 407, 6 Am. Rep. 340; Savile v. Roberts, supra.

Although there are a number of cases to the contrary, the weight of American authority seems to hold to this rule. See 1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 636; 1 Addison, Torts, p. 7. Even the cases which are often cited in contradiction to it often fail to bear out the contention of their proponents. In the case of Van Horn v. Van Horn, 52 N. J. L. 284, 10 L.R.A. 184, 20 Atl. 485, for instance, the act was done by an outsider, and was a malicious libel to character and to business; and the same is true of Lally v. Cantwell, 30 Mo. App. 524. In the case of Jones v. Stanly, 76 N. C. 355, a malicious desire to injure the plaintiff, and not the mere desire to profit one's self, is the gravamen of the action. The same is also true of the case of Delz v. Vinfree, 80 Tex. 400, 26 Am. St. Rep. 755, 16 S. W. 111, and even of the leading English case of Lumley v. Gye, 2 El. & Bl. 216, 22 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 463, 17 Jur. 827, 1 Week. Rep. 432, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 706, on which the minority American rule seems to be grounded. In the leading American minority case of Angle v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 151 U. S. 1, 38 L. ed. 55, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 240, upon which the plaintiffs rely, there are to be found both a malicious motive, positive tortious acts, and positive injury, which an action on a contract against the contracting party could hardly have reached. The cases, indeed, are generally cases where the solicitation was by an entire outsider, and were accompanied by fraud or intimidation. It is also true that there is a line of cases where laborers were induced to break their contracts of employment, and which also hold to a contrary rule. See Haskins v. Royster, 70 N. C. 601, 16 Am. Rep. 780; Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555; Mapstrick v. Ramge, 9 Neb. 390, 31 Am. Rep. 415, 2 N. W. 739. These cases, however, belong to a class of their own, and they are historically grounded in the deep-rooted policy of the old English, and even early colonial American law, which almost gave to the employer a property right in his employee, which was evidenced by the statutes of laborers, of Elizabeth, and of Edward VI., and which tied the laborer to the land and dictated and controlled his contracts of employment. They are chiefly to be found in the Southern states, and in those of the East, where, at an early time, the institution of slavery not only gave to the master a property right in his employee, but bonded servants were common. See 1 Addison, Torts, p. 7; Chambers v. Baldwin, 91 Ky. 121, 11 L.R.A. 545, 34 Am. St. Rep. 165, 15 S. W. 57, 58; 1 Jaggard, Torts, p. 636.

The rule, indeed, has, except where direct fraud or coercion has been used, or where no adequate action upon the contract would lie against the guilty parties, rarely been extended to the breach of contracts generally. The whole question is so thoroughly and adequately discussed in the case of Chambers v. Baldwin, supra, and under a very similar state of facts, that we will refrain from lengthening this opinion; and, without necessarily affirming all that is in that opinion contained, we will refer to it for a discussion of the law. The rule, as we see it, is substantially this: "That an action cannot in general be maintained for inducing a third person to break his contract with the plaintiff; the consequence after all being only a broken contract for which the party to the contract may have his remedy by suing upon it." Ashley v. Dixon, 48 N. Y. 430, 8 Am. Rep. 559; Brentman v. Note (City Ct. N. Y.) 3 N. Y. Supp. 420; Boyson v. Thorn, 98 Cal. 578, 21 L.R.A. 233, 33 Pac. 492; Kimball v. Harman, supra.

It is true that the Wisconsin case of Martens v. Reilly, 109 Wis. 464, 84 N. W. 840, seems to support the position of the appellant; but this case is not only contrary to the weight of American authority (see Jaggard, Torts, p. 696), but, as we will hereafter see, was decided under a peculiar local statute. The same is true of the cases of White v. White, 132 Wis. 121, 111 N. W. 1117, and Randall v. Lonstorf, 126 Wis. 147, 3 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470, 105 N. W. 663. In the latter case, also, something greater than a breach of contract was involved, namely, a breach and annulment of the marriage relationship, in which the state as well as the individual is concerned. Anyway, all of the Wisconsin cases are decided under a statute in regard to conspiracy which is radically different from our own. To use the language of the admirable note to the case of Randall v. Lonstorf, supra, which is to be found in 5 Ann. Cas. 375: "The reported case cannot be said to be in conflict with the rule which is generally recognized. The case turned on the construction of the Wisconsin L.R.A. (N.S.) statute defining conspiracy, and it was merely held that the allegations of the complaint brought the case within that portion of the statute which makes it unlawful for any two or more persons to combine or agree together 'for the purpose of maliciously compelling another to do or perform any act against his will, or preventing or hindering another from doing or performing any lawful act.'" The court held, in the Wisconsin case, that the conspiracies or agreements were for the purpose of "preventing a lawful act," i. e., the fulfillment of the contracts. Our statute (§ 8768, Rev. Codes, 1905) only makes the prevention of the doing of a lawful act unlawful when that prevention is brought about "by force, threats, intimidation, or by interfering or threatening to interfere with tools, implements, or property belonging to or used by another, or with the use or employment thereof."

We hold, therefore, that the trial court did not err in excluding all the evidence as to the alleged conspiracy, and if this were the only count we would affirm the judgment. We are, however, as we have before said, equally satisfied that an action in contract is sufficiently pleaded in the complaint as against the defendants Baker & Brace, in so far, at least, as to render it invulnerable to a motion on the trial to exclude all of the testimony, and to a motion to dismiss the action after such testimony was excluded, which merely specifies basic faults in substance, and do not call attention to misjoinder or lack of form.

The judgment of the trial court is reversed, and the case is remanded for a new trial. The costs will be taxed against the respondents.

Goss, J., being disqualified, did not participate. Honorable Charles A. Pollock, Judge of the Third Judicial District, sat in his place.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE BOLLN COMPANY

v.

NORTH PLATTE VALLEY IRRIGATION COMPANY.

(— Wyo. —, 121 Pac. 22.)

Statute — passage — mandatory constitutional requirements.

1. A constitutional provision requiring

Note. — Constitutionality of statute making owner personally liable to laborers or materialmen because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection.

Gibbs v. Tally, 133 Cal. 373, 60 L.R.A.

the presiding officer of each house, in the presence of the house over which he presides, to sign all bills passed immediately after their titles have been publicly read, and the fact of the signing to be at once entered upon the journal, is mandatory.

Same — record of passage — mistake — rejection.

2. An erroneous number of original bill, employed by mistake of the clerk in attempting to give a double description to a bill signed by the presiding officer of a legislative body, while giving its correct number as enrolled bill, will be rejected as surplusage if the records show that the specified number of original bill was not passed, but that the enrolled bill mentioned was passed, duly signed, and filed in the proper archives.

Constitutional law — contractors' supplies — personal liability of owner.

3. The attempt to make an owner who fails to take from one contracting to construct for him a ditch or reservoir a bond conditioned to pay all claims for materials, farm produce, provisions, or goods of any kind furnished the contractor or subcontractor, personally liable for such claims, is invalid, as taking property without due process of law, and denying him the equal protection of the laws, so far as it attempts to include claims for materials which do not go to enhance the value of his property.

Bond — to protect materialmen — fixing penalty.

4. A statute requiring a property owner to take a good and sufficient bond from one contracting to do work for him, to pay claims of laborers and materialmen, is insufficient which does not fix any method for ascertaining the penalty of the bond.

Constitutional law — bond to secure materialmen — limitation of surety.

5. Limiting the surety which a property owner may take from one contracting to do work for him to secure payment of laborers and materialmen to incorporated companies deprives him of his liberty to contract, and denies him the equal protection of the laws.

(February 13, 1912.)

RESERVATION by the District Court for Converse County for the decision of the Supreme Court of questions arising in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the value of supplies furnished to a contractor, because of its failure to take the statutory bond from him. Answer favorable to defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion

Mr. F. H. Harvey for plaintiff.

Messrs. Clark & Clark, for defendant:

A failure of the journal affirmatively to show a proper signing defeats the bill.

State ex rel. Hynds v. Cahill, 12 Wyo. 225, 75 Pac. 433; State ex rel. Cheyenne v. Swan, 7 Wyo. 166, 40 L.R.A. 195, 75 Am. St. Rep. 889, 51 Pac. 209.

An affirmative showing has not been made.

Cohn v. Kingsley, 5 Idaho, 416, 38 L.R.A. 74, 49 Pac. 985; Hunt v. State, 22 Tex. App. 401, 3 S. W. 233; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Smyth, 103 Fed. 376; State v. Burlington & M. River R. Co. 60 Neb. 741, 84 N. W. 254; Fillmore v. Van Horn, 129 Mich. 52, 88 N. W. 69.

Such a statute is an unwarranted interference with the right to contract, and con-

815, 65 Pac. 970, cited in GEORGE BOLLN CO. v. NORTH PLATTE VALLEY IRRIG. CO., holds that an owner of property who has made and filed a valid contract for the placing of a building thereon, under which, by the terms of the statute, the entire contract price may be applied to the claims of laborers and materialmen, cannot constitutionally be required to furnish a bond which will make him liable to them in an additional amount in case their claims are not satisfied by the contractor.

But it has been held within the power of the legislature to provide that the owner of a building shall be liable to materialmen and laborers for the full value of their material and labor, if he fails to execute his contract in a certain form and file it in the recorder's office, although he has paid the contractor the contract price. Kellogg v. Howes, 81 Cal. 170, 6 L.R.A. 588, 22 Pac. 509.

And it is held that a statute making an owner who fails to comply with its requirement as to the form and filing of the contract, liable for the claims of materialmen and laborers, though they may exceed the contract price, does not uncon-stitutionally interfere with his right to contract, or make him liable to a penalty, nor does it otherwise unconstitutionally interfere with his rights. Chicago Lumber Co. v. Newcomb, 19 Colo. App. 265, 74 Pac. 786.

As to the constitutionality of a statute giving a mechanics' lien contrary to the agreement of the contractor, see the note to Kelly v. Johnson, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573.

As to whether a building contractor's bond indemnifies the owner against mechanics' liens when none are especially mentioned, see the note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1075.

As to the right of a subcontractor, materialman, or laborer to maintain an action on a contractor's bond to the owner, see the note in 27 L.R.A. (N.S.) 573.

As to the liability of sureties on the contractor's bond to laborers or materialmen who are not entitled to a lien, when the bond is conditioned against liens or claims, see the note in 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 889.

As to the effect of surrender or discharge by the owner of property, of a bond given by the contractor, conditioned for the payment of materialmen and laborers, upon the right of the latter to recover thereon, see the note in 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 455.

L. A. W.

travenes the constitutional provisions which prohibit the taking of property without due process of law. It is class legislation.

Gibbs v. Tally, 133 Cal. 373, 60 L.R.A. 815, 65 Pac. 970.

This statute denies the equal protection of the laws.

Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 41 L. ed. 666, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 255; Shaughnessy v. American Surety Co. 138 Cal. 543, 69 Pac. 250, 71 Pac. 701.

Beard, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case comes to this court on questions reserved by the district court of Converse county and certified here for decision as to the constitutionality of chapter 78 of the Session Laws of 1909, entitled, "An Act to Protect Laborers, Mechanics, Ranchmen, Farmers, Merchants, and Other Persons Furnishing Work or Labor, Material, Ranch or Farm Products, Goods or Provisions, to Contractors or Subcontractors in the Construction of Ditches, Canals, and Reservoirs," and now being §§ 3823, 3824, and 3825, Comp. Stat. 1910; the reserved questions being as follows:

"(1) In the passage of chapter 78 of the Session Laws of Wyoming 1909, did the legislature violate the provisions of § 28 of article 3 of the Constitution of the state of Wyoming?

"(2) Does the journal of the senate of the tenth state legislature of the state of Wyoming sufficiently show the signing by the president of the senate, in the presence of the senate, of chapter 78 of the Session Laws of Wyoming 1909?

"(3) Does the first sentence of § 1 of chapter 78 of the Session Laws of Wyoming 1909 violate the provisions of § 6 of article 1 of the Constitution of the state of Wyoming?

"(4) Does the first sentence of § 1 of chapter 78 of the Session Laws of Wyoming 1909 violate the provisions of § 1 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States?"

Section 28, art. 3, of the Constitution, referred to in the first question, is as follows: "The presiding officer of each house shall, in the presence of the house over which he presides, sign all bills and joint resolutions passed by the legislature immediately after their titles have been publicly read, and the fact of signing shall be at once entered upon the journal." On this branch of the case two questions are presented: First. Is this provision of the Constitution mandatory? Second. If so, does the senate journal show a compliance with such provision? The first question is very ably and elaborately discussed in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State ex rel. Hynds v. Cahill, 12 Wyo. 225, 75 Pac. 433; and, while the question was there left undecided, because not necessary to a determination of the case, we think one reading that discussion can arrive at no other conclusion than that the court as then constituted would have held the provision mandatory had it been necessary to decide the point. The court as now constituted deems it sufficient, without encumbering the reports by repeating what was there said, to concur in and adopt as the basis of its decision the reasoning in that case, and to now hold the provisions of said § 28, art. 3, of the Constitution, to be mandatory.

Second. Does the senate journal show a compliance with that provision of the Constitution? It is contended by counsel for defendant that it does not; but, to the contrary, shows affirmatively that at the time the bill was signed by the president of the senate it bore a different title than that of chapter 78, Session Laws 1909, and related to an entirely different subject. The only entry found in the senate journal with reference to the signing by the president of the senate of the act in question is found on page 521, senate journal 1909, under the heading, "Signing of Enrolled Acts," and is as follows: "Mr. President thereupon gave notice that he was about to sign, and he did, thereupon, in the presence of the senate, affix his official signature to the following enrolled acts, to wit: . . . house enrolled act No. 73, original being: house bill No. 96—A bill for an act relating to the issuance of certificates of appropriation under permit, and to the use of the waters of the state of Wyoming for power purposes." The journal entries under the heading and recital above set out describe more than twenty bills as being then signed, two preceding and the others following the one set out above, and in each instance describes the bill in the same manner by giving the number of the enrolled act, the number of the original house bill, and the title of the act. An examination of said chapter 78, Session Laws 1909, on file in the office of the secretary of state, discloses that it bears at the top of the first page the following: "Original house bill No. 69." "Enrolled act No. 73"—followed by the title and body of the act as published in the Session Laws 1909 as chapter 78. The house journal shows that house bill No. 96, bearing the title as recited in the senate journal, passed the house (H. J. p. 313), went to the senate, and was there referred to a committee (S. J. p. 272), was reported back to the senate by the committee without recommendation (S. J. p. 317), and was indefinitely postponed by the adoption of the report of the committee of the whole of the senate so recommending (S. J. pp. 330, 331). House bill No. 96, therefore, never passed the senate or became an enrolled act. The history of house bill No. 69, as briefly stated, is as follows: As introduced and as it passed the house it bore the title of chapter 78, S. L., was amended in the senate, the house concurred in the senate amendment, and passed the bill as amended, was reported by the house enrolling committee as properly enrolled as "enrolled act No. 73," and as such signed by the speaker of the house. H. J. pp. 154, 554, 557, 579; and S. J. pp. 314, 439, 443, 478. House bill No. 69, therefore, as shown by the journals, was regularly passed by both houses, was properly enrolled as "enrolled act No. 73," and duly signed by the speaker of the house; and the enrolled act on file in the office of the secretary of state bears the signature of the speaker of the house, the president of the senate, and of the governor, approving the same. If there was simply a conflict between the enrolled act and the senate journal as to the signing of the bill, the latter, being the best evidence, should control. But here we find not only such a conflict, but a conflict in the journal recital itself. Either the recital that the bill then signed was "house enrolled act No. 73," or that it was house bill No. 96—a bill for an act," etc., is erroneous. We must therefore look beyond the single journal entry for evidence as to which of the two is correct. Tracing the history of the two bills,—house bill No. 69 and house bill No. 96,—as shown by the journals, we have little difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that it was "enrolled act No. 73" which was in fact house bill No. 69. The senate journal recites that the president of the senate gave notice that he was about to sign and did then sign certain enrolled acts. Then follows the description of the bills then signed, and in each instance the number of the enrolled act is given as well as the other description; and, had the journal in this instance contained the number of the enrolled act only, it would no doubt have been sufficient. Again, house bill No. 96, never having passed the senate or become an enrolled act, could not properly have been among the bills then signed; while house bill No. 69 had been regularly passed by both houses, had been properly enrolled, bore the signature of the speaker of the house, and was in proper condition to be then signed by the president of the senate. How the error in the senate journal occurred we have no means of knowing; but it seems quite probable that on that last busy session of the senate the clerk inadvertently transposed the figures "6" and "9," and in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) writing up the journal in full from his minutes took the title from house bill No. 96, instead of from enrolled act 73. But, however the error may have occurred, we think the recital in the journal, which is supported by the enrolled act and by all other recitals in the journal with reference to the bill, must be taken as speaking the truth, and that the other description of the bill must be rejected as the erroneous one. Such being our opinion, the first reserved question is answered in the negative, and the second in the affirmative.

The third and fourth questions call for a determination of the validity of the first sentence of § 1 of the statute in question on other grounds. Counsel for defendant contend that it violates § 6, art. 1, of the Constitution of this state, which provides: "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law;" and also the provisions of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, that no state shall make or enforce any law denying to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws. The part of the statute thus questioned is as follows: "Whenever any ditch or canal company, or other owner or owners, shall contract with any person, persons, or corporation, for the construction of its, his, or their ditch, canal, or reservoir, or any part thereof, such company, owner, or owners, shall take from the person, persons, or corporation with whom such contract is made, a good and sufficient bond in some guaranty or surety company authorized to do business in this state, conditioned that such contractor or contractors shall pay or cause to be paid all laborers, mechanics, materialmen, ranchmen, farmers, merchants, and other persons who supply such contractor or contractors, or any of his or their subcontractors, with labor, work, materials, ranch or farm products, provisions or goods of any kind, all just debts incurred therefor in carrying on such work, which bond shall be filed by such company or other owner in the office of the county clerk and ex officio register of deeds in the county where the principal work of such contractor shall be carried on; and if any such ditch or canal company or other owner or owners shall fail to take such bond, such ditch or canal company or other owner or owners shall be liable to the persons herein mentioned to the full extent of all such debts so contracted by such contractor, or contractors, or any of his or their subcontractors." [§ 3823.] The other provisions of the act relating to actions on the bond, etc., are not involved in this case. The effect of the statute, if it can be upheld, is to extend the application of the principles upon which mechanics' lien laws are founded, and to render the owner personally liable, not only for the labor and materials which actually go into the improvement and thereby enhance the value of the property, but also for all just debts incurred by the contractor or any of his subcontractors for labor, work, material, ranch or farm products, provisions or goods of any kind in carrying on such work, unless he takes from the contractor the bond provided for by the statute. That the legislature cannot make the owner personally liable for other things or to a greater amount than it can create a lien upon his property we have no doubt; and, if the statute under consideration does so, to that extent it is invalid. In many states the liens given for labor performed for or for materials furnished to the contractor or subcontractor are limited by the statutes to the contract price between the owner and the original contractor, or to a lesser amount, or to the amount due or to become due to the contractor at the time of giving notice, etc. In other states a lien is given for labor and materials without regard to the contract price or the state of the account between the owner and the contractor. The latter class of statutes has been many times attacked as unconstitutional on the grounds that are here urged against the statute above quoted. In a majority of the state courts, and in the Federal courts, the constitutionality of such statutes has been upheld to the extent of the value of the labor or materials which have actually gone into the building or other structure or improvement, upon the principle that equitably those who have furnished labor or materials which have gone into and thereby increased the value of the property should be compensated therefor by the owner who has been benefited thereby. Many cases are cited and reviewed by Judge Lurton in the case of Jones v. Great Southern Fireproof Hotel Co. 30 C. C. A. 108, 58 U. S. App. 397, 86 Fed. 370, which decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, 193 U. S. 532, 48 L. ed. 778, 24 Sup. Ct. Rep. 576. But our statute goes much further, and imposes upon the owner an obligation to require the contractor to give security for debts that he or any of his subcontractors may contract with third persons for supplies and goods of any kind in carrying on the work, and which do not enter into or become a part of the work, or enhance its value, and for which, but for the statute, the owner is in no wise liable. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

To illustrate: The first eight items of the account in suit are:

March 3. 2 kerchiefs 20, Oshoes
1.75, W. Sox 1.00	Rowe 2.95
Mits 1.25 2 shirts 1.00 Underwear
2.75	" 5.00
Jumper .85 Blanket 1.25	" 2.10

The account contained many items of like kind, and also dry goods, pipes, and tobacco, etc. Upon what principle of natural justice can one who lets a contract for the construction of a ditch, canal, or reservoir be required to take security or to become personally liable for debts which may be contracted by the contractor or any of his subcontractors for goods or supplies which do not enter into the work or add to its value, and from which one derives no benefit? What justice is there in requiring a homesteader, desert entryman, or other landowner who lets a contract for the construction of a ditch to conduct water onto his land to take security from such contractor that he (the contractor) will pay all debts contracted by him or any of his subcontractors for groceries, clothing, bedding, etc., in carrying on the work? We confess we can see none. The statute goes beyond the principles upon which lien laws have been sustained, viz., that the property is enhanced in value to the extent of the value of the labor and materials actually going therein. In the Jones Case, supra, 30 C. C. A. on page 126, it is said: "If, then, this statute does not unduly restrain the owner's liberty of contract, considered as an incident to the right of owning, possessing, and enjoying property, the law must be constitutionally unobjectionable. If, however, this legislation is the mere arbitrary exercise of the powers of government, unauthorized by the established principles of private right, and not having the sanction of natural justice, it is not the law of the land. But we have already seen that the underlying purpose of the act is not to arbitrarily and unnecessarily oppress the owner in any incident of his right as owner, but to secure those who, by their labor or materials, have contributed to the improvement of the owner's property. That the liens under consideration are given to secure debts which are primarily the debts of another would be fatal to the legislation, as taking the property of one to pay the debts of another, but for the equity arising from the use of the labor and materials by the owner." In the present case there is no allegation that a single item of the account sued on was for labor or materials that went into the work; but for goods, wares, and merchandise to be used as supplies in the construction of a tunnel on the line of an irrigating canal, as set forth in an itemized account attached to the petition; the account consisting principally of provisions, clothing, bedding, hay, and grain. The equities upon which the law giving a lien for labor and materials was upheld in the Jones Case are entirely wanting in this case; and the statute, in so far as it requires the owner to take security or become personally liable for other debts of the contractor or subcontractors than for those things—labor or materials—entering into the construction of the work, and contributing to the improvement of the property, and enhancing its value, in effect takes the property of the owner to pay the debts of another and is "fatal to the legislation."

A statute of Kansas provided: "That whenever any railroad company shall contract with any person for the construction of its road or any part thereof, such railroad company shall take from the person with whom such contract is made, a good and sufficient bond, conditioned that such person shall pay all laborers, mechanics, and materialmen, and persons who supply such contractor with provisions or goods of any kind, all just debts due to such persons, or to any person to whom any part of such work is given, in carrying on such work," etc. This seems to have been taken as the model from which our statute was drawn, as it appears to be in almost identical language with a few additions, and extending the liability to debts contracted by any subcontractors; and as we learn by reference to the house journal, pp. 251, 252, the words, "in some guaranty or surety company authorized to do business in this state," were not in the original bill, but were inserted by amendment. We are aware that the Kansas statute has been enforced by the courts of that state, but fail to find where its constitutionality has been raised or passed upon by the courts of that state on the questions involved in this case. In California a statute required a bond to be filed with the contract in at least 25 per cent of the contract price, to secure laborers and materialmen; and providing that a failure so to do made the owner personally liable. The statute had been enforced by the courts for some time without its constitutionality being questioned on the grounds that it deprived the party of his liberty of contract, or of his property without due process of law, or of equal protection of the laws. But the statute was so attacked in the case of Gibbs v. Tally, 133 Cal. 373, 60 L.R.A. 815, 65 Pac. 970, and held unconstitutional as violative of § 1, art. 1, of the Constitution of that 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) state, and the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. Statutes making a railroad company liable for labor and materials, instead of giving a lien on the road therefor, have been upheld upon the same principle and to the same extent as mechanics' lien laws, but no further, so far as we have been advised.

Another objection to this statute, urged by counsel for defendant, while not a constitutional question, may be properly mentioned here. That is, the amount or penalty of the bond. The statute requires a good and sufficient bond, conditioned for the payment of all just debts contracted by the contractor or any of his subcontractors for specified items in carrying on the work, but fails to provide any method by which the amount of the liability can be determined at the time the bond is executed. It seems unreasonable to require a bond in an unlimited amount; and equally unreasonable to suppose that any surety or guaranty company would be willing to become surety on a bond so conditioned without the extent of its liability being therein fixed at a specific sum. Suppose the owner takes a bond in an amount reasonably believed to be sufficient at the time, but it should turn out to be entirely insufficient in amount. By the terms of the statute he would be personally liable at least for the excess. When a bond is required by a statute, it should provide some method by which the obligor and his sureties—and in this instance the owner as well—can ascertain and fix a definite amount beyond which they could not be held. Whether a bond, if given, containing no penalty, would be valid and enforceable, is quite a different question from requiring a bond containing certain conditions without prescribing the penalty for a breach of those conditions. Perhaps this defect might be cured by a provision for an official approval of the bond, in which case such approval might be held to attest the sufficiency of the penalty as well as of the sureties.

The only remaining question to be considered is that the bond required by the statute must be "in some guaranty or surety company authorized to do business in this state." Prior to the adoption of this statute, and a similar one applying to railroad companies, passed at the same session of the legislature, all bonds required by law, so far as we have been able to discover, were permitted to be given with either personal or surety company security; and if personal security is sufficient for public officers, executors, administrators, etc., and in court proceedings, why not in this class of bonds? As said by the supreme court of Ohio in the case of State ex rel. McKell v. Rob- bins, 71 Ohio St. 273-291, 69 L.R.A. 427, 73 N. E. 470, 2 Ann. Cas. 485. "It is very plain that the security companies may be greatly benefited by this legislation, but an adequate corresponding benefit or protection to the general public, such as would justify such a radical and drastic limitation upon individual rights, is not apparent." The Ohio statute considered in that case, requiring official bonds (with certain exceptions) and administrators' bonds above $2,000, to be surety company bonds, unless an affidavit was filed that application had been made to such company and refused, was held to be unconstitutional. The statute we are considering places it within the power of the half dozen surety companies authorized to do business in this state to prevent any ditch or canal company, or other owner, from letting a contract for the construction of any ditch, canal, or reservoir, except under the penalty of becoming personally liable for the unlimited debts of others for things which have not gone into the work, and due to persons with whom the owner has no contractual relations. Or, if they become surety on such bond, they may charge what they please therefor. Such a requirement, in our opinion is not only an unwarranted restriction upon the liberty to contract, but a denial of the equal protection of the laws; and in so far as the statute requires a surety or guaranty company bond, and creates a personal liability for other things than labor and materials which actually go into the work and thereby enhance the value of the property, it must be held to be unconstitutional and void.

To that extent the third and fourth questions are answered in the affirmative.

Scott and Potter, JJ., concur.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES E. BLAKE, Trustee, etc., of N. Curtis Fletcher & Company,
v.

ATLANTIC NATIONAL BANK.

(33 R. I. 464, 82 Atl. 225.)

Contract — promise of stranger — assent — bankruptcy.

1. A bank cannot assent to the ratification

Note. — Right of creditor after promisor's bankruptcy to adopt and enforce his assumption of another's debt.

This note, as the title indicates, is confined strictly to the question whether one for whose benefit the promise was made must assent to the agreement before the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by a partnership of the individual debt of a partner to it after the partnership has become insolvent, so as to be entitled to apply collateral held to secure firm obligations in satisfaction of such indebtedness.

Partnership — contracts — ratification.

2. That a contract signed by one partner was in fact a partnership matter is established by testimony of the one who signed it that it was intended as such, and a letter signed by the other partner agreeing that such partner's signature shall be assumed as that of the firm.

(March 4, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Providence and Bristol Counties made during the trial of an action brought to recover collaterals of the insolvent partnership, which defendant claimed to retain in satisfaction of a note made by N. Curtis Fletcher which had been adopted by the firm. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. John S. Murdock and Percy W. Gardner, for defendant:

A third person may enforce a promise made for his benefit.

Lawrence v. Fox, 20 N. Y. 268; Urquhart v. Brayton, 12 R. I. 169; Wood v. Moriarty, 15 R. I. 518, 9 Atl. 427; Wilbur v. Wilbur, 17 R. I. 295, 21 Atl. 497; Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882, 55 Atl. 715; Gould v. United Traction Employees Mut. Aid Asso. 26 R. I. 142, 58 Atl. 624.

The fact that the promise made for the benefit of the bank is in the nature of an assumption by a firm of an individual liability does not alter the general rule.

Merriman v. Social Mfg. Co. 12 R. I. 175; Dean v. Collins, 15 N. D. 535, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 96, 125 Am. St. Rep. 610. 108 N. W. 242, 11 Ann. Cas. 1027; Arnold v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 117; J. & H. Claagens Co. v. Silber, 93 Wis. 579, 67 N. W. 1122; Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 593.

The fact of bankruptcy does not alter the rights of the defendant.

Re Downing, 1 Dill. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 4,044; Burdick, Partn. 1906 p. 295; Re Long, 7 Ben. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 8,476.

Mr. Charles R. Haslam, with Messrs. Gardner, Pirce, & Thornley, for plaintiff.

bankruptcy of the promisor in order to enforce such promise against the bankrupt's estate. The American authorities show a decided conflict of opinion on this question; on the other hand, the English cases are unanimous in holding that the assent must be made effective before the bankruptcy of the promisor.

Sweetland, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in assumpsit, brought by Charles E. Blake, trustee in bankruptcy of N. Curtis Fletcher & Company a copartnership composed of N. Curtis Fletcher and William R. Potter against the Atlantic National Bank. The case was tried before a justice of the superior court sitting without a jury. The case is now before this court upon the defendant's exception to the decision in favor of the plaintiff.

In September, 1907, the said N. Curtis Fletcher signed his own name to an underwriting agreement as to certain bonds of the United Illuminating Company. Other persons also signed this agreement. By the terms of the agreement each person signing became obligated to the Atlantic National Bank for the amount set opposite his name in consideration of a loan made by the bank to the nominee of the underwriters. The amount set opposite the name of N. Curtis Fletcher was $1,700. By the testimony of Mr. Fletcher he signed the underwriting agreement in behalf of the copartnership. In the early part of November, 1907, Mr. Potter was considering a dissolution of the firm; and Mr. Fletcher demanded from him that he should sign an acknowledgment that the obligation on the underwriting agreement, arising from the signature of Mr. Fletcher, was a firm obligation. Mr. Potter testified that up to that time he had understood that the underwriting agreement was an individual transaction of Mr. Fletcher. After considerable controversy between the partners, Mr. Potter signed the acknowledgment, which was dated as of the date of the underwriting agreement. In this written acknowledgment Mr. Potter agreed that the signature of Mr. Fletcher upon the underwriting agreement "shall be and is hereby assumed by N. Curtis Fletcher & Company." The said partnership was not dissolved at that time.

On January 28, 1908, N. Curtis Fletcher & Company obtained a loan from the Atlantic National Bank, the defendant, and gave to said bank the firm's promissory note for $5,800, payable on demand. The firm deposited and pledged with the bank as collateral security for the payment of said note certain shares and a bond of the United States Steel Corporation. In said note the copartnership gave to the bank authority to sell the collateral security at public or private sale on non-payment of the note, to apply the net proceeds of such sale to the payment of the note, and also to apply the surplus of such net proceeds after payment of said note to the payment of any other note or claim against said firm held by the bank. On February 7, 1908, said copartnership was adjudged bankrupt, and the plaintiff was appointed the trustee in bankruptcy of said copartnership. After the bankruptcy

Thus, an agreement by a partnership to assume separate debts of each partner will not entitle separate creditors to prove their claims as joint creditors of the firm against the partnership estate, where they did not assent to the arrangement before bankruptcy. Re Isaacs, 3 Sawy. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 7,093, 6 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 92.

And in Scull v. Alter, 16 N. J. L. 147, it was held that a creditor must assent to the transfer of liability where one firm assumes the debt of another.

In Robb v. Mudge, 14 Gray, 534, it was held that an agreement by a partner who purchased partnership property to assume firm indebtedness must be assented to by the firm creditors before commencement of insolvency proceedings, to enable such creditors to prove their debts against the separate estate before separate creditors are paid.

But in Re Downing, 1 Dill. 33, Fed. Cas. No. 4,044, where a firm creditor was permitted to prove his claim against the estate of the partner, who had purchased the assets of the firm and agreed to pay all the debts, the court, in the course of its opinion, said that a promise by one to another for the benefit of a third person may, according to the prevailing American doctrine, be enforced at law in the name of the latter, especially where, as was true in the case at bar, the promisor receives a fund or property with which to make such payment. And such promise is not defeated by subsequent bankruptcy of the promisor, and may be assented to, and the benefits thereof claimed, at any time either before or after the bankruptcy of the debtor. And Re Dowling was cited with approval and followed in Re Long, 7 Ben. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 8,476, the latter case criticizing the case which held that creditors must assent to such agreement before the bankruptcy of the promisor.

And in Re Rice, 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 373, Fed. Cas. No. 11,750, it seems to have been assumed that a purchasing partner's assumption of the firm debts was sufficient to entitle the firm creditors to share with his individual creditors in his bankrupt estate, without any question as to assent by the former.

A promise by one partner to pay all firm debts is enforceable against the separate estate of such partner by firm creditors, and they may share pari passu, though they did not know of the promise when made and the consideration did not move from them; and the benefit of this promise can be claimed either before or after the bankruptcy of the debtor. Re Collier, 12 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 266, Fed. Cas. No. 3,002.

And in Colt v. Wilder, 1 Edw. Ch. 484, in holding that a private debt assumed on the formation of a partnership may be proved the defendant was informed by Mr. Fletcher that the underwriting obligation arising from his signature upon the underwriting agreement was a firm obligation, and the defendant also received from Mr. Fletcher a copy of the above-mentioned written acknowledgment of Mr. Potter.

After the bankruptcy of the copartnership, the defendant sold said collateral security, and from the net proceeds of the sale satisfied the indebtedness upon said note for $5,800, and also satisfied the obligation of $1,700 upon the underwriting agreement. The plaintiff protested against the action of the bank in treating said claim for $1,700 as firm indebtedness, and has brought this action to recover the balance of the net proceeds of the sale of said collateral security remaining after the payment of the note of $5,800, and interest thereon. The plaintiff claims that the indebtedness of $1,700 in question was originally the individual obligation of Mr. Fletcher, and that the paper signed by Mr. Potter in November, 1907, is, at most, merely evidence of an assumption by the firm of that individual indebtedness of a partner. This was the finding of the justice of the superior court. The defendant urges that, even if this is the conclusion properly to be drawn from the testimony, and although the defendant was not aware of the assumption by the firm of the partner's individual obligation until after the bankruptcy of the firm, and hence its assent must have been given after the bankruptcy, still the assent, when it was given, would make the bank a creditor of the firm from the time of the assumption, and the bank would be entitled to apply the balance of the proceeds of the sale of said collateral security in satisfaction of this claim of $1,700 as an obligation of the firm, under the authorization contained in the note given by the firm to the bank.

The defendant bases its contention upon the authority of the Rhode Island cases, which uphold the right of a third person to enforce a promise made by one person to another for the benefit of said third person, although the consideration does not move from such third person, and although he was not cognizant of the promise when it was made. This court has frequently recognized such a doctrine. Urquhart v. Brayton, 12 R. I. 169; Merriman v. Social Mfg. Co. 12 R. I. 175; Wood v. Moriarty, 15 R. I. 518, 9 Atl. 427; Wood v. Moriarty, 16 R. I. 201, 14 Atl. 855; Munroe v. Providence Permanent Firemen's Relief Asso. 19 R. I. 363, 34 Atl. 149; Smith v. Union Ins. Co. 25 R. I. 260, 105 Am. St. Rep. 882, 55 Atl. 715; Gould v. United Traction Employees Mut. Aid Asso. 26 R. I. 142, 58 Atl. 624. However, the third person acquires no rights under the promise made for his benefit until he accedes to it. It must clearly appear, by suit brought upon the agreement or in some other manner, that the third person knows of the against the partnership assets, and that without creditor's express assent, the court said it is not incumbent upon the complainant to show that by any act on his part he assented to the agreement between the partners at the time of forming the partnership, to assume his debt and become his joint debtors. It is sufficient that they did so agree between themselves, and that an assignment has been made creating a trust for the benefit of the creditors of the firm.

English cases.

Assent before bankruptcy to agreement by a partnership to assume separate debts of one partner is necessary to enable separate creditors to prove against the bankrupt's estate. Ex parte Williams, Buck, Bankr. 13.

And to the same effect is Ex parte Appleby, 2 Beacon, Bankr. 482, where, upon the dissolution of a partnership, the continuing partner agreed to assume the partnership debts.

And also Ex parte Parker, 2 Mont. D. & DeG. 511, where a partnership assumed the liability of one of the partners.

In Ex parte Freeman, Buck, Bankr. 471, it was held that the joint creditors not having, previous to bankruptcy, accepted as a sole debtor the continuing partner, who, on 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

dissolution of the partnership, had covenanted to pay the firm debts, they could not prove against his separate estate. It was said: "The engagement of one partner with the other to pay the debts of the firm can, as to the creditors of the firm, be considered only as a proposal that he is willing to become their sole debtor. If they accede to this proposal before the bankruptcy, then a contract to that effect is concluded, and under the bankruptcy they are his separate creditors. But their acceptance of him as their separate debtor after the bankruptcy comes too late, for he is then incapable of contract.

And, also, in Ex parte Fry, 1 Glyn & J. 96, where one of three partners assigned his interest in the partnership property to two continuing partners, who agreed to pay the debts of the three, and afterwards became bankrupt, it was held that the joint creditors of the three were not entitled to prove against the estate of the two, there having been no acceptance prior to the bankruptcy, of the continuing partners as debtors.

And in Ex parte Bonbonus, 8 Ves. Jr. 540, there is a dictum to the effect that when a general partnership agrees to take upon itself the demand to the individual, the creditor must show consent to be the creditor of the general partnership only. J. H. B.

promise in his favor, or the assumption by a stranger of the debt due to him, accepts the new agreement, and assents to its terms. Until such circumstances appear showing accession on his part, the third person is not in position to avail himself of any benefit under the agreement. Before such accession on his part, his right to insist upon the performance of the promise in his favor may be lost by revocation or release between the parties to the agreement, or by the intervention of the rights of others. Wood v. Moriarty, 16 R. I. 201, 14 Atl. 855.

Such assent, to be effective, must be given before the bankruptcy of the promisor. This view is in accord with the general doctrine of the Rhode Island cases as to the position of the beneficiary under such promise before his assent to it. It also agrees with the great weight of authority that the indebtedness of a bankrupt may not be increased in this manner after bankruptcy. Re Isaacs, 3 Sawy. 35, Fed. Cas. No. 7,093. We are of the opinion that, if the indebtedness of $1,700 to the defendant bank is to be regarded as the individual obligation of the partner Fletcher, assumed by the firm, the assent on the part of the bank to such an arrangement, made after the firm's bankruptcy, will not constitute the defendant a creditor of the firm, and that the defendant cannot be permitted to use the firm's property, in the defendant's hands at the time of the bankruptcy, to satisfy such indebtedness.

We think, however, that it is established by the testimony that the obligation arising from the underwriting agreement was an indebtedness of the copartnership originally, and not an indebtedness assumed by the firm. The partner Fletcher, who signed the agreement, testified that in doing so he acted for the firm, and that the obligation was always that of the copartnership. The partner Potter does not deny that it was in fact a firm obligation. The limit of his testimony in that regard is that up to the time of signing the letter of acknowledgment, in November, 1907, he "understood it as individual underwriting." There was a long interview between the partners in November, 1907, when Mr. Potter had the intention of withdrawing from the firm, and as a result of that conference, in which the matter must have been thoroughly considered, Mr. Potter signed the letter, addressed, not to the Atlantic National Bank, but to his partner, Mr. Fletcher. In this letter Mr. Potter agrees that "your signature on the agreement with the Atlantic National Bank . . . shall be and is hereby assumed by N. Curtis Fletcher & Company." Although the language of the letter is that the "signature" of Mr. Fletcher is assumed, the circumstances show that the letter was not intended by the partners as the assumption by the firm of a new obligation, but as an acknowledgment or ratification of the act of Mr. Fletcher in a transaction which he had always regarded as part of the firm's business. According to the testimony of the partner Potter, the business of the firm, which was that of a banker and broker, was divided into two departments. One of these, which the witness calls the "New York end," was under his charge.

He testified that he "had very little to do with the corporate end, with the corporation. My end was the New York end."

C. Q. 38. You were the inside man?

A. I had the New York end.

C. Q. 39. Mr. Fletcher was interested in these various companies, a director, was he not?

A. That was his department; yes.

This testimony is corroborative of the testimony of Mr. Fletcher, and explains that, though the underwriting agreement was signed in furtherance of the copartnership business, the details were not known to Mr. Potter, as they belonged to Mr. Fletcher's department, with which he "had very little to do." Mr. Potter also testified that the firm did not receive any consideration for his signature upon the letter in question. It is therefore quite unlikely, when the partner Potter believed that he was about to retire from the firm, that without consideration he would have agreed to increase the indebtedness of the firm by assuming the individual debts of his partner, and thus reduce the value of his own share in the copartnership. It is more in accord with probability that at this conference in November, 1907, he learned the true nature of the underwriting obligation, and signed the said letter as a ratification of the act of his partner performed for the firm.

In the transcript we find no contradiction of the testimony of Mr. Fletcher, while the circumstances of the case strongly corroborate him. Decision should have been for the defendant upon the facts of the case.

Opportunity will be given to the plaintiff on March 11, 1912, to show cause why the case should not be transmitted to the Superior Court, with direction to enter judgment for the defendant for costs.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

CATHERINE CRAFT

v.

BOSTON ELEVATED RAILWAY COMPANY.

(211 Mass. 374, 97 N. E. 610.)

Carrier — closing door on passenger — evidence of negligence.

The closing of the door of a street car upon a passenger as he is attempting to enter the car, to his injury, shows prima facie negligence on the part of the street car company, although a passenger may have intentionally started the mechanism which caused the door to close.

(March 1, 1912.)

Note. — Carrier's liability for injury to passenger from door of vehicle.

As to liability of a carrier for accidents resulting from leaving vestibule doors open, see 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 645. And the duty of a carrier to provide and keep gates on street cars and interurban cars closed is discussed in a note appended to 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 346.

As to the liability of a carrier for injury to a passenger by a draft or rain from open windows or doors, see 11 L.R.A.(N.S.) 926.

The variety of circumstances under which injuries to passengers by vehicle doors have occurred makes it impossible to lay down any general rules concerning liability for such injuries.

In Western Maryland R. Co. v. Stanley, 61 Md. 266, 48 Am. Rep. 96, where plaintiff was groping in the dark for the purpose of shutting the door to keep out the cinders and smoke as the train was passing through a tunnel, and the door suddenly swung, and plaintiff's arm was driven through the glass, injuring it, the question of negligence was held to be for the jury.

In Trumbull v. Donahue, 18 Colo. App. 460, 72 Pac. 684, it was held that the carrier was liable where plaintiff was standing on the platform, because of the crowded condition of the train, supporting himself by the door frame, when the brakeman opened and closed the door, catching plaintiff's hand, there being testimony tending to show that the brakeman had observed the dangerous position of plaintiff's hand.

In Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Quinkert, 2 Ind. App. 244, 28 N. E. 338, a verdict for plaintiff was sustained where plaintiff, upon finding that the train had not stopped at the proper place for her to alight, was told by an employee to remain on the platform, when the train was suddenly started, shutting the door on her finger, the court saying that while they doubted if failure to secure the door so it would not shut tended to show negligence, there was sufficient evidence of negligence, independent of that, to prevent dismissal of the suit.

In Madden v. Missouri P. R. Co. 50 Mo. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Suffolk County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence, after an instruction that the evidence was insufficient to warrant a verdict for plaintiff. Judgment for plaintiff.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Alonzo E. Yont, for plaintiff:

The evidence showing the nature of the accident and the surrounding circumstances would justify the jury in finding the defendant negligent, first, in not properly safeguarding its passengers; second, in employing improper or unsafe appliances.

Nellis, Street R. Acci. Law, 570; Pev-

App. 666, evidence that a train was started without giving plaintiff opportunity to alight, and, as she steadied herself by taking hold of the door frame, the brakeman, seeing her, pulled the cord and stopped the train suddenly, so that the door swung against her hand, was held to make out a prima facie case for plaintiff.

In McGlynn v. Brooklyn Crosstown R. Co. 6 N. Y. S. R. 51, evidence that the sliding door was closed on plaintiff's finger was held to be sufficient to charge defendant with negligence, as plaintiff should have been given sufficient opportunity to leave the car.

In Poole v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 89 Ga. 320, 15 S. E. 321, the carrier was held liable to a passenger who was not given time to board the train properly, and was injured by the door, which was not securely fastened, swinging to and catching his hand, the court saying that the controlling fact was that plaintiff was not given sufficient time to board the car.

In Colwell v. Manhattan R. Co. 57 Hun, 452, 10 N. Y. Supp. 636, where plaintiff arose to alight as a trainman opened the door, when a sudden stoppage of the car and the releasing of the door by the trainman caused it to close on plaintiff, it was held that the carrier was negligent, the court saying: "Either a door should have been provided which, under ordinary circumstances, would remain stationary after having been opened by the trainman to permit the egress of passengers, or the trainman should have exercised due care to prevent any injury to passengers by a door which he had opened to offer them an exit, and which was under his immediate control at the time."

In Carroll v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 186 Mass. 97, 71 N. E. 89, evidence that a passenger on an electric car intended to alight, but, on finding that his stop had not been reached, steadied himself by taking hold of the door casing, when the conductor, facing him, shut the door on his hand, was held sufficient to warrant a finding of negligence on the part of defendant and absence of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff.

erly v. Boston, 136 Mass. 366, 49 Am. Rep. 37; Graham v. Badger, 164 Mass. 42, 41 N. E. 61; Savage v. Marlborough Street R. Co. 186 Mass. 203, 71 N. E. 531; Heblethwaite v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 192 Mass. 295, 78 N. E. 477; Minihan v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 197 Mass. 367, 83 N. E. 871; James v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 263, 87 N. E. 474; Glennen v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 207 Mass. 497, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 470, 93 N. E. 700; Brisbin v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 207 Mass. 553, 93 N. E. 572; Kuhlen v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 193 Mass. 341, 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 729, 118 Am. St. Rep. 516, 79 N. E. 815; Pomeroy v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 193 Mass. 507, 79 N. E. 764; Egan v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 195 Mass. 159, 80 N. E.

696; Marshall v. Boston & W. Street R. Co. 195 Mass. 284, 81 N. E. 195; Gilmore v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 6 App. Div. 117, 39 N. Y. Supp. 417.

Defendant was bound to furnish safe methods of transportation, and the nature of the accident was such that proof of it alone raises a presumption of negligence.

Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 730; Simmons v. New Bedford, V. & N. S. B. Co. 97 Mass. 361, 93 Am. Dec. 99; Ware v. Gay, 11 Pick. 106; McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794; Littlejohn v. Fitchburg R. Co. 148 Mass. 478, 2 L.R.A. 502, 20 N. E. 103; Isbell v. Pittsfield Electric Street R. Co. 196 Mass. 296, 82 N. E. 3.

The levers operating the door could be

In Larson v. Boston Elev. R. Co. — Mass. —, 98 N. E. 1648, it was held that a passenger who arose and started toward the door as the car approached her station was not negligent in placing her hand against the door to steady herself, and while the lurching of the car did not show negligence on the part of defendant, it might have operated as a warning to the servant in charge of the door that persons approaching it might be thrown against it and placed in a position making it dangerous to open the door at that time.

In Jones v. Great Western R. Co. 1 Times L. R. 333, which was an action for injury to plaintiff's elbow by the door being slammed against it by the porter, the court said that while slamming the doors was not necessarily negligence, it certainly was not evidence of care; and it might, under certain circumstances, be very strong evidence of negligence.

In Wood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 109 App. Div. 770, 96 N. Y. Supp. 419, where plaintiff, while sitting in the baggage compartment, which was the only part of the car warm enough for comfort, where he was recognized as a passenger by the conductor, inadvertently projected his elbow between slats at the back of his seat, and was injured by a door which slid between the slats and the wall, it was held that the court could not say, as matter of law, that a proper place had been provided for the passenger, or that he was guilty of contributory negligence in sitting with his elbow through the slats.

In Sturdivant v. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. — Tex. Civ. App. —, 27 S. W. 170, whether the construction of the door by which plaintiff's hand was injured was such as to show negligence on the part of defendant, and whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in bracing himself against the door, which had the appearance of a blank wall, while he was drying his hands after washing at the basin, were held to be questions for the jury.

In Romine v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 24 Ind. App. 230, 56 N. E. 245, where plaintiff was looking out of the rear door, steadying himself by placing his hand against the closet, when the conductor approached, without plaintiff's knowledge, opening and closing the closet door quickly, and crushing plaintiff's finger, which slipped into the crack, it was held that the question of negligence was for the jury.

However, in Murphy v. Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. 89 Ga. 832, 15 S. E. 774, in which the circumstances were identical with those of Romine v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co., except that plaintiff was standing because no seats were available, it was held that the circumstances failed to show any negligence on the part of the defendant.

In Weinschenk v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 190 Mass. 250, 76 N. E. 662, evidence that plaintiff went to the platform to be ready to alight as soon as the train reached the station, when a sudden jolt swung the door to, catching her hand, was held to show no negligence on the part of the defendant.

In Guthman v. Manhattan R. Co. 53 N. Y. Supp. 139, where plaintiff herself opened the door, which shut upon her hand when the car stopped with a jerk, it was held that she was guilty of contributory negligence which would bar recovery.

In Maillefert v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. 50 Misc. 160, 98 N. Y. Supp. 207, where plaintiff, while entering a car door which had been only partly opened, on being jostled by the crowd, placed his hand on the door at the instant it was opened wider, so that his finger was caught between the door and the frame into which it slid, it was held that no negligence on the part of defendant was shown.

In Rubin v. Interborough Rapid Transit Co. — Misc. —, 136 N. Y. Supp. 60, it was held that if the agents of defendant used due care in closing the door, it could not be held liable for the acts of those within the car in pushing plaintiff into the position in which he was injured by the door.

In Brineger v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1973, 72 S. W. 783, where plaintiff, on the train approaching a station, stood in the open door with his hand on the casing, when it was injured as a passenger pushed the door shut when the brakeman, protected or disabled by single mechanical devices.

Beattie v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 3, 86 N. E. 920; Cassady v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 184 Mass. 156, 63 L.R.A. 285, 68 N. E. 10; Carroll v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 200 Mass. 527, 86 N. E. 793; James v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 204 Mass. 158, 90 N. E. 513.

Mr. H. S. MacPherson for defendant.

Hammond, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The only question is whether there was evidence of the negligence of the defendant. At the time of the accident the plaintiff was entering the car by the right-hand door, which was at the forward end of the car. The door is 46 inches in width and the aperture is divided in the middle by a perpendicular rod. The door in closing passes outside this rod, leaving a space of about 3 inches. "The rod is apparently designed as a handhold to steady passengers when entering or alighting from the car, and to separate outgoing and incoming passengers." The plaintiff's evidence, which is not contradicted, was that the car was pretty well filled, she being the last passenger to enter at this door, all the seats being occupied, "and there were a few people standing in the aisle." She was passing to the left of the rod previously mentioned when suddenly, without warning, the door started to close and struck her, pinning her body against this rod. The door starts to close slowly and increases its speed as it acquires momentum. Her head, one shoulder, part of her body, and one leg were on the inside, the other shoulder, leg, and part of her body being held outside the door. She struggled to free herself and was assisted by passengers to a seat, and did not then or at any other time see the conductor, and had no communication with any employee of the defendant. She saw the motorman inclosed within his cab, his back being turned toward her.

There was testimony to the effect that who did not see plaintiff's position, called out to shut the door, recovery was denied, on the ground of contributory negligence.

In Texas & P. R. Co. v. Overall, 82 Tex. 247, 18 S. W. 142, it was held that for plaintiff to place his hand in a position where the door would strike it if closed was negligence; and the mere fact that the door was closed by the brakeman would not make defendant liable unless it appeared that the brakeman saw plaintiff's position.

In Ham v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 97 Ga. 411, 24 S. E. 152, it was held that the carrier was not liable to plaintiff, who, while passing from one car to another, behind a train employee, was injured by his hand being caught when the employee shut the door, there being no act, negligent or otherwise, which fairly could be treated as the proximate cause of the injury.

In Christensen v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 35 Utah, 137, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 255, 99 Pac. 676, 18 Ann. Cas. 1159, the court says that while it is not necessarily negligence per se for a passenger to rest his hand on the door jamb while attempting to leave the car, negligence on the part of the carrier will not be inferred from the mere fact that the door slammed shut, injuring the hand.

The carrier is not bound to have the upper part of the car door constructed of glass, so that persons approaching it from opposite directions may see each other, and avoid injury as the door is swung open. Graeff v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 161 Pa. 230, 23 L.R.A. 606, 41 Am. St. Rep. 885, 28 Atl. 1107.

In Cormier v. Dominion Atlantic R. Co. 36 N. B. 10, where a passenger on a steamboat was injured by a door swinging to and catching his fingers, it was held that the company was not obliged to provide fasteners to keep the doors open, or to keep such fasteners in repair.

In Hannon v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 182 Mass. 425, 85 N. E. 809, it was held that opening the door of an elevated car before it came to a full stop was not negligence which would entitle plaintiff to recover for injury to his finger, which was caught by the door as he was standing near it, preparatory to alighting.

In Hardwick v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 85 Ga. 507, 11 S. E. 832, where plaintiff went to the car door, which had been left open by the conductor, and placed his hand against the frame to steady himself as the door was swung shut by a sudden stopping of the train, it was held the injury was a purely accidental one for which the company was not liable.

And in Skinner v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 128 N. C. 435, 39 S. E. 65; Muller v. Manhattan R. Co. 48 Misc. 524, 97 N. Y. Supp. 270; and Graf v. West Jersey & S. R. Co. — N. J. L. —, 62 Atl. 333, it is held that when the motion of a train which causes the door to shut on plaintiff's hand is not more than the usual motion of the car, no negligence on the part of defendant is shown.

In Maddox v. London, C. & D. R. Co. 38 L. T. N. S. 458, where plaintiff was completely inside the car when a servant of the company closed the door, catching his thumb in the hinge, it was held that there was no evidence of negligence to go to the jury.

And it was also so held in Benson v. Furness R. Co. 88 L. T. N. S. 268, and Drury v. North Eastern R. Co. [1901] 2 K. B. 322, 70 L. K. B. N. S. 830, 84 L. T. N. S. 658, the court saying that the carrier was not bound to give notice to passengers seated inside the car that the door was about to be closed.

R. L. S.

it is possible for a passenger to operate the door by the levers in the rear.

The car was standing for the reception of passengers, and in attempting to enter the car at the place and at that time the plaintiff had so far entered the car that the defendant owed to her the duty of a common carrier to a passenger. The car, the door, and all the levers for moving them, were under the exclusive care and control of the defendant. The closing of the door under the circumstances was evidence of negligence; and since the door was under the care of the defendant, and since there was absolutely no explanation of the cause for the movement of the door, the negligence was prima facie that of the defendant. And that is so even if some passenger might have intentionally started the machinery by which it was closed. It was the defendant's duty not only to use care to see that its servants and agents properly managed the machinery, but also to see that no stranger started the mechanism. The doctrine of res ipso loquitur applies. White v. Boston & A. R. Co. 144 Mass. 404, 11 N. E. 552; Savage v. Marlborough Street R. Co. 186 Mass. 203, 71 N. E. 531; Hebblethwaite v. Old Colony Street R. Co. 192 Mass. 295, 78 N. E. 477, and cases cited. See also James v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 263, 87 N. E. 474, and cases cited; Beattie v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 3, 86 N. E. 920, and cases cited; Rockwell v. McGovern, 202 Mass. 6, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1022, 88 N. E. 436.

In accordance with the terms of the report the entry must be:

Judgment for the plaintiff for $850.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

C. J. HABHEGGER et al., Respts.,
v.

WILLIAM KING, Appt.

(— Wis. —, 135 N. W. 166.)

Appeal — facts omitted from verdict — presumption as to finding.

1. A statutory provision that facts necessary to support a judgment founded on a Note. — Authority of child to bind parent by contracts other than those for necessities.

The decision in HABHEGGER v. KING, to the effect that a son operating his father's automobile for his own pleasure has no implied authority to engage a physician at his father's expense, to attend a person whom he accidentally injured while driving the machine, is particularly valuable, as it appears 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

special verdict shall be deemed to have been determined in conformity with the judgment, although omitted from the verdict, does not apply where there was a special request to submit the question to the jury.

Parent and child — agency — engaging physician.

2. A boy operating his father's automobile for his own pleasure or convenience has no implied authority to engage a physician at his father's expense, to attend a person whom he accidentally injured by the vehicle.

(March 12, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Jefferson County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover compensation for medical services rendered at the request of defendant's son, for whose contract defendant was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Kading & Kading for appellant.

Messrs. Arthur Mulberger & R. W. Lueck for respondents.

Timlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiffs, suing for medical services performed upon one Richard Karge, had a verdict, finding that Charles King, the minor son of defendant, at the time of the accident in which Karge was injured, had general permission from his father to run and operate his father's automobile, and that the services in question were performed at the request of Charles. It is conceded that this verdict alone would not support the judgment; but it is said that the judgment in favor of the plaintiffs must be taken to find, under chapter 346, Laws of 1907 (§ 2858m, Rev. Stat.), either that the defendant authorized Charles to employ the plaintiffs, or ratified such employment. But this statute does not apply, so far as authorization is concerned, because the defendant requested that that question be submitted to the jury.

We do not find any evidence tending to show that Charles King was authorized by the defendant, his father, to employ the doctors for Karge. The latter had been run over and injured in the public street by to be the only case which has ever considered the precise point.

It is well established by the decisions that the mere fact of relationship of parent and child is insufficient to charge the parent on contracts entered into by the child for articles other than necessities. In order to bind the parent in such cases, it is held necessary to show either an express or implied authority from the parent. 29 Cyc. 1664.

Charles King, while the latter was using his father's automobile for his own pleasure or convenience. It was stipulated on the trial in this case that this was purely accidental, and without fault on the part of Charles King. The injured boy was taken to a nearby hospital by the hospital superintendent, who telephoned for one of the plaintiffs; and Charles King took this doctor in his automobile to the hospital, informing him of the occurrence, and while at the hospital requested the doctor to give the injured boy every attention to save his life. He did not attempt to contract on behalf of the defendant; nor did the doctors communicate with the defendant at any time before the completion of the services, for the value of which this suit is brought. When the injured boy was about to be discharged from the hospital, the hospital superintendent, in an interview with defendant, told him that the boy's mother was poor and would probably never be able to pay for the hospital charges, and requested defendant to do something toward paying the bill, whereupon the defendant paid the hospital bill, informing the superintendent that he was not responsible. The second day after this he received a bill from the plaintiffs for their services. He had heard that doctors were attending the injured boy at the hospital, but did not know they were making a claim against him until he received this latter bill, which he refused to pay. The circuit judge, after submitting the special

It requires a greater degree of proof of the father's consent and authority to his child to make purchases upon the father's credit where the articles are not necessary than where they are such. Fowlkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 135, 94 Am. Dec. 270. The court said: "The result of all the authorities seems to be properly laid down by Parsons in his treatise on Contracts, vol. 1, p. 253: 'That, where the goods are not necessities, the father's authority must be proved to render him liable; where they are necessities, the father's authority is presumed, unless he supplies them himself or was ready to supply them. Where the infant lives with the father, or under his control, his judgment as to what are necessities will be so far respected that he will be held liable only for things furnished to the infant to relieve him from absolute want. Where the infant does not live with the father, but has voluntarily left him, the authority of the father must be strictly proved, unless, perhaps, in cases of absolute necessity; and where he has been deserted by the father, or driven away from him, either by command or cruel treatment, there the infant carries with him credit and authority of the father for necessities.'"

In Freeman v. Robinson, 38 N. J. L. 383, 20 Am. Rep. 399, where goods were sold to a son without the order, knowledge, or consent of the father, it was held that the latter could not be charged on the ground of the son's agency in making the contract in his father's name.

And where there is no evidence that a son had authority to bind his parent, the latter is not liable for a broker's commission on a loan secured by the direction of the son. McMahon v. Smith, 136 App. Div. 839, 121 N. Y. Supp. 736.

And authority sufficient to bind a father for purchases made by his daughter is not shown where it appears that the person from whom the purchases were made had knowledge that there was a matrimonial difficulty in the father's family, and that a notice had been published warning people against trusting the wife, and it appears further that, upon telephoning the father's office, his son stated that matrimonial difficulties existed and that the seller would have to take his chances. Cousins v. Boyer, 114 App. Div. 787, 100 N. Y. Supp. 290.

So, a father is not liable for services rendered in tutoring his minor son, who lives with and is supported by him, during vacation, where the father is not consulted about and does not consent to the employment. Peacock v. Linton, 22 R. I. 328, 53 L.R.A. 192, 47 Atl. 887.

Express authority given.

A parent is liable for goods, wares, and merchandise furnished to his child of full age, where they are furnished at the instance and request of the parent. Ellenbarger v. Swiggett, 1 Ind. App. 598, 28 N. E. 110.

And where a father authorized a merchant to let his minor daughter have whatever she wanted out of the store, he is liable for articles usually sold by the merchant which the daughter bought, although they were not necessary or such as a prudent parent would furnish. Harper v. Lemon, 38 Ga. 227.

And where a father leaves the entire management of the making of a contract for tuition in a school to his son, and a contract for an entire school year is made, the father is liable for the full year's tuition, although the son withdraws from the school on his own account when the school year is about half up. Center v. Rush, 35 Misc. 294, 71 N. Y. Supp. 767.

So, where a son's account is contracted with the authority of the father, it is a contract binding upon the latter, and the promise of the father to pay the account in certain events is admissible. Brown v. Deloach, 28 Ga. 486.

Authority implied from child's employment by father.

Where a son is employed in his father's grocery, sells goods, gives orders to runners for goods, and orders stock in his father's name, the father suffers him to act as a general agent both in buying and selling, and the public are justified in assuming that verdict to the jury, stated that Charles King had no actual, oral or written, direct authority from his father to employ the plaintiffs for the purpose stated, but that he had implied authority as matter of law. Upon this showing, can there be any recovery against the defendant? There is no evidence of ratification, and judgment did not go upon that ground.

The law relating to the agency of servants to bind the employer to pay for physicians or nurses in attendance upon persons injured by the negligence of such servants will be found in Adams v. Southern R. Co. 16 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. N. S. pp. 369 to 379, where the cases are collected. Also in Hanscom v. Minneapolis Street R. Co. 53 Minn. 119, 20 L.R.A. 695, 54 N.

he possesses all the powers requisite to a general agent in buying and selling. Thurber v. Anderson, 88 Ill. 167.

And in such a case the father is liable for a bill of cigars and imported ale ordered and used by the son without the knowledge of the father. Ibid.

And where a son acts for his father in procuring a mortgage, taking upon himself the whole negotiation, deciding upon the security, satisfying himself respecting the title, attending to the execution of the paper, receiving the money from his father, and paying it over to the mortgagor, and doing everything which an agent could do in a similar transaction, he is his father's agent, although he testifies that he was acting as the agent of the mortgagor; and this is especially true where he admits that he was his father's agent just prior to and after the execution of the mortgage. Matteson v. Blackmer, 46 Mich. 393, 9 N. W. 445.

And the jury may properly find that a son was acting as agent for his father in contracting in his own name for a large amount of stone-work on his father's burial lot, where the evidence tends to show that the son had little property, that he told his father of the contract, and conferred with him from time to time; that he was his father's general agent for the transaction of business, and that the father, before he was taken sick, had in mind the idea of putting the improvement upon the lot, and that neither during the progress of the work nor after it was completed was anything said between the father and the son to show that it was intended by the latter as a gift to his father, who, it appeared, was a man of advanced age, and had been confined to the house for a number of years, and who, it was shown, had signed an application for a permit to do the work, addressed to the superintendent of the cemetery, before the commencement of the work. Ford v. Linehan, 146 Mass. 283, 15 N. E. 591.

But a father is not liable to a carriage builder for repairs made upon wagons sent by his son to be sold, where there is no proof 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

W. 944. The employment must have been of such nature that this act of the servant is reasonably within its scope, as in the case of a general superintendent of a railway company, general manager or agent, and by some authorities a railroad conductor. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Stockwell, 118 Ind. 98, 20 N. E. 650; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770. These cases go largely upon the corporate character of the employer, the usual practice pursued, and the great exigency which arises in railroad disasters and the dangerous character of the business. A mere chauffeur or automobile driver in a town where the employer is known and can be readily reached by telephone, or by other speedy and certain means that the son was authorized by the father to order repairs, and the defendant testified that he could not say whether the father ever authorized the son to direct the repairs, and that he took it for granted that a man's son had authority to order them or he would not have come with the wagons. Walsh v. Curley, 42 N. Y. S. R. 470, 16 N. Y. Supp. 871.

And where it appears that the son of a mortgagee was authorized merely to receive and collect the payments on the mortgage as they fell due, the father is not bound by the agreement of the son to receive a part of the principal in advance and extend the time of payment for the residue, although the father consented to receive the payment in advance without having knowledge of the agreement for extension. Ritch v. Smith, 82 N. Y. 627.

Where daughter has limited authority to act for mother.

A mother is not bound by letters written by her adult daughter, who was living at home, by which she undertook to authorize the sale of land owned by her mother, where it clearly appears that the mother was not present when the letters were written or signed in her name, did not dictate them, and did not know the contents of them, although there had been a general understanding in regard to the selling of the property, and the daughter was verbally authorized to transact a part of the mother's business, including the business pertaining to this property. Hickox v. Bacon, 17 S. D. 563, 97 N. W. 847.

And in Re Acken, 144 Iowa, 519, 123 N. W. 187, Ann. Cas. 1912 A, 1166, where a daughter who was her mother's attorney in fact made a conveyance of property to herself during her mother's lifetime, it was held that such an attorney had no implied authority to deal with and make conveyances to herself, and that no presumption of gift, and no inference as to a consideration of natural love and affection, could arise under such circumstances.

of communication, would not ordinarily possess such authority. Neither would an infant son using his father's automobile under like circumstances. This follows from the logic of the decisions in Baker v. Witten, 1 Okla. 160, 30 Pac. 491; Malone v. Robinson, — Miss. —, 12 So. 709; Holmes v. McAllister, 123 Mich. 493, 48 L.R.A. 396, 82 N. W. 220; Hiroux v. Baum, 137 Wis. 197, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 332, 118 N. W. 533; Kumba v. Gilham, 103 Wis. 312, 79 N. W. 325. Besides, the stipulation entered into upon the trial, to the effect that the injuries here were the result of mere accident, for which the boy in charge of the automobile was not to blame, cut away the groundwork of such implied agency, even if otherwise within the reasonable scope of employment, by reason of an implied authority to save the employer from damages caused by the negligence of the employee. Godshaw v. J. M. Struck & Bro. 100 Ky. 285, 51 L.R.A. 668, 58 S. W. 781; Lithgow Mfg. Co. v. Samuel, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1590, 71 S. W. 906; Evans v. Marion Min. Co. 100 Mo. App. 670, 75 S. W. 178; Cox v. Midland Counties R. Co. 3 Exch. 268, 18 L. J. Exch. N. S. 65, 13 Jur. 65. The conclusion of the trial court that the boy had in law implied authority to employ physicians at the expense of his father was incorrect, and the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to render judgment for defendant.

Implication of authority from parent's payment of debts contracted by child.

It is generally held that an implied authority in a child to bind a parent is shown where it appears that the latter has paid accounts charged to him by his child, without giving notice not to make further charges. This result was reached in the following cases: McKenzie v. Stevens, 19 Ala. 691 (although the former account was contracted fifteen months before); Bryan v. Jackson, 4 Conn. 288 (although the father instructed his son not to make further charges); Bailey v. King, 41 Conn. 365 (where payments for charges were made subsequently to a notice not to trust the son); Wilkes v. McClung, 32 Ga. 507; Fowlkes v. Baker, 29 Tex. 135, 94 Am. Dec. 270 (where the son was residing on the father's plantation).

And the fact that previous purchases made by the son, which were regularly paid for by the father, were made from other merchants than the plaintiff, will not prevent the latter from recovering for goods sold to the son in reliance upon the authority implied from the father's general course of dealing with other merchants. Fowlkes v. Baker, supra.

In Emery-Bird-Thayer Dry Goods Co. v. Coomer, 87 Mo. App. 404, where it was sought to hold a daughter personally liable for dry goods purchased at a store where she was accustomed to make such purchases, which were charged to her mother, it was held that the daughter was not liable, the court saying that the fact that she had become of age when the particular purchases were made did not affect the case, but she still continued to be the agent of the mother in such transactions.

But sufficient proof of agency is not shown to bind a father for goods furnished his daughter, who is of full age and living with her father, although it is proved that she had previously bought goods at the same store and charged them to her father, and that he had paid the bills without objection, where the father testifies that he never had had any dealing with the plaintiff, and that he did not know that any bills were being run, and had never authorized the payment of any bills for his daughter. White v. Mann, 110 Ind. 74, 10 N. E. 629.

And no authority in the daughter is shown from the fact that goods had previously been delivered to her and had been paid for, where it was shown by the father that such purchases were paid for by a check signed by the mother. Cousins v. Boyer, 114 App. Div. 787, 100 N. Y. Supp. 290.

And in Alschuler v. Anderson, 142 Ill. App. 323, it was held that the fact that a parent pays one account without protest does not render him liable for goods subsequently purchased by his child, which were not shown to be necessities.

Implication of authority from use of father's name on notes, etc.

In Weaver v. Ogletree, 39 Ga. 586, the evidence showed that a son had been using the name of his father for years on his own notes, and that this fact was known to the father. And where the latter was silent when a holder of a note presented it to the father to be divided into two smaller notes, and said nothing to the holder that the note presented was not genuine, but referred him to the son, who promptly agreed to divide the note, and soon after brought two notes with the name of himself and his father upon them, it was held that the father was liable, since the jury were authorized by the evidence to find that the son had authority to sign his father's name, or, if not, that the latter, by his conduct, ratified the act of the son.

And where a father had been accustomed to assume the liability of indorser on promises on which his name had been written by his son, and he did not deny the validity of the indorsement in question until his son had absconded, sufficient authority of the son to indorse his father's name appears, and he is liable therefor. Abeel v. Seymour, 6 Hun, 656.

In Muller v. Barker, 90 N. Y. Supp. 388, it was held that a father was not legally chargeable for a check forged in his name by his son.

And in Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 2 Allen, 269, where a father set up the defense to an action on notes that his signature thereto was forged, it was held that he could not be made liable by proof that there had been a large number of other similar drafts indorsed with his name in circulation, where it was not shown that the father had any knowledge of such drafts, since authority by the son so to use the father's name could be implied only from a course of dealing which was known to the father, or from a knowledge of and acquiescence in the use of the father's name by his son in the manner in which it had been used upon the paper in question.

Goods purchased for place in which father is interested.

A father cannot be charged for hay delivered on a farm which he had formerly owned and bought hay for, because of the statement of his son that his father was connected with the place and would pay for the hay. Nuckolls v. St. Clair, 1 Colo. App. 427, 29 Pac. 284.

And want of knowledge that the father had sold the farm upon which delivery of hay was made, and reliance upon a former course of dealing with the son for the father, will charge the latter, if at all, only up to the time the plaintiff has knowledge of the change of ownership, without proof of the son's agency and authority to bind his father. Ibid.

Agency where child contracts for himself.

A father is not liable for goods, wares, or merchandise necessary for the maintenance of a minor son, or in the management of a farm which the father bought and placed his wife and son upon, where the son is carrying on the farm on his own account, and his mother is keeping house for him, and he procures the goods on his own credit. Bushnell v. Bishop Hill Colony, 28 Ill. 204.

And no question for the jury is raised where the seller of a piano admitted that a son did not tell him that he was buying the piano for, or as the agent of, his father, but testified that he inferred that the son was so doing because he said that he would have to consult his folks before buying, it appearing that he issued a receipt to the son for a part payment made by him and took his individual note for the balance, and at one time commenced a suit on the note against the son. Fisher v. Lutz, 146 Wis. 664, 132 N. W. 592.

And no lien attaches to a father's land for lumber sold to a son who was farming his father's land and using such of the proceeds as he saw fit, although part of it was used for improvements on the land, where the contract was made with the son in his own name, and his individual notes were given, since the son had no interest in the land and had no authority, either express or implied, to bind his father for the purchase price of the lumber. Hoag v. Hay, 103 Iowa, 291, 72 N. W. 525.

Cases involving stepchildren and son-in-law.

No recovery can be had against a stepfather for money lent to his stepson in the absence and without the request or promise of the stepfather; nor upon proof merely of a contract of the stepson in the making of which the father did not have anything to do, for the use of a stock pasture; nor upon proof merely that the defendant's stock went into and used the plaintiff's stock pasture, without proof of any express contract or promise on the part of the defendant to pay therefor, or of any facts from which the law would imply such a promise. Pike v. Bright, 29 Ala. 332.

The fact that a son-in-law had, with his father-in-law's knowledge and consent, sold or exchanged other land of which the father-in-law had subsequently executed the deed in accordance with the agreement made, tends at most to show a special and not a general agency, and the father-in-law, not having held his son-in-law out as his general agent, is not bound by his fraudulent representations. Hovey v. Brown, 59 N. H. 114.

Evidence that in other instances in which a son-in-law had sold land of which his father-in-law subsequently executed the deed, the father-in-law had no interest in the premises conveyed, except as security for money loaned to his son-in-law, negatives the idea of any relation of principal and agent between them as to such land. Ibid.

And evidence that a father-in-law signed a deed written by his son-in-law, conveying certain land, is not evidence of the son-in-law's agency for the former to make representations concerning the quantity of land sold, where it appears that the land in question belonged to the son-in-law. Ibid.

Ratification.

Where a father, after goods had been purchased by his adult son, stated that they had been rightfully charged to the father, and that he would pay for them, he thus recognizes the agency of his son, and he is liable. Booker v. Tally, 2 Humph. 308.

And where a son had previously purchased goods of the plaintiff with his father's consent, the jury are warranted in inferring the father's consent where the son bought goods in his father's name on six months' credit, and the plaintiff immediately notified the father by letter of the transaction, expressing a confidence that it was correct, and that the son had been duly authorized, but the father failed to reply to the letter. Thayer v. White, 12 Met. 343.

And the court is warranted in saying that such consent is proof either of an original authority or of a subsequent affirmative, by which the father is bound. Ibid.

And where a minor son, without his father's express approval and apparently against his wishes, exchanged his father's horse for another, the father cannot maintain replevin for the horse exchanged by his son, where he did not repudiate the bargain for about two months, made no objection when the horse was brought home by the son, but retained and used the horse, and made no remonstrance against the retention of his horse by the person exchanging with his son. Hall v. Harper, 17 Ill. 82.

But a father is not liable for the price of a horse sold to his son, who lived with the father and cultivated a part of his farm, where there was no evidence as to the son's being under full age or to connect the father with the transaction, notwithstanding the fact that there was evidence that on one occasion the father was seen riding with the son in a buggy drawn by the horse in question. Gregory v. Herring, 73 N. C. 518.

And a father cannot be held liable for purchases made by his daughter on the ground of estoppel, where he had no knowledge of the purchases made by his daughter for which it was sought to hold him liable. White v. Mann, 110 Ind. 74, 10 N. E. 629.

And where a son did not act or assume to act as the agent of his father in purchasing a piano, and had no authority to make such purchase, there can be no ratification of the contract by the father. Fisher v. Lutz, 146 Wis. 664, 132 N. W. 592.

See also Holt v. Baldwin, under section on "Questions for the jury."

Questions for the jury.

The question of whether a parent made his daughter his agent in purchasing goods is one of fact, and where the finding of the trial court is sustained by the evidence, it will not be disturbed. White v. Mann, 110 Ind. 74, 10 N. E. 629.

Where facts are proved from which the law will presume a son's authority to bind his father for goods furnished, and there is no proof offered to rebut this presumption, it is proper to charge the jury that if they believe the evidence, they must find for the plaintiff. McKenzie v. Stevens, 19 Ala. 691. The court said: "A father is not bound by the contract of the son, even for articles suitable and necessary, unless an actual authority be proven, or the circumstances be sufficient to imply one. But here it is contended that the proof fully justified the legal presumption of the existence of such authority, and that the court in the charge only declared what that presumption was. On the contrary, it is insisted that the question whether the son was authorized to bind the father, in the contracting the account sued on, is a question of fact exclusively for the jury, and that in the charge given the court invaded the province of the jury. The question is, undoubtedly, a mixed question of law and fact, where, the facts being ascertained, the court will direct the jury as to the legal inference they would be bound to make. The facts were proven to the jury, from which, according to the authorities above cited, the law presumed an authority from the father to the son to buy the goods, and there was no proof to rebut the presumption. This, we think, authorized the court to charge the jury that, if they believed the facts, they were bound to infer the authority; in other words, they were bound to find for the plaintiff, etc."

In Holt v. Baldwin, 46 Mo. 265, 2 Am. Rep. 515, where it was sought to hold a parent liable for the price of a horse bought by his minor son, an instruction to the effect that if the father, after the sale of the horse, ratified the act and promised to pay for it, he would be liable, was held erroneous. The court said: "It assumes as a matter of law what should have been left to the jury to determine as a question of fact. The instruction assumes and declares the liability of the defendant upon the sole ground of his supposed subsequent ratification and promise, leaving out of view entirely the question of the son's agency in the transaction. If the defendant was liable at all, it was because he had authorized the purchase, either expressly or by implication. Whether there was any such express or implied authority was a matter for the jury to inquire into, and not for the court to assume as a matter of law. The fact of a subsequent ratification and promise was legitimate and persuasive evidence to go to the jury, from which they might have found that the purchase was made by the son as the defendant's agent, acting under authority either expressed or implied. 'The moral obligation of a father to support his child does not make him legally liable to pay his child's debts; and to charge a father on his son's contracts, the same circumstances must be shown as to charge an uncle, a brother, or any third person. The son need not, however, have an express authority to bind his parent; for an authority may be implied under certain circumstances, and it is always a question for the jury whether the circumstances are sufficient for that purpose.' (Tyler, Infancy & Coverture, 106, § 64.) The general doctrine on this subject is that the 'only ground upon which an infant can bind others by his contract is that of an express or implied agency.'" J. T. W.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF SUPERIOR v.

J. F. BRADSHAW, Admr., etc., of H. N. Bradshaw, Deceased, et al., Appts.

(— Neb. —, 135 N. W. 830.)

Pledge — surrender — loss.

In the absence of fraud or a special bail-

Headnote by REESE, Ch. J.

Note. — Effect of surrender of pledged property upon rights of pledgee.

This note does not include cases where the pledgor obtains possession of the property ment, a pledge will be deemed to be waived or lost by the surrender of the pledged property by the pledgee.

(April 20, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Nuckolls County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to foreclose the lien of an alleged pledge of certain corporate stock to secure the payment of notes made to plaintiff by H. N. Bradshaw, since deceased. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. J. H. Grosvenor for appellants.

Messrs. Stubbs & Stubbs for appellee.

Reese, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action to foreclose the lien of an alleged pledge of certain shares of the capital stock of plaintiff, which it is alleged were pledged to plaintiff to secure the payment of certain promissory notes made to plaintiff by H. N. Bradshaw in his lifetime, but who is now deceased. A trial was had to the district court, which resulted in findings in favor of plaintiff and decree for the sale of the stock. Defendants appeal.

It is not deemed necessary to set out nor to even refer to the pleadings, as they surreptitiously or fraudulently, or without the consent or ratification of the pledgee; nor cases where the property is taken from the possession of the pledgee on judgment or execution; nor cases of actual substitution of other property for that first pledged. Neither does it include cases dealing with the necessity under the statute of frauds for actual or continuous change of possession of personal property sold; but it is limited to cases of voluntary surrender to the pledgee or his agent.

Lien has been defined as "the right of one man to retain property in his possession belonging to another until certain demands of the party in possession are satisfied." Grose, J., in Hammonds v. Barclay, 2 East, 235.

The ancient rule.

"In the old Roman law, the pledgee, after receiving possession of the pledge, could legally return it to the pledgee, to be used by him, either for a consideration or as a gratuity; and that did not impair the validity of the pledge. But such is not, clearly, the modern law of either England or the United States, or the countries of the Civil law." Denis, Contracts of Pledge, § 135.

"The old civil law of the Digest, it is true, was more indulgent, and permitted the pledge to be delivered to the pledgee without prejudice to the security, in a manner that would not be allowed at the present day. Thus, in book xiii. of the Digest, title vii., law 35, Modestinus says: 'A pledge transfers only the possession to the creditor, the property remaining in the debtor; yet the debtor may have the use of it, either as a gratuity, or for hire.' And Paulus, in the same title, law 37, says: 'If I lend a pledge to the owner thereof, I retain possession by means of the loan; for before the debtor borrowed it, the possession was not in him; and when he borrowed it, it was my intention still to retain the possession, and it was not his to acquire it.' Pothier's Pandects, vol. vii. p. 360." Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779.

"As to this law of the Digest, Mr. Bell, in his Commentaries on the Scotch Law, remarks as follows: 'Voet very justly observes, in criticizing this law, that to permit such practices were to endanger the safety of other creditors, and to sanction a fraud upon the rule which requires possession to complete a real right to movables; and that no true analogy can hold between the law of Rome, where hypothecs without possession were admitted, and the laws of modern commercial nations, in which the rule is established that possession preserves property. It is true,' Bell continues, 'that, in the course of many contracts, there is a necessity for separating property and possession; and that the mere circumstance of goods being in the hands of another on a temporary contract will not deprive the real proprietor of his right, in favor of the creditors of the temporary possessor. And there seems to be no doubt that the right of a pledgee will also be sufficiently strong to support this temporary dereliction of possession, in the course of necessary operations on it; the manufacturer or other holder being custodian for the pledgee, without injury to the real security. But the doctrine delivered by Voet is sound, where the possession is given up without necessity to the owner of the goods.' 2 Bell, Com. 7th ed. p. 22." Ibid.

General modern rule.

"From these authorities, it seems to be evident that, in the French law, at least, the text of which, in this regard, is the same as that of Louisiana, a delivery by the owner of securities by way of pledge, followed by a return thereof to him, for the purpose of enabling him to collect them and apply the money to his own use, on substituting others in their stead, and with general liberty of substitution, and to appear as the owner and possessor thereof in his dealings with others (the title of the securities not being transferred to the creditor), is not such a delivery of possession as is necessary to establish the privilege due to a pledge as to third persons. It would be contrary to the very letter of the law to allow such a transaction to have that effect. It would not be mere evidence of fraud, which might be rebutted by counter evidence; but it would be contrary to the rule of law adopted to prevent fraud. In are in the usual form, since, as we view the case, it must be disposed of upon the facts either admitted or conclusively shown by the evidence. A brief history of the case will render it more easily understood.

On the 25th day of October, 1893, a certificate for 74.42 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff was issued to H. N. Bradshaw, and on the 26th day of July, 1894, another certificate was issued to him for 3.33 shares of stock, making in the aggregate 77.75 shares held by him. Without so deciding, we will assume that those certificates were pledged to secure certain indebtedness due plaintiff upon his promissory notes held by it. The capital stock of the bank was $100,000, represented by shares of the par or face value of $100 each. Later on it was found that the capitalization of the bank was greater than its business and condition required, and, by the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, it was scaled down to $50,000, and stock issued for one half the number of shares of the first issue. On the 10th of January, 1901, the original certificate having been canceled, a certificate for 38.875 shares was issued to H. N. Bradshaw. On the 21st day of the following February (1901) H. N. Bradshaw died, the last-named certificate being in the bank, as were a number of other papers belonging to the decedent. Some time shortly after his decease the bank delivered to his widow, Mrs. E. J. Bradshaw, a number of papers belonging to the decedent, and among other words, as to third persons, it would not be a pledge at all within the meaning and requirements of the law." Ibid.

Every reason of policy that has ever induced courts to watch with suspicion sales and mortgages unaccompanied by possession, and to presume them fraudulent when secret and known only to the parties, applies with yet greater force to a secret continuance of lien after the owner receives voluntary possession. It opens a wide door to fraud and abuse. McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. 467.

Due and reasonable care should be observed by the pledgee to negative the existence of ostensible ownership in the pledgeor, and to this end such means should be resorted to as fairly to inform or put third persons on inquiry. The law does not require more than this. Philadelphia Warehouse Co. v. Winchester, 156 Fed. 600.

FIRST NAT. BANK V. BRADSHAW follows the general modern rule that, in the absence of fraud or a special bailment, a pledge will be deemed to be waived or lost by the voluntary and unconditional surrender of the pledged property by the pledgee to the pledgeor. Eastman v. Avery, 23 Me. 248; Day v. Swift, 48 Me. 368; Collins v. Buck, 63 Me. 459; Kimball v. Hildreth, 8 Allen, 167; Wilkie v. Day, 141 Mass. 68, 6 N. E. 542; Barrett v. Cole, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 40; Smith v. Sasser, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 43; Russell v. Fillmore, 15 Vt. 130.

In order to preserve his lien, the pledgee must retain actual and continuous possession of the pledged article. Gamson v. Pritchard, 210 Mass. 296, 96 N. E. 715.

A pledgee who, upon naked request, returns the property to the pledgeor for no special, limited, or temporary purpose of his own, and not for his own benefit, loses his lien. Hickok v. Cowperthwait, 137 App. Div. 94, 122 N. Y. Supp. 78.

The pledgee loses his lien by letting the property go back into the possession of the pledgeor, to be used at the pleasure of the latter. Colby v. Cressy, 5 N. H. 237.

If the pledgee takes possession of the property and immediately delivers it to the pledgeor, or permits it to go back into his possession, the special property created by the bailment or pledge is determined and gone. Fletcher v. Howard, 2 Aik. (Vt.) 115, 16 Am. Dec. 686.

If a pledgee, after taking formal possession of property, leaves it in the possession of the pledgeor, he loses his lien, although the property is marked with his initials. Goodrich v. Dore, 194 Mass. 493, 80 N. E. 480.

The pledgee of carriages loses his lien when, after taking formal possession, he leaves them in the possession of the pledgeor, with the agreement that the latter may use and let them in his business. Thompson v. Dolliver, 132 Mass. 103.

If the pledgee, after taking formal possession of a carry-all and chaise, leaves it in the absolute custody of the pledgeor, for him to use, even though only by the most careful drivers, the pledgee thereby releases his lien. Walker v. Staples, 5 Allen, 34.

The pledgee loses his lien when he permits the pledgeor to remove the goods from his possession, notwithstanding an express stipulation that the lien should remain as before; this would be recognizing a right to retain after the property had ceased to be retained. McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. 467.

When a pledgee allows the property to be removed from a warehouse to the premises of the pledgeor, simply taking his receipt of the goods "on storage," and the pledgeor sells the property to bona fide purchasers, the pledgee's lien is gone as against those purchasers. Geddes v. Bennett, 6 La. Ann. 516.

Where pledgees placed a stock of pledged goods in a store operated by the pledgeor, and allowed him to mingle his goods with the pledged goods and sell indiscriminately as his own, their lien was gone as against attaching creditors of the pledgeor. Jackson v. Kincaid, 4 Okla. 554, 46 Pac. 587.

The indorsement and delivery of stock certificates to another as security, the pledgee holding them in his hand for an instant and then returning them to the pledgeor, who keeps them among his own which was the certificate of stock of the date of January 10, 1901, on the back of which was written: "Left as security to note of H. N. B. Bo (to?) Bank. C. E. A." (C. E. A. are the initial letters of C. E. Adams, the cashier of the bank. There was no indorsement or transfer by H. N. Bradshaw.) The certificate was retained by Mrs. Bradshaw in her possession until the 2d day of January, 1906, near five years, and during which time the surplus of dividends, after the payment of interest upon the notes of H. N. Bradshaw, was paid to her, and by her distributed to the heirs of his estate. On the said 2d day of January, at the suggestion of the bank officers, she surrendered the certificate in her possession to the bank, and it was indorsed, "Canceled by re-issue to E. J. Bradshaw, No. 209. 1-2-06," and a certificate was issued to her, in her name, for an equal number of shares. On the 5th day of January, 1906, that certificate was assigned by her to "the estate of H. N. Bradshaw;" the assignment being witnessed by C. E. Adams, the then president of the bank, and soon thereafter she delivered the certificate to J. F. Bradshaw, the administrator of the estate of H. N. Bradshaw, deceased, and he has retained its possession ever since, it being shown that it was in his possession at the time of the trial of this cause. From the time of the delivery of the certificate to Mrs. Bradshaw, early in 1901, to the date of the trial, the certificate had never been in the possession of the papers, constitutes no valid pledge as against creditors of the pledgeor. McFall v. Buckeye Grangers Warehouse Asso. 122 Cal. 468, 68 Am. St. Rep. 47, 55 Pac. 253.

If a bank delivers back to the pledgeor a note held as security, to be used by him at his pleasure in the prosecution of his business, the bank no longer looking to the note as its security, but trusting to the honor of the pledgeor, such surrender puts an end to the lien of the bank upon the note. Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Hooper, 47 Md. 88.

If the pledgee intrusts a pledged note to the pledgeor in such a way that the latter may go into the market and probably mislead people into the belief that he is the owner, and a person in good faith pays him money on the note, the pledgee loses his lien as against such person. Kellogg v. Tompson, 142 Mass. 76, 6 N. E. 860.

Where a mill company purchased grain with drafts to be cashed by a bank, and deposited the grain in warehouses, taking receipts in the name of the bank, and delivering them to it as security, the bank had a lien on the grain, the validity of which depended upon its possession of the property; and while the grain remained in the warehouses and the bank held the receipts the possession was sufficient; but when the receipts were indorsed and delivered back, together with the grain, to the mill company, the latter had both title and possession, and the lien of the bank was extinguished as against the creditors of the mill company. Salinas City Bank v. Graves, 79 Cal. 192, 21 Pac. 732.

Where a dealer in iron pledged his stock of goods about once a month to secure loans, the pledgee taking formal or symbolic possession each time, and appointing pledgeor's bookkeeper his agent to hold possession later releasing quantities as needed for deliveries to purchasers, but where there was no separation of the pledged goods, but a continuous intermixture of pledged with unpledged property, it was held that possession was not retained in the pledgee sufficient to hold his lien; the arrangement was made with the obvious purpose, or at least with the effect, of enabling the pledgeor to carry on his business in the usual manner and without exciting suspicion, and thus was directly opposed to the object of the rule that pledgees must retain possession in order to prevent pledgeors from misleading others into the belief that they are the real owners. Moors v. Reading, 167 Mass. 322, 57 Am. St. Rep. 460, 45 N. E. 760.

A leading case upon the necessity of possession in the pledgee is Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779. In that case, a bank agreed to deposit certain bills and notes with its president and his private firm as a pledge to secure a loan from a third party. The notes were selected by the bank clerk, placed in an envelop by themselves, and handed to the president for the purpose stated. He delivered them to the cashier of the bank for safe-keeping and for collection and renewal. They were kept thus separate, but, so far as the public could perceive, the bank continued to have possession and control of them in its own right, and they appeared to be equally liable with the other assets to the claims of all the creditors; and it was held that this was not sufficient possession in the pledgee or in a third person agreed upon by the parties to protect the lien as against third persons.

Exceptions; delivery for sale.

But the general rule prohibiting the pledgee from surrendering the property to the pledgeor upon pain of losing his lien thereby is subject to several important exceptions. Thus, he may deliver the property over to the pledgeor for the express purpose of selling it for the benefit of the pledgee. Eplan v. Wheat, 134 Ga. 511, 68 S. E. 78 (diamond ring); Durfee v. Harper, 22 Mont. 354, 56 Pac. 582; Rose v. Coble, 61 N. C. (Phill. L.) 517 (horse); Winslow v. Herriman Iron Co. — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 698.

"Possession in the plaintiff, or the right thereto, was necessary for the preservation of this lien. But such possession could have been constructive as well as actual, and what will amount to a possession sufficient bank, either actual or constructive, nor had any information been given Mrs. Bradshaw or the administrator that the bank claimed a lien upon the stock as pledgee, no demand ever having been made for its surrender, nor did either one have any knowledge that such lien or pledge was claimed, nor did the bank ever take, or cause to be taken, any steps to obtain the possession of the certificate.

It is contended by defendant that, assuming that the stock, as originally issued, had been pledged, the lien of the bank had been waived and lost by the surrender and the subsequent issues of the stock, as above outlined, with the total absence of any claim of a lien upon it. There is no intimation of fraud or deception on the part of E. J. Bradshaw, the widow of deceased. Did plaintiff waive its lien? In Mahoney v. Hale, 66 Minn. 463, 69 N. W. 334, the supreme court of Minnesota, in discussing the law of pledge, says: "To constitute a pledge, the pledgee must take possession, and to retain it he must retain possession. An actual delivery of property capable of personal possession and a continued change of possession is essential. In case of a pledge the requirement of possession in the pledgee is an inexorable rule of law adopted to prevent fraud and deception; for, if the debtor remains in possession, the law presumes that those who deal with him do so on the faith of his being the unqualified owner of the goods. . . . There must not only be an for the continuance of a lien will depend upon the nature of the articles, and the intention of the parties. Standing trees or mill logs cannot be in such obvious personal possession as chattels of a less bulky and more portable description. One may have a valid lien upon property while it is in the hands of the person who pledged it; as if an innholder should have a horse for the purpose of being fed only, which he had before pledged to his creditor to secure a debt; or if a watchmaker deliver a watch as a pledge and afterwards receive it for the sole purpose of showing it to a friend, or to repair; in neither case is the lien extinguished; for the right of immediate possession is in the pledgee, and the possession of the pledgeor is that of the pledgee; it being parted with for a specific purpose, not inconsistent with the existence of the pledge. And it is immaterial whether such qualified possession in the pledgeor is in obedience to the agreement made when the pledge was given, or by a subsequent understanding between the parties, provided there be no relinquishment of that possession, which perfected the lien." Bradeen v. Brooks, 22 Me. 463.

So, a pledgee with power to sell the property does not lose his lien by employing the pledgeor as his agent to make the sale, nor by allowing him to contract in his own name, nor by delivering the goods on his order. Thayer v. Dwight, 104 Mass. 254.

The right of the pledgee to the proceeds from the sale of the pledged property is not lost as between the parties, or as against the purchaser with notice of the pledge, simply because he delivers the warehouse receipt to the pledgeor as his agent, to carry out the contract of sale. Rice & B. Maltling Co. v. International Bank, 185 Ill. 422, 56 N. E. 1062.

Under a contract whereby one party is to advance money to another for the manufacture of bricks, the former to retain them as security as fast as they shall be made, such pledgee does not lose his lien by permitting the pledgeor to have charge of the property according to the contract, nor by giving him limited authority to act as his 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

special agent in the sale of small quantities of brick at retail. Macomber v. Parker, 14 Pick. 497.

In Oakes v. Moore, 24 Me. 214, 41 Am. Dec. 379, a case of a lien more like a mortgage than a pledge, it was held that the lienor would not lose his lien by suffering the property to go into the general possession of the lienors, with the expectation raised by them that he would be paid out of the proceeds of its sale, subject to his right to resume the lien in case of nonpayment.

A pledgee's surrender of property for the purpose of receiving from the transaction payment of his debt is not a waiver of his lien. Fairbanks v. Sargent, 117 N. Y. 320, 6 L.R.A. 475, 22 N. E. 1039.

But it has been held that if, after taking possession, the pledgee permits the property to be returned to the pledgeor for the purpose of sale, the pledgeor to notify him whenever any purchaser should be found, and only the pledgee to give title and take the pay, he loses his lien as against an attaching creditor of the pledgeor or subsequent purchasers in good faith. Shaw v. Wilshire, 65 Me. 485.

Delivery for collection.

In the same way, as an exception to the general rule, pledged commercial paper may be delivered to the pledgeor for collection, to the account of the pledgee. Dickey v. Pocomoke City Nat. Bank, 89 Md. 280, 43 Atl. 33; Leahy v. Simpson, 60 Mo. App. 83; White v. Platt, 5 Denio, 269.

Thus, the pledgee may deliver pledged notes to the pledgeor for convenience in collection, and to be collected for the account of the pledgee, or to be replaced by others, without affecting the lien. Clark v. Iselin, 21 Wall. 360, 22 L. ed. 568.

A pledgee of notes may, without losing his lien, deliver them back to the pledgeor for convenience in collecting, and in order that they may be collected when due and be delivered to the makers when paid, then to be replaced by other notes as security, the pledgeor undertaking to keep the security actual delivery, as distinguished from a mere pretense, but the change of possession must be continuing; not formal, but substantial." In Jones, Pledges and Collateral Securities, 2d ed. § 40, it is said: "It is a well-settled principle that a delivery back of the possession of the thing pledged terminates the pledgee's title, unless such redelivery be for a temporary purpose only, or be to the pledgor in a new character, such as special bailee, or agent,"—and a large number of cases are cited in the note as sustaining the doctrine. The rule is stated in 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 860, to be: "In general.—The pledgee must not only obtain possession of the property pledged, but must also retain possession; and a delivery back of the property with the consent of the pledgee terminates the bailment and the pledgee's lien." The rule is well supported by the citation of authorities in the footnote. See also Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. ed. 779; Walker v. Staples, 5 Allen, 34; Walcott v. Keith, 22 N. H. 196; Black v. Bogert, 65 N. Y. 601; Collins v. Buck, 63 Me. 459; Kimball v. Hildreth, 8 Allen, 167; Thompson v. Doliver, 132 Mass. 103; McFarland v. Wheeler, 26 Wend. 467; Smith v. Sasser, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 43; Hickok v. Cowperthwait, 137 App. Div. 94, 122 N. Y. Supp. 78. In Harding v. Eldridge, 186 Mass. 39, 71 N. E. 115, it is said: "It is uniformly held that by a contract of pledge only a good at all times. Samson v. Rouse, 72 Vt. 422, 48 Atl. 666.

Collateral notes held as a pledge may be returned to the pledgor (a banker) for the purpose of safe-keeping and collection, without depriving the pledgee of his lien.. Re Reeve, 111 Iowa, 260, 82 N. W. 912.

Under the provision of a code that the voluntary restoration of property to its owner by the holder of a lien thereon, dependent on possession, extinguishes the lien, a note and mortgage, being "things in action," are subjects of lien without change of possession, and not being dependent upon possession, their redelivery to the pledgor for collection does not extinguish the lien. Merced Bank v. Price, 9 Cal. App. 177, 98 Pac. 383.

Delivery for exchange

Also, the pledgee may deliver property to the pledgor for exchange, the substituted property to become security in its stead. So, the delivery by the pledgee to the pledgor of a life insurance policy held as security for the payment of a note, for the purpose of procuring a paid-up policy to be issued in lieu thereof, does not divest the lien under which it was held. Castle v. Hickman, — Cal. —, 41 Pac. 1036.

A pledgee of bonds may, without losing his lien, deliver them to the pledgor for the special purpose of getting them exchanged for other bonds, the others to be returned to the pledgee as a substituted security. Hays v. Riddle, 1 Sandf. 248.

A pledgee does not lose his lien by delivering certificates of stock over to the pledgor as his agent to get them exchanged for other stock, under an agreement that the new stock shall be issued in the pledgee's name, and if the pledgor takes the new stock in his own name, he holds it as agent and trustee for the pledgee. McClung v. Colwell, 107 Tenn. 592, 89 Am. St. Rep. 961, 64 S. W. 890.

The pledgee of a note does not lose his lien by delivering it back to the pledgor under an agreement that the latter is to return either the same or another note. Way v. Davidson, 12 Gray, 465, 74 Am. Dec. 604.

Delivery for special, temporary use.

Neither does the pledgee lose his lien by delivering the property to the pledgor for a particular, temporary use, under a special arrangement. Thus, where a ship captain pledged a chronometer to his employers, the shipowners, and they allowed him to use it on a particular voyage, it was held that they did not legally part with their possession, but his possession was theirs; he had no interest in the chronometer, but only a license or permission to use it for a limited time while he continued their servant, and employed it for the purpose of navigating their ship. Reeves v. Capper, 5 Bing. N. C. 136, 2 Jur. 1067, 6 Scott, 877, 1 Arnold, 427.

A pledgee does not lose his lien simply by consenting that the pledgor may take the property (a team of horses) for a special purpose, so that if the pledgor takes them at another time for a different purpose, he may be guilty of larceny. Bruley v. Rose, 57 Iowa, 651, 11 N. W. 629.

The fact that the pledgee allows the pledgor to wear a suit of clothes and ride a bicycle which were held as security for board does not show such a surrender as to divest the lien. Henry v. State, 110 Ga. 750, 78 Am. St. Rep. 137, 36 S. E. 55.

A pledgee of oxen may loan them to the pledgor temporarily for a particular use without losing his lien, and may maintain trover against a third person for wrongfully retaining them. Hutton v. Arnett 51 Ill. 198.

Where a pledgee of an omnibus loaned it temporarily to the pledgor, and it was subsequently returned to him, his lien still subsisted, and a mortgagee thereafter would take his lien subject to the pledge. Cooper v. Ray, 47 Ill. 53.

A pledgee's lien upon a team and harness is not lost by his permitting the pledgor to have the temporary use of the same for a specific purpose, with the distinct under-special title passes to the pledgee, which depends on actual possession, while the general right of property remains in the pledgeor; and, in order to hold and preserve his lien, there must be not only a physical delivery, where the chattel can thus be transferred, but continued possession also retained,"—citing cases.

As we have seen, the certificate for the 38,875 shares was issued to H. N. Bradshaw on the 10th day of January, 1901, and remained in the bank until after his death, which occurred February 21, 1901.

Soon after his death, the certificate was delivered to Mrs. Bradshaw, and she retained the exclusive possession of it until about the 2d day of January, 1906, a period of nearly five years, during which time the surplus of dividends, after paying interest on the notes, was paid to her, and during which time no intimation was ever conveyed to her that a lien of pledge was claimed. On the last-named date she surrendered the certificate, and one was issued to her in her name and delivered to her, which she retained for a short time, standing that it is to be delivered back to the pledgee immediately thereafter, and a chattel mortgage executed upon it by the pledgeor while thus in possession of the property is subject to the pledge. Clare v. Agerter, 47 Kan. 604, 28 Pac. 694.

The fact that the pledgee and pledge holder permit the pledgeor to use pledged machinery at times in his business does not derogate from the validity of the pledge. Jacquet v. His Creditors, 38 La. Ann. 863.

The fact that the pledgeor, after the delivery of a pledged threshing machine to the pledge holder, even with the knowledge and consent of the pledgee, for a time assists the pledge holder in moving and setting up the machine, and advises him as to managing the same, does not necessarily render the holding of the pledge void as against creditors of the pledgeor. The change of possession is sufficiently continuous to preserve the lien. Hilliker v. Kuhn, 71 Cal. 214, 16 Pac. 707.

But, as against an innocent purchaser, it has been held that a pledgee loses his lien by redelivery of the property, even if only a loan to the pledgeor, who works for him, and for a special, temporary purpose. Bodenhauer v. Newsom, 50 N. C. (5 Jones, L.) 107, 69 Am. Dec. 775.

And where a silver cornet was pledged by a tenant to the landlord as security for rent, and later the tenant was permitted to borrow it for use, and did not return it, it was held that the lien was gone. Re Harlow, Fed. Cas. No. 6,070.

Delivery to third person agreed upon.

Under a statute in Louisiana the lien of a pledgee is not destroyed when the property is placed by the pledgee in the hands of a third person agreed upon by the parties. Peters v. Pacific Guano Co. 42 La. Ann. 690, 7 So. 790.

And the fact that the pledge holder selected by the parties is an employee of the pledgeor does not affect the validity of the pledge. Weems v. Delta Moss Co. 33 La. Ann. 973.

The validity of a pledge of mining stock is not affected by the fact that the pledgee, with the consent of the pledgeor, places the property in a pool in the hands of a trustee of the pledgeor; although he thereby loses actual possession, he still retains constructive possession. Van Cise v. Merchant's Nat. Bank, 4 Dak. 485, 33 N. W. 897.

A pledgee does not lose his lien simply because he puts the property in the possession of the servant of the pledgeor as his special agent, nor because the goods are not removed from the premises of the pledgeor, provided that they are in the legal control and custody of such agent. Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. 76.

Delivery to pledgeor as agent of pledgee.

The pledgeor himself may be considered as trustee ad hoc of the property, and be given possession, provided his tenure be precarious and clearly for the account of the pledgee. Conger v. New Orleans, 32 La. Ann. 1250.

A bank holding bills of lading on hides as security does not lose its lien by indorsing the bills to the pledgeors upon their agreement to receive the hides from the carriers as agents of the bank, and to deliver to the bank the leather tanned from the identical hides. Moors v. Wyman, 146 Mass. 60, 15 N. E. 104.

A pledgee may deliver goods to the pledgeor as his agent, to hold for the account and benefit of the former until remittance shall be made. Carter v. Arguimbau, 31 Abb. N. C. 3.

The lien of the pledgee is not affected by the fact that the pledgeor was employed by him to handle the goods. Griffith v. Brightwell, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 814.

Where the pledgee directed the pledgeor as his agent to lease a pledged piano to a third person in the pledgee's name, and the pledgeor took it away, but leased it in his own name and collected the rent, and the pledgee, immediately upon learning of the wrong, explained the facts to the lessor and made other arrangements with him, it was held not to be such a voluntary delivery of possession of the pledged article as to destroy the lien. Palmtag v. Doutrick, 59 Cal. 154, 43 Am. Rep. 245.

Miscellaneous.

The pledgee may also deliver the property into the possession of the pledgeor under various other special arrangements. Thus, a prospective purchaser of land, who has the right to temporary possession of the abstract of title, does not lose that right by delivwhen she transferred and delivered it to the administrator of the estate of H. N. Bradshaw, who retained its possession from that time on. No demand was ever made for its possession, nor was any claim of pledge made. Under all authority this must be held to have been a waiver of any lien which might have existed during the life of Dr. Bradshaw. It is unfortunate to plaintiff that we must so hold, for, if Dr. Bradshaw owed the bank at the time of his decease, every principle of honor would require that the debt be paid; but payment cannot be enforced by this action without running counter to the great weight of authority. Payment will have to be enforced by a resort to the assets of his estate, if at all.

It follows that the decree of the District Court will have to be reversed, and the cause remanded for further proceedings, which is done.

Letton and Sedgwick, JJ., not sitting.

ering the abstract back to the owner of the land for the special purpose of examination and answering objections, the abstract then to be restored to the purchaser. Roberts v. Wyatt, 2 Taunt. 268, 11 Revised Rep. 566.

A pledgeor's offer to permit pledged brick to remain on his premises and keep it in his possession and care until sold is not a stipulation for exclusive possession, but only a concession on his part, and the pledgee's acceptance of the offer, and his agreement that the pledgeor should have the first right to purchase the brick, and the exclusive right to control the sale or other disposition thereof without reference to possession, cannot be considered such a surrender as to defeat his lien. Thompson v. Colvin, 53 Or. 488, 101 Pac. 201.

Where a wagon maker and blacksmith agree to make wagons jointly, the former to do the woodwork and painting and the latter to furnish the shop and do the iron work, and to advance money and materials for the former, and in return to have and hold the wagons until the proceeds should repay him for the advancements, and where the wagons had thus been in the exclusive possession of the blacksmith for at least a month, and were kept upon his premises and were marked with his name, his allowing the wagon maker to paint them was not a surrender sufficient to defeat his lien upon the share of the other. Waldie v. Doll, 29 Cal. 555.

A vendor of trees for lumber purposes, who, under the contract of sale, retains "possession" until the lumber is paid for, does not lose his lien by reason of the fact that he allows the vendee to cut and remove the timber according to the terms of the contract and according to the intention of the parties, and the usual course of proceeding in relation to such property. Bradeen v. Brooks, 22 Me. 465.

A creditor holding a note as collateral security may deliver it to the maker, to be pledged to a second person, and to be returned immediately thereafter, without losing his lien. Cahn v. Ford, 42 La. Ann. 965, 8 So. 477.

Where it is the custom of brokers upon the day when a loan is repayable to return the securities to the borrower in the morning, and for the borrower to pay the debt later in the day, or return the securities, or others of equal value, a broker does not lose 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

his lien upon such securities by thus returning them; he does not thereby intend to surrender his securities. Burra v. Ricard, 1 Cab. & El. 478.

The fact that the pledgee delivers the property to one ignorant of the pledge, in whose name it is shipped, and that the property is consigned to the pledgeor in order to save freight charges, under an arrangement made by the latter before the property was pledged, does not terminate the lien, where the pledgee employs an agent to take charge of the property during transportation, and the pledgeor never actually regains possession. Cooley v. Minnesota Transfer R. Co. 53 Minn. 327, 39 Am. St. Rep. 609, 55 N. W. 141.

Where the pledgeor, a building contractor, becomes insolvent, the mere presentation to his assignee in insolvency by the pledgee, who was also the assignee of moneys to become due under a building contract from the owner to the contractor, of the note pledged, as an unsecured claim, and its rejection by the assignee in insolvency, without any further effort on the part of the pledgee to enforce the claim against the contractor, does not work a forfeiture of his right to enforce the security against the owner of the building. Perry v. Parrott, 135 Cal. 238, 67 Pac. 144.

The fact that after the death of the pledgeor, pledged paper was found among his effects, pinned to the original note which was thereby secured, but which had been renewed and another substituted, is not sufficient to show a surrender of the pledge by the pledgee, when it appears that the pledgeor had been administrator of the estate of the pledgee, and as such had taken possession of all papers of the latter, and when their correspondence does not in any degree bear out the theory of surrender. Davis v. Bean, 78 Fed. 41.

Although the lien of the pledgee of personal property to secure the payment of purchase money is lost by the voluntary and unconditional delivery of the property to the pledgeor, this does not prevent the parties from contracting for a lien in the nature of a mortgage which, as between themselves, will be good even after such delivery; in such case the lien does not depend upon possession, but upon contract. Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. ed. 740, H. C. Sh.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.
(Department No. 1.)

DUDLEY H. ROCKWELL, Appt.,
v.
EILER'S MUSIC HOUSE, Respt.

(67 Wash. 478, 122 Pac. 12.)

Landlord and tenant — lease for prohibited use — concealment — right of lessee.

One leasing a portion of a building for a moving picture show cannot, upon surrendering the lease, recover from the lessor rent paid in advance, and for time when he had no use of the premises, and the cost of necessary alterations, upon the refusal of the police department to permit him to operate the establishment for the intended purpose because it lacked the fire escapes prescribed by the municipal ordinances, on the theory that the lessor knew that the building could not be used for the purpose intended, and neglected to inform him of the fact.

(March 16, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Pierce County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover rent paid in advance, and for the recovery of the amount paid by plaintiff for repairs and improvements on the leased building. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Stallcup & Keyes for appellant.
Mr. Walter M. Harvey for respondent.

Gose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the defendant, after a demurrer had been sustained to the complaint, and the plaintiff had declined to plead further. The appellant predicates his cause of action upon a lease which bears date July 7, 1910. The lease provides: "That said party of the first part [the respondent] does by these presents lease and demise unto the said party of the second part [the appellant] that part of the second and third floors commonly known as the Temple of Music, situate and being in that building described as 843-845 C street, Tacoma, Washington, and room number one (1) on the second floor, with the appurtenances, for the term of five (5) years, from the 1st day of August, one thousand nine hundred and ten, for the sum of twelve thousand dollars ($12,000), payable in gold coin of the United States of America, as follows, to wit: The sum of one hundred and sixty-five dollars ($165) per month for the first year; one hundred and ninety dollars ($190) per month for the second year, and two hundred and fifteen dollars ($215) per month for the third, fourth, and fifth years, as follows, to wit: The sum of three hundred and eighty dollars ($380) at the time of the signing of this lease, being payment for the first and last month's rent, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the rent thereafter shall be paid on the 1st of each and every month thereafter in advance during the said term of this lease. . . ." The lease further provides that the respondent may re-enter the premises and remove all persons therefrom in case of a default in the payment of rent, or if default shall be made in any of the covenants of the lease; and obligates the appellant to pay the rent in the manner stipulated. It further provides that the respondent shall pay for light used by the appellant, and for the power to run the organ in the building; that all improvements and changes made by the appellant shall be at his expense; that they shall conform to the insurance

Note. — Liability for rent as affected by fact that property cannot be devoted to use intended without alteration to conform to police regulations.

In Leuthold v. Stickney, ante, 231, it was held that the owner of a building who, during the term of a lease thereof, unlawfully fails to equip such building with fire escapes, cannot maintain an action upon such lease for rent.

As to effect upon lease of property for saloon, of passage of prohibitory laws during term, see notes to Heart v. East Tennessee Brewing Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 964; O'Byrne v. Henley, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497; Hecht v. Acme Coal Co. 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 773.

As to the enforcement by public officers of restrictions or conditions as to the use of leased premises, as constructive eviction of 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

tenant, see note to Taylor v. Finnigan, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 973.

As to the landlord's breach of covenant to repair or make improvements as defense to action for rent, see note to Young v. Berman, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 977.

And as to the landlord's breach of covenant to repair or make improvements as justification of abandonment of premises, see note to Partridge v. Dykins, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 984.

As to the validity of contracts in business which it is a misdemeanor to transact, see note to Levison v. Boas, 12 L.R.A.(N.S.) 575.

As to effect of passage, before expiration of the time of performance of contract, of statute rendering performance impossible, see note to American Mercantile Exch. v. Blunt, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 415, E. M. S.

laws and ordinances of the city; that they shall become a part of the building and remain therein after the expiration of the lease; and that, if they increase the cost of the insurance on the building, the excess shall be borne by the appellant. The complaint is of too great length to be set forth in extenso. It alleges, in substance, that the appellant, with the knowledge of the respondent, leased the premises for the purpose of carrying on a moving picture show; that the premises prior to and at the time of the letting were used for public shows and entertainments, and were equipped with chairs and seats for that purpose; that the appellant did not know that the premises could not be used for the contemplated purpose; that the respondent "did not disclose" to the appellant that the premises could not "be any longer used for such purposes," or for the use of audiences for any purpose, "until an exit for escape in case of fire" should be constructed extending over a part of the building not included in the lease; that it was agreed that the appellant should make certain alterations and permanent improvements, "the same being considered taken and accepted as part payment in the rental charge of said premises, so that the cash rate of the monthly rental was proportionately reduced as stated in the lease in consideration of the same;" that the appellant entered into the possession of the premises and completed the improvements on the 30th day of September; that the chief of the fire department of the city then notified the appellant that the premises could not be used for moving picture shows until an exit was constructed in conformity with the city ordinance; that the respondent refused to construct the exit; that the appellant, on October 15th, opened the show, and was arrested by the city authorities; that on the 25th day of October, the respondent refusing to construct an exit, the appellant "then and there surrendered such leasehold estate and the keys thereof" to the respondent; and that it has since had the possession and control of the premises. It is further alleged: "That thereafter, and on or about the 4th day of November, 1910, the said defendant commenced an action against this plaintiff upon said lease contract for the sum of one hundred and sixty-five dollars ($165) for the rent for the month of October, 1910; that thereafter, while said action was still pending, the said defendant agreed to and did terminate the said lease, and accepted the said surrender theretofore made of the same."

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The appellant seeks to recover upon three causes of action. The first cause of action is for the recovery of $215 paid as rental at the time of the execution of the lease, for the rent of the last month of the term. The second cause of action is for the recovery of the rent paid for the months of July, August, and September, 1910. The third cause of action is for the recovery of the amount paid by the appellant for repairs and improvements on the building, upon the allegation that the improvements are of a "lasting and beneficial" character. The three causes of action are so intimately associated that we will consider them together.

There being no restrictions in the lease as to the purposes for which the premises may be used, the appellant was at liberty to use them for all lawful purposes. Hayton v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co. 66 Wash. 248, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 432, 119 Pac. 739.

The lease is complete in itself, and its terms cannot be changed by a contemporaneous parol agreement. Hockersmith v. Ferguson, 63 Wash. 581, 116 Pac. 11.

The appellant cannot recover under the terms of the lease by the matter pleaded. The allegation is that he had no knowledge of the ordinance requiring the construction of an exit as a prerequisite to the use of the building for a moving picture show, and that the respondent "did not disclose" that fact to him. This is true for two reasons: (1) The lease does not limit the use of the building; and (2) the city ordinances operate with all the force of a statute within the limits of the municipality, and all persons "within the corporate territory are bound to take notice of their provisions" when duly enacted and promulgated, and to obey them. 28 Cyc. 291, 292. All persons who contract within the limits of a municipality in reference to matters which are governed by police regulations are charged with knowledge of their provisions. North Birmingham Street R. Co. v. Calderwood, 89 Ala. 247, 18 Am. St. Rep. 105, 7 So. 360; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Brunswick & W. R. Co. 87 Ga. 386, 13 S. E. 520; Hope v. Alton, 214 Ill. 102, 73 N. E. 406; Palmyra v. Morton, 25 Mo. 593; Buffalo v. Webster, 10 Wend. 100.

It is not important whether the matter set forth in the complaint be treated as a re-entry and termination of the lease for the nonpayment of rent or a surrender. In either case, there was a termination of the relation of landlord and tenant, and the right of the landlord to accrued rent was fixed and determined by the terms of the lease. "A surrender has no effect upon the liability of the tenant for rents accrued at the time of the surrender. And this is true though the rent was payable in advance for a period beyond the time of the surrender, and a fortiori, rent paid in advance cannot be recovered on surrender." 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 295. The same rule is well stated in American Bonding Co. v. Pueblo Invest. Co. 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 557, 80 C. C. A. 97, 150 Fed. 17, 10 Ann. Cas. 357, as follows: "The termination of a lease during its term by surrender, by re-entry, or by eviction without more, discharges the lessee from liability for rents that have not accrued, but leaves him liable for all the rents which have accrued and become due, and for the performance of all covenants whose fulfillment is due." See also Cameron v. Little, 62 Me. 550; Learned v. Ryder, 61 Barb. 552; Sperry v. Miller, 16 N. Y. 407. Taylor v. Finnigan, 189 Mass. 568, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 973, 76 N. E. 203, is an instructive case upon all the questions under consideration, and is directly in point. In that case it was held that a lessor of a building used by the lessee as a theater, who has not covenanted to make repairs, does not breach the lease by failing to furnish additional means of egress ordered by the inspector of public buildings, for want of which the lessee's license to carry on theatrical performances was suspended. In that case, as in the case at bar, it was alleged that the order requiring additional means of egress could not be complied with within the portion of the building demised to the defendant. In addressing itself to that question, the court observed that there was no averment that upon request the landlord refused to assent to such repairs being made by the lessee, so far as they were necessary to comply with the order. Nor is there such an allegation in the complaint in the case at bar. The averment here is that the respondent refused to provide the means of egress. It is not necessary to consider what the appellant's rights would be if, upon request, the respondent had refused him permission to construct an exit upon the walls of the unleased portion of the premises. Nor is it necessary to consider whether such right was implied from the terms of the lease and the facts pleaded. Rosenbaum v. United States Credit System Co. 64 N. J. L. 34, 44 Atl. 966, cited by the appellant, is not in point. The decision in that case is based upon the principle that a mistake in regard to the law of another state is a mistake of fact, and it was held that, where an employer, with knowledge of the laws of a sister state, engages an employee who has no knowledge of the laws of that state, to enter into a contract for service to be rendered therein 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) forbidden by the laws of that state, the employer is liable for damages upon the ground of fraud. It is scarcely necessary to say that the case is not in point. Nor are the authorities upon the question of a failure of consideration pertinent to the facts pleaded.

In conclusion it suffices to say that the use of the premises was not limited by the terms of the lease; that the lease is complete in itself; that the respondent did not engage to make any repairs or improvements upon the premises; that the appellant did engage to make certain improvements; that both parties were bound to take notice of the police regulations of the city where the subject-matter of the contract was situated; that there is no averment that the respondent misled the appellant, or that it refused to permit him to construct the exit upon the wall of the building without the terms of the lease; that, upon the cancellation or surrender of the lease, the appellant was obligated to pay all rent that had accrued by the terms of the lease, and that the complaint, when read with the lease, shows no breach of any of its terms or of any legal duty upon the part of the respondent.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Chadwick, Parker, and Crow, JJ., concur.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

EURETTA REYNOLDS, Resp't.,
v.
LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, App't.

(— Cal. —, 122 Pac. 962.)

Negligence — forgetfulness of excavation — injury.

Forgetfulness by an aged tenant whose faculties were unimpaired, of a trench which had been made upon the property by a licensee during the day, when returning to the house after doing an errand in the evening, which results in her falling into the excavation, is negligence as matter of law, which will prevent her holding the licensee liable for the resulting injury.

(March 16, 1912.)

Note. — Forgetfulness of obstacle or defect as contributory negligence.

It is not the purpose of this note to consider the general question of forgetfulness of a dangerous position, as of a railroad crossing, but to limit its discussion to cases where there was some particular tangible obstacle or defect which had been momen-

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Los Angeles County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William A. Cheney and Le Roy M. Edwards, for appellant:

The injuries received by the plaintiff were directly and proximately caused by contributory negligence upon her part.

Davis v. California Street Cable R. 105 Cal. 131, 38 Pac. 647; McGraw v. Friend & T. Lumber Co. 120 Cal. 574, 52 Pac. 1004; Dufour v. Central P. R. Co. 67 Cal. 322, 7 Pac. 770; Brett v. Frank, 153 Cal. 267, 94 Pac. 1051; Bruker v. Covington, 69 Ind. 33, 35 Am. Rep. 202; Casey v. Fitchburg, 162 Mass. 321, 38 N. E. 499; Indianapolis v. Cook, 99 Ind. 10; Hesser v. Grafton, 33 W. Va. 548, 11 S. E. 211; Bedford v. Neal, 143 Ind. 425, 41 N. E. 1029, 42 N. E. 815.

The fact that plaintiff was an old person does not free her from being guilty of contributory negligence in this case.

Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 17 L.R.A. 407, 11 So. 72; Winn v. Lowell, 1 Allen, 177; Hilborn v. Boston & N. Street R. Co. 191 Mass. 14, 77 N. E. 646; Hawes v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 192 Mass. 324, 78 N. E. 480; Karl v. Juniata County, 206 Pa. 633, 56 Atl. 78; Smith v. Cairo, 48 Ill. App. 166; Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426.

tarly forgotten by the plaintiff, such as a hole at the crossing. Thus, there are excluded cases such as Mau v. Morse, 3 Colo. App. 359, 33 Pac. 283, where a man while looking down an elevator shaft was killed by the elevator descending upon him.

Cases between master and servant are excluded.

Cases relating to defects in streets and to the liability of municipal corporations in connection therewith are excluded, as that part of the subject is treated in the note to Lerner v. Philadelphia, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 651.

As to the question as relating to the contributory negligence of a tenant in matters between landlord and tenant, see the note to Walsh v. Schmidt, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 808, and that matter is also here excluded.

For cases on intoxication as affecting negligence, see the note to Kingston v. Ft. Wayne & E. R. Co. 40 L.R.A. 131.

For cases on care required of one in sudden emergency, see the note to Lemay v. Springfield Street R. Co. 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 43.

It is not intended to include cases which turn upon the fact that the plaintiff had reasonable cause to suppose that an obstruction had been removed, or that in the natural course of things it would have been removed, though that element is present in some of the cited cases.

The reader will observe that in REYNOLDS v. LOS ANGELES GAS & ELECTRIC CO. it was held that momentary forgetfulness of a danger not induced by some sudden and adequate disturbing cause is "itself, as matter of law, contributory negligence barring a recovery."

As stated in the opinion the court follows the cases of Davis v. California Street Cable R. Co. 105 Cal. 131, 38 Pac. 647, and McGraw v. Friend & T. Lumber Co. 120 Cal. 574, 52 Pac. 1004, which are therein reviewed at length.

In accidents of this kind so much depends upon the particular circumstances of each case that little is to be gained by any attempt at general rules.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Holes and excavations.

In Anderson v. Northern P. R. Co. 19 Wash. 340, 53 Pac. 345, where the plaintiff's intestate while going home at night from work crossed a lot of the defendant's which people were in the habit of crossing, and fell into an excavation and was killed, the court said: "It having been shown that the deceased had knowledge of the excavation as aforesaid, and it also appearing that he had been in the habit or had frequently crossed the tract in question up to the time of the injury, and the pit being open and exposed and nothing to prevent its being seen, at least when near it, it must be presumed that he had knowledge of its existence, and was chargeable with negligence in attempting to cross when it was so dark that he could not see the pit or follow the paths which had been used by people in crossing the tract."

So, in Eisenberg v. Missouri P. R. Co. 33 Mo. App. 85, where the plaintiff's horses were killed and his wagon injured by his driver driving into an excavation upon or near the defendant's road, upon which he was an invitee, the court, while holding the plaintiff a mere licensee, yet said: "In the case at bar the danger was neither a hidden nor a recent danger. The excavation existed before the road was built. The plaintiff knew the exact situation for years; his drivers knew it. This very driver had traveled over the road repeatedly on the day of the accident. He discussed such dangers when they were in his full view, in broad daylight, with his fellow servant, and knowing what risk he undertook, voluntarily assumed it, although he might have used another and safer road."

And in Bond v. Smith, 113 N. Y. 378, 21 N. E. 128, where the plaintiff's intestate, a watchman, was killed by falling into an area on an alley, and had been accustomed to pass through the alley nightly and knew all about the danger, the court, while thinking that the defendants were not guilty of any negligence, also held that there had been no evidence produced by the plaintiff

Messrs. Morton, Riddle, & Hollzer for respondent.

Henshaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for personal injuries. From the judgment following the verdict of the jury in favor of the plaintiff, and from the order denying its motion for a new trial, defendant appeals.

Plaintiff was living as tenant in a small house situated about 10 feet from the sidewalk in the middle of a 60-foot lot. Across this lot and under the plaintiff's house running parallel to the street was a zanja owned by the city of Los Angeles. This zanja was leased to the defendant under a contract compelling defendant to keep it in repair. The old zanja pipe required renewal, and defendant undertook to replace it with a new concrete pipe. Defendant entered upon the premises with the express license of the owner thereof, and proceeded to dig a trench to uncover the old pipe from the southerly line of the lot to the house. This trench was so dug in the daytime, plaintiff having knowledge of the digging, and watching the men at work. The trench was about 3 feet wide and from 1 to 3 feet deep. The dirt removed in digging was thrown up along the street side. There was access to the rear of the house upon both sides of it, but the path habitually used extended along the south side where the trench had been dug. Such were the physical conditions.

Plaintiff was an elderly woman about seventy-five years of age, but physically vigorous. She raised and tended a flock of fifty or sixty chickens, took care of a cow, sold and herself distributed the milk; she cooked her own meals, did her own housework, and was a rapid and sure-footed walker. She had never been sick a day in her life, or, if so, it was so long ago that she had forgotten it. Such is her own testimony.

About 8 o'clock of the evening of the accident, it being then very dark, plaintiff left her residence by the back door to deliver milk to her neighbors. She first started to go around by the path on the south side of the house, but remembered the open ditch, and, not knowing in what condition it was left, turned about and walked with perfect safety around the north side of the house to the street. Upon returning as to the lack of contributory negligence on the part of her intestate.

On the other hand, in Kelly v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 29 N. Y. S. R. 646, 9 N. Y. Supp. 90, the court set aside a nonsuit in a case where the plaintiff was injured by stumbling on uneven planking patching a hole in the defendant's bridge, on a night when it was quite dark and the thermometer was ten below zero, and he was walking rapidly along with his hands in his pockets. He testified that he had seen several patches on the bridge, but whether he had seen this particular one or not he did not remember.

Where the plaintiff was in the employ of a railroad which had the right for certain purposes to use the track of the defendant railroad at a place where the latter crossed the highway, and, owing to the negligence of the defendant, there was a hole in the planking between the tracks, known to the plaintiff, who, while endeavoring to uncouple cars on his own road, and not thinking about the hole, moved with the cars and caught his foot in the hole and was injured, it was held that it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant. Snow v. Housatonic R. Co. 8 Allen, 441, 85 Am. Dec. 720.

Snow and ice.

In Waterbury v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 104 Iowa, 32, 73 N. W. 341, where the plaintiff had been injured by slipping on the ice of a railway platform, the court, in reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, said: "Having full knowledge as to the 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

dangerous condition of this incline, and the point near it,—having passed over it a few minutes before with his mother, when he says he was especially careful,—he proceeds to step backwards upon it without exercising any care whatsoever. From the undisputed facts,—from his own evidence,—but one conclusion can be drawn, and that is that he was guilty of negligence which resulted in his injury. It does not appear that there was any necessity for stepping backwards onto this incline, which he knew was especially dangerous, save to escape the wind, and that would not justify his so doing without exercising any care for his safety."

But a different view was taken of the situation in Dewire v. Bailey, 131 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219, where the plaintiff testified that as he went into a building to attend a paid entertainment, he noticed that there was ice and snow on the plank sidewalk, but he did not slip going in; that, at the close of the entertainment, he was among the last to leave; and that, after the accident happened, he noticed that the sidewalk in front of the door where he fell was in the same condition as when he went in; and that he stepped carefully in going out,—the court, in setting aside a verdict for the defendant, said: "The nature of the obstruction in this case, as shown by the exceptions, was such that it ought to have been submitted to the jury to determine whether the plaintiff, even if he knew the condition of the sidewalk at the time he attempted to pass over it, was, under the circumstances, in the exercise of reasonable home a few minutes later, plaintiff testified that she was in a hurry, and had forgotten entirely about the ditch. "It never entered my mind." "I never thought of it, until I fell into it." "I was in a hurry, and I walked right into it. That is the whole upshot of it. If I had thought of it, I would never have walked into it."

Under this condition of the evidence, appellant contends that respondent as matter of law brought about her injury by her own contributory negligence, and is thus barred of a recovery. Respondent's position is that whether or not her temporary forgetfulness which led to and resulted in her injury constituted contributory negligence was a question of fact for the jury. Undoubtedly the general rule is as laid down prudence and due care in attempting to pass over it in the manner he did."

Defects in buildings.

In Chicago, P. & St. L. R. Co. v. Doyle, 119 Ill. App. 303, it was held that it was error to refuse a nonsuit where the plaintiff was injured, as he claimed, owing to the negligent arrangement of doors and steps in a stairway with which he was entirely familiar.

But in Gordon v. Cummings, 152 Mass. 513, 9 L.R.A. 640, 23 Am. St. Rep. 846, 25 N. E. 978, it was held that it was error to direct a verdict for the defendants, the owners of a building which the plaintiff, a letter carrier, was entering, there being two similar entrances close together, one of them being the elevator shaft, through which he fell, he being aware of the similarity. The court said upon the question as to whether the plaintiff offered any sufficient evidence of due care, that his previous knowledge of the dangerous proximity of the two entrances was not conclusive that he was not exercising due care in attempting to enter.

In Scrivner v. Lowe, 32 Ont. Rep. 290, the defendants were engaged in putting electrical fittings into a house in which the plaintiff was a lodger; and, leaving their work to go to dinner at midday, left in an unprotected state two holes in the floor of the bath room, one of which they had made for the purposes of the work, and the other of which was a stovepipe hole, which they had uncovered. While they were absent the plaintiff went into the bath room to wash her hands, observed the holes, and avoided them in going to the washstand, but, on leaving it, she forgot one of the holes, stepped into it, and was bruised and strained in consequence. Robertson, J., said: "It was a case of 'momentary forgetfulness,' and that, in my judgment, does not constitute negligence. Plaintiff had not seen the holes in the floor before the occasion in question. She stepped over the one at the door, when she saw the other in front of the washstand, which she went in 29 Cyc. 641, as follows: "Whether an injured person was guilty of contributory negligence in failing to observe the danger is usually for the jury to determine under the particular facts of the case." And in support of this text decisions of this court are cited. It is true, also, that some courts have declared that under circumstances similar to those here presented the question should be referred to the jury. In other words, they have held that temporary forgetfulness of a known danger, even without some sudden or great disturbing cause, does not constitute negligence as matter of law. Of such cases are Kelly v. Blackstone, 147 Mass. 448, 9 Am. St. Rep. 730, 18 N. E. 217; Meridian v. McBeath, 80 Miss. 485, 32 So. 53, and Collins v. Janesville, 111 to the bath room to use. Instead of standing in front of the washstand, to avoid the larger hole, she stood at the end of it, and her skirts apparently covered the other. After performing her ablutions, she turned round to leave the stand, and, in turning, one of her feet went into the other hole, and the injury was occasioned thereby. To my mind, there could be very little doubt as to the inference to be drawn from these circumstances, but it was not for the judge to say; it was a question of fact as to what was the proper inference to be deduced from the facts in proof, and in that case it was for the jury to decide."

In Bassett v. Fish, 75 N. Y. 303, the court, while reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, a school teacher, for injury in falling through a hole in the floor of a room in the schoolhouse, nevertheless considered that she was not guilty of contributory negligence in that she had seen the hole once three weeks before the accident, she having been since that time occupied in her duties in another room, but on the day of the accident was teaching a class in the room where the hole was and was walking to and fro instructing them when she fell through it. The court said she had a right to suppose that as great a hole as the one in question would have been repaired in the interval that had elapsed.

Miscellaneous.

In West Kentucky Teleph. Co. v. Pharis, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 1838, 78 S. W. 917, it was held that it was not contributory negligence as a matter of law for a woman fifty-eight years of age to stumble over a telephone wire partly embedded in the snow in the street, which she had seen in an accidental and cursory way some four days before, it being half-past six on the morning of a cloudy day as she was hurrying to her work through the falling snow with her mind upon the serious condition of her sick sister, whom she had attended during the greater part of the previous night. The court said: "Under such circumstances it is not strange to have forgotten the

Wis. 348, 87 N. W. 241. This last case, however, recognizes the conflict of authority which exists upon this proposition, saying: "Some courts have held that, if a person knows of a dangerous defect in a sidewalk, he is bound at his peril to remember it. Gilman v. Deerfield, 15 Gray, 577; Bruker v. Covington, 69 Ind. 35, 35 Am. Rep. 202." This is the view which has uniformly prevailed in this state. As it is contributory negligence as matter of law to approach a railroad crossing without stopping, or looking or listening, so it has been held that momentary forgetfulness of a danger, which forgetfulness is not induced by some sudden and adequate disturbing cause, is itself as matter of law contributory negligence barring a recovery. The question was first presented under circumstances very similar to those in the case at bar in Davis v. California Street Cable R. Co. 105 Cal. 131, 38 Pac. 647. In the Davis Case defendant had placed an iron rail to be used in the construction of its street railway track in front of the house in which plaintiff lived. It had remained there about four weeks. An alarm of fire having been sounded in the nighttime, plaintiff came out of her house and started across the sidewalk to discover the whereabouts of the fire. She forgot the presence of the rail, tripped, fell, and was injured. This court said: "We quite agree with counsel for appellant that previous knowledge or familiarity with the dangerous place or obstruction in a highway is not per se conclusive evidence of presence of the fallen wires or the danger of catching her foot in one of their loops."

In Fox v. Sackett, 10 Allen, 536, 87 Am. Dec. 682, the plaintiff, while driving in the highway in the afternoon, saw a wagon left there by the defendant. In the evening the plaintiff, having dropped a blanket from his wagon, drove at a gentle trot looking out on one side of the road for the blanket, while his companion looked out for it on the other side, and, going along in this way, struck the wagon without seeing it, the night being dark, and was injured, and it was held that it was error to direct a verdict for the defendant.

In Wood v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 100 Ala. 660, 13 So. 552, it was held that the jury was properly instructed to find for the defendant in an action by a passenger against a railroad for injuries due to falling over lumber on the platform in the middle of the night, although the defendant was guilty of negligence in failing to have the passageway cleared of obstructions, or having sufficient light to enable the passengers to see them. The plaintiff had testified that he had seen the lumber and obstruction on the platform and knew its location, but at the time he stumbled upon it "he did not recollect the fact that he had seen the timber the evening before." The court summarized the evidence as being to the effect "that the route from the station house to the train was over a platform prepared by the defendant for the use of passengers; that there were pieces of lumber and cross-ties on the platform obstructing in part the passageway; that there was room sufficient for passengers on the platform between the pile of lumber and the edge of the platform; that it was dark, and defendant had no lights, and that in attempting to reach the train at the place where passengers were accustomed to board the train, he stumbled over the obstruction and was injured."

Where the plaintiff's intestate was killed by an electric wire, it was held that the court properly charged the jury that "if the deceased, knowing the proximity of this wire and the danger thereof, became preoccupied in any way and forgot about the danger, and his so doing was a failure to remain as alert and watchful as a reasonably careful man should under the circumstances, then there can be no recovery in this action;" and a judgment for the defendant was affirmed. Buckley v. Westchester Lighting Co. 93 App. Div. 436, 87 N. Y. Supp. 763 (affirmed in 183 N. Y. 506, 76 N. E. 1090).

In Bliss v. Boeckh, 8 Ont. Rep. 451, it was shown that the plaintiff was thoroughly familiar with a certain lane in which there were gates and a crossbeam about 9½ feet high which it was held the defendant had no right to have in the lane. One day when the roadway was somewhat elevated with snow and ice, the plaintiff, on the top of a large load, gave up his attention to driving his horses through the narrow gateway, and did not think of the beam overhead, and was struck by it and injured, and the court declined to disturb a verdict in his favor.

Where the plaintiff, knowing that there were projecting perpendicular supply pipes close by a private way, and, being at the time in a covered wagon where he could not see very well, backed his horse over one of the pipes and broke its leg, it was held that as he knew of the existence of the pipes, he was guilty of contributory negligence. Bomberger v. American Iron & Steel Mfg. Co. 33 Pa. Super. Ct. 299.

Reference may be made in this connection to Giles v. London County Council, 68 J. P. 10, 2 L. G. R. 326, where many cricket fields were laid out upon a certain green, each marked by a number, the marking flag in question having been put some distance back of the wicket by one of the plaintiff's fellow players, and he, in running to catch a ball, ran into it and was injured, it was held that he could not recover; but the decision of the court was particularly on the point that there was no negligence on the part of the defendant. It does not appear whether the plaintiff was aware of the location of the flag, although the court stated that he must be deemed to have assumed the risk.

B. B. B.

contributory negligence in failing to avoid it. In this case if the plaintiff's house had been falling, rendering great haste in escaping from imminent danger necessary, the haste, excitement, and fear might reasonably be held sufficient to obliterate all memory or thought of the presence of the obstruction upon the sidewalk. But that is not this case. . . .

No danger could have been apprehended by Mrs. Davis from the fire after she reached the sidewalk, but mere curiosity induced her to start to go down the street to see where the fire was. That she forgot the presence of the rail is not disputed in the evidence, but that the circumstances justified her forgetfulness and consequent want of care cannot be conceded." Under this state of facts it was held that as matter of law plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. In McGraw v. Friend & T. Lumber Co. 120 Cal. 574, 52 Pac. 1004, a pedestrian walking on a dark night along a sidewalk in process of repair, and knowing it to be in a dangerous condition, sought to excuse himself from culpability for the injuries which he received by showing that at the moment of the injury his attention was distracted by an expiring street light. It was held that the question of contributory negligence under those circumstances was one of law for the court, and that as matter of law he was guilty of such negligence. These and other authorities are reviewed in Brett v. Frank, 153 Cal. 274, 94 Pac. 1051, and the reasoning and doctrine upheld and applied to the case of an employee who momentarily forgot the existence of a shaft hole into which he fell and was injured. In the opinion in that case full recognition is given to the circumstances where preoccupation or forgetfulness do not bar a recovery, and it is said: But "there was no sudden emergency, no stress of peril, no haste in the performance of the work. The case does not belong to the exceptional class which we have been considering."

The effort to distinguish the case at bar from these cases is hopeless. True, plaintiff was aged, but, if the effect of age was to impair her faculties in any respect, common prudence and the requirements of law demanded from her the exercise of care sufficient to make good these defects. Mt. Vernon v. Brooks, 39 Ill. App. 426; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 400. She was subjected to no peril, stress, or strain; no haste was imposed upon her; no excuse for her forgetfulness was shown.

The judgment and order are therefore reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: Lorigan, J.; Melvin, J.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

JULIA WINES

v.

CROSBY & COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.

(— Mich. —, 135 N. W. 96.)

Corporation — sale of dangerous article — personal liability of officer.

A managing officer of a corporation which is engaged in the manufacture for general consumption of an article dangerous to use is personally liable for injury to a consumer by its use, if he knows of its dangerous character and actively promotes its manufacture and sale.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Edwin Henderson and Alexander J. Groesbeck for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. James H. Pound, for defendant in error:

Defendant Charles F. Crosby is liable for plaintiff's injury.

Clement v. Crosby & Co. 157 Mich. 643, 122 N. W. 263.

Note. — Personal liability of officer or director of corporation for personal injuries from torts in connection with its business.

A few of the cases on this question accept the distinction between misfeasance and nonfeasance, which has sometimes been applied to the question of the liability of a servant to third persons for his own negligence. (On that question, see notes to Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison, Bldg. Co. 28 L.R.A. 433, and Ward v. Pullman Co. 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 343, and especially the criticism therein of such distinction.) It is held that the officer may be held personally liable where the injuries result from negligence in respect of matters under his personal supervision or control, or from orders promulgated by him.

Thus, the president of a corporation who, as its controlling officer, had charge of work in constructing a building, is personally liable for negligent failure to erect a scaffold which was needed to protect persons near the walls. Mayer v. Thompson-Hutchison Bldg. Co. 104 Ala. 611, 28 L.R.A. 433, 53 Am. St. Rep. 88, 16 So. 620.

So, an officer who is a general managing agent of a lumber company may be held personally liable for setting an inexperienced and ignorant employee at work on a machine which the former knew to be dangerous. Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co.

Stone, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, a married woman twenty-eight years old at the time of the injury herein complained of, brought this action against Charles F. Crosby, Crosby & Company, and the 6-5-4 Manufacturing Company, the last two named defendants being corporations, to recover damages for a personal injury received by her on June 15, 1907, through a severe burning occasioned by the alleged inflammable nature of a compound, or stove polish, known as "6-5-4. Self Shining Lusta," that she was using to polish a Peninsular coal range. It was the claim of the plaintiff that the article in question was manufactured and sold by the two corporations named as defendants, and that the business was managed and controlled by the defendant Charles F. Crosby, as an officer of said companies.

No question is raised in the case as to the sufficiency of the declaration, and it may be said that the alleged duties of the defendants are substantially as stated in the case of Clement v. Crosby & Co. 148 Mich. 293, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 588, 111 N. W. 745, 12 Ann. Cas. 265, and 157 Mich. 643, 122 N. W. 263. Upon the trial the testimony on behalf of the plaintiff tended to show that the composition known as "6-5-4" consisted of 75 per cent or a little more of naphtha, and that it was a highly inflammable substance, and dangerous to be used by persons ignorant of its ingredients. The plaintiff testified that she purchased from a grocer the can of "6-5-4" a few days before the injury, that this was the first can she had ever used, and that she read the directions carefully. Among the directions were these words: "6-5-4 will burn when brought into contact with flame." Plaintiff further testified that when she started to polish the stove, about 11 o'clock A. M., she noticed that it was a trifle warm over the fire box; that she had been burn-

90 Wis. 225, 28 L.R.A. 439, 48 Am. St. Rep. 911, 63 N. W. 93. The principal ground of this decision is that the efficient cause of the injury, so far as the officer was concerned, was misfeasance, and not nonfeasance, within the rule that where injury is caused to a third person through the negligence of the servant, the principal or master alone is liable, if the agent is guilty of nonfeasance merely; but that the agent or servant may be held personally liable, when he is guilty of misfeasance.

And the president of an incorporated omnibus line is liable to a passenger who receives personal injuries as the result of being forcibly ejected from the conveyance by a servant, under the express order of the president to eject all colored persons. Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 231. But where an order directing servants to eject certain persons from railroad premises is deemed to be that of the company merely transmitted by the president to the servants, the president cannot be held liable for a personal injury resulting from the excessive and improper violence on the part of the servant in carrying out the order, although it is said that if the order promulgated was that of the president personally, he would be liable for the injuries. Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen, 420.

By way of illustration, attention is also directed to Favorite v. Cottrill, 62 Mo. App. 119, which, largely upon the authority of Peck v. Cooper, supra, holds that the president of a corporation who directs its servants to destroy the property of a competitor is personally liable for the damage inflicted.

The fact that the corporation itself is liable does not affect the liability of the officer. Peck v. Cooper, supra.

It is said that it is only where the officer has been guilty of active personal negligence, that is, of some act of misfeasance, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that he can be made to answer to third parties. O'Neil v. Young & Sons' Seed & Plant Co. 58 Mo. App. 628.

So, if the president of a corporation did not know of the defectiveness of an appliance furnished by the corporation, which he directed a servant to use, he is not liable to the latter for the injuries which he sustained while using it. Ibid. The court further declared in this case that if the officer had inspected the appliance and negligently failed to find a defect, even then he was guilty of but a nonfeasance, for which the corporation alone could be held.

Attention is also directed to Lundy v. Delmas, 104 Cal. 655, 26 L.R.A. 651, 38 Pac. 445, holding that regents of the University of California, who constituted a corporation, and were expressly declared by statute not to be deemed public officers, could not be held individually liable for personal injuries caused by negligence respecting poles and wires of a telegraph and telephone line maintained by the corporation.

It was held in Thérien v. Brodie, Rap. Jud. Quebec 4 C. S. 23, that the directors of a corporation were not personally liable for injuries caused by the explosion of a defective boiler; and the decision was placed upon the ground that while the evidence showed a want of watchful attention, which the use of such hazardous articles demanded, there was no such individual fault on the part of the directors as rendered them personally liable for the injury, it appearing that they had no reason to believe that the servants placed in charge of the boiler were untrustworthy or incompetent.

It is similarly declared in Van Antwerp v. Linton, 89 Hun, 417, 35 N. Y. Supp. 318, affirmed without additional opinion in 157 N. Y. 716, 53 N. E. 1133, that where athletic grounds belonging to a domestic corporation were put in a condition for an exhibition by a committee of directors appointed for ing soft coal or coke, she did not remember which; that the back griddles and middle griddles were cold; that she put her hand on the griddle over the fire box, and that it did not burn her hand, but was warm; and that she applied the preparation with a cotton rag, which absorbed the liquid more or less. The directions were: "Use 5 cent flat bristle brush." The plaintiff further testified that she covered the entire top of the stove, including the griddles over the fire box, and nothing happened; that the fire box was getting cooler; that she noticed a place near the stovepipe which did not suit her, and which she had skipped; that the stovepipe was in the middle of the stove, back of the two central griddles, and was not over the fire pot; that she had the can in her left hand and the rag in her right, and dipped the rag into the can to apply some of the preparation; that, as she was leaning over, some of the preparation dropped on the stove, on the griddle over the fire box, and immediately ignited, and she was very severely burned, resulting in the loss of the fingers upon one hand, and the use of the other hand. That the plaintiff has sustained severe and permanent injuries is not questioned.

We shall not quote the testimony in extenso, but it is sufficient to say that there was evidence tending to show that the defendant Crosby & Company was the manufacturer of said "6-5-4" from 1905 down to the time of the injury complained of, and that during all of that time the defendant Charles F. Crosby had been the president of the company, and that the manufacture and sale of the article in question were under his immediate supervision, and that he knew the constituent parts of said compound and had personally made sales of the same while he was an officer of said corporation.

The defendants offered no testimony, but that purpose, personal liability upon the part of the members of the committee for injuries from a defective grand stand could not be predicated of their being directors, officers, or stockholders in the corporation. And it was further held that they could not be held liable as agents or servants of the corporation since the duties for the breach of which they were sought to be held liable were corporate rather than individual, within the meaning of the rule that if the duty omitted by the agent or servant devolved upon him purely from his agency or employment, his omission is only a duty he owes his principal or master, and the master alone is liable; while if the duty rests upon him in his individual character, and is one that the law imposed upon him independently of his agency or employment, then he is liable.

The mere fact that the directors of an exhibition company employed a person to display fireworks does not render them liable for personal injuries resulting from negligence in the manufacture or manner of handling of the explosives, it not appearing that they gave any specific directions, or that they were present when, or knew anything about the manner in which, the display was conducted. Bianki v. Greater American Exposition, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 656, 92 N. W. 615.

But the president of an incorporated political club, who purchased fireworks and procured them to be exploded in a public street, is liable for resulting injuries to a third person, upon the theory that the explosion of fireworks in a public street is a public nuisance, and that all participants in the creation of a public nuisance are liable to answer for its ill effects. Jenne v. Sutton, 43 N. J. L. 257, 39 Am. Rep. 578.

The liability of the officers of a corporation for negligence in storing giant powder in violation of law depends upon their exercise of reasonable diligence and the control and supervision of the business; and they are liable if, and only if, they had knowledge of the nuisance, or could by exercising ordinary diligence have known it; and their liability is not affected by the fact that the amount of explosives stored did not exceed the quantity permitted by municipal ordinance, where it did exceed that authorized by statute. Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. 22 Mont. 312, 44 L.R.A. 508, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602, 56 Pac. 358. In this case, the court also declared that the nonexecution of the duty of directors which results in the positive act of a creation and maintenance of a continuing nuisance by the corporation, on account of which a third person is killed, amounts, unless explained, to a misfeasance on their part, or if they have actual knowledge of, and authorized the nuisance, to malfeasance; and is not merely a nonfeasance, for which their liability can be limited to the corporation only.

As to the liability of a dealer for personal injuries from an article not obviously dangerous, see the note in 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 382.

As to the liability of the manufacturer of dangerously defective machines, see the note in 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1103.

As to the applicability of the rule of res ipsa loquitur in an action for personal injuries from defects in articles manufactured or sold by the defendant, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 949.

For a recent case on the liability of a manufacturer or dealer for injuries caused by defects in an automobile, see the case of Olds Motor Works v. Shaffer, 37 L.R.A. (N.S.) 560.

As to the liability of a druggist for injuries to a stranger from a drug or poison sold by him, see the note in 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 646.

L. A. W.

at the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant Charles F. Crosby requested the court to direct a verdict in his favor for the following reasons:

"(1) Because there is no proof in the case of any negligence on his part.

"(2) Because the compound in question was sold by Crosby & Company a Michigan corporation, or by the 6-5-4 Manufacturing Company, and that said corporations are legal entities and responsible in law for their actions.

"(3) Because the stockholders of a corporation are not in any way responsible for the torts of the corporation.

"(4) Because the allegations of negligence contained in the declaration as to the defendant Charles F. Crosby are not supported by any evidence in the case.

"(5) Because there is no evidence in the case that would warrant a jury in finding that Charles F. Crosby, having actual knowledge of the defects in the product of the Crosby & Company wilfully and fraudulently placed the same on the market.

"(6) Because there is no evidence supporting the theory of the plaintiff to the effect that there was any spontaneous combustion or explosion which resulted in the damage to the plaintiff as claimed by the declaration.

"(7) Because there are no contractual relations between the defendant Charles F. Crosby and the plaintiff, or between Charles F. Crosby and any of the parties through whom said compound was sold."

The defendants Crosby & Company and the 6-5-4 Manufacturing Company requested the direction of a verdict in their favor for the following reasons:

"(1) Because the allegations of negligence contained in the declaration are not supported by any evidence in the case.

"(2) Because there is no evidence in the case that the compound in question, through the use of which the plaintiff claims she was injured, was at any time sold or manufactured by the defendants.

"(3) Because there is no evidence in the case that would warrant the jury in finding that Crosby & Company, having actual knowledge of the defects in their products, wilfully or fraudulently placed the same on the market.

"(4) Because there is no evidence in the case that the composition known as '6-5-4' is per se dangerous to human life.

"(5) Because there was no evidence supporting the theory of the plaintiff to the effect that there was any spontaneous combustion or explosion which resulted in the damage to the plaintiff as claimed by the declaration.

"(6) Because all the proof in the case shows that the compound in question could not ignite except when brought in contact with a flame or that which amounted to a white heat, and that plaintiff testified that there was no such flame or heat present."

These requests or motions were refused, and the case was submitted to the jury under the charge of the court, and the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff against all of the defendants in the sum of $12,000. A motion for a new trial was made by the defendants, which was granted as to the defendant the 6-5-4 Manufacturing Company, and denied as to the defendants Crosby & Company and Charles F. Crosby. The last-named defendants duly excepted to the reasons denying said motion, and they have brought the case here on writ of error.

There are twenty-two assignments of error, but counsel for appellants have only argued and called attention to the eleventh, twelfth, and twenty-second.

1. The eleventh assignment of error is to the effect that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant Charles F. Crosby for the reasons set forth in his motion to direct a verdict. Appellants' counsel state the rule to be that "an officer or director of a corporation is not liable for its torts, unless he has participated therein." They cite in support of this doctrine 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 880, and cases there cited. We think that the rule of law stated is correct, but it is also true that the converse of the proposition is the law where there has been such participation.

Upon this branch of the case the trial court charged the jury as follows: "You can only find against Mr. Crosby if it appears, and you find it is a fact, that he had knowledge of the dangerous character of this compound, and that he was actively promoting the manufacture and sale of this compound, as an officer with authority in the corporation. If you find that he was not actively promoting the manufacture and sale of this compound, knowing it to be dangerous, as an officer of the corporation, you cannot find against him." We think that the learned circuit judge stated the rule correctly, and that he did not err in refusing to direct a verdict for said defendant. We are of opinion that there was sufficient evidence upon this point, as to this defendant, to carry the case to the jury. The following cases are in point here: Favorite v. Cottrill, 62 Mo. App. 119. In this suit plaintiff sued the defendants for the destruction of his business as bill poster in the city of St. Louis. The defendant corporation was engaged in the same business, and its codefendant was its president and general manager. As to joint liability, the court said: "The English rule, as declared by Lord Holt in the case of Lane v. Cotton, 12 Mod. 488, is that, for the neglect of the servant, third persons can have no remedy against him, but that the master alone is chargeable; but for a misfeasance or actual tort, an action will lie against the servant because he is a wrongdoer. The general principle is that those who participate in the commission of a trespass by counseling, aiding, or abetting it, are equally liable with the person who actually committed it." The doctrine of this case seems to be that, when a trespass or tort has been committed by a corporation, both the corporation and the agent under whose direction it acted are jointly liable therefor. Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 192, 54 Am. Rep. 231. This action was brought to recover for damages claimed to have been sustained by plaintiff by being forcibly ejected from an omnibus controlled and operated by the defendant. The court said: "The fact that appellant was the president of the corporation is no protection to him in the commission of an illegal act, and where an officer of an incorporation performs an illegal act resulting in an injury to another, he is liable. Nor does it exonerate him from such liability because the corporation may also be liable." Cameron v. Kenyon-Connell Commercial Co. 22 Mont. 312, 44 L.R.A. 508, 74 Am. St. Rep. 602, 56 Pac. 358. This case goes to the extent of holding that the directors of a corporation are personally liable for the death of one killed by an explosion of powder unlawfully kept in the corporation's warehouse, though they had no knowledge thereof, for, by exercising ordinary diligence as directors, they could have known that the warehouse contained an unlawful amount. This action was brought jointly against the company and the directors. Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. 94 Tenn. 397, 28 L.R.A. 421, 29 S. W. 361; Davenport v. Newton, 71 Vt. 11, 42 Atl. 1087. In this case the doctrine is stated that, to make a director of a corporation personally liable for its torts, he must have done something through his acts also. The mere fact that he is one of the board of directors is not sufficient. Referring to Nunnally v. Southern Iron Co. supra, the court said: "The only question of which there can be any serious doubt in this class of cases is whether the officer or agent has participated in the wrong so that it may justly be regarded as his act; that, if he has, his liability is indisputable." Hewett v. Swift, 3 Allen, 420. In Fanning v. D. M. Osborne & Co. 102 N. Y. 441, 7 N. E. 307, action was brought against D. M. Osborne & Company, a corporation, and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

David M. Osborne, its president. The court said: "It appears that . . . [Mr. Osborne] was president of the corporation . . . but it is not shown that he advised or approved, either in his individual capacity or as trustee, of the acts of the corporation. The point that he was not shown to have personally intermeddled in the matter was specifically taken, and upon the case as presented we think the judgment against him individually is erroneous." Westervelt v. Demarest, 46 N. J. L. 37, 50 Am. Rep. 400. This case holds that the publication by savings bank directors that "directors and stockholders are personally responsible for its debts," if the statement is false, lays foundation for an action for deceit against the persons making the representations. Montfort v. Hughes, 3 E. D. Smith, 591; Phelps v. Wait, 30 N. Y. 78; Suydam v. Moore, 8 Barb. 358; Bell v. Josselyn, 3 Gray, 309, 63 Am. Dec. 741; Greenberg v. Whitcomb Lumber Co. 90 Wis. 225, 28 L.R.A. 439, 48 Am. St. Rep. 911, 63 N. W. 93; 10 Cyc. 824, 920, 933.

2. The twelfth assignment of error is to the point that the court erred in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant Crosby & Company for the reasons set forth in its motion to direct a verdict. The argument in support of this assignment of error is to the effect that the testimony absolutely failed to show that the compound sold to plaintiff as claim was manufactured by the defendant Crosby & Company. We cannot agree with this contention, and we have already referred to the testimony tending to show such fact. We are of opinion that there was sufficient evidence upon this point to carry the case to the jury.

3. The twenty-second assignment of error is that the court erred in refusing to grant the defendants Crosby and Crosby & Company a new trial for the reasons set forth in their motion for a new trial. The argument in support of this assignment of error is that the verdict against Charles F. Crosby was clearly against the weight of evidence. Counsel find no fault with the charge of the court upon that subject, but quote from it with approval, claiming, however, that there was no testimony to support a verdict as to said defendant. We do not agree with counsel in this claim, as already pointed out. The general doctrine as to liability of manufacturers in cases of this nature is discussed in Clement v. Crosby & Co. supra, and we need not repeat it here.

We find no reversible error in the record, and the judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

LAFAYETTE STREET CHURCH SOCIETY OF BUFFALO, Resp.,

v.

HERBERT F. J. NORTON, Appt.

(202 N. Y. 379, 95 N. E. 819.)

Trust — establishment by parol.

1. The effect of an absolute deed of church property by its trustees to a stranger cannot be controlled by parol evidence that the transfer was made upon the understanding that the grantee should take the property in trust in order to secure a revenue from it by leasing it for a purpose which the members of the church would not sanction.

Same — relation of partners — trust.

2. The fact that one taking a conveyance of property from a religious association is a brother and partner of one of the trustees does not prevent his becoming a purchaser of the property, or establish a relation of confidence between the parties which would uphold a parol promise to hold the property in trust for the association, against the terms of the absolute conveyance.

Deed — trust — confirmation in grantee.

3. Confirmation in the grantee of title to Note. — Grantee's oral promise to grant or to hold in trust as giving rise to constructive trust.

I. Scope, 906.

II. Enforceability as an express trust.

a. In general, 907.

b. Where local statute of frauds does not require writing, 909.

III. Grounds upon which equity will enforce promise.

a. In general, 910.

b. actual fraud.

1. In general, 911.

2. When fraudulent intent inferable.

(a) Preliminary statement, 911.

(b) Failure or refusal to perform.

(1) In general, 911.

(2) As giving rise to inference of actual fraudulent intent, 913.

(c) From activity in procuring conveyance.

(1) Generally, 914.

(2) Instances where motive of grantor was to avoid family troubles, 915.

(3) Instances where anticipated danger of litigation or prosecution influenced grantor, 916.

(4) Instances where conveyance was intended to protect grantor's family, 917.

(5) Instances where conveyance was in nature of family arrangement, 917.

(6) Instances in which conveyance was by way of advancement of child, 920.

(7) Instances where property conveyed to facilitate its management, 920.

III. b, 2—continued.

(8) Instances where conveyance was in nature of testamentary disposition, 921.

(9) Instances in which conveyance was by way of security, 922.

3. Where creation of written instrument contemplated, 923.

a. Constructive fraud, 923.

1. In general, 923.

2. Where relation of parties is that of principal and agent, or partners, 924.

3. Where one party sustains relation of confidential adviser, 924.

4. Where parties are husband and wife, 925.

5. Where parties are parent and child, grandparent and grandchild, father-in-law, son-in-law, etc., 926.

6. Where parties are brother and sister, 928.

d. Accident or mistake, 928.

e. Part performance of oral agreement taking case out of statute, 928.

I. Scope.

Other aspects of the general question as to when a trust will grow out of an oral promise have been treated in notes to Crossman v. Keister, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 698, and McDowell v. McDowell, 31 L.R.A.(N.S.) 176, entitled, "Impressing share of heir, devisee, or legatee with constructive trust because of his fraud in frustrating decedent's intention to give the property to a third person," and the note to Winder v. Scholey, 33 L.R.A.(N.S.) 995, upon the question whether a constructive trust may be based upon an undertaking to hold for the benefit of another property received through devise or inheritance, where no actual testamentary intention has been frustrated; which notes contain some discussion of the evidentiary basis upon which property conveyed by the trustees of a religious society, which conveyance was made in consideration of the execution of mortgages for the full value, and is claimed to have been in trust, is effected by the acceptance at the expiration of the mortgage of a partial payment thereon, and the extension of the time for paying the balance, with promise to make payments in installments.

Trusts — unconscionable conduct — accounting for profits.

4. A transaction by which a religious society, for the purpose of disposing of unused and unproductive property, which it has been unable to do otherwise, conveys it to a stranger, taking mortgages for its full value, upon condition that he shall care for and rent the property, pay the rent to the society, and reconvey it in case he cannot effect a lease, is not so unconscionable as to require him to account as trustee for the profits in case, after caring for the property for a number of years, he sells it at a large advance in price.

(Gray, Vann, and Chase, JJ., dissent.)

(June 13, 1911.)

equity will proceed to raise a trust ex maleficio.

Reference may also be made in this connection to the note to Logan v. Brown, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 298, entitled, "Parol agreement to take title to real property, sell the same, and account for the proceeds, as affected by the statute of frauds;" and the note to Vickers v. Vickers, 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1043, entitled, "Will donor's expectation that the donee will allow him to share in the benefit of the property raise an implied trust to that effect?"

The aim of the present note is to collate the cases involving the question under what circumstances a constructive trust will arise where a grantee has orally agreed with his grantor, or with the person furnishing the consideration for the conveyance, to hold the property conveyed as a trustee. Its scope does not therefore require the inclusion of the numerous decisions on the question as to when a constructive trust will arise out of an agreement to buy land, or bid it in at a judicial sale, for another's benefit. (See, in this connection, a note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 112, entitled, "Statute of frauds as affecting right to equitable relief against one who has purchased land in his own name, in violation of his agreement to purchase for and in the name of another.") Nor does it include cases in which a constructive trust is based solely upon the existence of a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee, independently of any agreement to hold the property in trust.

II. Enforceability as an express trust.

a. In general.

It is uniformly held, wherever the statute of frauds in force contains a provision requiring express trusts to be created, or evidenced, by writing, that an oral agreement between grantor and grantee that the property conveyed shall be held in trust for the grantor cannot be enforced as an express trust. Patton v. Beecher, 62 Ala. 579; Manning v. Pippin, 86 Ala. 357, 11 Am. St. Rep. 46, 5 So. 572; Kinley v. Thelen, 158 Cal. 175, 110 Pac. 513; Dean v. Dean, 6 Conn. 285; Brown v. Brown, 66 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Conn. 493, 34 Atl. 490; McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. D. C. 1; Stevenson v. Crapnell, 114 Ill. 19, 28 N. E. 379; Biggins v. Biggins, 133 Ill. 211, 24 N. E. 516; Champlin v. Champlin, 136 Ill. 309, 29 Am. St. Rep. 323, 26 N. E. 526; Moore v. Horsley, 156 Ill. 36, 40 N. E. 323; Ellis v. Hill, 162 Ill. 557, 44 N. E. 858; Davis v. Stambaugh, 163 Ill. 557, 43 N. E. 170; Mayfield v. Forsyth, 164 Ill. 32, 45 N. E. 403; Godschalk v. Fulmer, 176 Ill. 64, 51 N. E. 852, affirming on rehearing 45 N. E. 809; Williams v. Williams, 180 Ill. 361, 54 N. E. 229; Monson v. Hutchin, 194 Ill. 431, 62 N. E. 788; Potter v. Clapp, 203 Ill. 592, 96 Am. St. Rep. 322, 68 N. E. 81; Skahen v. Irving, 206 Ill. 597, 69 N. E. 510; Lancaster v. Springer, 239 Ill. 472, 88 N. E. 272; Stubbings v. Stubbings, 248 Ill. 406, 94 N. E. 54; Prouty v. Moss, 111 Ill. App. 536; Fouty v. Fouty, 34 Ind. 433; Pennington v. Flock, 93 Ind. 378; Mohn v. Mohn, 112 Ind. 285, 13 N. E. 859; Montgomery v. Craig, 128 Ind. 48, 27 N. E. 427; Shaw v. Jones, 156 Ind. 60, 59 N. E. 166; Hemstreet v. Wheeler, 100 Iowa, 290, 69 N. W. 521; Gregory v. Bowlsby, 115 Iowa, 327, 88 N. W. 822; Luckhart v. Luckhart, 120 Iowa, 248, 94 N. W. 461; Donaldson v. Empire Loan & Invest. Co. 130 Iowa, 467, 106 N. W. 192; Morrall v. Watson, 7 Kan. 199; Gee v. Thrailkill, 45 Kan. 173, 25 Pac. 588; Gerry v. Stimson, 60 Me. 186; Wentworth v. Shibles, 89 Me. 167, 36 Atl. 108; McElderry v. Shipley, 2 Md. 25, 56 Am. Dec. 703; Hertle v. McDonald, 2 Md. Ch. 128; Clagett v. Hall, 9 Gill. & J. 80; Titcomb v. Morrill, 10 Allen, 15; Walker v. Looke, 5 Cush. 90; Blodgett v. Hildreth, 103 Mass. 484; Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 168 Mass. 488, 49 N. E. 431; Brown v. Bronson, 35 Mich. 415; Palmer v. Sterling, 41 Mich. 218, 2 N. W. 24; Pierson v. Conley, 95 Mich. 619, 55 N. W. 387; Waldron v. Merrill, 154 Mich. 203, 117 N. W. 631; Babbitt v. Bennett, 68 Minn. 260, 71 N. W. 22; Henderson v. Murray, 108 Minn. 76, 133 Am. St. Rep. 412, 121 N. W. 214; Moore v. Jordan, 65 Miss. 229, 7 Am. St. Rep. 641, 3 So. 737; Horne v. Higgins, 76 Miss. 813, 25 So. 489; Green v. Cates, 73 Mo. 116; Rogers v. Ramey, 137 Mo. 598, 39 S. W. 66; Hillman v. Allen, 145 Mo. 638, 47 S. W. 509; Bartlett v. Tinsley, APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, fourth department, affirming a judgment of a Special Term for Erie County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to require defendant to transfer, or account for the proceeds of, a half interest in a mortgage. Reversed.

Statement by Cullen, Ch. J.:

This action was brought to impress a trust in favor of the plaintiff upon a mortgage for $52,000 held by the defendant, to compel the transfer thereof to the plaintiff, with an accounting for all moneys paid thereon, and to enjoin the defendant from assigning or encumbering said mortgage during the pendency of the action. The answer, after admitting certain allegations of the complaint, denied the remainder, and pleaded the statute of limitations for the period of six years. After a trial at special term, judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, substantially in accordance with its prayer for relief, as to an undivided half of the mortgage held by the defendant when the action was commenced; the other half having been previously assigned to a bona fide purchaser. The appellate division unanimously affirmed, and the defendant appealed to this court.

The facts found, some details being omitted, are substantially as follows: The plaintiff is a religious corporation, and the defendant is a practising lawyer, the brother and law partner of Nathaniel W. Norton, 175 Mo. 319, 75 S. W. 143; Heil v. Heil, 184 Mo. 665, 84 S. W. 45; Crawley v. Crafton, 193 Mo. 421, 91 S. W. 1027; Budnek v. Budnek, 128 Mo. App. 319, 107 S. W. 458; Chowen v. Phelps, 26 Mont. 524, 69 Pac. 54; Hansen v. Berthelsen, 19 Neb. 433, 27 N. W. 423; O'Brien v. Gaslin, 20 Neb. 347, 30 N. W. 274; Dailey v. Kinsler, 31 Neb. 340, 47 N. W. 1045; Thomas v. Churchill, 48 Neb. 266, 67 N. W. 182; Veeder v. McKinley-Lanning Loan & T. Co. 61 Neb. 892, 86 N. W. 982; Marvel v. Marvel, 70 Neb. 498, 113 Am. St. Rep. 972, 97 N. W. 640; Farrington v. Barr, 36 N. H. 86; Whyte v. Arthur, 17 N. J. Eq. 521; Slocum v. Wooley, 43 N. J. Eq. 451, 11 Atl. 264; Coffey v. Sullivan, 63 N. J. Eq. 296, 49 Atl. 520; Movin v. Hays, 1 Johns. Ch. 339; Sturtevant v. Sturtevant, 20 N. Y. 39, 75 Am. Dec. 371; Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 84 Hun. 482, 32 N. Y. Supp. 390; Nevius v. Nevius, 117 App. Div. 236, 101 N. Y. Supp. 1091; Hubbard v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. Week. Dig. 455, 11 N. Y. S. R. 802; Dickinson v. Dickinson, 6 N. C. (2 Murph.) 279; Grove v. Kase, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 125; Kinsey v. Bennett, 37 S. C. 319, 15 S. E. 965; Salisbury v. Clarke, 61 Vt. 453, 17 Atl. 135; Spaulding v. Collins, 51 Wash. 488, 99 Pac. 306; Kalinowski v. McNeny, — Wash. —, 123 Pac. 1074; Fairchild v. Rasdall, 9 Wis. 379; Bird v. Morrison, 12 Wis. 139; Pavey v. American Ins. Co. 56 Wis. 221, 13 N. W. 925; Fillingham v. Nichols, 108 Wis. 49, 84 N. W. 15; Illinois Steel Co. v. Konkel, 146 Wis. 556, 131 N. W. 842; Jones v. Van Doren, 18 Fed. 619.

Under the provisions of the statute of frauds, that a contract to convey land shall be void unless in writing, and that no trust in real property shall be valid unless created by writing or by operation of law, a promise by a grantee to reconvey to a grantor is invalid, and cannot be enforced as such. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689.

An oral promise by a grantee to receive and hold the land, in express trust to compensate the grantor, is not enforceable, by virtue of the statute of frauds. Manning

v. Pippen, 86 Ala. 357, 11 Am. St. Rep. 46, 5 So. 572.

The case is the same where the agreement is between the grantee and the person furnishing the consideration for the conveyance. Robinson v. Robinson, 45 Ark. 481; Wilson v. Warner, 84 Conn. 560, 80 Atl. 718; Johnston v. Johnston, 138 Ill. 385, 27 N. E. 930; Murray v. Murray, 153 Ind. 14, 53 N. E. 946; Andrew v. Andrew, 114 Iowa, 524, 87 N. W. 494; Hoon v. Hoon, 126 Iowa, 391, 102 N. W. 105; Groesbeck v. Seeley, 13 Mich. 345; Newton v. Sly, 15 Mich. 391; Johnson v. Johnson, 16 Minn. 512, Gil. 462; Luse v. Reed, 63 Minn. 5, 65 N. W. 91; Watson v. Pinckney, 29 Jones & S. 188, 18 N. Y. Supp. 790.

Nor can an oral agreement between the grantee and grantor to hold in trust for the benefit of a third person be enforced as an express trust. Tillman v. Kifer, 166 Ala. 403, 52 So. 309; Spradling v. Spradling, — Ark. —, 142 S. W. 848; Smith v. Mason, 122 Cal. 428, 55 Pac. 143; Verzier v. Convard, 75 Conn. 1, 52 Atl. 255; Smith v. Hollenback, 51 Ill. 223; Adams v. Adams, 79 Ill. 517; Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447; Larmion v. Knight, 140 Ill. 232, 33 Am. St. Rep. 229, 29 N. E. 1116, 30 N. E. 318; Marie M. E. Church v. Trinity M. E. Church, 205 Ill. 601, 69 N. E. 73; Ryder v. Ryder, 244 Ill. 297, 91 N. E. 451; Cox v. Arnsamann, 76 Ind. 210; Wright v. Moody, 116 Ind. 175, 18 N. E. 608; McClain v. McClain, 57 Iowa, 167, 10 N. W. 333; McGinness v. Barton, 71 Iowa, 644, 33 N. W. 152; Willis v. Robertson, 121 Iowa, 380, 96 N. W. 900; Heddeleston v. Stoner, 128 Iowa, 525, 105 N. W. 56; Re Hall, 132 Iowa, 664, 110 N. W. 148; Schurz v. Schurz, — Iowa —, 128 N. W. 944; Ingham v. Burnell, 31 Kan. 333, 2 Pac. 804; Rogers v. Richards, 67 Kan. 706, 74 Pac. 255; Wormald v. Heinze, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 1022, 90 S. W. 1064; Philbrook v. Delano, 29 Me. 410; Wolf v. Corby, 30 Md. 356; Campbell v. Brown, 129 Mass. 23; Moran v. Somes, 154 Mass. 200, 28 N. E. 152; Shaffer v. Huntington, 53 Mich. 310, 19 N. W. 11; Thompson v. Marley, 102 Mich. 476, 60 N.

who was one of the trustees of the church, and had been for a long time prior to the transaction in question. In January, 1901, the plaintiff owned two church structures, one known as the "Old Church Property," which was no longer used for religious worship, and the other with a new and valuable edifice thereon, which was in constant use for church purposes. The society was heavily in debt, and the expense of holding the "Old Church Property" was so great that "it was imperatively necessary" to lease or sell it "in order to secure present revenue." It was subject to a mortgage for $60,000, and, while the carrying charges for interest and taxes amounted to a large sum annually, the income was but nominal. For a long time efforts had been made to sell it, without success, and it was impossible to lease it at a satisfactory rental, except for use as a theater, and some of the members of the congregation were unwilling that it should be leased for that purpose. At the annual meeting held on the 8th of January, 1901, a resolution was passed, authorizing the trustees to sell, lease, or otherwise dispose of it, and to execute the necessary instruments to carry the resolution into effect. Thereafter at a meeting of the board of trustees the defendant's brother, one of their number, stated that after various negotiations, "in view of the difficulty of making a lease direct, because of the opposition of the people in the church to its leasing, an arrangement was proposed by which the property should be transferred

W. 976; Sheldon v. Carr, 139 Mich. 654, 103 N. W. 181; Randall v. Constans, 33 Minn. 329, 23 N. W. 530; Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9; Elder v. Webber, 3 Neb. (Unof.) 534, 92 N. W. 126; Hall v. Congdon, 55 N. H. 104; Eaton v. Eaton, 35 N. J. L. 290; Arnwine v. Carroll, 8 N. J. Eq. 620; Baker v. Baker, 75 N. J. Eq. 305, 72 Atl. 1000; Cardiff v. Marquis, 17 N. D. 110, 114 N. W. 1088; Salter v. Bird, 103 Pa. 436; Braden v. Workman, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 224, 1 Atl. 655; Robinson v. Robinson, 29 W. N. C. 159; Lloyd v. Inglis, 1 Dessaus. Eq. 333; Rogers v. Rogers, 52 S. C. 388, 29 S. E. 812.

The same doctrine sometimes finds expression in the statement that oral proof cannot be heard to engraft an express trust upon a deed absolute in terms. See McDonald v. Hooker, 57 Ark. 632, 22 S. W. 655, 23 S. W. 678; Salyers v. Smith, 67 Ark. 526, 55 S. W. 936; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ramsay, 134 Ga. 107, 67 S. E. 652; Lawson v. Lawson, 117 Ill. 98, 7 N. E. 84; Pillsbury-Washburn Flour Mills Co. v. Kistlor, 53 Minn. 123, 54 N. W. 1063, and cases following.

In the absence of a confidential relation, or of facts raising a trust by operation of law, a trust cannot be imposed upon the grantee under an absolute deed unless it be declared by a writing. Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 381, 108 Pac. 278.

No parol trust can be engrafted on a legal title which the instrument of conveyance makes absolute on its face, unless its execution is procured by fraud. Smith v. Smith, 153 Ala. 504, 45 So. 168.

If land is conferred by an absolute deed, no express trust in favor of the grantor can be raised by proof of a parol agreement by the grantee to hold the property in trust or reconvey it. Barr v. O'Donnell, 76 Cal. 469, 9 Am. St. Rep. 242, 18 Pac. 429.

And an absolute conveyance of land cannot, after its execution, be turned into a trust by any oral declarations of the parties thereto. Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

b. Where local statute of frauds does not require writing.

Even where some equivalent to the 7th section of the English statute of frauds has not been enacted, so that an express trust in lands may be created in favor of a third person by a parol declaration made prior to or contemporaneously with the transfer of the legal title (Pittman v. Pittman, 107 N. C. 159, 11 L.R.A. 456, 12 S. E. 61; Dover v. Rhea, 108 N. C. 88, 13 S. E. 144; Hughes v. Pritchard, 122 N. C. 59, 29 S. E. 93; Owens v. Williams, 130 N. C. 165, 41 S. E. 93; Sykes v. Boone, 132 N. C. 199, 95 Am. St. Rep. 619, 43 S. E. 645; Murphy v. Hubert, 7 Pa. 420; Freeman v. Freeman, 2 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 81; Haywood v. Ensley, 8 Hump. 460; Thompson v. Thompson, — Tenn. —, 54 S. W. 145; Renshaw v. First Nat. Bank, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 194; Mee v. Mee, 113 Tenn. 453, 106 Am. St. Rep. 865, 82 S. W. 830; Insurance Co. v. Waller, 116 Tenn. 1, 115 Am. St. Rep. 763, 95 S. W. 811, 7 Ann. Cas. 1078); it is nevertheless held that except in cases of fraud, mistake, or undue influence, a parol trust to arise by reason of the contract or agreement of the parties thereto will not be set up or engrafted in favor of the grantor upon a written deed conveying to the grantee the absolute title, and giving clear indication on the face of the instrument that such a title was intended to pass. In such case, and to that extent, the doctrine of parol trusts is subordinated to another well-recognized principle of law, that when parties have formally and exclusively expressed their entire contract in writing, the same shall not be contradicted or changed by contemporaneous stipulations or agreements resting in parol. Gaylord v. Gaylord, 150 N. C. 222, 63 S. E. 1028; Ricks v. Wilson, 154 N. C. 282, 70 S. E. 476; Porter v. Mayfield, 21 Pa. 263; Troll v. Carter, 15 W. Va. 567; Pusey v. Gardner, 21 W. Va. 469; Poling v. Williams, 55 W. Va. 69, 46 S. E. 704; Richardson v. McConaughy, 55 W. Va. 546, 47 at a price stated to some person who should take the property, subject to the present Erie County Bank mortgage, and himself give back a mortgage upon the property for the balance of the purchase price, as agreed upon. If such price could be agreed upon with such person, then that person to whom the property was transferred would be at liberty to enter into a lease with the party." Thereupon a resolution was adopted directing application to be made to the court for authority to sell the property for a sum not less than $120,000, of which $60,000 was to be represented by the old mortgage and the balance by a new mortgage upon such terms and conditions as should be agreed upon. The application was accordingly made, and leave was granted by the court, authorizing the sale on the terms specified. Thereafter a deed of the property was made to the defendant for the sum of $120,000, which the trial court found was the full value of the property, and a mortgage executed by him to the plaintiff for the sum of $60,000, but without any bond or personal obligation for the payment of said sum, and a lease was made by the defendant to the theater people for the term of five years. Just before the expiration of the demised term, in April, 1906, the defendant wrote to the plaintiff, offering to pay $20,000 on his mortgage, then past due, and asking for an extension of time for the payment of the balance. The request was granted, and the defendant paid to the plaintiff the sum of $20,000

S. E. 287; Crawford v. Workman, 64 W. Va. 19, 61 S. E. 322.

And although the local statute of frauds may not preclude the engrafting of an express trust by parol evidence upon an absolute conveyance, yet the rule of evidence as to varying or contradicting the terms of a written instrument will render parol evidence inadmissible to show that the grantee in an absolute conveyance took as trustee, where the deed by its terms confers on the grantee a discretion to dispose of the land as he pleases. Mee v. Mee, 113 Tenn. 453, 106 Am. St. Rep. 865, 82 S. W. 830.

But in Texas, where, on account of the absence of any equivalent to the 7th section of the English statute of frauds, express trusts resting in parol are held to be enforceable (see, inter alia, Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 60 Am. Dec. 172; Bailey v. Harris, 19 Tex. 108; Leakey v. Gunter, 25 Tex. 400; Holland v. Farthing, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 155, 21 S. W. 67; Whitfield v. Diffie, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 105 S. W. 324; Smalley v. Paine, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 739; Landrum v. Landrum, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 907). The rule followed seems to permit the enforcement of such a trust for the benefit of the grantor (see Mead v. Randolph, 8 Tex. 191; Reeves v. Bass, 39 Tex. 618; Craig v. Harless, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 257, 76 S. W. 594; Rogers v. Tompkins, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 87 S. W. 379).

In the absence of a statutory provision making it necessary that an express trust shall be created or evidenced by a written instrument, equity will enforce an oral agreement between a vendee of land under a bond for title and a third person, by which the latter advanced the purchase money and took a deed in his own name as security for the loan, agreeing to convey to the vendee upon repayment. Jones v. McDougal, 32 Miss. 179; Cloninger v. Summit, 55 N. C. (2 Jones, Eq.) 513; Turner v. Eford, 58 N. C. (5 Jones Eq.) 106; Cohn v. Chapman, 62 N. C. (Phill. Eq.) 92, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

93 Am. Dec. 600; Avery v. Stewart, 136 N. C. 426, 68 L.R.A. 776, 48 S. E. 775.

As to whether a constructive trust will arise out of such a transaction, see Moseley v. Moseley, 86 Ala. 289, 5 So. 732, and Hoover v. Strohm, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 177; hereinafter set forth.

III. Grounds upon which equity will enforce promise.

a. In general.

It is well settled, however, that notwithstanding the provisions of the statute of frauds, the presence of fraud, accident, or mistake in the transaction will warrant the interposition of equity, which will compel the performance of the oral promise by fastening a constructive trust upon the conscience of the grantee.

But, as in other classes of cases in which constructive trusts are sought to be established, the courts require evidence which is clear, satisfactory, and convincing.

Thus, in Brock v. Brock, 90 Ala. 86, 9 L.R.A. 287, 8 So. 11, it is said: "No parol trust will be engrafted on a legal title which the instrument of conveyance makes absolute on its face, unless with the greatest caution, and where the fraud necessary to create the trust is established by clear and convincing proof."

The evidence which will authorize the court to find that a conveyance of land which is absolute in terms was in reality made upon a trust must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing. Sherman v. Sandell, 106 Cal. 373, 39 Pac. 797; Bohm v. Bohm, 9 Colo. 100, 10 Pac. 790.

A trust ex maleficio can be established only by evidence which is clear, definite, and unequivocal in its character. Ryder v. Ryder, 244 Ill. 297, 91 N. E. 451.

Before a deed absolute upon its face can be impressed with a parol trust ex maleficio the evidence must be clear, precise, and indubitable. Grove v. Case, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 125.

on account of the mortgage. Thereupon the defendant sold and conveyed the premises for the sum of $172,000. Subsequently the plaintiff brought this action, claiming that the defendant held the property conveyed to it as its trustee and for its benefit, and asking judgment that he account for what he had received on the sale.

Messrs. Moses Shire and Vernon Cole, for appellant:

The court committed reversible error in excluding the proof of what the trustees, at the conclusion of the meeting, stated to Herbert J. Norton.

Tilson v. Terwilliger, 56 N. Y. 273; Waldele v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 95 N. Y. 283, 47 Am. Rep. 41; Holcomb v. Campbell, 118 N. Y. 52, 22 N. E. 1107; 1 Greenl. Ev. 13th ed. § 108, 129-131.

One trustee of a corporation may deal with the corporation. The rest of the board of trustees may treat with him as with a stranger; if the deal is open and above-board, and no undue advantage is taken, the transaction is entirely valid.

Gamble v. Queens County Water Co. 123 N. Y. 91, 9 L.R.A. 527, 25 N. E. 201; Barr v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 265, 26 N. E. 145; Strobel v. Brownell, 16 Misc. 660, 40 N. Y. Supp. 702; Barr v. Pittsburgh Plate-Glass Co. 6 C. C. A. 260, 17 U. S. App. 124, 57 Fed. 86; Angell & A. Priv. Corp. § 233; Ely v. Sprague, Clarke, Ch. 351; Allen v. Gillette, 127 U. S. 589, 32 L. ed. 271, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1331;

b. Actual fraud.

1. In general.

There must be something more than mere receipt of title to real estate, with a parol promise to hold it subject to a trust; there must be some interference with the owner of the property, by means of which he is induced to forego the execution by himself of his designs, and leave the execution to the party deluding him by a false promise, and through such false promise obtaining a title to the property. Lantry v. Lantry, 51 Ill. 459, 2 Am. Rep. 310.

In order to take the case out of the statute and establish a trust ex maleficio, the transaction by means of which the ownership of the property is obtained must be in fact a scheme of actual deceit, in other words, there must be an element of positive fraud accompanying the promise and by means of which the acquisition of the legal title is wrongfully consummated. Davis v. Stambaugh, 163 Ill. 557, 43 N. E. 170.

The frauds which will raise a constructive trust against the grantee are those which induce the conveyance, or which consist in a refusal to execute defeasances or other instruments to witness the trust, or which secure the execution of an instrument different from the one agreed upon, and the like. McClain v. McClain, 57 Iowa, 167, 10 N. W. 333.

When it is made to appear that an innocent party has been led by fraudulent practice or deception, into parting with his property, a constructive trust arises; and notwithstanding the general rule, a court of equity will grant relief to the extent of enforcing a parol contract entered into at the time, and may otherwise by its decree protect and enforce the rights of the innocent party. Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905.

In Moseley v. Moseley, 86 Ala. 289, 5 So. 732, it is said that the rule as recognized and adopted in Alabama is that the title must be obtained by a false and fraudulent 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

promise to hold and use the same for the expressed and agreed uses and purposes, and subsequently converted to other purposes, or claimed by the grantee as his own; that mere subsequent fraud is not sufficient, but there must be fraud in the original transaction, which must be of such a character as to constitute a fraudulent contrivance for the purpose of acquiring the legal title. Where there is no fraud or imposition in acquiring the title by means of the verbal promise or agreement, equity will not enforce it in contravention of the expressed declaration of the statute.

2. When fraudulent intent inferable.

(a) Preliminary statement.

While there is complete accord in the statement of the rule, there is naturally considerable difference of opinion as to whether a fraudulent intent on the part of the grantee may be inferred from any given set of circumstances. To avoid the injustice arising from the repudiation of a parol trust, courts of equity have frequently seized upon the slightest circumstances connected with the procurement of the conveyance to avoid the operation of the statute of frauds.

(b) Failure or refusal to perform.

(1) In general.

It is well settled that neither the failure of the grantee to perform his oral promise to hold property upon trust (Smith v. Smith, 153 Ala. 504, 45 So. 168; Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689; Willis v. Robertson, 121 Iowa, 380, 96 N. W. 900; Randall v. Constans, 33 Minn. 329, 23 N. W. 530; Ryan v. Williams, 92 Minn. 506, 100 N. W. 380; Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9; Lovett v. Taylor, 54 N. J. Eq. 311, 34 Atl. 896; Avery v. Stewart, 136 N. C. 428, 68 L.R.A. 776, 48 S. E. 775; Perkins v. Cheairs, 2 Baxt. 194; Krouskop

Twin Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 593, 23 L. ed. 331, 3 Mor. Min. Rep. 688; Leavenworth County v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 134 U. S. 709, 33 L. ed. 1064, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 708.

The fact that Nathaniel W. Norton was one of the plaintiff's board of nine trustees does not impress upon the property a trust, so that the defendant was forbidden to purchase it, as he did under all the facts, with open and clear disclosures, as shown by the proofs and findings herein.

Robertson v. Bullions, 11 N. Y. 265; Gram v. Prussia Emigrated E. L. German Soc. 36 N. Y. 163; Petty v. Tooker, 21 N. Y. 267; Madison Ave. Baptist Church v. Baptist Church, 46 N. Y. 131; Landers v. Frank Street M. E. Church, 97 N. Y. 119; Wheaton v. Gates, 18 N. Y. 395.

Mr. George Clinton, for respondent:

The facts found by the court create an equitable trust in favor of the plaintiff.

Religious Corporations Law, § 5; Moore v. St. Thomas's Church, 4 Abb. N. C. 56; People ex rel. Freeman v. Hulbert, 46 N. Y. 110; 1 Parsons, Contr. 52; Gram v. Prussia Emigrated E. L. German Soc. 36 N. Y. 161; Robertson v. Bullions, 11 N. Y. 243.

The court correctly excluded the testimony offered to show what certain trustees said to defendant after the meeting of January 26, 1901.

Tilson v. Terwilliger, 56 N. Y. 273; Jex v. Board of Education, 1 Hun, 157; New York L. Ins. & T. Co. v. Beebe, 7 N. Y.

v. Krouskop, 95 Wis. 296, 70 N. W. 475), nor the breach or violation thereof (Ammonette v. Black, 73 Ark. 310, 83 S. W. 910; Spradling v. Spradling, — Ark. —, 142 S. W. 848; Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 114 Am. St. Rep. 305, 79 N. E. 58; Andrew v. Andrew, 114 Iowa, 524, 87 N. W. 494; Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905; Hedleston v. Stoner, 128 Iowa, 525, 105 N. W. 56; Harper v. Harper, 5 Bush, 176; Bullenkamp v. Bullenkamp, 34 App. Div. 193, 54 N. Y. Supp. 482, s. c. 43 App. Div. 510, 60 N. Y. Supp. 84; Parrish v. Parrish, 33 Or. 486, 54 Pac. 352; Robinson v. Robinson, 29 W. N. C. 159; Grove v. Kase, 2 Dauphin Co. Rep. 125), nor the grantee's repudiation (Patton v. Beecher, 62 Ala. 579; Willis v. Robertson, 121 Iowa, 380, 96 N. W. 900; Gaylord v. Gaylord, 150 N. C. 222, 63 S. E. 1028), or refusal to perform (Barr v. O'Donnell, 76 Cal. 469, 9 Am. St. Rep. 242, 18 Pac. 429; Verzier v. Convard, 75 Conn. 1, 52 Atl. 255; Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905; Tatge v. Tatge, 34 Minn. 272, 25 N. W. 596, 26 N. W. 121; Henderson v. Murray, 108 Minn. 76, 133 Am. St. Rep. 412, 121 N. W. 214; Weiss v. Heitkamp, 127 Mo. 23, 29 S. W. 709; Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 84 Hun, 482, 32 N. Y. Supp. 390; Watson v. Pinckney, 29 Jones & S. 188, 18 N. Y. Supp. 790; Barry v. Hill, 166 Pa. 344, 31 Atl. 126; Braun v. First German E. L. Church, 198 Pa. 152, 47 Atl. 963; Simon's Estate, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 450; Richardson v. McConaughy, 55 W. Va. 546, 47 S. E. 287; Fairchild v. Rasdall, 9 Wis. 379), is fraud; although it has been held in some instances (see Brock v. Brock, and Gregory v. Bowlsby, infra) that such failure or refusal may be taken into consideration in determining whether the promise was made with fraudulent intent.

Thus, in Brock v. Brock, 90 Ala. 86, 9 L.R.A. 287, 8 So. 11, it is said: "The mere breach of an oral agreement, standing alone, though often a moral wrong, is not sufficient to establish that fraud in procuring the title which is requisite to render the grantee or devisee a trustee ex maleficio; although the fact of such breach may, of course, be looked to, in connection with the other circumstances of the case, as sometimes constituting one of several links in a chain of facts going to prove fraud. If this were not so the statute of frauds would practically be repealed, because no case can arise in the courts under it except where such a breach is charged, other than cases of fraud, either positive or constructive."

The mere failure or refusal to perform a parol agreement, which was made in good faith, to reconvey to the grantor upon request, is not fraud. Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 4 L.R.A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162, 21 Pac. 984; Williams v. Williams, 180 Ill. 361, 54 N. E. 229.

The mere refusal of a supposed trustee to execute a parol trust, or the denial of its existence, is not such a fraud as will take the case out of the statute of frauds, and authorize a court of equity to enforce the trust. McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. D. C. 1; Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447; Davis v. Stambaugh, 163 Ill. 557, 45 N. E. 170; McClain v. McClain, 57 Iowa, 167, 10 N. W. 333.

While breach of a contract on the part of a grantee to hold the lands conveyed in trust may be considered, it is not alone sufficient to establish fraud, but there must be also some clear and explicit evidence of fraud or imposition at the time of the making of the conveyance to constitute the grantee a trustee ex maleficio. Gregory v. Bowlsby, 115 Iowa, 327, 88 N. W. 822.

A representation on the part of the grantee that if the grantor would convey to him a fee simple, he would hold in trust for the grantor, and would reconvey the same to him at any time on request, or, in case of his death, to a third person, is not such a fraudulent representation as will avoid the deed. Representations upon which fraud can be predicated must be of an existing fact, or of a fact alleged to 369; Hay v. Platt, 66 Hun, 488, 21 N. Y. Supp. 362.

Cullen, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

I am of opinion that the facts found by the trial court do not support the judgment. The foundation of the plaintiff's right to relief are the two findings: "That it was not the understanding of the trustees that the transfer to a third person should deprive the plaintiff of its real ownership of the property. That it was the understanding and intent of the trustees that the property should be conveyed to a third person to hold for the church and lease to the theater people, in order to cover up and conceal from the church members the fact that it was in reality leasing to them." There is no finding that the defendant ever agreed to hold the lands conveyed to him in trust for the plaintiff, and, on the contrary, there is an express finding, to which I shall hereafter allude, which negatives any such promise or agreement. And even had such a promise been made, it not being in writing, the promise with the two findings I have quoted would be insufficient alone to establish the trust and entitle the plaintiff to relief. Wood v. Rabe, 96 N. Y. 414, 48 Am. Rep. 640.

It is the settled law of this state that parol evidence is inadmissible to limit the effect the law attributes to the delivery of a deed to a grantee. Hamlin v. Hamlin, 192 N. Y. 164, 168, 84 N. E. 805, 806, was an exist, and not a mere promise to something afterwards. Fouty v. Fouty, 34 Ind. 433.

(2) As giving rise to inference of actual fraudulent intent.

One court has gone so far as to hold that proof of an intention not to perform at the time of making a promise is not enough to establish an actual fraudulent intent. In Tatge v. Tatge, 34 Minn. 272, 25 N. W. 596, 26 N. W. 121, an intention on the part of a grantee at the time of taking a conveyance not to perform a promise to hold the property in trust is held to be no ground for declaring a trust ex maleficio, the court saying: "The authorities are uniform that a mere refusal to perform a verbal promise, void under the statute, is no ground for relief on the ground of fraud. This is so for the manifest reason that if a party chooses to go outside of the law, and trust to the honor of another, he must take the consequence of his misplaced confidence; and, in such a case, we fail to see how it can make any difference whether the promisor did or did not at the time intend to fulfill the promise. The case is obviously different where there has been some concealment, or misrepresentation of facts or of the real nature of the transaction, or some oppression, intimidation, undue influence, or the like, by means of which a party has been deceived or entrapped into making the conveyance. But, notwithstanding certain loose remarks in some of the cases, we find no well-considered case which holds that the mere intention not to perform will, in and of itself alone, furnish a ground for relief on the ground of fraud."

But there is authority to the contrary, and, indeed, a majority of the cases appear to proceed on the contrary assumption.

Thus, in Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9, it is held that ordinarily a false representation upon which fraud may be predicated must be of an existing fact, or a fact alleged at the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

time to exist, and cannot consist of a mere promise to be performed in the future, but that if the intention not to perform the promise be shown to have existed at the time the promise was made, the promise is fraudulent.

And in Parrish v. Parrish, 33 Or. 486, 54 Pac. 352, the court said: "The essence of the fraud consists in the existence of a wrongful intent at the time to eventually appropriate the property while lending countenance to the belief in the owner that it was designed to be used for, and would finally inure to, his benefit. It differs from a promise with a purpose of complying therewith at the appointed time, and a breach thereof, for it is settled and conceded that a mere failure to fulfill the promise is not fraud, and the statute applies in such a case; but if the evil intent primarily existed, as above suggested, the transaction is fraudulent, and without the statute."

Actual fraud may be found in the fact, admitted by demurrer, that a promise by a grantee to reconvey upon request was made without any intention of performing it. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689.

In Grote v. Grote, 121 App. Div. 841, 106 N. Y. Supp. 986, where it was admitted, for the purposes of demurrer, that the grantee never intended to carry out an agreement with the grantor to give him board and lodging as long as he should require it, but made that agreement solely to induce him to convey the property to her, and that he did so convey it, believing and relying upon this promise, it was said that if these allegations should be established on the trial, a strong case could be made out, charging the grantee as a trustee ex maleficio.

And in Haigh v. Kaye, L. R. 7 Ch. 469, 41 L. J. Ch. N. S. 567, 28 L. T. N. S. 675, 20 Week. Rep. 597, where the grantor conveyed property without actual consideration, upon an oral agreement, admitted by the grantee, to hold for the grantor's bene-action by the wife to set aside a deed made by her to her husband, on the claim that she delivered the deeds "simply to help him temporarily, in case he needed the money for his business." This court said, through Gray, J.: "If we should give full effect to the plaintiff's claim, it would be to hold the delivery by her of the deeds to have been conditional, and not absolute; but that would be violative of the settled rule in this state that a delivery cannot be made to the grantee conditionally. Any oral condition accompanying the delivery in such case would be repugnant to the terms of the deed, and parol evidence to prove that there was such a condition attached to the delivery is inadmissible" (p. 188),—citing Sou- verby v. Arden, 1 Johns. Ch. 240; Worrall

v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 55 Am. Dec. 330; Wallace v. Berdell, 97 N. Y. 13; Blewitt v. Boorum, 142 N. Y. 357, 40 Am. St. Rep. 600, 37 N. E. 119. There can be no distinction as to this element between the case at bar and that cited. There it was attempted to show the title was to pass to the husband by the deed merely temporarily; here, that it was not to pass at all. As to such a claim it is said in Wallace v. Berdell, supra: "The general term in their opinion say that they are of the opinion that the evidence leads to but one conclusion; namely, that the trust deed was made for a temporary purpose only. . . . If this be the correct view of the facts, the conclusion that the deed was invalid is clearly erroneous. . . . The delivery having been fit, and to reconvey upon request, it was held that the statute of frauds would not preclude the court from decreeing a reconveyance.

If by a false and fraudulent oral promise, which he intended at the time of making it afterward to violate, the grantee induces the making of the conveyance, equity, by reason of his fraud, will fasten upon him a constructive trust in behalf of the grantor. Brown v. Doane, 86 Ga. 32, 11 L.R.A. 381, 12 S. E. 179.

A promise made without any intention of performing it is fraudulent. Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 560, 26 Pac. 367.

(c) From activity in procuring conveyance.

(1) Generally.

Perhaps the most satisfactory inference of a fraudulent intent on the part of a grantee is to be derived from his activity in procuring the conveyance; and in the instances hereinafter detailed in which equity has compelled the performance of the promise, it will be found that the grantee made some representation, or otherwise took an active part in inducing the grantor to convey.

Thus, in the absence of fraud or imposition on the part of the grantee in obtaining a conveyance, equity will not enforce an oral promise to hold for the grantor's benefit. Skahen v. Irving, 206 Ill. 597, 69 N. E. 510.

In the absence of fraud, misrepresentation, imposition, circumvention, artifice, or concealment, or abuse of confidential relations in obtaining a deed, the grantee cannot be held a trustee ex maleficio because of his failure to perform an alleged parol agreement to hold the property upon trust. Verzier v. Convard, 75 Conn. 1, 52 Atl. 255.

A complaint simply alleging a parol agreement between the parties to deeds of partition, whereby one received more than his share, to hold the land in trust, and transfer to the other when required such portion thereof as would make the parts owned by each in severality of equal value, and the violation of such agreement, but containing no allegation that the conveyance was obtained by fraud or deceit, does not establish a case for the intervention of equity. Barr v. O'Donnell, 76 Cal. 469, 9 Am. St. Rep. 242, 18 Pac. 429.

Where it appears that the deed in question was made by a husband to his wife without any suggestion or procurement whatever on her part, and during a period of separation between them occasioned by his drunken habits, that she at first refused to accept the deed, and persisted in declining to do so, until she finally yielded to the persuasion of her father and the further solicitations of the husband, there is not satisfactory proof that at the time the deed was accepted the wife entertained any fraudulent purpose not to perform the alleged oral promise to reconvey should the grantor reform his intemperate habits, and return to live with her. Brock v. Brock, 90 Ala. 86, 9 L.R.A. 287, 8 So. 11.

And equity will not raise a trust ex maleficio:

—where a conveyance was made by the grantor of his own motion and without any solicitation, undue influence, or fraud upon the part of the grantee, though at the time the grantor expressed confidence that the grantee would do what was right. Doran v. Doran, 99 Cal. 311, 33 Pac. 929.

—where there was no evidence to show that the grantee ever uttered a word to induce the conveyance to himself, or to prevent a conveyance from the grantor to the person claiming to be the beneficiary of a parol promise. Lantry v. Lantry, 51 Ill. 459, 2 Am. Rep. 310.

—where the evidence showed only that the grantee took without consideration, and it was not shown that he ever asserted title in himself, or did any act in contravention of the alleged agreement to hold for another. Barry v. Hill, 166 Pa. 344, 31 Atl. 126.

to the grantee himself, neither party would have been permitted to show, for the purpose of defeating the rights of the cestui que trustent, that the delivery was with intent that the deed should not take effect, or that it should not take effect unless again delivered, or unless the grantor should afterward determine that it should take effect, or upon any other contingency whatever, contrary to the terms of the instrument." 97 N. Y. 24. Therefore, to uphold the judgment below some other element must be established than those I have referred to. Doubtless, a relation of confidence between the parties would be sufficient had the defendant made a promise to hold the lands in trust (Wood v. Rabe, supra), and it is claimed that such relation was established by the fact that the defendant was the law partner of his brother, Nathaniel W. Norton, who was one of the trustees. Now, while the defendant could not retain any advantage he might gain over the plaintiff by virtue of this relation, still the relation did not necessarily preclude him from becoming a purchaser of the property, and so the trial court found. At the time the trustees of the plaintiff voted to sell and convey the property to the defendant, they also authorized the execution of an agreement with the defendant as to his responsibilities. The agreement recited the conveyance for the sum of $120,000, represented by a mortgage of $60,000 then on the property, and a further mortgage of $60,000 to be given to the plaintiff; that

But equity will raise a trust ex maleficio:

—where the execution of a conveyance was induced by a promise that it should not go into effect or be filed for record until approved by the grantor's attorneys, and should be destroyed if not so approved, which promise was made by the grantee with a fraudulent intention of not complying therewith. Smith v. Smith, 153 Ala. 504, 45 So. 168;

—where a husband intending to convey property to his wife, was induced by a friend to convey the property to him in order to avoid any suspicion that the transfer was made to defraud creditors, the friend representing that he would hold the property in trust for the wife, or would convey it to her. Fischbeck v. Gross, 112 Ill. 208;

—where the party to whom an absolute deed is made obtains the execution and delivery thereof to himself by fraud and imposition upon the grantors, on a parol promise to hold the land in trust for them. Williams v. Williams, 180 Ill. 361, 54 N. E. 229;

—where an uncle conveyed to a niece who had acquired great influence over him, at her suggestion, and in reliance upon her promise to hold for his benefit, and to reconvey on request. Hansen v. Barthelsen, 19 Neb. 433, 27 N. W. 423;

—where a mortgagor executed a power of sale to the mortgagee upon the understanding that he would settle a portion of the property for the use of the mortgagor's wife. Blount v. Carroway, 67 N. C. 396.

And in Booth v. Turler, L. R. 16 Eq. 183, 21 Week. Rep. 721, where one desirous of disposing of his interest in property held under an agreement for a lease assigned the agreement to a purchaser, with the oral understanding that certain stables on the premises should be held in trust for him, and made a reduction in the purchase price upon that understanding and agreement, and the plaintiff remained in possession without the payment of rent or 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) other consideration, it was held that the statute of frauds had no application.

Where a widow, in order to relieve certain real estate descending to her from her first husband from the operation of a statute limiting her right to convey the same during a second contemplated marriage, and being induced by virtue of the intimate and confidential relations existing between her and her intended husband's family to rely on the integrity and good faith of the grantee, conveyed such realty to the wife of the brother of her intended husband, relying upon the verbal agreement of the latter to reconvey it to her after the marriage had taken place, equity will enforce the promise. Catalini v. Catalini, 124 Ind. 54, 19 Am. St. Rep. 73, 24 N. E. 375. This case has been referred to in subsequent decisions by the same court as an extreme case, and as resting largely upon the consideration that the person seeking to enforce the trust was not in the position of a mere volunteer.

Although the motive for the conveyance has not the slightest bearing on the questions upon which the decisions turn, the desirability of bringing into juxtaposition cases the circumstances of which are similar has suggested the following arrangement, based on the character of the transaction involved:

(2) Instances where motive of grantor was to avoid family troubles.

In several instances the motive actuating the grantor arose out of family troubles.

Equity will not raise a constructive trust:

—where a conveyance was made at the instance of the grantor, to aid him in freeing his land from any dower claim or right of his wife, with whom he was then having trouble, and to save the property for his grandchildren by a former wife, and it did not appear that the grantee induced the making of the conveyance by there was a proposition from one Kernan and others to take a lease of the property for the period of five years, and to pay as rent, $4,000 a year quarterly, in advance, as well as all taxes and assessments, and to keep the buildings insured for a sum not less than $25,000, loss payable to mortgagee; that the lessees proposed to make certain improvements upon the property. It then contained an agreement by the defendant that he would, so far as he was able, safeguard "himself and mortgagees" by seeing to it that the contracts for such improvements were carried out, and that the improvements were paid for by the lessees; that the work done in improvements should not interfere with the building laws of the city, and that the property should not be wasted or made of less value by reason of any improvements being begun and then abandoned, which should be provided for either by giving a bond or deposit by James L. Kernan and others to the extent of the costs of the proposed improvements, or in some other manner. It further provided that if the lease contemplated should not be made, the defendant should reconvey the property to the plaintiff, and take a discharge of his mortgage. Lastly, the defendant agreed to collect the rents under the lease as the same should become due, and immediately pay over the same to the plaintiff, "to the extent of $4,000 yearly," which rent should be in lieu of interest upon the mortgage debt upon said property; and the defendant was not to be fraud or promise to execute some instrument showing the trust character of the conveyance. Willis v. Robertson, 121 Iowa, 380, 96 N. W. 900;

—where the grantor, having some trouble with his wife, in order to place his property so that she could establish no claim upon it in case of litigation, had a deed prepared and made it over to his brother, with the understanding and agreement that it should be reconveyed on demand. Gaylord v. Gaylord, 150 N. C. 222, 63 S. E. 1028;

—where the grantor conveyed property to a sister to hold for him so as to protect it from any claim of his wife, who was separated from him, there being neither fraud nor mistake in the transaction. Holtheide v. Smith, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 2535, 74 S. W. 689.

(3) Instances where anticipated danger of litigation or prosecution influenced grantor.

Sometimes an anticipated danger of litigation or criminal prosecution has influenced the conveyance.

It has been held that there is no constructive trust:

—where the grantor, at the suggestion of his family that he should put his property out of his hands until an anticipated danger of litigation should have passed, but fully understanding at the time he executed the conveyance that, in case of a refusal of the grantee to reconvey, he would be without remedy, conveyed to his mother, with the understanding that, when it should become safe to do so, she should reconvey to him. Tatge v. Tatge, 34 Minn. 272, 25 N. W. 596, 26 N. W. 121;

—where the grantor, being apprehensive of arrest and prosecution, and desirous so to arrange his affairs that he might escape from the country, conveyed certain realty upon his own motion and without any solicitation or instigation on the part of the grantee, to his brother, without consideration, upon his agreement to hold the property in trust for the use and benefit of the grantor and his heirs. Fairchild v. Rasdall, 9 Wis. 379.

But a constructive trust has been held to exist:

—where the grantee procured land to be conveyed to her without consideration, by representing that it was liable to seizure for the debts of a corporation in which the grantor was a stockholder, and that if the grantor would so convey said premises, she would, upon demand, reconvey to him. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 7 Cal. App. 634, 95 Pac. 659;

—where the grantee obtained the conveyance without consideration by representing to the grantor and his wife that there was danger of the property being levied upon by a creditor, and that if they would deed it to him he would keep it until their son was of age, and convey it to him. Miller v. Pearce, 6 Watts & S. 97;

—where the grantor, under an unfounded apprehension of criminal prosecution, conveyed to another upon a parole agreement to retransfer when the difficulty should have passed, especially where the grantor had been allowed to remain in possession of the property, and had paid off the mortgage thereon in the meantime. Davies v. Otty, 35 Beav. 208, 5 New Reports, 391, 34 L. J. Ch. N. S. 252, 12 L. T. N. S. 789, 13 Week. Rep. 484;

—where, at the instance of the grantee, and under the apprehension that the property would be seized and sold in satisfaction of the fine for an offense for which the grantor was under indictment, a conveyance was made to a relative, without consideration, upon an oral agreement to reconvey on demand. Cordova v. Lee, — Tex. —, 14 S. W. 208.

A complaint alleging that the grantor, induced by the grantee's promises, representations, and pretenses that he would manage the grantor's affairs so as to relieve him of his then-present embarrassment, and would retransfer the property to him, executed and delivered a deed of personally obligated to pay more moneys than he had received. As to this agreement, the special term expressly found "that at the meeting of the trustees held on the 26th of January, 1901, Nathaniel W. Norton informed the trustees that his brother would take the property on the terms mentioned in said contract, and upon no other terms; that he had no money to invest in the property, and could not pay anything for carrying it during the leasehold period." This finding of the trial court necessarily excludes any promise, agreement, or assent on the part of the defendant to anything except that which is provided for in the written agreement. He distinctly defines his position and the terms on which he would accept the conveyance to the trustees of the plaintiff, and with full knowledge of those terms and conditions the trustees directed the conveyance to him, and entered into the agreement the defendant proposed. It is to be noted that the agreement in one contingency, and only in one contingency, provides for a reconveyance of the property; that is, in case the proposed lease should not be executed; and the agreement also provides that the defendant shall safeguard not only the plaintiff, but himself, by seeing that the lessees pay for the improvements they may make in the property. In the face of this agreement and the findings of the court as to it, it seems to me idle to claim that the property was impressed in the hands of the defendant with any trust in his property, but that the grantee knew his representations to be false and untrue, and that the same were made with intent to deceive and defraud, sets forth matters constituting a cause of action. Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 560, 26 Pac. 367.

(4) Instances where conveyance was intended to protect grantor's family.

In other instances the conveyance has been made with the idea of protecting the grantor or his family from the consequences of his improvidence.

The courts have held no constructive trust to exist in the following instances:

—where a son of unsteady habits conveyed to his mother, to enable her to manage his property for him, there being no fraud or imposition in the transaction. Horne v. Higgins, 76 Miss. 813, 25 So. 489;

—where the grantor was induced to deed the property to his mother to preserve it from the consequences of his improvidence, there being no deceit, false representation, or mistake in the transaction. Lovell v. Taylor, 54 N. J. Eq. 311, 34 Atl. 896;

—where a brother transferred to a sister his interest in his father's estate, to preserve it for his family against his creditors, upon his own suggestion, and without any undue influence, persuasion, or misrepresentation on the part of the grantee. Simon's Estate, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 450;

—where the grantor conveyed property to a sister residing in his family, for the purpose of protecting his family against the consequences of his improvidence, there being no fraud, mistake, or contrivance. Salisbury v. Clarke, 61 Vt. 453, 17 Atl. 135;

—where the grantor, at the suggestion and on the persuasion of her husband, who had become insolvent, and who was apprehensive that his creditors would attempt to subject the premises to the payment of his debts, conveyed them to an inmate of her household, who for several years had been received into and treated as a member of her family, and was a trusted confidential friend, without consideration, upon his promise that he would hold for her use, and on request would reconvey to her, or surrender the conveyance to be canceled. Patton v. Beecher, 62 Ala. 579;

—where one who had inherited property from her father, at the suggestion of the administrator of her father's estate, who supposed that a conveyance of the estate to a third person would be effectual to coerce a favorable settlement of a claim against his decedent as surety on a bond, conveyed to a sister, who took no part in the scheme other than to receive the conveyance. Moore v. Jordan, 65 Miss. 229, 7 Am. St. Rep. 641, 3 So. 737.

Where there was no evidence that a conveyance from a brother to a sister was solicited or induced by her, equity will not enforce against her heirs an oral promise to hold in trust for the grantor. Biggins v. Biggins, 133 Ill. 211, 24 N. E. 516.

For another instance in which the conveyance was made by the grantor with the idea of protecting himself from threatened embarrassments, but in which a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee was an element, see Rozell v. Vansyckle, 11 Wash. 79, 39 Pac. 270, infra, under heading, "Constructive Fraud."

In the group of cases immediately following, the conveyance was in the nature of a family arrangement.

(5) Instances where conveyance was in nature of family arrangement.

In the absence of an averment of undue influence arising out of confidential relations, or other circumstances of fraud between the parties, to constitute the grantee a trustee ex maleficio a bill averring that property was conveyed to the grantee on the trust and confidence that the grantee would hold it for the grantor's children, and would at a later time execute favor of the plaintiff, or that the defendant's obligations and relations to the property were anywise different from those expressed in the conveyance and agreement. If there is any inconsistency between the finding quoted and the other findings made by the trial court, the appellant is, under the settled rules of practice, entitled to the benefit of the one most favorable to him.

I think also that the plaintiff, by its subsequent conduct, ratified and confirmed the conveyance to the defendant. The trial court found that in April, 1906, five years after the transaction, and within a few days before the expiration of the lease to the theater company, the defendant wrote to the trustees of the plaintiff, offering to pay $20,000 on the plaintiff's mortgage, and asking, in consideration thereof, that the remainder be allowed to stand for four years, $5,000 to be paid each year on the principal, together with interest; that the trustees adopted a resolution that the request of the defendant be complied with, and thereupon the defendant paid to the plaintiff the sum of $20,000. It is very probably true that, no new consideration being advanced; the payment by the defendant of $20,000, already due on the mortgage, was not a sufficient consideration for its extension, and the plaintiff might have insisted on the immediate payment of the balance, despite of its receipt of the $20,000 on the condition stated. But the receipt of the money seems to me plainly an acknowledgment that the deed given by the a deed to them, does not state a case for equitable relief. Tillman v. Kifer, 166 Ala. 403, 52 So. 309.

Where property was conveyed by the grantor to his intended wife, in consideration of marriage, an oral agreement on her part that she would take only a life estate therein, and that after her death it should go to his children, even if established by evidence, is not enforceable in equity. Ryder v. Ryder, 244 Ill. 297, 91 N. E. 451.

Where the grantor conveyed and to his intended wife upon a verbal agreement that she should hold it in trust for both of them, equity will not enforce the agreement. Mescall v. Tully, 91 Ind. 96.

In the absence of fraud, deceit, or misrepresentation of any kind in obtaining a deed, equity will not enforce an alleged parol promise by a wife to hold property conveyed to her by her husband in trust for him. McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. D. C. 1.

Where a husband procured title to property purchased by him to be made to his wife, with the understanding between them that when he desired she would convey to him, equity will not enforce the promise. Johnston v. Johnston, 138 Ill. 385, 27 N. E. 930.

Where no fraudulent representations were made, nor any undue means resorted to to influence the grantor to make a conveyance to his wife, but the matter was talked over among the parties, and the grantor acted of his own free will and accord, without any particular persuasion, equity will not enforce an oral promise to hold for the grantor's benefit. Moore v. Horsley, 156 Ill. 36, 40 N. E. 323.

Where by a voluntary conveyance, untainted with fraud, and unaffected by any written declaration of trust, a grantor conveyed property to his wife, she cannot be held trustee thereof, although the grantor made the conveyance to preserve and protect his home, and she accepted it to assist him, and joined in carrying his 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

desire into execution. Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 168 Mass. 488, 47 N. E. 431.

In the absence of evidence to show that a conveyance was obtained from a husband by his wife through undue influence or fraudulent misrepresentation, she will not be held a trustee ex maleficio for the benefit of their children. Scott v. Harris, 113 Ill. 447.

Where a husband agreed with his wife that the lands conveyed by him to her should be held in trust for the benefit of their children, the alleged trust cannot be enforced. Moran v. Somes, 154 Mass. 200, 28 N. E. 152.

But where a wife procures a conveyance of lands from her husband by promising to make a will in his favor, and does so with a fraudulent intent not to comply with her promise, the fraud will vitiate the transaction, and equity in such case will declare the grantee to be a trustee ex maleficio; and the conduct of the wife after the execution of the deed may be looked to as an aid in determining what her intention was when she obtained the deed. Manning v. Pippen, 86 Ala. 357, 11 Am. St. Rep. 46, 5 So. 572.

Where no fraud was practised on a mother to induce her to convey land to one of her sons, who agreed to hold it for her benefit during her life, and upon her death upon a secret trust for a brother, there is no constructive trust. Brown v. Brown, 66 Conn. 493, 34 Atl. 490.

But where a mother was induced to convey property to a son in trust for his brother, on account of the latter's dissipated habits, without other consideration than the parol understanding that he would reconvey to his brother when he should become temperate, without an intention on the part of the grantee to perform his promise, but with the intention of claiming and holding absolutely for himself, equity will declare him a trustee. Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268, 26 Pac. 599.

Where the grantor, then about to be plaintiff was effective to pass the title to the defendant, and that the title was then in him. On no other possible theory could the plaintiff, under the facts then known to it, have been entitled to the money. If the defendant held title simply as the trustee or dummy of the plaintiff, it was not entitled to money from him unless, under its instructions, he had sold the property on its behalf, of which there is no finding, and, on the contrary, the plaintiff claims to have been ignorant at the time of any sale.

Nor am I disposed to look upon the transaction as so unconscionable on the part of the defendant, or prejudicial to the plaintiff, as is contended. The members of the church empowered the trustees to sell the property, the use of which the church no longer required. No fraud was practised upon them. The trustees had made diligent effort in that behalf and failed. The property was producing no income, and carrying it was a severe burden upon the resources of the church. Proposals were made to lease it for the purpose of a theater, but the trustees, while they were not unwilling that it should be occupied for that purpose, were unwilling that the church should lease it for such a use, fearing dissatisfaction on the part of some of the church members. Thereupon the scheme was planned which was subsequently carried through, and which resulted in the property being used as a theater. In the adoption of this plan the trustees exhibited married and to go to the state of Texas, thinking she might never return to live at the old home, conveyed her interest therein to her brother, with the understanding and agreement that if she never returned, he was to own and hold the land, but if she returned from Texas to live at the old home, he was to give up the land and deed to her, equity will not enforce the promise. Stevenson v. Crapnell, 114 Ill. 19, 28 N. E. 379.

Where one of the members of a family in whose name title had been taken to the premises upon which they all lived, working together to earn the purchase price, notified the family that he expected soon to be married, whereupon it was insisted that some arrangement should be made to safeguard the rights of the parties, and the land was conveyed to their mother, under an agreement that she should hold it until her death, when it should be equally divided among the children, equity will not enforce the promise. Champlin v. Champlin, 136 Ill. 309, 29 Am. St. Rep. 323, 26 N. E. 526.

Where the children of a decedent, relying on the verbal promise of one of them to convey back the lands when his father's estate was settled, or pay for the same, voluntarily conveyed their interests in the land to him, no trust arose. Mayfield v. Forsyth, 164 Ill. 32, 45 N. E. 403.

But a petition stating that at the request of their father, plaintiffs met him at the home of a son-in-law; that the father then and there requested them to deed to him their interest in the realty left by their deceased mother, in order that he might use and farm the land to better advantage; and that he then and there verbally agreed that he would hold the land, would not sell or dispose of the same, and that the net proceeds and accumulations should and would descend to them at his death; that, believing in such promises, they executed a deed to him without consideration; that the father did not intend to carry out the arrangement or agreement on his part, but made the representations and agreement for the sole purpose of cheating and defrauding them out of their interest in the land of their deceased mother,—recites facts showing a constructive trust in favor of the grantors. Gregory v. Bowlby, 115 Iowa, 327, 88 N. W. 822.

Where one who had become pecuniarily embarrassed and intemperate, in pursuance of a verbal agreement between and among himself, his wife, his brother-in-law, and his father, the two last named being sureties on a bond given by him, that the brother-in-law should pay certain of his debts, in consideration for which he was to convey to the brother-in-law certain land, a portion of which was to be reconveyed to the grantor's wife, did so convey, equity will enforce the agreement. Teague v. Fowler, 56 Ind. 569.

Where a grantee, the mother of her immediate grantor, who acted merely as a conduit for title, expressed an intention that at some future time she would convey the land to the grantor as a provision for him, there is no constructive trust. Henninger v. McGuire, 146 Iowa, 270, 125 N. W. 180.

For other instances in which the conveyance was made as a family arrangement, but in which a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee was an element, see Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689; Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171; Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 Pac. 430; Larmon v. Knight, 140 Ill. 232, 33 Am. St. Rep. 229, 29 N. E. 1116, 30 N. E. 318; Ruhe v. Ruhe, 113 Md. 595, 77 Atl. 797; Thompson v. White, 1 Dall. 424, 1 L. ed. 206, 1 Am. Dec. 252; Bowler v. Curler, 21 Nev. 158, 37 Am. St. Rep. 501, 26 Pac. 226; Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 145 N. Y. 313, 39 N. E. 1067; Foote v. Foote, 59 Barb. 258; Hanson v. Svarverud, 18 N. D. 550, 120 S. W. 550, fully set forth infra, under the heading, "Constructive fraud."

some moral cowardice, but committed no fraud. The plan was to convey the property to someone who would take it at its full value, the purchase money to be secured by a mortgage on the land, but without personal liability of the grantee. He was to make the lease to the theater. If the negotiations for the lease failed, the property was to be reconveyed to the church. If the lease was made, the grantee was to pay, on account of the interest on the mortgage, only the amount of rent he might receive. By this arrangement the plaintiff was no worse off than it was before, for if there was no lease, the property was reconveyed. If there was a lease, the plaintiff would get just what it was willing to receive, had the trustees had the moral courage to rent the property for a theater. The defendant became personally liable for the rent he might receive, and, if he failed to pay it, the mortgage to the plaintiff, which ran only for a year, could be immediately foreclosed. What the plaintiff undoubtedly did lose was the chance of the appreciation in the value of the property. On the other hand, the plaintiff got the defendant's obligation to collect the rent, look after the property, to care and superintend the improvements, and so arrange that there should be no charge against the property for the cost of such improvements

(6) Instances in which conveyance was by way of advancement of child.

Sometimes the question under discussion has arisen in relation to a conveyance to a son-in-law by way of an advancement to the grantor's daughter.

Where a woman's father made a conveyance to her husband as an advance to her, there being no fraud in the transaction, there is no constructive trust. Meredith v. Meredith, 150 Ind. 299, 50 N. E. 29; Acker v. Priest, 92 Iowa, 610, 61 N. W. 235; Braden v. Workman, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 224, 1 Atl. 655.

Nor will equity raise a trust in a case where a father wished to make an advance to his daughter, but executed a deed to her husband, who, however, made no promise to hold it for his wife's benefit to induce the execution, but merely expressed an intention that it should be for her, and added "that if he did not get it in his own name, he did not want it at all." Dilts v. Stewart, 1 Sadler (Pa.) 230, 1 Atl. 587.

(7) Instances where property conveyed to facilitate its management.

In the following instances property was conveyed in order to facilitate the grantee's management of it.

It has been held that no trust eo maleficio will be declared:

—where a wife voluntarily conveyed property to her husband without consideration, to enable him to manage her business for her. Stubbings v. Stubbings, 248 Ill. 406, 94 N. E. 54;

—where at the instance of the grantor, her brother left his home in a foreign state upon an agreement that her farm should be conveyed to his wife, that he should move upon the farm, furnish the grantor with a home, and keep the farm, if it could be saved from the debts and encumbrances resulting from the grantor's improvidence. McHenry v. McHenry, 248 Ill. 506, 94 N. E. 84;

—where one going out of the state, and wishing to leave his business in the hands of a son-in-law, conveyed the property to of an agent, solicited one to become his agent, and conveyed land to him to enable him to sell it and give a deed for it. Morrall v. Waterson, 7 Kan. 199;

—where the grantor conveyed his interest in certain property to his sister, who was his cotenant thereof, with a full understanding of the consequences of his act, to avoid the annoyance in the management of the property incident to having the title standing in the name of both, relying upon her oral agreement to hold it in trust for him, there being no fiduciary relation between the parties or undue advantage taken. Hutchinson v. Hutchinson, 84 Hun, 482, 32 N. Y. Supp. 390;

—where the grantor conveyed to his father-in-law, a man of considerable influence in the locality, in order that he might use his influence in opposition to the extension of a street across the property, and upon his verbal promise to reconvey, and the father-in-law died before so doing. Slocum v. Wooley, 43 N. J. Eq. 451, 11 Atl. 264;

—where no deception was employed by the grantee, who accepted an absolute conveyance of the property, made for the express purpose of enabling him to make sales, pay off an indebtedness, and if possible, save something out of the proceeds for the grantor. Braun v. First German E. L. Church, 198 Pa. 152, 47 Atl. 963;

—where the grantor, without accident, or mistake or fraud on the part of the grantee in procuring the conveyance, deeded property to her son for the purpose of enabling him to defend the title against a threatened suit, with the understanding that he would hold it for her benefit. Jones v. Van Doren, 18 Fed. 618.

But where an illiterate grantor executed a conveyance to her brother for the purpose of prosecuting certain trespassers, under a verbal promise to reconvey as soon as the purpose for which the deed was given should be accomplished, there is a constructive trust. Lee v. Lee, 11 Rich. Eq. 574.

And where the grantee fraudulently, by false representations that he would faith-by the failure of the lessees themselves to pay therefor. For these services the defendant could not recover any compensation from the plaintiff. The only inducement for him to do this work and assume the obligations was the chance that he might make a profit on the sale of the property, and it was doubtless due to the efforts of himself and Luther, with whom the court found he agreed to divide the profits, that a profit was finally realized. Often an option is given on real estate for a nominal consideration, in the belief or hope that the party to whom it is given may be able to effect a sale where the owner had been unable to do so. I am by no means cerfully act as agent of the grantor, and with the fraudulent intent and design of retaining the land as his own, induced the grantor, who was about to enter the military service of the United States, and desired before doing so to make some provision for payment of his debts, to convey to him, with the parol understanding and agreement that he would sell a sufficient amount to pay the debts, and would reconvey the balance, equity will raise a constructive trust. Newell v. Newell, 14 Kan. 202.

So, also, where the grantee acted in bad faith and fraudulently in inducing the grantor, who was about to enter the military agreement that if he would do so he would furnish bail for the grantor, who was under arrest, and upon his appearance and compliance with the bail bond, would reconvey, to leave the deed in his hands during his imprisonment, and permit him, as agent or trustee, to have charge of all his business, representing that he would account to the grantor upon his release, and would reconvey to him the property, equity will raise a trust ex maleficio. Jasper v. Hazen, 1 N. D. 75, 44 N. W. 1018.

For other instances in which the conveyance was made with the idea of enabling the grantee to manage the property for the grantor's benefit, but in which a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee was an element, see Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 Pac. 143; Brophy v. Lawler, 107 Ill. 284; Giffen v. Taylor, 139 Ind. 573, 37 N. E. 392; Bullenkamp v. Bullenkamp, 43 App. Div. 510, 60 N. Y. Supp. 84; Parrish v. Parrish, 33 Or. 486, 54 Pac. 352, fully set forth infra, under the heading "Constructive fraud."

(8) Instances where conveyance was in nature of testamentary disposition.

It frequently happens that the motive actuating the conveyance gives it somewhat the character of a testamentary disposition.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

tain that, taking the transaction between the parties solely as it appears on the face of the instruments executed by them, the transaction was not a beneficial one to the plaintiff, and did not enable it to make a sale that by its own efforts it would have been unable to effect.

The judgment should be reversed, and new trial granted; costs to abide event.

Gray, J., dissenting:

I vote for the affirmance of the judgment. The case differs from that of Hamlin v. Hamlin, 192 N. Y. 164, 84 N. E. 805, where it was sought to prove that a deed had been conditionally delivered. Here, that the de-

Equity will not enforce the grantee's promise:

—where a conveyance was made without any solicitation on the part of the grantee, who verbally promised to hold the property in trust to sell, and from the proceeds to pay legacies named in the grantor's will. Adams v. Adams, 79 Ill. 517;

—where a husband, in anticipation of an early death, voluntarily conveyed lands to his wife, who promised to carry out his wishes with regard to them. Davis v. Stambaugh, 163 Ill. 557, 43 N. E. 170;

—where the grantor, being ill, and desiring to make a distribution of property among her children, and to save the expense of guardianship for one of them who was a minor, conveyed property to a daughter, who orally agreed to convey a one-half interest therein to her brother, on his request, after he should become of age, but who was not shown to have used any undue influence or fraud in procuring the conveyance. Peterson v. Boswell, 137 Ind. 211, 36 N. E. 845;

—where, in the absence of fraud on the part of the grantee, the grantor, being very sick and expecting to live but a short time, conveyed property to his daughter without any consideration, with the understanding between them that the conveyance was made in order that the daughter might have the property at the grantor's decease, and that if the grantor recovered and wanted the property back the daughter would reconvey. Wentworth v. Shibbes, 89 Me. 167, 36 Atl. 108.

On the other hand, a constructive trust has been held to exist:

—where a grantee, after ascertaining that his old and infirm mother intends to devise property to a grandson, advises her that the best way to accomplish such a purpose is to convey the land to him, he intending at the time to dispose of it in a different way. Ammonette v. Black, 73 Ark. 310, 83 S. W. 910;

—where the grantee, who was the confidential adviser of the grantor, persuaded the grantor, who desired to make a final disposition of her property so that it should livery of the deed was absolute is not disputed. The claim of the plaintiff is that the conveyance was upon trust, and that the defendant must account for his acts as its trustee. It was found "that the defendant knew that the plaintiff's trustees, in conveying the property to him, did so simply for the purpose that he might hold the same for plaintiff's benefit and lease it to the theater people." This finding has been unanimously affirmed, and is conclusive as to the nature of the defendant's title.

Haight, Werner, and Willard Bartlett, JJ., concur with Cullen, Ch. J.; Vann and Chase, JJ., concur with Gray, J.

go at her death to certain nephews and nieces, not to make a will, but to execute an absolute deed to him, by leading her to believe that he would carry out her desire and intention concerning the property. Aldrich v. Hassinger, 13 Haw. 138;

—where a father, wishing to make some arrangement whereby certain realty would become the property of his two daughters after his death, at first requested his attorney to take title in his name and hold it for them, and, upon the attorney's declining to do so, thereafter conveyed it to a son, with the understanding that he should deed it to his sisters after the father's death. Hilt v. Simpson, 230 Ill. 170, 82 N. E. 588;

—where a mother, ill in bed, at the solicitation of her children, conveyed without consideration her property to one of them, who had the confidence of all, upon his agreeing to hold it for the benefit of all, to avoid the expense of distributing it through the courts. Stahl v. Stahl, 214 Ill. 131, 68 L.R.A. 617, 105 Am. St. Rep. 101, 73 N. E. 319, 2 Ann. Cas. 774;

—where a mother, during her last illness, believing that she would not recover, conveyed all of her real estate to her husband, at his request, and upon his oral promise to devise said real estate to their demented child, and care for him during the father's natural life. Schneringer v. Schneringer, 81 Neb. 661, 116 N. W. 491;

—where a wife prevailed upon her husband, who was fatally ill, to convey certain of his property to her by promising to make a certain disposition thereof among his heirs at law, and wilfully failed to make such disposition. Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9;

In Becker v. Schwerdtle, 141 Cal. 386, 74 Pac. 1029, it was held that the allegations of a complaint setting forth that the plaintiff and defendant were mother and son, that the most confidential relations always existed between them, that while very ill, and believing that she had but a few days to live, and placing every trust and confidence in the defendant, and desiring him to have all her property on her death, and without seeking or obtaining advice from any person, the mother delivered a deed of all her property to her son, stating to him at the time that in case of her recovery she would expect him to pay her $20 per month for her support, that defendant did not say whether or not he would comply with said request, but, having great trust and confidence, she believed he would comply with it, and that since her recovery he has refused to pay her the said $20 per month, and that when the deed was delivered the defendant did not intend to comply with her request, but, by accepting the deed and by his silence, fraudulently induced her to believe that her request would be complied with,—were sufficient to warrant the interposition of a court of equity.

Where a wife to whom property was conveyed by her husband's mother represented to her that she was without a relative in the world, and that if she should die all her property would go to her husband, it was held that the trial court would have been justified in finding a trust ex maleficio. Luse v. Reed, 63 Minn. 5, 65. N. W. 91.

For other instances in which the conveyance was made as a mode of effectuating a desired disposition of property after the grantor's death, but in which a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee was an element, see Kimball v. Tripp, 136 Cal. 631, 69 Pac. 428; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 Pac. 506; Fisk's Appeal, 81 Conn. 433, 71 Atl. 559; Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 114 Am. St. Rep. 305, 79 N. E. 58; Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905; McClellan v. Grant, 83 App. Div. 599, 82 N. Y. Supp. 208, affirmed without opinion in 181 N. Y. 581, 74 N. E. 1119; Lang v. Lang, 131 N. Y. Supp. 891; Ahrens v. Jones, 169 N. Y. 555, 88 Am. St. Rep. 620, 62 N. E. 666, fully set forth infra, under the heading, "Constructive fraud."

(9) Instances in which conveyance was by way of security.

In some cases the question under discussion has arisen in relation to conveyances made by way of security.

Where a mortgagee quitclaimed to the mortgagee, in reliance on an oral agreement that the property would be reconveyed upon payment of the indebtedness, there is no constructive trust. Donaldson v. Empire Loan & Invest. Co. 130 Iowa, 467, 106 N. W. 192.

But where a creditor induced his debtor to convey to him realty worth much more than the debt, at a time when a large part of the debt had already been discharged by money then in the creditor's hands, which was unknown to the debtor, upon an oral promise to reconvey upon payment of the debt, equity will constitute him a trustee ex maleficio. Goodwin v. McMinn, 193 Pa. 646, 74 Am. St. Rep. 703, 44 Atl. 1094.

And where the grantee obtained a deed to be made to him under an agreement and promise on his part that he would sell the land, and use the proceeds of the sale in paying off the grantor's debts, equity will enforce the promise. Diffie v. Thompson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 90 S. W. 193.

Where a mortgagee obtained an absolute deed of the mortgaged property by representing that if the owner and her husband would make him a deed of the land, absolute on its face, he would endeavor to sell the land, or a part of it, at private sale, at its highest market value, and, after satisfying his claim, would pay over the remainder of the money, or reconvey the remainder of the land unsold after satisfaction of the debt; and that he was a shrewd business man and a man of means, and could get a better price for the land than the owner or her husband; and the grantor, fearing that, as the undertaking was to be by parol, it would not be binding, objected to it, and at first declined to sign a deed, but was prevailed upon by the grantee to go with him to a lawyer's office, who, upon hearing of the proposed arrangement, pronounced it as binding as if reduced to writing and signed by the grantee, equity will enforce the promise. Clark v. Haney, 62 Tex. 511, 50 Am. Rep. 536.

Where a deed was procured without consideration by the grantee's agreement to raise money on the land of the grantor, the grantee is a trustee ex maleficio. Danzeisen's Appeal, 73 Pa. 65:

In Barton v. McMillan, 20 Can. S. C. 404, where one agreed to make a loan to the owner of property, taking an absolute deed thereof as security, and executed a contract for the purchase of the property, at the agreed price, telling the solicitor that he would advise him by telephone whether the deed would be taken in his own name or his daughter's, and the next day a telephone message came, instructing the solicitor to make the deed in the name of the daughter, and the evidence tended to show that the daughter was aware of the agreement, although she claimed to have purchased the property absolutely and upon her own account, it was held that the agreement would be enforced as against the daughter, notwithstanding the statute of frauds.

In the absence of fraud or imposition in acquiring title, no trust ex maleficio can be based on the refusal of one who, at the instance of the vendee in a land contract, has advanced the balance of the purchase price and received an absolute conveyance from the vendor, to perform his contemporaneous parol agreement to convey to the vendee on being repaid. Moseley v. Moseley, 86 Ala. 289, 5 So. 732.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But where a vendee under a land contract procures another to advance purchase money and take title in his own name, under a verbal promise to convey to the vendee upon repayment of the advances, equity will raise a trust ex maleficio. Hoover v. Strohm, 44 Pa. Super. Ct. 177. See also, in this connection, Spies v. Price, 91 Ala. 166, 8 So. 405, and Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 81, Fed. Cas. No. 7,266, under heading, "Part performance of oral agreement taking case out of statute," infra.

3. Where creation of written instrument contemplated.

The failure to carry out a promise to execute a written declaration of trust will not, in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake, render parol evidence admissible to show that the grantee in an absolute conveyance was to hold in trust for the grantor. Dean v. Dean, 6 Conn. 285.

But where, as a part of the original contract through which one becomes an absolute grantee, but is in fact constituted merely a trustee, he agrees to execute a declaration of trust and preserve the same for the grantor's use, but fraudulently fails and refuses to do so, the terms of such trust may be proved by parol evidence, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, even though there may have been no premeditation of fraud. Hall v. Linn, 8 Colo. 264, 5 Pac. 641.

Where property was conveyed upon the faith that a declaration of trust had been or would be signed by the grantee, equity will enforce the trust. Hacker's Estate, 5 Pa. Co. Ct. 586.

And see also Barnard v. Flinn, 8 Ind. 204, under heading, "Accident or mistake," infra.

o. Constructive fraud.

Although, as stated in the introductory portion of this note, it does not include cases in which a constructive trust is based solely on the existence of a fiduciary relation between the grantor and grantee, independently of any agreement to hold the property in trust, there are a number of decisions in which the controlling element seems to have been the fiduciary relation between the promisor and the promisee, rather than any actual fraudulent intent at the time of making the promise. These will be found under this head.

1. In general.

A constructive trust may arise where the relation between one making a conveyance in reliance on the grantee's parol promise and such grantee is a confidential one. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689.

Where a general fiduciary relation exists and actual confidence is also reposed in the grantee, it is not necessary to allege or prove a fraudulent intent existing at the time of the conveyance, in order to establish a constructive trust. Alaniz v. Casenave, 91 Cal. 41, 27 Pac. 521.

Where a grantee and grantor of land stand in fiduciary relations to each other, and the deed is executed without consideration other than a promise, express or implied, of the grantee, to hold the land for the purpose of carrying out an express trust in favor of the grantor, which is not put in writing, and is therefore invalid as an express trust in the land, the confidence which induced the transaction having actually or presumably arisen from the fiduciary relations, the violation by the grantee of the terms of the parol agreement as an express trust constitutes a constructive fraud, makes him an involuntary trustee of the land for the use of the grantor, and gives the grantor the right to have the deed declared void, and to a decree that the land is property of the grantor, notwithstanding the execution of the deed. Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 Pac. 143; Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 Pac. 506.

Where a conveyance is made between parties standing in a fiduciary relation to each other, on a parol agreement of the grantee to hold the land in trust for or convey it to someone else, when in fact the grantee has no intention of performing the agreement, but intends to retain the benefit of the conveyance for his own use, the law raises a constructive trust, and takes the case out of the operation of the statute of frauds. Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 114 Am. St. Rep. 305, 79 N. E. 58.

Where there is fraud or artifice in procuring the title to property, or the same is wrongfully taken or retained in his own name by one occupying a fiduciary relation, a trust results in favor of the party equitably entitled. Randall v. Constaas, 33 Minn. 329, 23 N. W. 530.

If a party obtained the legal title to property by virtue of a confidential relation, and under such circumstances that he ought not, according to the rules of equity and good conscience, to hold the benefits of such circumstances or relations, a court of equity will raise a trust by construction, and fasten it upon the conscience of the offending party, and convert him into a trustee of the legal title. Pollard v. McKenney, 69 Neb. 742, 96 N. W. 679, 101 N. W. 9; Koefoed v. Thompson, 73 Neb. 128, 102 N. W. 268.

2. Where relation of parties is that of principal and agent, or partners.

Where the grantee is a mere conduit for the transfer of title from a husband to wife, equity will raise a constructive trust in him, pursuant to the agreement by which 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) he obtained the deed to the property. Cox v. Arnsmann, 76 Ind. 210.

Even though there is no fraud in the procurement of the conveyance, a constructive trust will arise where the grantee takes as the agent of the grantor, for the purpose of carrying out an agreed distribution in the event of the grantor's death. Kimball v. Tripp, 136 Cal. 631, 69 Pac. 428.

In Seichrist's Appeal, 66 Pa. 237, where one who had purchased part of a tract of land from another, who held it under a contract therefor, obtained a deed for the whole tract upon his undertaking that he would hold title to the portion not purchased by him in trust for the vendee, and that he would convey to him upon his paying his share of the purchase money, it was held that his abuse of the confidence reposed in him rendered him a trustee ex maleficio.

Where one conveyed his half interest in land without consideration to his partner, for the sole purpose of enabling the latter to secure a new loan to redeem the land from a mortgage foreclosure, leaving him in possession thereof under a verbal agreement that he would so redeem for their joint benefit, and account for one half of the rents and profits, and in due time reconvey to the grantor, equity will raise a trust ex maleficio. Koefoed v. Thompson, 73 Neb. 128, 102 N. W. 268.

3. Where one party sustains relation of confidential adviser.

Where the leader of a religious society, by virtue of pretended revelations, induced the members to convey their lands to him for the benefit of the community, equity will enforce a trust. Scott v. Thompson, 21 Iowa, 599.

Where the parties active in procuring the execution of an absolute conveyance by a woman, then on her deathbed, to her stepfather, were the stepfather and the minister in charge of the church to which she belonged, who knew her desire was not to confer a benefit upon the grantee, but to provide for her children, there is a constructive fraud which will raise a trust ex maleficio. Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905.

Evidence that, at the time of the making of a deed to one who was the priest in charge of the church of which the grantor was a member, and whom the grantor was accustomed to consult on business matters, the grantor was a widower over seventy years of age, ill, childish, and was having some trouble with his children; that the grantee repeatedly advised and urged him to deed the land to him and he would deed it back whenever he requested it, and would keep him out of trouble with his family; that thereafter, without the knowledge of the grantee, but relying upon such advice and promise, and believing that if he acted upon them he would be relieved of his troubles, he made the deed in question, is sufficient to raise a trust ex maleficio. Henderson v. Murray, 108 Minn. 76, 133 Am. St. Rep. 412, 121 N. W. 214.

McClellan v. Grant, 83 App. Div. 599, 82 N. Y. Supp. 208, affirmed without opinion in 181 N. Y. 581, 74 N. E. 1119, where an old and illiterate woman, whose only son had left home and had not communicated with her for many years, conveyed certain realty to her pastor, who was her confidential adviser, upon the understanding that if the son should ever turn up, the pastor would convey the property to him, it was held that although there was no distinct finding or charge of fraud, yet, on account of the confidential relation existing between the parties, and the presumption following therefrom, the grantee became a trustee ex maleficio, and therefore that the pastor's heirs were accountable to the son for the property.

In Rozell v. Vansyckle, 11 Wash. 79, 39 Pac. 270, where it appeared that the grantor was an old man very ignorant, illiterate, mentally weak, easily alarmed, and easily imposed upon; that the grantee, in whom he had implicit confidence, was greatly his superior in mental sagacity; that at and immediately prior to executing the deed he feared that a third party was seeking to establish false claims against him, and for the purpose of protecting the land in question therefrom sought the advice of the grantee, who, by his conduct and conversation, added greatly to the fears and apprehensions under which the grantor was then laboring, and encouraged him to deed the property to him, assuring him that he would reconvey upon request, it was held that the transaction raised a trust ex maleficio.

4. Where parties are husband and wife.

In view of the provision of the California Code that either husband or wife may enter into transactions with each other subject to the general rules which control the actions of persons occupying confidential relations with each other, and of an averment in an action to establish a trust ex maleficio, that the plaintiff had at all times confidence in his said wife and her devotion and fidelity to him, and that he made the deed, having confidence in his said wife and in her representation and promises, and relying upon the same, the relation between a husband who conveyed land to his wife relying upon her parol promise that she would reconvey to him upon his request may be considered as confidential, both in law and in fact; and equity will enforce the promise as a constructive trust. Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189, 17 Pac. 689.

Where a husband caused land held in trust for him to be conveyed to his wife 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

upon her oral agreement that she would hold it in trust for him during his life, and after his death for his son and herself, in equal proportions, a constructive trust arises which equity will enforce. Hayne v. Hermann, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171.

Where a wife conveyed property to her husband for the purpose of enabling him to maintain an action to oust a tenant, equity will enforce a constructive trust. Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 587, 74 Pac. 143.

A trust by operation of law is established by proof that a grantor conveyed lands by deed absolute on its face to his wife, in reliance upon an oral agreement between them that she would hold the same in trust for him during his lifetime, and that upon his death she would hold one half thereof as her own property, and would convey the other half to his father and mother in equal shares. Lauricella v. Lauricella, 161 Cal. 61, 118 Pac. 430.

Where a husband induced his wife, who was dangerously ill and did not expect to recover, to execute an absolute conveyance to him upon his promise that he would hold the property conveyed, as she desired, in trust for her two children, he is, notwithstanding the statute of frauds, chargeable in equity, on parol proof of such facts, with constructive fraud, from which the law raises a trust ex maleficio. Fisk's Appeal, 81 Conn. 433, 71 Atl. 559.

Where the evidence showed that a husband made repeated requests that his wife should transfer to him her rights in a land contracts held by her, which she peremptorily refused to do, until, being upon her deathbed, but being sensible that she would be unable to make the required payments, and realizing that her children would be without other means, and that one of them being a minor, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for them to raise the money after her death wherewith to comply with her contract, she finally yielded to her husband's request to transfer the property to him, in reliance on his promise to hold it for her children,—he will be held a trustee ex maleficio. Larmon v. Knight, 140 Ill. 232, 33 Am. St. Rep. 229, 29 N. E. 1116, 30 N. E. 318.

Averments of a bill in equity that the plaintiff and his wife, considering the advisability of preserving a home in their old age for each other and for their children, mutually agreed that the title to certain property owned by the husband should be placed in the name of the wife, and that she should hold the property for his benefit, and that in pursuance of this understanding the husband conveyed to a third person without any pecuniary consideration, who thereafter transferred the property to the wife, are sufficient to establish a constructive trust in favor of the husband. Ruhe v. Ruhe, 113 Md. 595, 77 Atl. 797.

In Ahrens v. Jones, 169 N. Y. 555, 88

Am. St. Rep. 620, 82 N. E. 666, where the grantor, being sick, and not expected to live, and being desirous of disposing of his property before he died, conveyed certain premises to his wife with the express understanding between them that the wife should pay a sum of money to certain grandchildren, which the wife, after her husband's death, refused to do, it was held that equity would declare the grantee a trustee ex maleficio for the protection of the grantor's intended beneficiaries.

In Lang v. Lang, 131 N. Y. Supp. 891, where a husband being ill and desiring to make a larger provision for his wife than the law would allow her upon his death intestate, at her request deeded property to her upon an understanding that, in the event of his death, the premises should be hers, and that if at any time during his life he should desire the premises returned to him, she would reconvey them, it was held that the agreement having been made for the benefit of the wife, and she having obtained the title under the arrangement, she could not be heard to say that it could not be enforced, because not in writing.

In Gallagher v. Gallagher, 135 App. Div. 457, 120 N. Y. Supp. 18 (affirmed without opinion in 202 N. Y. 572, 96 N. E. 1115), where a husband had conveyed certain realty to his wife for the purpose of enabling her to qualify as a surety on bonds given by him in the conduct of his business as a contractor, upon an oral agreement that, after the bonds were satisfied, she should reconvey the premises to him or to anyone he might name, on demand, it was held that, in view of the confidential relation in reliance upon which property had been conveyed, equity would enforce the agreement.

In Parrish v. Parrish, 33 Or. 486, 54 Pac. 352, where a wife obtained from her husband, who was old and feeble, deeds to his property, representing to him that because of his infirmity he could not efficiently manage it, and that if he would place the title in her name she would safely keep, manage, and protect the same for his use and benefit and to his best interest, it was held that she would be declared a trustee ex maleficio.

Where a wife conveyed property through an intermediary to her husband, at his suggestion, and under the representations of a relative that he might be relied upon, under a parol agreement that he would settle the fee upon the wife's heirs, and he died before doing so, it was held that the promise would be enforced as against his heirs, the court taking the view that his failure to perform was a fraud in law, which would take the case out of the statute of frauds. Thomson v. White, 1 Dall. 424, 1 L. ed. 206, 1 Am. Dec. 252.

But in McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. D. C. 1, the natural and reasonable confidence subsisting between husband and wife, and their motive for mutual co-operation 39 L.R.A. (N.S.).

for success in life, seems to have been regarded as insufficient to establish such a fiduciary relation as will raise a constructive trust.

5. Where parties are parent and child, grandparent and grandchild, father-in-law, son-in-law, etc.

A father bears no such confidential or fiduciary relations to his adult children as to bring transactions between them, relating to the land of either, under suspicion. Gregory v. Bowlsby, 115 Iowa, 327, 88 N. W. 822.

The fact that the instrument was made from father to daughter, and the alleged fact that it was without consideration, do not, in and of themselves, raise a presumption of fraud. Smith v. Mason, 122 Cal. 426, 55 Pac. 143.

The fact that the grantee was the daughter-in-law of a grantor is not of itself sufficient to prove a fiduciary relation, but is an important circumstance bearing upon the existence of such relation. Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 7 Cal. App. 634, 95 Pac. 659.

And in many instances a constructive trust has been raised upon an oral promise between parties sustaining the relationship to each other of parent and child.

In Butler v. Hyland, 89 Cal. 575, 26 Pac. 1108, where the grantor, a girl of sixteen, conveyed property to her aunt, who stood to her in loco parentis, at the request of the aunt, who desired to protect the grantor from the importunity of her brother, and upon the oral understanding that the aunt would hold it in trust for her, it was held that equity would enforce the trust.

Where, at and about the time when a deed from a daughter to her mother was made and delivered, it appeared that the position of the mother was one of dominance and authority over the daughter, and of the daughter of dependence upon the mother; that the daughter confided in and trusted her mother implicitly; that she was an invalid and unacquainted with business affairs; that nothing was paid or agreed to be paid to her for the property so conveyed; that she had no independent advice, and did not understand that she was divesting herself absolutely of all her property rights,—equity will convert the holder of the legal title into a trustee for the party who, in equity, is regarded as the beneficial owner. White v. Ross, 160 Ill. 56, 43 N. E. 336.

Where a grantor conveyed to his father-in-law without consideration other than his promise to hold it in trust for the benefit of the grantor or his heirs, and the conveyance was made because of the confidential and influential relation which existed between the parties, equity will enforce the trust. Bowler v. Curler, 21 Nev. 158, 37 Am. St. Rep. 501, 26 Pac. 226.

In Cardiff v. Marquis, 17 N. D. 110, 114

N. W. 1088, where a conveyance of real estate was delivered by a daughter to her father without any consideration, for the purpose of selling and conveying the land, and by reason of the father's death before payment of the consideration by the party to whom the land was sold by him, his promise to hold for his daughter's benefit remained unperformed, it was held that a court of equity will enforce the trust, upon the ground of constructive fraud, based on the relations of confidence existing between the parties.

In Young v. Peachy, 2 Atk. 254, where a father, in order to protect an entailed estate from the creditors of his daughter's husband, persuaded her to join in a common recovery, by virtue of which he became vested with the absolute title, it was held that, in view of the father's breach of trust in attempting to make use of the property for a different purpose than that for which the conveyance was obtained, and of the confidential relationship existing between the parties, equity would relieve from the conveyance, on the ground of fraud.

Where a mother, in consequence of a suggestion made by her son, with whom she resided, and upon whom she relied for the transaction of her business, canceled her will and conveyed her property to him, relying upon his promise to hold it in trust for his sister, equity will raise a constructive trust. Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 533, 108 Pac. 506.

Where a son took advantage of his mother's confidence to obtain title from her without consideration, by a promise to remove the encumbrances, and then reconvey to her an undivided third of the premises, and refused to reduce the agreement to writing or to reconvey the land, there is such an abuse of confidence as to vest of court of equity with jurisdiction to inquire thoroughly into the entire transaction, and set aside the conveyance, or administer other proper relief. Bohm v. Bohm, 9 Colo. 100, 10 Pac. 790; Jerome v. Bohm, 21 Colo. 322, 40 Pac. 570.

Where a grantor, who had a life estate in certain property, conveyed it to the remainderman, who, until his marriage, had lived with her as her son, in order that a portion of the property might be sold to pay accumulated taxes and assessments, upon the latter's representation that, immediately after making the sale, he would make a declaration of trust of an estate for life in the balance of the property in the grantor's favor, there is a constructive trust. Brophy v. Lawler, 107 Ill. 284.

Where a daughter obtained a conveyance from her father, then 80 years old and feeble, with the understanding that it was to be in full of her share in his estate, at the same time deeding land owned by her to him, with the understanding that it was to be a sister's portion, agreeing that if the father should die without having the deed recorded, it should be returned to her, and she would then convey the property to the sister, and the proof tends strongly to show that she did not intend to perform her promise, but made the agreement with a fraudulent intent and purpose in her mind to influence her father not to convey the land to her sister, in order that she might profit thereby, equity will raise a constructive trust. Crossman v. Keister, 223 Ill. 69, 8 L.R.A. (N.S.) 698, 114 Am. St. Rep. 305, 79 N. E. 58.

Where a favorite grandson, under the pretense of aiding his grandparents, obtained a conveyance by representing that, if they would deed the property to him, he would take care of it, see to the liens and taxes, and sell it and account for the proceeds, charging whatever his services were worth, and would at any time reconvey any portion not sold, there is a constructive trust. Giffen v. Taylor, 139 Ind. 573, 37 N. E. 392.

In Goldsmith v. Goldsmith, 145 N. Y. 313, 39 N. E. 1067, where a mother owning premises used as a home for the family, having met with an accident which incapacitated her for the further care and management of the property, conveyed it to a son, upon a promise upon his part to hold it for the benefit of the other four children, in common with himself, the arrangement being founded upon the trust and confidence growing out of the family relationship, and being intended as a settlement of the family affairs; and it was a further part of the arrangement that the son should pay interest on a mortgage and taxes, but should receive his board in the family without charge; and the plan was carried out for some years, until the promise was finally repudiated by the grantee, it was held that upon the whole transaction, including the confidential relation of the parties, and its nature as a family arrangement, equity would impose upon the property and its proceeds an implied trust for the benefit of the children.

In Foot v. Foot, 58 Barb. 258, where realty, the title to which was in the grantee's father, but the consideration for which had mainly been furnished by the mother, had been, for the purpose of protecting the property and of keeping it for the mother's use, conveyed without consideration to two of their sons, one of whom subsequently conveyed it to the other, who conveyed to a third son without consideration, and upon the agreement that he should hold it for the mother's benefit, and the son, during his life, recognized her as the owner of the property, and made a will devising it to her, which, however, was inoperative, it was held that equity would raise a trust ex maleficio which would preclude his heirs from claiming the property.

A complaint alleging that a deed, absolute in form, from parents to their sons, was executed solely in reliance on the confidence existing between them and their sons, and in reliance on their sons' promise to accept the deed in trust for the use of the grantors while they lived, and after their death to convey the land equally among all the children of the grantors, states a cause of action for declaring the deed to have been executed in trust for said purpose, and a court of equity will enforce the promise, as the refusal to carry it out is constructively fraudulent. Hanson v. Svarverud, 18 N. D. 550, 120 N. W. 550.

In Landrum v. Landrum, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 130 S. W. 907, where the grantor conveyed to his son to enable him to sell property to a third person, who contemplated purchasing it, it being understood and agreed that the son would turn over to his parents the entire amount received as purchase money, and the presumption arising from the transaction is that, but for the son's promise, which was violated, the grantor would have inserted in the deed some condition of defeasance, or the deed would have been so drawn as to show the true agreement between them, it was held that the son was chargeable with constructive fraud.

6. Where parties are brother and sister.

The relationship of brother and sister is not in itself a fiduciary relation, although it is a material circumstance in considering the question whether in fact such a relation existed. Odell v. Moss, 130 Cal. 352, 62 Pac. 555.

No confidential relation between a brother and sister from which constructive fraud in a conveyance from the former to the latter may be inferred is created by such relationship, where, although he lived with her, he supported himself, and had charge of his own business. Biggins v. Biggins, 133 Ill. 211, 24 N. E. 516.

In Bullenkamp v. Bullenkamp, 43 App. Div. 510, 60 N. Y. Supp. 84, where a sister owning property which had become so encumbered by taxes and assessments that unless a considerable payment was made thereon, it would be sold, conveyed it at the instance of her brother to his wife, with full understanding of the situation and of the effect of her act, the circumstances being such that necessity, and not the influence of the brother, was evidently the inducing cause, it was held that no such relation of trust and confidence existed as would warrant the enforcement of an oral agreement to reconvey.

d. Accident or mistake.

Where it was intended that the grantee in an absolute conveyance should, as part of the transaction, execute a declaration of trust, but within a few days he suddenly died, leaving the contract yet incomplete, equity will enforce the trust. Barnard v. Flinn, 8 Ind. 204.

When the grantor, on her deathbed, was led by her advisers, who, however, were not actuated by unworthy motives, to believe that a will only was to be executed by her, which would provide for a devise of property to, or in trust for the benefit of, her children, and did not know that she was signing an absolute conveyance, the grantee is chargeable as a trustee for the grantor and her heirs. Newis v. Topfer, 121 Iowa, 433, 96 N. W. 905.

e. Part performance of oral agreement taking case out of statute.

It is a familiar doctrine of equity that part performance may take an oral contract out of the operation of the statute of frauds. The following decisions deal with the question as to when an agreement that the grantee shall hold in trust the property conveyed falls within the operation of this doctrine.

The giving of the deed is not such part performance as will take out of the statute of frauds an oral promise to hold upon trust to reconvey to the grantor. Feeney v. Howard, 79 Cal. 525, 4 L.R.A. 826, 12 Am. St. Rep. 162, 21 Pac. 984.

And in McCartney v. Fletcher, 11 App. D. C. 1, it was held that even where a parol agreement or understanding that property conveyed shall be held upon trust is clearly proved, the mere making of the deeds, or directing them to be made, to the grantee, is not a sufficient part performance to take the case out of the statute of frauds, for if so, the statute would simply be rendered nugatory and without effect.

Where the conduct of the parties pending and following the giving of a deed conditioned for the support of the grantor during his lifetime, but otherwise absolute in its terms, was throughout entirely consistent with its provisions, and there is nothing to suggest, even remotely, that there was any other agreement between the parties than that which the deed evidences, the giving of the deed cannot be regarded as such a part performance as to take an alleged oral agreement to hold in trust for the grantor's heirs after his death out of the statute of frauds. Verzier v. Convard, 75 Conn. 1, 52 Atl. 255.

But in Hayden v. Denslow, 27 Conn. 335, it was held that as an agreement to convey land without consideration, upon the understanding that it should be reconveyed to the grantor's wife, either by deed or by will, had been executed on the one part by the making of the conveyance, it was by this part execution taken out from the operation of the statute of frauds. Compare Teague v. Fowler, 56 Ind. 569, hereinbefore set forth under heading, "Actual fraud."

And in Gallagher v. Northrup, 215 Ill. 563, 74 N. E. 711, where a father transferred land to a son without other consideration than his verbal agreement to reconvey to his mother, and the son never had possession, and under the agreement was not to become entitled to possession, but the possession remained in the mother, it was held that she could, under these circumstances, invoke the aid of a court of equity to enforce the execution of a deed by the son.

In Jeremiah v. Pitcher, 26 App. Div. 402, 49 N. Y. Supp. 788, affirmed without opinion in 163 N. Y. 574, 57 N. E. 1113, where a real estate dealer having an insane wife, in order to deal in property free from any claim of dower therein on the part of his wife, who was incompetent to release it, purchased property in the name of his daughter, upon her promise to convey it as he might thereafter direct, it was held that equity would enforce the agreement, the court saying: "The case at bar does not come within the statute of frauds; it is a parol agreement, fully performed on the part of the plaintiff. He has paid the purchase price of this property, entered into possession, received the rentals and other incomes, paid the taxes, discharged the purchase-money mortgages making use of the property in his business as a dealer in real estate, for the benefit of himself and family, relying upon the promise of his daughter to reconvey such property upon his order, and the defendant cannot now plead the statute of frauds to protect her in the ownership of this property. The transaction took place under circumstances which made it impossible, without defeating the end which was sought, to have the trust appear in writing; under circumstances which peculiarly obligated the daughter to accept the trust; and the plaintiff having parted with the legal title to his property, with no intent to defraud, but to enable him to carry on his business advantageously, and thus to provide for his unfortunate wife and his family, a court of equity would fail in its duty if it refused to decree a specific performance on the part of the defendant of her part of the agreement."

The continued possession of the grantor is not such a part performance of an alleged parol agreement on the part of the grantee to hold the property for the grantor's benefit as will take the case out of the statute of frauds. Spaulding v. Collins, 51 Wash. 488, 99 Pac. 306.

Where a purchaser of land, having made partial payment, and being unable to complete the payment of the purchase money, procures a third person to loan or advance the money for that purpose, to whom he causes a conveyance to be made by his vendor, the title to be conveyed to him on repayment, and has been permitted to continue in possession of the land, and has repaid the money advanced, equity will compel the execution of the trust by enforcing specific performance of the contract. Spies v. Price, 91 Ala. 166, 8 So. 405.

In Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, 181, Fed. Cas. No. 7,266, where a vendee under a land contract, being unable to comply with its terms, procured a third person to aid him by satisfying the vendor and taking the title himself, executing a release of his own claim, it was held that as the release would not have been executed but upon the faith that the property was to be held in trust for his benefit, its execution was a part performance of the agreement, which would take it out of the statute of frauds.

E. S. O.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

HERMAN LEWIS'S ADMINISTRATOR.
Appt.,
v.

BOWLING GREEN RAILWAY COMPANY.

(147 Ky. 460, 144 S. W. 377.)

Appeal — amendment — absence from record.

1. A suggested amendment to a pleading not made part of the record by order of court or bill of exceptions cannot be considered on appeal.

Carrier — rights of boy forcibly kept on car by motorman.

2. A street railway company is liable for the death of a boy whom the motorman in charge of the car has received for transportation to the police station, where he refuses to permit him to leave the car, and in attempting to restrain him from doing so the boy falls under the wheels and is killed, since the boy, being a passenger, is entitled to treatment as such, and to have the car stopped at his request to give him an opportunity safely to alight.

(March 12, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Warren County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — LEWIS v. BOWLING GREEN R. Co. seems to be a case of first impression as to the duty and liability of a carrier toward one who is detained upon its cars against his will; as a careful search has failed to disclose other cases discussing the question involved in that case.

The liability of a carrier for an assault by its servant upon a passenger while on its train is discussed in a note to Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Bush, 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1201. And as to the liability of a carrier for an assault by an employee upon a passenger outside the car or train, see Blomness v. Puget Sound Electric R. Co. 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 764, and note.

As to the liability of a carrier for the wrongful arrest of a passenger by its servant, see notes to Schmidt v. New Orleans R. Co. 7 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162, and Moore v. Louisiana & A. R. Co. 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 299.

Messrs. Bradburn & Basham and J. H. Gilliam for appellant.

Messrs. T. W. Thomas, R. C. P. Thomas, and Sims & Rodes for appellee.

Nunn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted by appellant against the Bowling Green Railway Company, Hubert Meyers, and W. C. Brownfield. Appellee filed a demurrer to the petition, and the court sustained it, and appellant offered to file an amended petition; but appellee objected, and the court sustained its objection and refused to allow it to be filed.

The amended petition was not made a part of the record by either an order of court or by a bill of exceptions; therefore it cannot be considered on this appeal, although it is copied into the record. Hortman v. Covington & L. R. Co. 18 B. Mon. 218; Nolan v. Feltman, 12 Bush, 119; Dehoney v. Bell, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 76, 30 S. W. 400; Stafford v. Dyer County Bank, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 155, 39 S. W. 708, and McGrew v. Congleton, 139 Ky. 515, 102 S. W. 1185. Therefore the only question for consideration is: Did the allegations of the original petition state a cause of action against the railway company?

It is not necessary for us to consider the petition with reference to the allegations against Meyers and Brownfield, as appellant, at the time he offered his amended petition, dismissed his action against them. The petition was inartfully drawn. We glean from it, however, the following facts: The railway company had a passenger car upon its track in the suburbs of Bowling Green, which was moved, or intended to be moved, through the city; that the car was stopped upon the track near the home of the parents of appellant's decedent, who was only thirteen years of age and small for his age; that Meyers and Brownfield forcibly took charge of the boy and dragged him to the rear of the car; that he was there received by the motorman of the car and dragged to the front platform; that the motorman held him with one hand and undertook to operate the car with the other; that he put the car in motion and ran it very fast; that he told the boy, while he was dragging him along the aisle of the car to the front platform, that he was going to take him downtown and deliver him to the police; that the boy was very much frightened and was crying; that he begged the motorman to let 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

him off the car, and said he wanted to go home to his parents; that the motorman refused to let him off, and he attempted to leap from the car, and the motorman tried to jerk him back, which caused him to fall under the wheels of the car, which ran over and killed him. It was alleged that all this was wrongfully and negligently done; that the railway company was negligent in employing and placing on its car to manage and control it an inexperienced youth, with but little, if any, knowledge of how to operate and control cars propelled by electricity, and that the motorman, on account of his youth and inexperience, was not capable of discharging the duties assigned to him. Many other allegations were made in the petition; but it is unnecessary to refer to them. The allegations already referred to, admitted as they were by the demurrer, authorized a recovery on behalf of appellant.

Appellee's counsel contend that the railway was not responsible for assaults and batteries committed by its agents and servants. This is true when they are not committed in their line of duty, or in the apparent scope of their employment. It is true the petition says that Meyers and Brownfield assaulted the boy; that they laid violent hands upon him and put him on the rear platform of the car; that he was assaulted by the motorman of the car, who laid violent hands upon him and took him through the car to the front platform, as before stated. The petition gives the particulars of the assault and battery committed by the agent of the railway company. The facts alleged show that the boy was carried onto the car for the purpose of carrying him into the city; therefore he became a passenger, and the motorman should have exercised care to conduct him safely. If he had a right to receive him as a passenger, under the facts stated in the petition, he had no right to compel him to remain a passenger upon the car, and it was negligence upon the part of the motorman in not stopping the car, so the boy could get off, when he requested that it be done; and the motorman was negligent in jerking the boy, when he attempted to leap off the car, which caused him to fall under the wheels.

Therefore we are of the opinion that the lower court erred in sustaining the demurrer, and the judgment is reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings consistent herewith.

LOUISIANA SUPREME COURT.

C. C. CORDILL

v.

MAYER ISRAEL, Appt.

(130 La. 138, 57 So. 778.)

Party wall — presumption — vacant property.

1. The presumption of article 677 of the Civil Code that a division wall betwixt two buildings is a wall in common does not apply to a division wall between a building and a vacant lot.

Same — payment for use — sale — warranty.

2. A division wall between a building and a vacant lot remains the exclusive property of the owner of the building until the owner of the adjoining lot pays its value or one half of the cost of construction. Where, in such a case, the owner of the vacant lot sells the same with the buildings and improvements thereon, the warranty clause of the deed does not cover that portion of the division wall resting on the vacant lot. Quoad the division wall, such sale transfers only the right of the vendor to make the division wall a wall in common by paying one half of its value or cost of construction.

(February 12, 1910.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Civil District Court for the Parish of Orleans in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to compel contribution to the cost of a party wall. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Rouse, Grant, & Grant for appellant.

Messrs. Howe, Fenner, Spencer, & Cocke for New Orleans Real Estate, Mortgage, & Securities Company.

Land, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff sued the defendant for one half of the cost of a division wall, erected at the expense of the plaintiff, and used by the defendant in the construction of a building on his adjoining vacant lot.

Headnotes by LAND, J.

Note. — For cases on the question whether the mere existence of a party wall is sufficient to charge grantee with notice of agreement by predecessor to contribute to cost in event of using wall, see the note to Hawkes v. Hoffman, 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1038. For the general subject of enforcement of obligation to contribute to cost of party walls, by or against grantees or successors in title, see the note to Cook v. Paul, 66 L.R.A. 673.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The defendant answered, denying liability, and averring that he purchased the adjoining lot with all the buildings and improvements thereon, including the portion of the party wall on his lot, with full warranty of title, from the New Orleans Real Estate, Mortgage, & Securities Company, called his "vendor in warranty."

The said company, for answer to the call in warranty, averred that it sold to defendant the vacant lot next to the building of the plaintiff, and that respondent did not sell or undertake to sell any interest in the adjoining wall of plaintiff's building. There was judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for $2,453.92, with legal interest from May 20, 1909, until paid, and for costs, and also against the defendant on the call in warranty. The defendant has appealed.

Counsel for appellant admits the correctness of the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, and submits that the only question for this court to determine is the liability of the warrantor. The contention of the appellant is thus stated in his brief: "Where a lot of ground is sold with the buildings and improvements thereon, with full warranty, and the only buildings and improvements thereon, are the party walls erected on either side, the purchaser has a right to assume that he acquired by his purchase the right to use such party walls for the support of his buildings, without being obliged to pay the owners of the adjoining lots on either side for such use."

On the other hand, counsel for the warrantor contend that the defendant acquired by his purchase, so far as the adjoining wall of plaintiff was concerned, nothing more than a right to make it a party wall by paying one half of the value thereof.

It appears that the buildings on three lots fronting on Canal street were destroyed by fire. Buildings were reconstructed on two of the lots, leaving the intervening lot vacant. This vacant lot was purchased by defendant after the reconstruction of the building on either side. Plaintiff rested one half of his wall on the vacant lot, but had no right to compel the owner thereof to contribute to the raising of this wall. Civ. Code, art. 675. The vendor of defendant contributed nothing to the building of the wall, but preserved the right of making it a wall in common by paying to the plaintiff one half he had paid out for its construction. Civ. Code, art. 676. Hence it follows that the vendor of the defendant had no ownership in the wall that it could transfer to him or any other person. Nemo plus juris ad alium transferre potest quam ipse habet. Defendant does not dispute the above proposition, but contends that his vendor nevertheless did transfer to him, with warranty, that portion of the wall that rested on the vacant lot. The argument of defendant is that such portion of the wall was included in the term "buildings and improvements thereon," used in the act of sale, and that the presumption was that the wall was one in common. In support of the last contention, the defendant cites article 677 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "Every wall which is a separation betwixt buildings as high as the upper part of the first story, or betwixt the yard and garden in the cities and towns, and their suburbs, of this state and even any other inclosure in the fields, shall be presumed to be in common, if there be no title, proof, or mark to the contrary."

On the face of this article, the presumption is only prima facie, and must yield to proof that the adjoining owner, claiming to own one half of the wall erected by his neighbor, did not contribute to the building of the wall, and has not paid one half of the cost of its construction. Moreover, the article relates to a wall which is a separation betwixt buildings, and neither the letter nor the reason of the law apply to a wall which rests in part on vacant ground.

Article 653 of the Code Napoléon reads as follows: "Dans les villes et les campagnes, tout mur servant de séparation entre batiments jusqu'a l'herbage, ou entre cours et jardins, et meme entre enclos dans les champs, est présumé mitoyen, s'il n'y a titre ou marque du contraire."

This article corresponds substantially with article 677 of the Civil Code of 1870, which, however, contains the additional word "proof." Fuzier Herman, in his annotations under C. N. 653, cites the court of cassation and commentators to the effect that this presumption does not apply where there is an edifice on one side and a court or garden on the other, or where one of the buildings was constructed after the erection of the wall. See Id. vol. 1, pp. 901 and 902. We do not deem it necessary to consider the opposite views of a few of the French commentators.

Baudry-Lacantinerie, in commenting on the same article, argues that the law says between houses, then between yards and gardens; but it does not say between a house and a yard or a garden. An analysis of article 677 of our Civil Code will lead to the same conclusion. When plaintiff's wall was constructed, the lot now owned by the defendant was vacant, and there is no presumption in law or in reason that the wall was the common property of the plaintiff and the vendor of the defendant. In fact, the wall belonged to the plaintiff alone, and the defendant had no just reason for thinking otherwise when he purchased the adjoining vacant lot.

A dividing wall between yards and gardens necessarily benefits the adjoining proprietors from the time of its completion. It is otherwise with a division wall between a house and a vacant lot.

The contention of the defendant that his vendor sold him the portion of the wall resting on the vacant lot is repelled by the decision of the court, on rehearing, in the case of Lavergne v. Lacoste, 26 La. Ann. 509. This case was carefully considered, and, on rehearing, the opinion was handed down by Ludeling, Ch. J., who said, in part, as follows: "In our former opinion and decree, we refused to allow the plaintiff anything for the half of the cost of wall A. This was an error. When wall A was built, the owner of the contiguous lot refused to pay for the wall. The owner of that lot, however, could always make the wall a wall in common by paying half of its cost. He sold the lot to the plaintiff, who subsequently sold it to the defendant. Did said sales relieve the owner of the Burgunder lot from paying for the wall in common when he desired to use it? We think not. The right which the original owner had to make the wall a wall in common by paying for it, passed with the lot to the vendee, but nothing more. The vendor of the defendant did not sell his wall, but only the lot which he had bought from Burgunder."

The facts of that case may be briefly stated as follows:

In 1841, Blasco purchased a vacant lot, upon which he erected a building; the wall resting one half on his own lot and the other half on the adjoining lot. In 1859, the Lavergne minors purchased the Blasco lot, with the buildings and improvements thereon, and in the same year purchased the adjoining lot from Burgunder. In 1866, the Lavergne minors sold to Mrs. Lacoste the Burgunder lot. Immediately after her purchase, Mrs. Lacoste caused buildings to be erected on her lot, resting them on the wall of the building on the Blasco lot. The Lavergne minors brought suit to recover from Mrs. Lacoste one half of the value of said wall. Counsel for defendant argue that the sale in the Lavergne-Lacoste Case did not include the buildings and improvements. The answer is that a division wall between a building and a vacant lot forms no part of the buildings and improvements on the lot. Such a wall remains the exclusive property of the owner of the building until the owner of the adjoining lot pays one half of its value or cost of its construction. In the Lavergne-Lacoste Case, supra, one of the justices dissented, and we do not consider the decision as having the weight of stare decisis. We, however, are of opinion that the dictum of the court in that case is fully sustained by reason and authority.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment below be affirmed, and that the defendant and appellant pay costs of appeal.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

ELIZABETH A. NEFF

v.

EMIL BRANDEIS, Appt.,

and

ARTHUR D. BRANDEIS.

(— Neb. —, 135 N. W. 232.)

Automobile — collision — owner's liability.

1. To sustain a recovery for injuries

Headnotes by BARNES, J.

Note. — Liability of automobile owner for negligence of chauffeur furnished by third person.

As indicated by the title, this note includes only cases which pass upon the liability of automobile owners for injuries resulting from the negligence of chauffeurs furnished by third persons. It does not include cases where the title to the automobile had not passed to one sought to be held liable, as, for example, where such a machine is being demonstrated for the purposes of sale at the time of the accident. Neither does the note cover the question of the liability of an owner for injuries caused by his automobile while it is being used by a servant or a third person for his own business or pleasure. The latter question is covered in the note to Riley v. Roach, 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 834, and in the notes there referred to.

The question under consideration is also, of course, distinct from that involved in Gerretson v. Rambler Garage Co. — Wis. —, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 136 N. W. 186, and similar cases passing upon the question of who is liable for an injury occurring while a leased automobile is being driven by a chauffeur furnished by the lessor. In these cases the lessor is the owner of the car, for which he furnishes the chauffeur, whereas in the cases under consideration in this note the automobile is owned by one person and the chauffeur is furnished by another.

But two cases have been disclosed which deal with the question involved in the present note.

In Norris v. Wolseley Tool & Motor Car 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

caused by being run down by an automobile owned by the defendant, the plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the person in charge of the machine was the defendant's servant, and was at the time of the accident engaged in the master's business or pleasure, with the master's knowledge and direction.

Master and servant — chauffeur — borrowed car.

2. The defendant agreed with a third party, for a stated monthly compensation, to take charge of his automobile, keep it at a garage, wash it, polish it, keep it ready for running at all times, and furnish a chauffeur to the defendant whenever he might desire to use his car. Defendant loaned the car to another, and the keepers of the garage sent it out in charge of their man for the use of the borrower. After such use, and while the chauffeur was returning the car to the garage, he ran into a vehicle driven by the plaintiff and her husband, and injured her. Held, that at the time of the accident no such relation of master and servant or of principal and agent existed between the defendant and the chauffeur as would render defendant liable for such injuries.

(March 12, 1912.)

Co. (1907) 52 Sol. Jo. 116, cited in 2 Butterworth's Dig. 834, it was held that there was evidence upon which a jury could find that the chauffeur was the servant of a proprietor of a garage where the owner of the machine had contracted with such proprietor to garage his car and supply a chauffeur at so much a week, and, through the negligence of a chauffeur furnished, a person was injured while the car was being driven by the chauffeur for his own purposes; contrary to the orders of the owner of the car.

A different conclusion, however, was reached in Perkins v. Stead, 23 Times L. R. 433, where the facts were somewhat different.

In that case, where the defendant purchased and paid for a motor car and his vendor agreed to provide a driver to drive the car to a certain point outside of London and deliver it there, it was held that the driver, while managing the car on the way to that point, was under the control of the purchaser of the car, and that the latter was liable to one who was injured by it while under the control of the driver referred to. Quoting from 23 Times L. R. 434: "Mr. Justice Ridley, in giving judgment, said that they thought that the learned judge was right in his decision. It must be remembered that cases of this kind differed very materially in the particular facts upon which they arose. It was not very easy to reconcile all the cases, and he was not going to endeavor to do it. He wished to put what he had to say upon the ground given by Lord Russell in Jones v. Scullard, 14 Times L. R. 580, [1898] 2

A PPEAL by defendant Emil Brandeis from a judgment of the District Court for Douglas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as the result of a collision with an automobile of which appellant was the owner. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Greene, Breckenridge, & Maters, for appellant:

No such relation of master and servant or of principal and agent existed between the chauffeur and defendant as would render the latter liable.

State v. Sarlls, 135 Ind. 195, 34 N. E. 1129; Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 15 L.R.A. 262, 18 S. W. 578; McCroskey v. Hamilton, 108 Ga. 640, 75 Am. St. Rep. 79, 34 S. E. 111; Kingan v. Silvers, 13 Ind. App. 80, 37 N. E. 414; Butler v. Townsend, 126 N. Y. 105, 26 N. E. 1017; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Pendleton, 126 Ky. 605, 104 S. W. 382; Dorsey v. Redford, — R. I.

—, 67 Atl. 367; Doran v. Thomsen, 74 N. J. L. 445, 66 Atl. 897, 76 N. J. L. 754, 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 335, 131 Am. St. Rep. 677, 71 Atl. 296; King v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 66 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37; Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381; Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 66 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 N. E. 500; Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731; Herlihy v. Smith, 116 Mass. 265; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Jones v. Hoge, 47 Wash. 663, 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 216, 125 Am. St. Rep. 915, 92 Pac. 433; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946; Clark v. Buckmobile Co. 107 App. Div. 120, 94 N. Y. Supp. 771; Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133.

Messrs. W. J. Connell and W. P. Thomas for appellee E. A. Neff. Mr. John L. Kennedy for appellee A. D. Brandeis.

Q. B. 565, 67 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 895, 79 L. T. N. S. 386, when he said: 'It is clear upon the authorities that it is not at all impossible for a man to be in the practical relation of servant to two different employers. It is clear that, although Loveday (the driver of the carriage in that case) was in the general employment of Walker (a livery stable keeper), he may at the time have been in the particular employment of the defendant, and the servant of the defendant in relation to the particular matter of driving the defendant's carriage. The question is whether he was so.' Dealing, in his judgment in the same case, with the case of Rourke v. White Moss Colliery Co. (L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 205), Lord Russell said: 'That case makes it quite clear that a man may be the general servant of one person and yet at the same time be the servant of another in relation to a particular matter, and it also shows that the important element whereby to determine whether he is the servant of the one person or of the other, in relation to the particular business on which he is engaged, is which of the two persons had the control of him in the conduct of that business.' Lord Russell, taking that as the principle which he had to apply, held that in the case before him, inasmuch as the brougham, the horse, the harness, and the livery belonged to the person hiring the services of the driver, there was evidence upon which a jury would be justified in coming to the conclusion that the driver was upon the occasion in question acting as the servant, not of the livery stable keeper, but of the person who hired him. In the present case there was no horse or harness, but they had the motor car and the power in the machinery itself. Making the distinctions which it was necessary to make on account of the facts, the case was one, in his opinion, in which the driver who was lent for the purpose of taking the motor car to Barnet was in the position of being the servant of the defendant, whilst he still remained in his general character of servant to the Argyll Company. He failed to distinguish this case from Jones v. Scullard. The facts differed, but if the judge was right in saying that the bargain was complete, and that the defendant became the owner of the car and had possession of it, and that the servant of the Argyll Company was only lent for the purpose of taking the car to Barnet, he thought he was in the service of the defendant for this particular purpose. It was unnecessary to decide whether he also remained in the service of the Argyll Company at that time. They had before them, not the Argyll Company, but the defendant; and, applying the principle as well as he could, he thought the judge had arrived at the right conclusion, and the appeal must therefore be dismissed."

For a note on cartman as independent contractor, see note accompanying Burns v. Michigan Paint Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816.

For a note on who is responsible for acts of drivers furnished with hired vehicles, see notes to Frerker v. Nicholson, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1122, and Morris v. Tredo, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 33.

And see exhaustive note in 37 L.R.A. 33, on the general question as to which of two or more persons is master of another who is conceded to be the servant of one of them.

J. T. W.

Barnes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action in the district court of Douglas county by Elizabeth A. Neff against Emil Brandeis and Arthur Brandeis to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff as the result of a collision with an automobile of which Emil Brandeis was the owner. There were two trials in the district court. On the first trial the jury were directed to return a verdict in favor of the defendant Arthur Brandeis, and upon the question of the liability of Emil the jury disagreed. On the second trial the plaintiff had the verdict and judgment, and the defendant (Emil Brandeis) has appealed.

It appears that in April, 1906, Emil Brandeis was the owner of two automobiles, one of which was called the "White Steamer," which was kept for him by the Powell-Bacon Automobile Company of Omaha, Nebraska, under an agreement which was described by Mr. Powell in substance as follows: "I was to wash the machine, polish it, store it, and keep it ready for running at all times. I was to furnish a man at any time Mr. Brandeis might call for it. Mr. Brandeis was to pay me so much a month for storing the machine, washing it, keeping it in good shape, and was also to pay me a stated sum for the man. Mr. Brandeis could call on the man,—for that man any time of day or night, and keep him as long as he wanted him. Mr. Brandeis said that he did not want to have the care of a man, to keep his eye on him all the time, and he would prefer to pay me a certain sum per month with the understanding that I should keep the man at work, but have him subject to his call. I told Mr. Brandeis that I was perfectly willing to do that; that a man would be at his call and disposal at any time he should phone or give instructions to have him sent out."

The defendant corroborated this statement, and further testified as follows:

Q. Who furnished the chauffeur that drove your cars on April 15, 1906, and prior to that time?

A. The Powell-Bacon Automobile Company.

Q. Did you have some agreement or arrangement under which the chauffeurs were furnished by them?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it? State what was said as nearly as you can.

A. I kept my automobiles at the Powell-

Bacon garage. They looked after them in the way of furnishing oil and gasoline and repairs and extras, and furnishing the chauffeurs whenever I wanted to use the cars.

Q. How much did you pay? . . .

A. $80 a month.

It appears from the record that on the 15th day of April, 1906, the defendant loaned his automobile to his brother, Mr. Arthur Brandeis; that he did not use or even see his car on that day.

Defendant also testified as follows:

Q. Who did use it, if you know?

A. My brother.

Q. Your brother, which one? A. D.?

A. A. D.

Q. That is Arthur Brandeis?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. State whether that car was used at all or out for your personal pleasure or business.

A. No, sir. . . .

Q. How did your brother Arthur happen to be using this machine on this particular day in question?

A. Well, he asked me, I believe it was in the forenoon, whether he could use my car, and I think he said he wanted to go out to his farm, and I said, "Yes," and he telephoned up to the Powell-Bacon garage.

Q. In other words, you loaned it to him for that afternoon?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made no use of it yourself at all?

A. No, sir.

With respect to the delivery and return of the machine, Mr. Brandeis further testified:

Why, I had an arrangement at any time I wanted to use either of the cars I would telephone, and they would furnish a man to take me out riding, and take the car back to the garage.

Q. Who would take the car back?

A. The man that ran it,—the chauffeur that ran the car.

Q. You may state whether or not the driver, Bell, Arthur Bell, who drove that car on the afternoon of the day when the collision with Mr. and Mrs. Neff occurred, had to your knowledge ever driven you?

A. Why, I did not know Mr. Bell.

Q. And had he to your knowledge driven either of your cars before this particular day?

A. I would not know that either.

Q. State whether or not you had the same chauffeur continuously?

A. No. The agreement was that they were to furnish any chauffeur they had there that was at leisure that they could furnish. There wasn't any particular chauffeur.

Q. So you would have sometimes one and sometimes another?

A. Yes, sir. . . .

Q. You had nothing to do with selecting the particular chauffeur for a particular trip?

A. No; I just telephoned them to send the car around.

It also appears that the defendant never paid the chauffeur anything, but paid the Powell-Bacon Company for his services, which payment was included in the $80 per month, as above stated. It further appears that on the afternoon of the 15th day of April, 1906, the Powell-Bacon Company sent the defendant's automobile out in charge of a chauffeur named Arthur Bell, who testified that, acting upon the order of Mr. Powell, he took the car in question to the home of Arthur Brandeis, and waited there for some time; that Mr. Arthur Brandeis and his family came out, got into the car, and he drove them to Arthur's farm; that upon his return he left them at their home, and started to take the car back to the garage; that on his way there he had a collision with a vehicle driven by the plaintiff and her husband, which caused the injuries of which she complained.

On cross-examination Mr. Powell stated: "I cannot give the exact conversation, but the substance was that I told Mr. Brandeis that he could have the man any time he saw fit, and that the man would be subject to his direction when he left my place. . . . There was something said. I told Mr. Brandeis that he had the direction of the man, and that he was responsible for the man after he left my place."

On cross-examination the defendant gave the following testimony:

Q. It was your arrangement with the Powell-Bacon Company that while he was out in the service with your automobile, running it for you or your friends by your authority, that he was doing that for you, was it not? . . .

A. I presume so.

Q. And he would so continue to run the machine for you and by your authority until he returned the machine to the garage, was not that true? And is not that correct under the arrangements you had with the Powell-Bacon Company?

A. It would be if he took the car to the garage after he got through. . . .
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. Then after he got back to the garage and had delivered it, he then would be out of your direction and no longer subject to it, is that not correct?

A. Yes; Powell might send him out with some other man's car right away.

Q. When he came back and returned the machine to the garage, then he would no longer be subject to your control; his connection with you then ceased for the time being?

A. I suppose so.

The foregoing is the evidence, but not all of it, and about the facts thus established there seems to be no dispute. At the close of the evidence the defendant requested the court to instruct the jury to return a verdict in his favor. His motion was overruled, and that ruling is now assigned as error. It is strenuously contended by counsel that upon the evidence contained in this record there can be no recovery against the defendant. It appears from the pleadings and the evidence that this suit was brought against Emil Brandeis on the theory that Bell, the chauffeur, was his servant; and it is contended that the facts do not support that theory.

It is the well-settled rule that where one person has sustained an injury from the negligence of another, he must in general proceed against him by whose negligence the injury was occasioned. If, however, the negligence which caused the injury was that of a servant while engaged in his master's business, the person sustaining the injury may disregard the immediate author of the mischief and hold the master responsible for the damages sustained. The master selects the servant, and the servant is subject to his control, and, in respect to the civil remedy, the act of the servant is, in law, regarded as that of the master. But it is not enough, in order to establish a liability of one person for the negligence of another, to show that the person whose negligence caused the injury was, at the time, acting under an employment by the person who is sought to be charged. It must be shown, in addition, that the employment created the relation of master and servant between them. King v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 86 N. Y. 181, 23 Am. Rep. 37.

In Wyllie v. Palmer, 137 N. Y. 248, 19 L.R.A. 285, 33 N. E. 381, it was held that the doctrine of respondent superior applies only when the relation of the master and servant is shown to exist between the wrongdoer and the person sought to be charged for the result of some neglect or wrong at the time and in respect to the very transaction out of which the injury arose. Higgins v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 156 N. Y. 75, 68 Am. St. Rep. 537, 50 N. E. 500; Doran v. Thomsen, 74 N. J. L. 445, 66 Atl. 897.

In Lotz v. Hanlon, 217 Pa. 339, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 202, 118 Am. St. Rep. 922, 66 Atl. 525, 10 Ann. Cas. 731, the court held that where plaintiff's suit is to recover for injuries received by being run down by an automobile owned by the defendant, he must show not only that the person in charge of the machine was the defendant's servant, but also that he was at the time engaged on the master's business with the master's knowledge and direction. It was said in the body of the opinion: "But it comes to nothing that the driver was the defendant's servant, if it appears that, at the time the accident happened, he was not on the master's errand or business."

In Slater v. Advance Thresher Co. 97 Minn. 305, 5 L.R.A. (N.S.) 598, 107 N. W. 133, the supreme court of Minnesota said: "The expression 'in the course of his employment' means, in contemplation of law, 'while engaged in the service of the master,' and nothing more. It is not synonymous with 'during the period covered by his employment.'"

Counsel for the plaintiff vigorously asserts that the cross-examination of the defendant and the witness Powell established the relation of principal and agent between the defendant and the chauffeur, and was sufficient to sustain the verdict. This seems to have been the theory upon which the trial court submitted the case to the jury.

We are of opinion that the testimony of witnesses on their cross-examination, and upon which plaintiff's counsel relies to sustain the judgment, is not sufficient to render the defendant liable for the negligence of the chauffeur. It did not change the terms of the agreement, as stated by the witnesses on their direct examination. It was nothing more than their opinion of the legal effect of that agreement. As such it was entitled to little, if any, consideration.

It must be remembered that the evidence clearly shows that the chauffeur whose negligence caused the injury of which the plaintiff complains was the hired servant of the Powell-Bacon Company, and not of the defendant; and where, as in the case at bar, the defendant had not used his car for any purpose, but had merely loaned it to another, and had no control over its movements or the conduct of the chauffeur, we are of opinion that the owner of the car would not be liable for the negligence of the servant of another.

Again, it would seem clear, from the evidence, that if the chauffeur, in returning the defendant's car to the garage, had, by his negligence, injured or wrecked it, the Powell-Bacon Company, whose servant he was, would have been liable to the defendant therefor; and it cannot be said that the chauffeur was his agent to such an extent as to make defendant liable to third persons for the chauffeur's negligence while returning the car to the garage.

While the legal questions involved in this case have been often decided, it has been difficult to find an adjudicated case where the facts are the same as those in the case at bar. Parsons v. Wisner (Sup.) 113 N. Y. Supp. 922, is perhaps the nearest in point of any of the cases. There the owner of an automobile loaned it to his brother, and the keeper of a garage furnished the chauffeur to run it. The court, in passing on the liability of the owner, said: "Upon the case presented it is established by a clear preponderance of evidence that the chauffeur in charge of the machine at the time of the accident was not in the employ of the defendant, and never had been in his employ, and that he was not engaged in the business of the defendant, or under his direction and control, at that time." Upon the facts there stated and for those reasons, a judgment against the owner of the automobile was reversed. It appears that the rule there announced is approved and supported by Babbitt, Law Applied to Motor Vehicles, § 582; Berry, Automobiles, § 148; Cunningham v. Castle, 127 App. Div. 580, 111 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Reynolds v. Buck, 127 Iowa, 601, 103 N. W. 946. To hold the defendant liable upon the facts of this case, we are required to infer that the chauffeur whose negligence was the cause of the accident was at that point of time the servant of the defendant and under his control. We are of opinion that such an inference is too farfetched, and is not warranted by the evidence.

For the foregoing reasons, we are unable to sustain the judgment in this case upon either the law of master and servant, or of principal and agent. We are of opinion that the trial court erred in overruling the motion for a directed verdict. The judgment of the District Court is therefore reversed, and the cause is remanded for further proceedings in harmony with this opinion.

Letton, J., concurs in the conclusion.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

FRED B. DANIELS, Appt.,
v.
FRANK ENGLEHART, Resp't.

(18 Idaho, 548, 111 Pac. 3.)

Note — defense — failure of consideration.

1. The maker of a promissory note cannot avoid payment of the same on the grounds of failure of consideration, where the answer and proofs admit that there was not a total failure of consideration, and that he in fact received and retains a part of the consideration as the same was agreed upon.

Headnotes by AILSHIE, J.

Note. — Failure of consideration as a defense to action on a purchase price note.

- I. Distinction between action for purchase price and action on note for same, 938.
- II. Distinction between want and failure of consideration, 938.
- III. Doctrine that want or failure of consideration is defense, 939.
- IV. Doctrine that partial want or failure is no defense pro tanto.
 - a. In general, 943.
 - b. When amount is unliquidated, 945.
- V. Effect of warranty clause in contract.
 - a. In general, 946.
 - b. Rule that right is not affected by clause, 947.
 - c. Rule that remedy is limited to action on covenant, 948.
- VI. Statutory provisions, 948.
- VII. Pleading.
 - a. As affected by distinction between total want and partial want or failure of consideration, 949.
 - b. Necessity of special plea in order to make defense of total want or failure of consideration, 949.
 - c. Necessity of special plea in order to make defense of partial want or failure, 950.
 - d. Right to plead partial failure in bar of action, 950.
 - e. Right to prove partial failure of consideration under plea of total failure, 951.

I. Distinction between action for purchase price and action on note for same.

In Obbard v. Betham, Moody & M. 483, 8 L. J. K. B. 254, a distinction is made between an action for the price of goods and an action on a security given therefor, and it is said that in the former the value only can be recovered, while in the latter a full recovery may be had unless there has been a total failure of consideration, since 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Same — partial failure of consideration — remedies.

2. Where there has been a partial failure of consideration for the execution of a promissory note, the maker of the note, in order to obtain relief, must either rescind the contract and return the consideration received, or claim damages for breach of the contract, or pursue some remedy whereby the holder of the note may be enabled to receive just compensation for such part of the consideration as actually passed.

(September 19, 1910.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Elmore County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be there can be no deduction for partial failure of consideration, as for inferiority of the article furnished to that ordered.

And Washburn v. Picot, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 390, quotes with approval from Tye v. Gwynne, 2 Campb. 346, to the effect that there is a distinction between the contract and the security. If part of the contract arises on a good consideration and part on a bad one, it is divisible, but it is otherwise as to the security, that being entire.

The objection to the defense of partial failure of consideration where the action is on a note given for the purchase price of property, while conceding that if the action is for the value of the property the defense is permissible, is not sound, and is now seldom, if ever, relied upon. It is answered in Harrington v. Stratton, 22 Pick. 510, wherein the court says: "It is difficult to perceive why the great principle upon which the necessity of a cross action was originally urged in such case, that the defense was founded upon an independent cause of action, is not substantially disregarded as much in the rule admitting evidence of a breach of warranty or fraudulent representation in reduction of damages, in the case of an action of assumpsit on a contract to pay for an article at an agreed price, as in a suit upon a promissory note given for the same article."

II. Distinction between want and failure of consideration.

A want of consideration for a note arises where the note at its inception was given and received without anything of value passing between the parties in consideration thereof, as where the note was given in payment of property the title to which has entirely failed owing to a defect therein at the inception of the note. Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 311. Failure of consideration, total or partial, occurs when a consideration good and sufficient at the time the agreement was made, by some due on a certain promissory note. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. M. Wolfe, for appellant:

The failure of the defendant to set up in his answer either a rescission of the contract by returning or offering to return the water right puts it beyond him to refuse the payment of the note.

Cowen v. Harrington, 5 Idaho, 329, 48 Pac. 1059.

A collateral contemporaneous agreement providing that the note should not be paid in the event that an executory contract which was the consideration of the note should not be performed does not defeat the negotiability of the note in the hands of an indorsee, though he had notice of such agreement.

United States Nat. Bank v. Floss, 38 Or. 68, 84 Am. St. Rep. 752, 62 Pac. 751; Siegel, C. & Co. v. Chicago Trust & Sav. Bank, 131 Ill. 569, 7 L.R.A. 537, 19 Am. St. Rep. 51, 23 N. E. 417.

Failure of consideration after assignment is no defense.

Splivallo v. Patten, 38 Cal. 138, 99 Am. Dec. 358; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 245.

Mr. J. G. Watts for respondent.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action on a promissory note. Plaintiff alleged that he was a bona fide breach of contract, mistake, or accident, afterwards fails. Ibid.

In Washburn v. Picot, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 390, the language of Lord Ellenborough in Tice v. Gwynne, 2 Campb. 346, is quoted with approval, to the effect that there is a difference between want of consideration and failure of consideration, the former may be given in evidence to reduce the damages or defeat the plaintiff's action, the latter cannot, but furnishes a distinct and independent cause of action.

The distinction is also made in Walters v. Armstrong, 5 Minn. 448, Gil. 364, between partial failure of consideration and the want of consideration, and the former is said to presuppose a valid consideration to have been in existence at the inception of the note, while the want of consideration merely meant that the consideration at the inception of the note was inadequate or wholly lacking.

In Brown v. Roberts, 90 Minn. 314, 96 N. W. 793, however, it is said that a distinction has sometimes been made between a partial failure of consideration and a partial want of consideration, but that the latter is always a defense pro tanto as between the original parties to a note in an action thereon. And the general doctrine is also asserted that whatever doubt there may have been at one time on the question, in view of later decisions it must be held that a partial want or failure of consideration can be shown if properly pleaded as a defense pro tanto to a negotiable instrument in the hands of the original payee, or of a party standing in his shoes.

In Furber v. Fogler, 97 Me. 585, 55 Atl. 514, a distinction is made between want or failure of consideration, which is a complete defense or defense pro tanto to an action between the parties to a negotiable instrument, and the mere inadequacy of consideration, and it is said that the latter does not constitute a defense in whole or pro tanto.

As shown in the next subdivision, at the present time by the weight of authority no distinction is made between a want of consideration and a failure of consideration as 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

regards the right to rely upon either as a defense to an action on a purchase price note. The one is now a defense to the same extent as the other.

III. Doctrine that want or failure of consideration is defense.

If the amount to be deducted is ascertainable, by the great weight of authority, even where not expressly authorized by statute, want or failure of consideration, total or partial, is a defense either in toto or pro tanto as the case may be, to an action on a note given for the purchase price of property, where the action is between the original parties or by a subsequent holder of the note chargeable with knowledge or notice of the equities of the buyer.

U. S.—Withers v. Greene, 9 How. 213, 13 L. ed. 109; Martin v. Bartow Iron Works, 35 Ga. 320, Fed. Cas. No. 9,157; American Nat. Bank v. Watkins, 56 C. C. A. 111, 119 Fed. 545, writ of certiorari denied in 190 U. S. 558, 47 L. ed. 1183, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 854; Williams v. Neely, 69 L.R.A. 232, 67 C. C. A. 171, 134 Fed. 1.

Ala.—Agnew v. Walden, 84 Ala. 502, 4 So. 672; Brown v. Freeman, 79 Ala. 406; Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649.

Ark.—Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699; Smith v. Capers, 13 Ark. 9; Keller v. Vowell, 17 Ark. 445.

Cal.—Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupiabe Land & Water Co. 120 Cal. 521, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186, 52 Pac. 995.

Ind.—Catlett v. McDowell, 4 Blackf. 556; Doremus v. Bond, 8 Blackf. 368; Davis v. Jackson, 22 Ind. 233; Schaffner v. Kober, 2 Ind. App. 409, 28 N. E. 871.

Iowa.—City Deposit Bank v. Green, 138 Iowa, 156, 115 N. W. 893.

Kan.—French v. Gordon, 10 Kan. 370; Scantlin v. Allison, 12 Kan. 85; Dodge v. Oatis, 27 Kan. 762; Thompson v. Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. 29 Kan. 476.

Me.—Wadsworth v. Smith, 23 Me. 562; Herbert v. Ford, 29 Me. 546; Pratt v. Johnson, 100 Me. 443, 62 Atl. 242.

Md.—Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 550.

purchaser of the note prior to maturity. Defendant answered, admitting the execution of the note and that the same had not been paid, but denied that the plaintiff was a bona fide holder of the note by indorsement prior to maturity thereof. The defendant also alleged as a defense that the note was executed as part payment for a water right from the Great Western Beet Sugar Company, and that the company promised and agreed to construct reservoirs, canals, and ditches, and furnish the defendant with water for his tract of land, comprising 160 acres, which constituted the consideration for the note sued upon. It was also alleged in the answer that the plaintiff was vice president and agent of the Great Western Beet Sugar Company at the time the contract was made and the note was executed, and that he had full knowledge of the consideration and the terms of the agreement entered into. The defendant by way of showing failure of consideration, alleged in paragraph 9 of his answer as follows: "That said ditch was not completed as agreed by the said Great Western Beet Sugar Company on the 31st day of May, 1907, and is not now completed of sufficient capacity to deliver water to this defendant and others entitled to water under said ditch, and that water was not delivered to the land of defendant

Mass.—Perley v. Balch, 23 Pick. 283, 34 Am. Dec. 56; Haycock v. Rand, 5 Cush. 26; Daggett v. Daggett, 8 Cush. 520; Burnett v. Smith, 4 Gray, 50; Davis v. Elliott, 15 Gray, 90; Stacy v. Kemp, 97 Mass. 166; Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 311; Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358; Black v. Ridgway, 131 Mass. 80; Shoe & Leather Nat. Bank v. Wood, 142 Mass. 563, 8 N. E. 753.

Mich.—Sebring v. Hazard, 128 Mich. 333, 87 N. W. 257.

Minn.—Stevens v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 172, 9 N. W. 677; Nichols & S. Co. v. Soderquist, 77 Minn. 509, 80 N. W. 630; Brown v. Roberts, 90 Minn. 314, 96 N. W. 793.

Miss.—Rasberry v. Moye, 23 Miss. 320; Brewer v. Harris, 2 Smedes & M. 84, 41 Am. Dec. 587.

Mo.—Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509; Barr v. Baker, 9 Mo. 850; Smith v. Busby, 15 Mo. 388, 57 Am. Dec. 207; Gamache v. Grimm, 23 Mo. 38; Copeland v. Loan, 10 Mo. 268; Catterlin v. Lusk, 98 Mo. App. 182, 71 S. W. 1109.

Neb.—Lanning v. Burns, 36 Neb. 236, 54 N. W. 427; Snyder v. Johnson, 69 Neb. 266, 95 N. W. 692.

N. M.—Staab v. Ortiz, 3 N. M. 33, 1 Pac. 857.

N. Y.—Earl v. Peck, 64 N. Y. 596; Gillespie v. Torrance, 25 N. Y. 306, 82 Am. Dec. 355; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. 431; Burton v. Stewart, 3 Wend. 236, 20 Am. Dec. 692; Judd v. Dennison, 10 Wend. 512; Payne v. Cutler, 13 Wend. 605; Battersman v. Pierce, 3 Hill, 171; Carter v. Hamilton, Selden, Notes, 251, reversing, 11 Barb. 147; Sawyer v. Chambers, 43 Barb. 622; Buhrman v. Baylis, 14 Hun, 608.

Okla.—Hagan v. Bigler, 5 Okla. 575, 49 Pac. 1011.

Or.—Davis v. Wait, 12 Or. 425, 8 Pac. 356.

Pa.—Steinhauer v. Witman, 1 Serg. & R. 438; Steigleman v. Jeffries, 1 Serg. & R. 477, 7 Am. Dec. 626; Hart v. Porter, 5 Serg. & R. 201.

S. C.—Gray v. Handkinson, 1 Bay, 278; Barnes v. Shelton, Harp. L. 33, 18 Am. Dec. 642; Rouse v. Sarratt, 74 S. C. 575, 54 S. E. 757.

Tenn.—Edwards v. Porter, 2 Coldw. 42, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Tex.—Williams v. Finley, 99 Tex. 468, 90 S. W. 1087; Blanks v. Ripley, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 156, 27 S. W. 732; Stribling v. Gray, —Tex. Civ. App.—, 81 S. W. 789; Nations v. Thomas, 25 Tex. Supp. 221.

Wash.—Bay View Brewing Co. v. Tecklenberg, 19 Wash. 469, 53 Pac. 724.

Wis.—Norton v. Rooker, 1 Pinney (Wis.) 195; Butler v. Titus, 13 Wis. 430; Griffiths v. Parry, 16 Wis. 219; Peterson v. Johnson, 22 Wis. 21, 94 Am. Dec. 581; Steckbauer v. Leykom, 130 Wis. 438, 110 N. W. 217.

Eng.—Forman v. Wright, 11 C. B. 488, 20 L. J. C. P. N. S. 145, 15 Jur. 706; Agra & M. Bank v. Leighton, L. R. 2 Exch. 56, 4 Hurlst. & C. 656, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 33.

And failure of consideration may be used as a defense to mitigate the amount of recovery in an action on a note given for the property, for which some benefit admittedly has been received. Hansford v. Mills, 9 Port. (Ala.) 509.

Beall v. Pearre, 12 Md. 550, holds that the maker of a note given for the purchase price of personality may defend an action upon it by showing, in mitigation of the amount to be recovered thereon, a partial failure of consideration, and that this is the only remedy; he cannot bring a separate action for fraud or breach of warranty, even though he attempted to make the defense of partial consideration, and was erroneously denied the right to do so by the trial court.

The reason for permitting the defense of partial failure of consideration in an action on a note given for the purchase price of an article is well stated in Harrington v. Stratton, 22 Pick. 510. On this point it is said: "The strong argument for the admission of such evidence in reduction of damages in cases like the present is that it will avoid circuity of action. It is always desirable to prevent a cross action where full and complete justice can be done to the parties in a single suit, and it is upon this ground that the courts have of late been disposed to extend to the greatest length compatible with the legal rights of the parties, the principle allowing evidence in defense or in reduction of damages to be introduced, rather than to compel the de-prior to the 31st day of May, 1908, and has not yet been delivered to said defendant in any sufficient quantity to water said land, or in any quantity whatever more than sufficient to water $1\frac{1}{2}$ acres as above stated."

The plaintiff moved for judgment on the pleadings, and this motion was predicated on the theory that the answer did not show a failure of consideration, and that, under the authority of Cowen v. Harrington, 5 Idaho, 329, 48 Pac. 1059, and Caldwell v. Ruddy, 2 Idaho, 5, 1 Pac. 339, the defendant could not successfully defend on the ground of want of consideration, where his answer showed on its face that a part consideration had in fact been received, and that there had not been a total failure of consideration, and that defendant had not returned the water contract and consideration received, and had never attempted to rescind the contract, and set up no claim, by way of cross complaint or otherwise, for damages for breach of the contract. Under the authority of Cowen v. Harrington and Caldwell v. Ruddy, supra, the answer was not sufficient to defeat plaintiff's recovery on the grounds of failure of consideration. A party cannot execute his promissory note, and let the matter run until after its maturity and suit is brought on it, and then successfully defend on the defendant to resort to his cross action. As it seems to us, the same purpose will be further advanced, and with no additional evils, by adopting a rule on this subject equally broad in its application to cases of actions on promissory notes between the original parties to the same, as to actions on the original contract of sale, and holding that, in either case, evidence of false representations as to the quality or character of the article sold may be given in evidence to reduce the damages, although the article has not been returned to the vendor. Under the rules of this court, the plaintiff may require notice of the defense relied upon to be given seasonably, to prevent surprise, and thus obviate all objections arising from that source."

And in Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649, one of the early cases on the subject, the doctrine is asserted that "wherever a defendant can maintain a cross action for damages on account of a defect in personal property purchased by him, or for a noncompliance by the plaintiff with his part of the contract, he may in defense to an action upon his note, made in consequence of such purchase or contract, claim a deduction corresponding with the injury he has sustained."

On the same point, and in holding that a partial failure of consideration for a note given for goods sold and delivered is a good defense pro tanto in a suit between the parties to the note, in Wadsworth v. Smith, 23 Me. 562, the court reasons: "Why should the payee recover the full amount of the bill, when it is perceived that he will be obliged to return a part of that amount upon a recovery against him by the defendant in another suit, and that suit arising out of no covenant of a higher nature, and expressly affording a remedy, as it would in the case of a suit upon a note given for the price of real estate conveyed? It is no sufficient reason to allege that he might be surprised by the defense of a partial failure of the consideration; for it is admitted that he must expect to be prepared for the defense of a total failure; and one can rarely occasion greater surprise than the other."
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Courts are to be presumed so to administer the law as to prevent injustice by the surprise of a defense which could not have been anticipated. It is not perceived that there can be more difficulty or inconvenience in receiving and acting upon the testimony to prove a partial failure of consideration, when the suit is upon the bill or note, than when it is for the price of goods sold and delivered. In both cases, by admitting the defense, circuity of action may be avoided. There may not unfrequently be absolute injustice in the exclusion of such a defense. The promisee or payee may be destitute of all other property than the bill or note, or be otherwise so situated that to refuse to admit such a defense is for all beneficial purposes to refuse all means of redress to the party aggrieved."

The rule is thus stated in Hathorn v. Wheelwright, 99 Me. 351, 59 Atl. 517, 2 Ann. Cas. 428: "Whenever a promissory note is given for two or more independent considerations, and there is a failure of consideration as to one, as where the title to one of the articles sold is not in the vendor at the time of the sale, or where there is a breach of warranty or a misrepresentation as to quality, for the purpose of avoiding circuity of action the law will allow the defendant, in an action between the original parties, or between others standing in no better position, to show such partial failure of consideration in reduction of damages."

A failure of consideration, either total or partial, is a defense complete or pro tanto to an action at law on a note, since such defense may diminish the multiplicity and circuity of actions, which it is the policy of the law to discourage. Brewer v. Harris, 2 Smedes & M. 84, 41 Am. Dec. 587. The defendant, if he can establish a total failure of consideration, is entitled to a general verdict in his favor; if he establishes only a partial failure of consideration, he is entitled to a deduction in accordance with the facts. Byrd v. Campbell Printing-Press & Mfg. Co. 94 Ga. 41, 20 S. E. 253.

The early rule as stated by the Minnesota court was that where the consideration ground of want of consideration, where he himself admits that there was not a total failure of consideration, and that he in fact received a part of the consideration. He certainly has a remedy unless the note has passed into the hands of an innocent third party, and in this case the evidence was sufficient from which to conclude that plaintiff was not an innocent holder of the note. But the maker of the note cannot retain such consideration as he has received, and at the same time successfully resist the payment of the obligation. He must either rescind, or seek damages for breach of the contract, or pursue some other remedy which will permit the party to whom the obligation is due to receive such compensation as is justly due him under the contract, or have a return of the consideration.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded, with direction to the trial court to permit the defendant to amend his answer, or to file a cross complaint, if he sees fit so to do.

Judgment reversed, with costs in favor of appellant.

Sullivan, Ch. J., concurs.

in a note was admittedly a valuable one, in the absence of fraud or mistake the note is not subject to impeachment for partial want or failure of consideration. Leighton v. Grant, 20 Minn. 345, Gil. 298. In Walters v. Armstrong, 5 Minn. 448, Gil. 364, the rule is asserted that a partial want of consideration or mere inadequacy of consideration cannot be interposed as a defense to a note. Walters v. Armstrong is referred to in Torinus v. Buckham, 29 Minn. 128, 12 N. W. 348, and it is pointed out that that was a case of partial want of consideration, rather than of partial failure of consideration. And the doctrine therein asserted is held not to apply to a case involving a note the consideration for which has partially failed. And in Stevens v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 172, 9 N. W. 677, the rule is asserted that the better doctrine is that partial want or failure of consideration may be shown in defense to an action on notes although negotiable, if in the hands of the original holder or other person affected by the equities existing between the parties; and it is said that a partial want or failure of consideration may properly be pleaded and proved in defense, to reduce the damages recoverable. And the rule now obtains that want or partial failure of consideration, if properly pleaded, may be shown as a defense in whole or pro tanto, in an action on a negotiable instrument; and in later decisions it is said that while a distinction has sometimes been made between a partial failure of consideration and a partial want of consideration, either is a defense pro tanto as between the original parties to the note or holder with notice. Brown v. Roberts, 90 Minn. 314, 96 N. W. 793; Nichols & S. Co. v. Soderquist, 77 Minn. 509, 80 N. W. 630. And this is true although the note is given for the purchase price of real estate. Durrant v. Tuttle, 50 Minn. 426, 52 N. W. 909; Torinus v. Buckham, 29 Minn. 128, 12 N. W. 348.

In New York it has been said that the defense of total failure of consideration is proper, but where the consideration is only partial the defense can go only by way of recoupment, which, except for the form of pleading, means substantially the same 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

thing. Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill, 171. But this distinction is not maintained by the New York cases. Thus, Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. 431, holds that partial failure of consideration may be given in evidence to reduce the amount of complainant's recovery in an action on a note; and reference is made to Beecker v. Vrooman, 13 Johns. 302, holding that deceit in a sale of the chattel may be shown in bar or in mitigation, and it is said that the same principle will admit the defense of partial failure of consideration. And in Burton v. Stewart, 3 Wend. 236, 20 Am. Dec. 692, partial failure of consideration of a note is held a proper defense pro tanto in a suit on a note between the parties, thereto, where notice of the defense is given. And the rule is stated in Lewis v. Wilson, 1 Edw. Ch. 305: "In an action at law founded upon the original consideration of a sale, or upon the security given for the purchase money, the defendant may give in evidence under a notice with his plea, a fraud or deceit in the sale, or a breach of warranty, and may show a total or partial failure of consideration; and he will either defeat the action altogether, or lessen the amount of the recovery against him, according to circumstances."

Another court drawing the same distinction as the early New York case mentioned (Batterman v. Pierce) holds that a failure of consideration, to be a defense to an action on a note, must be total, and when some portion of the consideration yet remains, the defense can go in only by way of recoupment of damages for the partial failure. Packwood v. Clark, 2 Sawy. 546, Fed. Cas. No. 10,656.

A distinction has sometimes been made between cases involving a partial failure of the consideration for a note given for personal property, and when given for real estate. This distinction is made in Herbert v. Ford, 29 Me. 546, holding that partial failure of consideration is a defense pro tanto to an action on a note given for the purchase price of property other than real estate, conveyed by instrument containing covenants of warranty; and it is unnecessary in making this defense that there should be a restoration by the defendant of what he received under the contract. Other cases drawing the same distinction may be found under subdivision v. c.

And in Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649, it is said that "when real estate is the consideration, the law perhaps is different, and a partial defect in title, so long as the contract is unrescinded, could not be alleged as a defense to an action for the purchase money; and this difference is to be attributed to the extensive jurisdiction exercised by chancery over the title to real estate, by causing it to be perfected; and to the additional cause that the vendee sustains no injury by a defect of title so long as he retains the possession."

But by the weight of authority a partial failure of consideration for a note given for the purchase price of real estate may be availed of as a defense pro tanto in an action on the note, to the same extent as when the consideration of the note is personal property. Durment v. Tuttle and Torinus v. Buckham, supra.

In an early Georgia case it is held that in an action on a note given for the purchase price of land, partial failure of consideration is no defense. Jordan v. Jordan, Dudley (Ga.) 181. At least, unless that part which has failed may be clearly and distinctly ascertained. Hinton v. Scott, Dudley (Ga.) 245. But in Gauldin v. Shehee, 20 Ga. 531, it is held that the defense of partial failure of consideration may be made in an action on a note for the purchase price of land, where the failure of consideration is based upon misrepresentations as to the quantity of the land. And the general rule is asserted in Satterfield v. Spier, 114 Ga. 127, 39 S. E. 930, that partial failure of consideration is a good defense pro tanto to an action on a note given for the purchase price of land, where it is specially pleaded. And this rule is recognized in Krauss v. Flournoy, 7 Ga. App. 322, 66 S. E. 805. In other cases it is held that the general rule sustaining the right to reduce the amount to be recovered by showing a partial failure of consideration applies to an action on a note given for the purchase price of real estate, where the partial failure does not relate to the title. Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699; Smith v. Capers, 13 Ark. 9.

So, where there is a partial failure of the consideration for a note given for land, it may be relied upon as a defense pro tanto to the note where not based upon a defect in the title, but some other fact, such as fraud or misrepresentation. As where the purchaser obtains a perfect title to the whole estate and yet finds the estate to be different from what it was fraudulently represented to be, he can have no remedy upon any covenants usually found in the conveyance, and hence must rely upon the remedy which the law provides. This might be by independent action for the fraud, but to avoid circuity of action, as well as to protect the purchaser against insolvency of the grantor, the former may make his defense in an action by the latter on the note given for the land. Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 308, 46 Am. Dec. 598, followed in Coburn v. Ware, 30 Me. 202; Morrison v. Jewell, 34 Me. 146; Thompson v. Mansfield, 43 Me. 490; Hodgdon v. Golder, 75 Me. 293.

It has been held that a failure of the consideration of a purchase price note, in whole or in part, after a valid assignment thereof before maturity, will not avail the makers as a defense in a suit by the assignee, even though the latter had full knowledge of the original consideration for which the note was given prior to acquiring it. Spilvallo v. Patten, 38 Cal. 138, 99 Am. Dec. 358.

IV. Doctrine that partial want or failure is no defense pro tanto.

a. In general.

In other jurisdictions, while it is conceded that total failure of the consideration for a note given for the purchase price of property is a defense in toto to an action on the note, it is, however, apparently denied that a partial failure of consideration constitutes a defense even pro tanto, and the defendant is denied the right to assert such a defense either under a general plea or by a special plea or answer.

U. S.—Boone v. Queen, 2 Cranch, C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 1,643; Varnum v. Mauro, 2 Cranch, C. C. 425, Fed. Cas. No. 16,889; Greenleaf v. Cook, 2 Wheat. 13, 4 L. ed. 172; Scudder v. Andrews, 2 McLean, 464, Fed. Cas. No. 12,564. But see later Federal cases, supra, III.

Del.—Mills v. Gilpin, 2 Harr. (Del.) 32. D. C.—Brown v. Ohio Nat. Bank, 18 App. D. C. 609.

Ky.—Ousley v. Beasley, 4 Bibb, 277; Coleman v. Harper, 1 A. K. Marsh. 602; Wood v. Waters, 1 Litt. 176, 13 Am. Dec. 228; Wise v. Kelly, 2 A. K. Marsh. 545; Ball v. Jackson, 1 A. K. Marsh. 176; Williams v. Briscoe, 1 A. K. Marsh. 168.

N. J.—Bouker v. Randles, 31 N. J. L. 335; Allen v. Bank of United States, 20 N. J. L. 620, disapproved in Wyckoff v. Runyon, 33 N. J. L. 107 (quoted from infra).

N. C.—Jones v. Rhea, 122 N. C. 721, 30 S. E. 346; Johnston v. Smith, 86 N. C. 498; Evans v. Williamson, 79 N. C. 86; Washburn v. Picot, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 390.

W. Va.—Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917.

Eng.—Morgan v. Richardson, 1 Campb. 40, note, 7 East, 482, 3 Smith, 487, 10 Revised Rep. 624, note; Archer v. Bamford, 3 Stark. 175, 1 L. J. K. B. 228; Obbard v. Betham, Moody & M. 483, 8 L. J. K. B. 254. But see English cases, supra, III.

Disapproving the doctrine that partial failure of consideration is not a defense pro tanto, Beasley, Ch. J., in Wyckoff v. Runyon, 33 N. J. L. 107, remarked that "it has never given satisfaction either to the bench or to the legal profession. And it would have been singular if this distaste of the rule had not prevailed, for to reject a defense merely on the ground that a note has passed between the parties, in cases in which such defense would otherwise be legitimate, certainly savors more of superfluous refinement than of practical wisdom. In the absence of the note now in suit, a partial failure of the subject of the sale could have been shown as a defense pro tanto. Why then between the same parties should the giving of the note cut off such defense? There is clearly no more inconvenience in trying the question of a partial failure of consideration in the one case than in the other; nor is a plaintiff in any degree more liable to be taken by surprise when his action is based upon a note than he would be if he resorted to the consideration of the note as the foundation of his action. While, on the other hand, the obvious inconvenience, not to say palpable injustice, of the operation of the rule in question, is often painfully manifest. Its inevitable result, whenever applied, is to double litigation, for the failure of the consideration, the proof of which is excluded, lays the ground for a cross action; and in those cases in which the plaintiff in the first suit chances to be insolvent, such cross action fails altogether to retrieve the money which has been unjustly taken from the defendant. In such a formula I can see nothing but an obstacle to the attainment of an ultimate decision on the merits of the case."

While the foregoing cases may be said to sustain the doctrine as stated and language is to be found in the opinions supporting the same, yet it cannot be said that the opinions are entirely clear on the subject. The difficulty is that, as a rule, the facts appearing in the opinions in many of the cases do not clearly show whether or not the court had squarely before it the question whether a partial failure of consideration was a good defense pro tanto to an action on a note if properly pleaded, although as stated the reasoning of the court sustains the doctrine that a partial failure, even under such circumstances, is not a defense pro tanto. The same, however, may also be said of Pulsifer v. Hotchkiss, 12 Conn. 234, and yet in a later case in that court (Avery v. Brown, 31 Conn. 398), it is pointed out that this was really not the point before the court, and that it is not authority for this doctrine.

The Pulsifer Case has frequently been construed as supporting the doctrine that partial failure of consideration is not a defense pro tanto in an action on a note. Although there is language used in the opinion which gives some support to this view, the opinion as a whole, however, indicates that the question the court was really considering was whether a partial failure of consideration, the amount of which was unliquidated, was a bar to an action on a note, rather than whether or not it could be availed of in mitigation of the amount sought to be recovered; and this has been the construction placed upon this decision in later decisions by the same court.

In Avery v. Brown, it is said that the Pulsifer Case "has sometimes been misunderstood, and we think does not sustain the position to support which it was cited by the counsel in the case before us. It was not in that case decided that the defendant could take no advantage of the plaintiff's false and fraudulent representations and the consequent failure of consideration for the note, because he had not repudiated the contract and restored or offered to restore the consideration, such as it was, to the plaintiff; but only that if the failure of consideration was partial only, and not entire, he could in that particular case take no advantage of such partial failure, because the defendant's damage, or the amount to be deducted from the plaintiff's demand, was merely conjectural, unliquidated, and incapable of liquidation by any known rule.

The judge does not mean, as the counsel assume, that if the partial failure of consideration was owing to the plaintiff's fraud, no advantage could be taken of it to reduce the plaintiff's recovery, because the defendant had not repudiated the contract and restored the consideration, but because the amount to be deducted was unliquidated, and incapable of liquidation by any known rule. . . . When personal property is sold with a warranty of soundness, and proves unsound, and suit is brought for the price of it, the defendant's damages by reason of such unsoundness are in one sense unliquidated and uncertain, but id certum est quod certum reddi potest. . . . There is no more difficulty in showing by evidence the damages which a party has sustained by reason of another's fraud or breach of contract in relation to the quantity, quality, or value of property of either kind, when as a defendant he seeks to have that damage applied in reduction of the plaintiff's claim against him for the stipulated price of such property, than there is when the purchaser sues for the recovery of the same damages in another suit."

The fact that the Connecticut decision referred to shows that the earlier Connecticut case on this point has been misconstrued raises a question as to whether or not other cases which also seemingly passed upon the point really had the question presented. Thus, in the opinions in the following cases, language may be found sustaining the general doctrine as stated; nevertheless a close examination of the cases fails clearly to show that the specific question was raised. The facts as they are disclosed in the opinions, would seem rather to indicate the real question before the court to have been whether a partial failure of consideration was a complete defense to the action, or whether the defense could be made under the pleadings.

In Brown v. Ohio Nat. Bank, 18 App. D. C. 609, the rule is stated that it is settled law that failure of consideration must be total to constitute a good defense to an action upon a promise, the case in this respect citing and relying upon Greenleaf v. Cook, 2 Wheat. 13, 4 L. ed. 172.

And Mills v. Gilpin, 2 Harr. (Del.) 32, holds that partial failure of consideration cannot be set up as a defense to an action on a bill, but it must be the subject of a cross action.

In an action on a bill of exchange for goods purchased, a partial failure of consideration based on the bad quality of the goods is no defense. Morgan v. Richardson, 1 Campb. 40, note, 7 East, 482, 3 Smith, 487, 10 Revised Rep. 624, note. To the same effect, see Tye v. Gwynne, 2 Campb. 346.

Neither the defense of entire or partial failure of consideration may be made to an action on a note, unless there has been a rescission or an offer to rescind the contract out of which the note grew. Stone v. Peake, 16 Vt. 213; Burton v. Schermerhorn, 21 Vt. 289. And the rule is settled in Vermont that a partial failure of consideration is no defense, even pro tanto, unless the amount of the failure is liquidated. See infra, 6.

This doctrine, however, was questioned and disapproved in Kelly v. Pember, 35 Vt. 183, wherein, referring to the rule that a partial failure of consideration is no defense to a note where there has been no offer to rescind the contract, Peck, J., says: "I never could see why such defense ought not to be allowed in actions on notes and bills of exchange as well as in other actions, except where the suit on such paper is by an innocent holder for value. If there is such a rule, there ought not to be; it is sustained by no principle of policy, convenience, or justice. While a promissory note remains in the hands of the original contracting parties, there is no sound reason why it should receive any more protection or immunity in this respect than any other contract."

d. When amount is unliquidated.

The New Hampshire court, while holding that partial failure is a good defense if the amount is liquidated (Earl v. Page, 6 N. H. 477, 28 Am. Dec. 711; Haseltine v. Guild, 11 N. H. 390), denies that a mere partial failure of consideration constitutes a defense to an action on a note given for the purchase price of the property, where the amount is not liquidated. Chase v. Weston, 12 N. H. 413 (note given for land conveyed with covenants of warranty; breach of warranty relied on for failure of consideration); Fletcher v. Chase, 16 N. H. 38 (facts similar to the preceding case); Riddle v. Gage, 37 N. H. 519, 75 Am. Dec. 151; Nichols v. Hunton, 45 N. H. 470 (Partial failure of consideration, if the amount is fraud); Pike v. Taylor, 49 N. H. 124.

It makes no difference whether the note is given for personality or realty; partial failure of consideration, if the amount is not liquidated or readily subject to computation, does not constitute a defense to the note. Riddle v. Gage, 37 N. H. 519, 75 Am. Dec. 151.

Thus, where a note is given for different tracts or parcels of land, and the title as to one of the tracts entirely fails, and hence the amount of the failure of consideration may be ascertained by mere computation, a defense of partial failure of consideration can be made as to such parcel, but not as to the other parcels where there has been a partial failure merely. Drew v. Towle, 27 N. H. 412, 59 Am. Dec. 380.

But now, by statute, partial failure of consideration, wherever total failure or want of consideration would be a defense, is also a defense, and the amount need not be liquidated. Pike v. Taylor, 49 N. H. 124; Butler v. Northumberland, 50 N. H. 33.

In Vermont, except as changed by statute, the rule obtains that partial failure of consideration is not a defense pro tanto to an action on a note, unless the amount to be deducted by reason of the failure is liquidated or of certain computation. Walker v. Smith, 2 Vt. 539; Stone v. Peake, 16 Vt. 213; Richardson v. Sanborn, 33 Vt. 75; Foster v. Phaley, 35 Vt. 303; Thrall v. Horton, 44 Vt. 386; Hoyt v. McNally, 66 Vt. 39, 28 Atl. 417; Craigie v. Hall, 73 Vt. 104, 50 Atl. 806.

In order that the defendant be entitled to an abatement from the sum for which a note is given, in assessing the damages in an action thereon, fraud must be shown in procuring the note for the sum named, and an offer by the defendant to rescind, also the ability by computation to fix the amount to be deducted. Harrington v. Lee, 33 Vt. 249.

Partial failure of consideration is no answer to an action on a note given for the purchase price of an article, unless the amount is certain and liquidated. Goldie & Mc. C. Co. v. Harper, 31 Ont. Rep. 284. The amount sought to be deducted must be liquidated and a matter of definite computation. Day v. Nix, 9 J. B. Moore, 159, 2 L. J. C. P. 133.

Thus, a plea to an action on a bill of exchange, in substance that the defendant accepted the bill on the faith of the goods being shipped at certain times, some of which were shipped, but not all, but admitting acceptance and liability for those shipped, constitutes a good defense pro tanto to the action, the plea clearly showing the value of the goods received and accepted. Agra & M. Bank v. Leighton, L. R. 2 Exch. 56, 4 Hurlst. & C. 656, 36 L. J. Exch. N. S. 33. In reaching this conclusion, the court points out that it is not intended to throw doubt upon the cases holding that, where the defendant seeks to discharge himself on the ground of partial failure of consideration he cannot do so by setting up partial failure where based upon unliquidated damages.

In Pulsifer v. Hotchkiss, 12 Conn. 234, in an action of assumpsit in which the general issue is pleaded, the rule is recognized that the amount to be recovered on a note given for the purchase price of property may be reduced by showing a partial failure of consideration if the amount is liquidated.

Where the parties have agreed upon the amount, a partial failure of consideration may be relied upon as a defense pro tanto, but not where the extent of the failure is open. Elminger v. Drew, 4 McLean, 368, Fed. Cas. No. 4,416.

In Massachusetts it is well settled that where there is a partial want of consideration, as in case of a note given on two distinct considerations, one of them invalid, it is no objection to the reduction of the damages that the amount to be deducted is unliquidated. Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198, 25 Am. Dec. 378; Harrington v. Stratton, 22 Pick. 510. And this is the general rule supported by the weight of authority. See cases supra, III.

But even where the rule obtains that the amount of the failure of consideration need not be liquidated, it is clear that where, in a suit on a note, the matter as to which there has been a partial failure of consideration is so uncertain in its character that there is no method by which the damage arising therefrom may be estimated or determined, the partial failure will not affect the recovery. Schaffner v. Kober, 2 Ind. App. 409, 28 N. E. 871.

V. Effect of warranty clause in contract.

a. In general.

Whether the right to defend pro tanto an action on a note for failure of consideration is affected by the existence in the contract which constitutes the consideration for the note, of covenants of warranty relating to the subject-matter of the failure of consideration, is a question as to which the courts are not in entire accord. In some cases a distinction is made between the right to make such defense when there are no covenants in the contract, and the right as to contracts containing such covenants. These cases are disposed of apparently on the theory that a grantee in a deed containing covenants of warranty must pay the purchase money and rely upon the covenants for redress. But this doctrine does not prevail in many jurisdictions. Another remedy is afforded the purchaser. He may defend an action on a note for the purchase money by showing a total or partial failure of consideration, based upon a defect in his title, although he is also protected by covenants of warranty. In the latter class of cases the courts refuse to distinguish between contracts containing warranty clauses and those in which there are no such contracts, and, in effect or expressly, deny the soundness of the distinction between the two classes of contracts as made by some courts.

The fallacy of this distinction is pointed out in Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649. The court reasons: "Where 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

fraud enters into the transaction, it is competent for the defendant, upon proof of it, to show a defect in the consideration in diminution of damages. This qualified admission of the defense originated from the rule that fraud avoids a contract ab initio. In point of justice I can discover no sufficient reason for permitting the defense to be set up, where there is a fraud in the transaction, and denying it where there is a false warranty unaccompanied by a fraud. In either case it is the duty of the jury to graduate the plaintiff's recovery by the injury which the defendant has sustained."

Considering the question with reference to a warranty in the sale of land, breached by a defect in title, thereby destroying the consideration for a note given for the land, in Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107, the court said: "I can see no good reason why the defendant, to avoid circuity of action, should not be permitted to plead such total failure of consideration as an absolute bar to the suit, in the same manner as if the note or bond had been given upon the sale of a horse warranted sound, which turned out to be unsound and entirely valueless. In either case it may be said that the whole consideration had not failed, as the warranty itself formed a part of the consideration for the note or bond given upon the purchase. But the effect of setting up such a defense would operate as an estoppel to the purchaser, if he should attempt to bring an action for a breach of warranty after he had been once satisfied for his damages in this manner; or if the jury found a verdict which, in terms or by necessary implication, negatived the existence of the facts set up in his plea."

On the same point in Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509, it is said that "it is more reasonable that when a suit is brought to recover the price of an article, that any reduction of the stipulated price to which the defendant may be entitled, either from a fraud or breach of warranty in the sale, should be made in the action in which the price is sought to be recovered, than that he should be driven to his cross action for a redress of the injury. This course avoids circuity of action. A second suit about the same matter should not be tolerated, where a fair opportunity can be afforded by the first to do complete justice to the parties. And when individuals are apprised that this defense will attach to the security they may receive for an article sold, they will be less eager to obtain an advantage in their contracts, than if they are taught that a note, when once given, must be paid and the injured party driven to his cross action for redress. Many would submit to the imposition sooner than redress themselves by a suit, who would readily make a defense, were it permitted in an action for the price of an article in the sale of which they have been wronged. The better opinion seems to be that this defense will not be allowed, unless the party relying on it has previously given his adversary notice that he would insist on it at the trial."

b. Rule that right is not affected by clause.

A buyer may plead want of consideration, partial or complete, to an action upon a note given for the purchase price of property, where there has been a breach of warranty. Huntington v. Lombard, 22 Wash. 202, 60 Pac. 414. And where pleaded, the defense of partial failure of consideration for breach of warranty may be made. Cornish v. Friedman, 94 Ark. 282, 126 S. W. 1079. And it constitutes a good defense pro tanto. Comparet v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. 59.

For the purpose of avoiding circuity of action, the defendant in an action on a note may allege and prove in defense, either of the entire action or pro tanto, total or partial failure of consideration, based upon a breach of warranty or fraud in the sale of property in payment of which the note was given. Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 311.

And where a partial failure of consideration is relied upon, a rescission of the contract or offer to return the property is not a prerequisite to the right to make the defense, and although the defendant may be able to sustain an independent action for fraud or breach of warranty, he may also prove in reduction of damages such fraud or breach of warranty as constituting a partial failure of consideration. Herbert v. Ford, 29 Me. 546.

And it is immaterial whether the warranty is express or implied. The purchaser of goods in either case may show a partial failure of consideration in defense pro tanto of an action against him on a note given for the purchase money, without returning the goods. Brantley v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 270.

In an action on a note given for land, although a deed of conveyance contains covenants of warranty and seisin, total failure of title may be depended upon as a defense to the note on the ground of total failure of consideration, the covenants themselves not being sufficient consideration. Rice v. Goddard, 14 Pick. 293, disapproving Lloyd v. Jewell, 1 Me. 360, 10 Am. Dec. 73.

And by the weight of authority, the defendant may mitigate damages recoverable on a note given for land, where there has been a partial failure of consideration owing to a defective title, provided the defense is specially pleaded. Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358; McHenry v. Yokum, 27 Ill. 160; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107.

In Williams v. Neely, 69 L.R.A. 232, 67 C. C. A. 171, 134 Fed. 1, the rule is stated that a partial failure of consideration wrought by a defective title is a good defense pro tanto to an action upon a note for the purchase price of land conveyed by warranty deed.

Unless the purchaser of land has agreed to run the risk of title, he may defend himself in an action on a note given for the purchase money, by showing that the title is defective, either in whole or in part, without reference to whether or not there are covenants of general warranty and title in the instrument of conveyance. Roland v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 390; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74.

In many jurisdictions, however, in order that this defense be availed of, the defect in the title must expose the purchaser to the danger, or in fact to the certainty, of eviction. Cooper v. Singleton, 19 Tex. 260, 70 Am. Dec. 333.

According to the holding of these cases, although a deed contains a warranty clause, if a legal eviction is shown or a liability to an eviction, a defense of partial failure of consideration may be made in an action on a note given for the purchase price of the land. Price v. Blount, 41 Tex. 472; Zimpelman v. Hipwell, 4 C. C. A. 615, 2 U. S. App. 568, 54 Fed. 851.

In Frisbie v. Hoffnagle, 11 Johns. 50, the defense of failure of consideration of a note given for land was permitted where it appeared that the title had failed by reason of the sale of the land under a judgment against the grantor, although the defendant had not been evicted and the conveyance was by warranty deed. The rule, however, in New York, as announced in later cases, is that eviction or something tantamount to eviction, is necessary to entitle the defendant to make the defense of failure of consideration. Bibbard v. Johnson, 19 Johns. 77; Whitney v. Lewis, 21 Wend. 132; Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107. In the latter case, referring to Frisbie v. Hoffnagle, it is said that the court probably proceeded upon the ground that there was a moral certainty that the defendant must be turned out of possession under the sheriff's deed.

The reason for limiting the right to set up failure of consideration as a defense to cases where there has been an eviction, or something tantamount to an eviction, is thus stated in Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107: "Where there is a covenant of warranty merely, which covenant is not broken until there has been an eviction, or something equivalent to an eviction, there appears to be great difficulty in permitting the purchaser to show a total or a partial failure of title, either in bar of the suit or to reduce the amount of the recovery. It is a well-known fact that land is frequently conveyed with general warranty, which is warranty against eviction only, when both parties to the sale perfectly understand that the title is doubtful, or that there is some outstanding contingent interest which may, perhaps, at a future period, be the means of evicting the purchaser; and to protect the purchaser and enable him to recover against the vendor in case of eviction, the covenant of warranty is inserted in the deed. And yet in many cases of this kind, the purchaser continues to hold and enjoy the land until all question as to the title is removed, by lapse of time or otherwise. Now, in such cases, if the purchaser were permitted to set up an outstanding title in the original patentees or their heirs, or in some-reduced by showing a partial failure of consideration if the amount is liquidated.

Where the parties have agreed upon the amount, a partial failure of consideration may be relied upon as a defense pro tanto, but not where the extent of the failure is open. Elminger v. Drew, 4 McLean, 388, Fed. Cas. No. 4,416.

In Massachusetts it is well settled that where there is a partial want of consideration, as in case of a note given on two distinct considerations, one of them invalid, it is no objection to the reduction of the damages that the amount to be deducted is unliquidated. Parish v. Stone, 14 Pick. 198, 25 Am. Dec. 378; Harrington v. Stratton, 22 Pick. 510. And this is the general rule supported by the weight of authority. See cases supra, III.

But even where the rule obtains that the amount of the failure of consideration need not be liquidated, it is clear that where, in a suit on a note, the matter as to which there has been a partial failure of consideration is so uncertain in its character that there is no method by which the damage arising therefrom may be estimated or determined, the partial failure will not affect the recovery. Schaffner v. Kober, 2 Ind. App. 409, 28 N. E. 871.

V. Effect of warranty clause in contract.

a. In general.

Whether the right to defend pro tanto an action on a note for failure of consideration is affected by the existence in the contract which constitutes the consideration for the note, of covenants of warranty relating to the subject-matter of the failure of consideration, is a question as to which the courts are not in entire accord. In some cases a distinction is made between the right to make such defense when there are no covenants in the contract, and the right as to contracts containing such covenants. These cases are disposed of apparently on the theory that a grantee in a deed containing covenants of warranty must pay the purchase money and rely upon the covenants for redress. But this doctrine does not prevail in many jurisdictions. Another remedy is afforded the purchaser. He may defend an action on a note for the purchase money by showing a total or partial failure of consideration, based upon a defect in his title, although he is also protected by covenants of warranty. In the latter class of cases the courts refuse to distinguish between contracts containing warranty clauses and those in which there are no such contracts, and, in effect or expressly, deny the soundness of the distinction between the two classes of contracts as made by some courts.

The fallacy of this distinction is pointed out in Peden v. Moore, 1 Stew. & P. 71, 21 Am. Dec. 649. The court reasons: "Where 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

fraud enters into the transaction, it is competent for the defendant, upon proof of it, to show a defect in the consideration in diminution of damages. This qualified admission of the defense originated from the rule that fraud avoids a contract ab initio. In point of justice I can discover no sufficient reason for permitting the defense to be set up, where there is a fraud in the transaction, and denying it where there is a false warranty unaccompanied by a fraud. In either case it is the duty of the jury to graduate the plaintiff's recovery by the injury which the defendant has sustained."

Considering the question with reference to a warranty in the sale of land, breached by a defect in title, thereby destroying the consideration for a note given for the land, in Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107, the court said: "I can see no good reason why the defendant, to avoid circuity of action, should not be permitted to plead such total failure of consideration as an absolute bar to the suit, in the same manner as if the note or bond had been given upon the sale of a horse warranted sound, which turned out to be unsound and entirely valueless. In either case it may be said that the whole consideration had not failed, as the warranty itself formed a part of the consideration for the note or bond given upon the purchase. But the effect of setting up such a defense would operate as an estoppel to the purchaser, if he should attempt to bring an action for a breach of warranty after he had been once satisfied for his damages in this manner; or if the jury found a verdict which, in terms or by necessary implication, negatived the existence of the facts set up in his plea."

On the same point in Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509, it is said that "it is more reasonable that when a suit is brought to recover the price of an article, that any reduction of the stipulated price to which the defendant may be entitled, either from a fraud or breach of warranty in the sale, should be made in the action in which the price is sought to be recovered, than that he should be driven to his cross action for a redress of the injury. This course avoids circuity of action. A second suit about the same matter should not be tolerated, where a fair opportunity can be afforded by the first to do complete justice to the parties. And when individuals are apprised that this defense will attach to the security they may receive for an article sold, they will be less eager to obtain an advantage in their contracts, than if they are taught that a note, when once given, must be paid and the injured party driven to his cross action for redress. Many would submit to the imposition sooner than redress themselves by a suit, who would readily make a defense, were it permitted in an action for the price of an article in the sale of which they have been wronged. The better opinion seems to be that this defense will not be allowed, unless the party relying on it has previously given his adversary notice that he would insist on it at the trial."

b. Rule that right is not affected by clause.

A buyer may plead want of consideration, partial or complete, to an action upon a note given for the purchase price of property, where there has been a breach of warranty. Huntington v. Lombard, 22 Wash. 202, 60 Pac. 414. And where pleaded, the defense of partial failure of consideration for breach of warranty may be made. Cornish v. Friedman, 94 Ark. 282, 126 S. W. 1079. And it constitutes a good defense pro tanto. Comparet v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. 59.

For the purpose of avoiding circuity of action, the defendant in an action on a note may allege and prove in defense, either of the entire action or pro tanto, total or partial failure of consideration, based upon a breach of warranty or fraud in the sale of property in payment of which the note was given. Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 311.

And where a partial failure of consideration is relied upon, a rescission of the contract or offer to return the property is not a prerequisite to the right to make the defense, and although the defendant may be able to sustain an independent action for fraud or breach of warranty, he may also prove in reduction of damages such fraud or breach of warranty as constituting a partial failure of consideration. Herbert v. Ford, 29 Me. 546.

And it is immaterial whether the warranty is express or implied. The purchaser of goods in either case may show a partial failure of consideration in defense pro tanto of an action against him on a note given for the purchase money, without returning the goods. Brantley v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 270.

In an action on a note given for land, although a deed of conveyance contains covenants of warranty and seisin, total failure of title may be depended upon as a defense to the note on the ground of total failure of consideration, the covenants themselves not being sufficient consideration. Rice v. Goddard, 14 Pick. 293, disapproving Lloyd v. Jewell, 1 Me. 360, 10 Am. Dec. 73.

And by the weight of authority, the defendant may mitigate damages recoverable on a note given for land, where there has been a partial failure of consideration owing to a defective title, provided the defense is specially pleaded. Davis v. Bean, 114 Mass. 358; McHenry v. Yokum, 27 Ill. 160; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107.

In Williams v. Neely, 69 L.R.A. 232, 67 C. C. A. 171, 134 Fed. 1, the rule is stated that a partial failure of consideration wrought by a defective title is a good defense pro tanto to an action upon a note for the purchase price of land conveyed by warranty deed.

Unless the purchaser of land has agreed to run the risk of title, he may defend himself in an action on a note given for the purchase money, by showing that the title is defective, either in whole or in part, without reference to whether or not there are covenants of general warranty and title in the instrument of conveyance. Roland v. Miller, 3 Watts & S. 390; Wilson v. Cochran, 46 Pa. 229; Cross v. Noble, 67 Pa. 74.

In many jurisdictions, however, in order that this defense be availed of, the defect in the title must expose the purchaser to the danger, or in fact to the certainty, of eviction. Cooper v. Singleton, 19 Tex. 260, 70 Am. Dec. 333.

According to the holding of these cases, although a deed contains a warranty clause, if a legal eviction is shown or a liability to an eviction, a defense of partial failure of consideration may be made in an action on a note given for the purchase price of the land. Price v. Blount, 41 Tex. 472; Zimpelman v. Hipwell, 4 C. C. A. 615, 2 U. S. App. 568, 54 Fed. 851.

In Frisbie v. Hoffnagle, 11 Johns. 50, the defense of failure of consideration of a note given for land was permitted where it appeared that the title had failed by reason of the sale of the land under a judgment against the grantor, although the defendant had not been evicted and the conveyance was by warranty deed. The rule, however, in New York, as announced in later cases, is that eviction or something tantamount to eviction, is necessary to entitle the defendant to make the defense of failure of consideration. Bibbard v. Johnson, 19 Johns. 77; Whitney v. Lewis, 21 Wend. 132; Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107. In the latter case, referring to Frisbie v. Hoffnagle, it is said that the court probably proceeded upon the ground that there was a moral certainty that the defendant must be turned out of possession under the sheriff's deed.

The reason for limiting the right to set up failure of consideration as a defense to cases where there has been an eviction, or something tantamount to an eviction, is thus stated in Tallmadge v. Wallis, 25 Wend. 107: "Where there is a covenant of warranty merely, which covenant is not broken until there has been an eviction, or something equivalent to an eviction, there appears to be great difficulty in permitting the purchaser to show a total or a partial failure of title, either in bar of the suit or to reduce the amount of the recovery. It is a well-known fact that land is frequently conveyed with general warranty, which is warranty against eviction only, when both parties to the sale perfectly understand that the title is doubtful, or that there is some outstanding contingent interest which may, perhaps, at a future period, be the means of evicting the purchaser; and to protect the purchaser and enable him to recover against the vendor in case of eviction, the covenant of warranty is inserted in the deed. And yet in many cases of this kind, the purchaser continues to hold and enjoy the land until all question as to the title is removed, by lapse of time or otherwise. Now, in such cases, if the purchaser were permitted to set up an outstanding title in the original patentees or their heirs, or in someone who had received a title directly or indirectly from them, it might be very difficult, if not impossible, for the vendor to trace a perfect claim of title from the original patentee to himself, although he was in fact the legal owner of the premises at the time of the sale. Permitting the purchaser to set up such a defense before eviction would, as a general rule, be making a new contract for the parties which they never intended to make for themselves."

And in Hoy v. Taliáferro, 8 Smedes & M. 727, it is said that where there has been an eviction, the defense of failure of consideration may be let in because the superiority of the outstanding title is then established by a judicial determination.

o. Rule that remedy is limited to action on covenant.

It has been held that where there is a remedy by action for breach of warranty, if the defendant has been put in possession of a portion of the land purchased, he cannot successfully defend an action on a note given for the purchase price by showing a partial failure of consideration, based upon his inability to obtain possession of all the land. Johnson v. Lewis, 10 Mo. 153.

And it is held in early Maine cases that, in an action on a note or notes given for the purchase price of real estate conveyed by deed containing the usual covenants of warranty and seisin, it is not competent to show, by way of defense, failure of title or partial failure of title or want of title in the grantor, the theory being that the remedy is by action on the covenants, and that the covenants themselves are a sufficient consideration for the note. Lloyd v. Jewell, 1 Me. 352, 10 Am. Dec. 73; Howard v. Witham, 2 Me. 390; Wentworth v. Goodwin, 21 Me. 150.

If there are no covenants of title, failure of title is a defense. Howard v. Witham, 2 Me. 390.

Notwithstanding a covenant of general warranty in a deed of land, if the grantor has no title thereto, this fact may be given in evidence in defense of an action on notes given for the purchase price, brought either by the grantor or a subsequent holder standing in the shoes of the grantor; but a defect of title must be entire, so that nothing valuable passes by the deed; if anything actually passes to the grantee, although less than an absolute interest, it becomes a case of unliquidated damages, the remedy for which is by action for breach of covenant. Jenness v. Parker, 24 Me. 289.

The rule obtaining in Maine, that a partial failure of title constituted no defense to a suit on a note given for the real estate, has been abrogated by a statute authorizing such a defense in any proceeding in which the amount due on a note given for the price of land is in question and a total failure of consideration would be a defense. Hathorn v. Wheelwright, 99 Me. 351, 59 Atl. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

517, 2 Ann. Cas. 428; Tuttle v. Tuttle, 101 Me. 287, 64 Atl. 496, 8 Ann. Cas. 260.

In Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699, it is held that partial failure of consideration may be relied upon as a defense to an action on a note given for real estate, providing the failure does not relate to title. It cannot, however, be relied upon if failure of consideration does relate to the title.

But it has been held that as to the acceptor of a bill of exchange accepted in part payment of real estate who receives some consideration therefor, and does not rescind the contract, it is no defense that, by reason of false representations of the vendor, consideration for the bill has in part failed. Archer v. Bamford, 3 Stark. 175, 1 L. J. K. B. 228.

Although in Florida by statute partial failure of consideration may be shown with like efficiency as where the failure is total, nevertheless a partial failure of consideration where based on a failure to receive the quantity of land described in a deed is not a good defense to an action on a note given for the land, even to the extent of the deficiency. Reddick v. Mickler, 23 Fla. 335, 2 So. 698.

And it has been held that partial failure of the consideration for a note given for the purchase price of land, based on an encumbrance on the title which the defendant has paid, is no defense, although the encumbrance constitutes a breach of the covenant. Hassam v. Dompier, 28 Vt. 32.

VI. Statutory provisions.

The matter is now regulated in many states by statutes which provide that total or partial failure of consideration is a defense to an action on a purchase price note to the extent of the failure, providing the plaintiff is not a bona fide holder for value of the note sued on.

Ill.—Davis v. McVickers, 11 Ill. 327; Beers v. Williams, 16 Ill. 69; Bryant v. Sears, 16 Ill. 288; Hill v. Enders, 19 Ill. 163; Marsh v. Bennett, 22 Ill. 313; Morgan v. Fallenstein, 27 Ill. 31; McHenry v. Yokum, 27 Ill. 160; Schuchmann v. Knoebel, 27 Ill. 175; Great Western Ins. Co. v. Rees, 29 Ill. 272; Christy v. Ogle, 33 Ill. 295; Keith v. Maftt, 38 Ill. 303; Vining v. Leeman, 45 Ill. 246; Oertel v. Schroeder, 48 Ill. 133; Jones v. Buffum, 50 Ill. 277; Leggat v. Sands Ale Brewing Co. 60 Ill. 158; Honeyman v. Jarvis, 64 Ill. 366; Gage v. Lewis, 68 Ill. 604; Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46; Mann v. Smyser, 76 Ill. 365; Day v. Milligan, 72 Ill. App. 324; Robertson v. Merriam, 106 Ill. App. 610.

Iowa—Griffey v. Payne, Morris (Iowa) 68; Plano Mfg. Co. v. Farrell, 110 Iowa, 577, 81 N. W. 772.

Mo.—Shepherd v. Padgitt, 91 Mo. App. 473; Danforth v. Crookshanks, 68 Mo. App. 311; Robinson v. Powers, 63 Mo. App. 290; Brown v. Weldon, 27 Mo. App. 251; Briscoe v. Kinealy, 8 Mo. App. 76; Bank of Chilli- cothe v. Ornsdorff, 126 Mo. App. 654, 105 S. W. 664.

But under such a statute the vendee of land cannot retain the title, although only colorable, and remain in undisturbed possession, and defend an action on notes given for the purchase price. Vining v. Leeman, 45 Ill. 246.

In Florida by statute partial failure of consideration may be pleaded as a defense to an action on a purchase price note, with like efficiency as where the failure is total. Stafford v. Anders, 8 Fla. 34; Jones v. Streeter, 8 Fla. 83.

But where the action is on a note given for land, a partial failure of consideration based on the fact that in area the land is less than that described in the deed is not a good defense, even to the extent of the deficiency. Reddick v. Mickler, 23 Fla. 335, 2 So. 698.

In Maine the rule formerly obtained that a partial failure of title constituted no defense to a suit on a note given for real estate, but this rule has been abrogated by statute authorizing such defense in any proceeding in which the amount due on a note given for the price of land is in question, and a total failure of consideration would be a defense thereto. Hathorn v. Wheelwright, 99 Me. 351, 59 Atl. 517, 2 Ann. Cas. 428; Tuttle v. Tuttle, 101 Me. 287, 64 Atl. 496, 8 Ann. Cas. 260.

In Maryland by statute absence or failure of consideration is now a matter of defense, and a partial failure of consideration is a defense pro tanto, whether the failure is an ascertained or unliquidated amount, or otherwise. Burke v. Smith, 111 Md. 624, 75 Atl. 114.

In Vermont by statute partial failure of consideration may be pleaded and relied upon as a defense pro tanto to an article on a note between the original parties. This statute, however, does not extend to actions on a note by the subsequent holder thereof, without reference to any question of notice. Thrall v. Horton, 44 Vt. 386; Hoyt v. McNally, 66 Vt. 38, 28 Atl. 417; Burgess v. Nash, 66 Vt. 44, 28 Atl. 419; Russell v. Rood, 72 Vt. 238, 47 Atl. 789; Craig v. Hall, 73 Vt. 104, 50 Atl. 806.

In Williamson v. Cline, 40 W. Va. 194, 20 S. E. 917, it is asserted that at common law a partial failure of consideration or want of consideration is not a defense pro tanto, even to an action on a note, but it is said that by statute a partial failure of consideration is now a good defense pro tanto, but as the statute does not specifically cover cases involving a want of consideration, such defense cannot be made.

The rule is asserted in Acme Food Co. v. Older, 64 W. Va. 255, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 807, 61 S. E. 235, that an action may be maintained upon a purchase price note and the whole amount recovered in the absence of proof of failure of consideration; but if the thing for which the note is given fails, this can be shown by way of defense in whole or in part as the case may be. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

VII. Pleading.

a. As affected by distinction between total want and partial want or failure of consideration.

The defenses of want of consideration and total or partial failure of consideration are distinct, and either defense must be specifically pleaded in order to be availed of. The defendant cannot plead one defense and prove another under this plea. If there has been only a partial failure of consideration, it must be specifically pleaded, and cannot be proved under a plea of total failure of consideration. Wadhams v. Swan, 109 Ill. 46.

Making the same distinction in Moore v. Boyd, 95 Ind. 134, the rule is stated that want of consideration is a good defense, and may be pleaded generally, while failure of consideration to be good must be pleaded specifically; and a want of consideration may be pleaded to a part as well as to the whole of a cause of action.

And in Billan v. Hercklebrath, 23 Ind. 71, it is said that a general answer of no consideration is good, but a general answer of entire or partial failure of consideration is not good, since an answer of entire or partial failure of consideration must be set up the facts showing the failure, and if they do not show such failure, a mere averment of failure as a conclusion is not sufficient.

Want of a sufficient consideration for a promise, or failure of consideration after the promise is made, is a good defense to an action on a note, and may be made under a plea of nonassumpsit, but a partial failure of consideration cannot be set up as a defense to such an action under this plea. Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 36, 19 Am. Dec. 693.

A total or entire failure of consideration on the ground of fraud or otherwise may be given in evidence under the general issue without notice, but a partial failure cannot be given in evidence without a special notice, since it does not go to the foundation of the case and show that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything, but is merely in mitigation of damages. People ex rel. Fleming v. Niagara, C. P. 12 Wend. 246; Jones v. Swan, 6 Wend. 589.

Where the article is of any value, notice must be given of the defense of partial failure of consideration, but if the consideration entirely fails, the defense of total failure of consideration may be given under the general issue. Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509.

b. Necessity of special plea in order to make defense of total want or failure of consideration.

To avail himself of a defense of total failure of consideration for a note, the defendant need not plead the same, although based on a charge of fraud. Sill v. Rood, 15 Johns. 230.

The failure of consideration may be shown under plea of general issue. Carlisle v. Terra Haute & R. R. Co. 6 Ind. 318; People ex rel. Fleming v. Niagara C. P. 12 Wend. 246; Jones v. Swan, 6 Wend. 589; Williams v. Hicks, 2 Vt. 36, 19 Am. Dec. 693; Wade v. Scott, 7 Mo. 509; Cragin v. Fowler, 34 Vt. 326, 80 Am. Dec. 680.

Under a plea of nonassumpsit, although no notice of special defense is given, the defendant has the right to show a total failure or want of consideration for the note sued on. Ferguson v. Oliver, 8 Smedes & M. 332.

A plea going to the entire failure of consideration, based upon the fraud of the plaintiff, is a good defense to the note if established. Bates v. Hinton, 4 Mo. 78; Casey v. Smales, 4 Mo. 77.

Where the defendant has received no consideration for a note, he may plead and rely upon the failure of consideration as a defense to an action thereon, without showing or offering to show a rescission of the contract. Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupieable Land & Water Co. 120 Cal. 521, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186, 52 Pac. 995.

In Indiana by statute, where there is a total failure of consideration for a note, the defendant in an action thereon may plead same as a defense. Davis v. Clements, 2 Blackf. 3 (note given for land); Bowles v. Newby, 2 Blackf. 364 (note given for goods thereafter to be delivered); Kernodle v. Hunt, 4 Blackf. 57 (note given for purchase price of goods).

Under the general issue, the defendant may defeat an action of assumpsit on a promissory note by showing a want or failure of consideration, or he may reduce the damages by showing partial failure of consideration. Catlett v. McDowell, 4 Blackf. 556; Tucker v. Tipton, 4 Blackf. 529.

c. Necessity of special plea in order to make defense of partial want or failure.

To be entitled to set up a defense of partial want or failure of consideration in mitigation of damages in an action on a note, special notice thereof must be given. Eldridge v. Mather, 2 N. Y. 157; Pike v. Taylor, 49 N. H. 124; Anderson v. Young, 74 N. H. 428, 69 Atl. 122.

And evidence of a partial failure of consideration is not admissible under a general denial, and it does not justify a defendant in repudiating a note in toto. Wray v. Miller, 120 N. Y. Supp. 787.

But it has been held that the defense of partial failure of consideration is admissible under the general issue. Catlett v. McDowell, 4 Blackf. 556; Tucker v. Tipton, 4 Blackf. 529; Comparet v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. 59.

In Desha v. Robinson, 17 Ark. 228, the doctrine is asserted that "in all that class of cases commonly called partial failure of consideration, whether involving bad faith or not, or where fraud has intervened, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

whether in the obtaining or in the performance of contracts, or there has been a breach of warranty, fraudulent or not, or of any other stipulation of the contract sued upon, entitling the defendant to a cross action against the plaintiff to recover damages for such failure, fraud, or breach, he may, if he elects to do so, instead of resorting to such cross action, plead the matter by special sworn plea, under the provisions of our statute, or, if upon a verbal contract, plead the general issue, and give notice of the matter relied upon, and claim a reduction of the amount the plaintiff would otherwise recover, corresponding with the injury he has sustained."

It is clear that the defense of partial failure of consideration may be made in an action on a note or bill if introduced under a special plea; and in such a case no offer to return the article purchased is necessary. Raspberry v. Moye, 23 Miss. 320.

So, the defense of partial failure of consideration may be made to an action on a note or on a bond if specially pleaded or set up by way of recoupment, or as a bar to so much of the demand as may be thus answered. Keller v. Vowell, 17 Ark. 445.

In reduction of damages under the rule which permits such defense when it is properly pleaded, to avoid circuity of action, a partial want of consideration is always a defense pro tanto. Hodgkins v. Moulton, 100 Mass. 311.

The defendant may avail himself of false representations or fraud of the plaintiff as showing a partial failure of consideration for a note. Burnett v. Smith, 4 Gray, 50.

In Reese v. Gordon, 19 Cal. 147, an action on a note given for the purchase price of land conveyed without warranty, the right to assert a partial failure of consideration as a defense pro tanto to such an action for the purchase price is denied. It is, however, said that in cases of fraud or warranty, a partial failure may sometimes be given in evidence in reduction of damages, but that the practice in this respect proceeds upon the principle of a cross action, and an affirmative right of action must exist in favor of the party seeking relief in that form.

And in Lattin v. Vail, 17 Wend. 188, it is held that the existence of an outstanding encumbrance is not a defense of total failure of consideration for a note given for the purchase price of land conveyed with covenants of warranty; but this decision is apparently based on the ground that the plea did not show either fraud or failure of consideration.

d. Right to plead partial failure in bar of action.

A plea of partial failure of consideration does not set up a complete defense, but only a bar to the extent of the failure of the consideration. Lowenstine v. Males, 3 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 330.

Hence it is not proper to plead partial failure of consideration as a complete bar to the action. Billan v. Hercklebrath, 23 Ind. 71. (And see DANIELS v. ENGLEHART.)

The plea is not good as a plea in bar, but only as a plea in mitigation. Desha v. Robinson, 17 Ark. 228.

And a plea to an action on a note setting up partial failure of consideration, based upon the fraud of the seller, is not a good plea, since it does not go to the entire consideration. Montgomery v. Tipton, 1 Mo. 446.

It is, of course, true that before a defendant can entirely defeat an action on a note given for the purchase price of property, he must show an entire want or failure of consideration. Partial failure of consideration cannot be alleged in bar. Lewis v. McMillen, 41 Barb. 420.

It does not constitute a bar to an action upon a note, and can be availed of only by way of set-off or by original action for damages. Brevoort v. Hughes, 10 Colo. App. 379, 50 Pac. 1050.

On a plea of failure of consideration, if the failure is only partial, the defendant is not entitled to keep back the full amount of the note. Pettillo v. Hopson, 23 Ark. 196.

e. Right to prove partial failure of consideration under plea of total failure.

Under an answer setting up facts showing an entire failure of consideration, a partial failure of consideration for the note sued upon may be proved and allowed. Billan v. Hercklebrath, 23 Ind. 71; Landry v. Durham, 21 Ind. 232; Sinex v. Toledo, L. & B. R. Co. 27 Ind. 365; Schaffner v. Kober, 2 Ind. App. 909, 28 N. E. 871; Webb v. Deitch, 17 Ind. 340.

Although a plea is not good as setting up a total failure of consideration, since it does not aver a rescission of the contract and the return of the property, or an offer to return it, or any excuse for not doing so, nevertheless it may be sufficient to entitle the defendant to show the facts relied upon in mitigation. Rotan v. Nichols, 22 Ark. 244.

And it has been held that a plea of total failure of consideration includes a partial failure of consideration, and under such a plea the defendant may obtain an abatement in the sum agreed to be paid, if the evidence show a partial failure and the extent thereof. Otis Bros. v. Holmes, 109 Ga. 775, 35 S. E. 119; Morgan v. Printup, 72 Ga. 67.

Brantley v. Thomas, 22 Tex. 270, 73 Am. Dec. 264, also holds that the defense of partial failure of consideration may be made in the plea alleging as a defense a total failure of consideration. Followed in Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. v. Cleburne, 102 Tex. 36, 112 S. W. 1047.

A. G. S.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

GEORGE E. CARLETON

v.

PATRONS' ANDROSCOGGIN MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.

(— Me. —, 82 Atl. 649.)

Insurance — time of inception — notification of protection.

1. A notification from an insurance company that it would protect until the application is acted upon does not place the insurance in force from that date, for the purpose of determining the truthfulness of statements in the application at the inception of the contract.

Same — representations — truthfulness — time of testing.

2. A representation in an application for insurance as to the existence of other insurance on the property must be true when the application is accepted, to comply with a requirement that all facts stated in the application must be true under penalty of avoiding the contract, and if untrue at that time, its truthfulness when made is immaterial.

Same — intent to secure additional insurance — motive — effect.

3. The mere suggestion to an insurance agent that other insurance may be secured upon the property will not estop the insurer from contesting the validity of the policy issued by it if other insurance is obtained contrary to the terms of its policy, if neither it nor its agent had notice that additional insurance was in fact obtained.

Same — assessment of premium note — waiver.

4. An inadvertent assessment against the premium note of a mutual insurance policy will not waive an objection to the validity of the policy on the ground that other insurance existed upon the property contrary to its terms, nor amount to a ratification of the contract.

Same — additional insurance — avoiding policy.

5. Existing additional insurance upon property unknown to the one issuing a policy thereon avoids the latter policy, which provides that if assured now has or shall hereafter make any other insurance

Note. — Duty to notify insurer of facts which develop after submission of application, but before delivery of policy or certificate.

This note is supplementary to the one to Merriman v. Grand Lodge Degree of Honor, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 983.

The question indicated by the title to this note is modified in form in CARLETON v. PATRONS' ANDROSCOGGIN MUT. F. INS. CO., where it is stated as being whether or not on the property without assent of the insurer, the policy shall be void.

Same — divisibility of policy — building and contents.

6. A policy of insurance upon a building and contents, which is void as to building because of the existence of additional insurance contrary to its provisions, is void also as to the contents.

(March 25, 1912.)

REPORT by the Supreme Judicial Court for Oxford County for the determination by the Law Court of an action brought to recover an amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Judgment for defendant.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Artease E. Stearns for plaintiff.

Mr. John A. Morrill, for defendant:

The policy was rendered void by breach of the covenants, and by misstatements of material facts, contained in the written application signed by the plaintiff.

1 May, Ins. 4th ed §§ 49 et seq. p. 83; Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 335, 11 L.R.A. 598, 28 N. E. 877; Allen v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. 187 Mass. 18, 44 N. E. 1053; Thayer v. Middlesex Mut. F. Ins. Co. 10 Pick. 326; Whiting v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 129 Mass. 241, 37 Am. Rep. 317; Hoyt v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 539; Markey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 78; Real Estate Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Roessle, 1 Gray, 336; Markey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 118 Mass. 178; Piedmont & A. L. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Steidle v. New York L. Ins. Co. 28 C. C. A. 491, 52 U. S. App. 235, 81 Fed. 489; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Schultz, 25 C. C. A. 453, 42 U. S. App. 483, 80 Fed. 337; Blumer v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 45 Wis. 622; it is necessary that a representation in an application for insurance shall be true at the time when the application is accepted and the contract completed, and the question is answered in the affirmative.

On the contrary, in Schroeder v. Trade Ins. Co. 109 Ill. 157, where an application made to one insurance company was, by agreement between the applicant and another insurance company, made the application on which a policy was issued by the latter company, it was held that the application is to be regarded as stating the condition of the property at its date, and where subsequent to that date and before the policy was issued a chattel mortgage had been placed on the property, it is not a breach of the policy rendering it void, although the policy referred to the application and made it a part of the contract, and a warranty by the assured of the conditions, situation, or occupancy of the property; and provided, further, that any omis-

Kimball v. Aetna Ins. Co. 9 Allen, 540, 85 Am. Dec. 786; Lynn v. Burgoyne, 13 B. Mon. 400; Betcher v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 78 Minn. 240, 80 N. W. 971; Johnson v. American Ins. Co. 41 Minn. 396, 43 N. W. 59; Philbrook v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 37 Me. 137; Gardiner v. Piscataquis Mut. F. Ins. Co. 38 Me. 439; Knowlton v. Patrons Androsoggin F. Ins. Co. 100 Me. 481, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 517, 62 Atl. 289; Towle v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374.

The policy was rendered void by the prior valid insurance in the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, existing when the application was accepted.

Lindley v. Union Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701; Bigelow v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. 94 Me. 39, 46 Atl. 808; Jackson v. Massachusetts Mut. F. Ins. Co. 23 Pick. 418, 34 Am. Dec. 69; Thomas v. Builders' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 119 Mass. 121, 20 Am. Rep. 317; Jersey City Ins. Co. v. Nichol, 35 N. J. Eq. 291, 40 Am. Rep. 625; Keyser v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 66 Mich. 664, 33 N. W. 756; Clark v. New England Mut. F. Ins. Co. 6 Cush. 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44; Hardy v. Union Mut. F. Ins. Co. 4 Allen, 217; Hayes v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 170 Mass. 492, 49 N. E. 754; Gale v. Belknap County Ins. Co. 41 N. H. 170; Gee v. Cheshire County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 55 N. H. 65, 20 Am. Rep. 171; Schenck v. Mercer County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 24 N. J. L. 447; Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Holt, 35 Ohio St. 189, 35 Am. Rep. 601; Lovejoy v. Augusta Mut. F. Ins. Co. 45 Me. 472; Day v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 91.

Whitehouse, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action upon a policy of fire sion to make known every fact material to the risk or any misrepresentation whatsoever, either in the written application or otherwise, should render the policy void.

In Day v. Hawkeye Ins. Co. 72 Iowa, 597, 34 N. W. 435, a foreclosure proceeding begun after the date of the application and before the same was approved and the policy issued was held not to be a breach of the provision in the policy that the commencement of foreclosure or other proceedings upon any mortgage, lien, or other encumbrance of any kind should render the policy void. The view is taken in this case that it was the duty of the company to have issued the policy at once, but having allowed several days to elapse before so issuing the policy, and knowing that the condition of the property was liable to change in the interval, and having employed no means to inform itself of any change, it took the risk in regard to such change.

W. A. E.

insurance bearing date July 1, 1910, but actually issued by the defendant to the plaintiff July 25, 1910, in the form prescribed by law for the Maine standard policy, with a rider attached thereto. It contains the following stipulation: "This policy shall be void if any material fact or circumstance stated in writing has not been fairly represented by the insured; or if the insured now has or shall hereafter make any other insurance on the said property, without the assent in writing or in print of the company."

Two defenses to this action are interposed by the defendant: First, that the policy was rendered void by misstatement of material facts contained in the written application signed by the plaintiff; and, second, that by a stipulation in the policy itself it was rendered void by a prior valid insurance policy in the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company existing when the application for the policy in suit was accepted. The case comes to the law court on report.

The following facts are either established by agreement of the parties or by satisfactory evidence in the case. July 1, 1910, the plaintiff made a written application to the directors of the defendant company through W. M. White, its licensed agent, for an insurance of $1,550 upon the property described in the policy, and at the same time executed a premium note to the company for the sum of $77.50, but the application was returned by the secretary for the reason that in his opinion the amount of insurance named was excessive.

July 6, 1910, the plaintiff made an amended application to the directors of the company for an insurance of $1,050 upon the same property, and at the same time reduced the amount of the premium note to $52.50; both application and premium note being redated July 6, 1910, and the receipt of this revised application and premium note was duly acknowledged by the secretary of the company in a letter to the agent, White, dated July 9, 1910, in which he said: "I will refer George E. Carleton's application to the directors on the 25th, and I think it will be accepted in its present form, but am not sure. We will protect until they decide and I notify him."

At the next regular meeting of the board of directors held July 25, 1910, the plaintiff's application with others was accepted, and soon after the policy of insurance in suit was issued and forwarded to the plaintiff by mail.

In the application of July 6th were the following question and answer, namely: "Q. Is there any other insurance on this property, if so, give name of company and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

amount? A. $1,000, expires next Friday, Connecticut Fire Insurance Company."

Thereupon the following covenant is appended to the application: "I hereby covenant to and agree to and with the said company that the foregoing is a just, full, and true exposition of all the facts and circumstances in regard to the condition, situation, value, and risk of the property to be insured so far as the same are known to the applicant and are material to the risk."

July 15, 1910, the plaintiff obtained a policy of insurance through the local agent at Rumford Falls, of the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, for $1,250 upon the same buildings described in the policy in suit, without disclosing to that agent the pendency of his application to the defendant company, and this policy was held by the plaintiff August 8, 1910, when the plaintiff's buildings were destroyed by fire. The Connecticut Company at first denied their liability on the plaintiff's policy, claiming that the other insurance had been obtained by the plaintiff without the knowledge or consent of that company or its agent, but later, without admitting their liability, the company paid to the plaintiff the sum of $700 as a compromise. It satisfactorily appears from the testimony that no officer or agent of the defendant company had knowledge of the Connecticut policy until after the fire. It also appears from the plaintiff's own testimony that the secretary's letter to Mr. White of July 9th, in which he stated that the plaintiff's application would be referred to the directors on the 25th, was read to the plaintiff July 14, 1910. At their next regular meeting August 29, 1910, the directors of the defendant company discussed the plaintiff's loss, and the next day the secretary notified him that the company denied its liability for the loss of his buildings.

It appears that, in making an assessment of 5 per cent on premium notes, the plaintiff's note was included, and that he was notified that an assessment of $1.67 had been made on his note. This assessment the plaintiff paid on the 5th of the following October, but it was claimed on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff's premium note was erroneously included in the assessment through inadvertence, and on November 2, 1910, the cash premium, premium note, and assessment were returned to the plaintiff by the defendant company.

It is not in controversy that, in an interview with the agent, White, before the policy in suit was actually issued, July 25th, the plaintiff stated to the agent that he did not think $1,050 was enough, and that he was going to Rumford and get some insurance up there, and that the agent told him if he was not satisfied with that amount he could get more insurance in some other company the same as he himself had done. But the plaintiff admits that, at the time of the application for the policy in suit was filled out, the agent suggested to him that he should state when his former Connecticut policy expired, and told him that the company would want to know about that other insurance, and when it expired.

It has been seen that the question of the acceptance of the plaintiff's revised application of July 6th, for the policy in suit, was referred to the decision of the directors of the defendant company at their meeting of July 25th, and that the plaintiff was duly informed on July 14th that it would not be accepted until the 25th, if at all; and it is not in controversy that the application was not accepted until July 25th, and that the policy was not in fact made out and delivered to the plaintiff until a short time thereafter.

It is obviously unnecessary to cite authorities in support of the proposition that upon the facts above stated there could be no perfect contract of insurance between these parties until the plaintiff's application was accepted by the directors of the defendant company, although the policy, which was actually made after July 25th, bears date July 1st. A policy of insurance is a contract between the parties, and, like all other contracts founded upon a proposal on one side and acceptance on the other, it does not become operative as a complete and valid contract until the application for it is accepted. Wood, F. Ins. §§ 6 et seq.; May, Ins. §§ 49 et seq.; Wainer v. Milford Mut. F. Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 339, 11 L.R.A. 598, 26 N. E. 877; Allen v. Massachusetts Mut. Acci. Asso. 167 Mass. 18, 44 N. E. 1053; Hoyt v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 539; Markey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 78.

But it appears that in his letter of July 9, respecting the probable action of the directors upon the application of the plaintiff, the secretary of the company wrote, "We will protect until they decide and I notify him;" and it is contended by counsel that "the plaintiff had a right to rely upon this representation that from that time he was insured as fully as if he had the written policy in his possession. But it is important to remember that the plaintiff's loss did not occur between the date of the application and the time of its acceptance, but after its approval by the directors on July 25th, and after the delivery of the policy to the plaintiff. Whether the secretary's assurance of protection 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the meantime would have created any liability on the part of the company for a loss which occurred before the company's acceptance of the application and delivery of the policy is a question not now before the court. The plaintiff has declared upon a policy of insurance which could not take effect as a completed contract until July 25th, and he must recover, if at all, upon that contract, and not upon the personal assurances of the secretary prior to that time, with reference to the possible contingency of a loss occurring before the acceptance of the application and issuance of the policy.

The covenants and representations contained in the application of July 6th have already been recited in the statement of facts; and it has been seen that, when the application was made, the agent called the plaintiff's attention to the question and answer in regard to other insurance, and stated to him that the directors would wish to know about other insurance. It was necessary that such representation in the application should be true at the time when the application was accepted and contract completed.

In May on Insurance, vol. 1, § 190, p. 385, 4th ed. it is said: "A representation is a continuous statement from the time it is made during the progress of the negotiations, and down to the time of the completion of the contract; so that though in point of fact the representation be true when actually made, yet, if by some change intervening between that time and the time of completion of the contract it then becomes untrue, it will avoid the contract, if the change be material and to the prejudice of the insurers, or be such as might probably influence their opinion as to the advisability of accepting the risk. The law regards it as made at the instant the contract is entered into. And the same rule applies in case of concealment." See also Piedmont & A. Ins. Co. v. Ewing, 92 U. S. 377, 23 L. ed. 610; Blumer v. Phenix Ins. Co. 45 Wis. 622.

In the case at bar the plaintiff's representation in regard to other insurance in his application of July 6th, which he covenanted to be a full and true exposition of all the facts, etc., was not a full statement in regard to other insurance on July 25 when his application was accepted and the contract made, for the reason above stated that in the meantime, namely, July 15th, the plaintiff had procured other insurance on the same buildings for $1,250 in the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, without the knowledge of the defendant company, and was still the holder of that policy at the time of the fire on August 8th.

The contract made with the defendant company applied to a risk materially different from that described in the plaintiff's application. The minds of the parties did not meet in mutual understanding of the situation existing at the time the application was accepted, and the policy never became a valid contract between the parties. The fact that the feasibility of procuring further insurance was mentioned between the plaintiff and the agent, and that the plaintiff expressed an intention to obtain other insurance, will not constitute a waiver or estoppel on the defendant; it being admitted that no officer or agent of the company had any knowledge until after the fire that the plaintiff had in fact obtained other insurance. Schenck v. Mercer County Mut. F. Ins. Co. 24 N. J. L. 447; Gray v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 155 N. Y. 180, 49 N. E. 675; Stone v. Howard Ins. Co. 153 Mass. 475, 11 L.R.A. 771, 27 N. E. 6; Parker v. Rochester German Ins. Co. 162 Mass. 479, 39 N. E. 179; 2 May, Ins. p. 1183, note "a."

Nor did the assessment by the directors of 5 per cent on the plaintiff's premium note constitute sufficient evidence of either a waiver or ratification on the part of the company. The defendant's claim that the plaintiff's note was inadvertently included in the assessment is rendered probable by the fact that the plaintiff's claim for insurance was rejected at the same meeting, and that his assessment of $1.67, the cash premium and premium note, were subsequently returned to the plaintiff. But, in any event, it has been frequently held that a premium note, given on a policy which does not become operative, cannot be enforced, and it is not even necessary for the company to make a formal declaration that the note is void. 2 May, Ins. § 345, p. 750; Betcher v. Capital F. Ins. Co. 78 Minn. 240, 80 N. W. 971. And in this state it has been frequently held that when the note was originally valid, and the policy was rendered void by a subsequent breach, a subsequent assessment is no waiver of the breach. Knowlton v. Patrons Androscoggin F. Ins. Co. 100 Me. 481, 2 L.R.A. (N.S.) 517, 62 Atl. 289, and cases cited; Towle v. Dirigo Mut. F. Ins. Co. 107 Me. 317, 78 Atl. 374.

But the stipulation in the policy itself, that it shall be void "if the insured now has, or shall hereafter make, any other insurance on the said property without the assent in writing or in print of the company," constitutes another insuperable objection to the maintenance of this action. At the time the plaintiff's application of July 6th was accepted by the defendant company, it has been seen that the plaintiff in fact had other valid insurance to the amount of $1,250 in the Connecticut Fire Insurance Company, which he had procured on July 15th, and that no officer or agent of the defendant company had any knowledge of such prior insurance until after the fire.

Upon this state of facts under such a stipulation, the plaintiff's policy in the defendant company, if otherwise operative, was rendered void by the existence of a prior valid insurance. Lindley v. Union Farmers' Mut. F. Ins. Co. 65 Me. 368, 20 Am. Rep. 701; Bigelow v. Granite State F. Ins. Co. 94 Me. 39, 46 Atl. 808. The last-named case is cited by counsel as authority for the plaintiff; but it distinctly appears that the agent of the Imperial Insurance Company, one of the companies involved in that case, had knowledge of the fact of the prior insurance there in question, admitted its liability, and paid its proportion of the loss, and it was properly held upon these facts that that company had waived the stipulation in this policy in regard to the assent in writing. On the other hand, it appears that the defendant company in that case had no knowledge of a prior insurance in the Imperial Company, and, there being no stipulation in the policy permitting other insurance, judgment was rendered for the defendant.

It is also familiar law that such a contract of insurance is entire, and, if void on account of prior insurance on the buildings, insurance on the furniture cannot be recovered. Day v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co. 51 Me. 91; Dolloff v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 82 Me. 266, 17 Am. St. Rep. 482, 19 Atl. 396.

The certificate must accordingly be judgment for the defendant.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

BIRDIE J. DUDROW et al., Appts.,

v.

JAMES R. KING et al.

(— Md. —, 83 Atl. 34.)

Descent — property purchased by heir — half blood.

The joining by one of several children in a deed of property inherited from their Note. — Effect of conveyance and reconveyance of estate acquired by inheritance upon its course of descent.

It was a rule of the common law that descent must be traced from the first purchaser; hence, where there was a failure of lineal heirs, the inheritance descended to the heirs of the body of that ancestor from father, to a stranger, for the purpose of securing a title to himself in the whole property, which was done under the erroneous belief that he could not take title directly from the coheirs, does not change the character of the title held by him as heir from inheritance to purchase, and therefore it will descend under the statute providing for inherited land descending to heirs of the half blood as well as of the whole blood, and not under the provision for the descent of land secured by purchase; at least where the intention of the parties was that he should not alienate the property, but permit it to return to the cogramtors at his death.

(January 9, 1912.)

APPPEAL by plaintiffs from an order of the Circuit Court for Frederick County ratifying an auditor's account distributing whom, either in reality or by fiction of law, it originally descended. In the United States, the common law of descent has been so completely superseded by statute that, in the absence of some express statutory provision, the source of the intestate's title is not regarded as material. (See 14 Cyc. 28, note 5, 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 298, note 5.) The rule above referred to is, however, preserved to some extent by statutory provisions of the type involved in DUBROW v. KING, which recognize a distinction between land acquired by the intestate by purchase,—the term "purchase" being here used in its colloquial sense,—and land which has been derived from some ancestor, and direct that the latter shall go to those of the intestate's next of kin who are of the blood of the ancestor from which it came. The same idea is found in statutes providing that lands inherited by a wife from her husband cannot be aliened by her during a subsequent marriage, and, in the event of her death during coverture, shall go to the children of the husband from whom the lands came.

The basis of the difference of opinion which is disclosed by a few decisions upon the question under discussion appears to lie in the circumstance that, while some courts look only at the legal title under which the intestate held, in determining the character of the property as ancestral or nonancestral, others regard the continuity of the intestate's equitable title as the test.

In Doe ex dem. Harman v. Morgan, 7 T. R. 104, where one seised in fee of an inheritance by descent ex parte materna conveyed the property in fee by way of mortgage, and the mortgagee, on repayment, reconveyed to the mortgagor, it was held that the line of descent was thereby broken, and that the estate descended to the paternal heir.

In Holme v. Shinn, 62 N. J. Eq. 1, 49 Atl. 151, where the life tenant, his wife, and the remainderman had conveyed property taken by them under a devise, to a third party who immediately reconveyed the property to them as joint tenants, it was held that to defendants a certain amount, part of the proceeds of sale of the real estate of Edmund Dorsey King, deceased. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Glenn H. Worthington for appellants.

The two deeds of conveyance and reconveyance break the descent and change the title from one by descent to one by purchase.

14 Cyc. 33; Nesbitt v. Trindle, 64 Ind. 183; Holme v. Shinn, 62 N. J. Eq. 1, 49 Atl. 151; 1 Co. Litt. chap. 1, § 4, p. 13; 2 Bacon, Abr. 302, 303; Freeman v. Allen, 17 Ohio St. 527; Price v. Langford, 1 Salk. 337; Doe ex dem. Harman v. Morgan, 7 T. R. 104.

Messrs. Urner & Urner, for appellees:

It is not necessary for the intestate to the survivor of them, who was the original remainderman, took, not under the devise, but by purchase; and therefore that those of his heirs who were not of the blood of the original devisor were not excluded from inheriting. The court said: "It is true that the conveyance of James [the remainderman] to Van Meter was without consideration, but it was made for the purpose of passing the title to Van Meter in fee, and it was good for that purpose, though voluntary, for it was part of their joint purpose that Van Meter should reconvey such title as he acquired to James. When he made such conveyance, James's title came from him by conveyance. No one was entitled to question what James did with the lands. He might convey them or devise them. His prospective or presumptive heirs at law, though of the blood of Ann Smith, had no interest in the lands, and he might at will transmute by proper conveyance the estate he had received by her devise into an estate by purchase, inheritable by his heirs generally."

In Kihlken v. Kihlken, 59 Ohio St. 106, 51 N. E. 969, where an owner of ancestral lands, in view of a possible adverse judgment against him, conveyed them to his brother on a written agreement that they should be reconveyed on request, and before his death made the request, but died before a reconveyance was made, it was held that the lands had lost their ancestral character, and that the persons who, had there been no conveyance, would have inherited them, had no standing to object to a reconveyance to the widow.

In Nesbitt v. Trindle, 64 Ind. 183, where a widow contemplating a second marriage, with the view of avoiding the operation of a statute providing that a woman cannot, during coverture, alien lands inherited from a former husband, and that if she shall die during such subsequent marriage, the land shall go to the children of the husband from whom the lands came, conveyed in fee, with covenants of general warranty and for an expressed consideration, although without any actual money consideration, to a third get his title by direct descent from the father in order for it to go to all of his brothers and sisters or their descendants, of the blood of the father.

Stewart v. Evans, 3 Harr. & J. 287; Stewart v. Jones, 8 Gil. & J. 1; Freeman v. Allen, 1/ Ohio St. 527; Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 69 Am. St. Rep. 757, 51 N. E. 967; Helfinger v. Wolff, 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 906; Abbot v. Burton, 2 Salk. 591.

Pearce, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit court of Frederick county, ratifying an auditor's account distributing the sum of $1,045.10, part of the proceeds of sale of the real estate of Edmund Dorsey King, of Frederick county, deceased, and the sole question presented is whether the distribution shall be to the next of kin of the whole blood alone, or to the next of kin of both the whole and half blood.

Singleton King died intestate in 1897, seized of a farm in Frederick county, Maryland, containing 155 acres, and leaving a widow, Caroline King, and eight children, his only heirs at law. Four of these children Singleton L. King, James Harrison King, Mary Jane Browning, and William King were by the first wife of the deceased, and four, viz., Mrs. Manzella Bell, J. Beall King, E. Dorsey King, and Caroline C. Harris, were by the second wife. His widow, Caroline King, was his third wife, and had no children. The real estate in question, therefore, descended upon the death of Singleton King to the above-named eight person who, in pursuance of the understanding of the parties, reconveyed to her after the second marriage had taken place, it was held that the effect of the transaction was to break the descent, the court saying: "While said Harriet remained a widow, she had the right to dispose of said property, either for or without a consideration; her motives in the conveyance were not material; and she could not be chargeable with fraud upon her children, by conveying it without consideration, because they had no legal interest in, or, at that time, right to, it. She did so dispose of it, and subsequently acquired it by a new title. After that she did not hold the land by virtue of her previous marriage, and the restriction upon her right to alienate, contained in § 18 of the statute of descents, ceased to be operative upon it; and the only right of her children to inherit it was contingent upon her owning it at her death."

On the other hand, in Helfinger v. Wolff, 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 906, it is held that the owner of property acquired by descent does not, by conveying it without consideration to one who immediately reconveys, thereby interrupt the course of descent and become a taker by purchase. The court said: "The deed to L. J. D. [the intermediary] was clearly not intended to give him anything but a naked legal title in trust to reconvey. No motive appears unless it be an intent to break the course of descent. Mrs. Wolff still retained the entire equitable title, and had there been a statute of uses in Ohio, and the use been expressed in the deed, the statute would itself have executed the use at once by giving her the legal title again."

Where, pursuant to a direction by a testator that his lands should be equally divided among all his children, the division to be made by three persons to be appointed by his executors, the lands were allotted among the children, after which there was an exchange of lands between two of the children, each conveying to the other for a nominal money consideration, each is to be regarded as taking as a purchaser, and not under the devise from their father. Brower v. Hunt, 18 Ohio St. 311.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

It may be of interest in the present connection to note that it has been held that the exchange of deeds of release between heirs of property for the purposes of partition, even though purporting to be for a valuable consideration, does not affect the character as ancestral property of the tract taken by each in severalty. This is because partition acts only on the possession, and not on the title. See Martin v. Martin, 98 Ark. 93, 135 S. W. 348 (dictum); Conkling v. Brown, 8 Abb. Pr. N. S. 345; Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 69 Am. St. Rep. 757, 51 N. E. 967; contra, Wilson v. Hall, 6 Ohio C. C. 570, 3 Ohio C. D. 589.

And the same is the case where property is set off to an heir in partition proceedings. Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 69 Am. St. Rep. 757, 51 N. E. 967; Schumucker v. Adams, 45 Pa. Super. Ct. 58.

But in Freeman v. Allen, 17 Ohio St. 527, it is held that where a party to a proceeding for partition elects to take it at its appraised value, so much of the title as comes to him by descent remains in him unchanged by the proceedings, but that the balance of his title is a title by purchase; and this although the appraised value of the lands thus acquired by him happens to be the exact equivalent of his share in the property.

A widow purchasing property of her deceased husband upon a partition sale, paying no money, but instead receipting for her distributive share of the estate, takes by purchase, and not by descent. Spencer v. McGonagle, 107 Ind. 410, 8 N. E. 266.

Allusion only need here be made to the English decisions to the effect that the inheritable quality of an estate is not affected where the person receiving it by inheritance makes a feoffment, or levies a fine, and declares the use to himself or his right heirs, or where a portion thereof remains unlimited. Among these are Abbot v. Burton, 2 Salk. 591; Godbold v. Freestone, 3 Lev. 406; Harris v. Bishop of Lincoln, 2 P. Wms. 135; Hutcheson v. Hammond, 3 Bro. Ch. 128.

E. S. O.

children, subject to the dower of the widow, Caroline King. Edmund Dorsey King became the administrator of his father, and entered into an agreement with his brothers and sisters and with Caroline King to purchase all their interest in said real estate for the sum of $6,986.25, but being advised erroneously that he could not purchase directly from them, because he was the administrator of their father, he united with them in conveying said real estate by deed dated January 8, 1898, to Wm. P. N. Lawson, with the understanding among all said parties that said Lawson should immediately convey the same to said Edmund Dorsey King by a deed then prepared, and intended to be of even date with the deed to said Lawson. This deed to Lawson was not acknowledged by all the grantors until January 27, 1898, as they resided in different places, but, when it was acknowledged by all, Lawson, by deed dated February 2, 1898, conveyed the property to Edmund Dorsey King, it being described in the deed to Lawson as the same which descended from Singleton King to his eight above-named children, subject to the dower of Caroline King, and being described in the deed from Lawson as the same described in "a deed from Caroline King and others of even date herewith, and intended to be recorded herewith, to the said Wm. P. N. Lawson." The same consideration was expressed in both deeds, viz., $6,986.25, but Lawson did not pay the same nor any sum whatever to any of the grantors in the deed to him, nor did he receive, nor was he intended to receive, any beneficial interest whatever in said real estate; but he accepted said conveyance to him, in trust to convey the property to said Edmund Dorsey King, in the manner and for the purpose for which he did convey it, and Edmund Dorsey King, concurrently with the delivery of both said deeds, paid the entire purchase money to his stepmother and his brothers and sisters. Edmund Dorsey King died intestate in 1910, leaving surviving him no child or descendant, no father or mother, brother or sister, but leaving two nieces, Mabel S. King, a child of his deceased brother, J. Beall King, and Birdie J. Dudrow, a child of his deceased sister Manzella Bell, as the only descendants of his brothers and sisters of the whole blood, and leaving also a number of nieces and nephews, descendants of his brothers and sisters of the half blood, all of whom are named in the proceedings.

The real estate in question was sold under a decree of court by the trustee appointed for that purpose for $15,530, and, the sale being reported, the purchaser filed exceptions thereto, because of the claim of the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nieces and nephews of the half blood to an interest in said real estate; they not having been made parties to the proceedings. They were thereupon made parties by order of court, upon petition of the purchaser, and all appeared and answered said petition, setting up their claim in their answers, and the two nieces of the whole blood demurred to said answers. The sale was ratified and an auditor's account was stated distributing the net proceeds equally between the two nieces of the whole blood, upon the theory that Edmund Dorsey King took title to the whole tract by purchase. Exceptions were filed to this account by the nieces and nephews of the half blood, which exceptions were sustained, and the said auditor's account was rejected, and the auditor was directed to state another account distributing seven eighths of the net proceeds to the two nieces of the whole blood, and one eighth to the nieces and nephews of the whole and half blood. Upon this basis, the sum of $1,045.10 is distributed to the nieces and nephews of the half blood, and to that distribution the two nieces of the whole blood except, and their exceptions being overruled, and the auditor's account being ratified, they have appealed.

Sections 3 and 4 of article 46 of the Code provide that where the estate descended to the intestate on the part of the father, if there be no child or descendant or father living, shall descend to the brothers and sisters of the intestate of the blood of the father and their descendants equally. Section 19 of article 46 provides that if the estate shall be vested in the intestate by purchase, or shall descend to or vest in him in any other manner than by descent on the part of the father or mother, and there be no child or descendant of the intestate, then the estate shall descend to the brothers and sisters of the intestate of the whole blood and their descendants in equal degree equally. Section 26 provides that there shall be no distinction between brothers and sisters of the whole and half blood, all being descendants of the same father, where the estate descended on the part of the father.

Upon the death of his father intestate, Edmund Dorsey King took one eighth of the land in question by descent from him, and the only question for us is whether the effect of the two conveyances above mentioned broke this descent and changed his title to that one eighth from a title by descent to one by purchase. The learned judges of the circuit court held that no change of title was effected, and we are of opinion their decision was correct. It is quite clear from the admitted facts in the case that there was no actual intention on the part of Edmund Dorsey King, by adopting the course of conveyancing used, to effect any change in the title which he took from his father to that one eighth of the estate, and that no change could have been effected, if he had taken a conveyance, as he contemplated, from his brothers and sisters of their seven eighths of the estate. The question could not have arisen but for the erroneous advice given him that he could not acquire any title by direct purchase from them. It may be observed here that the demurrer of the appellants to the answer of the appellees admits the averments of the eighth and ninth paragraphs of the answer, that "it was understood between Edmund Dorsey King and his brothers and sisters that he should not dispose of said farm," and "that, on his death, it would descend by inheritance to all of his said brothers and sisters, if living, and if not, then to their descendants per stirpes, . . . as they did not know there was any difference in law as to the right of inheritance between the children of the first wife and those of the second wife. . . . And that they would not have agreed to sell him their interests in said farm at the valuation of $45 per acre, being $20 less per acre than the land was worth, if it had not been for their understanding that he was not to dispose of said farm, and that it would come back to them or their descendants on his death." This consideration could not, of course, defeat an intention to break the course of descent by an apt conveyance, nor could it control the operation of a conveyance, the clear legal effect of which was to break the descent, although not so intended; but it is an element of this case not to be disregarded in the light of all the cases upon the subject.

The general rule is that if one who is in by descent conveys his interest away, and it be conveyed back to him, he holds thereafter by purchase, and not by descent. The rule is stated thus in 1 Coke upon Littleton, 12b: "If a man be seised of lands as heir of the part of his mother, and maketh a feoffment in fee, and taketh back an estate to him and to his heirs, this is a new purchase, and if he dyeth without issue, the heirs of the part of the father shall first inherit." The authorities, ancient and modern, agree that this is the general rule. But in a note by Mr. Hargrave to the above text of Coke, it is said: "But here Lord Coke must be understood to speak of two distinct conveyances in fee; the first passing the use as well as the possession to the feoffee, and so completely divesting the feoffer of all interest in the land; and the second regrantee the estate to him. For, if in the first feoffment the use had been expressly limited to the feoffer and his heirs, or if there was no declaration of uses, and the feoffment was not on such a consideration as to raise an use in the feoffee, and consequently the use resulted to the feoffer, in either case he is in of his ancient use, and not by purchase." It is upon the doctrine of this note of Mr. Hargrave that the court below was satisfied to rest its decision. That doctrine, however, is supported by law writers of high authority, and by cases illustrating its application. 3 Greenleaf's Cruise on Real Property, title "Descent," pp. 338, 341, states the law in almost the exact words of Mr. Hargrave's note, to which he refers on page 338, and on page 341 cites Godbold v. Freestone, 3 Lev. 406, in support of the rule. He states that case as follows: "A person seised of lands by descent ex parte materna made a feoffment of them to uses, . . . to the use of himself for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the heirs of his body on his wife begotten, remainder to his own right heirs. . . . Adjudged that upon the death of the husband without issue, the remainder descended to the heirs of the feoffer ex parte materna, because the ancient fee remained in him." And he adds on page 341: "Where a fine was levied or a common recovery suffered, if the use was not altered, the mode of descent was not changed." In a more modern work, Broom & Hadley's Commentaries, top page 660, the same doctrine is stated thus: If one seised ex parte materna "made a feoffment in fee so as to part with the estate absolutely, and then took a reconveyance, the descent was broken, but if he made a conveyance for the purpose of creating particular estates and limited the ultimate fee to himself, this was held to be the same estate that he had before, and it descended to the heir ex parte materna. The estate which is taken back must be in reality a new estate, and not merely a part of the old estate," unless it comes within the statute of 3 & 4 William IV. chap. 106, § 1, enacted in 1833, which changed the rule previously stated, but which is, of course, not in force in Maryland.

The great case of Cave v. Holford, 3 Ves. Jr. 650, is the most interesting discussion of the principles here involved which we have examined. In that case the opinions of Justices Rooke, Heath, and Buller given in the court of common pleas controlled the decision, while Chief Justice Eyre dissented, and the opinions of each of these justices are reported in full, the editor of the Reports referring to it as a case involving deep research of authority.

The judgment of the court of common pleas was affirmed by the high court of chancery, but that decision, having been rendered in 1798, is not binding upon us as authority, and we are free to consider it with that deference which is due to all the cases of the higher courts of England. In this spirit we have examined that case, and in our judgment the conclusion of Chief Justice Eyre rests upon principles more in accord with justice, and with an enlightened view of the application of legal principles, and more in consonance with the views of the courts of this country upon this question. The form in which the question was there presented was whether the conveyance by a testator of property devised by his will was a revocation of the will as to that property upon the ground that after-acquired property could not pass by the will. The conveyances which were there held to operate as a revocation of the will were of lease and release, and Chief Justice Eyre said: "Let the operation of . . . [this] conveyance be what it may, the testator died seised of that estate which he had at the time he executed the will; . . . and that I may be clearly understood when I say the same estate, I do not mean the identity of the land, but the quality of estate and interest in that land. I mean to argue that he died seised of the old use to which the new estate, right, title, and possession (to use the words of the statute) that was for a moment in the trustees, under the conveyance, had united itself, not as a new estate, right, title, and possession, but according to the quality, manner, form, and condition of that old use, for those are the words of the statute. Here I take my ground . . . The intent of the parties in . . . [this] deed and the whole substantial effect (be its formal operation what it may) was simply to secure a jointure of £1,400, and the estate subject to that was not intended to be altered or in any manner affected; and, as far as the form of the conveyance purports to alter the nature and quality of the estate, it goes beyond the object of the conveyance. Courts of justice not only do not incline to allow the form of the conveyance to go beyond the intention, but will be ready to adopt all expedients to prevent it, and to confine the operation of every conveyance to the special purpose,"—citing for this purpose Lord Hardwicke in Parsons v. Freeman, 3 Atk. 741. Referring to Tickner v. Tickner, the chief justice said: "They [the judges] wisely determined the purpose of the conveyance was everything, the form nothing; . . . and upon that authority, supported by that of Lord Hardwicke in Parsons v. Freeman, . . . I am of opinion that the authorities will be 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) better supported by declaring that this conveyance is not a revocation, . . . than by the contrary determination." It is significant, moreover, that in the opinion of Mr. Justice Rooke he observes "you must distinguish between an intention to have the land as a new purchase, and an intention to revoke the will,"—thus intimating a distinction between the case of a mere conveyance and reconveyance to accomplish some collateral purpose, and a case involving also the question of the revocation of a will as to the special property under consideration as a result of a conveyance and reconveyance after the execution of the will. And in the opinion of Mr. Justice Buller in the same case, he refers to Godbold v. Freestone, 3 Lev. 406, and Abbott v. Burton, 2 Salk. 590, in both of which the estate taken back was held to be of the old use, and therefore to go to the heir ex parte materna, and he says: "In these two last cases there was no question about a revocation." The principles thus announced are not without support by analogy in our own decisions. In Lynn v. Gephart, 27 Md. 563, where the question before the court was as to changing the quality of property from real to personal by a deed of trust, our predecessors said: "The inclination of courts of equity upon this branch of jurisprudence is not generally to change the quality of the property, unless there is some clear intention or act by which a definite character, either as money or land, has been unequivocally fixed upon it throughout."

The views expressed by Chief Justice Eyre above are in exact accord with the language of Judge Robinson in Rawlings v. Lowndes, 34 Md. 643, where he said: "At common law the widow was entitled to dower in the lands and tenements by which the husband was seised as of an estate of inheritance during the coverture. If, however, the seisin was merely instantaneous, intended as a means of accomplishing some ulterior purpose in regard to the estate, the husband being, as it were, a conduit through which the estate passed, without any intention to clothe him with a beneficial interest, the widow would not be entitled to dower, as for instance a conveyance to a trustee to reconvey, or as put in the old books, a levy by way of a fine, the conveyance rendering back by the same fine the lands and tenements to the conusor. The husband in such cases holds the bare legal title without any beneficial interest." 2 Crabb, Real Prop. 61; Washb. Real Prop. 176; Co. Litt. 31b." And in Glenn v. Clark, 53 Md. 606, this is said to be "the established law in Maryland." The cases of Freeman v. Allen, 17 Ohio St. 527, and Carter v. Day, 59 Ohio St. 96, 69 Am. St. Rep. 757, 51 N. E. 967, both cases for partition of land of which the ancestor died seised, support the conclusion reached in this case by the circuit court, and the case of Helfinger v. Wolff, 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 906, which is not a case for partition, will be found especially instructive. That case is fully and clearly reasoned, and the conclusion reached by the court is thus expressed: "Where . . . one owning both the legal and equitable estates by descent momentarily parts by her own act with the mere technical legal title, retaining the entire beneficial interest, which standing alone would have descended as ancestral, thus creating a mere dry trust, which is held to her unqualified use, the immediate reacquirement of the naked title does not break the descent and constitute her a new source of title, for she conveyed the legal title to her own use."

This case has been argued for the appellants with great zeal and very ably, and their argument is sustained by the decision in Holme v. Shinn, 62 N. J. Eq. 1, 49 Atl. 151, in an elaborate opinion by the chancellor, and also by the case of Nesbitt v. Trindle, 64 Ind. 185, but we are not able to adopt the views there held for the reasons already stated.

Order affirmed, with costs to the appellees above and below.

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ÆTNA INDEMNITY COMPANY, Appt.,
v.
STATE OF MISSISSIPPI FOR USE OF
EVA MAE GALLASPY et al.

STATE OF MISSISSIPPI FOR USE OF EVA MAE GALLASPY et al., Cross Appts.,
v.

J. B. McALPIN et al.

(— Miss. —, 57 So. 980.)

Bond — substitution — effect on existing liability.

1. Sureties on a guardian's bond are not

Note. — Liability of sureties on guardian's bond for defalcation prior to the execution thereof.

Under the general rule that a bond is prospective only in operation, and that sureties are not liable for defaults of their principal which took place before the execution of the bond, unless made so by its terms (Moore v. Hanscom, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 103 S. W. 665), it has been held that, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

relieved from liability for an existing defalcation by an order, upon their petition for the execution of a new bond by the guardian, that a new bond be recorded, and that the petitioning sureties be relieved from further liability on the bond.

Same — prior defalcation — liability.

2. Sureties on the bond of a guardian, executed after he has converted property of his ward to his own use, are liable for the defalcation if, after the bond is executed, he continues solvent, so that he could have restored the funds to the trust, which he failed to do.

Party — character — guardian ad litem — next friend.

3. That one seeking to hold the bond of a guardian liable to restore to the ward money converted by the guardian to his own use designates himself as guardian ad litem, rather than as next friend, will not defeat the action.

(March 25, 1912.)

CROSS APPEALS from a decree of the Chancery Court for Newton County in favor of plaintiffs against the Ætna Indemnity Company, but in favor of J. B. McAlpin et al., in a suit on the bonds of G. M. Gallaspy, guardian of the use plaintiffs; the Indemnity Company appealing from so much of the decree as held it liable as surety, and the state appealing from so much as exonerated the sureties on the other bond. Reversed on the cross appeal. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. I. Munn and Amis & Dunn for appellant.

Mr. J. R. Byrd and Byrd & Wilson, for appellees:

The bondsmen of a guardian are liable for the neglect or failure of the guardian to collect any outstanding indebtedness due the ward, where the same could have been collected, had he exercised reasonable diligence. This includes money he might have collected from himself.

15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 118, 119; Parker v. Medsker, 80 Ind. 155; State v. Dennis, 58 Mo. App. 568; Clark v. Wilkinson, 59 Wis. 543, 18 N. W. 481; Matthews v. Mauldin, 142 Ala. 434, 38 So. 849, 4 Ann. Cas. 344.

in the absence of a plain expression of intention in the bond that it is to be retrospective in its operation, sureties on the bond of a guardian are not liable for his misapplication or conversion of property of the ward to his own use prior to the execution of the bond (Lowry v. State, 64 Ind. 421; Parker v. Medsker, 80 Ind. 155; Williams v. State, 89 Ind. 570; Howe v. White, 162 Ind. 74, 69 N. E. 684; State ex rel. Towler v. Shackelford, 56 Miss. 848; Freed-

Mayes, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 27th day of June, 1899, G. M. Gallaspy was appointed as guardian of his three minor children by the chancery court of Newton county. At the time of the appointment there seems to have been very little personal estate for him to take charge of, and the court required only a $500 bond to be executed for each child. It appears that each of these bonds had the same sureties. It appears that, after the guardian assumed the duties as such, he paid little attention to his accounting with the court for a long while, and there seems not to have been much necessity for the same, since little money came into his hands which required accounting to the court, and the court itself seems to have made some orders excusing the guardian from accounting. None of these things become of importance in deciding this case, so we give this only passing notice.

In December, 1905, the guardian received for each of the wards $1,712.13 as the proceeds of the sale of their interest in certain timber sold to a lumber company. The validity of this sale is not drawn in question. When this amount due each ward was received by the guardian, he was only under a bond of $500 to each ward, and, although the guardian filed an inventory in the court on December 25, 1905, reporting the sale, and disclosing that on December 1, 1905, he had received for each of his wards the amount of $1,712.13, the court did not at man v. Vallie, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 75 S. W. 322), although the guardian, during the time the bond is in force, has reported to the proper court and acknowledged his true indebtedness to the ward, but has had no assets in his hands belonging to the ward (Lowry v. State, 64 Ind. 421).

So, the sureties on a bond conditioned for the future faithful performance of a guardianship are not liable for an actual waste of the ward's money by the guardian before the execution of the bond. Sebastian v. Bryan, 21 Ark. 447.

And the sureties on a guardian's bond, not being liable for the value of property of the ward which the guardian has sold and converted to his own use before the execution of the bond, are not liable for the guardian's failure to account for the value of such property, although the bond is conditioned that the guardian shall faithfully account with the court for the management of the ward's estate. State ex rel. Towler v. Shackelford, 56 Miss. 648.

On the other hand, in Matthews v. Mauldin, 142 Ala. 434, 38 So. 849, 4 Ann. Cas. 344, it was held that the sureties on a new bond given by a guardian are liable, upon the ground of the guardian's obligation to make a true account, for a misappropriation of the ward's funds which took place before the giving of the bond.

And in Fogarty v. Ream, 100 Ill. 366, it was held that a surety on a guardian's bond is liable for funds due from the guardian to his ward, and so reported by the guardian at and subsequent to the time of his appointment and the execution of the bond, although the guardian had previously wasted the funds, and did not have them in his possession at that time, and was then, and has ever since continued to be, insolvent.

And sureties on a guardian's bond, though liable only for defaults of the guardian occurring after the execution of the bond, are liable for the amount of a loan of the ward's money, previously made by him, without an order of the court for that purpose, to a firm of which he was a member, for which, at the time of the execution of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the bond, he held a note made by the firm and payable to him, as guardian, where the firm was then, and for several years afterward remained, solvent, so that the note could have been collected by proper attention, but the guardian made no effort to collect it, and the money due thereon was lost through the subsequent insolvency of the firm. McWilliams v. Norfleet, 63 Miss. 183.

In several cases, the form of the bond has been held to render the sureties thereon liable for a prior defalcation of the principal. Thus, sureties of a guardian have been held liable for his prior misappropriation, waste, or conversion of property of the ward to his own use, under bonds conditioned as follows:—

—that he shall pay to the ward all sums due him upon the determination of the guardianship. State v. Buck, 63 Ark. 218, 37 S. W. 881.

—that he "shall faithfully discharge the office and trust of such guardian, according to law." Knox v. Kearns, 73 Iowa, 286, 34 N. W. 861.

—that he shall "well and faithfully perform all the duties imposed upon him by law." Douglass v. Kessler, — Iowa, —, 7 N. W. 619.

—that he shall faithfully execute his guardianship and render an account thereof, and deliver up or pay to the ward all such estate as he ought to be possessed of, or to such other person as shall be lawfully authorized to receive the same, and do and perform all and every other act and duty which by law guardians are required to do and perform. Steele v. Reese, 6 Yerg. 263.

And the surety on the bond of a guardian, conditioned that he shall well, truly, and faithfully execute and discharge his office as guardian, and render a true account, is liable for money received by the guardian for property of the ward prior to the execution of the bond, for which he has never accounted. Merrells v. Phelps, 34 Conn. 109.

So, also, sureties on the bond of a guardian, executed upon his appointment in a county to which he has removed after hav-that time require any additional bond, although the guardian's report showed that he held three times as much money for his wards as his bonds covered. On May 13, 1907, nearly eighteen months after the filing of the inventory showing the sale of the wards' property, and when this amount had been in possession of the guardian since December 1st under the $500 bonds, it appears that an application was filed by the sureties on the first bonds, seeking to be released therefrom, and the court made an order that the sureties on the first bonds be relieved from further liability, and that a new bond be executed, which was accordingly done on the 13th day of May, 1907. This new bond was executed in the sum of $6,000, and was given as a security for all three of the children. Accordingly, after the execution of the new bond, the guardian, without ever having made any settlement of his accounts up to this time under the old bonds, was continued as guardian under this bond until some time in 1910, when he died.

It indisputably appears that when the guardian sold the timber to the lumber company, in December, 1905, he received therefor the sum of $12,400, one-seventh of which, or the sum of $1,712.13, belonged to each of the wards. It further appears that the whole amount, including the minors' interest, was deposited in the Bank of Decatur to the individual credit of G. M. Gallaspy, then engaged in a mercantile business, and all of said money was checked out ing served as guardian in another county, and conditioned that he shall faithfully discharge all the duties required of him by law, shall faithfully account with the probate court for the management of the property and estate of the ward, and shall also deliver up said property agreeably to the order of the court or the directions of law, and shall in all respects perform the duty of guardian according to the law,—are liable for moneys of the ward received by the guardian and appropriated to his individual use, during the prior guardianship, and stated in his account and settlement of that guardianship as due the ward. State v. Stewart, 36 Miss. 652.

And sureties on the bond of a guardian, conditioned for the faithful discharge of his duties according to law, are liable for his failure to pay over the balance against him on his final settlement, although it is made up, in part, of sums carried forward in his settlement, but received and misappropriated by him before the execution of the bond. State v. Bilby, 50 Mo. App. 162.

But in Lincoln Trust Co. v. Wolff, 91 Mo. App. 133, it was held that the sureties on a bond of this kind are not liable for the guardian's conversion of property of the ward to his own use prior to the execution of the bond, unless the guardian's breach of duty is continued after the execution of the bond by his carrying the converted asset forward into a final settlement of his account as guardian, when the sureties will be bound by the judgment of final settlement, and estopped to go behind that judgment to show that the breach was actually committed before they became sureties.

Under a statute providing that "the sureties of any guardian who apprehend danger of pecuniary loss by reason of such suretyship may apply to the chancellor having jurisdiction, by petition, and on convincing the chancellor, in term time, that such danger really exists, an order shall be made requiring such guardian to give another bond," and "if the new bond be given, the sureties on the former bond shall not be liable thereon, except as to all acts of the guardian up to the time of executing the new bond,"—sureties on the bond of a guardian, executed upon the petition of his original sureties for relief, are not liable for any default of the guardian prior to the execution of the new bond. McWilliams v. Norfleet, 60 Miss. 987.

But under a statute for the relief of sureties, providing that, upon the application of the surety of a guardian, who wishes to discharge himself from further liability on his bond, the guardian shall be required to execute "a further bond for the performance of the condition of the former bond, with such additional security as may be approved," a surety on the new bond of a guardian, conditioned that the guardian shall "faithfully perform the trusts of his guardianship, being the condition of the said former bond," is liable for all defalcations of the guardian, as well those which took place before the execution of his undertaking as those which happened afterward. Armstrong v. State, 7 Blackf. 81.

And under a statute providing that the surety of a guardian may complain, and the ordinary may discharge the surety, and such guardian shall be discharged from his trust unless he gives new and sufficient security, and that such new sureties shall be liable as well for past as future waste or misconduct of the guardian, the sureties on a substituted guardian's bond are liable for any waste of the guardian, and while, primarily, the sureties on both bonds are severally liable to the ward for waste prior to the second bond, as between themselves, the last sureties are first bound. Sutton v. Williams, 77 Ga. 570, 1 S. E. 175.

But while the sureties on a new bond of a guardian, executed pursuant to an order of the court upon the petition of former sureties for relief, and conditioned that the guardian shall faithfully perform his trust, become primarily liable with the former sureties for funds of the ward wasted by the guardian before the giving of the new bond, the ward is not entitled to recover the sum of the penalties of the two bonds, and if the first set of sureties have paid out of counter security furnished them an amount equal to the penalty of their bond, to pay for the different indebtedness and for investments in conducting the business in which Gallaspy was engaged at the time, and that this was done between December 1, 1905, and May 13, 1907, the date of the new bond. In other words, Gallaspy took this whole sum and treated it as his own, and converted it to his own use and disposed of it prior to the giving of the second bond, and that he had not only done this, but that he had overdrawn some $4,000. While the record unquestionably shows that while acting under the first bonds he had converted to his own use the money belonging to his wards, it also appears that on May 13, 1907, when this bond was executed, Gallaspy was still solvent and worth several thousand dollars more than which is equal to or greater than the penalty of the new bond, the penalties of both bonds must be regarded as satisfied. Field v. Pelot, M'Mull. Eq. 369.

Additional sureties on a guardian's bond, or sureties on an additional or cumulative bond, furnished under some statutory provision, without the discharge of the prior sureties, are generally held to have assumed liability for past as well as future defaults of the guardian. Thus, one who, as supplemental security, executes a guardian's bond which has been previously executed by the guardian and other sureties, becomes liable as an original obligor, and is liable for a default prior to his execution of the bond. Ammons v. People, 11 Ill. 6.

And sureties on a guardian's bond given as new and additional security for the proper conduct and accounting of the guardian, without the discharge of the sureties on the prior bond, become cosureties with those on the first bond for any past as well as future waste, and are liable to the ward, to the extent of their bond, for the full amount of the guardian's devastavit. Remington v. Hopson, 137 Ga. 95, 72 S. E. 918.

Likewise, a surety on a bond given by a guardian as additional security, on account of the supervening insufficiency of the surety on his original bond, who was not thereby released, which new bond is conditioned that the guardian shall faithfully account with the probate court, as directed by law, for the management of the property and estate of the ward, and deliver up the said property agreeably to the order of the court or the direction of law,—is liable for property which came into the guardian's hands and was maladministered by him before the execution of the new bond. State use of Baird v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626.

And sureties on the bond of a guardian, conditioned that he shall faithfully "discharge all the duties imposed upon him by law," and filed pursuant to an order of the court requiring an additional bond to be filed, on account of the insufficiency of the existing bond, the sureties on the old bond not being discharged, nor the guardian discharged or reappointed, but continuing to act under the original appointment,—are liable for a default of the guardian previous to the filing of such bond. Douglass v. Kessler, 57 Iowa, 63, 10 N. W. 313.

So, also, sureties on the bond of a guardian, given upon the petition of his prior sureties, under a statutory provision, as "other and further security," are liable equally with the prior sureties for all defaults of the guardian, including those for which he was responsible before the date of the second bond. Com. v. Cox, 36 Pa. 442.

And sureties upon a new and additional bond of a guardian, executed pursuant to a statutory notice given by sureties on a prior bond for the purpose of relieving themselves from future liability, which new bond is merely cumulative and does not relieve the sureties on the old bond, other than those giving such notice,—are liable equally with the remaining sureties on the old bond for money received and converted by the guardian before the execution of the new bond. Abshire v. Rowe, 112 Ky. 545, 56 L.R.A. 936, 99 Am. St. Rep. 302, 66 S. W. 394.

And sureties on a new bond of a guardian, executed under statutory provisions, upon a petition of his prior sureties, as an additional and cumulative security to the ward, for the entire guardianship, after the guardian has received the entire estate of the ward, and has used or wasted the ward's money, are liable as cosureties with the original bondsmen, in proportion to the amounts of the respective bonds, for the defalcation, and are liable to contribution to one of the original sureties against whom the amount of the guardian's default has been recovered, the guardian himself being insolvent. Bell v. Jasper, 37 N. C. (2 Ired. Eq.) 597.

In the same way, sureties on a "renewal" bond of a guardian, required by statute, and which is cumulative security for the performance of the duties of the guardianship, are liable as cosureties with the sureties on the prior bond or bonds of the guardian, in proportion to the amounts of the respective bonds, for all defaults of the guardian, no matter when such defaults occurred, whether wholly before they became sureties, or after; and all the sureties are liable to contribute to each other for any sums paid by one of them on account of defaults of the guardian. Jones v. Hays, 38 N. C. (3 Ired. Eq.) 502, 44 Am. Dec. 78.

But in Tennessee it has been held that the sureties on a "renewal" bond of a guardian, required by statute upon his periodical statement of his ward's estate, and which is cumulative to the prior bond or bonds, are liable in the first instance for all the delinquencies of the guardian, though committed before the execution of their bond. Collins v. Knight, 3 Tenn. Ch. 183; Crook v. Hudson, 4 Lea, 448.

A. C. W.

was due his wards. Therefore, when he executed this second bond, he was indebted to his wards for the amount of money which he had converted, and he was amply able to have paid their claim. It appears that in the latter part of the year 1909, and nearly two years after the giving of the second bond, and without ever having made any accounting to the court of the money of the wards previously converted by him, Gallaspy became insolvent, and in the early part of 1910 was put into bankruptcy, dying about May of the same year.

After his death a suit was instituted by J. R. Rowzee, in behalf of the wards, and describing himself in the suit "as guardian ad litem." This suit is instituted in the chancery court against the bondsmen on both bonds, seeking to hold both sets of sureties liable. The case was heard, and the chancery court held that the second bond alone was liable for the indebtedness due by the guardian to the wards, and dismissed the suit as to the sureties on the first bonds. From this judgment the Indemnity Company prosecutes a direct appeal, and the so-called "guardian ad litem" prosecutes a cross appeal. The bond company contends that the first bond is liable alone, and the "guardian ad litem" claims that both bonds are liable. The question is whether or not the first bond is liable, to the exclusion of the second, or whether or not the second bond is liable, to the exclusion of the first, or whether both bonds are liable. It appears that the total sum due all the wards is over $8,000, more than the total amount of both bonds; the second bond being for $6,000, and the first three bonds each being for the sum of $500. We want to emphasize the fact that, although it appears that the actual conversion of the property by the guardian took place while he was acting as guardian under the first bonds, yet at the time the second bond was given, and for nearly two years after the guardian entered upon his duty as guardian under the second bond, he was solvent, and the amount due the wards could have been made out of him at any time up to the latter part of 1900.

It appears from the record that the sureties on the first bonds applied to the court, under the authority of § 2407 of the Code of 1906, authorizing the court, on petition of the sureties, to require the guardian to execute a new bond. It is practically conceded on both sides that this petition was filed, and that the court required the execution of a new bond. No question is raised as to the validity of the court's action in this regard. The order is made by the court on the 13th day of May, 1907, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) and recites that "it is ordered by the court that the sureties be relieved from further liability on said bond, and that the new bond be recorded." From the order made by the court it plainly appears that a new bond, and not an additional bond, was taken, and it is also plain that this new bond was intended to be a security for further, and not past, derelictions of duty on the part of the guardian. In the case of State ex rel. Towler v. Shackelford, 56 Miss. 648, this court held that a guardian's bond had no retrospective operation, unless such bond plainly indicates an intention that it should have a retrospective effect. To the same effect are the cases of Lewenthall v. State, 51 Miss. 645; State use of Baird v. Hull, 53 Miss. 626; McWilliams v. Norfleet, 60 Miss. 987; McWilliams v. Norfleet, 63 Miss. 183.

In view of the above decisions, and since it is plain that the guardian converted the funds of the wards to his own use while acting as guardian under the first bonds, it must follow that appellant is not liable on its bond for the actual conversion of the funds; but the first bondsmen are, and the court erred when it dismissed this suit as to them.

This breach having occurred while the first bonds were current, those bonds are liable to all damages that accrue to the wards on account of that breach; but this conclusion does not result in releasing the sureties on the second bond. The amount of both bonds is not sufficient to make the wards whole, so there can arise in this case no conflicting rights as between the bondsmen themselves, or as to their liability between themselves. While the court held in the case of McWilliams v. Norfleet, 63 Miss. 183, when it was before the court for the second time, that the new bond of a guardian was prospective, and not retrospective, it also held that a guardian's bond "imports responsibility for losses occasioned by negligence or inattention, as well as for the corruption, of the guardian. It cannot be that a breach of the first bond confers any immunity upon . . . the sureties on his second bond for an infraction of the latter. They are liable not only for money and assets of the wards' estate which 'actually came into the hands' . . . after the second bond was executed, but also for such as he might and could have collected and reduced to possession by a faithful administration of his office. Any other doctrine would be a novelty in the law in relation to guardians and trusts." And the court further holds that it is the duty of a guardian, whether acting under a first or a second bond, to "exercise reasonable care and diligence in the management of the ward's estate, to collect debts and securities belonging to the estate, and to administer the trust confided to him for the benefit of the wards, and not for the advantage of himself." In the McWilliams Case, 63 Miss. 183, after declaring the above rule of law, the court held the second bond of a guardian liable for the failure of the guardian to collect from himself and partners, while solvent, a note which was lost to the wards on account of this neglect and the subsequent insolvency of himself and partners, although it appeared that the improper dealings with the fund of the wards took place under a former bond. This rule was declared in the cases of Crump v. Gerock, 40 Miss. 765, Banks v. Machen, 40 Miss. 256, Moffatt v. Loughridge, 51 Miss. 211, and in Ames v. Williams, 74 Miss. 404, 20 So. 877. The law announced by the above cases is the universal law, so far as we have been able to ascertain it.

When this second bond was given, although the actual conversion of these wards' property had taken place under the first bond, the guardian was solvent and fully able to pay the amount then due the wards. The amount was lost to them because the guardian failed and neglected to pay over the amount to them as he should have done, and it was because of this neglect that they lost their money. It is true that in this case it was a debt owing by the guardian to the wards, and not the debt of a third party. It is also true that the neglect of the guardian was the failure to pay over for the wards, while he was solvent, and from himself, a sum of money which he had converted, and which belonged to them. But this fact cannot affect the legal principle. The duty imposed by law for him to protect his wards from loss by neglect to exercise reasonable diligence to collect debts owing to them rested more heavily upon him when he was their debtor by his own wrongful act than it would if he had merely failed to collect a debt from some third party. Under these circumstances the law would hold his bondsmen liable under a state of facts that might exculpate them under other circumstances. A rule of law that would exculpate a guardian for failing to collect from himself when he had wrongfully converted the funds of his ward, merely because the debt was owing by him, and he as an individual would have to make the payment to himself as guardian, would be a perversion of the right, and we apprehend that no court will ever so hold. Of course, it must appear in every case that the guardian was solvent and could have been made responsible during the currency of the second bond. In 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) short, it must be shown that the wards have actually suffered loss by reason of the neglect. If it were shown that the guardian was insolvent, and that at no time during the life of the second bond could the amount have been collected, the second bond would not be liable for the neglect, because no damage was done by it.

In the case of Johnson v. Hicks, 97 Ky. 116, 30 S. W. 3, the court held that, "if one was solvent when he qualified as guardian, a note then due from him to the ward's estate will be treated as cash assets, thereby rendering the sureties on his bond liable for the amount of the note" if he subsequently becomes insolvent without having paid the ward the amount due him; the bond is liable for this failure on the part of the guardian to do his duty and collect the debt, and, of course, it can make no difference whether the debt due the ward is a note or an open account. The evidence of the indebtedness does not affect, in any way, the liability of the bondsmen for same. So, also, in the case of United States Fidelity & G. Co. v. State, 40 Ind. App. 136, 81 N. E. 226, it is held that where one is appointed guardian of a minor's estate, who, at the time of assuming the trust, is personally indebted to the estate, the guardian must pay the debt, separate the amount of it from his own funds, and invest it for the benefit of the ward, if he be solvent at the time, and his failure to so invest it is a conversion of that amount of the ward's funds to his own use, and the bond is liable. See also State ex rel. McClamrock v. Gregory, 119 Ind. 503, 22 N. E. 1; Sargent v. Wallis, 67 Tex. 483, 3 S. W. 721; Mattoon v. Cowing, 13 Gray, 387; McGill v. O'Connell, 33 N. J. Eq. 256; Martin v. Davis, 80 Wis. 376, 50 N. W. 171.

There was a breach of both bonds, and the amount adjudged to be due the minors absorbs both bonds. Both having been breached during the currency of each, neither had right to complain that both are made liable for the breach that occurred during the currency of each bond. Both are independently and separately liable in the full penalty, since the damage done to the wards exceeds the penalty of both. The burden that either bond is made to bear is neither lessened nor increased by the fact that the other is also liable for a different breach of faith in regard to the preservation of the same fund. Both bonds were given to make secure the fund, and, if it takes them both to do that for which they were given, neither has any ground of complaint. If no second bond had been given, the first would have been liable, because the actual conversion had taken place during its currency. If the money had simply been owing the guardian from a third person, and had been lost to the wards by the neglect of the guardian, the second bond would have been liable; and this is just what occurred, except that the debtor was the guardian himself.

But it is further argued that this suit cannot be maintained, because brought by Rowzee as "guardian ad litem," and not as next friend. In answer to this argument we have only to say that where a minor's interests are at stake, and when the record shows that a person instituting a suit is in reality acting as the "next friend" of the minor, this court will not look with critical eyes on the characterization which the next friend chooses to give himself in the pleadings. We shall treat him as in truth what he is,—the friend of the minor,—and trust to the sound judgment of the infants' court to require of him the full discharge of his duty to the minor, by whatever name such person chooses to designate his representative character.

It follows that this case is affirmed on direct appeal, and reversed on cross appeal, with direction to enter judgment here on cross appeal against the sureties on the first bond for the full penalty of the bond. So ordered.

Suggestion of error overruled.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK, Respt.,
v.

MICHAEL COSMO, Appt.

(205 N. Y. 91, 98 N. E. 408.)

Jury — property qualifications — waiver.

The statutory property qualification for a trial juror may be waived in a criminal case, and is so by failing to object to his serving until after verdict.

(March 26, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of a Trial Term of the Supreme Court for Orange County, convicting him of murder in the first degree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William A. Parshall, with H. B. Fullerton and Howard M. Starr, for appellant:

There can be no doubt that Barnes was not a qualified juror.

Kelley v. People, 55 N. Y. 565, 14 Am. Rep. 342; Armsby v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 157; People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528, 43 L.R.A. 247, 52 N. E. 572; Hudson v. Caryl, 44 N. Y. 553; Sands v. Kimbark, 27 N. Y. 147; Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; People v. Ransom, 7 Wend. 417; Shepherd v. People, 25 N. Y. 406; Vose v. Cockcroft, 44 N. Y. 415; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524; People v. Bradner, 107 N. Y. 1, 13 N. E. 87.

Messrs. Thomas C. Rogers and Jonathan D. Wilson, Jr., for the People:

The jury which tried defendant was legally constituted.

People v. Thayer, 132 App. Div. 593, 116 N. Y. Supp. 821; Eggleston v. Smiley, 17 Johns. 133; Hayes v. Thompson, 15 Abb. Pr. N. S. 220; Seacord v. Burling, 1 How. Pr. 175; Bennett v. Matthews, 40 How. Pr. 428; Stedman v. Batchelor, 49 Hun, 390, 3 N. Y. Supp. 580; Dayharsh v. Enos, 5 N. Y. 531; People v. Jewett, 6 Wend. 389; People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 542; People v. Mack, 35 App. Div. 114, 54 N. Y. Supp. 698; Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 35 Am. Rep. 524; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 173, 13 Am. Rep. 492; People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528, 43 L.R.A. 247, 52 N. E. 572; Wassum v. Feeney, 121 Mass. 94, 23 Am. Rep. 258.

Note.—Waiver of property qualification of juror.

The general rule as to waiver of lack of qualification of a juror appears to be that qualifications, the lack of which do not affect the ability of the juror to render a fair and impartial verdict, are waived by failure to object to such juror till after verdict, although the disqualification was not known till that time.

Upon the general question of disqualification of a juror as ground for a new trial, see the note to Jewell v. Jewell, 18 L.R.A. 473, in subdivision 4 of which will be found some earlier cases within the scope of the present note.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The property qualification for jury service is obviously one the lack of which does not effect the ability of a juror to render a fair and impartial verdict, and the overwhelming weight of authority is that such disability is not a ground for objection after verdict. Hammer v. Eddins, 3 Stew. (Ala.) 192; Frank v. State, 39 Miss. 705; State v. Crawford, 3 N. C. 2 Hayw. 298; State v. Davis, 126 N. C. 1007, 35 S. E. 464; Schuster v. La Londe, 57 Tex. 28; Ohio River R. Co. v. Blake, 38 W. Va. 718, 18 S. E. 957.

In Kingen v. State, 46 Ind. 132, it was held that an objection to a juror on this ground came too late after the jury was sworn.

Werner, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant has been found guilty of murder in the first degree upon evidence which amply supports the verdict, and his appeal to this court is based upon a record which presents but one question worthy of discussion. That question is whether the trial court should have granted the defendant's motion to set aside the verdict, on the ground that a juror, accepted without challenge by the prosecution and the defense, did not have the property qualifications required by the statute.

The defendant was indicted on the 12th day of December, 1910, by a grand jury of Orange county, and charged with the crime of murder in the first degree, in shooting and killing one Dominick Marone, in the city of Middletown, in Orange county, on the 13th day of November, 1910. He was arraigned, pleaded not guilty, and was brought to trial on the 22d day of May, 1911. In the selection of a jury, fifty-eight of the summoned jurors were examined before the panel of twelve was completed. The sixth juror called was one Charles W. Barnes, who was accepted by both sides. The trial proceeded, and the prosecution established, by abundant evidence, the shooting by the defendant, the death of his victim as the result, and the surrounding circumstances which clearly warranted the conclusion that the homicide was a deliberate and premeditated murder. The defendant pleaded self-defense, and produced some evidence to support his plea. The case was submitted to the jury under a charge that was fair and free from substantial error, and the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. Counsel for the defendant challenges this verdict as unsupported by the evidence; but a careful review of the record has convinced us that the jury came to a just conclusion.

After the imposition of sentence, and on the 15th day of July, 1911, counsel for the defendant made a motion to set aside the verdict, as stated, on the ground that Barnes was incompetent to serve as a juror, because he lacked the property qualifications which the statute requires a trial juror to have.

As to the facts bearing upon this question, there is no dispute. It appears that on the 15th day of July, 1908, the proper functionaries of Orange county made and filed a list of jurors for the ensuing three years. At that time, Charles Barnes was a resident of Goshen, in Orange county, and living with Ada Barnes, his wife, who was then the owner of real estate in that town of the value of at least $2,000, for which she was assessed. The husband then owned no real estate, or any interest in any; and he was not assessed for any personal property. He was qualified, however; for he was the husband of a woman who was the owner of a freehold estate of the value of $150, belonging to her in her own right. Judiciary Law, art. 16, § 502. In less than a year after the name of Barnes had thus been placed on the jury list, his property qualification was removed. On or about April 1, 1909, Mrs. Barnes sold her real estate, and from that time forth neither husband nor wife appear to have had any interest of any kind in real estate. Neither was he thereafter assessed for any personal property. This was the condition of affairs when, on the 8th day of May, 1911, a special panel of fifty jurors was drawn for the defendant's trial. Barnes was one of the fifty, and when he was summoned he informed the deputy sheriff who served him with the notice that he did not think he was qualified to serve as a juror because he was not the owner of property. The deputy sheriff very properly concluded that the question was not for him to decide; and he served his notice. At the opening of the trial, Barnes appeared, but said nothing.

At least, the fact that a juror was not a freeholder is not a ground for a new trial unless it is further shown that probable prejudice resulted from his sitting on the jury. Martinez v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 57 S. W. 838; Williamson v. State, 36 Tex. Crim. Rep. 225, 36 S. W. 444; Leeper v. State, 29 Tex. App. 63, 14 S. W. 398.

And in Orcutt v. Carpenter, 1 Tyler (Vt.) 250, 4 Am. Dec. 722, where a juror was qualified when his name was put in the jury box, his subsequent disqualification by divesting himself of his freehold cannot be taken advantage of after verdict.

Especially will the fact that a juror is not a freeholder furnish no ground for a new trial when the parties failed to interrogate the jury as to their qualification in this respect. People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

29; Estep v. Waterous, 45 Ind. 140; Gillooley v. State, 58 Ind. 182; Corley v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 65 S. W. 1073.

And in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Woodward, 26 Tex. Civ. App. 389, 63 S. W. 1051, it is held that the fact that a juror was not a freeholder was not a ground for new trial, though the juror answered on his voir dire that he was qualified, as it was the duty of appellant to inform himself as to the qualification of the juror so as to make the objection at the proper time.

However, in Lamphier v. State, 70 Ind. 317, a new trial was awarded because it appeared that the court and counsel were deceived by a juror's answers as to his qualification as a freeholder. R. L. S. ing of his lack of property qualifications. He was the sixth man drawn, and was accepted by both sides without challenge. He sat through the trial, and participated in the deliberations of the jury and in rendering the verdict.

The sacredness and importance of the right to trial by jury is attested by the arrangement, no less than by the language, of our Constitution. The first great command of that charter of our rights provides that "no member of this state shall be disfranchised, or deprived of any of the rights or privileges secured to any citizen thereof, unless by the law of the land, or the judgment of his peers" (article 1, § 1); and the second is that "the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used shall remain inviolate forever." Article 1, § 2. And, as if to lend solemnity and emphasis to this declaration in the second section, it is further ordained that "a jury trial may be waived by the parties in all civil cases in the manner to be prescribed by law." Article 1, § 2. The inevitable implication of this language is that the citizen is not only entitled to the trial by jury in all cases in which it has been heretofore used, but that in criminal cases in which it has been heretofore used it cannot be waived by either party. The period referred to in the expression "heretofore used" is the time which antedates the adoption of the original Constitution, when the common law was in force. Duffy v. People, 6 Hill, 75. It must follow that, if the right itself cannot be waived, neither can there be a waiver of anything that is essential to the full benefit or protection which the right is designed to safeguard. Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 136.

From time immemorial, a common-law jury has consisted of twelve men. When or how that number acquired its historic sacredness, no one can tell; for the origin of the institution itself has been lost in the darkness of antiquity. Much less does history inform us with exactness as to the ancient qualifications required of these twelve. There seems to have been a time when they were witnesses who decided cases upon their personal knowledge of the matters in controversy. In the feudal days, they were required to be freemen; and from this circumstance it may be surmised that some, if not all, were owners of property. With the development of civilization and the gradual establishment of property rights, there came a period when the ownership of property was probably regarded as something of an index to the intelligence, character, and standing of men in their communities, and as a convenient basis for the arbitrary fixing of a class from which the ultimate selection of jurors was to be made. In England this qualification seems to have been at first confined to such capital cases as treason, misprison of treason, and murder (1 Hale, P. C. 283; 1 Bishop, Crim. Proc. 2d ed. § 921); and we know that later it was extended by statute, so that when the common law took root in American soil we ingrafted upon the jury system the property qualification which, to some extent, and in one form or another, has survived to this day. From this short and imperfect reference to the history of the subject, we perceive that, although the jury as an institution reaches backward beyond the memory or knowledge of man, it has had to be adapted to the ever-changing conditions brought about by the progress of the centuries. Through it all, only two things have remained fixed and immovable: The common-law jury must have twelve men, and these twelve, although taken from a class whose general qualifications may be arbitrarily fixed by law, are chosen by a selective process which, although constantly changing in form, is always designed to secure the service of intelligent and impartial citizens who will be alike the conservators of the obligations of the state and the rights of the individual.

Thus we see that the right of trial by jury, both in England and here, is imbedded in the Constitution; and with us it is a right which, in criminal cases, cannot be waived. But the method of securing that right, in respect of selecting men who are deemed qualified to act as jurors, is one of legislative cognizance which is subject to any change that does not trench upon the fundamental right. People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528, 536, 43 L.R.A. 247, 52 N. E. 572; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492.

None of the Constitutions of this state have ever prescribed the qualifications of jurors. From the earliest time, there has been legislation upon the subject, and it has been frequently changed. In 1699 the colonial legislature of New York passed an act prescribing that jurors should have in their own right a good house or messuage with 10 acres of freehold; and in the cities of New York and Albany a dwelling house, free from all encumbrances, or a personal estate of the value of £50 current money of the province. Colonial Laws of N. Y. vol. 1, chap. 66, p. 387. With various unimportant modifications in respect of property qualification, this continued to be the law in the colony and state (Laws 1788, chap. 41; Laws 1808, chap. 98; 1 Rev. Laws of 1813, chap. 4) until the adoption of the Revised Statutes, when, for the first time, jurors outside of the cities of New York, Albany, and Hudson were put upon the same footing with jurors in those cities, and were qualified, if assessed for $250 of personal property. Without pursuing this statutory history in detail, it is enough to say that we have now a variety of statutes, which have been collated in the judiciary law, setting forth different standards of qualification for jury service and various methods of selection. The general statute, relating to all parts of the state not governed by special laws, prescribes that a person to be qualified as a trial juror in a court of record must be: "1. A male citizen of the United States, and a resident of the county. 2. Not less than twenty-one nor more than seventy years of age. 3. Assessed, for personal property, belonging to him, in his own right, to the amount of $250; or the owner of a freehold estate in real property, situated in the county, belonging to him in his own right, of the value of $150; or the husband of a woman who is the owner of a like freehold estate, belonging to her, in her own right. . . . 4. In the possession of his natural faculties, and not infirm or decrepit. 5. Free from all legal exceptions; of fair character; of approved integrity; of sound judgment; and well informed." Consol. Laws, chap. 30, § 502.

The argument of the learned counsel for the defendant proceeds upon the theory that these statutory requirements are mandatory; that in capital cases nothing can be waived; that a person called as a juror in such a case, who has not every one of the prescribed qualifications, is in fact not a juror; and that therefore the defendant has not had a trial by such a common-law jury as the Constitution guarantees. We shall endeavor to point out, as briefly as possible, what we regard as the fallacy of this argument.

The one thing guaranteed by the Constitution is the right of trial by jury in all cases in which it had been used before the adoption of either of our successive Constitutions. We have already called attention to the fact that this means a common-law jury of twelve, drawn by some process in which the final right of selection is preserved to the citizen. This process of selection is necessarily a matter to be regulated by statute. The legislature, in the exercise of its undoubted power in the premises, has provided that in counties governed by the general law, as distinguished from special statutes of local application, there shall be made in every third year a list of the male citizens who have the statutory qualifications to serve as jurors in courts of record, and from these lists there shall be a drawing of jurors for the several terms of such courts. At the very inception of this proceeding, a general list is to be made, which is to stand for three years or longer, if no new list is made within that time. It goes without saying that some such regulation is a necessity, because it would be practically impossible to make a new list for each of the many terms of court that are held in every year; and it is obvious that such a regulation must be supplemented by legislation to provide for such unforeseen contingencies as may arise during the time such a list is in existence. Some men die; others are shorn of their property qualifications; still others lose their natural faculties; many remove from the county in which they resided when the list was made; and a few are specifically disqualified for service in a particular case. To meet these contingencies, the legislature has further provided that "an objection to the qualifications of a juror is available only upon a challenge" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1180), and has enacted very definite provisions regulating this right of challenge. By still other statutes, it is prescribed that this provision governing procedure in civil cases shall be applicable in all criminal cases triable in courts of record. Code Civ. Proc. § 3347, subd. 7; Code Crim. Proc. §§ 362 et seq. In both of these Codes, it is further provided that "the first twelve persons who appear, as their names are drawn and called, who are approved as indifferent between the parties, and are not discharged or excused, must be sworn; and constitute the jury to try the issue." Code Civ. Proc. § 1166; Code Crim. Proc. § 387. In criminal trials, a challenge to the panel "must be taken before a juror is sworn, and must be in writing, specifying distinctly the facts constituting the ground of challenge" (Code Crim. Proc. § 363); and when the challenge is to an individual juror it "must be taken when the juror appears, and before he is sworn" (Code Crim. Proc. § 371), although in the latter case "the court may, in its discretion, for good cause, set aside a juror at any time before evidence is given in the action." Ibid. The reasons for these precise and definite rules of procedure are not far to seek. The jury system is a sacred institution; but it is also a very practical one. The individual has his rights; but so has the state. It would be no less intolerable than impracticable if, after every trial, there could be an investigation into matters affecting the qualifications of jurors which are readily ascertainable in advance. Such procedure would place a premium upon the neglect to ascertain whether a juror is qualified; for few men would challenge a juror if, by their failure to do so, they could gain a chance for a new trial in case of defeat. The public inconvenience is, moreover, a matter of far-reaching importance. If defeated parties were in all cases to be permitted to move for new trials on such grounds as that a juror has passed the age of seventy when he sits in a case, or has disposed of his property, or that he is lacking in any other of the several technical qualifications which do not affect his intelligence and fairness, no judgment would ever be safe from attack, and no trial could ever be confined to anything like well defined or limited issues. It is not claimed that the juror Barnes was not fair or impartial; and, for aught we know, he may have been a much better juror than some others whose property qualifications are not questioned. The matter was one which was open to investigation when Barnes was called; and the defendant's failure to interpose a challenge must be deemed a waiver of the objection which might have been taken. "A known cause of challenge is always waived by withholding it, and raising it as an objection after verdict, since such a practice is incompatible with the good faith and fair dealing which should characterize the administration of justice. Therefore, in order to make an objection to a juror available after verdict, the objecting party must prove that it was unknown to him, and that it would not have been disclosed to him by a proper inquiry before the jury was sworn." 1 Thomp. Trials, § 114.

The trend of authority in those states where the question has arisen is in the direction of holding that a new trial will not be granted, as a matter of right, for a cause of challenge not discovered until after verdict, whether the case be civil or criminal. 1 Thomp. Trials, § 116, and cases in the notes. In Wisconsin the rule in criminal cases seems to be confined to those which are not capital (State v. Vogel, 22 Wis. 471), and in Michigan the doctrine of waiver has been held inapplicable, in any criminal case. Hill v. People, 16 Mich. 351. The supreme court of Illinois once held that objections to a juror could not be waived in a criminal case (Guykowski v. People, 2 Ill. 476), but later changed its views, and decided that a motion for a new trial, made after a verdict in a capital case, should not be granted where an unchallenged juror, who had not the statutory property qualifications, was one of the twelve who rendered the verdict. Chase v. People, 40 Ill. 352. This is also the position taken by the highest court of California, in People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 29, and of Indiana, in Croy v. State, 32 Ind. 389, in which the question was identical with the one before us.

The precise question has not been decided 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

in this state. The nearest approach to it is found in People v. Morrissey, 1 Sheldon, 295, a case of murder, where a juror was over the statutory age of sixty, and no objection was made until the question was presented on a motion for a new trial. Upon appeal, from the order denying the motion, the general term of the superior court of Buffalo held that the objection was made too late. In People v. Mack, 35 App. Div. 114, 54 N. Y. Supp. 698, Mr. Justice Merwin, in the third department, wrote for a unanimous court in a case involving the charge of assault in the first degree. There it was held that a motion in arrest of judgment would not be granted upon the ground that the wife of one of the jurors was related, within the prohibited degrees, to the father of the complainant, when no challenge had been interposed, and it did not appear that the defendant had been prejudiced; and in People v. Thayer, 132 App. Div. 593, 116 N. Y. Supp. 821, the same court, in a case of robbery in the first degree, decided that an objection to the qualifications of a juror, on the ground that he was over seventy years of age, could not be successfully raised for the first time on a motion for a new trial after verdict; and that a failure to challenge the juror was a waiver of the objection. In the case of People v. Jewett, 8 Wend. 386, 389, the defendant, who was indicted for conspiracy, pleaded the disqualification of one of the grand jurors, on the ground that he had not the property required by the statute. To this plea there was a demurrer, and upon the issue thus raised the matter came before Mr. Justice Sutherland of the supreme court. In a very interesting discussion, devoted principally to the question whether grand jurors were required to be freeholders, the learned justice held that an exception to a grand juror will not be heard or allowed after an indictment found. By way of illustration, he argued: "I apprehend a verdict, either in a civil or criminal case, would not be set aside merely on the ground that one or more of the jurors had not the property qualification required by law. It very frequently occurs that such mistakes are made in the panel; and jurors undoubtedly sometimes serve without the requisite legal qualifications. But, if the objection is not raised when the jury is drawn, the parties are concluded, although the fact may not have come to their knowledge until after the trial. I speak of strictly legal and technical objections, not of objections which go to the character of the juror, and show that he labored under prejudices and prepossessions which rendered him incapable of acting impartially in the case, and that in all human probability there has not been a fair trial. I have no doubt that cases of that description might exist, in which it would be competent and proper for the court to set aside a verdict; but they must be characterized by very strong and peculiar circumstances." (p. 389.)

Although this dictum was obiter, we quote it as an accurate expression of a sound rule, which may, without injustice, be applied in all criminal cases, including those of capital degree. In the case at bar, as we have already shown, the personal qualifications of the juror Barnes are not questioned; and it does not appear that the defendant was in any wise prejudiced by the juror's lack of property qualification. All the pertinent facts existed when the juror was called, and a few questions would have elicited the truth. Although the case involves the solemn issue of life and death, we think it would be trifling with the administration of justice to hold that the defendant is entitled to a new trial in these circumstances. He has had a trial, conducted according to the established forms of law, and his guilt has been certified, upon competent and sufficient evidence, by a jury of twelve in number, who were capable of deciding his case fairly and impartially. That is all that was guaranteed to him by the Constitution (People v. Dunn, 157 N. Y. 528, 536, 43 L.R.A. 247, 52 N. E. 572; Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 164, 13 Am. Rep. 492), and he should not now be heard upon technical and purely statutory objections, which do not affect the merits of his case, and which he might have made, but failed to make, at the trial, in the manner prescribed by law.

The cases relied upon by the defendant are not in point. His principal authority (Cancemi v. People, 18 N. Y. 128, 136) presents a condition radically different from that before us. There the defendant, on trial for murder, consented to the withdrawal of a juror and to the continuance of the trial with the remaining eleven. It was held that eleven men do not constitute such a jury as is guaranteed by the Constitution, and the defendant could not consent to being tried by eleven men any more than he could consent to be tried by two or three men; for neither of these numbers, nor any number less than twelve would make a common-law jury. In Kelley v. People, 55 N. Y. 565, 577, 14 Am. Rep. 342, and Armsby v. People, 2 Thomp. & C. 157, 161, both criminal cases arising out of one theft, a juror was challenged, because he had not the statutory property qualifications. The challenge was sustained, and the ruling was affirmed on appeal. In the early case of People v. McKay, 18 Johns. 213, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

where the defendant was convicted of murder, he moved in arrest of judgment, on the ground that the venire to summon jurors was not under seal. This was held a sufficient warrant for a new trial, and the reason is obvious. The district attorney there admitted that, in view of the clerk's failure to properly authenticate the venire, and the sheriff's neglect to make an official return thereto, it was as though there had been no venire whatever. That was a defect, moreover, which was not known to the defendant at the trial; and no examination of the jurors would have disclosed it. There are cases on the brief of defendant's counsel, such as People v. Ransom, 7 Wend. 417; Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 429, 35 Am. Rep. 524; and People v. Bradner, 107 N. Y. 1, 13 N. E. 87, in all of which the regularity of the trials was sustained on appeal. They all contain some observations that are germane to the general subject of trial by jury; but they decide nothing that is helpful or authoritative in the case at bar.

The judgment of conviction should be affirmed.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Haight, Vann, Hiscock, and Collin, JJ., concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

GEORGE H. THOMPSON, Resp't.,

v.

WASHINGTON NATIONAL BANK, Appt.

(—Wash. —, 122 Pac. 606.)

Judgment — action on building contract — conclusiveness — subsequent evidence.

A judgment denying relief in an action to recover the contract price and enforce a mechanics' lien for laying a tile floor, because the contract had not been substantially performed, is conclusive against another action to enforce the contract price, based upon evidence that since the former action the owner had completed the work at a nominal cost.

(April 3, 1912.)

Note. — Conclusiveness of judgment as affected by subsequent events disproving the ground on which it rested.

This note does not deal with the subject of direct attack upon judgments for newly discovered evidence or otherwise, and presupposes that the judgment in question is in full force and effect.

The reader will observe that in THOMPSON

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Kittitas County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the contract price for the laying of a tile floor. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. E. E. Wager, for appellant:

The judgment in the former action conclusively shows upon its face that it was a judgment upon the merits, and that no parol evidence can be introduced to vary its terms or to explain it.

State ex rel. Schmidt v. Superior Ct. 62 Wash. 556, 114 Pac. 427; Nunn v. Mather, 60 Wash. 484, 111 Pac. 566; State ex rel. Jensen v. Bell, 34 Wash. 185, 75 Pac. 641; Marble Sav. Bank v. Williams, 23 Wash. 766, 63 Pac. 511; Olson v. Title Trust Co. 58 Wash. 599, 109 Pac. 49; McGuire v. Bryant Lumber & Shingle Mill Co. 53 Wash. 425, 102 Pac. 237; Gould v. Austin, 52 Wash. 457, 100 Pac. 1029.

Where there is no substantial compliance with a contract, there can be no recovery.

Washington Bridge Co. v. Land & River Improv. Co. 12 Wash. 272, 40 Pac. 982; Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian

v. WASHINGTON NAT. BANK, there was no new actionable fact in the second action, but the plaintiff simply offered additional evidence of what has been a fact before the first action, although the new evidence consisted of an evidential fact which came into existence after the first judgment; and in the latter respect the case differs somewhat from cases where the evidential fact, as well as the ultimate fact on which it bears, was in existence at the time of the judgment, though not discovered until afterwards. The case therefore emphasizes the strictness of the rule that the effect of a judgment as res judicata cannot be avoided by the discovery of new evidence bearing on a fact or issue involved in the original action as distinguished from a subsequent fact or event which creates a new legal situation.

To grant relief for what existed before, but was not made to appear, would be in effect a rehearing. Dewey v. St. Albans Trust Co. 60 Vt. 1, 6 Am. St. Rep. 84, 12 Atl. 224.

There is, however, at least one case where a judgment against a fact was held to be no bar to a new action. A suit was brought against the representative of an estate for an accounting and division, where the will, after making provision for the widow, directed that each surviving child should be entitled to a certain percentage, the shares of the daughters to be in trust for their benefit with remainders over. The decree was made upon the erroneous theory that there were four surviving children, and it directed a division to the trustee of the plaintiff, who was one of the daughters, of certain cash and security. Upon her death, in an action in which the remaindermen of her share were parties, it was admitted that at the time of the death of the testator, there were five surviving children, one brother dying after his father, but before the first suit, and that the said daughter at the time of the first suit was entitled, as one of her deceased brother's next of kin, to his share absolutely, and it was held that the first judgment was not an adjudication against her upon this point. The court states that the duties of the representatives of the estate were fully satisfied by the payment directed by the decree in the first action; that the duties of the trustees of said daughter were fully satisfied by receiving funds in excess of what they were entitled to; that it was not necessary, either for the protection of the representative of the estate or of the trustees, that the question as to the time of the death of the brother should have been determined in the first action; that under the terms of the will the interest of the remaindermen in the trust could not have been determined until the death of the life beneficiary, and that therefore the representatives of the daughter should have an opportunity to raise and contest the subject in the second action with the remaindermen. Ashhurst v. Lippincott, 56 N. J. Eq. 840, 42 Atl. 1017. It is submitted that this decision cannot be supported on principle. But the reader will remember that there is an inveterate tendency of the courts to exclude if possible the question of res judicata where there are successive accountings in the same trust estate and the fund is undistributed.

Cases are rare where the question of res judicata has been considered by reason of a new-born evidentiary fact, but such may have been the circumstance which led to the later discovery in Fetter v. Beale, 1 Salk. 11, where the plaintiff, having recovered in assault and battery, discovering later that his skull was fractured, brought another action for the additional injury. But the court, in overruling his demurrer to a plea of former recovery, said, per Holt, Ch. J.: "Every new dropping is a new nuisance, but here is not a new battery, and in trespass the grievousness or consequence of the battery is not the ground of the action, but the measure of the damages, which the jury must be supposed to have considered at the [former] trial."

While the note does not purport to deal exhaustively with cases where it is held or contended that the subsequent events have created a new legal situation, some cases of that kind will be referred to for the purpose of illustrating the distinction between them and cases like THOMPSON v. WASHINGTON NAT. BANK, where the significance of the subsequent event is merely in its tendency to show, or its demonstration, that the judgment was rendered upon an erroneous assumption or finding upon an issue of fact then before the court.

P. Nav. Co. 8 Wash. 370, 24 L.R.A. 315, 40 Am. St. Rep. 910, 36 Pac. 260; Mortimer v. Dirks, 57 Wash. 402, 107 Pac. 184.

Messrs. Hovey & Hale, for respondent:

The first judgment being of dismissal only, the burden of proving its character as res judicata was upon defendant.

Fahey v. Esterley Mach. Co. 44 Am. St. Rep. 564, note.

Defendant offered nothing whatever in this direction beyond the pleadings; but the plaintiff showed affirmatively that the present action is upon changed conditions and after tender of performance of that which was held in the former trial to be a condition precedent, either one of which takes the case out of res judicata.

23 Cyc. 1161, 1290; 24 Am. & Eng. Enc.

Thus, former adjudications are not a bar where a new legal cause of action has come into existence since the first judgment, as, for example, successive matters of neglect of duty by a trustee, or of additional wrongs by a spouse, or new acts of nuisance, or successive breaches of a covenant to repair, or the fact of payment or tender or notice or any prerequisite by reason of the nonexistence of which the first action was lost.

So, of course, where the cause of action rests upon independent occurrences subsequent to the first judgment, the latter is no bar: As, judgment for the defendant in an action for money had and received is no bar to an action for money had and received since the judgment in the prior action (Morrison v. Beckey, 6 Watts, 349); nor is a judgment for the defendant in an action for conversion a bar to an action for a conversion committed after such judgment (Stone v. Addy, 168 Mass. 26, 46 N. E. 431); so, a judgment enjoining an individual from receiving any salary as a county officer under a general appointment is not conclusive against his receiving a salary as such county officer under an appointment subsequent to the prior judgment (Freman v. Marshall, 137 Cal. 159, 69 Pac. 986).

Again, where, after the plaintiff has been defeated in his action by reason of some defect, a valid statute is passed curing the defect, it is held that the first adjudication is no bar to an action resting upon the statute. Steele County v. Erskine, 39 C. C. A. 173, 98 Fed. 215, affirming 87 Fed. 630; Beals v. Amador County, 35 Cal. 624; Utter v. Franklin, 172 U. S. 416, 43 L. ed. 498, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 183.

See also in effect the decision in Wrought Iron Bridge Co. v. Attica, 119 N. Y. 204, 23 N. E. 542, where, however, the question does not seem to have been raised.

In Miles v. Strong, 68 Conn. 273, 36 Atl. 55, where a judgment went against the plaintiff in equity, because he had asked a court of equity to take jurisdiction of a mere legal question relating to the title to land, and afterwards the legislature passed 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Law, 777; Fahey v. Esterley Mach. Co. 44 Am. St. Rep. 568, note; Guilford v. Western U. Tele. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324; Whitlock v. Appleby, 49 Mo. App. 295.

ELMS, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material facts in this case are as follows: On February 23, 1909, the respondent, plaintiff below, contracted with appellant to furnish the tiling and lay a tile floor in the appellant's bank building at Ellensburg, Washington, for an agreed consideration of $229.95. On March 2, 1909, the respondent claimed that the work was completed; but the appellant, claiming that the work was not performed in ac-an act allowing questions of this character to be determined in equity, it was held that the first judgment was no bar to a second action after the statute.

So, there is a new cause when the first action was prematurely brought, and so was lost by reason of the lack of an element which cannot be proved on account of its lack of existence (McFarlane v. Cushman, 21 Wis. 401; Whitlock v. Appleby, 49 Mo. App. 295); such as notice (Peck v. Easton, 74 Conn. 456, 51 Atl. 134; New England Bank v. Lewis, 8 Pick. 113; Rose v. Hawley, 133 N. Y. 315, 31 N. E. 236), or payment, or tender (Dwyer v. Goran, 29 Iowa, 126; Naftzger v. Gregg, — Cal. —, 31 Pac. 612).

So, also, of course, where a claim or instalment sued on becomes due after the first judgment, a new legal situation is presented.

Similarly, a failure of consideration to a contracting party arising after a judgment against him may afford him ground of relief in a new action. Hurst v. Means, 2 Sneed, 546; Smith v. McCluskey, 45 Barb. 610.

But where the first action is lost because of an incurable defect, there is, of course, no new legal feature in the second action. Thus, where the plaintiff had lost his action on a promissory note, which was excluded in evidence because not stamped as required by the war revenue law, and later he had the note stamped and then brought another action in assumpsit for the debt covered by the note, it was held that the judgment in the first action was a bar to the second action, as there was in the first action a failure of evidence which could not be thereafter supplied. Roney v. Westlake, 216 Pa. 374, 116 Am. St. Rep. 772, 65 Atl. 807, 9 Ann. Cas. 184.

The same general reasoning which applies to actions prematurely brought includes those which rest on a subsequently acquired title (see Gore v. Gore, 101 Tenn. 620, 49 S. W. 737; Amesti v. Pastoro, 49 Cal. 325; Jones v. Petaluma, 36 Cal. 231; Compare in this connection Byers v. Neal, 43 Cal. 210); or on subsequent wrongs by a spouse done cordance with the contract, refused to pay for it. The respondent thereafter, on May 26, 1909, filed his claim of lien for the full amount of the contract price, and, on June 29, 1909, commenced an action numbered 4,114, in the superior court for Kittitas county, to foreclose the lien. The appellant contested that action, alleging that the work was not completed in accordance with the contract; that the tiling was worthless and of an inferior grade; that it was carelessly and negligently laid, and, instead of being white, as agreed, was dark, dirty, stained, and discolored. That action was tried to the court, and, on January 25, 1910, a judgment was entered therein which, omitting formal parts, was as follows:

After listening to the testimony of the witnesses on behalf of both the plaintiff and the defendants, and the argument of counsel, the court took said cause under advisement. And now, therefore, on this the 24th day of January, A. D. 1910, the court being fully advised in the premises, and having duly considered the same, it is by the court ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the plaintiff take nothing by his said action, and that said cause be, and the same hereby is, dismissed. And it is further ordered and decreed that the defendant, Washington National Bank, have and recover of and from the plaintiff, George H. Thompson, its costs and disbursements expended in this action, taxed at the sum of thirty-seven and ⁸⁵/₁₀₀ dollars, and that since a judgment refusing a divorce from him (Wagner v. Wagner, 104 Cal. 293, 37 Pac. 935; Glaude v. Peat, 43 La. Ann. 161, 8 So. 884); or on new conditions surrounding a child whose custody has been once adjudged (Lemunier v. McCearly, 37 La. Ann. 133; Weir v. Marley, 99 Mo. 484, 6 L.R.A. 672, 12 S. W. 798; People ex rel. Barry v. Mercein, 3 Hill, 399, 38 Am. Dec. 644); or on acts of a trustee subsequent to a judgment dismissing proceedings against him (see Williamson v. Grider, 97 Ark. 588, 135 S. W. 361); or on circumstances existing at the time of a second application for the appointment of a receiver of a debtor, where an earlier application has been denied (Nash v. Meggett, 89 Wis. 486, 61 N. W. 283).

The underlying ground of these decisions is that the judgment in the first action simply adjudicated that, as matters then stood, there was no cause of action. This may be illustrated further, for example, by the following cases:

In Weis v. Meyer, 55 Ark. 18, 17 S. W. 339, it was held that an adjudication that the plaintiff was entitled to an easement of access to a river was not conclusive in his favor in a subsequent action after the dominant tenement had been washed away, wherein it was found that the easement was appurtenant to the dominant tenement, and was gone with it.

Where the assignee of a mortgage brought an action to foreclose it, and was answered by the defendants that prior to the recording of the assignment they had obtained judgment against the mortgagee quieting their title to the land, they had judgment in the foreclosure suit on the ground that the judgment in the suit to quiet title was a bar. Thereupon the plaintiff in the foreclosure was granted leave to open the judgment in the suit to quiet title, under the statute allowing a judgment on publication to be set aside within three years under certain circumstances, and set up his mortgage and asked to have it foreclosed in the action; and it was held that the judgment in the first suit of foreclosure was not a bar. The court said that the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

first judgment in foreclosure simply decided that, as matters then stood, the plaintiff had no cause of action. Messing v. Faulkner, 83 Kan. 115, 109 Pac. 1001.

Where the plaintiff brought an action on a policy of insurance, it was stricken from the docket on motion of the defendant. Thereafter the plaintiff brought another action on the same policy and was defeated on the ground of the statute of limitations. Thereupon he took a writ of error from the motion striking the first case from the docket, and had the case restored to the docket, and it was held that the judgment in the second action was no bar to the action first brought, as the judgment decided only that there was no right of action at the time that the second action was begun. Vincent v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Asso. 77 Conn. 281, 58 Atl. 963.

Where the plaintiff had lost certain certificates of stock in the defendant corporation and brought an action against it for new certificates, which it offered to issue on his giving a bond for double the par value of the stock, judgment went for the defendant, because the plaintiff would not give the bond. Six years later the same result was had in an action brought by the plaintiffs' assignee. Four years afterwards such assignee brought a third action, and it was held that the former actions were not res judicata, especially as greater time had elapsed in which nothing had been heard of the lost certificates. Guilford v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 59 Minn. 332, 50 Am. St. Rep. 407, 61 N. W. 324.

In this connection it is interesting to refer to two cases which find their support on the ground of after acquired title. Trumble made an assignment to Carmer of her interest in a certain estate, and thereafter assigned the same interest to Still, who brought an action against Carmer to set aside his assignment on the ground that it was fraudulent, and recovered judgment. Carmer thereupon procured from Trumble a new assignment, and brought an action against Still to have her assignment set aside as fraudulent, and also to have the first judgment reformed. The court held execution issue therefor. It is further ordered that the mechanics' lien filed by the plaintiff against the property of the defendant in the office of the auditor of Kittitas county, Washington, on the 26th day of May 1909, be, and the same hereby is, canceled and satisfied.

Ralph Kauffman, Judge.

No appeal was taken from that judgment.

In September, 1910, the respondent commenced this action in the same court, upon the same contract, to recover the contract price for the same work, but without seeking to assert any lien. The appellant in defense set up the judgment in the prior action as res judicata. The cause was tried to the court upon a statement of agreed facts, the material parts of which were as hereinbefore set out, and in addition it was admitted that in May, 1910, the plaintiff offered to complete the contract, which offer the defendant refused, and that the only defect in the work was the discoloration and stain of the tiling, and that the defendant, after the judgment was entered in the first action, had the discoloration and stain removed by an expert tile layer at a cost of $14. A statement of the trial judge, setting forth the grounds upon which the former judgment was rendered, was admitted in evidence, as follows: "At the trial of the cause No. 4,114, between the same parties to this action, embracing the same subject-matter as the cause on trial, the court held that the cause should be dismissed, for the reason that no substantial compliance with the contract had been proven, solely in that the tiled floor in question was by the plaintiff left in a stained and discolored condition, and the plaintiff had refused, on demand of the defendant, to remedy this defect, and the plaintiff contending and testifying to the effect that he had fully complied with the terms of the contract." The introduction of this statement was objected to by the appellant as incompetent to impeach the recitals of the former judgment. All objection to the trial judge testifying was waived.

The court found, as to the contract and prior suit, substantially as above set out, and in addition the further admitted facts that, about May 10, 1910, the respondent tendered a full performance and offer to clean the floor, which tender was refused by the appellant, and that the appellant that the first judgment could not be modified, and that that part of his action must fail, but that the defense that the second assignment was fraudulent had not been available to Carmer in the first action, as that was something which belonged to Trumble to decide whether to raise such a defense or not, and therefore the judgment in the first action was not a bar to the present action. Carmer v. Still, 53 Misc. 443, 103 N. Y. Supp. 247.

A judgment creditor (Sterling) assigned his judgment. The assignee sued upon it and recovered a second judgment against the judgment debtor and issued execution. This was restrained in an action alleging that the assignment of the judgment was a fraud and a sham and for the benefit of the assignor, and to procure set-offs, and that since the second judgment he had acquired offsets against the judgment creditor under the original judgment; and it was held that the second judgment was not res judicata against him as to the assignee's cause of action, the appellate court reversing an order dissolving the injunction, and saying: "The contention that the judgment rendered in favor of appellee, Chamberlain, against the appellant, is conclusive of Chamberlain's ownership of the cause of action therein sued on, is not sound. The petition shows that at the time this judgment was rendered, appellant had no offsets against Sterling, and therefore had no such interest in the real or beneficial ownership of the original judgment upon which the suit was brought as would have entitled him to question Chamberlain's right to recover against him on the written transfer of said judgment, which placed the apparent legal title thereto in Chamberlain. If appellant can prove the allegations of his petition, equity forbids that he be required to pay this judgment, and, pending a hearing on the facts, he is entitled to have the enforcement of the judgment enjoined." Trammel v. Chamberlain, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 128 S. W. 429.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

While not within the scope of this note, it may be noted that successive judgments for the plaintiff are permissible for successive acts of nuisance (Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 80 Conn. 179; 125 Am. St. Rep. 111, 67 Atl. 508; see also dictum by Holt, Ch. J., in Fetter v. Beale, 1 Salk. 11); so also for successive damages from the same nuisance (Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moseley, 6 Ind. Terr. 369, 98 S. W. 129; Haller v. Pine, 8 Blackf. 175, 44 Am. Dec. 762; Miles v. Wingate, 6 Ind. 458).

In Shafer v. Stonebraker, 4 Gill. & J. 345, it was held that a judgment for the defendant in an action for causing water to flow back on the plaintiff's mill wheel was not a bar to another action setting up the same thing, but the case was decided on technicalities of pleading and of the nature of the record.

It may be noted that a judgment erroneous in law, as shown by subsequent decisions of the higher court, is still an adjudication in spite of the error. People ex rel. Bryant v. Holladay, 93 Cal. 241, 27 Am. St. Rep. 186, 29 Pac. 54; Cain v. Union Cent. L. Ins. Co. 123 Ky. 59, 124 Am. St. Rep. 313, 93 S. W. 622. B. B. B.

itself cleaned the floor at an expense of $12. On these findings, the court entered judgment in favor of respondent for the amount prayed for, less $12, and for costs. From that judgment, this appeal was prosecuted.

The sole question for our consideration is: Was the judgment in the first action a bar to the respondent's recovery in the second? The doctrine of res judicata is grounded in estoppel. In every such case, the burden of proof that the prior judgment disposed of the identical issues involved in the later suit rests upon him who seeks to assert the estoppel. In order to sustain this burden, two things only are essential: "(1) That the issue in the second action, upon which the judgment is brought to bear, was a material issue in the first action, necessarily determined by the judgment therein; (2) that the former judgment was upon the merits." 1 Freeman, Judgm. 4th ed. § 256.

In the case before us, there seems to be little necessity for looking beyond the record in the former suit, to ascertain what was the real issue brought before the court and necessarily determined by the former judgment. The complaint in that case set up but a single cause of action. It alleged the making of the contract, the performance of the work, and the defendant's failure to pay the contract price, and prayed for judgment for the contract price and a foreclosure of the lien. The answer admitted the making of the contract, admitted the failure to pay the contract price, denied the performance of the work, and set up as an affirmative defense and counterclaim that the tiling was so laid and was so stained and discolored as to be an injury to the property, and that the plaintiff refused to remedy the defect. The prayer was for judgment for damages on the counterclaim. The affirmative defense and counterclaim was traversed by the reply.

It is manifest that there was thus presented one issue, and but one; without a determination of which the judgment as entered could not have been reached, viz.: Had the plaintiff substantially performed his contract? A determination of that issue was essential to any judgment. It was the one issue going to the merits. The judgment was that the plaintiff take nothing by his action, and that the cause be dismissed. That judgment, whether right or wrong, necessarily determined that there had been no substantial performance of the contract by the plaintiff. If on the record there could be any doubt as to what issue the judgment determined, that doubt was removed by the court's statement that the sole issue determined was that there had been no substantial performance of the contract.

There remains but one inquiry: What was the issue in the second action upon which the judgment in the first is brought to bear? The complaint in the second action sets up the same cause of action as that in the first, and in practically the same language, except that no lien is claimed. The issue tendered clearly was the same as that in the first action, viz.: Had the plaintiff substantially performed the contract? The fact that at the second trial he was able to prove what the court had adjudged he did not prove at the first did not change the issue. The fact that events subsequent to the first suit proved to a demonstration that the work was substantially completed when he turned it over to the defendant cannot alter the case, in the absence of a new trial regularly granted on motion. It was incumbent upon the plaintiff at the first trial to prove this substantial performance, since he claimed performance and had refused to further perform. Washington Bridge Co. v. Land & River Improv. Co. 12 Wash. 272, 40 Pac. 982; Edison General Electric Co. v. Canadian P. Nav. Co. 8 Wash. 370, 24 L.R.A. 315, 40 Am. St. Rep. 910, 36 Pac. 260. It is admitted that he had the opportunity to clean the tiling himself, and thus make the demonstration prior to the first trial. The means of proof of substantial performance were as available to him then as now, and that was the sole issue. We know of no rule of law or principle of equity which will permit a contractor who has turned over the work contracted for as completed, refused to further perform, sued for the contract price, submitted his evidence of substantial performance to the court, and failed to appeal from a judgment against him, to thereafter, by mere offer to further perform, reopen the issue and retry his cause of action on the same evidence, plus evidence of the subsequent offer to perform and evidence of the actual cost to complete performance. Additional evidence to the same issue does not change the issue. The respondent, at the time of the first suit, had either wilfully and intentionally refused to complete his contract, or had substantially performed it. The judgment determined that he had refused to substantially perform. Having elected his ground and stood upon his claim of performance, and the court having in effect found that he had broken his contract, he could not thereafter make the contract a basis of any relief, in the absence of an appeal. Mortimer v. Dirks, 57 Wash. 402, 107 Pac. 184. If an adjudication against him on one tentative claim of performance is not res judicata, then a second would not be. There would be no end of the litigation. He might at various stages of a more or less complete performance of the work repeatedly invoke the court's decision as to whether there was a substantial performance, by a mere offer to further perform on each holding of the court that the prior performance was not complete. Such experimental use of the courts is not compatible with an orderly administration of justice. "No court, we think, has gone so far as to allow a litigant to experiment with a court by trying his case piecemeal." Sweeney v. Waterhouse & Co. 43 Wash. 613, 617, 86 Pac. 946.

While it is true, as said in 23 Cyc. 1161, that, "when new facts intervene before the second suit, furnishing a new basis for the claims and defenses of the parties, respectively, the issues are no longer the same, and consequently the former judgment cannot be pleaded in bar," the same text continues: "But the change of facts will not affect the estoppel, if no new element is introduced, and the legal rights and relations of the parties remain as before." 23 Cyc. pp. 1161, 1162. Thomas v. Joslyn, 36 Minn. 1, 1 Am. St. Rep. 624, 29 N. W. 344; Givens v. Thompson, 110 Mo. 432, 19 S. W. 833. The status of the parties, in their relation to each other and to the subject-matter of the actions, was fixed once for all by the respondent when he abandoned the work and turned it over as completed, refusing to do more. The issue in each action was as to whether the work was then substantially performed. "The rule is that, in an action between the same parties, a judgment therein is res judicata as to all points in issue, and also all points which might have been raised and adjudicated." Olson v. Title Trust Co. 58 Wash. 599, 109 Pac. 49; State ex rel. Schmidt v. Superior Ct. 62 Wash. 556, 114 Pac. 427; McPherson Bros. Co. v. Okanogan County, 61 Wash. 239, 112 Pac. 207.

The judgment in the first action, whether right or wrong, determined the issue now presented. No appeal having been taken therefrom, that determination was final. The defense of res judicata should have been sustained.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for dismissal.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Mount, Morris, and Fullerton, JJ., concur.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MISSISSIPPI SUPREME COURT.

ST. LOUIS & SAN FRANCISCO RAILROAD COMPANY, Appt.,

IDA MOORE et al.

(— Miss. —, 58 So. 471.)

Negligence — fog — inability to stop train.

1. A railroad company is reckless in running a train so rapidly through a town on a foggy night that it could not be stopped by the use of the ordinary means and appliances within the distance in which an object could be discovered on the track by the glare of the headlight.

Appeal — instruction — damages — absence of evidence.

2. Instructing a jury to allow damages for pain suffered by one killed by another's negligence, if any is shown by the record, is not reversible error, although the evidence shows instant death, since evidence of pain being absent, it must be presumed that the jury did not allow anything for it.

Trial — instruction — punitive damages — definition.

3. The court need not define punitive damages in authorizing the jury to allow such damages for wrongfully causing death. Damages — death — loss of companionship.

4. The damages to be awarded the widow and children of one killed by another's negligence may include compensation for the injury due to loss of his companionship, under a statute providing that the person suing shall recover such damages as the jury may allow, taking into consideration all damages of every kind to any and all parties interested in the suit.

(May 6, 1912.)

Note. — Rate of speed preventing stoppage of trains within distance disclosed by headlight.

This note is not intended to include cases where a locomotive was equipped with an improper or defective headlight.

As to liability for killing or injuring live stock on track because of lack of proper headlight, see note attached to Hanger v. Chesapeake R. Co. ante, 271.

As to duty of railroad employees to keep a lookout for live stock on track, see note in 24 L.R.A. (N.S.) 858.

As will be seen by the cases collected in this note, there is a conflict of opinion as to the duty of a railroad company under ordinary weather conditions so to run its trains that they can be stopped within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight.

Thus, in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kelton, 112 Ala. 533, 21 So. 819; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 103 Ala. 661, 16 So. 10; Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ingram, 98 Ala.

APPREAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Lee County in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiffs' intestate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. E. O. Sykes, Jr., and J. W. Buchanan, for appellant:

Even where the railroad company violated the statute as to speed, one who, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have avoided injury from the act of the company, cannot recover for such injury.

Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. McGowan, 62 Miss. 682, 52 Am. Rep. 205; Crawley v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 70 Miss. 340, 13 So. 74; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Stroud, 64 Miss. 784, 2 So. 171; Winterton v. Illinois C. R.

Co. 73 Miss. 831, 20 So. 157; Howell v. Illinois C. R. Co. 75 Miss. 243, 36 L.R.A. 545, 21 So. 746; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ruff, 95 Miss. 165, 48 So. 184; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Carter, 77 Miss. 517, 27 So. 993; Collins v. Illinois C. R. Co. 77 Miss. 855, 27 So. 837; Vicksburg R. Power & Mfg. Co. v. Marlett, 78 Miss. 872, 29 So. 62; Cumberland Teleph. & Tele. Co. v. Baker, 85 Miss. 492, 37 So. 1012.

The charge on the measure of damages given plaintiff was erroneous.

Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Smith, 82 Miss. 658, 35 So. 168; Wagner v. Gibbs, 80 Miss. 63, 92 Am. St. Rep. 598, 31 So. 434; Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Williams, 87 Miss. 354, 39 So. 489; St. Louis & S.

395, 12 So. 801; Alabama Midland R. Co. v. McGill, 121 Ala. 230, 77 Am. St. Rep. 52, 25 So. 731; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Main, 143 Ala. 149, 42 So. 108; Southern R. Co. v. Pogue, 145 Ala. 444, 40 So. 565, it was held that a railroad company injuring stock by running a train in the nighttime at such a rapid rate of speed that it was impossible, by the use of ordinary means and appliances, to stop the train and prevent injury within the distance within which stock upon the track could be seen by the aid of the headlight, is guilty of negligence.

And in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Christian Moerlein Brewing Co. 150 Ala. 390, 43 So. 723, a charge to the jury "that if they believed from the evidence that defendant's locomotive was running at such a rapid rate of speed that it would have been impossible, by the use of ordinary means and appliances, to stop the locomotive to prevent the injury to the stock within the distance in which stock . . . could be seen by aid of the headlight, then the defendant was guilty of negligence," was held correct.

And also in Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Harris, 98 Ala. 326, 13 So. 377, it was held that a requested charge, "if the jury believe that at the rate of speed at which defendant's trains were running they could not have stopped within the distance within which the headlights would reveal stock, and that such headlights were used on many well-regulated railroads at the time, your verdict must be for defendants," was properly refused, as ignoring the engineer's duty not to run his train at a negligent rate of speed.

And in Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Lyon, 62 Ala. 71, in commenting on a charge to the jury in effect that it was negligence to run a train at such a speed that it could not be stopped in less than the distance shown by the glare of the headlight, it was said that "those who employ the tremendous yet easily controllable power of steam engines on railroads must be vigilantly careful to avoid committing with them the destruction they are capable of effecting; and due care to this end is not observed when 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) a train is run thereon at such speed that it cannot be stopped within the limit at which the engineer can plainly see upon a straight track an object of the size of a man or a young mule."

But the rule followed by the supreme court of Alabama does not prevail in other jurisdictions, and so in Vizacchero v. Rhode Island Co. 26 R. I. 392, 69 L.R.A. 188, 59 Atl. 105, in criticizing the holding of the trial judge that the servant of an electric railroad company was negligent in running a car so rapidly that, with the appliances at his command, he could not stop the car after a man was distinguishable by the headlight, it was said that the distance at which the light of the car can be seen by travelers, so as to enable them conveniently to leave the track,—not the distance that the motorman could see ahead,—is the standard by which the speed of the car should be regulated; and as it is not the duty of the car to stop within the illumination of the headlight, its speed need not be restricted to the rate prescribed by such a necessity.

And in Winston v. Raleigh & G. R. Co. 90 N. C. 66, a charge in substance that a railroad company cannot run its trains in the nighttime faster than at a speed which would admit by the use of brakes of being checked, and the train brought to a stop before it has traversed the space illuminated by the headlight, without incurring liability for injury to stock straying on its roadbed, was held error, where, as in the case at bar, every reasonable precaution was taken. The court said that a railroad company cannot be held to the rigid rule of accountability laid down by the trial court, that unless a train can be stopped before reaching an object brought to view by the headlight, it must slacken its speed so that it can be brought to a standstill, as such a rule, if it prevailed, would seriously impair the usefulness of railroad transportation, which depends largely upon the regularity and rapidity of its runnings by night as well as by day.

And also in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Milam, 9 Lea, 223, a charge in effect that

F. R. Co. v. Garner, 96 Miss. 577, 51 So. 273.

Messrs. Clayton, Mitchell, & Clayton, for appellees:

If the engineer saw the person, and it was apparent or ought to have been apparent to the engineer that the position occupied by such person was one of peril, and one from which he could not, by reasonable action, extricate himself, or that the person was unaware of his position of peril, then it was the duty of the engineer to exercise reasonable care to prevent injury.

Christian v. Illinois C. R. Co. 71 Miss. 237, 15 So. 71; Morehead v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 84 Miss. 124, 36 So. 151; Southern R. Co. v. Pittman, 97 Miss. 416, 52 So. 207; Jackson Electric R. Light & P. Co. v. Carnahan, 95 Miss. 73, 48 So. 617; 33 Cyc. 798; Southern R. Co. v. Chatman, 124 Ga. 1026, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 289, 53 S. E. 692, 4 Ann. Cas. 675; Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Williams, 37 Fla. 406, 20 So. 559; Deans v. Wilmington & W. R.

Co. 107 N. C. 686, 22 Am. St. Rep. 904, 12 S. E. 77.

When the employees of the railroad attempt to exculpate themselves by giving an explanation of the cause of an injury, and the testimony or physical facts demonstrate or tend to do so, that the employees are not correct, then this question must be left to the jury.

Scott v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 72 Miss. 37, 16 So. 205; O'Kelly v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 94 Miss. 638, 47 So. 660; Cottrell v. Southern R. Co. 80 Miss. 617, 32 So. 1; Combs v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 92 Miss. 532, 46 So. 168; Harrison v. Southern R. Co. 93 Miss. 49, 46 So. 408.

If the night was dark and foggy, defendant was negligent in speed. This case should have been left to the jury.

New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Brooks, 85 Miss. 275, 38 So. 40; Hopson v. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. 87 Miss. 796, 40 So. 872; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Cantrell, 70 Miss. 331, 12 So. 344; Abernathy though all prescribed precautions were observed, negligence could be predicated of running a train at such a rate of speed that it could not be stopped within the distance the headlight would discover objects on the track was held erroneous, as the fact that a train could not be stopped within the distance mentioned is not the true test of over-speeding or recklessness, nor one from which a jury could be authorized to infer the fact of recklessness. The question of recklessness or excessive speed is one to be determined by all the facts and circumstances at the time, and not by the arbitrary rule suggested as to the distance an obstruction could be seen by the aid of the headlight.

The only Texas case is Caldwell v. Houston & T. C. R. Co. 54 Tex. Civ. App. 399, 117 S. W. 488, which was an action against a railroad for negligent killing. The court said that to entitle recovery plaintiff had the burden of proving that the trainman could, by ordinary care after discovery of the decedent, have stopped the train in time to prevent a collision; and in its argument to show that such fact was impossible, alluded to the evidence that the headlights on that railroad were so adjusted that the focus fell upon the track from 300 to 400 feet in front of the engine, and that the train which killed decedent could not have been stopped in less than 510 feet; so it is reasonable to infer, though that point was not discussed, that that court would not predicate negligence upon a rate of speed which would prevent the stopping of a train within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight; and especially in view of the fact that the court did say that "after giving to every testimonial fact in the record its full probative force, we have failed to find any showing of negligence upon which a recovery could be sustained." 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Effect of fog, rain, or snow.

The general rule is that unusual weather conditions are a circumstance which a jury may well take into account in determining the negligence. Yet though inability to stop a train within the distance shown by the headlight may not of itself, under such conditions, be considered negligence, as will be seen, a failure to use due care under such conditions will enable a recovery for any resulting injury. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, which, to support its decision, cites many of the cases collected in this note, seems to have gone farther than most of them in holding that, in spite of unusual weather conditions, the train must be under such control that it will be possible to stop it within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight.

In Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Wall, 80 Ga. 202, 7 S. E. 639, it was held that uncontradicted evidence that a heavy fog prevented the glare of the headlight from penetrating to a distance within which it would be possible to stop a train from the time stock was first seen upon the track would be a complete defense to a charge of negligence on the part of the railroad.

And in Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Thomas, 10 Ga. App. 45, 72 S. E. 514, which cites Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Wall, supra, with approval, there is good ground for the inference that the same decision would be made where the stopping of a train within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight was prevented by the engineer's vision being obscured by falling rain and the natural accumulation of mist on the front window of the cab. It was said: "The law expects railroad companies to run their passenger trains on schedule so far as they may be able to do so; and they are not ordinarily required, when it is foggy

v. Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. 97 Miss. 851, 53 So. 539; O'Kelly v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 94 Miss. 635, 47 So. 660; Southern R. Co. v. Pittman, 97 Miss. 416, 52 So. 207.

McLean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellees, who are the widow and children of one L. D. Moore, brought suit against the appellant, alleging that their husband and father was killed by the defendant through the wilful, wanton, and gross negligence of the employees of the defendant, and that the killing occurred within the limits of the incorporated city or town of Nettleton. The suit was for $15,000, and the jury returned a verdict for $4,500. The evidence discloses the following facts:

Mr. Moore was killed within the corporate limits of the town of Nettleton, at about 12 o'clock midnight. The deceased had been to Memphis, and had returned that night on the train to Nettleton, and had been drinking to some extent, and was perhaps under the influence of liquor. The train which killed him was not the train on which he returned to Nettleton. Just before his death, he was seen by the engineer and fireman in charge of the train that ran over him, sitting between the rails of the railroad track, and was within less than 200 yards of the regular passenger depot at Nettleton, and between the depot and the switch to the west of the depot. The train that killed him was going east, and was running, according to the testimony of the engineer and fireman in charge of the train, from 30 to 35 miles an hour. The engineer testified that he was on the lookout; that the track was perfectly straight for a distance of from a half mile to a mile west of the point where decedent was killed; that, when he first discovered the man on the track, the engine was about 200 feet from him; that the night was dark and foggy, and that it was impossible for or raining, to reduce their trains to such a rate of speed as that the engineer may be in a position to discover live stock on the track in time to prevent injuring them."

And also in Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Melton, 2 Lea, 262, the court said: "We cannot admit that if the light becomes obscure from natural causes, without any defect in the light and appurtenances, without any fault upon the part of the employees, that in all cases, as a matter of law, the company is to be liable for the consequences,—or, in other words, they cannot run on a dark night. Instances might occur in which danger from collision and otherwise might imperatively demand that the train proceed at all events, and it would be difficult to lay down any rule by which it might be determined how far ahead the light should be thrown to make it lawful for the train to run."

In Hilliker-Krebs Bldg. & Mfg. Co. v. Birmingham R. & Electric Co. 100 Ala. 424, 14 So. 200, it was held that if the dampness on the headlights due to misting rain obscures the transparency of the glass, or if smoke from coke ovens near by had settled on and obscured the track, the running of the train with reasonable care, in view of these circumstances, could not be deemed negligent, though trains could not be stopped in time to avoid the killing of stock on the track.

And in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Jones, 71 Ala. 487, it was said that if, from fog or driving rain or snow, the light cast from a proper headlight was obscured, the running of the train with reasonable care, in view of that circumstance, could not be deemed negligent.

And this qualification of the rule predicated negligence of the running of the train at such speed that it is impossible to stop the train within the glare shown by the headlight was approved in Central 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ingram, 98 Ala. 395, 12 So. 801, if the injury is not attributable to the rate of speed in view of the ordinary darkness of the night, but results from intervening unusual causes, such as heavy or falling rain or snow. But it was held that if a bank or wall of fog appears ahead of the train, and the railroad company knowingly runs a train under such conditions as render it impossible for those in charge of the train to prevent injury to stock straying on the track, it should be held responsible for the loss.

And also in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. McAlpine, 75 Ala. 113, in reaffirming the qualification made in Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Jones, 71 Ala. 487, the court said that if a train had proper headlights and brakes in good order, if it was skillfully officered, was not running with undue speed, and if the officers and agents directing the movement of the train were attentive and vigilant and guilty of no negligence, then, if by reason of the weather or other unavoidable hindrance an animal was not seen on the track until it was too late to stop the train by the use of the appliances belonging to it, the railroad company is not liable for the loss.

And in Western R. Co. v. Mitchell, 148 Ala. 35, 41 So. 427, it was said that when a bank or wall of fog or strip of smoke appears ahead of the train and across the track, hiding from view objects that may be beyond it, on or near the track, common prudence should suggest to the engineer that he do not plunge heedlessly on, with undiminished speed, reckless of consequences, but that he secure control of the train and proceed with caution and care commensurate with the danger until the usual conditions are restored. And to the same effect is Alabama Midland R. Co. v. McGill, 121 Ala. 230, 77 Am. St. Rep. 52, 25 So. 731.

J. H. B.

him to have stopped his train, running at that rate of speed, within the distance shown by the glare from the headlight of the engine. The headlight was burning brightly, and ordinarily he could see an object on the track for a distance of from 200 to 300 yards; that the reason why he did not discover the man on the track that night was because it was dark and foggy, and the fog prevented him from seeing the man.

For the plaintiff the court instructed the jury that, even though they may believe from the testimony that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence and was a trespasser, notwithstanding if they believe from the evidence that the injury was wilfully, wantonly, or recklessly inflicted, the jury should find for the plaintiff. The second instruction related alone to damages. The third instruction related to the form of the verdict. The fourth instruction told the jury that although they may believe from the testimony that the deceased, at the time of the injury, was guilty of contributory negligence, yet if they further believe from the evidence that the deceased was in a position of peril, and the engineer saw his position of peril and appreciated his danger, and that the deceased could not, by the exercise of reasonable effort, extricate himself from such position in time to have avoided the injury, and that the engineer saw the deceased in such position in time to have avoided the injury by the exercise of reasonable care, and that afterwards said engineer wilfully, wantonly, or recklessly ran the train upon the deceased and inflicted the injuries complained of, then they should find for the plaintiff.

For the defendant only one instruction was refused, which was a peremptory instruction to find for the defendant. Instruction No. 1 for the defendant charged that if the jury believed from the testimony that the engineer, as soon as he discovered the deceased on the track, did what he could to stop the train by applying his air brakes in emergency and sounding his track and also sounding the alarm, then the jury should find for the defendant. By the second instruction for the defendant the jury was charged that if the evidence in the case showed that the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence which was the proximate cause of his death, and unless the jury believed from a preponderance of the testimony in the case that the engineer saw the deceased on the track and appreciated his peril at a sufficient distance from the deceased for the engineer to have stopped his train before striking the deceased, and that unless the engineer wilfully, wantonly, and recklessly failed to stop the train, then the verdict should be for the defendant. These were all of the instructions that were given for either the plaintiff or the defendant, except instructions as to the form of the verdict, and except as to the elements of damage. The instructions were too liberal for the defendant, but of this defendant cannot complain.

It is manifest from these instructions that the only question that was submitted to the jury as to the liability of the defendant was whether the injury was inflicted through the wilful, wanton, or reckless conduct upon the part of the defendant. The evidence in the case is conflicting as to when and from what point the engineer discovered, or could have discovered, the perilous position of the deceased, and as to the character of the night; the testimony for the plaintiff supporting the contention that the night was clear, and that there was nothing to prevent the engineer from seeing the perilous position of the plaintiff at such a point as he could, by the exercise of proper care, have avoided the injury. The testimony on the part of the defendant is to the effect that the night was dark and foggy; but, as the jury has passed upon the question of fact, this court has no power to disturb the verdict.

The ground upon which the defendant based its peremptory instruction is that the night was so dark and foggy it was impossible for the train to be stopped within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight. It may be said that, if the evidence of the defendant is true upon this proposition, it fastens liability upon the defendant. The law is well settled that it is negligence in a railroad company to run its train in the nighttime at such a speed that it is impossible, by the use of ordinary means and appliances, to stop the train within the distance in which obstructions upon the track can be seen by the aid of the headlight of the engine, and that, if anything in surrounding conditions and circumstances suggests an increase of care in the operation of a railroad train to avoid peril and damage, the duty to increase such care proportionately increases. Such is in accordance with the great weight of authority and with the better reason. Central R. & Bkg. Co. v. Ingram, 98 Ala. 395, 12 So. 801; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Lyon, 82 Ala. 71; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Jones, 71 Ala. 487; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Gentry, 103 Ala. 635, 16 So. 9; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 103 Ala. 661, 16 So. 10; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Cochran, 105 Ala. 354, 16 So. 797; Alabama Midland R. Co. v. McGill, 121 Ala. 230, 77 Am. St. Rep. 52, 25 So. 731. In Cin- cinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Com. 126 Ky. 712, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 561, 104 S. W. 771, it is held, affirming the rule in Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Com. 80 Ky. 143, 44 Am. Rep. 468, that it is an indictable offense as a common-law nuisance for a railroad, at a crossing of the turnpike, to habitually run its trains at an unsafe and unreasonable rate of speed, and so rapidly as to endanger and injure persons traveling upon a turnpike, without giving warning signals and taking precautions to avoid injuring persons by approaching trains.

All of the authorities above cited are where the train was running in the country through a sparsely settled section, and where no speed limit by law was placed upon a railroad. To run at night a railroad train propelled by the powerful and dangerous agency of steam or electricity, through an incorporated city or town, and in violation of the statute, at such a rate as to make it impossible, by the exercise of ordinary care, to stop the train within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight of the engine, must, from the necessities of the case, be regarded and looked upon as reckless conduct. The common law, as contradistinguished from statutory law, is nothing more or less than common sense, honestly applied to the practical affairs of life; and it is manifest that to run a train of cars, propelled as aforesaid, at such a dangerous rate of speed, through a populous section of the country, is dangerous in the extreme, well calculated to produce injury, not only to persons on the track, but to the passengers on the train, and may well be characterized as reckless conduct, and such as the law denominates wilfulness. In Stevens v. Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. 81 Miss. 195, 32 So. 311, this court held that it was gross negligence to run a train in the daytime, through a populous portion of a city or town, at a dangerous rate of speed. If this be true, it is even more reckless to run a train at night through an incorporated city or town, and within the yards, at such a rate that it cannot be stopped within the distance shown by the glare of the headlight.

Instruction No. 2, given for the plaintiff, is criticized by appellant upon the following grounds: First, that it instructed the jury that they might consider the pain suffered by the deceased up to the time of his death; second, that the instruction told the jury that they might return a verdict for punitive damages, in addition to the compensatory damages, but failed to instruct the jury what punitive damages are.

In answer to the first proposition: 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Granting that in the instant case death was instantaneous, and that intestate sustained no pain, either mental or physical, it is no ground for reversing, because, if it be conceded that there was no evidence from which the jury could infer pain, it must be presumed that the jury in its verdict did not include anything for the pain and suffering. The instruction reads: "The mental and physical suffering which he endured, if any be shown by the record." If it be error, it is therefore harmless; and looking through the entire record, and taking into consideration the amount of the verdict, we cannot say that the instruction is reversible error. The verdict was evidently right on the facts.

As to the second proposition, it is not at all necessary that the jury should be instructed as to what constitutes punitive damages. As this court has held, it is proper to do so; but it is to be presumed that a jury understands what is meant by punitive damages, as much so as they understand what is meant by actual or compensatory damages, and if the defendant in this case had desired, the court would have given it an instruction defining what is meant by punitive or exemplary damages.

The only portion of the instruction which has given us any difficulty, although the appellant does not complain of that portion of the instruction, is that which says that, in fixing the amount of the damages, "you may take into consideration the loss to the wife and the children of the deceased of the companionship of the husband and the father." According to the great weight of authority, both in England and in America, loss to the wife and children of the society and companionship of the husband and father is not an element of damage; but it is to be observed that all of these authorities are predicated upon a statute entirely different from the statute under consideration. Section 721 of the Code of 1906 provides, in actions for injuries producing death, that "in such action the party or parties suing shall recover such damages as the jury may award, taking into consideration all damages of every kind to the decedent, and all damages of every kind to any and all parties interested in the suit." It is to be observed that there is a very marked distinction between this statute and the former statutes in this state; and it is to be further observed that the law, in the progress of human events, has more and more, as the years succeed each other, become more liberal in allowing damages for the death of a party.

At common law an action for damages did not survive the death of the party injured. An action for the recovery of damages for the wrongful killing of a human being was the result of the statute of 9 & 10 Vict., passed in 1846, and known as "Lord Campbell's act." By that law it is provided that "the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively, for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought." [18 Stat. at L. 291, chap. 93.] Though varying considerably in their provisions, statutes of practically the same import have been enacted in most of the states of the American Union. Under Lord Campbell's act, and also under the statutes of almost all the states in this country, including the former statute of this state, it is a well-settled proposition that the jury, in estimating damages, are confined to the pecuniary loss sustained by the surviving husband, wife, parent, child, or other kindred of the deceased, and cannot take into consideration their mental suffering, nor is the jury authorized to give damages by way of the solatium. This was the rule of this state prior to the enactment of the law of 1898, which is brought forward in the Code of 1906, and is the statute now under consideration.

In order to determine the question, we may well look to the decisions of other courts construing statutes similar to the one now under consideration. The California statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 377) provided that "such damages may be given as, under all the circumstances of the case, may be just." The California court, in construing this statute, has repeatedly held that damages may be given for the mental anguish of the surviving wife, child, etc., as well as for the loss of society, and that the jury are not limited in assessing damages to the actual pecuniary loss of the plaintiff. In Beeson v. Green Mountain Gold Min. Co. 57 Cal. 20, it was said: "We think that the social and domestic relations of the parties, their kindly demeanor toward each other, the society, were parts of 'all the circumstances of the case,' for the jury to take into consideration in estimating what damages would be just from a pecuniary point of view, especially as there is nothing in the case to show that the jury were instructed that they might give damages by way of solace." The same was held in Cook v. Clay Street Hill R. Co. 60 Cal. 604; also in Myers v. San Francisco, 42 Cal. 215; McKeever v. Market Street R. Co. 59 Cal. 294; Nehrbas v. Central P. R. Co. 52 Cal. 320; Cleary v. City R. Co. 76 Cal. 240, 18 Pac. 269. In this latter case the chief justice said: "The mental anguish and suffering of the parents, in addition to the medical attendance and funeral expense, are elements which, under our peculiar statute . . . are proper to be considered in determining the amount of the recovery." In the subsequent case of Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. 84 Cal. 515, 18 Am. St. Rep. 248, 24 Pac. 303, the court says: "We are of opinion that the court erred in including in the instruction the words 'sorrow, grief, and mental suffering occasioned by the death of the son to his mother.' In thus directing the jury the court fell into an error. In our opinion the damage should be confined to the pecuniary loss suffered by the mother, and the loss of the comfort, society, support, and protection of deceased." The latest utterance of the California court is Green v. Southern California R. Co. — Cal. —, 67 Pac. 4, which was a suit by the husband and child for the death of the wife and mother, in which it was held that "as damages, all pecuniary loss suffered by them from loss of society," etc. (In this connection we call attention to the fact that in 13 Cyc. 371, it is stated that "in an action . . . by a husband or wife for the death of his or her spouse, . . . damages cannot be recovered for the loss of the society of the deceased;" and among other authorities refers to Munro v. Pacific Coast Dredging & Reclamation Co. and Beeson v. Green Mountain Gold Min. Co. supra. These authorities hold to the contrary, as we have shown above.)

The Virginia statute (Code 1873, chap. 145, § 8) provides that "the jury in any such action may award such damages as to it may seem fair and just." In construing this statute the court held, in Matthews v. Warner, 29 Gratt. 570, 26 Am. Rep. 396, and Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Noell, 32 Gratt. 394, that the jury were not confined to mere pecuniary damages, but may award such damages as it may deem to be fair and just under all the circumstances of the case. The South Carolina statute is that "the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting." In Petrie v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 29 S. C. 303, 7 S. E. 515, it was held that under this statute it was not necessary for the plaintiffs, the children of the deceased, to prove that they had been pecuniarily damaged, or that they had any legal claim on the deceased for their support. In Paterson v. Wallace, 1 Macq. Sc. App. Cas. 748, damages are allowed by way of solatium. In Matthews v. Warner, supra, the court, in discussing this question, says: "It was argued very earnestly by the learned counsel for the appellant that such a construction of the statute as we have here given would result in great injustice, if juries are to be turned loose to assess damages according to their own notions as to compensation for the mental suffering and agony of a mother losing her child, or of a wife losing her husband, unrestrained by statutory enactment, confining them to the actual pecuniary injury resulting in death. There are two answers to such arguments. One is: Ita est scripta lex. The other is: We must presume the legislature knew the force and effect of their own enactments. They must have been cognizant of the statutes and the decisions under them, and they must, with such knowledge, have known the force and effect of the language they used." The Virginia statute, which was being considered by the court, was that "the jury in any such action may award such damages as to it may seem fair and just;" and the instruction complained of simply followed the statute.

In St. Louis & N. A. R. Co. v. Mathis, 76 Ark. 184, 113 Am. St. Rep. 35, 91 S. W. 763, it was held that, in an action by minor children for the death of their father, the industry, commercial character, and parental care and affection of the deceased may be taken into consideration in estimating the damages. In St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Haist, 71 Ark. 258, 100 Am. St. Rep. 65, 72 S. W. 893, it was held that a minor, in a suit for the death of her father, is entitled to recover for the care, support, and maintenance, and such advantages and benefits in the way of training and education, both morally and intellectually, as she would have received from him if his death had not occurred.

By far the best-considered case upon this subject to be found in all the books is Florida C. & P. R. Co. v. Foxworth, 41 Fla. 1, 79 Am. St. Rep. 149, 25 So. 338. The Florida statute (Laws 1883, chap. 3439) provides that the jury may give such damages "as the party entitled to sue may have sustained by reason of the death of the party killed." After a very exhaustive and thorough investigation of the subject, the conclusion reached by the Florida court is as follows: "In estimating the pecuniary loss sustained by the widow, the jury may properly take into consideration her loss of the comfort, protection, and society of the husband, in the light of all the evidence in the case relating to the character, habits, and conduct of the husband as husband, and to the marital relations between the parties at the time of and prior to his death; and they may also consider his services in assisting her in the care of the family, if any, but the widow is not entitled to recover for her mental anxiety or distress over the death of her husband," etc.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In determining what damages are recovered in actions like the one under consideration, we must look alone to the statute. This is the measure and the limit of the right; and after a full consideration of the question our conclusion is that, in a suit by a widow and children for the death of the husband and parent, the jury may take into consideration the loss to the wife and children of the companionship, protection, and society of the husband and father, but not by way of solatium. In Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. Anderson, 89 Miss. 732, 41 So. 263, the exact question now under consideration was not discussed, though the present statute was under review by the court.

Affirmed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

CELIA COHEN, Resp't.,

v.

CITY OF NEW YORK, Appt.

(204 N. Y. 424, 97 N. E. 866.)

Highway — defect — delay in placing barriers — negligence.

Delay for four hours by a municipality in placing barriers at a small ditch or gully washed by an unprecedented storm in a park road, which is not extraordinarily dangerous, to prevent injury to travelers, is as matter of law not negligence where the locality is neither central nor much traveled.

(Chase, J., dissents.)

(February 13, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, reversing a Note. — The general subject of liability of municipal corporations for defects or obstructions in streets is treated in the note to Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 513, including the degree of diligence or care as affecting liability (pp. 577 et seq.). And see specifically as to duty in respect of park paths p. 574, and as to duty to furnish barriers p. 676, of that note.

See also as to duty of town or municipality to provide barriers to protect travelers from obstructions outside the highway, note in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 980, and later case, Speck v. Bruce Twp. 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 203; and as to duty to provide barriers against abandoned highways, note in 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1158. As to what injuries may be deemed to have been proximately caused by absence of guard rail in highway, see note to Lyons v. Watt, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1135, and later case, Mineral City v. Gilbow, 25 L.R.A.(N.S.) 627.

judgment of a Trial Term for Kings County dismissing the complaint and granting a new trial in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James D. Bell and Frank Julian Price, with Mr. Archibald R. Watson, for appellant:

The city cannot be held liable for the policeman's failure to give notice of the gully.

Woodhull v. New York, 150 N. Y. 450, 44 N. E. 1038; Gartland v. New York Zoological Soc. 135 App. Div. 170, 120 N. Y. Supp. 24.

Mr. Abraham C. Cohen, with Mr. Michael H. Harris, for respondent:

The defendant was negligent.

Corcoran v. New York, 188 N. Y. 131, 80 N. E. 660; Chisholm v. State, 141 N. Y. 246, 36 N. E. 184; Weed v. Ballston Spa. 76 N. Y. 329; McGuire v. Spence, 91 N. Y. 303, 43 Am. Rep. 668; Brusso v. Buffalo, 90 N. Y. 679.

The city is liable if the police officer knew of the gully before the accident.

Fisher v. Wakefield Park Realty Co. 135 App. Div. 808, 120 N. Y. Supp. 129; Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506; Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 43 Am. Rep. 657; Twogood v. New York, 102 N. Y. 216, 6 N. E. 275; Hawley v. Gloversville, 4 App. Div. 343, 38 N. Y. Supp. 647; Parks v. New York, 111 App. Div. 839, 98 N. Y. Supp. 94.

Hiscock, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

While plaintiff was riding in a carriage at about half-past 12 in the afternoon of October 9, 1903, over one of the roads in Prospect Park in the borough of Brooklyn, the carriage ran into a gully at the side of the road and was tipped over, and she was injured, and she has brought this action on the theory that the defendant was guilty of negligence in respect to said defect.

Commencing on the morning of October 8th and continuing without interruption from that time until after the accident, there was a rainfall of very unusual extent in the city of Brooklyn. The result of this, amongst other things, was to so raise the water in one of the lakes in the park system that, notwithstanding the efforts of employees to prevent it, the water overflowed and, passing some distance, spread over the road at the point of accident and washed out a gully several inches in depth. One of the plaintiff's witnesses was a policeman stationed near the place of accident; and, while his evidence was variable and unsatisfactory, the jury probably would have had the right to say that he discovered the defect in the roadway at about half-past 8 in the morning of the day of the accident. He thereafter telephoned to his police station, about a mile away, some message, the purport of which is not given, except that it is assumed that it related in some way to the conditions which have been detailed. There is nothing in the record to indicate whether the locality in question was a central one, or whether the roadway where plaintiff was traveling at that time was much used or not.

The question, of course, under these circumstances is whether a jury would have had the right to say that the defendant was guilty of negligence because it did not, by barriers or in some other manner, guard the defective highway; for it must be conceded that it was impossible to repair the road until the waters receded at some time after the accident. I am of the opinion that it would not have been permissible to allow the jury to say this, and that therefore the trial judge was correct in his disposition of the case.

It will be assumed, for the appellant's counsel seems to so assume, that the policeman was an agent of the city for the purpose of receiving notice of the condition of the highway, and that it was his duty to communicate his knowledge to his superiors, in order that it might be passed along to those officials who were charged with the duty of repairing or guarding against the defect. The rule in this case, where the defect arose without fault on the part of the city, is that it would not be charged with negligence until lapse of a reasonable time in which to communicate knowledge and notice of the defect, and of a reasonable time after such notice and knowledge within which to repair or guard against the same. Farley v. New York, 152 N. Y. 222, 57 Am. St. Rep. 511, 46 N. E. 506; Sprague v. Rochester, 159 N. Y. 20, 26, 53 N. E. 697.

Many times the question whether reasonable diligence has been exercised is one of fact for the jury; but at others, when there is no dispute of fact, the question is one of law. Hedges v. Hudson River R. Co. 49 N. Y. 223; Wright v. Bank of the Metropolis, 110 N. Y. 237, 249, 1 L.R.A. 289, 6 Am. St. Rep. 356, 18 N. E. 79. And in determining how speedily a municipality should be required to act in such a case as this to avert accidents a limit must some time be reached, where the period between discovery of the defect and the accident is so short that a jury should not be allowed to say, as a question of fact, that due diligence has been lacking. I think that the present one is such a case, and that the defendant should not be held liable because it failed within about four hours to remedy a defect, not extraordinarily dangerous, caused by a storm of almost unprecedented severity in a locality not appearing to have been either central or much traveled at that time. It must be assumed that after such a rainfall as this was there were unusual demands on the city of many kinds and in many localities.

While no cases have been cited involving facts similar to those here presented, there are those which in a general way sustain our view.

Rehberg v. New York, 91 N. Y. 137, 144, 43 Am. Rep. 657, was an action to recover damages for injuries sustained by the fall of some bricks which had been piled in the street. The accident occurred about noon on May 5th. The pile was completed May 3d, and was commenced on or before April 29th, and, as the jury would have been warranted in finding, had reached the safety limit as early as Wednesday or Thursday previous to the accident. A policeman saw the pile from time to time while it was going up; but it did not appear that he notified any officer or department of the city government. It was said by the court: "Notice to the policeman of this unlawful obstruction was, we think, notice to the city, and the city is chargeable with any neglect on his part, . . . or for any negligence in permitting the obstruction to exist. Whether, in view of the distribution of municipal powers . . . and the time which would be required by the city after notice to cause the obstruction to be removed, the city acted with reasonable diligence after notice to the policeman of its existence, and whether there was time after such notice to have removed the obstruction before the happening of the accident, were questions of fact for the jury, to be determined upon all the circumstances of the case. The question presented is not free from difficulty; but we are of opinion that the case ought to have been submitted to the jury upon the question of negligence on the part of the defendant. If the city omitted to act with reasonable diligence after notice of an unlawful obstruction in the street, . . . we think it would be no defense that it may not have known that the obstruction was in fact dangerous."

It thus appears that in this case the question of the negligence of the city in not removing the bricks was regarded as "not free from difficulty," when it had had 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

notice of the obstruction several days before the accident.

In Blakeley v. Troy, 18 Hun, 167, it was held, as a matter of law, that the neglect of the city to remove ice before 1 o'clock in the afternoon, which had formed the night before, was not enough to make the city liable.

In Reed v. Detroit, 99 Mich. 204, 58 N. W. 44, it was held that the existence of a hole in a culvert in a public street from 5 o'clock in the morning until 8 o'clock in the evening was not for a sufficient time to permit a jury to charge the defendant with constructive notice.

In McKormick v. West Bay City, 110 Mich. 265, 68 N. W. 148, an alderman of the city and a member of the committee on streets, at about noon discovered that a plank had been removed from a walk on one of the public streets. He replaced it without fastening it, and notified the street commissioner that evening, and the defect was repaired the next morning. It was held, as a matter of law, that there was no unreasonable delay, either in giving notice of or in repairing the defect.

I think that the insufficiency of the time which elapsed in the present case between discovery of the defect and the accident, for the purpose of charging the defendant with negligence, is also made very apparent by contrast with the facts in the cases cited by the plaintiff to sustain a right of recovery.

In Kunz v. Troy, 16 N. Y. S. R. 459, 1 N. Y. Supp. 596, the recovery was permitted for the negligence of the defendant in not removing a counter which had remained on the sidewalk from Tuesday until Saturday afternoon.

In Higgins v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co. 54 App. Div. 69, 66 N. Y. Supp. 334, it appeared as a basis for plaintiff's recovery that for one or two weeks prior to the date of the accident a railroad tie had been left in the gutter between the crosswalk and the curb of the street at an unlighted corner, and that one of defendant's police officers had been thrown by the same tie two nights before the accident, and had reported the occurrence to the captain of the police precinct.

In Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 301, 4 Am. St. Rep. 453, 16 N. E. 344, the loose stone in the street which caused plaintiff's accident had been in such condition for a week or more before the accident.

As has been stated, no case has been cited, and a careful search has failed to find one, in which, under such conditions as surrounded this plaintiff's accident, a municipality has been held negligent because it has not repaired or guarded a defect in a street within about four hours after discovery by such an agent as a policeman, and I think it would be going altogether too far to impose such a degree of liability.

In my opinion, the order of the Appellate Division should be reversed, and the judgment of the Trial Term affirmed, with costs in both courts.

Chase, J., dissenting:

The gully was 16 to 20 inches deep, concealed by water overflowing the entire roadway, and consequently the defect was an extraordinarily dangerous one. It was known to the city, and not discoverable by travelers without a special examination. In my judgment, it was a question of fact whether the failure to put up a barrier or give notice to travelers was negligence. The judgment should be affirmed.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Werner, and Collin, JJ., concur with Hiscock, J. Willard Bartlett, J., concurs in result.

Chase, J., reads dissenting memorandum.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

RE HUGH ALDERMAN.

WILLIAM F. ALDERMAN, Appt.

(157 N. C. 507, 73 S. E. 126.)

Judgment — awarding custody of children — effect in other state.

A judgment in a divorce proceeding giving the father the right to receive visits from a child of the marriage, which is

Note. — Extraterritorial effect of judgment awarding custody of children upon divorce of parents.

As to jurisdiction to award custody of child temporarily within the state but domiciled elsewhere, see note to Lanning v. Gregory, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 690.

The earlier cases on the subject here annotated are to be found in a subdivision of the note to Benton's Succession, 59 L.R.A. 177.

Some apparent conflict is noticed in the cases which pass upon the extraterritorial effect of a judgment awarding the custody of children upon a divorce of the parents. Some cases hold that while the judgment is res judicata in the state of its rendition and elsewhere so far as the parents are concerned, it is not res judicata as to the right of some other state, where the children may subsequently be, to determine the custody of the children as their welfare may require. People ex rel. Hickey v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

awarded to the mother, is not, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, binding upon the courts of another state to which the child and mother remove and where they take up their domicile.

(December 20, 1911.)

APPEAL by petitioner from a judgment of the Superior Court for Buncombe County in favor of defendant in a habeas corpus proceeding to secure possession of petitioner's infant child. Affirmed.

Statement by Brown, J.:

This is a proceeding in habeas corpus, instituted by the petitioner, Wm. F. Alderman, to determine the custody of Hugh Alderman, the infant son (four years of age) of petitioner and his former wife, the respondent, Sarah E. Alderman, who now resides with her child at Brevard, North Carolina. The cause was heard in the superior court of Buncombe county by his Honor, Judge Webb, who made findings of fact and rendered judgment as follows: "This cause coming on to be heard before the undersigned judge, James L. Webb, and being heard upon the affidavits filed by both plaintiff and defendant, I find the following facts:

"(1) I find as a fact that W. F. Alderman and Sarah E. Alderman were married in the state of Florida about 7th day of June, 1899, and lived together as man and wife until about the ——— day of ———, 1909.

"(2) I find as a fact that during the years 1909 and 1910 W. F. Alderman abandoned Sarah E. Alderman, and thereupon, Sarah E. Alderman, who was then with her child, Hugh Alderman, visiting her Hickey, 86 Ill. App. 20; Thorndike v. Rice, 24 Month. L. Rep. 19, cited in People ex rel. Hickey v. Hickey, 86 Ill. App. 27; Re Bort, 25 Kan. 308, 37 Am. Rep. 255; Avery v. Avery, 33 Kan. 1, 52 Am. Rep. 523, 5 Pac. 419; Keenan v. Keenan, 5 Ohio N. P. N. S. 12, 17 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 581. RE ALDERMAN.

So a decree of divorce obtained by the wife, a resident of Colorado, against her husband domiciled in North Carolina, without personal service upon him, under which she is awarded the custody of a child, whose possession she seeks in North Carolina, is of no validity in the latter state, either as to the relation of the parties or as to the custody of the child, which at the time of the Colorado proceeding was domiciled with its father in North Carolina. Harris v. Harris, 115 N. C. 587, 44 Am. St. Rep. 471, 20 S. E. 187.

And a decree of divorce of a court of another jurisdiction awarding the custody of a child of the parties to one of them, passed parents in the state of North Carolina, instituted divorce proceedings in the courts of the state of Florida, alleging wilful, continued, and obstinate desertion on the part of W. F. Alderman, and the said Sarah E. Alderman was on February 28, 1911, granted a divorce from the bonds of matrimony upon the ground of wilful, continued, and obstinate desertion.

"(3) I find as a fact that during the relationship of ~~man~~ and wife, between the plaintiff and the defendant, there was born Hugh Alderman, the child in question, who is now a little more than four years of age.

"(4) I find as a fact that in the decree that was signed in the divorce proceedings in the state of Florida, rendered February 28, 1911, the following clause and paragraph appears: 'It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the complainant, Sarah E. Alderman, have and she is granted the custody of the child, Hugh Alderman, provided that the defendant, W. F. Alderman shall be allowed to visit said child at such times as may to the said Sarah E. Alderman seem reasonable, and the child, Hugh Alderman, may visit the defendant, William F. Alderman, at such times and under such circumstances and conditions as are reasonable and expedient, and the child may at least be permitted to visit said William F. Alderman for two weeks at a time every three months if the said William F. Alderman so desires or elects.'

"(5) I find as a fact that the child, Hugh Alderman, is a frail and delicate while the child is in the District of Columbia, does not preclude the courts of the District from determining the question of the custody of the child. Seeley v. Seeley, 30 App. D. C. 191, 12 Ann. Cas. 1058, wherein, upon a habeas corpus proceeding brought to enforce the foreign decree, it was held that the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution of the United States was not involved. The court said that the welfare of the child is the predominant consideration at all times and under all circumstances.

Of such prime importance is the welfare of the child that the court may disregard the fact that under a foreign judgment of divorce the custody of the children has been given to one of the parents, and give them to some third party. Re Bort, 25 Kan. 308, 37 Am. Rep. 255.

So the court in Re Bort, supra, after reaching the conclusion that the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution has no application to cases of this kind, said: "We understand the law to be, when the custody of children is the question, that the best interest of the children is the paramount fact. Rights of father and mother sink into insignificance before that. Even when father and mother are living together, a court has the power, if the best interests of the child require it, to take it away from both parents and commit the custody to a third person."

Where a court of a sister state grants a divorce, without finding the father unfit temporarily, and awards the custody of the minor children to the mother, such decree does not deprive the father, who subsequently in another state sues out a writ of habeas corpus to obtain possession of the children, of his natural right to the custody of such children against any person except the mother; and upon her death, such right ceases to be affected by such award. Clarke v. Lyon, 82 Neb. 625, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 171, 118 N. W. 472.

Other cases, on the other hand, sustain the proposition that a decree of divorce, fixing the custody of the children of the marriage, rendered in accordance with the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

laws of another state, by a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, will be given full force and effect in other states as long as the circumstances attending the adoption of the decree remain the same. Hardin v. Hardin, 168 Ind. 352, 81 N. E. 60; People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 40 Hun, 611, appeal dismissed in 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143; Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 472, 97 Am. St. Rep. 928, 73 S. W. 946; ruling on the question certified followed in 32 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 75 S. W. 368; Bennett v. Bennett, Deady, 299, Fed. Cas. No. 1,318.

In Morrill v. Morrill, 83 Conn. 479, 77 Atl. 1, it was held that where a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject-matter granted a divorce and awarded the custody of the children to one of the parties, its jurisdiction, even in the absence of a statute upon the subject,—there was a statute in the case at bar, Gen. Stat. § 4558,—is a continuing one, so that the power of the court to amend, modify, or annul its order of custody as the welfare of the children under existing conditions may demand, ever after remains, notwithstanding that the party to whose custody they were awarded by the original decree has become a resident, with the children, in a foreign country; and that the extraterritorial effect of any order modifying the original decree as to the custody of the children is that it should, according to the customary comity of states and nations, be recognized and enforced; and in the states of the American Union, by force of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, must be recognized and enforced so long, and only so long, as the circumstances attending its adoption remain unchanged.

People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 40 Hun, 611, which is set out in a note in 59 L.R.A. 177, was dismissed upon appeal in 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143, for the reason that the courts below, upon a view of all the existing facts relating to the welfare and interests of the infants, exercised their discretion in awarding to the mother the custody of the children; and in so doing gave to the for-child, and that said child was at the time of the institution of the divorce proceedings in the state of Florida, and prior thereto, and has been at all times since, residing with its mother, Sarah E. Alderman, and grandparents, Rev. Paul F. Brown and wife, at Brevard, Transylvania county, North Carolina.

"(6) I find as a fact that the child's health is such that it would jeopardize it to carry it from the mountains of Western North Carolina to the state of Florida, especially during the warm season of the year.

"(7) I find as a fact that the mother of the child, Sarah E. Alderman, is an intelligent, refined, Christian woman, living with her parents, Rev. Paul F. Brown and wife at Brevard, North Carolina, and that Rev. Paul F. Brown is the pastor of the Presbyterian Church in Brevard, North Carolina.

"(8) I find as a fact that Sarah E. Alderman, the mother of Hugh Alderman, and her parents, Rev. Paul F. Brown and wife, the grandparents of Hugh Alderman, are people of sufficient means to properly care for and make comfortable and educate the child, and I further find that the moral welfare of the child, Hugh Alderman, is being well guarded.

"(9) I further find as a fact that prior to the institution of the divorce proceedings in the state of Florida by Sarah E. Alderman v. W. F. Alderman, and since said proceedings were instituted, and prior to and since the decree of separation and divorce was rendered therein, the said William F. Alderman had in his employ a stenographer, one Georgia V. Farmer, and that he became infatuated with said woman, conducting himself in a way not becoming a man of a family, with a living wife, that he showed the said Georgia Farmer many attentions in various ways, riding upon street cars with her, carrying her to restaurants, theaters, purchasing small articles of various kinds for her, taking trips with her on trains, visiting her boarding house, removing the photo of Sarah E. Alderman, his wife, from the locket on his watch chain, which locket contained the miniature photo of Sarah E. Alderman and one of their children, now dead, and placing in said locket the miniature of Georgia Farmer.

"I further find as a fact that William F. Alderman prior to the date of the decree in said divorce proceedings, and while the decree for alimony was being considered, had one Roena Floyd, a single woman, to deed to Georgia Farmer, his stenographer, for a nominal sum of $10, a house and lot in the city of Jacksonville, Florida, and the said deed was not registered until after said decree for divorce was signed, to wit, on March 23, 1911.

"I further find that after the institution of this suit in the superior court of Buncombe county to obtain the child Hugh Alderman, the said William F. Alderman attempted to kidnap or get possession of the said Hugh Alderman by having a colored boy to secretly get him out of the possession of his mother, Sarah E. Alderman, carry him to Hendersonville, through the country, a distance of 20 miles, there to be turned over to William F. Alderman to be carried to the state of Florida.

"(10) I further find as a fact that William F. Alderman has no permanent place to modify it, by proof that the situation and character of the respective parties have so changed as to render it to the interests of the infants that they be committed to the care of the mother. Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 472, 97 Am. St. Rep. 928, 73 S. W. 946; 1 Parmelee's Wharton, Conf. L. 531.

In State ex rel. Hahn v. King, 109 La. 161, 33 So. 121, the binding effect of a foreign judgment giving the custody of a child to one of the parents was recognized on the ground of estoppel. In that case, where a father was ordered under a writ of habeas corpus to place a minor child, of whom he had the possession, in the custody of its mother, under the terms of a judgment of divorce which the latter obtained in another state against her husband, it was held that the father of the child, the husband, was estopped from contesting that judgment, because on the trial of the writ he testified himself that under authority of that judgment he had contracted a second marriage.

As stated above the foreign decree or order is not a bar to a subsequent proceeding 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

So a foreign decree giving the custody of the children to the mother is not binding in another state, where it appears that the father is the more suitable person to care for them. Kentzler v. Kentzler, 3 Wash. 166, 28 Am. St. Rep. 21, 28 Pac. 370.

Of Thorndike v. Rice, 24 Month. L. Rep. 20, it was said in People v. Allen, supra: "It was held that a decree of a tribunal as to the custody of a child was never final, but that the same tribunal, or another where the child was either temporarily or permanently staying, might consider the case upon the facts then existing, and, looking at the welfare of the child, should determine whether any and what change should be made in regard to its custody."

E. M. S.

of abode, no settled home, in which to properly care for the child, Hugh Alderman, and I further find as a fact that the said William F. Alderman is not a suitable person to have the care and custody of the child, Hugh Alderman, at this time.

"(11) I further find as a fact that Sarah E. Alderman, the mother of Hugh Alderman, is a fit and proper person to have the care and custody of Hugh Alderman, the child in question, in looking after the health, training, and moral development of the child.

"(12) I further find as a fact that Sarah E. Alderman does not object to W. F. Alderman visiting and being allowed to see the child, Hugh Alderman, under proper and reasonable conditions.

"The foregoing facts are found from the large number of affidavits, perhaps fifty or more, filed by both plaintiff and defendant, and from the facts appearing and found by me, I conclude as a matter of law:

"(1) That the court is of the opinion that this is not a proper case where the writ of habeas corpus will lie.

"(2) That if it is a case where such writ will lie, from the foregoing findings of fact, the court is of opinion that it is for the best interest of the child, Hugh Alderman, to be left in the possession of and under the care and custody of its mother, Sarah E. Alderman, and it is so ordered.

"(3) It is further ordered that W. F. Alderman be allowed to visit said child, Hugh Alderman, at the home of its mother at such times and under such conditions as the mother of said child may deem advisable.

"(4) It is further ordered that the prayer of the petitioner be and the same is hereby refused, and it is further ordered that the petitioner, W. F. Alderman, pay all the costs of this action to be taxed by the clerk of the superior court of Buncombe county."

Messrs. D. L. English and Mark W. Brown, for appellant:

A foreign decree determining the custody of a child in a suit for divorce in which the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties is conclusive of all questions as to the right of custody which might have been urged at the time the decree was rendered.

Bidwell v. Bidwell, 139 N. C. 402, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 324, 111 Am. St. Rep. 797, 52 S. E. 55; Wakefield v. Ives, 35 Iowa, 238; Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 472, 97 Am. St. Rep. 928, 73 S. W. 946, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 483, 75 S. W. 368; Dubois v. Johnson, 96 Ind. 6; Umlauf v. Umlauf, 27 Ill. App. 375; Jennings v. Jennings, 56 Iowa, 288, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

9 N. W. 222; State ex rel. Lembke v. Bechdel, 37 Minn. 360, 5 Am. St. Rep. 854, 34 N. W. 334, 7 Am. Crim. Rep. 227; White v. White, 75 Iowa, 218, 39 N. W. 277; Teter v. Teter, 88 Ind. 494; Mercein v. People, 25 Wend. 64, 35 Am. Dec. 653; Taylor v. Jeter, 33 Ga. 195, 81 Am. Dec. 202; Bennett v. Bennett, Deady, 299, Fed. Cas. No. 1,318; Barber v. Barber, 21 How. 582, 16 L. ed. 226; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 299, 18 L. ed. 478; Cheever v. Wilson, 9 Wall. 108, 19 L. ed. 604.

The primary right to the custody and control of children, without regard to sex, and with slight qualification as to early infancy, is in the father.

14 Cyc. 806, note 90; Newsome v. Bunch, 144 N. C. 15, 56 S. E. 509; Latham v. Ellis, 116 N. C. 30, 20 S. E. 1012; Stetson v. Stetson, 80 Me. 485, 15 Atl. 60; Hammond v. Hammond, 90 Ga. 527, 18 S. E. 265; People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 40 Hun, 611; Baily v. Schrader, 34 Ind. 260.

Mr. Welch Galloway, for appellee:

Habeas corpus will not lie in this case.

Re Parker, 144 N. C. 175, 56 S. E. 878; Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 472, 97 Am. St. Rep. 928, 73 S. W. 946.

The courts of this state will not allow the child to be taken out of their jurisdiction.

Harris v. Harris, 115 N. C. 587, 44 Am. St. Rep. 471, 20 S. E. 187; Re Turner, 151 N. C. 474, 66 S. E. 431.

The physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of the child is the only safe guide in cases of this kind; and the courts will be guided by those surroundings.

Re Lewis, 88 N. C. 34; Jones v. Cotten, 108 N. C. 458, 13 S. E. 161; Re Turner, 151 N. C. 474, 66 S. E. 431; Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 528; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 248.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from the findings of his Honor that the petitioner and respondent were divorced by the courts of the state of Florida, where they resided in 1909 and 1910, at the instance of the respondent, upon the ground of wilful, continued, and obstinate desertion by petitioner of his wife and only child, and the general custody of the child was awarded to the mother, who afterwards removed with her child to Brevard, North Carolina, where she now resides with her father.

The custody of children in cases of the divorce and separation of their parents is a subject as delicate as any with which courts have to deal. The good of the child should be, and always is, the chief thing to be regarded and the governing principle which guides the judge. All other considerations sink into insignificance. Many cases and text writers can be cited where the principle is announced that the physical, moral, and spiritual welfare of the child is the only safe guide in cases of this kind; and the courts will be guided by those surroundings. Re Lewis, 88 N. C. 34; Jones v. Cotten, 108 N. C. 458, 13 S. E. 161; Re Turner, 151 N. C. 474, 66 S. E. 431; Hurd, Habeas Corpus, 528; Schouler, Dom. Rel. 248; 2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. § 529; Umlauf v. Umlauf, 27 Ill. App. 378. One who reads the findings and the judgment of the just and learned judge who heard this matter in the court below must conclude that no other consideration than the child's welfare influenced his decision to remand the child to the care of its best friend, the mother. The love of the mother for her child, regardless of conditions and environments, has been proven by the history of the ages, and, while her devotion can be counted upon almost unfaithfully, it is sad to say that sometimes the tie between father and child is a different matter, and requires the strong arm of the law to regulate it with some degree of humanity and tenderness for the child's good.

But the petitioner contends that under the Florida decree he has a vested right in the partial custody of the child, which this court is bound to respect and enforce under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. That part of the decree of the Florida court which petitioner invokes reads as follows: "W. F. Alderman shall be allowed to visit said child at such times as may to said Sarah E. Alderman seem reasonable, and the child, Hugh, may visit the defendant, W. F. Alderman, at such times and under such circumstances and conditions as are reasonable and expedient, and said child may at least be permitted to visit W. F. Alderman for two weeks at a time, etc., if W. F. Alderman desires." The language used would seem to indicate that the mother is expected to exercise careful supervision and control over the child, and that her consent or permission is necessary before the child can visit its father even for two weeks at a time. But nevertheless, if the language used was compulsory in its terms, that clause of the decree is not such a judgment of another state which the courts of this state are bound to enforce.

All states and governments possess inherent power over the marriage relation, its formation and dissolution, as regards its own citizens, and, as both the husband and wife were citizens of Florida and properly before its court as parties to the suit, we must give full faith and credit to the annulment of their marriage. Atherton v. Atherton, 130 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ton, 181 U. S. 155, 45 L. ed. 794, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 544; Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 563, 50 L. ed. 867, 26 Sup. Ct. Rep. 525, 5 Ann. Cas. 1.

But the infant child of their union is not property, and the father can have no vested right in the child or its services under a decree divorcing the parents. Such decree as to the child has no extraterritorial effect beyond the boundaries of the state where it was rendered. The child is now a citizen of North Carolina, and, as such peculiarly under its guardianship, and the courts of this state will not remand it to the jurisdiction of another state, especially where, as in this case, it is so manifestly against the true interests of the child. "Minors are the wards of the nation, and even the control of them by parents is subject to the unlimited supervisory control of the state." 1 Tiedeman, State & Federal Control, p. 335; Starnes v. Albion Mfg. Co. 147 N. C. 559, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 602, 61 S. E. 526, 15 Ann. Cas. 470. In this case it is said: "The supreme right of the state to the guardianship of children controls the natural rights of the parent when the welfare of society or of the children themselves conflicts with parental rights." Therefore it follows that, when this child became a citizen and resident of this state and duly domiciled here, it is no longer under the control of the Florida courts. In Re Bort, 25 Kan. 308, 37 Am. Rep. 255, the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution was invoked by the petitioner in support of his supposed right under a decree in another state. Mr. Justice Brewer (afterwards of the Supreme Court of the United States) denied the correctness of such position, saying: "This claim seems to rest on the assumption that the parents have some property rights in the possession of their children, and is very justly repudiated by the courts of Massachusetts. 2 Bishop, Marr. & Div. 5th ed. 204." The same question was before the Kansas court again in 1885, and it held that the decree of the foreign court in no manner concluded other courts of the state where the child is then residing, as to the best interests of the child. Avery v. Avery, 33 Kan. 1, 52 Am. Rep. 523, 5 Pac. 419, citing and approving Re Bort. To the same effect is the decision of the court of appeals of New York in People ex rel. Allen v. Allen, 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143. In Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 474, 73 S. W. 946, 75 S. W. 368, the same question was considered by the supreme court of Texas, and it was held that the decree of the court of another state awarding the custody of a child was not binding upon the courts of Texas under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution after the child had become domiciled in Texas. The court says: "Were the subject-matter of the decree property or a matter in which the parents were solely concerned, the decree would, by reason of said article, be entitled to the effect which the trial court has given it. But neither of these propositions is true. The child is not in any sense property of the parents. It is also equally well established that the government has an interest in the welfare and consequently in the question of the custody and environments of the child, and to this the rights of the parents are entirely subordinate." See also Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 252, 28 S. W. 281; State ex rel. Lasserre v. Michel, 105 La. 741, 54 L.R.A. 927, 30 So. 122.

The judgment is affirmed.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF KANSAS EX REL. W. R. STUBBS, Governor,

JOHN S. DAWSON, Attorney General.

(86 Kan. 180, 119 Pac. 360.)

Governor — powers — constitutional provision.

1. The provision of article 1, § 3, of the Constitution, which vests the supreme executive power in the governor, implies that the governor is the highest in authority in the executive department, with such power as will secure a faithful execution of the laws in the manner and by the methods prescribed by the Constitution and statutes, enacted in harmony with that instrument. Attorney general — duty prosecution of actions.

2. The statute, making it the duty of the attorney general, when required by the governor, to appear for the state and prosecute in any court or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which the state may be a party or interested, in mandatory.

Same — liquor law — examination of witnesses.

3. A proceeding for the examination of witnesses under the provisions of the prohibitory law (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 4366) is a matter before an officer, in which the state is interested; and when required by the governor the attorney general has no

Headnotes by BENSON, J.

Note. — While no cases exactly in point have been found upon the power of the governor of a state to require the institution and prosecution of criminal proceedings, that power is sustained indirectly by State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L.R.A. 176, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

discretion to refuse to prosecute in such a proceeding.

Governor — naming witness.

4. In such a proceeding as that referred to in the above paragraph, and in the situation shown by the facts in this case, it is within the authority of the governor to name the witness to be subpoenaed and examined.

(Porter and West, JJ., dissent.)

(December 9, 1911.)

ON DEMURRER to the answer to an application by the state for a writ of mandamus to require the Attorney General to issue a subpoena and summon a witness relative to the violation of the prohibitory law. Demurrer sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. D. Bishop, for plaintiff:

The governor has power and authority to execute the laws.

Re Railroad Comrs. 15 Neb. 679, 50 N. W. 276; Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 56 L.R.A. 855, 61 N. E. 118; Petterson v. State, — Tex. Crim. Rep. —, 58 S. W. 100; People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 936; State ex rel. Jameson v. Denney, 118 Ind. 382, 4 L.R.A. 79, 21 N. E. 252.

The duty of the attorney general to issue a subpoena for the said J. E. House, and compel him to testify as prayed for, upon request of the governor, is mandatory.

State ex rel. Haskell v. Huston, 21 Okla. 782, 97 Pac. 982; Wilkinson v. Winne, 15 Minn. 159, Gil. 123; Hening v. Nelson, 20 Ga. 583; Grimball v. Marshall, 3 Smedes & M. 359; State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L.R.A. 176, 79 Pac. 726; Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 149; Atchison. T. & S. F. R. Co. v. People, 5 Colo. 60; State ex rel. Nolan v. District Ct. 22 Mont. 25, 55 Pac. 916.

Even if the attorney general is clothed with discretion, to refuse to call a witness who openly declares he was an eyewitness to the commission of a crime would be an abuse of discretion, and mandamus should issue.

Jackson County v. State, 147 Ind. 476, 46 N. E. 908; People ex rel. Green v. Cook County, 176 Ill. 576, 52 N. E. 334; State ex rel. Hathaway v. State Bd. of Health, 103 Mo. 22, 15 S. W. 322; State ex rel. Kelleher v. St. Louis Public Schools, 134 Mo. 296, 56 Am. St. Rep. 503, 35 S. W.

79 Pac. 726; Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145; and State ex rel. Haskell v. Huston, 21 Okla. 782, 97 Pac. 982, which are sufficiently set out in STATE EX REL. STUBBS v. DAWSON.

617; State ex rel. Folk v. Talty, 166 Mo. 529, 66 S. W. 361.

Messrs. S. N. Hawkes and S. M. Brewster for defendant.

Benson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action in mandamus to require the attorney general to prosecute a proceeding under a section of the prohibitory liquor law, which authorizes the attorney general and prosecuting attorneys who may be notified, or who have knowledge of the violations of that act, to issue subpoenas and examine witnesses touching its violation. Laws 1909, chap. 164, § 6, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 4366.

The application for the writ states the following facts: In June, 1911, a newspaper writer, residing in Topeka, wrote a letter to a syndicate of newspapers, published throughout the state, containing the following statement: "The writer spent a portion of an evening in a club in a small Kansas town not long ago. The town is in territory supposed to be strictly dry. Still they were selling beer openly over a bar. With these conditions prevailing everywhere, why should all the odium of the situation be hung on Cherokee and Crawford counties?"

On July 1st following, the governor directed the attorney general to subpoena the writer of the letter, and hold an inquiry, as provided in § 4366 of the General Statutes of 1909, as shown by the following communication: "Dear Mr. Dawson: In a recently published newspaper article signed by J. E. House, of Topeka, Kansas, appears the statement that he spent a portion of an evening in a club in a small Kansas town not long since, where they were selling beer openly over a bar. He also asserted that the cities of Lawrence and Emporia are overrun with bootleggers, and that the situation at Leavenworth, Wichita, and Topeka were such, and nobody conversant with the situation believes there is not law violation. Judging from this public admission, I am constrained to believe Mr. House to be in possession of evidence of law violation that would serve to speedily and justly punish the guilty. Therefore you are hereby directed to subpoena the said J. E. House, hold an inquiry, and take his testimony relative to this violation of the prohibitory liquor law, and from such testimony, if specific, base a prosecution of the violators. I will appreciate a prompt action upon the part of your department."

The attorney general answered as follows: "Your Excellency: Your letter of July 7, erroneously dated July 1, at hand. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In it you call my attention to the signed newspaper article of J. E. House, junior editor of the Topeka Capital. That article stated, among some general and indefinite allegations relating to violations of the prohibitory law, that Mr. House has recently attended a dinner at a private club in a small town, at which liquors were sold. I had already taken up this matter on June 30th by correspondence with Mr. House, and obtained such information as he cared to give. Perhaps this occasion is a good time for your Excellency and myself to understand our relative positions concerning matters of this sort. You 'directed' me to subpoena Mr. House and make him tell what he knows about the matters contained in his article. That 'direction' is not within the scope of your authority; neither was your telegram of some time ago, that I should subpoena Judge Sapp and make him come to Topeka on a similar errand. These are matters left to my discretion. The law authorizes the senate of the state of Kansas, or the house of representatives, or the governor to 'direct' the attorney general to prosecute or defend any case of public concern, but such 'direction' must give the attorney general the facts concerning the specific subject-matter to be litigated, the parties to the litigation, and the names of the witnesses by whom the facts can be proven. Anything less definite than this is not a 'direction' at all; anything more is beyond the scope of your authority. I trust that you will believe that this letter is written in the most kindly and courteous spirit, and is only done to set your Excellency right as to the relationship of our respective departments, and to avoid misunderstanding in the future. As heretofore, my department will prosecute or defend any specific case in which your Excellency is interested; but I must have the facts and the witnesses in all such cases, for only in such manner and by such means can any litigation be successful."

Thereupon the governor replied, calling attention to certain constitutional provisions, quoting the statement contained in the letter as copied above, and saying: "In your reply of the 7th you say: 'I had already taken up this matter on June 30th, by correspondence with Mr. House, and obtained such information as he cared to give.' Under the Constitution of this state I am held responsible for the execution of the laws of the state. I may not be satisfied to accept 'such information as he cared to give.' I request that you subpoena Mr. J. E. House, under the provisions of paragraph 4366 of the General Statutes of 1909, and compel him under oath to disclose all the information and knowledge he has regarding the incident referred to, and all other information he has respecting the violation of the laws of this state relating to intoxicating liquors; and I further request that this be done at once, and such proceedings instituted as the evidence so secured warrants."

The attorney general responded, saying that his attention was first called to the article referred to on June 30th, and that he had that day addressed a letter to the writer (Mr. House), setting out a copy, and adding: "His reply was strictly of a personal nature, and I do not think it proper to furnish it. But in addition to his written reply, I took the matter up with him personally, and learned what I surmised, which was that Mr. House, being a guest and a stranger, did not know who were selling liquors nor the persons who were buying liquors, and he had nothing to tell of any consequence, nor upon which to base a prosecution. So, too, his general statements that Wichita, Leavenworth, Topeka, and Lawrence were overrun with bootleggers. Mr. House only knows such matters by mere hearsay, and on that subject he is possessed of no information that would be of the slightest assistance to a prosecuting officer."

The governor, in another letter, then called attention to the positive nature of the statement contained in the article published in newspapers over the state, and said: "It is impossible for me to conceive of ordinary social functions where 'they were selling beer openly over a bar.' Likewise it is impossible for me to conceive of an answer to your official communication as attorney general calling for information respecting infractions of the prohibitory law of this state, being 'of so strictly a personal nature' that you do not think it proper to furnish it to the chief executive officer of the state, whose duty it is, under the Constitution, to see that the laws are faithfully executed. Your letter was signed in your official capacity. It would be impossible to reply thereto in a manner that would be so 'strictly personal' as to be improper to be seen." References were again made in this letter to the Constitution and certain statutory provisions, followed by the statement: "For the purpose of enabling me to faithfully execute the laws of this state, it is necessary that a proceeding be instituted, and that Mr. J. E. House be subpoenaed to testify and give information as to the city and the building wherein he was present when intoxicating liquors were sold over a bar, and also that he be required to give the names of any persons who were present, known to him; that he give under oath a full statement of persons who have told him of the violations of law, to the end that such persons may be subpoenaed. . . . If these statements made by Mr. House over his signature are pure fabrication and without foundation, I want the world to know it, in order that the good name of this state may be protected. . . . I therefore once again request that you institute proceedings of inquiry, and that you subpoena Mr. J. E. House, of Topeka, Kansas, to appear before you at a time and place to be designated in the subpoena, then and there to testify under oath concerning any violations of the provisions of the prohibitory law of this state."

This letter indicated the purpose of the governor to apply to this court for a writ of mandamus. The attorney general responded: "Yours of to-day at hand. I am entirely willing to arrange a test case in the supreme court to determine whether the subpoenaing of witnesses by the attorney general is left to his discretion or to the governor, and therefore, and for that purpose, for the present I most respectfully decline to issue a subpoena for Mr. J. E. House."

The application states that Mr. House has knowledge and information that would enable the attorney general to prosecute suits to suppress violations of the law referred to, which cannot be obtained from him otherwise than by proceedings under the section referred to, and which it is alleged, it is the duty of the attorney general to institute; wherefore the relator prays that he be compelled by mandamus to so proceed as requested, and to furnish to the governor a copy of the testimony when taken. The defendant answered the application without issuance of an alternative writ, the relator demurred to the answer, and thus the issue is presented.

The answer admits the material facts stated in the application, but denies that the writer referred to has knowledge or information concerning violations of the prohibitory law which could be of value to a prosecuting officer in the prosecution of suits to suppress such violations. The answer also sets out various reasons why the attorney general believed it unwise to comply with the governor's requirement, and avers that he has acted in entire good faith in the matter. Among the reasons so given, it is stated, in substance, that he had proceeded in another way to investigate the transaction referred to in the newspaper article; that from such investigation he believed the writer of the latter was mistaken as to the intoxicating quality of the beverage; that Mr. House, through his weekly letters to Kansas newspapers, reaches a circulation of 150,000; that the writer of the letter has heretofore criticized the attorney general; and that the exercise of the power, as requested, might appear to be for political purposes, but that he would nevertheless have faced this dilemma, had it not been for his confidence that the necessary information could be obtained by less drastic methods. The answer avers that the investigation so begun has not been concluded, and contains the following averment: "That he [the attorney general] has at all times acknowledged the right of the governor to direct the attorney general to prosecute or defend any action in which the state is interested or a party, and defendant has always complied therewith; but defendant denies the right of the governor to dictate the management of any such a cause, and alleges that any such cause must be prosecuted according to the judgment and discretion of one trained in the profession and practice of law." It is not believed to be necessary to set out the answer more fully. The attorney general in his brief says: "The attorney general, believing that no good would be accomplished by subpoenaing [the witness], declined to do so."

The real question, then, to be determined is whether the attorney general is subject to the direction of the governor with respect to the matter concerning which he was required to act, or whether he may in his discretion refuse to comply with such requirement. If it be a matter within his discretion, the answer is sufficient; otherwise it is not. The good faith and zeal of that officer is not questioned.

The Constitution declares: "The supreme executive power of the state shall be vested in a governor, who shall see that the laws are faithfully executed." Article 1, § 3. "He may require information in writing from the officers of the executive department, upon any subject relating to their respective duties." Article 1, § 4. "The officers of the executive department, and of all public state institutions, shall, at least ten days preceding each regular session of the legislature, severally report to the governor, who shall transmit such reports to the legislature." Article 1, § 16. We do not find that the meaning of the phrase, "the supreme executive power," as contained in our Constitution and the Constitutions of many other states of this Union, has ever been precisely defined, although the matter is referred to in some decisions. Perhaps the term itself, taken in connection with the context, is sufficiently explicit. An executive department is created, consisting of a governor and the other officers named, and he is designated as the one having the supreme executive power; that is, the highest in authority 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in that department. In the same connection, it will be noticed that the other executive officers are required to furnish information upon subjects relating to their duties, and to make annual reports to him, and withal he is charged with the duty of seeing that the laws are faithfully executed. It is manifest from these various provisions that the term "supreme executive power" is something more than a verbal adornment of the office, and implies such power as will secure an efficient execution of the laws, which is the peculiar province of that department, to be accomplished, however, in the manner and by the methods and within the limitations prescribed by the Constitution and statutes, enacted in harmony with that instrument. "When a Constitution gives a general power, or enjoins a duty, it also gives, by implication, every particular power necessary for the exercise of the one, or the performance of the other. The implication under this rule, however, must be a necessary, not a conjectural or argumentative one. And it is further modified by another rule, that, where the means for the exercise of a granted power are given, no other or different means can be implied, as being more effectual or convenient." Field v. People, 3 Ill. 79, 83.

In harmony with the provisions of the Constitution, and to provide the governor with means to execute the laws as required by that instrument, the legislature has declared that he may require the attorney general to prosecute or defend for the state in any cause or matter in which the state is interested. The statute declares: "The attorney general shall appear for the state, and prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings, civil or criminal, in the supreme court, in which the state shall be interested or a party, and shall also, when required by the governor or either branch of the legislature, appear for the state and prosecute or defend, in any other court, or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which this state may be a party or interested." Laws 1879, chap. 168, § 71, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 8906.

This provision is mandatory in its terms: but it remains to be considered whether the proceeding referred to under the prohibitory law is a cause or matter within the purview of the statute; whether the duty to prosecute includes the commencement of such proceedings, and whether it also includes the duty to summon and examine a particular individual, when so directed, in the circumstances appearing in this case. That such a proceeding is "a matter" in any . . . court, "or before any officer, . . . in which this state may be a party or interested," is too clear to admit of serious debate. It would be difficult to find language more comprehensive reaching to all public official proceedings in which the state has an interest.

The word "prosecute" implies the commencement, as well as the continuance, of a proceeding, and the term is so used in common speech, as well as in legal parlance; and it was so held in State v. Bowles, 70 Kan. 821, 69 L.R.A. 176, 79 Pac. 726, where a prosecution, instituted by an indictment signed by an assistant attorney general, who acted under the direction of the governor in pursuance of this statutory provision, was upheld. Construing a statute of Wisconsin of the same import, it was held, in Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 646, 78 N. W. 145, 151: "So that the attorney general rightly appeared and assisted in the prosecution of this case does not admit of question. It was not within his discretion to comply or refuse to comply with the governor's request, or within the discretion of the circuit court to permit or refuse to permit him to participate in the trial." This construction is in harmony with the decision in the Bowles Case, and with the constitutional declaration that the supreme executive power is vested in the governor.

The remaining question is whether the designation of the witness is fairly incidental to the authority of the governor to direct a proceeding under this statute, not whether the governor, in an ordinary trial or proceeding, may direct what particular witnesses shall be examined, nor whether the executive may control the ordinary details of judicial proceedings. Such controversies will be infrequent, and when they do arise will probably be considered in the light of the emergency disclosed by the facts of the particular case. We are not required to explore and delimit the frontiers of the supreme executive power upon this general subject, but only to decide the question presented upon this record. The determination of a single controversy arising within the circle of a co-ordinate department of government will not be used as an opportunity to foreshadow opinions upon possible controversies which may never arise.

The section of the statute under which the governor directed the prosecution to be instituted provides for a distinct proceeding quite unlike ordinary actions or proceedings, where the examination of witnesses is merely incidental. Here the examination of a witness constitutes the proceeding. It is instituted for that purpose. It provides that "if a county attorney, attorney general, or assistant attorney general . . . shall be notified . . . of any violation of any of the provisions . . . [of this law] it shall be his duty forthwith 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) diligently to inquire into the facts of such violation, and . . . is authorized to issue subpoenas for such persons as he shall have reason to believe have any information concerning or knowledge of such violation." Gen. Stat. 1909, § 4366.

The attorney general, having been notified, was bound to investigate, and he did so by correspondence and otherwise, but refused to institute the proceeding, or prosecute in the definite matter, as required. This could be done only by examining the particular witness. The witness and the incident to which he referred in the newspaper article were not to be separated in the proceeding ordered by the governor. The proceeding, or, as the statute designates it, the matter in which he was directed to prosecute, was the examination of that witness. Suppose after the governor had directed the prosecution referred to in State v. Bowles, supra, the attorney general had concluded to investigate the subject in some other way, and, instead of presenting the matter to the grand jury, had called the witnesses to his office, and upon inquiry thus made had determined to proceed no further, would such disposition have been permissible? If it was within the attorney general's discretion to do so, and thus finally dispose of the matter, there is little virility in the statute, which in express terms gives the governor the power to require prosecutions. The conclusion is that the matter, to use the statutory term, which the attorney general was required to prosecute, was the examination of the witness as provided in the statute, and it was the duty of the attorney general to do so.

While, as pointed out in his brief, manifold and arduous duties rest upon the attorney general, the governor is charged with the execution of the law, and this can only be done through means provided by the Constitution and laws. Among these is the assistance of the attorney general, and, in the enforcement of the prohibitory law, the power of that officer to examine witnesses touching its violation. If the governor may not invoke that power, then he is denied recourse to means which the legislature believed to be necessary to its enforcement.

The question decided arises upon the interpretation of constitutional and statutory provisions. We have not found it necessary to go far afield for authorities, although many have been considered. It may be added, however, that the recent case of State ex rel. Haskell v. Huston, 21 Okla.

782, 97 Pac. 982, has been found illuminating and instructive. A statute of Oklahoma contains a provision like our own, requiring the attorney general to prosecute and defend actions and proceedings when requested by the governor. Construing this statute, and the constitutional provisions that the governor shall cause the laws to be faithfully executed, it was held that the governor of Oklahoma, under the Constitution and statutes of that state, had the power to dismiss an action, brought by the attorney general in the name of the state, and that he might himself maintain an action in the name of the state to prohibit the attorney general from carrying on the action brought by that officer. Whether under our laws the governor would have this power of dismissal does not arise here, but the decision cited is instructive concerning the principles involved, and reviews many authorities.

For the reasons stated, the answer is held insufficient, and the demurrer thereto is sustained.

West, J., dissenting:

The state government is not modeled on the cabinet system. On the contrary, the Constitution expressly provides (art. 1, § 1) that the executive department shall consist of a governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state, auditor, treasurer, attorney general, and superintendent of public instruction. These officers are all chosen by the people, all under like oath, and alike subject to impeachment. Each has a field of official discretion which cannot be invaded by any other officer. It is the unquestioned and unchanging law that official discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus. As said in Martin v. Ingham, 38 Kan. 651, 17 Pac. 168: "The only acts of public functionaries which the courts ever attempt to control by either injunction or mandamus are such acts only as are in their nature strictly ministerial; and a ministerial act is one which a public officer or agent is required to perform upon a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, and without regard to his own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety or impropriety of the act to be performed." Here, in order to form the basis for the issuance of the writ, it has been necessary to rule that the act directed to be done is one clearly ministerial and outside the pale of discretion. This conclusion is founded on a provision of the statute that the attorney general shall, "when required by the governor or either branch of the legislature, appear for the state and prosecute or defend, in any other court, or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which this state may be a party or interested." Laws 1879, chap. 166, § 71, Gen. Stat. 1909, § 8906. This section vests no other or greater power in the governor than in either branch of the legislature, and the effect of the decision is that the requirement by the latter would be compulsory upon the attorney general to subpoena, before himself or some other officer, any certain witness which either house of the legislature should deem requisite.

While the word "prosecute" does doubtless imply the commencement, as well as the continuance of a proceeding, it is well to notice the language of the statute under which inquisitions may be held. Section 4366 of the General Statutes of 1909 (Laws 1909, chap. 164, § 6), provides that it shall be the duty of the attorney general, upon proper notification, forthwith diligently to inquire into the facts of the alleged violation of the prohibitory law, and for that purpose he is "authorized" (not required) to issue subpoenas for such persons as he shall have reason to believe have any information, etc. The same section expressly provides that "if the testimony so taken shall disclose the fact that an offense has been committed, . . . the attorney general . . . shall prosecute the person or persons committing such offense." Hence, under this statute, the duty to prosecute, and the beginning of a prosecution, can arise only after the testimony has been taken, and the taking of such testimony is not a prosecution, or the beginning thereof, but a mere step preparatory thereto. A mere preliminary step, taken in view of a possible future prosecution, cannot, without wresting language from its ordinary meaning, be held to be included in the section requiring the attorney general to appear for the state and prosecute or defend in any cause or matter. In an inquisition, the attorney general is not defending anyone, and is not prosecuting anyone, but is merely procuring testimony in order to see whether a prosecution shall be instituted.

In a county where the county attorney fails or refuses to enforce the law, § 4378 of the General Statutes of 1909 (Laws 1887, chap. 165, § 5), makes it the duty of the attorney general to enforce it himself. "And for that purpose he may appoint as many assistants as he shall see fit." Would it be contended that any other officer can dictate to him who his appointees shall be, or whom he shall "see fit" to appoint? He is merely authorized to make such appointments, as he is by the other section authorized to subpoena witnesses. There is no mandatory requirement contained in either.

If once the domain of discretion is invaded, if the attorney general cannot be permitted to exercise in good faith his own judgment touching the steps preliminary or preparatory to a prosecution no reason suggests itself why he should be permitted to exercise it in respect to the witnesses he shall call during a trial, the order in which they shall be introduced, the questions he shall propound, or the policy to be pursued. Anyone who has had experience in conducting prosecutions arising out of the prohibitory law knows that caution and tact, as well as good judgment and legal learning, are necessary; and it is often essential that the prosecutor, instead of putting a hostile witness in position to warn the culprit, let not his left hand know what his right hand doeth. To require my mandamus the performance of an act so manifestly within the realm of official discretion, one at most authorized, but not required, by the statute, sets, in my judgment, a dangerous precedent, and departs from the theory upon which the executive department of the government has heretofore been conducted.

Porter, J., dissenting:

I concur in the foregoing dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice West. I think it is due to the attorney general to say that no pretense is made that he has been or is opposed to the enforcement of the prohibitory law, or that he has even been lukewarm in the performance of his duties in that respect. On the contrary, the record in this case discloses, that every person familiar with public affairs knows to be true, that the attorney general has devoted a very large portion of his time and energies since he took his office to the vigorous enforcement of the liquor law in every part of the state where it has been violated. It is to be regretted that this court has been called upon to give serious and grave consideration to what turns out to be a mere "temptation in a teapot." From the correspondence between the two officials, which was conducted entirely through the public press, instead of in the usual and ordinary course, it seems to be the desire of one of the parties to have a certain person compelled to testify as a witness concerning his knowledge of alleged violations of the prohibitory law. If the only purpose of the governor was to bring about the prosecution of some person or persons supposed to have violated the law, it seems quite obvious that all that was necessary for him to do in the discharge of his supreme executive duty of enforcing the law was to direct the attorney general to investigate the alleged violation, and to prosecute the guilty persons, furnishing such information as he possessed as to names of witnesses, and leaving it to that officer to use his own judgment and discretion as to the means to be employed in such prosecution. The statute prescribes what the duties of the attorney general are when he has been notified that the law has been violated. It authorizes, but does not require, him to issue subpoenas for such witnesses. If, in his judgment, he has sufficient information to warrant the filing of an information, he may proceed at once, without causing any witness to be examined before an officer.

Ample means are provided by the Constitution for removing from office an unfaithful constitutional officer. If the attorney general fail to perform his duty, or acts corruptly, he can be removed by impeachment; but we have no right to compel him to perform any act which is discretionary. This court has in a number of instances ousted from office a county attorney who so neglected the prosecution of criminal cases as to forfeit his right to the office; but no one has ever supposed the court could by mandamus compel a county attorney to perform an act which involves his discretion; for instance, to call a particular witness to the stand, or to conduct a prosecution in a particular way. The effect of the decision in this case is that at the suit of the governor, this court can by mandamus compel the attorney general to conduct the prosecution of any criminal or civil proceeding in the way the governor has directed, and to call to the stand any witness whom the governor, for any purpose of his own, may desire to have testify, and without regard to whether to do so would, in the judgment and discretion of the chief law officer, prejudice the best interests of the state. If the governor has this authority, he necessarily has the power to direct when the examination of such witness shall end, what questions shall be asked, and may direct and control the conduct of any prosecution which the attorney general has instituted for the enforcement of any law.

Petition for rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MORRIS C. GAINES et al., Appts.,
v.

ELI HILL.

(147 Ky. 445, 144 S. W. 92.)

Marshaling — double mortgages — compelling resort to wife's land.

1. One having a second mortgage lien on property of a man alone, cannot, under the doctrine of marshaling, compel a prior mortgagee having a lien on that property and also on property of the debtor's wife as security for the husband's debt, to resort primarily to the wife's property, so as to permit him to make his claim out of that of the husband.

Subrogation — wife's heirs — mortgages — husband's land.

2. Children of a wife who mortgaged her real estate as surety for her husband's debt may, in case the mortgagee resorts to her property, be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee against property of the husband on which he also had a lien, as against the claim of a second mortgagee of the husband's property alone.

(March 8, 1912.)

Note. — Right of junior creditor to compel paramount creditor to resort primarily to property of third person which may be subjected to payment of his claim.

While the question herein discussed, whether a junior claimant having right of recourse to property of the debtor only may compel a paramount creditor having a right to resort both to the common debtor and a third person, first to exhaust his remedy against the third person; and the question whether a junior claimant is entitled to be subrogated to the claim of the paramount creditor against the third person, are closely related, cases of the latter character do not fall within the scope of this note.

It is a well established qualification of the general rule that where there are two creditors of one debtor, the first having two funds to which he may resort for the satisfaction of his debt, and the second being able to reach only one of the funds, the first shall resort for the satisfaction of his debt to that fund which he alone can reach, and thus leave to the junior creditor the only means he has for obtaining payment of his demand; that both funds must be derived from a common source, or be in the hands of the common debtor. Ex parte Kendal, 1 Rose, 71, 17 Ves. Jr. 514, 11 Revised Rep. 122; Robinson v. Lehman, 72 Ala. 401; Ayres v. Husted, 15 Conn. 504; Stevens v. Church, 41 Conn. 369; Quinnipiac Brewing Co. v. Fitzgibbons, 73 Conn. 196, 47 Atl. 128; Wise v. Shepherd, 13 Ill. 41; Boone v. Clark, 129 Ill. 466, 5 L.R.A. 276, 21 N. E. 850; Carter v. Tanners' Leather Co. 196 Mass. 163, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 965, 81 N. E. 902; Lee v. Gregory, 12 Neb. 282, 11 N. W. 297; Haas v. Bank of Commerce, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85; Citizens State Bank v. Iddings, 60 Neb. 709, 84 N. W. 78; Cooper Wagon & Buggy Co. v. Irvin, 83 Neb. 832, 120 N. W. 430; Mason v. Hull, 55 Ohio St. 256, 45 N. E. 632; Ebenhardt's Appeal, 8 Watts & S. 327; Lloyd v. Galbraith, 32 Pa. 103; Fessler v. Hickernell, 82 Pa. 150; Jones's Estate, 15 Phila. 584; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by petitioners from a decree of the Circuit Court for Henderson County dismissing their petition for subrogation to the rights of the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company in certain land upon which it had foreclosed a mortgage, and which had belonged to their mother and had been mortgaged as security for the debt of their father, in a proceeding to foreclose another mortgage upon the individual property of their father. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Vance & Heilbronner, for appellants:

The children of the wife have the right, during the life of the husband, to be substituted to the rights of the mortgagee

Fish's Estate, 16 Phila. 373; Blank v. Eichelberger, 6 W. N. C. 25; House v. Thompson, 3 Head, 512; Foy v. Sinclair, 93 Tenn. 296, 30 S. W. 28; Rogers v. Blum, 56 Tex. 1; Rixey v. Pearre Bros. 89 Va. 113, 15 S. E. 498; Blakemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 269, 64 Am. St. Rep. 781, 28 S. E. 332; Peery v. Elliott, 101 Va. 709, 44 S. E. 919.

And see, as supporting the same proposition, although not laying it down in express terms, the other cases cited throughout this note.

This qualification of the general rule is, however, subject to the exceptions that where, from independent equities, there is a duty on the part of the third person to exonerate the common debtor, the courts will enforce that duty at the instance of the inferior creditor. This exception has already been discussed in a note to Carter v. Tanners' Leather Co. 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 965, and therefore need here be pursued no further.

Creditors having a lien on the property of a husband cannot compel another creditor of the husband having security on property of both husband and wife, to resort primarily to that of the wife. Buck v. Bransford, 58 Ark. 289, 24 S. W. 103; Ayres v. Husted, 15 Conn. 504; Trentman v. Eldridge, 98 Ind. 525; Woollen v. Hillen, 9 Gill. 185, 52 Am. Dec. 690; Johns v. Reardon, 11 Md. 465; Cooper Wagon & Buggy Co. v. Irvin, 83 Neb. 832, 120 N. W. 430; Stewart v. Stewart, 207 Pa. 59, 56 Atl. 323; Norman v. Norman, 26 S. C. 41, 11 S. E. 1096; Hall v. Hyer, 48 W. Va. 353, 37 S. E. 594; Swift v. Kortrecht, 50 C. C. A. 429, 112 Fed. 709.

Especially where other creditors have a lien on the wife's property. Ayres v. Husted, 15 Conn. 504.

Or where the pledgee has agreed that the wife's property shall not be resorted to as a means of satisfying the principal debt, unless the husband's property proves insufficient. Buck v. Bransford, 58 Ark. 289, 24 S. W. 103.

The general creditors of an insolvent cannot require another creditor having a lien upon the property of the insolvent and his under said mortgage, and have the land of the husband subjected to their claim, and placed in a condition to make it available when the time shall arrive at which they will be entitled to the use of the estate.

Brightwell v. Com. 79 Ky. 537; Simmons v. McKay, 5 Bush, 25; Bickel v. Judah, 3 Ky. L. Rep. 728; Weakley v. Davis, — Ky. —, 44 S. W. 637.

Mr. W. P. McClain, with Mr. Thomas E. Ward, for appellee:

The principle of subrogation rests mainly upon the ground that one pays the debt of another which he was legally bound to pay.

Allen v. Perrine, 103 Ky. 521, 41 L.R.A. 351, 45 S. W. 500.

These plaintiffs have never paid anything at all. The father of these plaintiffs, who are seeking subrogation, inveigled the defendant, Hill, into signing his notes as surety and accepting a mortgage on this property, by telling him this mortgage was paid and would be released.

Clay, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

On April 14, 1893, W. T. Gaines borrowed of the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company the sum of $1,150, for which he executed and delivered his two promissory notes, one for $400, payable in four months, and one for $750, payable in twelve months from date. To secure the payment of the notes, W. T. Gaines and his wife, Mary Gaines, the mother of appellants, Morris wife, first to exhaust the property of the wife. Hughes v. Shannon, 13 Ky. L. Rep. 782.

It is therefore error to direct that the residue of the proceeds of the sale of property of which husband and wife were joint tenants, remaining after the satisfaction of debts for which the wife was the husband's surety, shall be divided between the wife and other creditors of the husband; but where the payment of the debts for which the wife was surety has exhausted more than one half of the proceeds, the residue belongs to the wife. Glaser v. Hellman, 1 Ohio L. J. 140.

And so, where one cotenant is joined with the other in a mortgage given to secure the debt of the other, he is entitled to one half the surplus arising on foreclosure in his own right, and to the other half as against a judgment creditor of his cotenant, to the extent to which his interest has been taken to pay the other's debt. Weaver v. Keith, 3 Del. Co. Rep. 516.

The owner of a junior judgment cannot require a judgment against the judgment debtor and his surety to be satisfied out of the property of the latter. Wise v. Shepherd, 13 Ill. 41.

The seniority of a mortgage belonging to a trust estate is not affected by the circumstance that the trustee may have a right to make the debt out of the bond of his predecessor in the trust, in consequence of the improper conduct of the latter in making the loan for which the mortgage was given. Shuey v. Latta, 90 Ind. 136.

The holder of a note with sureties will not, in favor of the holder of an unsecured obligation of the same debtor, be compelled to resort to the sureties for payment, in preference to the debtor's estate. Re Hobson, 81 Iowa, 392, 11 L.R.A. 255, 46 N. W. 1095.

In Bradley v. Bond, 101 Md. 691, 61 Atl. 504, it appeared that C, being pressed by his creditor for a sum of money with which to purchase certain property, raised part of the sum and guaranteed a mortgage taken on the property for the balance of the purchase money. The holder of the mortgage chase money. The holder of the mortgage becoming dissatisfied with the security, C confessed judgment by way of further security. Upon this state of fact it was held that the debt represented by the mortgage being really the debt of C, which he ought to have paid and promised to pay, subsequent judgment creditors could not require the holder of the judgment to resort primarily to the mortgage security.

The assignee in bankruptcy of a mortgagee cannot require the mortgagee to resort to a surety for the debt. Thompson v. Spittle, 102 Mass. 207.

The vendor of land cannot be required by a subsequent purchaser thereof at an execution sale, to resort to a surety for the purchase money before enforcing his lien against the land. Cole County v. Angney, 12 Mo. 132.

A subsequent encumbrancer cannot require the paramount creditor to resort in the first instance to the property pledged by a surety. Lee v. Gregory, 12 Neb. 282, 11 N. W. 297; Rogers v. Blum, 56 Tex. 1.

A subsequent lienor cannot require a paramount judgment creditor first to exhaust the land belonging to a surety, on which the judgment is a lien. Mason v. Hull, 55 Ohio St. 256, 45 N. E. 632.

The holder of a mechanics' lien cannot require a mortgagee having a superior lien to exhaust his remedies by action against the maker and indorser of the note secured by the mortgage. Jenkins v. Smith, 21 Misc. 750, 48 N. Y. Supp. 126.

The assignee of a stock which has been pledged by a debtor cannot compel the pledgee to resort in the first instance to an indorser. Union Bank v. Laird, 2 Wheat. 390, 4 L. ed. 269.

The creditors of a corporation cannot require a secured creditor to proceed against the indorsers and guarantors of a note representing the debt secured, before resorting to the security. Garrett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697, 59 Am. Rep. 461, 29 N. W. 395.

Creditors of a corporation cannot require the holder of its bonds to have recourse in and Sarah Gaines, mortgaged to the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company three lots of ground in Henderson, Kentucky. Two of these lots belonged to W. T. Gaines, while the third belonged to Mary Gaines; it having been conveyed to her by Alexander Rankin and wife by deed dated December 1, 1885, and recorded in Deed Book No. 11, p. 250, Henderson county clerk's office. On August 27, 1896, W. T. Gaines executed to appellee, Eli Hill, a mortgage on his individual property theretofore mortgaged to the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company to secure Hill as surety in two notes to the Henderson Trust Company of Henderson, Kentucky. On April 22, 1897, the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company brought suit to enforce its mortgage lien, and to subject the mortgaged property to the payment of the two notes executed to it by W. T. Gaines. In December, 1899, appellee, Eli Hill, alleging that he had paid the indebtedness for which he was surety, brought suit to recover a personal judgment against W. T. Gaines, and to enforce his mortgage lien.

These actions were brought during the lifetime of Mary Gaines, and were afterwards consolidated. On February 26, 1898, and after the death of Mary Gaines, the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company amended its petition, and set forth the death of Mary Gaines and the names of her surviving children, to wit, Morris C. Gaines, Sarah Gaines, William Gaines, Harris Gaines, Mamie Gaines, and Virginia Gaines, all infants, who were thereafter brought before the court by proper process. At that time, the ages of the children were as follows: Morris, fifteen; Sarah, thirteen; the first instance to the personal liability of the stockholders thereon. Carter v. Neal, 24 Ga. 346, 71 Am. Dec. 136.

Where money has been loaned by a corporation on its bond and mortgage, and its stockholders have bound themselves as sureties for the repayment of the loan, other creditors of the corporation cannot compel the lender to exhaust first his remedy against the sureties. South Carolina Mfg. Co. v. Bank of the State, 6 Rich. Eq. 227.

Conversely, but in accordance with the same principle upon which the foregoing decisions are based, it has been held that the creditors of a surety may compel a resort in the first instance to the property of the principal debtor. Foy v. Sinclair, 93 Tenn. 296, 30 S. W. 28.

So, the holder of a judgment against a husband who, by deed voidable by his creditors, had conveyed property to his wife, who had mortgaged it, together with property of her own, for her own benefit, may require the mortgagee to resort in the first instance to the land of the wife. Quinnipiac Brewing Co. v. Fitzgibbons, 73 Conn. 191, 47 Atl. 128.

And persons to whom land has been conveyed by a surety may require a creditor to apply on his claim any available property of the principal, provided it can be done without too great delay or prejudice to the rights of the creditor. Rixey v. Deitrick, 85 Va. 42, 6 S. E. 615.

But equity will not compel the paramount creditor to proceed against the principal debtor before having recourse to the surety, where such course would involve a considerable delay, and the funds arising from the sale of the surety's property are in court and immediately available; but in such case the equities will be preserved by subrogating the creditors of the surety to the judgment against the principal debtor. Neff's Appeal, 9 Watts & S. 36.

A creditor of an insolvent partnership will not be required to resort to the personal estate of a deceased partner at the instance of those who have become creditors of the firm subsequently to the partner's decease. Ex parte Kendall, 17 Ves. Jr. 514, 1 Rose, 71, 11 Revised Rep. 122.

The mortgagee of partnership property cannot insist that a judgment against the firm shall be satisfied from the proceeds of the sale of the property of an individual partner. Bertolet's Estate, 1 Woodw. Dec. 8.

But where by statute all obligations and assumptions of partners are made several as well as joint, so that a judgment against the firm is a lien on separate as well as joint property of the partners, a creditor of an individual partner cannot require one having a judgment against the firm to proceed against the firm property in the first instance. House v. Thompson, 3 Head, 512.

The holder of a note cannot be required to exhaust collaterals deposited by the payee in order to receive a proportional share of the assets of the insolvent maker. Campbell v. J. I. Campbell Co. 117 La. 402, 418, 41 So. 696, 702.

The innocent holder of a note who has taken it as collateral cannot be required by the maker, who claims that the note was obtained by fraud, to resort to other collateral before proceeding to judgment. Haas v. Bank of Commerce, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85.

A similar decision was made in Moyes v. Bell, 62 Wash. 534, 114 Pac. 193, where the maker claimed that the consideration for the note had failed.

Where the paramount creditor has a judgment against two persons, and the junior creditor against one of them only, the latter cannot compel the former to take the land of the other only, it not appearing which of the two ought to pay the debt due the paramount creditor, nor any equitable right being shown in one of them to have the debt charged on the other alone. Dorr v. Shaw, 4 Johns. Ch. 17.

"In case of a joint debt due to one creditor by two persons, and a several debt due

William, eleven; Harris, ten; Mamie, seven, and Virginia, three. Prior thereto, certain property belonging to W. T. Gaines had been sold, and the greater portion of the bank's debt was satisfied. There remained unsold the lot belonging to Mrs. Gaines and the lot involved in this controversy. On September 13, 1902, it was adjudged that there was still due the bank on its original judgment the sum of $338.58, with interest from July 23, 1900, and costs, and that the lot belonging to Mary Gaines be sold for the payment thereof. This lot was appraised at $600. It was purchased by Thos. E. Ward, attorney for W. T. Gaines, for the latter; but, he having declined to pay for it, it was turned over to the bank.

As a defense to the suit of Eli Hill, W. T. Gaines pleaded a discharge in bankruptcy. Hill charged fraud on the part of Gaines. This contention was sustained, and on January 29, 1904, personal judgment was rendered in favor of Hill. Subsequently it was found that one lot belonging to W. T. Gaines remained unsold, and the court ordered a sale of this lot to satisfy Hill's judgment. The lot was sold, and appellee, Hill, became the purchaser at the price of $510. To this branch of the case, the infant children of Mary Gaines were not parties, as their father, who was alive, was sole owner of the property mortgaged to Hill. After the sale, however, appellants, Morris and Sarah Gaines, filed their petition, asking to be made parties, and that it be taken as an answer, counterclaim, and cross petition against appellee, Hill. In addition to the foregoing facts, the petition alleges that appellants, as children by one of them to another creditor, if the joint creditor obtains a judgment against the joint debtors, and the several creditor subsequently obtains judgment against his several debtor, a court of equity will not compel the joint creditor to go against the funds of one of his joint debtors, so as to leave the second judgment in full force against the funds of the other several debtor; at least, it would not do so, unless it should appear that the debt ought to be paid by one of the debtors only, or there should be some other supervening equity which should furnish a ground for the interposition of the court." Ayres v. Husted, 15 Conn. 504.

A junior judgment creditor cannot require a paramount creditor holding a judgment against several joint debtors to resort primarily to the funds of one of them, where it does not appear that the debt, though joint in form, ought to be paid by one of the debtors only, or that there is some other supervening equity; and the death and insolvency of the common debtor is not such a supervening equity. Sanders v. Cook, 22 Ind. 436.

Creditors obtaining judgments subsequently to the alienation of part of his lands by their debtor cannot require a creditor whose judgment antedates the alienation to have recourse in the first instance to the lands aliened. Reynolds v. Tooker, 18 Wend. 591; Blackemore v. Wise, 95 Va. 269, 64 Am. St. Rep. 781, 28 S. E. 332.

A creditor whose judgment is enforceable against the unpaid balance of the purchase money of land sold by the debtor cannot insist that a creditor whose judgment, having been recovered prior to the sale, is enforceable against the land, shall go against the land. Withers v. Carter, 4 Gratt. 407, 50 Am. Dec. 78.

A conveyed certain realty to B, subject to the lien of a certain judgment against him, which B undertook to pay out of the purchase price. B mortgaged the property, and subsequently reconveyed to A a portion thereof, which the mortgagee released from the lien of his mortgage. Upon this state of fact it was held in Blank v. Eichelberger, 6 W. N. C. 25, that the mortgagee could not require the judgment creditor to resort in the first instance to the proceeds of the property reconveyed to A.

A legatee has no right to require a judgment which is a charge upon the property of his decedent and also upon land of which the decedent was tenant in tail, to be satisfied primarily out of the latter property. Douglas v. Cooksey, Ir. Rep. 2 Eq. 311.

Where land has been sold by order of the court to facilitate the distribution of an estate, and purchased by the administrator, who sold it to another, the heirs cannot be required by the purchaser to resort to the sureties on the administrator's bond, before enforcing their equitable lien against the land for the purchase money. Strange v. Keenan, 8 Ala. 816.

A shipped grain to B, sending him by mail the bill of lading, which B pledged to a bank as security for a loan. The railway company delivered the grain to B without authority from the bank, and over the objection of A, who had learned while the grain was in transit that B had failed. Afterward A, on the theory that the sale to B had been rescinded, replevied the grain and disposed of it for his own benefit. During the pendency of the replevin action, the bank intervened and asserted its rights under the bill of lading. The court found that A was entitled to the property as against B, but that the bank was entitled to it as against A. Judgment was accordingly given for the value of the grain in favor of the bank, and against A. Upon this state of fact it was held, in Citizens State Bank v. Iddings, 60 Neb. 709, 84 N. W. 78, that the bank could not be required by A to satisfy its claim against B by enforcing against the railway company a right of action resulting from the wrongful delivery of the grain.

E. S. O.

of their mother, succeeded to two-sixths interest in their mother's property on her death, subject to their father's right of curtesy; that, the lot in controversy having been sold to pay their father's debt, they were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the bank in the remaining lot owned by their father, and to have the lot sold to repay them for their lot sold to satisfy his debt. Appellee filed an answer, admitting practically all the allegations of the petition, but denied that the debt to the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company was the debt of W. T. Gaines, and alleged that the money was borrowed for the benefit of appellants' mother, Mary Gaines. This latter allegation was denied by reply. Upon submission of the case, judgment was entered dismissing appellants' petition, and confirming the commissioner's report of sale. From that judgment, this appeal is prosecuted.

As the two notes executed to the Ohio Valley Banking & Trust Company, and the mortgage by which they are secured, show that the money was borrowed by W. T. Gaines, we must hold, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the debt was his, and that Mary Gaines, his wife, mortgaged her property merely to secure his debt. With this question eliminated, we have the following case: W. T. Gaines borrowed from the bank $1,150. To secure this indebtedness, he and his wife mortgaged, not only his, but her, property. Her property being pledged as security for his debt, she, though incurring no personal liability, was in effect his surety to the extent of the property so mortgaged. The mortgage to the bank was duly recorded. Subsequently appellee, Hill, took a mortgage from W. T. Gaines, in which the latter's wife did not join, covering only W. T. Gaines's individual property embraced in the mortgage to the bank. Pending the proceedings by the mortgagees to enforce their liens, Mary Gaines, the mother of appellants, died. She left six children, appellants and four others, all of whom were infants. Their mother's property descended to them, subject to their father's right of curtesy. The property descending to them was subjected by the bank to the payment of their father's debt, leaving unsubjected the lot in controversy, which belonged to their father, the principal debtor. The question is, "Are they entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the bank in this lot as against appellee, the second mortgagee?"

For appellee, it is insisted that, as he had a lien on the husband's property only, while the bank had a lien on both the husband's and wife's property, he could have compelled the bank, under the doctrine of marshaling, to exhaust the wife's property before proceeding against the husband's property. The doctrine of marshaling, however, applies where the two funds or pieces of property belong to a common debtor, and therefore has no application to the facts of this case. On the contrary, it is well settled that a creditor who has a claim against two debtors, one a principal and the other a surety, cannot be compelled by another creditor of the principal debtor to exhaust his remedy against the surety before proceeding against the principal. Trentman v. Eldridge, 98 Ind. 525; Garett v. Burlington Plow Co. 70 Iowa, 697, 59 Am. Rep. 461, 29 N. W. 395; Thompson v. Spittle, 102 Mass. 207; Mason v. Hull, 55 Ohio St. 256, 45 N. E. 632; Stewart v. Stewart, 207 Pa. 59, 56 Atl. 323.

For a like reason a second mortgagee having a lien on a husband's property cannot require a prior mortgagee having a lien on the same property, and also on the property of the wife, which was pledged merely to secure the husband's debt, first to exhaust the wife's property before proceeding to subject the husband's property. In this case, the bank's mortgage was on record. Appellee acquired his mortgage with notice of the fact that all of the property covered by it was embraced in the mortgage to the bank, and that the bank, if necessary, could subject it to the payment of the debt. Therefore, if appellants are held subrogated to the rights of the bank in the property in controversy, appellee's position is no worse than if the bank had first subjected the property in controversy, which, manifestly, it had the right to do. That being true, there can be no doubt that the mother of appellants, if alive, could have successfully asserted her right to subrogation. Consequently appellants, who stand in her shoes, and whose property was taken to pay their father's debt, should have the same right. National Exch. Bank v. Silliman, 65 N. Y. 475. Nor is the fraud of appellants' father sufficient to defeat their right. They do not claim through him, and what he did, therefore, cannot affect them. Nor can laches be imputed to them; for, being infants, it cannot be said that they have failed for an unreasonable length of time to assert their rights.

The lot formerly owned by Mary Gaines descended to appellants and her other children, subject to their father's right of curtesy, which was a life estate in the whole thereof, as he and Mary Gaines were married, and the lot was acquired, and they had issue born alive, before the enactment of the Weissinger act in 1894 (Laws 1894, chap. 76). Rose v. Rose, 104 Ky. 48, 41 L.R.A. 353, 84 Am. St. Rep. 430, 46 S. W. 524; Mitchell v. Violett, 104 Ky. 77, 47 S. W. 195. This lot sold for $350, a sum sufficient to pay the balance of the bank's lien. Being subrogated to the bank's lien on the lot in controversy, which belonged to their father, to the extent of the value of their interest in the lot that belonged to their mother, and which was sold to pay their father's debt, it follows that they are entitled to a lien on the lot in controversy for the sum of $350, the price the lot brought, less the cash value of their father's life interest therein on the day the lot formerly belonging to their mother was sold. As the other children of Mary Gaines are necessary parties to the action, appellants, on the return of the case, will make them parties plaintiff with their consent, or parties defendant, in case they refuse to unite as plaintiffs. The court will then adjudge appellants and the other children of Mary Gaines a lien on the lot in controversy as above indicated, which, if voluntarily discharged by appellee, will entitle him to have the sale confirmed. In the event of his refusal to pay off the lien so adjudged, the court will set aside the sale, and order a resale of the property, and apply the proceeds thereof, first, to the payment of the lien in favor of the children.

Judgment reversed, and cause remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

W. P. BURRUS, Appt.,

v.

H. WITCOVER.

(158 N. C. 384, 74 S. E. 11.)

Conflict of laws — gambling transaction — enforcement of contract.

1. The courts of a state where gambling transactions are illegal will not enforce a Note. — Right to refuse payment of draft the proceeds of which are used in an illegal transaction.

Stated in another way, the inquiry to which this note is addressed is whether the illegality of a transaction affecting the validity of, or title to, a draft, is available as a defense to a drawee who was not, nominally at least, a party to the transaction, when sued upon his acceptance. The note does not, therefore, include decisions as to the effect, as between the parties, of the transfer of a negotiable instrument to secure money for gambling (as to which, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) contract growing out of such transaction made in another state, even though the transaction is valid there.

Gaming — transaction in futures — draft for margins — right of acceptor to repudiate.

2. That the acceptor of a draft the proceeds of which are to furnish margins in an illegal transaction in futures was not a party to the illegal transaction does not prevent his setting up the illegality of such transaction out of which the consideration for the acceptance grew, to defeat liability thereon.

(March 13, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Craven County in defendant's favor in an action brought to enforce payment of the amount due on an accepted draft. Affirmed.

Statement by Allen, J.:

This is an action to recover on a draft for $800, drawn June 4, 1906, at Marion, South Carolina by W. A. Godbold, in favor of Burrus & Strakley, and accepted by the defendant Witcover. The defendant set up as a defense that the consideration for his acceptance was a gambling contract between the said Godbold and the plaintiff for the purchase of cotton. The plaintiff offered evidence that he was the owner of the draft, and admitted that the firm of Burrus & Strakley had negotiated a number of contracts for Godbold for the purchase of cotton on margin, known as "future contracts," and that the draft, which is the basis of this action, was drawn to enable the said Godbold to furnish margins for other contracts, or to pay debt for margins. The defendant introduced a certified copy of the law of South Carolina, from which it appears that contracts for the sale of cotton and other things are illegal, when it is not the intention of the parties to deliver the property, the subject of the contract, and for settlements to be made upon the basis of the difference in market values; and the plaintiff said, on his see note to Burke v. Buck, 22 L.R.A. (N.S.) 627) or other unlawful purposes; or as to the right of an innocent holder to enforce payment of an instrument which, as between the parties thereto, is invalid as having grown out of an illegal transaction.

In Commercial Nat. Bank v. Spaid, 8 Ill. App. 493, recovery was denied on a draft indorsed by the payee over to the winner in a gambling transaction. The court following Chapin v. Dake, 57 Ill. 295, 11 Am. Rep. 15, which involved the question of title as between the indorser and indorsee of a draft transferred in consideration of a gaming debt, in holding that such examination, that he did not commence his action in South Carolina, because he knew he could not collect a gambling debt in the courts of that state. Upon these admissions by the plaintiff, his Honor directed a judgment of nonsuit to be entered, and the plaintiff excepted and appealed.

Messrs. Gulon & Gulon, for appellant:

In order to set up the statute law of a foreign state the same must be pleaded and proved.

Hall v. Southern R. Co. 146 N. C. 351, 59 S. E. 879; Lassiter v. Norfolk & C. R. Co. 136 N. C. 91, 48 S. E. 642, 1 Ann. Cas. 456.

Defendant could not take advantage of the illegal transaction.

Kingsbury v. Suit, 66 N. C. 603; Calvert v. Williams, 64 N. C. 168; Ballard v. Green, 118 N. C. 392, 24 S. E. 777; Gooch v. Faucett, 122 N. C. 275, 39 L.R.A. 835, 29 S. E. 362; Scott v. Duffy, 14 Pa. 18.

Messrs. Abernathy & Davis for appellee.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff objected to the introduction of the certified copy of the laws of South Carolina; and, while we think it was competent, it is not, in our opinion, material to the decision of this case, as our courts would not aid in the enforcement of the contract, if it is a gaming contract, although valid in South Carolina. Gooch v. Faucett, 122 N. C. 272, 39 L.R.A. 835, 29 S. E. 362; Cannaday v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 143 N. C. 443, 8 L.R.A.(N.S.) 939, 118 Am. St. Rep. 821, 55 S. E. 836.

contract of indorsement is void under the statute against gaming, and that the property in the draft still remained in the payee.

And in Dade v. Madison, 5 Leigh, 401, there is a dictum to effect that a draft drawn for money won at unlawful gaming would be invalid in the hands of an innocent holder.

In Flower v. Sadler, L. R. 10 Q. B. Div. 572, there is a dictum to the effect that in an action by an indorsee of a bill of exchange against the acceptor for a valuable consideration, it is no defense that the bill was indorsed by the drawer to a third party in order to stifle a prosecution for felony.

A case which, although not in point, may be of interest in the present connection, is Johnson v. Lansley, 12 C. B. 469, where two parties jointly made bets on a horse race and the one who received the winnings gave the other a bill for his share, which was accepted by a third person who was not a part to the betting. It was held that recovery on the bill was not precluded by § 18, 8 & 9 Vict., which enacted "that all contracts or agreements, whether by parol or in writ- 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In the latter case, after stating that ordinarily matters bearing upon the execution, interpretation, and validity of a contract are determined by the law of the place where it is made, Justice Connor says: "The exceptions to the general rule are thus stated by Mr. Lawson, the editor of the excellent and exhaustive article on 'Contracts,' in 9 Cyc. 674: 'The general doctrine, that a contract, valid when it is made, is valid also in the courts of any other country or state, when it is sought to be enforced, even though, had it been in the latter country or state, it would be illegal, and hence unenforceable, is subject to several exceptions: (1) When the contract in question is contrary to good morals; (2) when the state of the forum, or its citizens, would be injured by the enforcement by its courts of contracts of the kind in question; (3) when the contract violates the positive legislation of the state of the forum,—that is, is contrary to its Constitution or statutes; and (4) when the contract violates the public policy of the state of the forum. These exceptions are grounded on the principle that the rule of comity is not a right of any state or country, but is permitted and accepted by all civilized communities from mutual interest and convenience, and from a sense of the inconvenience which would otherwise result, and from moral necessity to do justice, in order that justice may be done in return.'"

That the contract between Godbold and the plaintiff, as described by the plaintiff, is one condemned by the laws of this state, cannot be questioned (Revisal 1905, §§ 1689, ing, by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void, and that no suit shall be brought or maintained in any court of law or equity for recovering any sum of money or valuable thing alleged to be won upon any wager, or which shall have been deposited in the hands of any person to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made." Jervis, C. J., said: "There is nothing there to show this transaction illegal, Hunt [one of the winners] was bound upon by every principle of justice to pay this money to Johnson [the other winner]. And the circumstance of Lansley [acceptor of bill] being substituted for Hunt cannot make that illegal which, as between Johnson and Hunt, would not have been so." And Maule, J., said: "The money which was the consideration for this bill was money which Hunt was bound to account for to Johnson. The losers could not get it back from Hunt, and it would be a very unjust thing that he should keep the whole. Before the statute 8 & 9 Vict. chap. 109, he clearly would have been bound to pay over the money, and I find nothing in that statute to excuse him from doing so."

J. H. B.

3823, and 3824), and one who is a party to such a contract is not only indictable, but the statute says, in language that cannot be misunderstood, that "no action shall be maintained in any court to enforce any such contract, whether the same was made in or out of the state, or partly in and partly out of this state, and whether made by the parties thereto by themselves, or by or through their agents, immediately or mediately; nor shall any party to any such contract, or any agent of any such party, directly or remotely connected with any such contract in any way whatever, have or maintain any action or cause of action on account of any money or other thing of value paid or advanced or hypothecated by him or them in connection with or on account of such contract and agency."

It would seem to follow necessarily that the plaintiff cannot maintain his action in our courts, except upon the ground that the defendant was not a party to the illegal contract, and that he is bound by his acceptance. The difficulty with this position is that both the plaintiff and the defendant were parties to the contract, and the only consideration for the acceptance of the draft by the defendant was to enable Godbold to continue his illegal transactions.

The exact question seems to have been decided in England in 1794, in Steers v. Lashley, 6 T. R. 61, which was approved on this point in Embrey v. Jemison, 131 U. S. 347, 33 L. ed. 176, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 776, and this last case was cited with approval by our court in Garseed v. Sternberger, 135 N. C. 502, 47 S. E. 603.

The case of Steers v. Lashley, supra, "was an action on a bill of exchange drawn by Wilson on the defendant, and indorsed over by the former to the plaintiff after it had been accepted by the defendant. At the trial at the sittings at Westminster before Lord Kenyon, it appeared that the defendant had engaged in several stockjobbing transactions with different persons, in which Wilson was employed as his broker, and had paid the differences for the defendant. That, a dispute arising between Wilson and the defendant respecting the amount of those differences, the matter was referred to the plaintiff and three others, who awarded £306, 12s. 6d. to be due from the defendant to Wilson; for £100 part of which Wilson drew the bill, on which this action was brought." Lord Kenyon nonsuited the plaintiff, being of opinion that, as the bill grew out of a stockjobbing transaction, which was known to the plaintiff, he could not recover upon it, and in delivering his opinion he said: "If the plaintiff had lent this money to the defendant to pay the differences, and had 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

afterwards received the bill in question for that sum, then, according to the principle established in Petrie v. Hannay, 3 T. R. 418, he might have recovered. But here the bill on which the action is brought was given for these very differences; and therefore Wilson himself could not have enforced payment of it. Then the security was indorsed over to the plaintiff, he knowing of the illegality of the contract between Wilson and the defendant, for he was the arbitrator to settle their accounts; and, under such circumstances, he cannot be permitted to recover on the bill in a court of law."

This language was quoted in Embrey v. Jemison, supra, and the court further says in that case: "While there are authorities that seem to support the position taken by the defendant in error, we are of opinion that, upon principle, the original payee cannot maintain an action on a note, the consideration of which is money advanced by him upon or in execution of a contract of wager; he being a party to that contract, or having directly participated in the making of it in the name of or on behalf of one of the parties."

The cases of Williams v. Carr, 80 N. C. 299, and Ballard v. Green, 118 N. C. 392, 24 S. E. 777, are not in conflict with these views, as they are interpreted in the latter case, where the court says, after referring to parts of the charge of the judge of the superior court: "This means, if the jury believed that Duke loaned the money and had no connection with the speculations, that it was a valid contract, and plaintiff would be entitled to recover. Williams v. Carr, 80 N. C. 294."

We are therefore of opinion that the consideration for the acceptance by the defendant was illegal, and that there is no error.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ED RIDER, Appt.,
v.

JOHN G. DELKER & SONS COMPANY.

(145 Ky. 634, 140 S. W. 1011.)

Corporation — preferred stock — rights of creditors.

1. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation cannot enforce its redemption at par,

Note. — Right of preferred stock to preference as to capital.

The earlier cases on this question are collected in a note to Field v. Lamson & G. Mfg. Co. 27 L.R.A. 136, which is supple-as provided in his contract, if the assets of the company are not sufficient to pay its debts.

Receiver — corporation — right of preferred stockholders.

2. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation, whose contract entitles him to have his stock redeemed at par, is not entitled to have the concern placed in the hands of a receiver, in a proceeding to enforce his contract right of redemption, by showing that it is a losing venture, and that its assets are not sufficient to pay its debts, where his right to redemption fails because of insufficiency of assets.

(December 1, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Daviess County in defendant's favor in an action brought to recover the par value of stock held by plaintiff in the defendant corporation, together with accumulated dividends thereon. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

mented by a note to Lloyd v. Pennsylvania Electric Vehicle Co. 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 228.

As shown in the earlier notes, the cases support the rule that, in the absence of statutory or contractual provisions to the contrary, preferred stock is not entitled to any preference over common stock in relation to the capital; and that the terms "preferred stock" or "preferred shares" ordinarily have reference to the income only, and do not import a preference as to capital. And see, in this connection, RIDER v. JOHN G. DELKER & Sons Co. and Fryer v. Wiedemann, post, 1009.

Where, however, by the articles of incorporation the holders of preferred stock are given a first lien on its property and assets, the rights of the holders of such stock will be protected and enforced as against the holders of the common stock. Kent v. Honsinger, 187 Fed. 619.

The mere fact that upon the expiration of the patents in which the whole of the capital is invested there may not be sufficient property with which to pay the par value of the preferred stock will not entitle the holders thereof to compel the corporation to maintain a sinking fund to secure payment of their stock upon dissolution, under a charter provision that, upon liquidation or dissolution of the corporation, the holders of preferred stock should receive the par value of the stock from the assets, and the balance be divided among the common stockholders, in the absence of an express contract so to do. Mellon v. Mississippi Wire Glass Co. 77 N. J. Eq. 498, 78 Atl. 710.

As shown in the earlier notes referred to, holders of preferred stock, in the absence of statutory or contractual provisions to the contrary, cannot claim a preference over the creditors of the corporation. To the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. Gilbert Holbrook, F. J. Laswell, and Sweeney, Ellis, & Sweeney for appellant.

Messrs. George W. Jolly and C. S. Walker, for appellee:

No part of the capital stock can be returned to a stockholder or used in redemption of his stock until all debts are paid or provided for.

Marshall, Corp. 595, 597; Hamlin v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 36 L.R.A. 826, 24 C. C. A. 271, 47 U. S. App. 422, 78 Fed. 671; Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 576; Cook, Corp. 3d ed. § 271.

The appointment of a receiver to take charge of and administer the entire corporate property "is a purely ancillary remedy, and cannot be maintained in a proceeding instituted solely for that purpose."

Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co. 68 Neb. 222, 63 L.R.A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 94 N. W. 136, 97 N. W. 613, 4 Ann. Cas. 65.

Where a party may resort to an injunction same effect are Weaver Power Co. v. Elk Mountain Mill Co. 154 N. C. 77, 69 S. E. 747 (holding provision on stock certificates that they "shall be a preferred lien on the assets of the company" not to place holder in position of a creditor, but only to give him a preferred lien on the assets of the corporation when in liquidation over the common stockholders); Fryer v. Wiedemann, post, 1009; RIDER v. JOHN G. DELKER & Sons Co.

Holders of preferred stock cannot, as against subsequent creditors, claim the proceeds of a policy of insurance taken out by the corporation upon the life of its manager to secure the retirement of the preferred stock, when it was paid for out of the assets of the company, and the holders of such stock are treated as stockholders, and not creditors, by the statute of incorporation. Ellsworth v. Lyons, 104 C. C. A. 1, 181 Fed. 55.

And it makes no difference that creditors are not shown to have extended credit upon the supposition that the life insurance policy was a corporate asset for the payment of debts. Ibid.

The holders of preferred stock, who purchased the stock in consideration of the agreement by the corporation to permit them to act as their factors and handle the entire production of their mill as long as they were holders of the stock, and that the corporation would redeem the stock at par upon the change of account or engagement of other factors, are not creditors or entitled to share as such upon the voluntary liquidation of the company, but are only entitled to share with the other holders of preferred stock. Farrish-Stafford Co. v. Charlotte Cotton Mills Co. 157 N. C. 188, 72 S. E. 973.

A. L. R.

tion or attachment, a receiver will not be appointed. Moreover, in a case where the chancellor has the power to make such appointment, the appointment is within his sound discretion.

34 Cyc. 25, 26; Tarvin v. Walker's Creek Coal & Coke Co. 109 Ky. 582, 60 S. W. 185; Harmon v. Kentucky Coal, Iron & Development Co. 15 Ky. L. Rep. 12, 21 S. W. 1055.

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The John G. Delker & Sons Company is a Kentucky corporation. It has an issue of both common and preferred stock. Under the provisions of the articles of incorporation of said company the preferred stock "shall be subject to redemption by the corporation at its option at any time after five years from the organization of the corporation, upon six months' previous notice to the holder or holders of said stock, by the payment of its par value and any accumulated dividends; and any holder of said stock, or any part thereof, shall likewise have the right at any time after five years from the date of the organization of the corporation, to have his stock redeemed upon six months' previous notice to the corporation, by the payment to him of its par value and any accumulated dividends." Upon the certificates of preferred stock there is the following indorsement: "The said stock represented by this certificate is subject to redemption by the corporation, at its option at any time after five years from the organization of the corporation, upon six months' previous notice to the holder of this certificate, by the payment of the par value of said stock and any accumulated dividends; and any holder of this certificate shall likewise have the right at any time after five years from the date of the organization of said corporation, to have the stock represented by this certificate redeemed upon six months' previous notice to the corporation, by the payment to him of the par value of said stock and any accumulated dividends."

Ed Rider was the owner of five shares of the preferred stock in this corporation. He brought a suit in which he sought to recover of the corporation the par value of the five shares of stock held by him, together with the accumulated dividends thereon. He alleged that the notice required by the articles of incorporation had been complied with; and that he was entitled to have the corporation receive his certificate and pay him in cash therefor, as in the contract provided. A demurrer was sustained to this petition; and in the second amended petition he alleged, in substance, that the corporation was hopelessly insolvent; and he asked that a receiver be appointed to take charge of and wind up its affairs. A demurrer was sustained to the petition as amended. He declining to plead further, it was dismissed. He appeals.

It is insisted for appellee that the notice was insufficient; but from the conclusion which we have reached it is unnecessary to pass upon this question, as the case must turn ultimately upon the larger question, to wit, the right of the holder of preferred stock in a corporation to have the corporation return to him his money with interest when the financial condition of the corporation is such that it is unable to pay its debts. This is the real question.

For appellant it is urged that, under the articles of incorporation and by virtue of the indorsement on the certificate of stock which was issued to him, he has a contract with the company which he is entitled to have enforced; that he is in fact a creditor of the corporation. As between appellant and the holders of the common stock in this corporation, he is undoubtedly, by virtue of the provision in the articles of incorporation and indorsement upon this certificate of stock, above referred to, entitled to have the relief sought granted, unless the rights of creditors would be affected thereby. The capital of a corporation is the sum total of its stock, whether common or preferred. Certificates of stock are mere evidences that the holders thereof have invested the sums called for in the certificates in the enterprise. They run the risk of losing their stock if the business is not a success. As between themselves and third persons who deal with the corporation and give it credit, their stock is equally liable. It is only in cases where the corporation is solvent and the rights of creditors will not be injuriously affected thereby that agreements as to preferences among themselves may be enforced. The entire capital, without regard to any arrangement which may exist between common and preferred stockholders, is at all times subject to and liable for the debts of the corporation, and no part of the capital can be withdrawn from the business until the debts of the corporation are satisfied.

In Thompson on Corporations, 2d ed. vol. 4, § 3608, the rights of preferred stockholders, as between themselves and creditors of the company, are fully discussed, and that learned author adopts as the correct rule the opinion of the court in Heller v. National Marine Bank, 89 Md. 606, 45 L.R.A. 438, 73 Am. St. Rep. 212, 43 Atl. 800. It was there held that, as between creditors and ordinary preferred stockholders, the latter, as owners of the property of an insolvent corporation, are, upon a distribution of its assets, entitled to nothing until its creditors are first fully paid; that no part of the capital stock of a corporation can be withdrawn for the purpose of repaying the principal of the capital until the debts of the corporation are paid; and that ordinary preferred stock has no lien on the property of a corporation. In this state there is no statute giving to the holders of preferred stock a lien upon the property of the company, and hence the stock in question is what is termed by the author "ordinary preferred stock." The same authority announces the principle that "a preferred stockholder will not be allowed to share in any surplus money in the treasury of the corporation in accordance with an agreement to that effect, where it will work gross injustice to creditors;" and the cases of Culver v. Reno Real Estate Co. 91 Pa. 367, and Phillips v. Eastern R. Co. 138 Mass. 122, are cited as supporting this view.

In 10 Cyc. 568, preferred stock is defined as "not an indebtedness of the corporation, or an absolute agreement to pay certain dividends upon its shares, but is merely a pledge of its profits in favor of certain shares in preference to the others; in other words, an agreement to give a preference to particular shares over the other shares in the division of profits, but only in case there shall be profits to divide. Hence, if it appears in any case that no profits have been earned, the holders of preferred stock cannot maintain actions against the company to enforce payment of the guaranteed dividends." And again, on page 575, same volume, we find the following: "It may be stated generally that preferred shareholders occupy the status of shareholders or members, and that their right of preference is only a right of preference in the distribution of dividends over the common shareholders. It seems that such a shareholder has no preference over creditors upon the winding up of the corporation; but that his rights are to have his preferred dividend, in case there is a surplus which can properly be divided among shareholders, and there can be no such surplus so long as debts of the corporation remain unpaid as they mature."

In Hamlin v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 36 L.R.A. 826, 24 C. C. A. 277, 47 U. S. App. 422, 78 Fed. 670, the distinction between a creditor and a stockholder, whether common or preferred, in a corporation, is thus stated: "There is a wide difference between the relation of a creditor and a stockholder to the corporate property. One cannot well be a creditor as respects creditors proper, and a stockholder by virtue of a certificate evidencing his contribution to the capital of the corporation. Stock is capital, and a stock certificate but evidences that the holder has ventured his means as a part of the capital. It is a fixed characteristic of capital stock that no part of it can be withdrawn for the purpose of repaying the principal of the capital stock until the debts of the corporation are paid. These principles are elementary.

. . . The chance of gain throws on the stockholder, as respects creditors, the entire risk of the loss of his contribution to capital. 'He cannot be both a creditor and debtor by virtue of his ownership of stock.'

. . . If the purpose in providing for these peculiar shares was to arrange matters so that, under any circumstances, a part of the principal of the stock might be withdrawn before the full discharge of all corporate debts, the device would be contrary to the nature of capital stock, opposed to public policy, and void as to creditors affected thereby. . . . If that was the purpose of this arrangement, most doubtful language was employed. There is a sense in which every shareholder is a creditor of the corporation to the extent of his contribution to the capital stock. In that sense every incorporation includes its capital stock among its liabilities. But that creditor relation is one which exists only between the corporation and its shareholders. It is a liability which is postponed to every other liability, and no part of the capital stock can be lawfully returned to the stockholders until all debts are paid or provided for. The violation of this well-understood principle is a breach of trust, and a creditor affected thereby may pursue the stockholders, and recover as for an unlawful diversion of assets.

. . . Although appellants were not creditors proper, yet they show a case, on the face of their certificates, entitling them to a preference over common stockholders in relation to both dividends and capital. Ordinarily preferred stock is entitled to no preference over other stock, in relation to capital. But where there is an expressed agreement giving such a preference, not prohibited by local law nor the charter, we see no reason why it is not a valid contract, as between the corporation and such preferred stockholders, and binding upon the common stockholders." To the same effect is Taft v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 310, 5 Am. Rep. 575. We are cited to no authority holding to the contrary in any case where preferred stockholders are not by special statute given a lien upon the property of the company; and the chancellor correctly held that the plaintiff failed to state a cause of action in the petition or either of the amendments offered thereto.

Nor was he entitled, under the prayer of his petition, to have the corporation placed in the hands of a receiver. The allegations on the part of a stockholder that a corporation is insolvent and that it is a losing venture are not sufficient to warrant a receivership, for, as said in Thompson on Corporations, vol. 5, 2d ed, § 6346, "in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the mere insolvency of a corporation is not sufficient in equity to authorize the appointment of a receiver, unless there is some evidence of waste, extravagance, carelessness, dissensions, or fraud which gives ground to apprehend that the property will suffer, and there is no reasonable prospect that, if let alone, the corporation will soon become safely solvent." There is no charge of fraud, waste, extravagance, or mismanagement in the conduct of the business on the part of the company, and in the absence of such a charge the chancellor would not have been authorized in the appointment of a receiver for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the company. To the same effect is the text in 10 Cyc. 1305, where it is said: "In the absence of enabling statutes, courts of chancery have no jurisdiction to decree the dissolution of a corporation; nor, as a general rule, can such a court, during the life of the corporation, wind up its business and sequester its property and effects, on the application of a shareholder as such."

In Worth Mfg. Co. v. Bingham, 54 C. C. A. 119, 116 Fed. 785, a majority of the shareholders of a private corporation prayed its dissolution on the ground of insolvency, and that its business was being carried on at a loss. The court refused to appoint a receiver with a view to winding up its affairs, on the ground that, in the absence of some charge that its officers were guilty of some illegal, fraudulent, or other wrongdoing in the conduct of the business, a court of equity was without authority to decree its dissolution. See also Cronin v. Potters' Co-op. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 749. The application for a receivership was merely an incident to the relief sought, and appellant, not being entitled to the relief sought under the original petition, the chancellor did not err in sustaining a demurrer thereto and in refusing his application for a receiver.

Judgment affirmed.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

ROBERT N. FRYER, Intervener, Appt.,
v.

CHARLES WIEDEMANN et al.

(148 Ky. 379, 146 S. W. 752.)

Corporation — preferred stock — priority over creditors.

1. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation, whose certificate provides that no lien shall be placed upon the corporate property without his consent, is not entitled to priority over corporate creditors in the distribution of its assets.

Same — advances by directors — priority.

2. Directors and holders of common stock in a corporation, although occupying a position of trust towards preferred stockholders, do not, by lending money to the corporation to enable it to carry on its business, even as to such an amount as to render the preferred stock worthless, postpone their claims to repayment to the retirement of the preferred stock, which was issued under an agreement that no lien should be placed on the property of the corporation without consent of the preferred stockholders.

Same — failure to wind up — effect.

3. The claims of directors and holders of common stock of a corporation for money advanced to keep it a going concern will not be postponed in the winding up of the corporation to the retirement of preferred stock, because at the time they assumed the management, the assets were sufficient to pay preferred stockholders in full, had the concern been wound up at that time.

(May 16, 1912.)

A PPEAL by intervener from a decree of the Circuit Court for Campbell County allowing claims of appellees in an action for the appointment of a receiver of the Highland Hotel Company, and dismissing intervener's petition for the establishment of priority in favor of the preferred creditors in the distribution of the assets of the company over the claims of appellees and all creditors whose indebtedness was incurred subsequent to the issuance of the preferred stock. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Aubrey Barbour and Fred B. Bassman for appellant.

Messrs. Dolle, Taylor, & O'Donnell and Ramsey Washington, for appellee Wiedemann:

As against creditors a holder of preferred stock has no greater rights than com-

Note. — As to right of preferred stock to preference as to capital, see Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co. ante, 1005, and notes referred to in the footnote under that case.

mon stockholders, and the corporation cannot give them greater rights in the assets of the corporation, as against creditors, unless by virtue of an express statutory provision.

Ellsworth v. Lyons, 104 C. C. A. 1, 181 Fed. 55.

Officers, directors, or stockholders who advance money to a corporation are entitled to share in its assets with other general creditors.

Standard Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Excelsior Ref. Co. 108 La. 74, 32 So. 221; Hooven Mercantile Co. v. Evans Min. Co. 193 Pa. 28, 44 Atl. 277; Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 72, 59 Pac. 319; Hill v. Standard Teleph. Mfg. Co. 209 Pa. 231, 58 Atl. 147.

Mr. James C. Wright for appellee Crawford.

Clay, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Highland Hotel Company was a corporation organized for the purpose of conducting a hotel in the district of Highlands, Campbell county, Kentucky. Its original capital stock was $50,000, divided into 500 shares of $100 each. In July, 1905, its capital stock was increased from $50,000 to $80,000; the additional $30,000 being preferred stock, divided into 300 shares of $100 each. The certificates of preferred stock contained the following provision: "The holders of this preferred stock are entitled to receive cumulative dividends at the rate of not over six per cent (6%) per annum, out of the profits of the company, payable quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October of each year, and to have preference over the common stockholders both as to assets of the company, in the event of the distribution thereof by reason of dissolution or otherwise, and as to dividends, and to have priority in these respects over the holders of any other issue of stock. No mortgages or lien of any nature shall be placed upon the property of the company without the unanimous consent of the preferred stockholders; otherwise, said preferred stock shall have no voting power. The company may at any time, cumulative dividends at the rate of six per cent (6%) per annum having been paid thereon, retire any of the shares of the preferred stock at the rate of $110 per share."

In August, 1906, the corporation was authorized to increase its common stock from $50,000 to $80,000; the additional $30,000 of common stock to be divided into 300 shares of $100 each. Only 10 of these additional shares were ever issued. The highest indebtedness authorized by the original articles of incorporation was $30,000. In July, 1907, the limit of indebtedness was, 39 L.R.A., (N.S.)

by amended articles of incorporation, increased to $100,000. By another amendment, in August, 1908, the limit was increased to $125,000.

On January 22, 1909, Charles Wiedemann, one of the appellees, filed an action in the Campbell circuit court against the hotel company for the appointment of a receiver, on the ground that it was impossible to conduct the company with profit, and that it was hopelessly insolvent. A receiver was appointed, and the cause referred to the master commissioner, to hear proof and report on claims. Claims of appellees Wiedemann and Crawford were allowed. Appellant, Robert N. Fryer, the holder of 10 shares of the preferred stock, intervened in the action. He alleged that, at the time of the issue of the $30,000 preferred stock, the assets of the company were amply sufficient to pay all of its outstanding indebtedness, including the preferred stock; that a large portion of Wiedemann's indebtedness was incurred by the company after the issue of the preferred stock, and without the consent of the preferred stockholders; that the assets of the company were insufficient to pay its indebtedness, not by reason of any destruction or depreciation of the property, but by reason of its excessive indebtedness; that $30,000 was the limit of indebtedness permitted by the articles of incorporation to be incurred by said company. It was further alleged that Wiedemann had been a large stockholder in the company since its organization. At the time of the creation of the indebtedness to himself, he was the owner of a large majority of the common stock, and was also a director. The intervening petitioner asked that he be allowed to prosecute the cause set up in his intervening petition on behalf of the preferred stockholders, and prayed for a decree adjudging that the preferred stockholders have priority in the distribution of the assets of the company over the claims of Wiedemann and all creditors, whose indebtedness was incurred subsequent to the issue of the preferred stock. To this petition a demurrer was sustained.

By amended petition it was alleged that, at the time of the organization of the Highland Hotel Company, appellees, Wiedemann and Crawford, subscribed for and became the owners of 75 and 20 shares, respectively, of the common stock; that on or about February 1, 1907, Wiedemann became the owner of 320 shares, and Crawford of 150 shares, of the 510 shares of common stock; that one Clarence Wagner was the owner of 5 shares, and one Robert Nagel the owner of 5 shares; that about that time Wiedemann, Wagner, and Nagel were elected directors, and Wiedemann was elected president; that said persons continuously served and acted in said capacity up to the time of the institution of the action for the appointment of a receiver; "that during all of said time the said Clarence Wagner was only a nominal director in said company, and acted as such in the interest of said Wiedemann, and that said Robert Nagel was only a nominal director, and acted in all respects as such in the interest of said L. J. Crawford." It was further alleged in the amended petition that, at the time Wiedemann and Crawford acquired control of the company, its total indebtedness, including mortgage indebtedness of $8,000, incurred prior to the issue of the preferred stock, was only $28,000; that at the time of the institution of the suit by Wiedemann the indebtedness of the company aggregated $104,882.62, exclusive of the $8,000 mortgage claim, and exclusive of mortgage claims aggregating $22,000 against the property known as "The Shelly Arms," that, of said aggregate indebtedness, the sum of $56,909.03 was the indebtedness to Wiedemann, and $20,540 the indebtedness to Crawford, leaving a balance of $27,335.50 as indebtedness to other unsecured creditors; that, of this balance, $15,000 was to a bank, and for which Wiedemann and Crawford were sureties. It is further alleged in the petition that, of the money advanced by Wiedemann and Crawford, $30,000 was used in making changes and additions to the Altamont Hotel, and the remainder was used in paying the operating expenses of the hotel; that all the property of the Highland Hotel Company was appraised at $107,814; that the proceeds of the sale aggregated $77,450; that one L. C. Widreg, as representative of Wiedemann and Crawford, became the purchaser at that price. It is also alleged that, at the time Wiedemann and Crawford purchased control of the property, the company could obtain no further credit, and was about to be forced into dissolution; that, if it had been dissolved at that time, the property could have been sold for a sum sufficient to pay the preferred stockholders in full; that for some time thereafter the assets of the corporation would have paid its current indebtedness and the preferred stockholders in full; that Wiedemann and Crawford had advanced the money when no credit could be obtained from anyone else; that, if the claims of Wiedemann and Crawford are permitted to have priority over the claims of the preferred stockholders, it would be a payment to them to the extent of $30,000 out of the property of the preferred stockholders; that the advancements made by Wiedemann and Crawford were made when the company was operating at a loss of $1,000 a month; that the company operated at a loss during all of said time, except during the months of June, July, August, and September, 1908, when there was a profit; that, if Wiedemann and Crawford are permitted to have priority over the preferred stockholders, this would be in violation of the contract under which the preferred stock was issued, and would be in violation of the relation of trust which Wiedemann occupied towards the preferred stockholders as the president and director of the company, and which Crawford occupied towards them as a stockholder and a virtual director, acting through Robert Nagel. The amended petition then concludes with a prayer to the effect that the preferred stock be given priority over the claims of Wiedemann and Crawford, and asks for a personal judgment against them for any balance of the amount of the preferred stock which the assets of the company might fail to satisfy. To the intervening petition, as finally amended, a general demurrer was sustained, and, the petitioner refusing to plead further, the petition was dismissed. From that judgment he appeals.

Appellant states the main question raised by his petition as amended, as follows: "Does the preferred stock of the described character, on distribution of the assets of the corporation, have priority over the corporation's unsecured indebtedness to a director and a common stockholder acting as director, incurred without the consent of the preferred stockholders?" In this connection it is proper to say that, while under a statute providing that preferred stock may, by recorded agreement, be made a lien on the franchise and property of the corporation, which shall "have priority over any subsequently created mortgage or other encumbrance," stockholders who have been given a preference in such manner prescribed in the statute have been held to be entitled to be preferred to the extent specified therein (Md. Laws 1880, chap. 474; Heller v. National Marine Bank, 89 Md. 602, 45 L.R.A. 438, 73 Am. St. Rep. 212, 43 Atl. 800), such is not the rule in the absence of statutory authority (Hamlin v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 36 L.R.A. 826, 24 C. C. A. 271, 47 U. S. App. 422, 78 Fed. 664; Guarantee Trust Co. v. Galveston City R. Co. 46 C. C. A. 305, 107 Fed. 311). On the contrary, preferred stock makes the holders thereof stockholders, and not creditors, and, except as to the preference in the payment of dividends, gives them the same rights, and no greater, and subjects them to the same liabilities, as the holders of common stock, except in so far as they may be given other rights, or relieved from liabilities, by the charter or by statute. As against creditors, they have no greater rights than common stockholders, and the corporation cannot give them greater rights in the assets of the corporation as against creditors, unless by virtue of an express statutory provision. 2 Clark & M. Corp. § 413. As preferred stock is a part of the capital stock of the corporation, holders of such stock are not preferred to the creditors of the corporation in the distribution of its assets. Consequently the preferred stockholders cannot be reimbursed before the corporate debts are paid. Warren v. King, 108 U. S. 389, 27 L. ed. 769, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 789; Hamlin v. Toledo, St. L. & K. C. R. Co. 36 L.R.A. 829, 24 C. C. A. 271, 47 U. S. App. 422, 78 Fed. 664; Lloyd v. Pennsylvania Electric Vehicle Co. 75 N. J. Eq. 263, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 228, 138 Am. St. Rep. 557, 72 Atl. 16, 20 Ann. Cas. 119.

Even if it be conceded that the contract in the certificates of preferred stock to the effect that "no mortgage or lien of any nature shall be placed upon the property of the company without the unanimous consent of the preferred stockholders" is a valid contract between the preferred stockholders and the common stockholders, who are also creditors, we conclude that, inasmuch as a lien is something distinct from a claim and is in the nature of a security, the words "lien of any nature" do not include the claims of general creditors. Rochester Distilling Co. v. O'Brien, 72 Hun, 462, 25 N. Y. Supp. 281. As no liens of any kind were placed upon the property after the issue of the preferred stock, and as the claims of appellees, Wiedemann and Crawford, are unsecured, it follows that the provision of the contract referred to is eliminated from the case.

But it is claimed that appellees violated the spirit of the contract between the common stockholders and the preferred stockholders by going ahead and incurring an indebtedness after the issue of the preferred stock, large enough to wipe out the preferred stock. It is contended that this was wrong, because Wiedemann as a director, and Crawford as a common stockholder, occupied a position of trust towards the preferred stockholders, and should not have incurred an indebtedness that rendered the preferred stock worthless. It appears from the petition and the amendments thereto that appellees, Wiedemann and Crawford, simply loaned the corporation money to improve its property and to conduct a hotel. They loaned this money at a time when it could not borrow from others. There is no allegation of fraud or bad faith on the part of appellees. There is an allegation to the effect that two of the directors represented them, but it does not appear that they represented them in any wise differently from the way they represented the other stockholders. Nor are the two directors accused of representing Wiedemann and Crawford improperly, or of acting in bad faith towards the corporation or the stockholders. Not only is there an absence of any charge of fraud or bad faith on the part of appellees, or any one representing them, but the petition shows that appellees, Wiedemann and Crawford, owned a majority of the common stock, and were therefore most interested in the success of the company, and made the loans to the corporation for the purpose of keeping it going. Conceding that both Wiedemann and Crawford occupied the position of trust toward the preferred stockholders and the corporation, it does not appear wherein they in any manner abused the trust. So far as the record shows, they made an honest effort to continue the business, and showed their faith in its ultimate success by putting up large sums of money, which they can never recover. While it may be true that a director, in becoming a creditor of a corporation, may not take advantage of his position and obtain any preference over other creditors, it is well settled that he may, in good faith, make a loan to the corporation. Osborne v. Monks, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 606, 21 S. W. 101; 3 Clark & M. Corp. 786. This is all that appellees did in this case. Having in good faith advanced the money to the corporation, they are entitled to share in the distribution of the assets upon the same terms as the other unsecured creditors. Hooven Mercantile Co. v. Evans Min. Co. 193 Pa. 28, 44 Atl. 277; Standard Cotton Seed Oil Co. v. Excelsior Ref. Co. 108 La. 74, 32 So. 221.

But it is insisted that the corporation had, at the time appellees took charge of it, and for some time thereafter, sufficient assets to pay the preferred stockholders, and that appellees should have then wound up the corporation, and not attempted to continue the business to the detriment of the preferred stockholders. It must be remembered, however, that the stock of every corporation is much more valuable when it is a going concern. It is the duty of the directors, therefore, to make an honest effort to continue the business of the corporation. This is all that appellees did. Appellees were holders, not only of common stock, but of preferred stock. Having more stock than the other stockholders, they were more interested in the success of the corporation than anyone else. Had they succeeded in the undertaking, they would have been commended. Having failed, and there being no evidence of fraud, bad faith, or negligent management of the company's affairs, they should be treated as any other creditors, and their claims will not be postponed until after preferred stockholders have been paid.

Other questions are discussed by counsel for appellant, but we deem it unnecessary to consider them. We conclude that the petition as amended failed to show appellant entitled to the relief prayed for, and that the demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF OHIO, Plff. in Err.,
v.
BOONE.

(84 Ohio St. 346, 95 N. E. 924.)

Health — vital statistics — compulsory service — constitutionality.

1. Sections 14, 17, and 21 of "An Act to Establish a Bureau of Vital Statistics and to Provide for the Prompt and Permanent Registration of All Births and Deaths Oc-

Headnotes by the COURT.

Note. — Constitutionality of statutes in relation to vital statistics.

No case has been found which sustains the position taken in STATE v. BOONE. On the contrary, there are two decisions which hold that the failure to provide compensation for attending physicians who are required to report births and deaths or the presence of an infectious disease does not render the law unconstitutional.

Thus, in Com. v. McConnell, 116 Ky. 358, 76 S. W. 41, it was held that a statute requiring physicians and midwives without compensation to keep a registry of all births and deaths at which they have professionally attended, showing name, sex, and color, and names, ages, and residence of the parents, and to deposit a copy in the office of the county clerk, is not unconstitutional, but is a valid police regulation.

Likewise, in State v. Wordin, 56 Conn. 216, 14 Atl. 801, it was held that an ordinance requiring physicians having a patient within the limits of the city suffering from an infectious disease, to report, under a penalty, that fact to the mayor or clerk of the board of health, together with the name of the patient and the street and number of the house where treated, was not unconstitutional because of its failure to provide compensation for the service required.

In Robinson v. Hamilton, 60 Iowa, 134, 46 Am. Rep. 63, 14 N. W. 202, it was held 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

curing within the State of Ohio" (99 Ohio Laws 296), so far as they relate to a physician or midwife in attendance upon a case of confinement, are unconstitutional and void, because they were enacted by an unnecessary, unreasonable, and arbitrary exercise of the police power.

On rehearing.

Statute — partial invalidity — effect on whole.

2. The requirement that physicians and midwives shall certify items numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, and 18, in § 14, of "An Act to Establish a Bureau of Vital Statistics and to Provide for the Prompt and Permanent Registration of All Births and Deaths within the State of Ohio" (99 Ohio Laws, 296), is an unwarranted and unreasonable exercise of police power; and for the reason that §§ 13, 14, 17, and 21 of said act require a certificate of all items mentioned in said § 14, and recognize no other certificate as complete and proper, each and all of said sections, so far as they apply to physicians and midwives, are unconstitutional and void.

(Spear, J., dissents in part.)

(June 13, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hardin County to review a judgment reversing a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas convicting defendant of violating the act re-that a statute requiring physicians and midwives to report births and deaths to the clerk of the courts was not unconstitutional or unjust and oppressive. The court said however: "We have not been favored with an argument on behalf of the defendant, and are therefore not informed of the grounds upon which the statute in question was assailed in the court below, and is claimed to be unconstitutional. It cannot be expected that we shall consider arguments of which we have not heard, or that we will imagine objections and discuss them. . . . The statute requires the collection of statistics pertaining to the population of the state and the health of the people, which may import information useful in the enactment of laws, and valuable to science and the medical profession, to whom the people look for remedies for disease and for means tending to preserve health. The objects of the statute are within the authority of the state, and may be attained in the exercise of its police power."

The title of a statute "An Act to Provide for the Registration of Marriages, Births, and Deaths" is sufficiently specific constitutionally to authorize the incorporation into the statute of a provision requiring physicians and midwives to keep a registry of all births and deaths at which they have professionally attended, and to deposit a copy in the office of the county clerk. Com. v. McConnell, supra. A. L. R.

lating to the registration of births. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney General, Fred H. Kirtley, and James R. Stillings, for the State:

An act to establish a bureau of vital statistics, and to provide for the prompt and permanent registration of all births, etc., is a police regulation imposing a penalty irrespective of criminal intent, and it contains no exception in favor of any person.

State v. Rippeth, 71 Ohio St. 85, 72 N. E. 298; Farrell v. State, 32 Ohio St. 456, 30 Am. Rep. 614.

The filing of a birth certificate is required of all physicians. The law operates upon all physicians in the state of Ohio alike, and equal protection is not denied where a law operates upon all persons and upon all property similarly located.

Harmon v. State, 66 Ohio St. 249, 58 L.R.A. 618, 64 N. E. 117; State v. Gravett, 65 Ohio St. 289, 55 L.R.A. 791, 87 Am. St. Rep. 605, 62 N. E. 325; State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 41 L.R.A. 689, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785, 51 N. E. 136; Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L.R.A. 184, 31 N. E. 884.

Mr. George E. Crane, for defendant in error:

Under pretense of police regulation, the state cannot be permitted to encroach upon any of the just rights of the citizen which the Constitution intended to secure against abridgment.

Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. 87, 21 L. ed. 412; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499.

Wide as is this power, everything and anything done under state authority cannot be justified under it. The act done must fall within the legal bounds of the police power. If it exceeds those bounds, and prejudices life, liberty, property, equality before the law, or privilege or immunity, it justifies Federal intervention, under the 14th Amendment, because it violates that amendment.

State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L.R.A. 621, 25 Am. St. Rep. 863, 10 S. E. 285; Ruhstrat v. People, 185 Ill. 133, 49 L.R.A. 181, 76 Am. St. Rep. 30, 57 N. E. 41, 12 Am. Crim. Rep. 453; Frost v. Chicago, 178 Ill. 250, 49 L.R.A. 657, 69 Am. St. Rep. 301, 52 N. E. 869; State ex rel. Godard v. Johnson, 61 Kan. 803, 49 L.R.A. 662, 60 Pac. 1068.

Davis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant in error was indicted for an alleged violation of an act entitled "An Act to Establish a Bureau of Vital Statistics and to Provide for the Prompt and Permanent Registration of All Births and Deaths Occurring within the State of Ohio" (99 Ohio Laws, 296). A demurrer to the indictment was overruled by the common pleas court, and the defendant was put upon trial, found guilty, and sentenced. The circuit court reversed the judgment for error in rejecting certain testimony offered by the defendant, and the state prosecutes error to reverse the judgment of the circuit court and to affirm the judgment of the court of common pleas.

The attorney general and his associates insist that the act referred to is a constitutional exercise of legislative power, and that the evidence which was rejected in the trial court was properly held to be inadmissible; while the defendant still maintains that the proffered evidence was admissible, and that the act under which the indictment was framed is unconstitutional. We shall review the latter contention only.

That the general grant in the Constitution of the legislative power includes police power is conceded; and that the registration of births, deaths, marriages, and the like, may be included in a proper exercise of the police power is also conceded. But it is disputed that, while requiring the registration of such facts as may naturally and readily come to the knowledge of persons present at a birth, death, or marriage, the state may compel such persons to inquire for, investigate, and report upon, certain collateral matters which may be interesting and of possible value to a bureau of statistics, and that, too, without substantial compensation. We understand the counsel for the state to maintain the affirmative all along the line of this contention.

The police power is inherent in sovereignty; and its exercise is justified by the necessity of the occasion. Its foundation is the right and duty of the government to provide for the common welfare of the governed. It is tersely expressed in the maxim, Salus populi suprema lex. While, therefore, a broad discretion is given to the legislature to provide for the general welfare, it necessarily is not an arbitrary or unlimited discretion; for, if it were beyond judicial control or review, it would amount to a practical abrogation of all constitutional guaranties of personal rights, and the undefined boundaries of legislative power could be extended so as to authorize the worst and most irresponsible form of despotism,—a legislative despotism conducted in the name of the people.

Hence it has been held, not only in this state, but in a great number of cases both in the Federal and state courts, that it is within the judicial power to declare void an unnecessary or unreasonable exercise of police power. This rule was approved and applied in Phillips v. State, 77 Ohio St. 214, 82 N. E. 1064: "To justify the state in thus interposing its authority in behalf of the public, it must appear, first, that the interests of the public generally, as distinguished from those of a particular class, require such interference; and, second, that the means are reasonably necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose, and not unduly oppressive upon individuals. The legislature may not, under the guise of protecting, . . . arbitrarily interfere with private business, or impose unusual and unnecessary restrictions upon lawful occupations. In other words, its determination as to what is a proper exercise of its police powers is not final or conclusive, but is subject to the supervision of the courts." Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38 L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499. See also numerous cases cited in 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 939.

We need not inquire whether the state may not require a physician or midwife to report to the proper authority, for registration, the fact of a birth which has come under his or her observation, first, because it is conceded that it may do so, and, second, because it obviously has some relation to the public welfare, and it cannot be very burdensome to comply with such regulation. But this statute goes much further. It imposes upon the physician or midwife the duty of investigating and certifying as to certain facts which would not necessarily or naturally come within the knowledge of the attending physician or midwife, viz., whether the birth was legitimate or illegitimate, and, except in case of illegitimacy, the full name, residence, color or race, birthplace, age, and occupation of the father; also the maiden name in full, residence, color or race, birthplace, age, and occupation of the mother; likewise the number of this child of the mother, and the number of living children of the mother. It is further provided that no certificate shall be held to be complete and correct which does not supply all of the items of information called for therein, or satisfactorily account for their omission; and that the physician or midwife who shall neglect or refuse to file a proper certificate of birth with the local registrar, within the time required by the act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined, etc. In short, a professional attendant at a birth is required to enter upon an inquiry as to nonprofessional questions, to supply information to, it may be, a nonprofessional official, "clothed with a little brief authority," in relation to matters which perhaps are interesting as vital statistics, but as to which it requires more than appears in this statute, or in the arguments in this case, to show that they are necessary or even closely related to the public safety, the public morals, or the public welfare; an inquiry, too, which could be just as well and more appropriately conducted, reported upon, and certified to, by the local registrar or a township assessor or a census taker.

The physician or midwife is compelled, under the penalties of the statute, to institute and carry out the necessary investigation and to "supply all of the information called for" without compensation. The contention is made on the part of the state that statutes which impose the duty of making such report or certificate are not unconstitutional, because they do not provide for compensation to physicians. While we do not regard this point as decisive of the present case, yet we are not prepared to yield unqualified assent to the proposition thus broadly stated. None of the cases cited for the state in that connection appears to have been carefully considered, except State v. Wordin, 56 Conn. 216, 14 Atl. 801. In one of them, indeed, Robinson v. Hamilton, 60 Iowa, 134, 46 Am. Rep. 63, 14 N. W. 202, it is frankly said: "We have not been favored with an argument on behalf of the defendant, and are therefore not informed of the grounds upon which the statute in question was assailed in the court below and is claimed to be unconstitutional. It cannot be expected that we shall consider arguments of which we have not heard, or that we will imagine objections and discuss them." Besides the case does not seem to go further than the defendant in this case concedes the law to be. The Connecticut case referred to, after a statement of the guaranties of personal liberty contained in the Constitution of the United States, contains the following language: "But these provisions place no limitation upon the power of the legislature of this state to require gratuitous service from one member of the community in the protection of the lives of all, other than that which would have been equally upon it in their absence, namely, that it shall not violate fundamental principles and purposes of the social compact." This language should be read in the light of the facts of that case; but, assuming that it correctly states the law in its general application, there is grave reason to doubt whether it is sound law in this jurisdiction, owing to specific provisions of the ordinance of 1787.

The purview of that famous act of Congress is expressly "for the government of the territory of the United States north-west of the River Ohio." The first twelve sections of the ordinance obviously provided for the temporary government of the territory, until it should be divided and organized into states. Then follows something of more enduring interest. We quote: "And for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws, and Constitutions are erected; to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, Constitutions, and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory; to provide, also, for the establishment of states, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the Federal councils on an equal footing with the original states, at as early periods as may be consistent with the general interest: It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, that the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original states and the people and states in the said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent, to wit." Then follow the several articles of compact. We quote from only two of them. It is provided in article II. that "no man shall be deprived of his liberty or property but by the judgment of his peers or the law of the land; and should the public exigencies make it necessary, for the common preservation, to take any person's property, or to demand his particular services, full compensation shall be made for the same."

Perhaps it may be said that the adoption of a Constitution by the people of Ohio superseded the ordinance of 1787, and that the Constitution of Ohio contains no such provision as that which we have quoted from article II. of the ordinance of 1787. We recur again to the "articles of compact," and quote from article V.: "And whenever any of the said states shall have 60,000 free inhabitants therein, such state shall be admitted, by its delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original states in all respects whatever: Provided, the Constitution and government, so to be formed, shall be Republican, and in conformity to the principles contained in these articles." If our Constitution, instead of creating a Republican form of government for the state, had provided a pure Democracy, a government directly by the people, and, so framed, it had been accepted by the President and Congress of the United States, there might have been some reason for the claim that, in that respect, the compact which was to "remain forever unaltered, unless by common consent," had been repealed by implication; yet, even under such circumstances, a conclusive presumption would not be raised that the compact had been altered, without the common consent of all the parties thereto. But if the convention which prepared our Constitution had omitted from the Bill of Rights the famous interdiction against slavery, contained in article VI. of the ordinance, would that have justified the conclusion that the compact was altered, and that the existence of slavery in Ohio would be constitutional? Or, to put the question in another form, if our Constitution contained nothing whatever in regard to the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus, or to trial by jury, or to proportional representation of the people in the legislature, or to the prohibition of cruel and unusual punishments, it could not be justly inferred that the great compact had been altered, and that these privileges and guaranties had been subtracted from the rights of the citizens, and were not included among the rights reserved by the people (Const. of Ohio, art. 1, § 20), because there would have been nothing in the Constitution which was inconsistent with the ordinance, and the declared purpose thereof, "to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, Constitutions, and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory," and that these "articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original states and the people and states in the said territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent."

In Hogg v. Zanesville Canal & Mfg. Co. 5 Ohio, 410, at page 416, Hitchcock, J., speaking of a clause in article IV. of the ordinance, said: "This portion of the ordinance of 1787 is as much obligatory upon the state of Ohio as our own Constitution. In truth it is more; for the Constitution may be altered by the people of the state, while this cannot be altered without the assent both of the people of this state and of the United States, through their representatives. It is an article of compact, and, until we assume the principle that the sovereign power of the state is not bound by compact, this clause must be considered obligatory." And in Hutchinson v. Thompson, 9 Ohio, 52, at page 62, Grimke, J., remarked: "But when application for admission into the Union was made by the people inhabiting the eastern part of the territory, modifications in several parts of the ordinance were asked for, and they were granted by the United States as one party, to the state as the other. This seems to show that the people of Ohio have so far treated the articles of compact as of perpetual obligation. The alterations proposed were with a view to the immediate formation of a state Constitution, and were of no importance if the state should have a right to annul the ordinance the moment it assumed that condition."

Similar language is found in the opinion in Cochran v. Loring, 17 Ohio, 409, 424, 425, and the foregoing quotations remain as the unmodified expressions of this court upon this subject.

We are not unaware of various dicta which have appeared from time to time in opinions by learned justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, beginning with Pollard v. Hagan, 3 How. 212, 11 L. ed. 565; Permol v. New Orleans, 3 How. 589, 11 L. ed. 739, and Strader v. Graham, 10 How. 82, 13 L. ed. 337. But it requires no acute analysis to differentiate those cases and to show that they do not go very thoroughly into the question whether the ordinance of 1787 can be superseded, otherwise than by the "common consent" of the parties to the compact, as required by the terms of the ordinance, or whether such "common consent" ever has been given; and, giving the fullest effect that can be claimed from those remarks by the distinguished judges, it is obvious that they ignore the distinction between a mere act of Congress, which may be repealed or superseded by subsequent acts, and a solemn and formal "compact," in the nature of a treaty as it were, between the proprietary states and the people and states of the territory which was subsequently to be erected into several states of this Union. They ignore, moreover, the fact that the compact, on the good faith of which the original proprietors ceded this territory to the United States, expressly declared that the principles declared therein shall be the basis of "all laws, Constitutions and governments which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory;" and at best these declarations rest on no stronger foundation than the provision of the compact itself, namely, that a state, with constitutional limitations as provided, "shall be admitted, by its delegates, into the Congress of the United States, on an equal footing with the original states, in all respects whatever." See cases above cited and Escanaba & L. Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 107 U. S. 678, 688, 689, 27 L. ed. 442, 446, 447, 2 Sup. Ct. Rep. 185, 194; Van Brocklin v. Tennessee (Van Brocklin v. Anderson) 117 U. S. 151, 159, 29 L. ed. 845, 847, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 670; Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 295, 296, 31 L. ed. 149, 151, 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 113; Willimette Iron Bridge Co. v. Hatch, 125 U. S. 1, 9, 10, 31 L. ed. 629, 632, 633, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 811. Whatever that clause may mean, it certainly does not mean that all state Constitutions shall be or are alike, nor that a new state erected in the Northwest territory, shall be understood to surrender all the guaranties of the compact as a condition of admission as a state.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

We have thus briefly indicated the reasons for our belief, that the Great Charter of the Northwest territory is still under, and above, and before, all laws or Constitutions which have yet been made in the states which are parts of that territory; and that under its guaranties the state has not the right to draft a citizen into particular service without substantial compensation. At least, it is clear to us that the provisions of this statute which require a professional man to search out nonprofessional information, and certify it to state authorities, are unnecessary, unreasonable, and arbitrary, and are not, therefore, a valid exercise of police power. The demurrer to the indictment should have been sustained, and therefore the judgment of the Circuit Court reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas is affirmed, and defendant discharged:

Spear, Ch. J., and Shauck, Price, Johnson, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

A rehearing having been granted, Davis, Ch. J., on January 16, 1912, handed down the following additional opinion (85 Ohio St. 313, 97 N. E. 975):

This case is fully reported with opinion in 84 Ohio St. 346, ante, 1013, 95 N. E. 924. A motion for rehearing was entertained because of an uncertainty which seemed to exist to some extent, as to the scope of the syllabus in the former report. There is no ambiguity in the opinion; but since, by a rule of this court, the syllabus must be confined to the points of law arising from the facts of the case, and which have been determined by the court, and since the syllabus is the expression of all the concurring judges, doubt seems to have arisen whether the syllabus and the opinion were in harmony.

Whether a physician or midwife might or might not be required, by a proper statute, to report a birth at which he or she had attended, was not a point considered or decided, because it was not disputed, and was expressly conceded by the defendant in error, as expressly stated in the opinion. But, although this much was conceded to be true, it was argued, and so held by the court, that paragraphs or items numbered 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17, and 18, in § 14 of "An Act to Establish a Bureau of Vital Statistics and to Provide for the Prompt and Permanent Registration of All Births and Deaths Occurring within the State of Ohio" (99 O. L. 296), were an unwarranted and unreasonable exercise of police power; and that these items are so interlaced and interwoven into the texture of §§ 13, 14, 17, and 21 of said act as to render each entire section unconstitutional and void, so far as they relate to physicians and midwives; § 13 making it the duty of the attending physician or midwife to file a certificate of birth giving all of the particulars required by the act; § 14 for the same reason; § 17 making it the duty of the state registrar to prepare blanks and issue detailed instructions to carry out the purposes of the act, and providing that no other blanks shall be used; and § 21 making it a penal offense for neglect or refusal to file "a proper certificate," the definition of a proper certificate being fixed by §§ 13, 14, and 17.

For the reason, therefore, that the objectionable items of § 14 are expressly required by all of the sections mentioned above to be joined with those conceded to be sound, the court could not separate the former from the latter and declare part of the sections valid. The legislature may rectify its error by future enactment.

The judgment of the Circuit Court, reversing the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, is affirmed, on the ground that the demurrer to the indictment ought to have been sustained, and defendant discharged.

Shauck, Price, Johnson, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

Spear, J., dissenting:

I am in accord with that part of the majority opinion given upon the rehearing, wherein it is held with emphasis, as was foreshadowed in the opinion given when the case was first reported, to the effect that the general assembly has power to require physicians to certify to the proper board such information respecting births and deaths as, speaking in general terms, will naturally come within the knowledge or observation of an attending physician. This upon the ground that the physician is licensed by the state. Sections 1289 to 1295, General Code. This requirement is therefore not unreasonable, and it is horn-book knowledge that, where special privileges are accorded by the state, special duties in connection therewith may be exacted, without awarding money compensation therefor.

But I dissent from the holding on the rehearing which will have the effect to destroy the act utterly. This judgment is put upon the ground that the provisions of the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

act which were within the power of the general assembly to enact are so interwoven with those admittedly invalid as to make the whole invalid. This is a holding that the general assembly would not have passed the portions of the act which it is now admitted that body had power to pass, without including the provisions which are condemned. In other words, a hungry man presumably would reject a half a loaf, unless he was offered a whole loaf. I can find no such legislative purpose in the words or object of the act. The universal rule is that a part of a law may be unconstitutional while there is no such objection to the remaining parts, and in such case all of the law stands, except the part which is unconstitutional. The use of the word "all" in § 13, and, perhaps, elsewhere in the act, purporting to require the physician to certify all the matters purporting to be required by the act generally, is not controlling; nor should it create doubt as to other portions of the act. Necessarily and reasonably the "all" should be held to mean all those matters which the general assembly has the power to require to be certified; and the "proper certificate" required to be filed by the provisions of § 21 would naturally mean such certificate as the board has legal power to require; its power in that respect being now defined by the judgment of the court.

This view of the act does not affect the defendant in the case. He was properly ordered discharged by this court. The discharge may well rest upon the ground that the evidence adduced at the trial was insufficient to justify a verdict and judgment against him.

VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

NORFOLK FIRE INSURANCE CORPORATION, Plff. in Err.,

v.

T. GILBERT WOOD.

(— Va. —, 74 S. E. 186.)

Insurance — limitation of additional policies — fraudulent insertion — effect.

The insertion by an insurance agent who has failed to secure all the insurance to be placed on a building, of a clause in the policy issued by him making it void if additional insurance is taken, will not prevent recovery on the policy in case of loss,

Note.—The parol-evidence rule as to varying or contradicting written contracts, as affected by the doctrine of waiver or estoppel as applied to policies of insurance, although the intended amount was placed with other companies.

(March 14, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Nottingham County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peatross & Savage for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Caskie & Caskie, for defendant in error:

The company is estopped from denying liability on the ground that its policies forbade additional insurance without its consent.

Independent School Dist. v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 65, 84 N. W. 956; Kitchen v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 57 Mich. 135, 58 Am. Rep. 344, 23 N. W. 616; Brumfield v. Union Ins. Co. 87 Ky. 122, 7 S. W. 893; Steers v. Home Ins. Co. 38 La. Ann. 952; Smith v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 91 Cal. 323, 13 L.R.A. 475, 25 Am. St. Rep. 191, 27 Pac. 738; Smith v. Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. — Cal. —, 27 Pac. 742; St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 89 Ill. 82; Commercial Union Assur. Co. v. Urbansky, 113 Ky. 624, 68 S. W. 653; Dalton v. Milwaukee Mechanics' Ins. Co. 126 Iowa, 377, 102 N. W. 120; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Norwood, 16 C. C. A. 136, 32 U. S., App. 490, 69 Fed. 71; McElroy v. British American Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990; Palatine Ins. Co. v. McElroy, 40 C. C. A. 441, 100 Fed. 391; Queen Ins. Co. v. Union Bank & T. Co. 49 C. C. A. 555, 111 Fed. 697.

Keith, P., delivered the opinion of the court:

Wood, the defendant in error, who was the owner of a building at Burkeville, then in course of construction, was approached by Jones, the Burkeville agent of the Norfolk Fire Insurance Corporation, who asked to be allowed to write a policy of insurance on the property for $7,500. This Wood refused to do, saying that he had promised other agents insurance on the building, but, after the other agents were satisfied, he would give the agent of plaintiff in error a policy. Jones insisted on $7,500, saying that he was a local agent and entitled to more insurance than outsiders, but Wood said that he could not fulfil his promise to other agents if he did this, but that he would give Jones $5,000; and a policy was written for that sum. Wood then called the attention of the agent to the fact that the premium was too large, and that the policy should be what is known as a "builder's risk," and this error was corrected.

The policy thus taken expired on November 12th at 12 o'clock, and on November 11th a Mr. Legg, the managing underwriter for the plaintiff in error, came to Burkeville for the purpose of inspecting the property, and he in company with Wood and Jones, the agent, inspected the building. Legg stated that his company would like to carry $15,000 upon it, and later Jones saw Wood and tried to induce him to permit him to write $15,000 on the building, to which Wood replied that he would not give it all to one company, as he had promised other agents. Jones, the agent, then asked to be allowed to write $7,500, but Wood told him he could write $5,000 or nothing. On the next day, November 12th, just about one hour before the first policy expired, Jones again saw Wood, and asked, "Have you agreed to let me control the full amount of insurance on that hotel building?" Wood replied, "No," whereupon Jones produced and delivered the policy now sued on. Wood put the policy in his pocket, and went into the schoolhouse where he was teaching. The delivery and conversation took place during the recess of school. Wood did not unfold the policy, but looked at the face of it, and did not read or open it until after the fire.

The policy contained the following clause: "This entire policy, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, shall be void if the insured has or shall hereafter make or procure any other contract of insurance, whether valid or not, on property covered in whole or in part by this policy."

At sundry times subsequent to November 12th, and before the fire occurred, Wood took out other policies on the building aggregating $6,500, making a total insurance with the policy in this suit of $11,500.

The property was destroyed by fire on is treated in the note to Haapa v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1165.

As to effect of nonwaiver agreement on conditions existing at inception of insurance policy, see note to Gish v. Insurance Co. of N. A. 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 826. And as to power of agents to bind insurer by oral waiver or estoppel in pais as to forfeitures occurring after issuance of policy and before loss, under policies of insurance requiring consent or waiver to be in writing, see note to Industrial Mut. Indemnity Co. v. Thompson. 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1064. As to effect of agent's insertion in application, of false answers to questions correctly answered by insured, see note to Deming Invest. Co. v. Shawnee F. Ins. Co. 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 607. The digest of this series should be consulted for later cases on these various points.

February 2, 1910, with a total loss, and proof of loss was duly given, but the company refused to pay upon the sole ground that the clause above quoted had been violated. Thereupon Wood brought suit, and, when all of his evidence had been produced before the jury, the defendant, without introducing any testimony, demurred, whereupon the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $5,000, with interest from May 25, 1910, subject to the opinion of the court upon the demurrer. The court overruled the demurrer and entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant company applied for and obtained a writ of error, which brings before us for consideration the rulings of the court upon the trial.

The plaintiff in error took several exceptions to the admissibility of evidence, to permitting the plaintiff to show that prior to the issuance of the policy in suit he had told the agent of the defendant that he intended to take additional insurance in other companies, that the agent had solicited as much insurance as $15,000 on the insured premises, and other evidence of like character, which the plaintiff in error objected to 'because it tended to vary the terms of a written instrument, but which the court admitted upon the ground that it tended to establish a state of facts which estopped the defendant from claiming a forfeiture for breach of the condition of the policy against additional insurance. We shall consider the assignments of error as to the admissibility of testimony along with that with respect to the judgment upon the demurrer to the evidence, for they all involved the same general principle.

In Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Yates, 29 Gratt. 585, Judge Staples, after stating the familiar rule of evidence that all previous verbal agreements must be taken to be merged in the written agreement of the parties made for the purpose of embodying the terms of the contract, and designed to be the depository and proof of their final intention, says: "The exceptions to this rule that are sanctioned by the courts are found in those cases in which the insured is misled by the assurances or declarations of the agent of the insurer, or where the latter seeks to take advantage of a forfeiture of his own creation, or where the insured has given a correct description of the property, which has not been followed by the insurers or their agents in preparing the policy, or where the parties stand on unequal ground, and one of them uses his superior knowledge or influence to mislead the other as to the true import of the contract. . . . It must be conceded that many of these exceptions, if they can be so termed, are utterly irreconcilable with the rule itself, or any just principle upon which it is founded. In such cases it is said, however, the oral evidence is not offered to contradict the writing, but to show that the representation as it is written ought not to be used against the party, upon the ground of an equitable estoppel,"—citing Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Kinnier, 28 Gratt. 88, and Manhattan F. Ins. Co. v. Weill, 28 Gratt. 389, 26 Am. Rep. 364. Lynchburg F. Ins. Co. v. West, 76 Va. 575, 44 Am. Rep. 177, fully supports Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Yates, and reinforces the doctrine there maintained by additional authorities.

In Mutual F. Ins. Co. v. Ward, 95 Va. 231, 28 S. E. 209, it is said that "facts relating to the risk, communicated to such an agent of an insurance company . . . before or at the time of issuing the policy in suit, bind the company, whether communicated to it by such agent or not;" and that, "notwithstanding the provision in an insurance policy which avoids the policy if there be 'other insurance' on the property, unless it be made known to the company and indorsed on the policy or otherwise acknowledged in writing, if the existence of such 'other insurance' was communicated to such an agent of the company, . . . the company is estopped to enforce the forfeiture, although the agent may have neglected to communicate his knowledge to the company, and the company was in ignorance of the fact at the time the policy was issued, unless the limitation upon the agent's powers was in some way brought home to the assured."

And in Farmers' & M. Benev. F. Ins. Asso. v. Williams, 95 Va. 248, 28 S. E. 214, it is held that "knowledge of facts material to the risk, communicated to the agent of an insurance company who fills out the application for the policy, which is subsequently delivered, is imputed to the company, whether communicated to it by its agent or not, unless it is shown that special limitations on the powers of the agent were known to the assured."

By these authorities, we think it is abundantly established that if insurance in other companies had existed at the time of the negotiations which led to the execution and delivery of the policy in suit, and the fact that there was such other insurance upon the property had been, before the issuing of this policy, communicated to Jones, the agent, and with that knowledge he had received the premium and issued the policy, the company would have been affected by his knowledge of that fact and been estopped to insist upon the forfeiture.

In the case under consideration, there was no other policy in actual existence, but it appears that the plaintiff in error was willing to write a policy for $15,000 upon the property. There was, then, no excessive insurance. It further appears that it applied for and insisted upon being permitted to write a policy larger than the one in suit; that it was informed through its agent that Wood declined to give them more than $5,000 of insurance, upon the ground that he had entered into agreements with other insurance companies to permit them to write policies upon his building. Almost at the instant when the policy in suit was delivered, the agent renewed the request and was again informed that he could write $5,000 or nothing, because of the agreement which Wood had entered into with other companies, though other policies had not in point of fact been issued. Thereupon, with this knowledge the premium was received and the policy was issued, and without being read, as was also known to the agent, was put by Wood into his pocket, and he went about his duties as schoolmaster.

It would be a somewhat singular result if the policy should be held good, notwithstanding the clause of forfeiture, in case of concurrent insurance, if the concurrent policies had actually been issued with the knowledge of the insurance company through its agent; but that the forfeiture should prevail if, in reliance upon the act of the company through its agent in receiving the premium and issuing the policy with full knowledge of his purpose, Wood should take out other insurance in pursuance of what he conceived to be binding agreements with other companies to that effect.

We have reached, then, this point, that the authorities establish that the policy under consideration would not have been defeated by the actual existence of other policies, because the insurance company would have been estopped by its knowledge of the facts to insist upon the forfeiture; but it is insisted by the plaintiff in error that the estoppel did not arise, although the premium was received and the policy issued with full knowledge that the insured intended to do, and had actually agreed to do, that which, if executed, would have tied the hands of the company. In both instances the result is the same; as a moral question, both seem to involve identical propositions, and there is abundance of authority in support of both.

In Kitchen v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 57 Mich. 135, 58 Am. Rep. 344, 23 N. W. 616, where an applicant for fire insurance told the agent that he meant to obtain further insurance in other companies, and asked him so to notify the company he represented, the agent replied that it would be needless to do so until such insurance was obtained. The applicant had no notice of any limitations upon the agent's authority. Held, that the company was estopped from denying liability on the ground that its policies forbade additional insurance without its consent.

In Erb v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 99 Iowa, 727, 69 N. W. 261, it was held that a provision of a policy of insurance against additional insurance was waived where the agent of the insurer, whose knowledge is imputable to it, knows at the time the policy is issued that an existing policy issued by another company is about to be renewed.

In Fitchner v. Fidelity Mut. Fire Asso. 103 Iowa, 277, 72 N. W. 530, it was held that the insurance company is charged with the knowledge of its soliciting agent that the insured desired, and was placing $12,000 of concurrent insurance on the merchandise.

In Independent School Dist. v. Fidelity Ins. Co. 113 Iowa, 65, 84 N. W. 956, where an insurance company issued a policy on certain property, while its agent who procured the risk knew of a certain other policy to be obtained on the same property, it consented to the additional insurance, and its policy was not void in consequence thereof since its agent's knowledge was the knowledge of the company.

See St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Wells, 89 Ill. 82.

In Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Norwood, 16 C. C. A. 136, 32 U. S. App. 490, 69 Fed. 71, the general agent of certain insurance companies called upon the plaintiff and asked to be allowed to place some of the insurance on plaintiff's stock. He inquired how much insurance plaintiff intended to carry, and plaintiff told him $40,000, and subsequently authorized him to place $10,000 of such insurance. The general agent afterwards delivered to plaintiff policies, including two of $2,500 each, to which were attached riders allowing other insurance to the amount of $27,500, and both contained the condition that if the assured should have or afterwards effect other insurance, without the written consent of the company, the policy should be void, and also provided that only certain specified officials should have authority to waive or modify the conditions of the policy. When plaintiff received the policies, he examined them to see that the amounts were correct, but, relying on his conversation with the agent, did not examine them further, and placed them in his safe. It was held "that by delivering the policies with knowledge, through their agent, of the amount of insurance intended to be taken, the companies waived the condition as to other insurance, and were estopped to set the same up, after a loss; plaintiff having a right to rely on such knowledge of the agent."

See McElroy v. British America Assur. Co. 36 C. C. A. 615, 94 Fed. 990; Palatine Ins. Co. v. McElroy, 40 C. C. A. 441, 100 Fed. 391; Queen Ins. Co. v. Union Bank, & T. Co. 49 C. C. A. 555, 111 Fed. 697.

What we have said and the authorities we have discussed in no way conflict with the opinion of this court in Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 104 Va. 572, 52 S. E. 345, where it was held, in an action to recover on a life insurance policy, that "a contemporaneous parol agreement or understanding between the agent of an insurance company who solicits the insurance and the insured as to the time and place of paying the premiums, different from that stated in the policy, cannot be given in evidence, as it varies or contradicts the terms of the written contract of the parties." The effort of the insured there was virtually to introduce into the policy of insurance a new term with respect to the authority of the agent, doing away with the limitation which the company had imposed upon the agent's authority, which it was held could not be done, unless the company, by a course of business or otherwise, had waived the limitation on the agent's power. In other words, that case in substance reaffirms the law as stated by Judge Staples in Southern Mut. Ins. Co. v. Yates, supra, which already appears in this opinion, and need not be repeated.

This case is considered as upon a demurrer to the evidence, and, without again discussing rule governing courts in such cases, we are of opinion that there is no error in the judgment complained of, which is affirmed.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

JAMES M. SWIFT, ATTORNEY GENERAL, EX REL. STATE TREASURER

v.

CHARLES N. BARNEY, Admr., etc., of Frank Sweetser, Deceased.

(211 Mass. 134, 97 N. E. 750.)

Inheritance tax — property within state — limit.

1. Under a statute imposing an inheritance tax upon all property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, and providing that no bequest, devise, or distributive share shall be subject to the provisions of the act unless its value exceeds a certain amount, only property within the commonwealth is to be considered in determining whether or not the specified amount is exceeded, and if such property does not exceed the amount no tax can be imposed, although the sum received by the beneficiary from portions of the estate located in other jurisdiction exceeds the specified limit.

Statute — construction — official custom.

2. In the absence of ambiguity in a statute, the practice of the taxing officers with respect to the levying of inheritance taxes cannot be taken into consideration in ascertaining the meaning of the statute.

(February 28, 1912.)

RESERVATION by the Supreme Judicial Court for Suffolk County for the determination by the full court of a bill filed for the collection of a legacy and succession tax upon property passing by the will of deceased to the residuary legatees named therein. Bill dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. James M. Swift, Attorney General, and Fred T. Field, Assistant Attorney General, for plaintiff:

There is no exemption from tax, since the value of each bequest exceeds $1,000; but the tax is computed only upon property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth.

McCurdy v. McCurdy, 197 Mass. 248, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 329, 83 N. E. 881, 14 Ann. Cas. 859; Kingsbury v. Chapin, 196 Mass. 533, 82 N. E. 700, 13 Ann. Cas. 738; Minot v. Winthrop, 162 Mass. 113, 26 L.R.A. 259, 38 N. E. 512.

In determining whether property was within the exemption provided for by the statutes, "it has been the uniform practice of administrative officers of the commonwealth . . . to consider both property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth and property without such jurisdiction."

United States v. Cerecedo Hermanos y

Note. — Must property out of state be included in fixing exemptions under inheritance tax.

The question presented in SWIFT v. BARNEY, whether, granting that property of a nonresident located out of the taxing state is not itself subject to the inheritance tax of such state, it may be considered in determining whether property within the state is or is not subject to exemptions under the inheritance tax, seems to be one of novelty in the courts. The question is, of course, distinct from the question whether or not property outside of the state may be taxed, and, except where the statutes render the answer clear, is one of considerable nicety. The rule that "where both the domicile of the decedent and the situs of the property

Compañia, 209 U. S. 338, 52 L. ed. 821, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 532; Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475; Boston v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 186 Mass. 274, 71 N. E. 295; Smith v. Wenz, 187 Mass. 421, 73 N. E. 651.

Messrs. C. N. Barney and H. T. Lummus for respondent.

Morton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant is the administrator with the will annexed of one Frank D. Sweetser, who at the time of his death was domiciled in Martinez, in the state of California. The will was duly proved in California. By the will the testator gave to a niece a legacy of $500, and bequeathed the rest and residue to two sisters and a brother in equal shares. The estate amounted to $16,144.20, of which $1,116.07 was in this commonwealth. This was all that was actually or constructively here, or that came into the hands of the defendant. The legacy of $500 was paid by the executor in California, and he distributed the rest and residue, amounting to nearly $5,000 each, between the sisters and the brother. The defendant paid from the estate in his hands the debts due to Massachusetts creditors, the expenses of administration here, and the funeral charges incurred here, and at the request of the executor in California divided what remained, which amounted to $631.08, equally between the residuary legatees, each receiving in full $210.36. The treasurer and receiver general has assessed a legacy and succession tax upon the estate thus paid over to and distributed by the defendant amongst the residuary legatees, and brings this bill to enforce its payment, contending that the amounts severally received by the residuary legatees from the estate in California should be taken into account in determining whether the bequests to them exceeded $1,000 in value, and if they do, as it is plain that they do if that rule is to be applied, that when the estate in the hands of the defendant is liable to a legacy and succession tax. We do not understand the defendant to controvert this if the rule contended for by the treasurer and receiver general is the correct rule. The defendant on the other hand contends that the amounts received by the residuary legatees from the California estate should not be taken into account in determining whether the bequests to them exceed $1,000 in value, and if it should not, then he contends, and the attorney general, as we understand him, concedes, that the tax was unlawfully and improperly assessed.

The testator died in November, 1908. The statute then in force was Stat. 1907, chap. 563, § 1, now Stat. 1909, chap. 490, part 4, § 1. That statute, so far as applicable to the case before us, provides that "all property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, corporeal or incorporeal, and any interest therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of the commonwealth or not; which shall pass by will, or by the laws regulating intestate succession, or by deed, grant, or gift, except in cases of a bona fide purchase for full consideration in money or money's worth, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to any person, absolutely or in trust, except," etc. Then follow the exceptions, which include husband and wife and children and certain other near relatives and connections of the decedent. These are divided into two classes, A and B. The statute then goes on: "And such property which shall so pass to or for the use of a member of class A shall be subject to a tax on 1 per cent of its value for the use of the commonare in a foreign state or county, no tax is payable, although the succession devolves upon a resident citizen" (37 Cyc. 1561), would seem to afford no inherent obstacle to holding that, for the purpose of reaching the whole estate of a decedent, foreign property descending to a resident could be considered in connection with local property descending to such resident, in order to bring the total above the exempted amount, so that the local property might be subject to tax. Such a rule would, at least, prevent the scattering of an estate in such manner as to escape all inheritance taxes. whereas, if locally situated, it would have been subject to the tax. However, in jurisdictions such as Massachusetts, where the statutes render it clear that only property within the taxing state may be taken into account in determining exemptions, a rule such as is above suggested could not be applied.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

As to effect on transfer tax of apportioning property of nonresident decedent within the state, to payment of debts or legacies which are exempt or subject to a reduced rate, see note to Re Ramsdill, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 946.

As to liability to pay transfer or inheritance tax in respect to stock in domestic corporation belonging to the estate of a nonresident, see notes to Neilson v. Russell, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 887, and Re Culver, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 384.

As to liability of insurance policy issued by a domestic corporation upon the life of a nonresident, to a local transfer tax, see note to Re Gordon, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1089.

The question of the subjection to inheritance tax of debts due to nonresident, secured by mortgage upon land within the state, is treated in the note to Bradley v. Merriam, 9 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1104.

G. J. C.

wealth, if such value does not exceed," etc. The same language is used in regard to class B, except that the tax is 3 per cent instead of 1 per cent. It is manifest that the words "such property" refer to the words with which the section begins, namely: "All property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth . . . which shall pass by will" or in the manner there specified. In other words, it is on property within the commonwealth, and on that alone that the tax is imposed. The attorney general not only does not controvert this, but agrees that the statute must be so construed. After providing that administrators and executors shall be liable for the taxes, the statute continues: "But no bequest, devise, or distributive share of an estate which shall so pass to or for the use of a husband, wife, father, mother, child, or adopted child of the deceased, unless its value exceeds $10,000, and no other bequest, devise, or distributive share of an estate, unless its value exceeds $1,000, shall be subject to the provisions of this part." It is plain, we think, that the "bequests, devise, or distributive share" referred to is of property within the jurisdiction of this commonwealth. The section deals with property in this commonwealth and nowhere else. The word "estate" in the connection in which it is used means, and can only mean, property in this commonwealth. It necessarily follows that, in determining whether "a bequest, devise, or distributive share" is or is not exempt, the treasurer and receiver general has no right to take into account the amount received by the devisees or distributees from property situated in another state or country. To do so would be to tax the devisee or distributee indirectly for such property to an amount equal to the amount of the exemption here, and would be contrary to the principle on which the legacy and succession tax is based, which is that it is "an excise tax upon the privilege of passing the title to property on the death of its owner." Kingsbury v. Chapin, 196 Mass. 533, 537, 82 N. E. 700, 702, 13 Ann. Cas. 738. In order to be valid, the tax must be levied by the authority that confers the privilege upon property which passes by virtue of the privilege.

It is immaterial what the practice of the administrative officers of the commonwealth, charged with the duty of collecting legacy and succession taxes, may have been in regard to considering property within and without the commonwealth. It is only when a statute is of doubtful import, and the practice has been long continued and acquiesced in by all parties interested, that it can be resorted to to aid in the construction of the statute. In the present case we discover no such ambiguity in the meaning of the statute as to justify, as an aid to construction, a resort to the practice of the officers charged with its execution, even if we assume that the practice had been sufficiently long continued to render it otherwise admissible.

There is nothing in the previous history of the statute which tends to show that it should be construed differently from what we have construed it.

Bill dismissed with costs.

WEST VIRGINIA SUPREME COURT OF APPEALS.

L. A. WHITTEN, Appt.,

v.

THOMAS G. WHITTEN et al.

(— W. Va. —, 74 S. E. 237.)

Husband and wife — investments — other's name — gift — trust.

Money of a wife invested in land in the husband's name is presumptively a gift, and, in the absence of facts and circumstances rebutting the presumption, such as violation of a prior or contemporaneous agreement to take the title in the wife's name, ignorance of its having been taken in the husband's name, subsequent expenditure of the wife's money in improvements thereon, an effort on her part to obtain the title after discovery of its condition, control of the property as her own against the husband, or the like, there is no resulting trust in her favor.

(February 27, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a decree of the Circuit Court for Monroe County in defendants' favor in a suit for the partition of certain land. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. H. Crosier and R. L. Clark for appellant.

Messrs. Rowan & Meadows, for appellees. Sull:

If John G. Whitten purchased the land in question, with the separate estate of his wife, and without her knowledge or consent took the title in his own name, a resulting trust arose in favor of his wife, which will be enforced by a court of equity; and if the money so invested was intended as a loan or gift the establishment of this fact devolved on the husband or on those claiming under him.

Headnote by POFFENBARGER, J.

Note. — As to the effect of investment by husband in his own name of wife's separate property in real estate to create a trust in her favor, see notes to Sparks v. Taylor, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 381, and Wright v. Wright, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 161. For presumption as to common hoard when earnings of both spouses or family are invested in the name of one spouse, see note to Beck v. Beck, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 713.

Standard Mercantile Co. v. Ellis, 48 W. Va. 309, 37 S. E. 593; Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46; Berry v. Wiedman, 40 W. Va. 36, 52 Am. St. Rep. 866, 20 S. E. 817; Skaggs v. Mann, 46 W. Va. 209, 32 S. E. 110; Cresap v. Cresap, 54 W. Va. 581, 46 S. E. 582; 1 Beach, Eq. Pr. § 183; Perry, Tr. § 127; Almond v. Wilson, 75 Va. 626.

Poffenbarger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Sufficiency of the evidence to establish a resulting trust in favor of the devisees of a deceased widow against the heirs of the deceased husband is challenged by this appeal from a decree in a partition suit in favor of the former.

At the time of his death, in 1890, John G. Whitten held the legal title to a tract of land, containing 57 acres, on which he resided, and a small adjacent tract. In 1882, a commissioner of the circuit court of Monroe county conveyed to him and Thos. G. Whitten, his brother, as assignees of H. M. Lockridge, a purchaser at a judicial sale, a tract of 159 acres and 32 poles, out of which the latter, under a voluntary partition, conveyed to the former the 57-acre tract. In 1886, the other small tract was conveyed to John G. He died, in 1890, leaving his wife, Sally A., surviving, who resided on the 57-acre tract until her death, in 1907, leaving a will, bequeathing and devising all of her property, "both personal and real," to Geo. Stull and Cora M. Stull, his wife, subject to the payment of her debts. This suit was brought by a collateral heir of John G. Whitten, his brother, L. A. Whitten, against numerous other heirs, for partition of the land, and the Stulls were made parties to it on their petition, claiming title to all of it by virtue of the will, upon the theory of equitable title in the testatrix by reason of alleged payment of all the purchase money out of money belonging to her, and the court upheld and enforced their claim as to the 57 acres by the decree appealed from.

Three witnesses swear the deceased husband had admitted payment for the land with his wife's money, and her title to it, and his duty to convey it to her. Two of them say $250 of the purchase money came from her father's estate, one of whom further says he was present when Shannon Baker, her brother, paid it either to John G. Whitten or Lockridge. Another says he married into the family, and knows the purchase money came from her father's estate, but details no dates, amounts, or circumstances. Two of them mention an additional sum of $35, put in on the original transaction with the $250, which she had saved from the proceeds of sales of farm products. By way of rebuttal, two witnesses say John Baker, the wife's father, died only ten years before the date of their testimony, fifteen years or more after the date of the first purchase. Four witnesses testify to the wife's admissions of title in the husband's heirs, and her inability to sell or dispose of the land, or obtain more than the use of it during her life, but not to any denial of payment of purchase money out of her funds, or admission of payment otherwise. As to the total amount of purchase money, there is no evidence; but the petition, treated as a cross bill, contains an undenied allegation that it was $400, which, under the rule, is taken as true.

Failing to observe the effect of the relation of husband and wife upon the transaction, relied upon as having vested equitable title in Mrs. Whitten, the decree seems to treat it as one between strangers, in which proof of payment of money alone establishes a resulting trust in favor of him who paid the money; the legal title having been conveyed to another. The marital relation of the parties introduces an exception, not always mentioned, however, in dealing with cases in which it is a factor. The rule as stated in Skaggs v. Mann, 46 W. Va. 209, 33 S. E. 110, is somewhat broader than the authority cited for it (Berry v. Wiedman, 40 W. Va. 36, 52 Am. St. Rep. 866, 20 S. E. 817), which, though placing the burden upon the husband to prove the money invested was a gift, says the fact is "prima facie established by proof of her knowledge and consent." This qualification is unnoticed in the quotation of the rule in Skaggs v. Mann. Cresap v. Cresap, 54 W. Va. 581, 46 S. E. 582, observes it. Deck v. Tabler, 41 W. Va. 332, 56 Am. St. Rep. 837, 23 S. E. 721; McClintock v. Loiseau, 31 W. Va. 865, 2 L.R.A. 816, 8 S. E. 612, and Lockhard v. Beckley, 10 W. Va. 87, go further, declaring a presumption of gift without proof of knowledge and consent on the part of the wife whose money has been so invested in the name of the husband, which must be rebutted by proof of her ignorance of the fact, or her objection to the form of the conveyance, or some other fact inconsistent with the presumption.

This subject is more thoroughly considered in McGinnis v. Curry, 13 W. Va. 29, than in any other of our decisions. There the deed was taken in the husband's name with the approbation of the wife, but Judge Green clearly expresses the opinion that the result ought to have been the same in the absence of proof of that fact. In other words, he thought the burden was upon the wife to negative the presumption of a gift. We read: "It is equally well settled that such a resulting trust will not arise, where the party who advanced the purchase money bears certain close relations to the party in whose name the deed is taken. If a father advances the purchase money, for instance, and the deed is taken in the name of a wife or child. Shaw v. Read, 47 Pa. 96. So, too, if a grandparent advances the purchase money, and the deed be taken in the name of a grandchild, even though the father be not dead, the presumption would be that it was intended as a gift, and no remitting trust would arise. This is a legitimate inference from the English cases. See Ebrand v. Dancer, 2 Ch. Cas. 26; Lloyd v. Read, 1 P. Wms. 607; Kilpin v. Kilpin, 1 Myl. & K. 520. In these and other instances, in which the law presumes that the person advancing the money intended it as a gift to the person in whose name the deed is made, this presumption is one of fact, and not of law, and may be rebutted by evidence or circumstances. The presumption, that the advancement of the purchase money was intended as a gift is not confined to the case where the person making the advancement was under legal obligations to support the other party. A grandparent is under no such obligation to support a grandchild, especially when its father is living; and yet the more recent English cases, above cited, assume that a gift would be presumed in such a case, where a deed is taken in the name of the grandchild, and the purchase money advanced by the grandparent."

The following from Schouler's Dom. Rel. § 119, agrees with this view: "So, too, land or other property bought by the husband with his wife's money, but in his own name, and without any agreement that the purchase shall be to her separate use, or the title taken in her name, will not, as a rule, as presumptions have ruled hitherto, be treated as her separate property." Wells, Separate Property of Married Women, § 212, conforms, saying: "Something depends on the form of the conveyance, and more still probably on the intent of the transaction. Where her money pays for the land, and the deed is taken in the name of the husband and wife jointly, and their heirs and assigns, and there is no evidence of an intention on her part to create a trust, the legal inference is that she thereby conferred an interest on her husband, such as the deed expresses; and no trust by operation of law will arise for herself or her heirs." So does Bishop Law of Married Women, vol. 2, § 118, quoting the following with approval: "The authorities simply show that the same facts which would raise a resulting trust as between strangers do not necessarily do so as between parent and child, or husband and wife; the presumption in such cases being, until rebutted, that an advancement or provision was intended, but this presumption being liable to rebuttal. There is, therefore, no uniform and unbending rule. The question resolves itself into one of intent; and each case, subject to those general prima facie presumptions, must depend upon its individual facts."

However the rule may have been stated from time to time, the fact is that, in every case in which this court has upheld and enforced a claim to a resulting trust in favor of a wife as against the heirs of her husband, she has clearly rebutted the presumption of a gift. In Skaggs v. Mann a prior or contemporaneous agreement to take the deed in the wife's name, and her ignorance of the breach of that agreement, were shown. In Berry v. Wiedman the chief value of the property was in the improvements made by the wife, at her own cost, subsequent to the purchase of the land. Her uniform claim of ownership and recognized control of the property, during her husband's life, were also shown. In Cresap v. Cresap the allegations treated as sufficient on demurrer were substantially that the property had been conveyed to the husband without the knowledge or consent of the wife, and that, on discovery of the fact, she had repeatedly demanded a conveyance to her, which was promised, but never executed. An equally strong case on the facts was shown in Standard Mercantile Co. v. Ellis, 48 W. Va. 309, 37 S. E. 593. We quote: "The proof appears to plainly establish that the property was paid for with the wife's money, and was to be deeded to her, but that the title bond, without her knowledge or consent, and apparently without his knowledge, was taken in his name. When she discovered this, she sent the title bond by her son to have a deed for the property made to herself." This conduct of the wife clearly negated the presumption.

The presumption of a gift under such circumstances accords with general legal principles. Ordinarily services rendered by one of two persons standing in close relationship, by blood or marriage, to the other, is in law gratuitous, unless an express agreement to compensate, or facts from which it arises by inference, is shown. In the absence of a contrary agreement, express or shown by circumstances importing it, property passing from one of such persons to the other is ordinarily deemed a gift. Money of the husband invested in the name of the wife is always prima facie a gift. Why should not the money of a wife invested in the name of the husband be so regarded? By the weight of authority, here as elsewhere, it is, as we have shown.

Proof of Mrs. Whitten's ignorance of the character of the conveyance and of violation of any prior or contemporaneous agreement is wholly lacking. She furnished only a part of the money. Knowing the title was in her husband's name before his death, she made no demand for it, and died, leaving it in his heirs; and her will makes no specific reference to it. Moreover, she died believing she had no title to it. There is no proof of any improvements of the property at her expense. So the facts and circumstances, considered as a whole, confirm rather than repel the natural presumption of a gift.

Record title in the heirs ought to be overcome by clear and explicit evidence, if at all. Prima facie, they are the owners of the property. Ordinarily written evidence of title to land is required. Title resting on oral evidence is recognized in a few instances, but in all such cases clear and full proof is required. Smith v. Turley, 32 W. Va. 14, 9 S. E. 46. In neither character nor quantity does the evidence here measure up to this requirement.

Our conclusion is to reverse the decree, dismiss the petition of George Stull and Cora M. Stull, treated as a cross bill, and remand the cause for further proceedings.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

GEORGE W. KISER, Plff. in Err.,
v.

BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS
OF LOGAN COUNTY et al.

(85 Ohio St. 129, 97 N. E. 52.)

Constitutional law — removal of milldams — compensation.

The amendment, in parentheses, to Revised Statutes 1880, § 4567c, passed March 23, 1893 (90 O. L. 123), authorizes the taking of private property in the improvement of, and removal of an obstruction from, a living stream for the public benefit, without compensation to the owner, in violation of article 1, § 19, of the Constitution, and is therefore null and void.

(November 21, 1911.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Logan County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in defendants' favor in an action brought to restrain defendants from removing plaintiff's milldam and destroying the water power and water rights enjoyed by him. Reversed.

Statement by Davis, J.:

On the 5th day of August, 1909, George W. Kiser, the plaintiff in error, commenced his action in the court of common pleas of Logan county, Ohio, to restrain the above-named defendant in error from removing his milldam and destroying the water power afforded thereby and the water rights theretofore enjoyed by him, which they were threatening to do in pursuance of the findings and orders of the board of county commissioners of Logan county, Ohio, in a proceeding on the petition of Mary Connolly, C. K. Hartzler, and others, under §§ 4567a, 4567b, and 4567c of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, all without allowing or paying to him any compensation. Among other grounds for injunction, the plaintiff in error, in his said petition below, complained that all the said proceedings and Note. — Right to take private property for public use without compensation on the theory that it has been abandoned.

No other decision has been disclosed on this question.

Acts providing for the taking of water rights in case of abandonment have been given effect where provision for compensation was made.

In Curtiss v. Smith, 35 Conn. 156, a statute of this kind was construed, and the report of the committee assessing damages was accepted and judgment rendered for the amount assessed. The act in this case provided that "no such dam shall be erected to the injury of any mill lawfully existing either above or below it on the same stream, or to the injury of any mill site on the same stream on which a mill or milldam shall have been lawfully erected and used, unless the right to maintain a mill on such last-mentioned site shall have been lost or defeated by abandonment or otherwise." It was held that this act did not contemplate a literal loss of the right to use such mill site, but only such a neglect on the part of the owner as showed that he did not again intend improving it for milling purposes. The court said: "The difficulty in the case seems to be in ascertaining in what sense orders of said board are void, for the reason that the provisions of said sections of the statute are in conflict with § 19, art. 1, of the Constitution of Ohio. On the 5th day of August, 1909, a temporary injunction was allowed, and an undertaking was filed and approved. On the 30th day of September, 1909, the answer of all the defendants below was filed. On the 18th day of October, 1909, plaintiff below filed his motion to reform said answer, which motion was overruled by the court of common pleas, on the 22d of November, 1909. On the 30th day of April, 1910, the cause was heard on the petition, answer, and evidence, and that court thereupon found and decreed for the defendants. The plaintiff, having filed his appeal bond on the 6th day of May, 1910, perfected his appeal to the circuit court of Logan county. The plaintiff, at the October term of the circuit court, 1910, on leave, withdrew his said motion to reform the answer, and filed his motion for judgment on the pleadings; that the proceedings and orders alleged in the plaintiff's petition are void, and that the temporary injunction theretofore allowed be made perpetual, and for costs; on consideration whereof the circuit court overruled the same, and, the plaintiff not desiring to offer any evidence, said cause was submitted to the court on said petition and answer, and on consideration the circuit court found and decreed for the defendants, dissolved said injunction, and dismissed said petition, and gave judg-the legislature intended to be understood by the language used. If we construe it literally, it is difficult to see how a person who owns a mill site could in any case lose the right to maintain a mill on it by abandonment or otherwise. A mill site comprehends not only the site of the mill building, but also the water power connected therewith for milling purposes. Now, inasmuch as a party has absolute dominion over his own property, subject only to the right of eminent domain on the part of the government, in what sense can it be said that, by abandonment or otherwise, he can lose the right to maintain a mill upon a mill site that he owns? If the right is lost, where has it gone? If another has acquired it, by prescription or otherwise, that person is now the owner, and these proceedings should be brought against him, when the same question would arise. . . . This statute unmistakably shows a desire and intention on the part of the legislature, that all the water power of the state shall be improved by somebody for milling purposes. A preference is shown for the owner, and if it appears in a given case that a mill or mill dam has been erected and used upon a mill site, it shall be deemed to be sufficient assurance that it will be improved again by the owner for milling purposes, and the mill site shall be exempt 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ment against the plaintiff for costs. The plaintiff in error has filed his petition in error in this court to reverse the judgments of the circuit court and court of common pleas.

Mr. James Kernan, for plaintiff in error:

The provision of the statutes authorizing the board to appropriate, take, and destroy this private property, "without bargain or compensation," is void.

Smith v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 25 Ohio St. 91; Norton v. McLeary, 8 Ohio St. 209; Reckner v. Warner, 22 Ohio St. 275.

Mr. Ernest Thompson, for defendants in error:

The private rights in easements which no longer serve the purpose for which said easement was originally created, are not paramount, but are subservient to the "public health, convenience, and welfare."

Sessions v. Crunkilton, 20 Ohio St. 349; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 916, 919; People ex rel. New York Electric Lines Co. v. Squire, 107 N. Y. 503, 14 N. E. 820, affirmed in 145 U. S. 175, 36 L. ed. 666, 12 Sup. Ct. Rep. 880; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53; Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. ed. 980; Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 268, 10 L.R.A. 178, 19 Am. St. Rep. 490, 25 N. E. 480; Arnold v. Yanders, 56 Ohio St. 417, 60 Am. St. Rep. 753, 47 N. E. 50; Marmet v. State, 45 Ohio St. 63, 12 N. E. 463; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 133, 38

from the operation of the statute, unless it appears that, by long-continued nonuser, all intention so to improve it at any time has been abandoned, when all right on the part of the owner so to improve it, in preference to other proprietors on the stream, shall be deemed to be lost or defeated by abandonment or otherwise. It shall be preserved to him, and he shall have the right to maintain a mill on the site in preference to others, so long as there is any reasonable expectation that the object that the statute has in view will be carried out by the owner; but when that ceases to exist, his preferred right to maintain a mill on the site becomes lost or defeated by abandonment or otherwise. It may be said that, in the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the law appropriates all mill sites to public use, but leaves the privilege of carrying out the object of the statute in each particular case to the owner and other proprietors on the stream. To the owner it gives a superior right, and to the other proprietors an inchoate right, to the same mill site. If the owner abandons his privilege, then his superior right is gone, and the case is the same as it would have been if no mill or milldam had ever been erected on the site, and the maxim applies, prior tempore prior jure. No other sensible construction can be given to the statute." J. T. W.

L. ed. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 499; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315, 12 Am. Rep. 694; Boston Beer Co. v. Massachusetts, 97 U. S. 25, 24 L. ed. 989; New Orleans Waterworks Co. v. St. Tammany Waterworks Co. 4 Woods, 134, 14 Fed. 194.

Davis, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Whether or not a proprietor has abandoned his rights or his property is usually a question of fact for the jury to answer, and the answer must depend primarily upon an intention by the proprietor to abandon. This must be found from all the facts and circumstances of the case. But mere non-user is not ordinarily sufficient to establish the fact of abandonment; and both reason and authority suggest a doubt whether non-user for a period of statutory limitation, as in this case five years, would be proof of abandonment, unless accompanied by a possession adverse to the proprietor. In this case, however, we may put aside consideration of the sufficiency of the findings by the county commissioners, and we may even waive all questions concerning the authority of the general assembly to declare property or rights to be abandoned upon such findings, because the case may be readily resolved upon another objection to the statute under which these proceedings were had.

The parenthetic provision of the statute which controls this case was inserted by amendment, in an act passed April 11, 1884 (81 O. L. 135), and is as follows: "(But in any case where a mill has become useless or has been destroyed, and has so remained for more than ten years, without any attempt to repair or rebuild the same, the milldam and water rights and privileges belonging to the same shall be deemed abandoned, and the right thereto, as against the public health, convenience, and welfare, under this act, shall cease and be barred; and the commissioners may, under this act, without bargain or compensation, cause such milldam to be removed, and the water course upon which it is located cleaned out and improved, when an apportionment has been made, as hereinbefore stated.)"

By an act passed March 23, 1893 (90 O. L. 123), the period of limitation in the provision above quoted was changed from ten to five years; and so it has remained.

If it be conceded that "such milldam"—that is, a milldam existing under the conditions stated in this amendment—may be seized and destroyed by the county commissioners for the public welfare, yet it is apparent that, so long as any value, however small, remains in the milldam and water rights, the taking of it, "without bargain or compensation," is a violation of article 1, § 19, of the Constitution of Ohio.

The argument is made that the Constitution emanated from the people, and that the welfare of the people is paramount to any private interest. Very true, but written Constitutions have heretofore been framed chiefly to protect the weak from the strong, and to secure to all the people "equal protection and benefit." They have been constructed upon the theory that majorities can and will take care of themselves; but that the safety and happiness of individuals and minorities need to be secured by guaranties and limitations in the social compact, called a "Constitution." Hence, while it is declared in article 1, § 19, of our Constitution, that private property shall be held "subservient to the public welfare," it is also declared that it shall ever be held inviolate, and shall not be taken for the public use without compensation, in most cases compensation first to be made in money.

It is regrettable that there should be an apparent necessity for restating such familiar principles; but there seems to be a growing disposition to legislate, by ordinance and by general statute, regardless of constitutional limitations, thus imposing upon the courts the odium of declaring them to be unconstitutional.

A further contention is made that the plaintiff in error has lost all of his property rights, "as against the public health, convenience, and welfare," because of nonuser and failure to repair for more than five years, when the amendment to Revised Statutes, § 4567c, declares that in such case "the milldam and water rights and privileges belonging to the same shall be deemed abandoned, and the right thereto as against the public health, convenience, and welfare, under this act, shall cease and be barred." Waiving, as we did at the outset, any question as to the legislative power to so declare, and granting the contention to be true as a general proposition, it seems to us that there are at least two answers to it in the present case.

This is not a prosecution for nuisance, nor a proceeding to abate a nuisance. It is a proceeding under §§ 4567a, 4567b, and 4567c of the Revised Statutes for the improvement of a living stream by the removal of a milldam alleged to hinder the free passage of water in the natural channel of such stream. In § 4567c, excepting, of course, the amendment in parentheses, which is now under review, the legislature recognized the constitutional right of the owner to compensation and damages. The removal of a dam under this act is called an improvement for the public welfare. It is declared that "if they [the commissioners] find that such improvement and removal . . . will be conducive to the public health, convenience, or welfare, they shall report their findings in writing and order the auditor to enter the same on the journal, and they shall at once proceed to negotiate with the owner or owners for the purchase of such milldam or milldams, of all rights, title, and interest they may have to or in the same," etc. Elsewhere in the same section provision is made for ascertaining and apportioning compensation and damages upon failure to agree with the owner or owners, or upon objections by the petitioners.

Then follows this amendment, which attempts to foreclose inquiry into the fact of abandonment, and declares that upon the mere nonuser and failure to repair for more than five years, "the same shall be deemed abandoned," and the commissioners are authorized to proceed, "without bargain or compensation," to remove the dam and to clean out and improve the water course.

There can be no doubt that the dam and water rights belonging to the plaintiff in error could have been removed in the improvement of the living stream for the public welfare, just as in the other cases provided for in these sections, because all private property in held "subservient to the public welfare," whether it has been abandoned or not; but "private property shall ever be held inviolate" (Const. art. 1, § 19), and when the owner is compelled to yield his rights to public use, he is guaranteed compensation. Therefore, when the legislature undertook to authorize the commissioners to seize the property of the plaintiff in error, "without bargain or compensation," it went entirely beyond the limitations of the Constitution.

Again, the defendants in error are estopped by their own answer in this case from making this contention. 31 Cyc. 87-90. Answering the plaintiff's petition, they expressly admit the first allegation therein, namely, "that the plaintiff is the owner of the milldam and water rights sought by the proceedings and orders mentioned and referred to in his petition to be destroyed," etc. If he is still the owner of the dam and water rights, he has not lost them. If the property is of any value whatever, whether a mill or a million, he is entitled to compensation under the Constitution. Therefore the amendment of Revised Statutes, § 4567c, in parentheses, passed April 11, 1884 (81 O. L. 135), and itself amended March 23, 1893 (90 O. L. 123), is null and void, because it is in conflict with article 1, § 19, of the Constitution.

The judgment of the Circuit Court and the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

are reversed, and injunction made perpetual, as prayed in plaintiff's petition.

Spear, Ch. J., and Shauck, Price, Johnson, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT.

EXCHANGE BANK OF WEWOKA et al,
Plffs. in Err.,
v.
SAMUEL BAILEY.

(29 Okla. 246, 116 Pac. 812.)

Receiver — mismanaged corporation — rights of minority.

1. Where the property of a corporation is being mismanaged, or is in danger of being lost to the stockholders and creditors through mismanagement, collusion, or fraud of its officers and directors, a court of Headnotes by HAYES, J.

Note. — Inherent jurisdiction of equity, independently of statute, at the instance of stockholder, to appoint a receiver or wind up a corporation because of mismanagement or fraud of its officers.

I. General rule, 1032.

II. Where fraud or mismanagement is charged.

a. Dissolution of corporation, 1034.

b. Appointment of receiver.

1. In general, 1038.

2. Receiver pendente lite, 1041.

III. Where corporation is no longer a going concern, 1043.

IV. Where purpose of organization is impossible of attainment, 1044.

I. General rule.

The general rule has been asserted that corporations are the creatures of the state, hence, in general, their life depends upon the action of the state or the stockholders as a whole; and especially if a going concern whose charter or franchise has not yet expired, they cannot, in the absence of statute, be dissolved at the instance of a stockholder by an action in equity for that purpose, and therefore equity is without jurisdiction of a suit by a stockholder, the principal purpose of which is to wind up the affairs of the corporation or to have a receiver appointed with that end in view. (As appears in the next subdivision some of the jurisdictions make an exception in case of fraud or mismanagement, and other exceptions also are subsequently noted.)

Fed.—Republican Mountain Silver Mines v. Brown, 24 L.R.A. 776, 7 C. C. A. 412; 19 U. S. App. 203, 58 Fed. 644; Taylor v. Decatur Mineral & Land Co. 112 Fed. 449, Affirmed in 52 C. C. A. 686, 115 Fed. 1022; equity has inherent power to appoint a receiver for the property of such corporation, and to require the officers to make an accounting, upon petition of a minority stockholder therefor.

Corporation — suit by stockholder — request for action.

2. Where the officers, of whose mismanagement and misconduct of plaintiff stockholder complains, are in control of the corporation, both by being the officers thereof and the holders of a majority of the stock, it is not necessary for a complaining stockholder to show as a condition necessary to maintain his suit, that he first made demand on said officers to proceed on behalf of the corporation to remedy the wrongs complained of.

(July 11, 1911.)

Conklin v. United States Shipbuilding Co. 140 Fed. 219; Pearce v. Sutherland, 90 C. C. A. 519, 164 Fed. 609; Re Electric Supply Co. 175 Fed. 612; Lyon v. McKeefrey, 96 C. C. A. 340, 171 Fed. 384; Hardon v. Newton, 14 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 6, 054.

Cal.—Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am. Dec. 508, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 80; State Invest. & Ins. Co. v. Superior Court, 101 Cal. 135, 35 Pac. 549; Davis v. Randall, 117 Cal. 12, 48 Pac. 906.

Colo.—People ex rel. Daniels v. District Ct. 33 Colo. 293, 80 Pac. 908.

Ga.—Croft v. Lumpkin Chestattee Min. Co. 61 Ga. 465.

Ill.—Wheeler v. Pullman Iron & Steel Co. 143 Ill. 197, 17 L.R.A. 818, 32 N. E. 420; People v. Weigley, 155 Ill. 491, 40 N. E. 300; Coquard v. National Linseed Oil Co. 171 Ill. 480, 49 N. E. 563; Bixler v. Sumnerfield, 195 Ill. 147, 62 N. E. 849.

Ind.—Wayne Pike Co. v. Hammons, 129 Ind. 368, 27 N. E. 487; Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. v. Baker, 134 Ind. 293, 20 L.R.A. 210, 33 N. E. 1128.

Iowa.—French v. Gifford, 30 Iowa, 148; Wallace v. Pierce-Wallace Pub. Co. 101 Iowa, 313, 38 L.R.A. 122, 63 Am. St. Rep. 389, 70 N. W. 216; Stewart v. Pierce, 116 Iowa, 751, 89 N. W. 234.

Kan.—Feesas v. Mechanics' State Bank, 84 Kan. 828, —L.R.A. (N.S.) —, 115 Pac. 563.

Ky.—Oldham v. Mt. Sterling Improv. Co. 103 Ky. 529, 45 S. W. 779; Com. v. Richardson, 29 Ky. L. Rep. 622, 94 S. W. 639.

La.—Baker v. Louisiana Portable R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 754.

Me.—Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40.

Md.—Mason v. Supreme Court, E. L. 77 Md. 483, 39 Am. St. Rep. 433, 27 Atl. 171; Barton v. International Fraternal Alliance, 85 Md. 14, 36 Atl. 658.

Mo.—State ex rel. Donnell v. Foster, 225 Mo. 171, 125 S. W. 184.

Mont.—State ex rel. Independent Dist. Teleg. Co. v. Second Judicial Dist. Ct. 15 Mont. 324, 27 L.R.A. 392, 48 Am. St. Rep. 682, 39 Pac. 316.

Neb.—Vila v. Grand Island Electric 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ERROR to the District Court for Semi-nole County to review a judgment in plaintiff's favor, and an order granting a new trial and refusing to vacate and set aside the same, in a suit for the dissolution of a corporation and for the appointment of a receiver. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Aubrey M. Fowler, for plaintiffs in error:

Unless power has been expressly conferred by statute upon courts of equity, such courts have no jurisdiction to dissolve a corporation and decree the winding up of its affairs at the suit of a stockholder.

O'Connor v. Knoxville Hotel Co. 93 Tenn. 708, 28 S. W. 308; People ex rel. Daniels

Light Ice & Cold Storage Co. 68 Neb. 222, 63 L.R.A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 94 N. W. 136, 97 N. W. 613, 4 Ann. Cas. 59.

N. J.—Benedict v. Columbus Constr. Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 23, 23 Atl. 485.

N. Y.—Denike v. New York & R. Lime & Cement Co. 80 N. Y. 590; Abbott v. American Hard Rubber Co. 33 Barb. 578; Latimer v. Eddy, 46 Barb. 61; Gilman v. Green Point Sugar Co. 61 Barb. 9; Magee v. Genesee Academy, 17 N. Y. S. R. 221, 1 N. Y. Supp. 709; Ramsey v. Erie R. Co. 7 Abb. Pr. N. S. 156; Bliven v. Peru Steel & I. Co. 60 How. Pr. 280; Verplanck v. Mercantile Ins. Co. 1 Edw. Ch. 84.

Ohio.—Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Duckworth, 2 Ohio C. C. 518, 1 Ohio C. D. 618; Robison v. Cleveland City R. Co. 7 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 312; Cronin v. Potters' Co-op. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint. 748, 29 Ohio L. J. 52; North Fairmount Bldg. & Sav. Co. v. Rehn, 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 594.

Or.—Wills v. Nehalem Coal Co. 52 Or. 70, 96 Pac. 528.

Tenn.—State v. Merchants' Ins. & T. Co. 8 Humph. 235.

Tex.—People's Invest. Co. v. Crawford, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 738.

Wis.—Strong v. McCagg, 55 Wis. 624, 13 N. W. 895; Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64, 53 N. W. 21.

A court of chancery by virtue of its general equity powers, in the absence of express statutory authority, is not authorized to dissolve a corporation, or distribute the assets of a corporation pursuing its ordinary business, so as to effect a practical dissolution of the corporation. Hardon v. Newton, 14 Blatchf. 376, Fed. Cas. No. 6,054.

The reason for denying equity jurisdiction to wind up the affairs of a corporation has been stated thus: "A corporation owes its life to the sovereign power, and under what circumstances it shall forfeit or be deprived of that life depends upon the same power. A corporation may be dissolved by forfeiture through abuse or neglect of its franchises; but such forfeiture, unless there be special provisions by statute, can only be enforced by the sovereign in some proceeding instituted in its

v. District Ct. 33 Colo. 293, 80 Pac. 908; People's Invest. Co. v. Crawford, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 738; Smith, Receiverships § 342; Baker v. Backus, 32 Ill. 79; Oldham v. Mt. Sterling Improv. Co. 103 Ky. 529, 45 S. W. 779; Philadelphia & M. R. Co.'s Petition, 187 Pa. 123, 40 Atl. 967; State v. Merchants' Ins. & Trust Co. 8 Humph. 235; Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64, 53 N. W. 21; Strong v. McCagg, 55 Wis. 624, 13 N. W. 895; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. State, 81 Tex. 573, 17 S. W. 67; Denike v. New York & R. Lime & Cement Co. 80 N. Y. 599; Utah, N. & C. R. Co. v. Utah & C. R. Co. 110 Fed. 879; Worth Mfg. Co. v. Bingham, 54 C. C. A. 119, 116 Fed. 785; 2 Cook, Corp. 1768, § 629; Com. v. Richardson, 29

Ky. L. Rep. 622, 94 S. W. 639; Heap v. Heap Mfg. Co. 97 Mich. 147, 56 N. W. 349; Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40; Decker v. Gardner, 124 N. Y. 334, 11 L.R.A. 480, 26 N. E. 814; Wheeler v. Pullman Iron & Steel Co. 143 Ill. 197, 17 L.R.A. 818, 32 N. E. 420; Coquard v. National Linseed Oil Co. 171 Ill. 480, 49 N. E. 563; People ex rel. Port Huron & G. R. Co. v. Circuit Judge, 31 Mich. 456; Baker v. Louisiana Portable R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 754; French v. Gifford, 30 Iowa, 148; Supreme Sitting, O. I. H. v. Baker, 134 Ind. 293, 20 L.R.A. 210, 33 N. E. 1122.

Equity has no jurisdiction in accounting, because the demands as alleged in the bill were not disputed, being evidenced by behalf." Denike v. New York & R. Lime & Cement Co. 80 N. Y. 599.

On this point, in Robertson v. Bullions, 11 N. Y. 243, the court reasoned; "If it be admitted that a court of equity has power, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over every species of trust, to interfere at the instance of a corporator, in cases of gross violation of duty by the managing officers of a civil corporation, which is at least doubtful, the question still remains, How may this jurisdiction be exercised? Does it extend to the removal of the officers of the corporation? It is difficult to conceive from what source the court, independent of legislative enactment, could derive such a power. This class of officers receive their authority directly from the sovereignty of the state. The statute prescribes their qualifications, the mode of their election, and the tenure of their officers. What power has the court of chancery, or any other court, to set aside the statute, to impose conditions to the holding of the office which the statute does not impose? There is a wide difference between this description of officers and mere private trustees, whose powers rest solely upon individual contract. There, if the conditions of the contract be violated, the office is rightfully forfeited; and the court may enforce this forfeiture at the instance of the party aggrieved. But the powers of corporate officers have a source above that of mere private contract, over which the court of chancery has no paramount authority. No such power was ever asserted or claimed by the English court of chancery."

II. Where fraud or mismanagement is charged.

a. Dissolution of corporation.

In some of the foregoing cases, equity jurisdiction to dissolve a corporation at the instance of the stockholder was denied, although fraud or mismanagement of the affairs of the corporation by its officers was charged. The question whether such charge constituted an exception to the general rule 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was not, however, specifically considered, the general rule being asserted and applied without discussing this point. But even where the question has been squarely raised, in many jurisdictions it has been denied that fraud or mismanagement of the corporate property by its officers affords any ground for equity jurisdiction to dissolve the corporation in a suit by a stockholder. Chandler Mortg. Co. v. Loring, 113 Ill. App. 423; French v. Gifford, 30 Iowa, 148; Wallace v. Pierce-Wallace Pub. Co. 101 Iowa, 313, 38 L.R.A. 122, 63 Am. St. Rep. 389, 70 N. W. 216; Mason v. Supreme Court, E. L. 77 Md. 485, 39 Am. St. Rep. 433, 27 Atl. 171; Barton v. International Fraternal Alliance, 85 Md. 14, 36 Atl. 658; State ex rel. Donnell v. Foster, 225 Mo. 171, 125 S. W. 184; Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co. 68 Neb. 232, 63 L.R.A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 94 N. W. 136, 97 N. W. 613, 4 Ann. Cas. 59; People's Invest. Co. v. Crawford, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 738.

Thus, it has been asserted that the infidelity or misconduct of some or even of all of the trustees or managers of a corporation affords no ground for taking away the rights of shareholders who constitute the company, either by dissolving it or taking away its management and placing it in the hands of an officer of the court. In such a case, the principles of remedial or preventive justice go no farther than to enjoin or forbid the misconduct, or remove the unfaithful officer. A court may enjoin the trustee or suspend or remove him, and if necessary may order a new election, but cannot substitute its own officer. Waterbury v. Merchants' Union Exp. Co. 50 Barb. 157; Belmont v. Erie R. Co. 52 Barb. 637.

And the rule has been stated that, in the absence of statutes enlarging the powers, the general rule is that a court possessed with chancery powers merely has no jurisdiction, at the suit of a stockholder, to dissolve a corporation and decree its winding up for the misuser or nonuser of its franchise, or for any other cause. Wills v. Nehalem Coal Co. 52 Or. 70, 96 Pac. 528.

note and overdraft, definite and certain; and the only thing the corporation could recover in this action, or anyone for it, was a money judgment.

Gaines v. Miller, 111 U. S. 305, 28 L. ed. 466, 4 Sup. Ct. Rep. 426; Bolt v. Gray, 54 S. C. 95, 32 S. E. 148; Boyce v. Allen, 105 Iowa, 249, 74 N. W. 948; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 3d ed. § 178; Shields v. Barrow, 17 How. 130, 15 L. ed. 158; Schwalber v. Ehlman, 62 N. J. Eq. 314, 49 Atl. 1085; Norden v. Buck, 79 Minn. 352, 82 N. W. 644; Galusha v. Wendt, 114 Iowa, 597, 87 N. W. 512; Kuhl v. Pierce County, 44 Neb. 584, 62 N. W. 1066; Whitney v. Fairbanks, 54 Fed. 985; Paton v. Majors, 46 Fed. 210; Buzard v. Houston, 119 U. S. 347, 30 L. ed. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 249; Security Sav.

& L. Asso. v. Buchanan, 14 C. C. A. 97, 31 U. S. App. 244, 66 Fed. 799; Merrill v. Lake, 16 Ohio, 377, 47 Am. Dec. 377; Jewett v. Bowman, 29 N. J. Eq. 174; Badger v. McNamara, 123 Mass. 117; Passyunk Bldg. Asso's Appeal, 83 Pa. 441; Norwich & W. R. Co. v. Storey, 17 Conn. 370; Long v. Cochran, 9 Phila. 287; Santacruz v. Santacruz, 44 Miss. 720; Youngblood v. Youngblood, 54 Ala. 486; Huff v. Ripley, 58 Ga. 11; Suter v. Matthews, 115 Mass. 253.

The evidence of complainant upon the hearing is much weaker than the averments in his bill, and the evidence nowhere, and in no manner, supports, or even hints at, the intimation alleged in the bill; and in no manner empowers the court to grant the

And that, in the absence of a permissive statute, courts of equity have no power to dissolve a going business corporation, and to that end appoint a receiver for the sequestration of the corporate property, even though fraud on the part of the officers of the corporation is alleged. People ex rel. Daniels v. District Court, 33 Colo. 293, 80 Pac. 908.

Compare with Jones v. Pearl Min. Co. 20 Colo. 417, 38 Pac. 700, sustaining a bill in equity on demurrer, although the relief sought was the appointment of a receiver and the dissolution of a corporation on the ground that the directors were guilty of negligence, fraud and mismanagement of the corporate business, as well as ultra vires acts. The court said that the relief sought was general, and any relief might be awarded to which, upon the hearing, the facts showed that the stockholders were entitled, and hence it was unnecessary to consider the particular relief which should be granted.

In the absence of statutes to that effect, a court of equity has no jurisdiction over a corporation for the purpose of restraining their operations or winding up their concerns, and the court, by the appointment of a receiver and the sale of corporate property and a settlement of the affairs of the corporation, cannot accomplish in an indirect way that which it has no power to accomplish directly. Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 145, 76 Am. Dec. 508, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 80.

The general rule has been asserted in Ohio that, unless expressly authorized by statute, equity has no jurisdiction to decree the dissolution of a corporation at the instance of a stockholder thereof. Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. Duckworth, 2 Ohio C. C. 518, 1 Ohio C. D. 618.

And it has been said that this rule applies although the officers of the corporation have wasted and misapplied its funds. Robison v. Cleveland City R. Co. 7 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 312.

Or are managing the affairs of the corporation in their own interests, and especially in the interests of one of them. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Cronin v. Potters' Co-op. Co. 11 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 748, 29 Ohio L. J. 52.

And it has been said that this rule applies although it is alleged that the corporation is insolvent, and the directors have been guilty of mismanagement and fraudulent acts in the performance of their duties as directors. North Fairmount Bldg. & Sav. Co. 8 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 594, 6 Ohio N. P. 185.

And, while conceding that a stockholder is entitled to injunctive relief where he shows that a person holding a majority of the stock of a corporation is director, president, and treasurer of the company, and is wrongfully using its property to the injury of the minority of the stockholders, and to his own advantage, it has been held that such facts do not entitle him to a dissolution of the corporation, in the absence of a statute authorizing equity to grant such relief. Bixler v. Summerfield, 195 Ill. 147, 62 N. E. 849.

On the other hand, in Thoroughgood v. Georgetown Water Co. — Del. Ch. —, 77 Atl. 720, while the general doctrine is recognized that there is no inherent power in a court of equity to appoint receivers of corporations on the ground of insolvency, yet it is asserted that where, as a basis for such interference, gross mismanagement, positive misconduct, or other grounds showing a breach of trust on the part of the officers of the corporation, are alleged or established, courts of equity do, independently of statute, appoint receivers of corporations, and through them take possession of the property of the corporation to administer their affairs, enjoin interference by their officers, collect their assets, convert their property into money, wind up their affairs, and distribute the assets among the creditors and stockholders.

A case passing upon this question, which has caused considerable comment in that it fully sustains the power of a court of equity to appoint a receiver of the corporation at the instance of the stockholder, and even to dissolve the corporation, is Miner v. Belle Isle Ice Co. 93 Mich. 97, 17 L.R.A. 412, relief prayed at the request of complainant, even if he is a shareholder in the corporation.

Moses v. Tompkins, 84 Ala. 613, 4 So. 763; Miller v. Murray, 17 Colo. 408, 30 Pac. 46; Taylor v. Holmes, 127 U. S. 480, 32 L. ed. 179, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1192; Dodge v. Woolsey, 18 How. 331, 15 L. ed. 401; Dunphy v. Traveller Newspaper Asso. 140 Mass. 495, 16 N. E. 426; Allen v. Wilson, 28 Fed. 677; Hawes v. Oakland (Hawes v. Contra Costa Water Co.) 104 U. S. 450, 26 L. ed. 827; Quincy v. Steel, 120 U. S. 241, 30 L. ed. 624, 7 Sup. Ct. Rep. 520; Mellenry v. New York, P. & O. R. Co. 22 Fed. 130; Dimpfell v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 110 U. S. 209, 28 L. ed. 121, 3 Sup. Ct. Rep. 573; Foote v. Cunard Min. Co. 5 Mc-

Crary, 251, 17 Fed. 46; Bill v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 16 Fed. 14; Zieghler v. Lake Street Elev. R. Co. 22 C. C. A. 465, 46 U. S. App. 242, 76 Fed. 662; Watson v. United States Sugar Refinery, 15 C. C. A. 662, 34 U. S. App. 81, 68 Fed. 769; Brewer v. Boston Theatre, 104 Mass. 378; Dillon v. Lee, 110 Iowa, 156, 81 N. W. 245; Robinson v. West Virginia Loan Co. 90 Fed. 770; Higgins v. Lansingh, 154 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 362; Joy v. Ft. Worth Compress Co. 24 Tex. Civ. App. 94, 58 S. W. 173.

Messrs. Crump, Rogers, & Harris for defendant in error.

Hayes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was originally brought by

53 N. W. 218. This case involved flagrantly fraudulent acts on the part of the officers of the corporation, who were the owners of the majority of the stock of the corporation, and who were using the stock of the corporation for their own benefit and to the injury of the minority stockholders. The court admitted the general rule that courts of equity have no power to wind up a corporation in the absence of statutory authority, but said that to this rule there were exceptions, that "when it turns out that the purposes for which a corporation was formed cannot be attained, it is the duty of the company to wind up its affairs; that the ultimate object of every ordinary trading corporation is the pecuniary gain of its stockholders; that it is for this purpose, and no other; that the capital has been advanced; and if circumstances have rendered it impossible to continue to carry out the purpose for which it was formed with profit to its stockholders, it is the duty of its managing agents to wind up its affairs. To continue the business of the company under such circumstances would involve both an unauthorized exercise of the corporate franchises and a breach of the charter contract."

Another case sustaining this doctrine to a limited extent is Fougeray v. Cord, 50 N. J. Eq. 185, 24 Atl. 499, where the facts presented a case of fraud fully as flagrant as that presented in the Michigan case. In this case a receiver was appointed, and an order made distributing among the stockholders that portion of the property of the corporation consisting of real estate sold on land contract. This distribution was treated by the court as a dividend, and it was pointed out that the distribution did not dissolve the corporation, or prevent the officers from continuing with its management aside from this property. The doctrine is here asserted that it is "the peculiar province of this court not only to right wrongs already committed, but to protect property from future injury and waste by withdrawing it from the reach of danger. In the case of a wilful breach of trust, it not only compels the guilty trustee to restore the trust property, but removes it from the possession and control of the custodian who has proved untrustworthy. There is nothing in the character of a trading corporation to prevent the application of this remedy." It is impossible to leave the complainant shareholders property interests in the control of the corporation without leaving it in the control of the defendants, found guilty of fraud. "They have proved themselves wholly untrustworthy, so that, if this were a case of partnership, the court would dissolve it at once and divide the property. The exigency of the case demands the same remedy here, as far as it is necessary to ascertain and give complainant his share. This, as I have already shown, can be done without dissolving the corporation, or seriously interfering with the conduct of its business."

Apparently in recognition of this rule, it has been asserted that unless a corporation is insolvent, or its affairs are being fraudulently mismanaged by its officers in authority, a court of equity ought not, at the instance of a stockholder and in the absence of statutory authority, interfere to appoint a receiver with a view of winding up the affairs of the corporation (Texas Consol. Compress & Mfg. Asso. v. Storrow, 34 C. C. A. 182, 92 Fed. 5).

And that insolvency without fraud, waste, or extravagance is no ground for appointing a receiver for winding up the affairs of a corporation. Worth Mfg. Co. v. Bingham, 54 C. C. A. 119, 116 Fed. 785

The power of equity to wind up the affairs of a corporation is also apparently recognized in Klugh v. Coronaca Mill Co. 60 S. C. 100, 44 S. E. 566, holding that a complaint by a stockholder seeking this relief is defective unless it charges the officers either with fraudulent or ultra vires acts relative to the corporate property, or with negligence in the management of the affairs of the corporation. Approved in Brookshire v. Farmers' Alliance Exch. 73 S. C. 131, 52 S. E. 867.

In Cantwell v. Columbia Lead Co. 199 Mo. 1, 97 S. W. 167, sustaining the power of equity to appoint a receiver for a corporation at the instance of a stockholder, on defendant in error, suing on behalf of himself and for the benefit of the Exchange Bank of Wewoka, Indiana Territory, a corporation, against plaintiffs in error as defendants. After answer was filed by defendants, the cause was referred to the master in chancery to take evidence and report his findings of fact and conclusions of law thereon. The evidence was taken before the master on June 26, 1906; but it does not appear that any report on the facts or conclusions of law was made before the admission of the state into the Union. After admission of the state into the Union, the cause was transferred to the district court of Seminole county, under the provisions of the enabling act and the Schedule to the Constitution. Thereafter, on the 5th day of March, 1908, it stipulated by the parties to the action that the evidence taken in the cause before the master in chancery should be submitted to the court in which the cause was then pending, the same as if taken before that court; and that the court should hear and dispose of said cause upon said evidence. Thereupon plaintiffs in error filed their demurrer to the evidence, and the court, upon hearing the same, sustained it and dismissed the cause, upon the ground that the court was without jurisdiction. Thereafter, upon plaintiff's motion, a new trial was granted. Subsequently a motion was made by defendants to vacate and set aside the order granting a new trial. It is from these orders granting a new trial and refusing the ground of fraud in the management of the affairs of the corporation, it is admitted that courts have hesitated to lift the affairs and assets of the corporation out of the hands of its board of directors, and administer them through receivers, but it is said that "this court has never denied power in a chancellor to prevent a scheme of irreparable injury and wrong, merely because the movers in that scheme speak and act in a corporate capacity rather than in an individual capacity. That solvent corporations are wrecked for purely selfish and illegal purposes, that minority interests are 'frozen out,' that business immorality has run amuck under the assumption that courts are powerless, is too true. But the assumption is wrong. Judicial hesitancy does not mean judicial atrophy or paralysis. The board of directors of a corporation are but trustees of an estate for all the stockholders, and may not only be amenable to the law, personally, for a breach of trust, but their corporate power, under color of office, to effectuate a contemplated wrong, may be taken from them when, by fraud, conspiracy, or covinous conduct, or extreme mismanagement, the rights of minority stockholders are put in imminent peril, and the underlying, original, corporate entente cordiale is unfairly destroyed. It would be a sad commentary on the law, if, when the trustee of a corporate estate is making an improper disposition of it, or has shown improper partiality towards one of its conflicting parties, or has put the estate in a fix it is liable and likely to be either wasted or destroyed, or mercilessly taken from all and given to a part, a court could not reach out its arm and preserve and administer the estate."

While the preceding case is not overruled in State ex rel. Donnell v. Foster, 225 Mo. 171, 125 S. W. 184, it is pointed out that, while the petitioner therein did pray for the dissolution of the corporation, nevertheless the only question presented on appeal was the validity of an order refusing to revoke the appointment of a receiver, and it is said that no conclusion was announced in the case except that the court had jurisdiction.

to appoint a receiver, and the case did not involve the power of the court of equity to dissolve a corporation. In the Foster Case the court adheres to the general rule that equity has no power at the suit of a stockholder to dissolve a corporation, unless expressly authorized in that regard, although fraud and mismanagement by the officers of the corporation are alleged. It is not entirely clear whether the receiver, appointed in Cantwell v. Columbia Lead Co. was merely for the purpose of preserving the property of the corporation pending a trial of the charges of fraudulent management, or whether the receiver was appointed with a view to dissolution of the corporation, since relief of the latter character was specifically asked.

In Ponca Mill Co. v. Mikesell, 55 Neb. 98, 75 N. W. 46, being a proceeding to establish and foreclose a lien upon corporate property at the instance of a stockholder, and to appoint a receiver of the corporation on the ground of fraudulent management by the officers, the doctrine is asserted that where the property of a corporation is being mismanaged, and is in danger of being lost through the collusion and fraud of the officers, especially where they are using it for their individual ends to the detriment of the stockholders, a receiver will be appointed; and it is said that when it clearly appears that the officers or a majority of the stockholders of a corporation are abusing their power by misappropriating the corporate property, by using the corporate means for their individual profit, or by so acting as wilfully and wrongfully to jeopardize the corporate business, then the court should not hesitate to afford relief, since "no one is more helpless unless aided by the arm of the law, than the holder of a small portion of the stock of a corporation, when the large stockholders combine to advance their private interests at the expense of the corporation."

In Vila v. Grand Island Electric Light, Ice & Cold Storage Co. 68 Neb. 232, 63 L.R.A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 94 N. W. 136, 97 N. W. 613, 4 Ann. Cas. 59, it is pointed out that Ponca Mill Co. v. Mike- bank whether the same has been paid or not; that the bank is insolvent; and plaintiff thereupon closes his petition with the following prayer: "Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment, and that it be decreed herein: (1) That a receiver be appointed to take charge of said bank and its entire property, both real and personal, and all other assets, and convert them into money and pay off the depositors. (2) That after the depositors are paid in full, that the just debts owing by the said bank be paid, and that the residue be ratably distributed among the stockholders in accordance with their several rights. (3) That the president and the cashier and the board of directors of said bank be required to make disclosal by production of the books and papers belonging to said bank, and that an accounting of the transactions, profits, and expenses of the operation of the said bank since its organization be taken, and that the profits of said bank, if any, be distributed as justice requires, and that all sums improperly drawn from said bank by the defendant T. G. Cutlip or members of his family be returned to said bank, or charged in the final distribution to the guilty parties. (4) That said moneys due from the president or directors of said bank be paid to the receiver for the benefit of said corporation. (5) That the said corporation be dissolved and its charter revoked, and for such other and further relief as may be just, necessary, and equitable."

The principal contention of defendants a receiver for a corporation at the instance of the stockholders thereof, where the officers of the corporation have been guilty of illegal, fraudulent, and ultra vires acts, is also sustained in DuPuy v. Transportation & Terminal Co. 82 Md. 408, 33 Atl. 889. In reaching this conclusion the court said that if it were powerless to appoint a receiver under such circumstances, not only would the law be open to grave reproach for inefficiency, but serious wrongs would go unredressed, and fraud of a stupendous character would escape and go unrebuked. The purpose of a receiver in this case was to compel an accounting and restoration on the part of the officers of the company. On the general question of equity jurisdiction in such cases, the doctrine is asserted that "a stockholder, though owning but a single share, may invoke and set in motion the plenary and far-reaching powers of a court of equity, to investigate, strike down, and strip of its covering any act of the corporation to which he belongs, when that act is tainted with fraud, or is ultra vires or illegal. This jurisdiction is one of the most salutary and conservative possessed by a court of equity, and neither the adroitness of the imputed fraud, nor the skill that seeks to hide the illegality of the impeached transaction, will thwart the exercise of the court's coercive and remedial authority. Mere internal dissensions among stockholders, or mere differences or disputes as to corporate management, so long as the officers or stockholders do no act that is fraudulent, illegal, or ultra vires, will not warrant the intervention of a court of chancery; because, in the absence of fraud, illegality, or conduct that is ultra vires, the will of the majority is entitled to control the policy and the business of the body corporate."

Even though a corporation is solvent, the appointment of a receiver to take charge and control of the affairs and concerns of the corporation until a recognized board of directors is obtained, faithfully and efficiently to conserve the interests of all the stockholders, is within the proper exercise of the jurisdiction of the chancery court, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

where such course is rendered necessary by the action of contesting boards of directors. Jasper Land Co. v. Wallis, 123 Ala. 652, 26 So. 659.

In Abbot v. American Hard Rubber Co. 33 Barb. 578, without discussing this question, at the suit of a stockholder a receiver pendente lite was appointed to take charge of the property of the corporation, which had been conveyed by the directors in violation of their duties to the stockholders.

It has been said that while the right to wind up a corporation and to decree its dissolution may exist only in the state, nevertheless a court of equity may compel a fraudulent trustee to account, and if, in so doing, it is necessary to the preservation of the property of the corporation for the benefit of the parties lawfully entitled thereto, a receiver may also be appointed. Chandler Mortg. Co. v. Loring, 113 Ill. App. 423.

Courts of equity, if not so authorized by statute, do not exercise jurisdiction to dissolve corporations or distribute their assets, although they may afford a stockholder relief from the malfeasance of those intrusted with the management of the corporate business, and to this end, if such a course is necessary, may appoint a receiver for the corporation. French v. Gifford, 30 Iowa, 148. A receiver was not, however, appointed in this case, the court holding that such a severe remedy was not necessary.

And in Wallace v. Pierce-Wallace Pub. Co. 101 Iowa, 313, 38 L.R.A. 122, 63 Am. St. Rep. 389, 70 N. W. 216, although the general doctrine is conceded to be that, in the absence of express statutory authority, a court of equity is without jurisdiction to dissolve a corporation, wind up its affairs, or sequester its property, it is asserted, however, that there are cases where a receiver will be appointed for the property of a corporation, as where its officers are guilty of the misappropriation of the funds of the corporation.

While the rule prevails in Wisconsin that a stockholder cannot maintain a suit in equity to wind up the affairs of a corporation (Strong v. McCagg, 55 Wis. 624, 13 N.

is that a court of equity, in the absence of statutory authority, has no jurisdiction over corporations for the purpose of decreeing their dissolution and the distribution of the assets of the corporation among the stockholders at the suit of one or more of the stockholders; and that, since one of the reliefs for which plaintiff in this proceeding asks in his prayer is that the corporation be dissolved and its assets distributed among its stockholders, after paying all debts of the corporation, the trial court is without jurisdiction. This contention, in so far as it applies solely to proceedings to dissolve corporations and to wind up their affairs, finds support in § 119, Pomeroy's Eq. Jur., in the following language: "It is well settled, with scarcely a dissenting voice, that in the absence of express statutory authority, a court of equity has no power to dissolve a corporation, or to wind up its affairs and sequester its property." This statement from the text is supported as a general rule of law by almost all the decided cases; but the eminent author states in the same section that "a few exceptions have, however, been admitted to this rule; as, where the corporation had utterly failed of its purpose because of fraudulent mismanagement and misappropriation of its funds by the president and manager, who owned a majority of its stock, a receiver was appointed to wind up its affairs at the suit of a minority stockholder."

Some cases hold that a court of equity

W. 895; Hinckley v. Pfister, 83 Wis. 64, 53 N. W. 21), it is, however, held that where the property of a corporation is being mismanaged, and is in danger of being lost to the stockholders and creditors through the collusion and fraud of its officers and directors, the only place of safety for the business and property of the company is in the hands of the court, through a receiver pendente lite. Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co., 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184.

And in Davis v. United States Electric Power & Light Co. 77 Md. 35, 25 Atl. 982, the power of a court to appoint a receiver for a corporation at the instance of a stockholder is asserted, although it is admitted that the court would have no jurisdiction to dissolve the corporation except as authorized by statute. As to the right to appoint a receiver, it is said that the power is a discretionary one, to be exercised with great circumspection and only in cases where there is fraud, spoliation, or imminent danger of loss of the property if immediate possession is not taken by the court; and these facts must be clearly proved. But where these conditions have been fully met, courts do not hesitate to appoint receivers over the property of corporations, for the benefit of all concerned, during the controversy.

A stockholder of a corporation may have a receiver appointed of a particular fund the proceeds of an unlawful act, although the court will not appoint a receiver to take entire charge of the corporate property, even though fraud on the part of some of the officers of the corporation is alleged. Belmont v. Erie R. Co. 52 Barb. 637; Fisk v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 36 How. Pr. 20.

III. Where corporation is no longer a going concern.

It is within the inherent power of a court of equity to give relief to stockholders of an insolvent corporation, by compelling an equitable distribution of its assets, for any infringement of their equitable rights as members and beneficiaries of the corporation, if the corporation is unable, by reason of the default of its agents, to obtain any adequate remedy within a reasonable time. Porter v. Industrial Information Co. 5 Misc. 262, 26 N. Y. Supp. 328.

Thus, where the officers of a corporation have sold all of its property except book accounts owing to it, and it has transacted no business for some period of time, but they refuse to wind up the affairs of the corporation, and by such conduct they are depriving the complaining stockholder of his share of the corporate estates and correspondingly enriching themselves, a court of equity has power, at the suit of the stockholder, to take jurisdiction to appoint a receiver to perform the functions which such officers have wrongfully and fraudulently refused to perform. Seering v. Black, 140 Wis. 413, 122 N. W. 1055.

So, where, by sale of the property of a corporation, the functions of the corporation have ceased, its managers are bound to account for the money belonging to the corporation, and when they improperly retain the same, equity, at the instance of any stockholder, will decree distribution of same among the various stockholders. Cramer v. Bird, L. R. 6 Eq. 143.

This rule also applies where the corporate property is abandoned, or where there are no persons authorized to take charge of or conduct its affairs, although power to appoint a receiver does not exist in case of an existing corporation equipped with competent officers. Baker v. Louisiana Portable R. Co. 34 La. Ann. 754.

In Noble v. Gadsden Land & Improv. Co. 133 Ala. 250, 91 Am. St. Rep. 27, 31 So. 856, it is conceded that where the corporation is a going concern, minority stockholders cannot maintain a bill to have it dissolved, or to have its assets distributed. It is, however, asserted that where a corporation has been abandoned by stockholders and officers, and is therefore powerless to protect its assets and to discharge its duty to the stockholders, minority stockholders may invoke the jurisdiction of equity to rescue the trust fund from the perils endangering the same, and also to distribute the assets.

may dissolve a corporation, but only under extreme circumstances. It is unnecessary, however, to decide in this case under what circumstances, if any, a court of equity may decree a dissolution of a corporation and wind up its affairs, for, while this is one of the reliefs prayed for by plaintiff's petition, it is not the only relief asked, and the facts alleged clearly, we think, entitle plaintiff to other relief which a court of equity may administer; and if we assume, without deciding, that the trial court was without jurisdiction to dissolve this corporation and to wind up its affairs, there being other relief which it can afford to plaintiff upon the petition, the cause should not be dismissed. It is apparent from plaintiff's prayer that the principal relief he seeks is a dissolution of the corporation and a final settlement of its affairs with its creditors and its stockholders; but his prayer also asks for general relief, in that, in addition to the specific relief prayed for, he prays, in the fifth paragraph of his prayer, for such other and further relief as may seem just, necessary, or equitable; and in addition to the general relief asked, plaintiff prays that defendants Cutlips, the officers of the bank, shall be required to make an accounting and return to the bank all amounts of money that have been improperly drawn from the bank by them; and that the depositors and debts of the corporation be paid; and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the bank and its entire property for these purposes.

"The inherent jurisdiction of a court of equity to appoint receivers of corporations, in proper cases, independently of statutory authorization, has been frequently recognized. The cases in which the power is most frequently invoked are as follows: (1) In suits by stockholders seeking a remedy for breaches of their fiduciary duty by the directors or officers of the corporation. (2) After dissolution, where no means are provided by statute or otherwise for winding up the affairs of the corporation. (3) When the corporation has no properly constituted governing body, or there are such dissensions in its governing body as to make it impossible for the corporation to carry on its business with advantage. (4) In suits by judgment creditors of the corporation. (5) In suits for the foreclosure of mortgages or other liens upon the corporate property." 5 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 116.

Section 3482, Ind. Terr. Statutes, in force in the jurisdiction where this action arose

Although a corporation has not been dissolved in accordance with the provisions of a statute relative thereto, equity will nevertheless take jurisdiction at the instance of a stockholder, to distribute the estates, giving the same relief as though the provisions of the statute had been followed, it appearing that there are no officers of the corporation in existence and no organization maintained. Greenleaf v. Land & Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 505, 60 S. E. 424.

When a corporation has ceased to do business for a long term of years, and has no board of directors that can be approached, or its board of directors are unknown, and all the incorporators are brought before the court, and a third person is trying to make way with all the property of the corporation, equity will assume jurisdiction and grant a recovery of the property in the name of the stockholder bringing the suit, for the use and benefit of the corporation and the shareholders. Tennessee Mountain Petroleum & Min. Co. v. Ayers, — Tenn. —, 43 S. W. 744.

Where there is no person then in being authorized to take charge of and conduct the affairs of the corporation, if those who own a majority of the stock neglect to elect directors to take charge of the property of the corporation, the minority are not to be the sufferers in consequence of such neglect, but the court will appoint a receiver to take charge of the effects of the company and preserve them for the stockholders. Lawrence v. Greenwich F. Ins. Co. 1 Paige, 587.

So, where through the death of the principal manager and the majority owner of the stock of the corporation, the corporation is left without any corporate agency, and the personal representative of such deceased refuses to join in the appointment of some person to act in that regard, the court, at the instance of one of the stockholders, will appoint a receiver. Re Belton, 47 La. Ann. 1614, 30 L.R.A. 648, 18 So. 642.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for, and remove the assignee of, a bank, holding under an assignment of the assets of the bank by its president and cashier without the knowledge of the shareholders, the purpose of the assignment being to divert the assets of the bank. Mitchell v. Bank of St. Paul, 7 Minn. 252, Gil. 192.

IV. Where purpose of organization is impossible of attainment.

IV. Where purpose of organization is impossible of attainment.

Equity has jurisdiction of a proceeding for the dissolution of a nongoing corporation which has utterly failed of the object for which it was formed. Minona Portland Cement Co. v. Reese, 167 Ala. 485, 52 So. 523. And a stockholder may maintain a bill to wind up a corporation where the purpose for which it was organized has become impossible of performance. O'Connor v. Knoxville Hotel Co. 93 Tenn. 708, 28 S. W. 308. Or where it has become impossible to accomplish the charter purposes of the corporation, or when its affairs have been so managed that failure or ruin is inevitable. Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40.

and was begun, provides that "whenever it shall not be forbidden by law, and shall be deemed fair and proper in any case in equity, the court, judge, or chancellor shall appoint some prudent and discreet person as receiver, who shall. . . ."

The foregoing statute constitutes in no way a limitation upon the general powers of a court of equity to appoint receivers. "The power to appoint a receiver is necessarily inherent in a court which possesses equitable jurisdiction. It is exercised when an estate or fund is in existence and there is no competent person entitled to hold it; or the person so entitled is in the nature of a trustee, and is misusing or misapplying the trust; or the property is about to be removed beyond the reach of the court; and generally when it is necessary to secure rights and prevent a failure of justice. The property is thus placed in the hands of an officer of the law in order that it may be under the protecting care and control of the court and be delivered unimpaired to the persons to whom it is legally ascertained to belong." 2 Waterman, Corp. § 356. See also Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 642.

The officers of a corporation in the management and control of its assets are the trustees of the stockholders, and are charged with the faithful management of the corporate property for the accomplishment of the purposes for which the corporation is chartered; and where the corporation is insolvent, as the bank is alleged to be in this case, they are also the trustees of the creditors. It would certainly be a confession of extreme weakness in the power of a court of equity, which is presumed to afford a remedy where no adequate remedy at law can be had, to hold that plaintiff in this case, under the facts, can be afforded no relief in equity; that he must resort to a court of law and have the corporation bring its action against these delinquent officers, who, for the purpose of such suit, are themselves the corporation, and would control every act of the corporation in the prosecution of that suit. How are these officers to be made to repay to the corporation the assets they have withdrawn from it by an action at law, when they must themselves bring that action, and would be practically, so far as the prosecution of such action is concerned, both plaintiffs and defendants? Again, how is plaintiff to know what kind of an action and what relief he is to ask for in a court of law, when he is without access to the books of the corporation, and Since a private corporation entered into solely for the benefit of the shareholders, and involving no public duty, may be dissolved by the stockholders, on the same principle, when the purpose of such association has failed, there is in the chancery court an inherent power to administer the property so as to restore to the stockholders their ultimate interest. Merchants' & Planters' Line v. Waganer, 71 Ala. 581, approved in Noble v. Gadsden Land & Improv. Co. 133 Ala. 250, 91 Am. St. Rep. 27, 31 So. 856.

So, where a private business corporation has failed of the purposes and objects of its creation, a single stockholder may maintain a bill in equity for its dissolution and the distribution of its assets among those entitled thereto. And this without reference to the solvency of the corporation. Ross v. American Banana Co. 150 Ala. 268, 43 So. 817.

So, where a private corporation, although solvent in that it owes no debts, is a failure, and the purposes for which it was organized are impossible of attainment, and it has been abandoned by its officers and its assets are being sacrificed in the payment of taxes and expenses, the minority stockholders may maintain a bill in equity to have the corporate assets sold and the proceeds distributed among the stockholders. Central Land Co. v. Sullivan, 152 Ala. 360, 44 So. 644, 15 Ann. Cas. 420.

The reason for this rule is thus stated in Benedict v. Columbus Constr. Co. 49 N. J. Eq. 23, 23 Atl. 485: "Where it plainly appears that the object for which the company was formed is impossible of attainment, it becomes the duty of the company's agents to put an end to its operations and wind up its affairs, and should they, even though supported by a majority of the shareholders, pursue operations which must eventually be ruinous, any shareholder feeling aggrieved would, upon plain equitable principle, be entitled to the assistance of this court, and a decree should be made compelling the directors to wind up the company's business and distribute the assets among those who are entitled to them, unless they can lawfully be used for other business purposes allowed by the charter. This course is pursued in case of partnerships in similar situation, and, for the reasons there controlling, I perceive no reason why it should not also be pursued in the case of corporations."

The same reason is advanced in Porter v. Industrial Information Co. 5 Misc. 262, 25 N. Y. Supp. 328, holding that whenever it proves impossible to attain the real objects for which a corporation is formed, or when the failure of the company has become inevitable, it is the duty of the company's agents to put an end to its operations and to wind up its affairs; and if the majority should attempt to continue the company's operations in violation of its charter, or should refuse to make a distribution of the assets, any shareholder is entitled to the assistance of the court to compel the distribution of the corporate assets.

A. G. S.

defendant officers conceal from him the facts relative to its management and the condition of its business? To compel the performance of a trust and prevent its abuse is one of the peculiar and valuable powers of a court of equity; and, where the officers of a bank, as in this case, have converted the money and property of the corporation to their own use, until the amount they owe the bank exceeds the total deposits, and when the bank has only approximately $1,000 with which to meet a liability of more than $9,000 to its depositors, if such acts do not constitute fraud, they at least constitute such gross mismanagement, the bank being insolvent, as to justify a court of equity in reaching out its arm and protecting the minority stockholders and the creditors of the bank, by placing the assets of the bank in the hands of a receiver, and requiring an accounting of its officers and restoration of those assets they have withdrawn and appropriated to their own use. This power of a court of equity finds support in numerous cases. Cameron v. Groveland Improv. Co. 20 Wash. 169, 72 Am. St. Rep. 26, 54 Pac. 1128; Davis v. United States Electric Power & Light Co. 77 Md. 35, 25 Atl. 982; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184; Ponca Mill Co. v. Mikesell, 55 Neb. 98, 75 N. W. 46; Edison v. Edison United Phonograph Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 620, 29 Atl. 195; Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 508, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 80; Wayne Pike Co. v. Hammons, 129 Ind. 368, 27 N. E. 487; Merchants' & Planters' Line v. Waganer, 71 Ala. 581.

Nor was it necessary, in order to entitle plaintiff to maintain this action, that he request the defendant officers and directors to prosecute an action to obtain the relief desired, for when the defendant officers are directors of the corporation and own the controlling stock, and are in complete control of the corporation, and are shown to occupy such a relation to the transaction complained of that they would be antagonistic to the prosecution of an action which a complaining shareholder would request, a demand that such officers bring and prosecute the action in the name of the corporation would be useless and is not necessary. Ponca Mill Co. v. Mikesell, 55 Neb. 98, 75 N. W. 46; 10 Cyc. 978.

We do not undertake to anticipate the final judgment in this case by suggesting any provisions that such judgment should contain, in the event judgment is ultimately rendered in favor of the plaintiff. Those are matters to be determined by the trial court after a hearing and examination of the evidence and findings of fact. It is sufficient for the purpose of this proceeding, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that under the facts alleged in the petition, the court has jurisdiction under plaintiff's petition to grant him some relief.

Several propositions are urged by defendants in their brief relative to the facts as established by the evidence in the trial court, in which there is conflict, which they contend show that plaintiff is entitled to no relief in this action. Questions of fact are primarily for the trial court; and the propositions involving the evidence can be presented to the trial court at the new trial. The order of the trial court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

SAN ANTONIO GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MRS. SENOVIA OCON et al.

(— Tex. —, 146 S. W. 162.)

Electricity — defective wiring — liability for injury — gratuitous service.

An electrical company is not liable for the death of one driving in a highway, by his vehicle coming in contact with a wire negligently permitted to sag after being strung across the street by one to whom it has agreed, if such person will place the wires for reception of the current, and connect them with the poles of the electrical company, to furnish current free of charge for a celebration in a park, and the overturning of the seats thereby, if the company has no notice of the defective condition of the wire.

(April 10, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company from a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District, affirming a judgment of the District Court for Bexar Coun-

Note. — Liability of electric company for injury by wire strung by a third person to connect with its system.

Generally, as to liability for injuries by electric wires in highway, see note in 37 L.R.A. 566, and note supplemental thereto in 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1169.

As to duty of electric light company with respect to wires or fixtures in private property, see note in 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, and note supplemental thereto in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816.

The question under annotation, so far as it applies to the liability of one furnishing an electrical current to be distributed by another, is treated in the note to Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ty in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ogden, Brooks, & Napier for appellant.

Messrs. Thad T. Adams and A. F. W. Macmanus for appellees.

Dibrell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by the widow and children of Jacinto Ocon, against the San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, Martin Wright, and the city of San Antonio to recover damages for his death, alleged to have occurred by the joint negligence of said defendants.

It was alleged by plaintiffs that, while Jacinto Ocon was driving a delivery wagon along a public street in the city of San Antonio, the umbrella, attached to the seat of the wagon came in contact with a wire stretched across the street, and thereby the seat on which he was riding was pulled off, and he was thrown to the ground and received injuries from which he died. It was also alleged that the wire was stretched across the street by the defendant Martin Wright, an electrical contractor, for the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, and when completed was turned over to the Gas & Electric Company.

The grounds of negligence set out and relied upon as relating to the wire were that it was improperly insulated, improperly strung on the poles in such a way as to make it a constant danger to the traveling public, and its manner of stringing was, in violation of the ordinances of the city, less than 25 feet above the curbing. Greater particularity in stating plaintiffs' pleadings is not essential to a full understanding of the material issues involved.

The city of San Antonio was dismissed from the suit, upon the ground that a municipal corporation could not be liable for an injury resulting in death. Martin Wright, among other things, pleaded specially the statute of limitations upon which the jury were instructed by the court to find in his favor.

The San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, among other pleas not necessary to mention, pleaded that it was not responsible for the death of Ocon, because the wire mentioned in plaintiffs' petition was neither constructed, owned, nor controlled by it.

The cause having been tried with the assistance of a jury, verdict was rendered for plaintiffs for $5,000, and duly apportioned among those entitled to receive it.

The material facts developed in the case are practically without dispute, and show that in September, 1907, the Mexican people of San Antonio, wishing to celebrate some event of interest to them, appointed a committee to confer with the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company and arrange for lighting San Pedro park, where the celebration was to take place. The committee conferred with the general manager of the Gas & Electric Company, and it was agreed that this company would furnish, free of charge, the electric current for lighting the park, if the committee for the Mexi-

893. A later case on that point, however, is here presented.

In Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co. — W. Va. —, 74 S. E. 993, it was held that the generating company that sells and delivers electricity to a distributing company is under no obligation to see that the distributing company's lines over which the current is carried to consumers are in safe condition; and so a generating company was not liable for death of a boy who took hold of a piece of telephone wire which one of his companions had thrown over a guy wire which was fastened around the electric light pole about 2 inches above span wire supporting an arc light, and which come in contact with it, and which, because of lack of insulation between the span wire and the electric light wire, had become charged with electricity and so charged the piece of telephone wire. This case cites and follows as authority, Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788.

ANTONIO GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. OCON is in accord with the view taken in Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co., that the vendor company has not the duty of inspecting the wires of the purchasing company. But it 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

will be noted that it was said in the first case that it was not decided that the Gas & Electric Company would not have had the duty to see that the dangerous condition was removed if it had had actual knowledge of the defective condition of the wire.

And in Lewis v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. 135 Ky. 611, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1169, 197 S. W. 278, in reversing a judgment in defendant's favor, it was held that the vendor of electricity which turns a powerful current onto private wires strung along the highway is bound to inspect them from time to time to see that they are securely fastened and properly insulated, although they do not belong to it. In this case the vendor, of a corporation furnishing electricity in a certain city, furnished the electric power for a private electric light line extending beyond the limits of such city to supply some suburban residents with lights for their dwellings, and one of the wires had parted and sagged to within 6 or 7 feet of the sidewalk, and a pedestrian taking hold of the same was killed.

Other cases in point upon the question under annotation will be found in the note to Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893.

J. H. B.

may dissolve a corporation, but only under extreme circumstances. It is unnecessary, however, to decide in this case under what circumstances, if any, a court of equity may decree a dissolution of a corporation and wind up its affairs, for, while this is one of the reliefs prayed for by plaintiff's petition, it is not the only relief asked, and the facts alleged clearly, we think, entitle plaintiff to other relief which a court of equity may administer; and if we assume, without deciding, that the trial court was without jurisdiction to dissolve this corporation and to wind up its affairs, there being other relief which it can afford to plaintiff upon the petition, the cause should not be dismissed. It is apparent from plaintiff's prayer that the principal relief he seeks is a dissolution of the corporation and a final settlement of its affairs with its creditors and its stockholders; but his prayer also asks for general relief, in that, in addition to the specific relief prayed for, he prays, in the fifth paragraph of his prayer, for 'such other and further relief as may seem just, necessary, or equitable; and in addition to the general relief asked, plaintiff prays that defendants Cutlips, the officers of the bank, shall be required to make an accounting and return to the bank all amounts of money that have been improperly drawn from the bank by them; and that the depositors and debts of the corporation be paid; and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the bank and its entire property for these purposes.

"The inherent jurisdiction of a court of equity to appoint receivers of corporations, in proper cases, independently of statutory authorization, has been frequently recognized. The cases in which the power is most frequently invoked are as follows: (1) In suits by stockholders seeking a remedy for breaches of their fiduciary duty by the directors or officers of the corporation. (2) After dissolution, where no means are provided by statute or otherwise for winding up the affairs of the corporation. (3) When the corporation has no properly constituted governing body, or there are such dissensions in its governing body as to make it impossible for the corporation to carry on its business with advantage. (4) In suits by judgment creditors of the corporation. (5) In suits for the foreclosure of mortgages or other liens upon the corporate property." 5 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 116.

Section 3482, Ind. Terr. Statutes, in force in the jurisdiction where this action arose

Although a corporation has not been dissolved in accordance with the provisions of a statute relative thereto, equity will nevertheless take jurisdiction at the instance of a stockholder, to distribute the estates, giving the same relief as though the provisions of the statute had been followed, it appearing that there are no officers of the corporation in existence and no organization maintained. Greenleaf v. Land & Lumber Co. 146 N. C. 505, 60 S. E. 424.

When a corporation has ceased to do business for a long term of years, and has no board of directors that can be approached, or its board of directors are unknown, and all the incorporators are brought before the court, and a third person is trying to make way with all the property of the corporation, equity will assume jurisdiction and grant a recovery of the property in the name of the stockholder bringing the suit, for the use and benefit of the corporation and the shareholders. Tennessee Mountain Petroleum & Min. Co. v. Ayers, — Tenn. —, 43 S. W. 744.

Where there is no person then in being authorized to take charge of and conduct the affairs of the corporation, if those who own a majority of the stock neglect to elect directors to take charge of the property of the corporation, the minority are not to be the sufferers in consequence of such neglect, but the court will appoint a receiver to take charge of the effects of the company and preserve them for the stockholders. Lawrence v. Greenwich F. Ins. Co. 1 Paige, 587.

So, where through the death of the principal manager and the majority owner of the stock of the corporation, the corporation is left without any corporate agency, and the personal representative of such deceased refuses to join in the appointment of some person to act in that regard, the court, at the instance of one of the stockholders, will appoint a receiver. Re Belton, 47 La. Ann. 1614, 30 L.R.A. 648, 18 So. 642.

A court of equity has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for, and remove the assignee of, a bank, holding under an assignment of the assets of the bank by its president and cashier without the knowledge of the shareholders, the purpose of the assignment being to divert the assets of the bank. Mitchell v. Bank of St. Paul, 7 Minn. 252, Gil. 192.

IV. Where purpose of organization is impossible of attainment.

Equity has jurisdiction of a proceeding for the dissolution of a nongoing corporation which has utterly failed of the object for which it was formed. Minona Portland Cement Co. v. Reese, 167 Ala. 485, 52 So. 523. And a stockholder may maintain a bill to wind up a corporation where the purpose for which it was organized has become impossible of performance. O'Connor v. Knoxville Hotel Co. 93 Tenn. 708, 28 S. W. 308. Or where it has become impossible to accomplish the charter purposes of the corporation, or when its affairs have been so managed that failure or ruin is inevitable. Ulmer v. Maine Real Estate Co. 93 Me. 324, 45 Atl. 40.

ty in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ogden, Brooks, & Napier for appellant.

Messrs. Thad T. Adams and A. F. W. Macmanus for appellees.

Dibrell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by the widow and children of Jacinto Ocon, against the San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, Martin Wright, and the city of San Antonio to recover damages for his death, alleged to have occurred by the joint negligence of said defendants.

It was alleged by plaintiffs that, while Jacinto Ocon was driving a delivery wagon along a public street in the city of San Antonio, the umbrella, attached to the seat of the wagon came in contact with a wire stretched across the street, and thereby the seat on which he was riding was pulled off, and he was thrown to the ground and received injuries from which he died. It was also alleged that the wire was stretched across the street by the defendant Martin Wright, an electrical contractor, for the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, and when completed was turned over to the Gas & Electric Company.

The grounds of negligence set out and relied upon as relating to the wire were that it was improperly insulated, improperly strung on the poles in such a way as to make it a constant danger to the traveling public, and its manner of stringing was, in violation of the ordinances of the city, less than 25 feet above the curbing. Greater particularity in stating plaintiffs' pleadings is not essential to a full understanding of the material issues involved.

The city of San Antonio was dismissed from the suit, upon the ground that a municipal corporation could not be liable for an injury resulting in death. Martin Wright, among other things, pleaded specially the statute of limitations upon which the jury were instructed by the court to find in his favor.

The San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, among other pleas not necessary to mention, pleaded that it was not responsible for the death of Ocon, because the wire mentioned in plaintiffs' petition was neither constructed, owned, nor controlled by it.

The cause having been tried with the assistance of a jury, verdict was rendered for plaintiffs for $5,000, and duly apportioned among those entitled to receive it.

The material facts developed in the case are practically without dispute, and show that in September, 1907, the Mexican people of San Antonio, wishing to celebrate some event of interest to them, appointed a committee to confer with the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company and arrange for lighting San Pedro park, where the celebration was to take place. The committee conferred with the general manager of the Gas & Electric Company, and it was agreed that this company would furnish, free of charge, the electric current for lighting the park, if the committee for the Mexi-

893. A later case on that point, however, is here presented.

In Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co. — W. Va. —, 74 S. E. 993, it was held that the generating company that sells and delivers electricity to a distributing company is under no obligation to see that the distributing company's lines over which the current is carried to consumers are in safe condition; and so a generating company was not liable for death of a boy who took hold of a piece of telephone wire which one of his companions had thrown over a guy wire which was fastened around the electric light pole about 2 inches above span wire supporting an arc light, and which come in contact with it, and which, because of lack of insulation between the span wire and the electric light wire, had become charged with electricity and so charged the piece of telephone wire. This case cites and follows as authority, Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788.

ANTONIO GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. OCON is in accord with the view taken in Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co., that the vendor company has not the duty of inspecting the wires of the purchasing company. But it 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

will be noted that it was said in the first case that it was not decided that the Gas & Electric Company would not have had the duty to see that the dangerous condition was removed if it had had actual knowledge of the defective condition of the wire.

And in Lewis v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. 135 Ky. 611, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1169, 197 S. W. 278, in reversing a judgment in defendant's favor, it was held that the vendor of electricity which turns a powerful current onto private wires strung along the highway is bound to inspect them from time to time to see that they are securely fastened and properly insulated, although they do not belong to it. In this case the vendor, of a corporation furnishing electricity in a certain city, furnished the electric power for a private electric light line extending beyond the limits of such city to supply some suburban residents with lights for their dwellings, and one of the wires had parted and sagged to within 6 or 7 feet of the sidewalk, and a pedestrian taking hold of the same was killed.

Other cases in point upon the question under annotation will be found in the note to Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893.

J. H. B.

defendant officers conceal from him the facts relative to its management and the condition of its business? To compel the performance of a trust and prevent its abuse is one of the peculiar and valuable powers of a court of equity; and, where the officers of a bank, as in this case, have converted the money and property of the corporation to their own use, until the amount they owe the bank exceeds the total deposits, and when the bank has only approximately $1,000 with which to meet a liability of more than $9,000 to its depositors, if such acts do not constitute fraud, they at least constitute such gross mismanagement, the bank being insolvent, as to justify a court of equity in reaching out its arm and protecting the minority stockholders and the creditors of the bank, by placing the assets of the bank in the hands of a receiver, and requiring an accounting of its officers and restoration of those assets they have withdrawn and appropriated to their own use. This power of a court of equity finds support in numerous cases. Cameron v. Groveland Improv. Co. 20 Wash. 169, 72 Am. St. Rep. 26, 54 Pac. 1128; Davis v. United States Electric Power & Light Co. 77 Md. 35, 25 Atl. 982; Haywood v. Lincoln Lumber Co. 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184; Ponca Mill Co. v. Mikesell, 55 Neb. 98, 75 N. W. 46; Edison v. Edison United Phonograph Co. 52 N. J. Eq. 620, 29 Atl. 195; Neall v. Hill, 16 Cal. 146, 76 Am. Dec. 508, 1 Mor. Min. Rep. 80; Wayne Pike Co. v. Hammons, 129 Ind. 368, 27 N. E. 487; Merchants' & Planters' Line v. Waganer, 71 Ala. 581.

Nor was it necessary, in order to entitle plaintiff to maintain this action, that he request the defendant officers and directors to prosecute an action to obtain the relief desired, for when the defendant officers are directors of the corporation and own the controlling stock, and are in complete control of the corporation, and are shown to occupy such a relation to the transaction complained of that they would be antagonistic to the prosecution of an action which a complaining shareholder would request, a demand that such officers bring and prosecute the action in the name of the corporation would be useless and is not necessary. Ponca Mill Co. v. Mikesell, 55 Neb. 98, 75 N. W. 46; 10 Cyc. 978.

We do not undertake to anticipate the final judgment in this case by suggesting any provisions that such judgment should contain, in the event judgment is ultimately rendered in favor of the plaintiff. Those are matters to be determined by the trial court after a hearing and examination of the evidence and findings of fact. It is sufficient for the purpose of this proceeding, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that under the facts alleged in the petition, the court has jurisdiction under plaintiff's petition to grant him some relief.

Several propositions are urged by defendants in their brief relative to the facts as established by the evidence in the trial court, in which there is conflict, which they contend show that plaintiff is entitled to no relief in this action. Questions of fact are primarily for the trial court; and the propositions involving the evidence can be presented to the trial court at the new trial. The order of the trial court is affirmed.

All the Justices concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

SAN ANTONIO GAS & ELECTRIC COMPANY, Appt.,

v.

MRS. SENOVIA OCON et al.

(— Tex. —, 146 S. W. 162.)

Electricity — defective wiring — liability for injury — gratuitous service.

An electrical company is not liable for the death of one driving in a highway, by his vehicle coming in contact with a wire negligently permitted to sag after being strung across the street by one to whom it has agreed, if such person will place the wires for reception of the current, and connect them with the poles of the electrical company, to furnish current free of charge for a celebration in a park, and the overturning of the seats thereby, if the company has no notice of the defective condition of the wire.

(April 10, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company from a judgment of the Court of Civil Appeals for the Fourth Supreme Judicial District, affirming a judgment of the District Court for Bexar Coun-

Note. — Liability of electric company for injury by wire strung by a third person to connect with its system.

Generally, as to liability for injuries by electric wires in highway, see note in 37 L.R.A. 566, and note supplemental thereto in 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1169.

As to duty of electric light company with respect to wires or fixtures in private property, see note in 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 226, and note supplemental thereto in 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 816.

The question under annotation, so far as it applies to the liability of one furnishing an electrical current to be distributed by another, is treated in the note to Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.)

ty in plaintiffs' favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiffs' intestate, alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ogden, Brooks, & Napier for appellant.

Messrs. Thad T. Adams and A. F. W. Macmanus for appellees.

Dibrell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by the widow and children of Jacinto Ocon, against the San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, Martin Wright, and the city of San Antonio to recover damages for his death, alleged to have occurred by the joint negligence of said defendants.

It was alleged by plaintiffs that, while Jacinto Ocon was driving a delivery wagon along a public street in the city of San Antonio, the umbrella, attached to the seat of the wagon came in contact with a wire stretched across the street, and thereby the seat on which he was riding was pulled off, and he was thrown to the ground and received injuries from which he died. It was also alleged that the wire was stretched across the street by the defendant Martin Wright, an electrical contractor, for the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, and when completed was turned over to the Gas & Electric Company.

The grounds of negligence set out and relied upon as relating to the wire were that it was improperly insulated, improperly strung on the poles in such a way as to make it a constant danger to the traveling public, and its manner of stringing was, in violation of the ordinances of the city, less than 25 feet above the curbing. Greater particularity in stating plaintiffs' pleadings is not essential to a full understanding of the material issues involved.

The city of San Antonio was dismissed from the suit, upon the ground that a municipal corporation could not be liable for an injury resulting in death. Martin Wright, among other things, pleaded specially the statute of limitations upon which the jury were instructed by the court to find in his favor.

The San Antonio Gas & Electric Company, among other pleas not necessary to mention, pleaded that it was not responsible for the death of Ocon, because the wire mentioned in plaintiffs' petition was neither constructed, owned, nor controlled by it.

The cause having been tried with the assistance of a jury, verdict was rendered for plaintiffs for $5,000, and duly apportioned among those entitled to receive it.

The material facts developed in the case are practically without dispute, and show that in September, 1907, the Mexican people of San Antonio, wishing to celebrate some event of interest to them, appointed a committee to confer with the defendant San Antonio Gas & Electric Company and arrange for lighting San Pedro park, where the celebration was to take place. The committee conferred with the general manager of the Gas & Electric Company, and it was agreed that this company would furnish, free of charge, the electric current for lighting the park, if the committee for the Mexi-

893. A later case on that point, however, is here presented.

In Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co. — W. Va. —, 74 S. E. 893, it was held that the generating company that sells and delivers electricity to a distributing company is under no obligation to see that the distributing company's lines over which the current is carried to consumers are in safe condition; and so a generating company was not liable for death of a boy who took hold of a piece of telephone wire which one of his companions had thrown over a guy wire which was fastened around the electric light pole about 2 inches above span wire supporting an arc light, and which come in contact with it, and which, because of lack of insulation between the span wire and the electric light wire, had become charged with electricity and so charged the piece of telephone wire. This case cites and follows as authority, Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 67 W. Va. 335, 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893, 67 S. E. 788.

ANTONIO GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. OCON is in accord with the view taken in Perry v. Ohio Valley Electric R. Co., that the vendor company has not the duty of inspecting the wires of the purchasing company. But it 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

will be noted that it was said in the first case that it was not decided that the Gas & Electric Company would not have had the duty to see that the dangerous condition was removed if it had had actual knowledge of the defective condition of the wire.

And in Lewis v. Bowling Green Gaslight Co. 135 Ky. 611, 22 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1169, 197 S. W. 278, in reversing a judgment in defendant's favor, it was held that the vendor of electricity which turns a powerful current onto private wires strung along the highway is bound to inspect them from time to time to see that they are securely fastened and properly insulated, although they do not belong to it. In this case the vendor, of a corporation furnishing electricity in a certain city, furnished the electric power for a private electric light line extending beyond the limits of such city to supply some suburban residents with lights for their dwellings, and one of the wires had parted and sagged to within 6 or 7 feet of the sidewalk, and a pedestrian taking hold of the same was killed.

Other cases in point upon the question under annotation will be found in the note to Fickeisen v. Wheeling Electrical Co. 27 L.R.A.(N.S.) 893. J. H. B.

can people would put up the wiring and provide everything for the reception of the current. In pursuance of this understanding, the wire with which the umbrella on deceased's wagon came in contact was erected by the defendant Martin Wright, through one of his employees, at the request of and for the committee for the Mexican celebration; and he was paid for the work by this committee. The committee directed the electrical contractor where to place the wires, and all poles and other material were supplied either by the committee or the electrical contractor; and the San Antonio Gas & Electric Company gave no instructions as to where or how to place the wires, and had nothing to do with placing the wire across the street. In preparing the wires for receiving the electric current, the contractor for the Mexican society attached one to the pole of the Gas & Electric Company, extending across one of the public streets of the city. This was the wire upon which the umbrella attached to the deceased's wagon was caught, and by which he was thrown from the wagon, receiving injuries from which he died. Where this wire was attached to the Gas & Electric Company's pole, a switch was there placed by the contractor for the committee; and the point where the wire in question left the pole was 25 or 30 feet above the street curbing. After this wire was attached to the pole and a switch placed there by the committee's contractor, the Gas & Electric Company did nothing more than to run a connection from the transformer on its pole down to the side of the pole to the point where the committee had directed a switch placed, and by the means of a short wire connect with the top of such switch. When the wire was thrown down, it was repaired by Martin Wright, the electrical contractor, and after the celebration was over, having lasted for three days, the electrical contractor had his employees take the wires down and return them to his shop. The current furnished by the Gas & Electric Company was connected with the wire in question by means of throwing the switch which was placed on the pole by the defendant Martin Wright; and this switch was thrown each night by the park policeman, at the instance of the celebration committee, in order to secure the current. At the time of the accident, the current was not on the wire complained of. The Gas & Electric Company received no compensation for furnishing the current. The facts do not disclose how long the wire across the street from which contact with the wagon caused the death of Ocon, was in a sagging condition; but it was shown that on the night 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) previous the wire was up and properly constructed.

The question involved in this case does not embrace the liability of defendant Gas & Electric Company for damages resulting from contact with the dangerous and potent force of an electric current. The uncontradicted facts exclude that issue, and we are circumscribed to the sole question of its liability for damages resulting from contact with a plain wire, strung, owned, and controlled by others than the Gas & Electric Company. The only connection with the wire in question attributed to this company is its tacit or implied consent that the wire might be attached to its pole, for the purpose of furnishing the owners or lessees of the wire the electric current for temporarily lighting the park for a celebration conducted by such owner or lessees.

The evidence discloses, without dispute, that the wire in question was, in the beginning, properly strung, and that its sagging condition occurred afterwards. It was not shown by the evidence at what time the defective condition of the wire occurred, or how long it had remained in such condition, or that the condition the wire was in at the time Ocon's umbrella came in contact with it was known to this defendant. We think that at the time the implied consent of this defendant to its codefendant, Martin Wright, or the committee for the Mexican celebration, was given, to attach the wire to its pole, in so far as any injury might result from such wire independent of the electric current, by reason of its improper construction, this defendant was not legally bound to see that the wire was properly strung; and, in the absence of actual knowledge that it was improperly or defectively strung, the Gas & Electric Company could presume that those who were in charge of stringing the wire, and for whose benefit it was strung, would perform the work in a proper manner and in compliance with the city ordinance. We do not wish to be understood as holding that this rule is applicable in so far as it relates to the electric current and as to injuries received by third parties from such current, for we think a different rule applicable in such case, but solely upon the ground that "electricity is a silent, deadly, and instantaneous force; and one who uses it for profit is bound to exercise care corresponding to the dangers incident to its use." Rowe v. Taylorville Electric Co. 213 Ill. 318, 72 N. E. 711; McLaughlin v. Louisville Electric Light Co. 100 Ky. 173, 34 L.R.A. 812, 37 S. W. 851; Cooley, Torts, 1492.

Nor do we wish to be understood as holding that, if the defective condition of the wire was known to the Gas & Electric Company, the duty did not devolve upon it to see that the wire was repaired or detached from its pole. However, the doctrine of knowledge or notice from the exercise of ordinary care cannot, we think, be invoked in such case as to the defective condition of the wire, independent of the deadly current; but actual notice to the Gas & Electric Company of the wire's defective condition must have been shown. This arises from the fact that the Gas & Electric Company was under no obligation to repair the wire of its codefendant, or to see that the wire was properly strung, except when the electric current was on, and where the injury resulted from such current. Again, we do not wish to be understood in this connection, as holding that actual knowledge of the wire's sagging condition on the part of the Gas & Electric Company would, as a general rule and under ordinary circumstances, where others were permitted simply to attach their wire to its pole, as in this instance, create a liability against such company; but we think liability in case of actual notice of the defective condition of the wire would arise only in a case like the one under consideration, where the injury was inflicted upon one using a public thoroughfare. Safety to one in the use of a public street or thoroughfare demands the application of a different rule than should be applied to places of a private or less public character. This would seem to be just, since, under such circumstances, the company is authorized to detach such wire from its premises; and we think that, even though there was not primarily any obligation imposed upon this company to use any care to see that the wire was properly strung without respect to the electric current, and therefore, strictly speaking, the doctrine of negligence is not applicable, yet such obligation would arise from its continued consent to the use of its pole after knowledge of a condition of the wire as a constant menace of danger to the safety of public travel.

We venture to assert that no text-book or case can be found that carries the doctrine of negligence further than we have here announced it; but we do not think we have gone further than justice and expediency demand. It is clearly the right of a public service corporation, obliged to exercise its functions for the convenience and benefit of the public, to demand the detachment of a wire negligently or defectively strung to its pole, when notice of such defective condition of the wire has been received; and the failure to act with reasonable promptness under such circumstances will make its negligence concurrent with that of the owner of the defective wire attached to its pole, when the safety of public travel is endangered. This rule, however, does not affect the present case, since it was not shown that the Gas & Electric Company had notice of the sagging of the wire.

There is no difference of opinion as to a number of legal propositions presented in support of the cause of action here sought to be maintained against the Gas & Electric Company; but we do not think they are in the remotest degree applicable to the facts of the case. For instance, it is not denied that, where a party sustains an injury from the concurring negligence of several, he may recover therefor against all or either of them. But what fact is there in this case that tends to show that there was any negligence or concurring negligence on the part of the Gas & Electric Company tending to cause the injuries of Ocon from which he died? It cannot be said the negligence arising from the sagging wire across the public street, in violation of the city ordinances, was its neglect, for the most potent reason that the wire was not so strung or so allowed to sag and remain in that condition across the street by the Gas & Electric Company, since the undisputed facts show that the company had nothing to do with the stringing of the wire, nothing to do with placing it across the street, no control over the wire, no ownership of or interest in the wire, nothing to do with securing the permit from the city to string the wire, and no notice of its condition. In short, the evidence fails wholly to show there was any duty on the part of this company that it owed to the deceased or the public, the violation of which was shown in order to constitute negligence. It was not the duty of this defendant to repair the defective wire, or to in any manner interfere with its position, in the absence of knowledge of its condition.

In order to impute negligence to this defendant, it was necessary to show that it violated some duty it owed to the public, and to the deceased as a component of the public, or to him personally by reason of some other connected relationship. Unless the death of Ocon was due to the breach of some duty this company owed him, there could be no recovery against it in this action. Negligence is imputable only for a breach of an existing duty due by the person sought to be held responsible. San Antonio Edison Co. v. Dixon, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 320, 42 S. W. 1009; 15 Cyc. 475; 1 Thomp. Neg. § 3.

To hold that the care devolved upon such public service corporation as the Gas & Electric Company to look after the construction and maintenance of wires installed by or under the direction of private persons or concerns, without reference to their adaptability to safely carry the electric current, would impose upon such companies burdens so great as to clearly render their existence, and hence their service to the public, impracticable, if not impossible. It is not necessary to enlarge upon the disagreeable consequences of such a ruling; but it should be enough to say that such a doctrine is repugnant to reason and justice. It would not only make Cain the keeper of his brother Abel, but would impose upon him a vicarious atonement for the sins of his brother, whether of omission or commission.

We have been cited by learned counsel for defendants in error to a number of cases thought to bear upon the question presented by the facts of this case; but we are not able to appreciate their analogy to the case at bar. The case of Wehner v. Lagerfelt, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 520, 68 S. W. 221, was for damages received from an electrical shock under the following circumstances: "One of the electric wires so maintained and operated by appellants was suspended from poles along the north side of San Antonio street, one of the principal thoroughfares of . . . [the city of El Paso] and charged with a strong and dangerous current of electricity. Below and near this wire was suspended from the same poles one that was uninsulated, the end of which was broken and hanging within a foot or two of and above the sidewalk on the north side of said street. The insulation of the upper wire, through which the strong electric current, was conveyed, was worn and abraded. In contact with one of its abrasions was a small bare wire, which extended therefrom, and rested upon the uninsulated and broken wire beneath, thereby conveying to and charging it with a strong and dangerous current of electricity from the defectively insulated wire above, thus rendering the uninsulated hanging wire very dangerous to persons passing along said street and sidewalk. This dangerous condition of the wire existed on the day . . . [of the injury], and had been maintained continuously for about two weeks prior to and up to that time, and, by the exercise of ordinary care, could and should have been known by the appellants. . . . The appellee, Dagmer Lagerfelt, a little ten-year-old girl, . . . while walking along said sidewalk in ignorance of the danger, came in contact with the uninsulated hanging wire, charged with a strong and dangerous current of electricity in the manner and by the means aforesaid," and was seriously and painfully injured. The mere statement of the case makes ap- 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) parent its lack of similarity to the case under consideration. The wire permitted to hang from the defendant's poles in that case was heavily charged with an electric current, and was with 1 or 2 feet of the sidewalk and from the ground. This was clearly negligence, notwithstanding the piece of wire belonged to another. The wire itself was uninsulated, and so was the wire of the defendant in that case connected with the hanging wire defectively insulated and heavily charged with a dangerous current. The court of civil appeals correctly held the defendant chargeable with the knowledge of the condition of the wire; but such holding throws no light upon the case at bar.

The case of Washington Gaslight Co. v. District of Columbia, 161 U. S. 316, 40 L. ed. 712, 16 Sup. Ct. Rep. 564, was a suit by the District of Columbia to recover judgment for an amount it had been required to pay Marietta M. Parker for injury she received by stepping into an open gas box constructed in the sidewalk. Mr. Justice White, who wrote the opinion in that case, states the evidence to have been that the gas box in question was placed by the gas company in the center of the sidewalk in the city of Washington in 1873, it being one of the customary appliances used by the company when connecting its main with a house where gas was to be used; that this box consisted of an iron cylinder, 4 inches wide and 2½ feet deep, with an iron cover. The box served the purpose of affording access to a cock in the service pipe which later conducted the gas from the main of the company to the gas meter in the house; whence it was carried to the burner. By means of this box or cylinder, on removing the cover therefrom with a key made for the purpose, the cock in the service pipe could be reached, and the gas be thus turned on or off from the house. This box was placed in the sidewalk so as to be level with its surface, and the cover thereon was held in place by lugs which slipped into slots made for the purpose. The box was put in by the company in accordance with its general method used for introducing gas, and in compliance with the form of structure pointed out by an ordinance of the board of common council of the city of Washington. The gas box was put in at the request of the owner of the premises in front of which it was situated. It was constructed by the gas company, which furnished the materials, and worked as any other plumber would have done, being paid therefor by the owner of the premises. In order to do this work, the gas company had first to obtain from the city permission to open the street to make the requisite connection, and paid to the district a permit fee of $ 1. When the gas box was first constructed, it was done in a proper manner; but at the time of the injury, and for some time before, was out of repair and in a defective condition. It was shown that in case the owner of the premises ceased to take gas, the box became the property of the gas company, and that company never permitted the owner of the premises to have a key to the box, and the company exercised exclusive control, maintenance, and supervision of the gas box. It will be observed from the statement of the case that the duty of the gas company was to maintain the gas box, over which it had exclusive control, from which fact it logically follows that a failure to do this in a proper manner would constitute negligence from which liability would ensue. The case is in no essential particular analogous to the one under consideration, and cannot serve as a guide in its disposition.

The two cases thus analyzed are the ones upon which counsel placed the greatest stress, and it is not essential to review the others. In fact, we have been unable to find any case in the books, and we have been cited to none, that are similar in the facts upon which the recovery in this case is sought. Likewise the text-books we have consulted are barren of authority relevant to the subject. The case has been given careful consideration and we are unable to find substantial legal grounds upon which to approve the judgment of the honorable court of civil appeals in affirming the judgment of the lower court.

The cause will therefore be reversed and here rendered for the plaintiff in error, San Antonio Gas & Electric Company; and it is so ordered.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE OF WASHINGTON, Resp't.,

v.

AUGUST MAIRE, Appt.

(66 Wash. 591, 120 Pac. 87.)

Intoxicating liquor — unbroken packages — character.

A package, to be unbroken within the meaning of a law permitting liquor to be de-

Note. — What constitutes an original or unbroken package.

It may be stated that in general an original package is that package which, according to custom respecting the particular article shipped, is usually delivered by the vendor to the carrier for transportation, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

livered in unbroken packages in dry territory, need not necessarily be the one received by the wholesaler, but he may fill a smaller receptacle, as a demijohn, from a larger one, and deliver it in the unbroken form in which he prepares it.

(January 15, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Snohomish County, convicting him of violating the local-option law. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hathaway & Alston, with Mr. E. C. Dailey, for appellant:

Defendant is entitled to have the statute construed according to its plain reading. United States v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. 92, 5 L. ed. 42; Cook v. State, 26 Ind. App. 278, 59 N. E. 489.

Mr. Ralph C. Bell, for respondent:

The section under which this prosecution is instituted, and the term "unbroken package" in the exception thereto, should be interpreted liberally, in the light of the evil sought to be remedied and the object to be attained.

36 Cyc. 1162; Re Schneck, 78 Kan. 207, 96 Pac. 43; State v. Twin City Teleph. Co. 104 Minn. 270, 116 N. W. 835.

Morris, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant was convicted of a violation of the local-option law, of 1909, in bringing liquor into a dry unit in quantities less than an unbroken package. The admitted facts are these: Appellant is an employee of a wholesale liquor dealer at Snohomish, a wet unit, of whom a resident of Everett, a dry unit, had ordered a demijohn of intoxicating liquor. This demijohn was filled by the dealer at Snohomish from a larger receptacle in his store, and when so filled was brought to Everett, and delivered to the customer in the same condition in which it left Snohomish. Upon these facts arises the only question in the case: What is an "unbroken package," within the meaning of § 18 of that act, Rem. & Bal. Code, § 6309, which provides that the act shall not apply to deliveries of unbroken packages at residences, which are not places of business or of public resort, by wholesalers, in their own conveyances, or by any common carrier?

The court below held that the words "un-and delivered as a unit to the consignee. This definition, in substance, has been stated in numerous cases, as illustrated by the following definitions: An original package is a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling, and usually consists of a number of things bound together, convenient for handling and conveyance. The broken package" should be so construed as to mean the original package as put up by the manufacturer, and in which the wholesaler received the liquor, and only a delivery of such original package, within a dry unit, came within the exemption of the law. We do not so interpret the law. Without special reference to the cases, it has been generally held that by the words "original package," in cases involving the right to ship intoxicating liquor into a state prohibiting its sale, was meant any form of receptacle that would hold a fixed quantity with reference to safe and convenient transportation; and when so shipped it was immaterial what the form or size of the package was, as the importer had a right to determine the quantity desired, and so long as this quantity came to him in the unbroken or original package in which it was shipped, however small the package was, it was protected as an original package. In State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters, 44 Kan. 728, 10 L.R.A. 616, 25 Pac. 237, it is said: "The 'original package' . . . was and is the package of the importer as it existed at the time of its transportation from one state into the other." In Cook v. Marshall County, 119 Iowa, 384, 104 Am. St. Rep. 283, 93 N. W. 372, the court says: "It relates wholly to goods as prepared for transportation, and has no necessary reference whatever to the package originally prepared or put up by the manufacturer." A package put up in the usual way employed for transportation by honest dealers, and in a bona fide receptacle words "original package" have reference to the unit which the carrier receives, transports, and delivers as an article of commerce. McGregor v. Cone, 104 Iowa, 405, 39 L.R.A. 484, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522, 73 N. W. 1041. "An original package, as governed by interstate commerce law, is that which is delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial point of shipment, and retains its form and contents until received by the consignee in the same condition as when shipped," but which ceases to be such when broken for sale of smaller units contained in the larger package. Re Agnew, 89 Neb. 306, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 836, 131 N. W. 817. "Speaking generally . . . an original package, as applied to interstate and international commerce, is a package, bundle, or aggregation of goods put up in whatever form, covering, or receptacle for transportation, and as a unit transported from one state or nation to another." Austin v. State, 101 Tenn. 563, 50 L.R.A. 478, 70 Am. St. Rep. 703, 48 S. W. 305, affirmed in 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. ed. 224, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132. "An 'original package' is such form and size of package as is used by producers or shippers for the purpose of securing both convenience in handling and security in transportation of merchandise between dealers in the ordinary course of actual commerce." Com. use of Philadelphia County v. Schollenberger, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L.R.A. 155, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 488, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32, 27 Atl. 30. "The package consists of a number of things bound together, convenient for handling and conveyance. A package means a bundle put up for transportation or commercial handling. It is a thing in form to become as such an article of merchandise or transportation or delivery from hand to hand." State ex rel. Gelpi v. Board of Assessors, 46 La. Ann. 145, 49 Am. St. Rep. 318, 15 So. 10, cited with approval in Henderson v. Ortte, 114 La. 523, 38 So. 440. "The original package is the package delivered by the importer to the carrier at the initial place of shipment, in the exact condition in which it was shipped. If in single bottles, shipped singly, or if in packages or three or more, securely fastened together and marked, or if in a box, barrel, crate, or other receptacle, the single bottle, in the one instance, the three or more bottles, in another instance, the barrel, box, crate, or other receptacle, respectively constitute the original package. If sold or delivered, it must be sold or delivered as shipped and received." Guckenheimer v. Sellers, 81 Fed. 997. See also the definition given by the Kansas supreme court in State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters, 44 Kan. 728, 10 L.R.A. 616, 25 Pac. 237, which is set out in STATE v. MAIRE.

Under these rules it would seem that the size and form of the package would be immaterial, and that single articles, no matter how small, would be considered as original packages if they were packed and shipped singly, except, perhaps, where the shipment was made in the form chosen merely to evade local laws. Thus it has been held that the fact that the article is in packages suitable for retail trade to individual customers does not destroy the character of what would otherwise constitute original packages (Schollenberger v. Pennsylvania, 171 U. S. 1, 43 L. ed. 49, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 757, reversing Com. v. Paul, 170 Pa. 284, 30 L.R.A. 396, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 506, 50 Am. St. Rep. 776, 33 Atl. 82; Com. v. Schollenberger, 170 Pa. 296, 33 Atl. 85; and Com. v. Paul, 170 Pa. 296, 33 Atl. 85 [this case does not, as is indicated by some digesters and annotators, directly overrule Com. use of Philadelphia County v. Schollenberger, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L.R.A. 155, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 488, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32, 27 Atl. 30], holding that a ten-pound package of oleomargarin manufactured, packed, unmarked, and imported as a single package, constituted an original package of commerce; Henderson v. Ortte, supra, holding that various parts of a sewing machine, packed in separate parcels, all of which were inclosed in a larger package, rendered the inclosing package an 'original one'), unless the form and size of the package is not that usually adopted in the trade for the purpose of transportation, but was adopted with a view to evade the local laws by bringing the article within the protection of the Feder-ordinarily used in shipment, and not evidently put up for the purpose of evading the law of a sister state, is regarded as an original package; so long as it remains in the unbroken condition in which it existed during its transportation. 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d ed.) 292, 294; 7 Cyc. 429.

Applying the reasoning and principle of these various decisions to the question submitted, the answer is readily determined, and it must be held that an unbroken package is the package in the original form in which it was made by the shipper for shipment and delivery into a dry unit, providing the receptacle used is one ordinarily used by honest dealers in the same business, and is recognized commercially as such a receptacle. This means that, if four residents of a dry unit each ordered a quart of whisky from a dealer in a wet unit, such dealer could not send a gallon cask into the dry unit, and deliver a quart to each customer. Neither could a number of residents of a dry unit join together and order the dealer in the wet unit to pack a barrel with bottled beer, for convenience of shipment, send it into the dry unit, and deliver to each customer the number of bottles he desired. In each of these instances, the liquor would be delivered to the customer from a broken package, which, to our mind, is plainly what the law intended to prevent. To adopt the view of the lower court would be to say that the law gives the citizen in the dry unit the right to use liquor in his private home. It forbids him procuring the liquor al Constitution (Austin v. Tennessee, 179 U. S. 343, 45 L. ed. 224, 21 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132, affirming 101 Tenn. 563, 50 L.R.A. 478, 70 Am. St. Rep. 703, 48 S. W. 305; Com. use of Philadelphia County v. Schollenberger, 156 Pa. 201, 22 L.R.A. 155, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 488, 36 Am. St. Rep. 32, 27 Atl. 30).

And it has been held that the package need not be the one originally put up by the manufacturer, but that a wholesaler may break up the manufacturer's package into "unbroken packages," provided such packages are such as are ordinarily used by honest dealers in the same business. See STATE v. MAIRE. A case somewhat analogous to that of STATE v. MAIRE is State v. Southard. 60 Ark. 247, 29 S. W. 751, wherein a distiller filled a 45-gallon barrel with whisky, and placed a government stamp upon it for that amount, but subsequently surrendered such stamp, and receiving nine 5-gallon stamps in lieu thereof, divided the barrel into nine 5-gallon packages, stamped them, and sold them as original packages, it being held, over the contention that the barrel was the original package, and that there could be but one original package, that the 5-gallon packages sold were original packages within the meaning of a statute permitting manufacturers of liquors to sell in original packages of not less than 5 gallons without license. Although neither of these cases involves interstate commerce, there seems to be no reason why the rule as laid down by them should not be applicable to interstate commerce, assuming, of course, that the breaking up of the manufacturer's package occurred before export.

But the fact that the internal revenue department for purposes of taxation has recognized a package as an "original package" does not necessarily render it such under the commerce clause, where the packages are of such size that they may be repacked in additional coverings, at the option of the consignor. McGregor v. Cone, 104 Iowa. 465. 39 L.R.A. 484, 65 Am. St. Rep. 522, 73 N. W. 1041.

A few cases have passed upon the question of shipping single articles in individual 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

packages. Thus, in Re Beine, 42 Fed. 545, single bottles of beer and whisky, packed and sealed or nailed up in boxes made of pasteboard or wood, and not packed in any other box, but shipped singly and separately, as so many distinct and separate packages, were held to constitute original packages of commerce. And in State ex rel. Cochran v. Winters, 44 Kan. 728, 10 L.R.A. 616, 25 Pac. 237, in reaching a similar conclusion, the court said: "It is for the importer to determine how large or how small the package should be, and the manner in which the package should be made up, and the materials used in making it up. Certainly an importer has as much right, under the Federal Constitution, to import into a state and sell against its laws a single gill of intoxicating liquor as he has to import into such state and sell against its laws a gallon, or a barrel, or a hogshead of the same interdicted article." So, single pasteboard boxes conforming to the internal revenue laws, and containing ten cigarettes each, when not inclosed in any other packages or wrappings, but loose and separate, were held to constitute an original package, in Iowa v. McGregor, 76 Fed. 956, and in Sawrie v. Tennessee, 82 Fed. 615. These latter decisions, however, in view of later cases hereinafter set out, seem questionable.

The majority of cases which have defined the term "original package" have involved an aggregation of articles or packages packed and shipped generally for convenience sake in a larger package. The well-settled rule among this class of cases is that the large bundle or receptacle, and not the individual articles or packages comprising the larger unit, constitutes the "original package" of commerce. Thus, in May v. New Orleans, 178 U. S. 496, 44 L. ed. 1165, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 976, affirming 51 La. Ann. 1064, 25 So. 959, it was held that original packages of imported goods consist of the boxes, cases, or bales in which the goods were shipped, and not the smaller packages therein contained, although these are the packages in which the goods are put up by the manufacturer; and that opening the shipping boxes or cases for sale or delivery in the dry unit, except he may accept a delivery of liquor from a wet unit; provided, if he wishes liquor that is packed by the manufacturer in barrels, or other large forms of shipment, he may order and receive nothing less than a barrel, or such other large receptacle. A quart may be sufficient for his needs, but he must nevertheless buy the barrel or case to obtain the quart. Such an interpretation of the legislative intent does not appeal to us as in the interest of temperance and sobriety, which was the purpose of the law. It sav-ors rather of the reverse, and fixes the legislative intent as encouraging the sale of liquor in large quantities, rather than, as we read the law, permitting the sale in the smallest quantity desired, provided only the delivery be made in the unbroken package in which it was shipped.

It follows the appeal is well taken, and the judgment is reversed.

Crow, Chadwick, and Ellis, JJ., concur.

of the separate parcels contained therein destroyed their distinctive character as imports.

So, it was held in Austin v. Tennessee, supra, that paper packages of cigarettes, each 3 inches in length and $\frac{1}{4}$ inch in width, containing ten cigarettes, without any shipping address on such packages, when they are taken from a loose pile of such packages at the factory by an express company in a basket which it furnishes, in which it carries them, and from which it empties them on the counter of a consignee in another state, do not constitute an original package in interstate commerce; especially where such method is employed for the purpose of evading local laws. And the same conclusion was reached in Cook v. Marshall County, 196 U. S. 261, 49 L. ed. 471, 25 Sup. Ct. Rep. 233, affirming 119 Iowa, 384, 104 Am. St. Rep. 283, 93 N. W. 372, which differs from the Austin Case only in the fact that it does not appear what means was used in transporting the cigarettes, except the inference that they were shoveled in and out of the car, and that they were shipped loose, the packages not being separately or otherwise addressed, by an express company, which merely issued a receipt in duplicate.

And in McGregor v. Cone, supra, wooden boxes in which cigarettes were shipped were held to be the original packages rather than the individual packages of cigarettes, under the rule that an original package is the unit which the carrier receives, transports, and delivers as an article of commerce. And the same was held true of bottles of whisky, each sealed up in a paper wrapper or box, and packed together in uncovered wooden boxes furnished by the carrier, and marked "to be returned," in Re Harmon, 43 Fed. 372, it being said that the wooden box, and not the bottles, constitutes an "original package;" and of small bottles of whisky, each wrapped in tissue paper, and labeled "original package," shipped in open wooden boxes, in Keith v. State, 91 Ala. 2, 10 L.R.A. 430, 8 So. 353, it being said that the small size of the package, if the bottles be otherwise considered original packages, should have no bearing upon the question, but that merely labeling each bottle "original package" did not make it one, if it was not really an original package; and of sealed bottles of intoxicating bitters shipped in inclosed wooden boxes, in Harrison v.

State, 91 Ala. 62, 10 So. 30; and of bottles of whisky inclosed in a wooden box, in Vernon v. State, 161 Ala. 83, 50 So. 57; and of bottles of whisky shipped in both open and closed boxes, in Smith v. State, 54 Ark. 248, 15 S. W. 882; and of bottles of medicine separately wrapped, but packed in a box for shipping in State v. Parsons, 124 Mo. 436, 5 Inters. Com. Rep. 250, 46 Am. St. Rep. 457, 27 S. W. 1102; and of half-pint flasks of whisky, each packed in a sealed paper box and shipped in a larger covered wooden box, in Haley v. State, 42 Neb. 556, 47 Am. St. Rep. 718, 60 N. W. 962; and of individual packages of "Uneeda Biscuit," packed and shipped in larger receptacles, in Re Agnew, 89 Neb. 306, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 836, 131 N. W. 817; and in Re King, 89 Neb. 298, 131 N. W. 820, and in Re Page, 89 Neb. 299, 131 N. W. 820; and of packages of oleomargarin, each labeled "original package," fastened together and packed in a larger receptacle, in Com. v. Leslie, 20 Pa. Super. Ct. 529; and of small bottles of liquors, each sealed and put up in a pasteboard box and shipped in quantities in larger wooden boxes, in Com. v. Bishman, 138 Pa. 639, 21 Atl. 12; and of bottles of whisky and beer, each sealed up in paper and packed together in uncovered wooden boxes, in State v. Chapman, 1 S. D. 414, 10 L.R.A. 432, 47 N. W. 411; and of canned goods shipped in quantity in larger boxes, in McDermott v. State, 143 Wis. 18, — L.R.A.(N.S.) —, 126 N. W. 888, 21 Ann. Cas. 1315.

But where the open boxes are furnished by the carrier without the knowledge or agency of the consignor, it has been held that where small bottles of spirituous liquors are each inclosed in a paper bag and tied with a string about the cork, the bags being labeled with the kind and quantity of the contents, and the consignee's name, each bottle, and not the boxes, constitutes an "original package." Tinker v. State, 98 Ala. 115, 11 So. 383.

And where liquid in casks is shipped in carload lots, the casks, and not the car, are the "original packages," within the pure food and drug act of 1906, authorizing the seizure of adulterated articles while remaining in the "original unbroken packages." United States v. 65 Casks Liquid Extract, 170 Fed. 449, affirmed in 99 C. C. A. 667, 175 Fed. 1022. And the same conclusion was reached as to sacks of flour shipped in carload lots in Lasater v. Purcell Mill & Elevator Co. 22 Tex. Civ. App. 33, 54 S. W. 425.

A few decisions have reached a conclusion contrary to that reached in the majority of the cases. Thus, in Re May, 82 Fed. 422, and in State v. Goetze, 43 W. Va. 495, 64 Am. St. Rep. 871, 27 S. E. 225, the courts went so far as to hold that the individual boxes of cigarettes constituted "original packages," even though they had been placed in a larger box for convenience in shipping. And the same is true of the cases of Collins v. Hills, 77 Iowa, 181, 3 L.R.A. 110, 41 N. W. 571, wherein, in holding that bottles of liquor packed in both open and closed boxes and barrels constitute the original packages, the court said: "When defendant purchased one hundred bottles of either beer or whisky, he in effect purchased that number of packages of the article; and when he sold by the bottle the transaction was of the same character. The fact that, as a matter of convenience in handling during the transportation of the property, the bottles were packed in boxes and barrels, can make no difference as to the character, in law, of the transaction. If he had the right to bring the liquor within the state, and to sell it here, he had the right to adopt such means and mode of shipment as best suited his convenience or interest;" of State v. Coonan, 82 Iowa, 400, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 670, 48 N. W. 921, wherein it was held that sealed bottles packed in boxes and barrels constituted original packages; and of State v. Miller, 86 Iowa, 638, 53 N. W. 330, wherein it was held that bottles of beer, although packed and shipped in boxes, constituted original packages. But these cases cannot be considered good law, as the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the Austin and Cook Cases, supra, oppose Re May; and the Collins, Coonan, and Miller Cases were, in effect, overruled by McGregor v. Cone, supra.

An exception to the general rule seems to arise where goods are sold through an agent, and are set aside for designated purchasers before shipment. This is upon the ground that the doctrine of "original packages" primarily concerns the right to sell within the prohibiting or taxing state goods coming in from outside. Thus, in Rearick v. Pennsylvania, 203 U. S. 507, 51 L. ed. 295, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 159, reversing 26 Pa. Super. Ct. 384, it was held that where a foreign corporation, dealing through an agent, sold brooms, which, after being tagged and marked and tied up together in bundles convenient for shipping, were so shipped and then delivered to the respective purchasers, each broom so marked was held to be specifically appropriated to the specific contract, and therefore to constitute the original packages, rather than the whole bundle. And a similar conclusion was reached in State v. Eckenrode, 148 Iowa, 173, 127 N. W. 56, which followed the Rearick Case. And see Caldwell v. North Carolina, 187 U. S. 622, 47 L. ed. 336, 23 Sup. Ct. Rep. 229, and Stone v. State, 117 Ga. 292, 43 S. E. 740. But no such distinction was 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) made in Parks Bros. v. Nez Perce County, 13 Idaho, 298, 121 Am. St. Rep. 261, 89 Pac. 949, 12 Ann. Cas. 1113, where, upon facts and contentions similar, with the exception that the separately labeled packages were inclosed in a box, to those in the Rearick Case, a contrary conclusion was reached. And this rule seems inapplicable where the different packages are not set aside for or addressed to particular customers (Canton v. McDaniel, 188 Mo. 207, 86 S. W. 1092; Croy v. Olbion County (Croy v. Epperson) 104 Tenn. 525, 51 L.R.A. 254, 78 Am. St. Rep. 931, 58 S. W. 235; Loverin & B. Co. v. Tansil, 118 Tenn. 717, 102 S. W. 77), or where the goods are consigned and charged to the so-called agent individually (Kimmell v. State, 104 Tenn. 184, 56 S. W. 854).

As to what amounts to retail sale of intoxicating liquors, as distinguished from wholesale, see note to Re Metz Bros. Brewing Co. 32 L.R.A. (N.S.) 622. G. J. C.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

ELIZABETH FLYNN

v.

PITTSBURGH RAILWAYS COMPANY,
Appt.

234 Pa. 335, 83 Atl. 207.)

Street railway — collision — stepping in front of car — nearsightedness.

Nearsightedness will not relieve one from the charge of contributory negligence, who steps upon a street car track immediately in front of a moving car, where the view of the track is unobstructed.

(January 2, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas Number 3 of the Allegheny County in plaintiff's fav-

Note. — Care required from one of defective sight, in using streets.

This note is supplemental to the note to Keith v. Worcester & B. Valley Street R. Co. 14 L.R.A. (N.S.) 648.

For the general subject of contributory negligence as affecting liability of municipal corporations for defects and obstructions in streets, see the note to Lerner v. Philadelphia, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 614.

For the duty of carrier to blind passenger, see the note to Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Rives, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 564.

It is pointed out in the said note first referred to, that the cases which state that a blind person or one with defective eyesight, in using the streets, is required to take greater care than one not similarly afflicted, are not in general to be understood as meaning that a higher degree of care is required of those so afflicted. It will be seen that on its face there is nothing necessarily or in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William A. Challenger and Clarence Burleigh for appellant.

Messrs. Thomas M. & Rody P. Marshall, for appellee:

A nearsighted person may recover for an injury negligently inflicted upon him, if he uses the degree of care of which he is capable under all the circumstances.

Thompson v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 218 Pa. 444, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1162, 120 Am. St. Rep. 897, 67 Atl. 768, 11 Ann. Cas. 894; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 481; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 397; Davenport v. Ruckman, 37 N. Y. 568; Swift v. Staten Island Rapid Transit R. Co. 123 N. Y. 645, 25 N. E. 378; Robbins v. Springfield Street R. Co. 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334; Baltimore Traction Co. v. Wallace, 77 Md. 435, 26 Atl. 518.

Plaintiff was still a passenger for hire while being transferred, and it was the duty of the defendant company to exercise a high degree of care.

contrary to this in the statement in FLYNN v. PITTSBURGH R. Co., that the nearsightedness of the plaintiff "imposed upon her the duty of greater precaution to avoid injury." But it should be noted that in the earlier Pennsylvania case of Karl v. Juniata County, 206 Pa. 633, 56 Atl. 78, cited in the earlier note, "a degree of care . . . beyond the usual and ordinary" was said to be required of one with impaired vision.

In Apperson v. Lazro, 44 Ind. App. 186, 87 N. E. 97, 88 N. E. 99, affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, who was run into by an automobile on the highway, he being very nearsighted, the court said: "The plaintiff was infirm and had such defective eyesight that, according to his own testimony, he was unable to distinguish the features of a person within conversational distance. He was walking along the western edge of the beaten roadway, looking downward, it seems, to make sure of his footing. Other than this, there appears to have been nothing unusual or extraordinary in his conduct, until he was startled by the approach of the automobile. Up to this time at least, there was nothing in his actions that would indicate carelessness or negligence on his part. The fact that he was almost blind and was traveling upon the highway unattended does not constitute negligence. . . . A blind man walking upon the highway is bound to use ordinary care only, in determining which the jury should consider the blindness, other infirmities, and all circumstances bearing upon the question as to what care was reasonably necessary to insure his safety."

In Chesapeake & P. Teleph. Co. v. Lysher, 107 Md. 237, 126 Am. St. Rep. 389, 68 Atl. 619, the plaintiff, a blind man employed in the school for the blind in Baltimore, for 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Sowash v. Consolidated Traction Co. 188 Pa. 618, 41 Atl. 743; Keator v. Scranton Traction Co. 191 Pa. 102, 44 L.R.A. 546, 71 Am. St. Rep. 758, 43 Atl. 86; South Covington & C. Street R. Co. v. Beatty, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1845, 50 S. W. 239; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Winters, 175 Ill. 294, 51 N. E. 901; Colorado Springs & C. C. Dist. R. Co. v. Petit, 37 Colo. 326, 86 Pac. 121.

Whether or not the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence is a question of fact for the jury under the circumstances.

Callahan v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 184 Pa. 425, 39 Atl. 222; Maher v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 181 Pa. 391, 37 Atl. 571; Hamilton v. Consolidated Traction Co. 201 Pa. 351, 50 Atl. 946; Taylor v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 113 Pa. 162, 57 Am. Rep. 446, 8 Atl. 43; Henderson v. United Traction Co. 202 Pa. 527, 51 Atl. 1027; Thatcher v. Central Traction Co. 166 Pa. 66, 45 Am. St. Rep. 645, 30 Atl. 1048; Jackson v. Pittsburgh, A. & M. Traction Co. 159 Pa. 399, 28 Atl. 257.

In the case at bar, if the car had made the safety stop, or had been running at the four years had pursued a certain route from his home to the school; he moved along the street by passing his cane over the street in front of him, feeling along with his cane, and following the curbstone as much as he could; he testified that he was proceeding in this way when he fell into a hole in the sidewalk made by the defendant, and left there unguarded. In affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, and holding that the questions of negligence and contributory negligence were properly left to the jury, the court said: "The vital question in the case was whether the plaintiff, a blind man, exercised due care in passing along the sidewalk on the west side of Bradford street on the day of the accident. By the defendant's fifth prayer, the question of due care was directly submitted to the jury, to the effect that, if the jury believed the accident would not have happened if the plaintiff had used proper care on his part, then the verdict of the jury must be for the defendant. By its ninth prayer, the jury were further told that, if they believe that both the plaintiff and defendant were negligent, then their verdict must be for the defendant, as the plaintiff could not recover if his negligence contributed to the accident." The jury was also instructed that the measure of the plaintiff's care was "ordinary care, such as a reasonably prudent man, in his condition as to sight, would be expected to exercise."

In Wedderburn v. Detroit, 144 Mich. 684, 108 N. W. 102, where the plaintiff had been injured by stumbling over a flagstone left for a long time upon the sidewalk, it was held that she was entitled to show the defective condition of her eyesight as bearing upon the question of due care on her part.

B. R. B.

usual rate of speed, the plaintiff would have crossed in safety.

Harkins v. Pittsburg, A. & M. Traction Co. 173 Pa. 149, 33 Atl. 1044; Smith v. Philadelphia Traction Co. 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 129; Beard v. Reading City Pass. R. Co. 3 Pa. Super. Ct. 171; Haughey v. Pittsburg R. Co. 210 Pa. 363, 59 Atl. 1110; Kuntz v. New York, C. & St. L. R. Co. 206 Pa. 162, 55 Atl. 915; Conyngham v. Erie Electric Motor Co. 15 Pa. Super. Ct. 573; Shaughnessy v. Consolidated Traction Co. 17 Pa. Super. Ct. 588; Oehmler v. Pittsburg R. Co. 25 Pa. Super. Ct. 617; Malone v. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. 152 Pa. 390, 25 Atl. 638.

Brown, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The contributory negligence of the plaintiff below was so clear that the defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have prevailed, or, at the close of the testimony, a verdict ought to have been directed in its favor. After leaving a street car on California avenue, in the city of Allegheny, the appellee, with several others, walked down an alley to Beaver avenue, for the purpose of boarding a car on the south side of that avenue. There were two tracks of the defendant company upon it, and to reach the one on the south side it was necessary to cross over the one on the north. The testimony of the appellee is that, after she had passed out of the alley, she stepped down from the curb of the pavement, and looked and listened for an approaching car, and, having neither seen nor heard one, passed over the space between the curb and first track, less than 8 feet in width, continuing to look and listen for a car. The day was clear and bright, and there was nothing to obstruct a view of the track for more than a mile in the direction from which the car came that struck her, for it was straight and level for that distance. She was struck just as her feet were upon the track, though the coming of the car could have been seen for the distance stated. That she was struck the instant she got upon the track is not to be questioned.

William Hiens, a witness to the accident, who was called by the plaintiff, testified as follows:

Q. Where was the car when she stepped on the track?

A. The car was very near on top of her when she stepped on the track. . . .

Q. And the car was on top of her when she stepped on the first rail, wasn't it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And she practically stepped in front of that moving car, didn't she?

A. Yes, sir.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Her own daughter, Mrs. Lillian Mulroy, who witnessed the collision, stated that as soon as her mother stepped across the first rail the car struck her about the center of the track. In Crooks v. Pittsburg R. Co. 216 Pa. 590, 66 Atl. 142, we said: "Where a foot passenger walks or steps directly in front of an approaching car, and is struck at the instant he sets his foot between the rails, there is but one inference which can reasonably be drawn from that fact, and that is the inference of contributory negligence. . . . The testimony is undisputed as to the manner in which this most unfortunate accident occurred. As we have seen, one step, or at the most two, carried the deceased from a point outside the line of the track into collision with the car. It must have occurred in less than a second of time. The facts speak for themselves. The action of the deceased can only be characterized as contributory negligence." And so here the act of the appellee in stepping on the track when the car which struck her was but a few feet from her, and which she must have seen and heard if she had been looking and listening, must be regarded as contributory negligence, barring her right to recover, even if the defendant company was negligent.

But it is urged that the appellee ought not to be adjudged guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law, for two reasons: First, she was nearsighted; and, second, as there was a safety stop a few feet from the alley, in the direction from which the car came, she had a right to presume it would stop there. These two circumstances were not sufficient to send to the jury the question of her contributory negligence. Though nearsighted, she admitted that she could see, for she says she looked to see whether a car was coming, and, even when protesting her nearsightedness, she again admitted that she could see a moving object across the street from her. If she had looked when she was about to put her foot on the track, she would have seen the car, which was then nearer to her than the width of the street. If she was nearsighted, there was the greater reason for caution on her part in crossing the street. Her nearsightedness, instead of relieving her from the duty of ordinary care, imposed upon her the duty of greater precaution to avoid injury. Central R. Co. v. Feller, 84 Pa. 226; Marks v. Petersburg R. Co. 88 Va. 1, 13 S. E. 299; McKinney v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 87 Wis. 282, 58 N. W. 386, 59 N. W. 499. "Those who are deficient in any one of their senses must all the more diligently use the others. Thus a deaf man should look up and down the track even more closely than might be necessary if he could hear well; and one whose eyesight is defective ought to listen all the more carefully for trains." 2 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. 5th ed. § 481. If the appellee had looked before she stepped upon the track, she would have known that the car had not stopped at the safety stop. The learned trial judge correctly instructed the jury that she could not escape the charge of contributory negligence by reason of being nearsighted, nor relieve herself of that charge under a belief that the car would stop at the safety stop; but he should have gone further, and, in view of her clear contributory negligence, to which we have referred, affirmed defendant's point.

The first assignment is sustained, and the judgment reversed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

CHARLES A. MADDEN, Admr., etc., of Helen Yarsansky, Deceased,
v.
BOSTON & MAINE RAILROAD.

(76 N. H. 379, 83 Atl. 129.)

Negligence — fire on premises — duty to trespassing children.

A railroad company which does not know of the presence of children on its track, and Note. — Duty to guard against injury to trespassing children by fire.

That the general rule that the mere fact that a trespasser is a child will not create nor impose on the owner of property any duty to keep his premises safe finds no exception in the case of one who has set out a fire on his premises is evident from the decisions in MADDEN v. BOSTON & M. R. Co. and the few cases collected in this note, all of which deny the liability, whether the jurisdiction is in general committed to the turntable doctrine or not.

In Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. 82 Minn. 60, 51 L.R.A. 645, 83 Am. St. Rep. 410, 84 N. W. 462, where it appears that defendant set fire to stumps and rubbish on its right of way and, a child four years of age went to the fire, and while playing with it was burned so severely that she died, it was held that defendant was not bound to exercise ordinary care so to guard a fire on its right of way that children intruding thereon could not come in dangerous contact with the fire, though induced so to do by its attractiveness. The court said: It set fire to rubbish on its right of way presumably for the purpose of getting rid of it. In so doing it was executing upon its own premises, in a lawful way, necessary work. It exercised no actual force against the child, and the danger of injury from the fire was not concealed. The child was an intruder upon de- 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) is not charged with knowledge that they are likely to be there because of their habit of using it as a playground, is not, when burning the grass off the right of way, bound to anticipate the presence of children, and warn them away, under penalty of being liable for injury to one who trespasses upon the track and is burned.

(April 2, 1912.)

TRANSFER by the Superior Court of Cheshire County for the opinion of the Supreme Court upon plaintiff's exceptions, after direction of a verdict in favor of defendant, of an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries resulting in death, which were alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Exceptions overruled.

Plaintiff's intestate, a child six years of age, was burned so badly that she died from the injuries, through her clothing igniting from the fire which was burning upon or adjacent to defendant's right of way, upon which its employees were engaged in removing and burning grass and weeds.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. Joseph Madden, for plaintiff:

Permitting the fire to travel and spread was practically a new setting on the land adjoining the Yarsansky home, and it was active intervention.

defendant's land, and by her own act was injured by meddling with the fire. It is true she knew no better and was an innocent trespasser, but the innocence of the intruder in cases of this kind does not necessarily establish the legal duty of the landowner to protect him from injury. The law does not, as a general rule, impose restraints and conditions upon an owner's lawful and necessary use of his land which is only dangerous to persons who intrude thereon.

And in Paolino v. McKendall, 24 R. I. 432, 60 L.R.A. 133, 96 Am. St. Rep. 736, 53 Atl. 268, it was said that one who, for the purpose of burning up waste material, starts a fire on vacant land, need not so guard it as to prevent injury to one who is attracted there by childish instincts, as no satisfactory ground could be found for the distinction sought to be made between infants and adults in the duty of the owner or occupier of land to a mere trespasser to keep his premises safe.

In Coleman v. Robert Graves Co. 39 Misc. 85, 78 N. Y. Supp. 893, it was held that one who kindles a pile of shavings on his own premises, in the proper conduct of his business, owes no duty of active vigilance to prevent children from playing with the fire, and so was not liable for injuries received by a nine-year-old girl, who, while poking in the ashes, allowed her dress to catch fire. The court said: "The burning of the chips or shavings thrown out from the defendant's factory, it must be assumed, Felch v. Concord R. Co. 66 N. H. 320, 29 Atl. 557.

Defendant was guilty of culpable ignorance of the presence of these children.

Mitchell v. Boston & M. R. Co. 68 N. H. 96, 34 Atl. 674; Hobbs v. George W. Blanchard & Sons Co. 75 N. H. 73, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 939, 70 Atl. 1082; Nashua Iron & Steel Co. v. Worcester & N. R. Co. 62 N. H. 162.

Mr. John E. Allen for defendant.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

One of the facts it was essential for the plaintiff to prove or establish by a preponderance of evidence was that the defendant was guilty of a breach of some duty it owed to the intestate, which naturally resulted in her injury. But its duty to her, if she was a trespasser when her injury occurred, would not be the same as it would if she was not a trespasser.

It was a matter in dispute at the trial whether she was on the defendant's land when she caught fire, or on her father's premises. According to the testimony, no was done for the purpose of properly conducting its business. While it might be apprehended that children playing upon the vacant lot of the defendant would play around the fire, and even play with the fire, and, as urged on behalf of the plaintiff, be enticed to search in the hot ashes for the pieces of brass, the setting fire to a pile of shavings on the lot was not in the nature of a trap for the unwary. A child of nine years knows that fire will burn. The little girl, as she says, was aware of this. There was fire in the ashes, and she used a stick. She did not think her dress would take fire; neither would the defendant's employee, who threw out the chips and set fire to them. The accident which overtook this child is extraordinary; one which, in the exercise of reasonable forethought, would not have been apprehended. But it is not necessary to place the decision upon that ground. The defendant here, under the circumstances . . . owed no duty to the plaintiff requiring active vigilance to prevent the occurrence of such an accident."

In Kalz v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 76 Minn. 351, 79 N. W. 310, an action brought to recover damages for fatally burning a child by fire set out by a railroad company on its right of way for purposes of consumption of grass thereon, it was held that, as the evidence strongly supported the contention of defendant that the child was a trespasser, a refusal to direct a verdict for defendant was error. In this case there was apparently no contention by plaintiff that defendant would be liable even though the child was a trespasser, but he based his right to recover on the theory that the child was burned outside the right of way, at a place to which the fire set had spread, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) one saw her when her clothing caught fire; and she was first seen on the defendant's land, enveloped in flames. How she caught fire was not disclosed by the evidence; nor did it appear where she was at that particular time. As ruled by the court, there was no evidence that the deceased was not a trespasser when she caught fire. She was first discovered on the defendant's right of way after her clothing was on fire. How long she had been there is not disclosed by the evidence; and it would be the merest conjecture to suppose that the fire came in contact with her while she was upon her father's premises, and that she then escaped over the wall onto the defendant's land. She must be treated as a trespasser.

The only evidence that the defendant's servants actually knew of her presence was that when they were attracted by her screams she was only some 15 feet from them; and from this it is argued that they must have known she was about there before she caught fire. In the absence of any evidence that she had occupied that position for more than an instant of time, or where she caught fire, or that she had done any-which the appellate court held to be contrary to the evidence.

Generally as to duty to discover peril or disability of trespasser, see note in 69 L.R.A. 543.

Application of turntable doctrine.

In Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. supra, the court, while approving the so-called turntable doctrine, declined to extend its application to the case at bar, and, in discussing the limits of that doctrine, said: It is not practicable to lay down any absolute rule as to the limitations. The manifest trend, however, of all the decisions of this court, is to limit its application to attractive and dangerous machinery and to other similar cases where the danger is latent. We are not prepared to say that cases may not arise outside of this classification to which the doctrine may be extended, but we do hold that, as a general rule, the doctrine of the turntable cases must be limited to cases of attractive and dangerous machinery and to other similar cases where the danger is latent. This rule may not be strictly logical, but it is a necessary one, unless landowners are to be made insurers of the safety of children when trespassing upon their premises.

But in Paolino v. McKendall and Coleman v. Robert Graves Co. supra, the turntable doctrine was disapproved; the court in the first case stating that it is a doctrine which construes a mere temptation as an allurement sufficient legally to constitute an invitation to enter the premises of another.

As to the extent of application of attractive nuisances, see note in 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1124. J. H. B.

thing before screaming to attract the attention of the men engaged in their work on the track, it cannot be reasonably inferred that they knew of her presence in their vicinity before she caught fire. The evidence is not sufficient to authorize a finding that they knew she was in a place of danger until she was in imminent peril.

Nor does the evidence have any legitimate tendency to show that the workmen ought to have known that she or other little children were liable to be there. It does not appear that the defendant's way was frequented by children. It had not been used as a playground; and there was no reason to anticipate that children would trespass upon it when it was being burned over. It is argued that the fire was attractive to children, and that the defendant, knowing this fact, ought to have anticipated that they would trespass upon its way to play with the fire. But this assumption is not universally true; for many children are repelled by the sight of a conflagration. It is impossible, without other evidence, to account for the presence of the deceased on the defendant's way. What induced her to go there is problematical; and it cannot be inferred that she was there because the fire attracted her, in order to draw the further inference that the railroad men ought, in the exercise of reasonable care, to have known of her presence in time to warn her of her danger. When she screamed, nothing could be done to save her. If, therefore, it would have been the defendant's duty to warn her of her danger, or to drive her from its land, if its servants had known or ought to have known of her presence (Hobbs v. George W. Blanchard & Sons Co. 75 N. H. 73, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 93, 70 Atl. 1082; Buch v. Amory Mfg. Co. 69 N. H. 257, 76 Am. St. Rep. 163, 44 Atl. 800), the fact that it cannot be charged with that knowledge prevents the application of that doctrine, and shows that her injury is not attributable to its violation of any duty it owed to her. It had a right to burn the dry grass by the side of its track, without keeping watch for casual trespassers who might possibly get into the flames and be injured (Shea v. Concord & M. R. Co. 60 N. H. 361, 41 Atl. 774). Whether, if it had known the deceased was present, it would have been its duty to protect her from being burned by the fire, on the ground that the fire was "active intervention" by the landowner, it is unnecessary to consider.

The exception to the exclusion of evidence of the declaration of the little girl an hour after the accident, explaining how she caught fire, presents no question of law for the court. The evidence may have been excluded by the court as a matter of discretion 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

tion. "Much must be left to the discretion of the court in admitting or rejecting such testimony." Dorr v. Atlantic Shore Line R. Co. 76 N. H. 160, 162, 80 Atl. 336, 337. Exceptions overruled.

All concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

RE WILL OF WARREN B. FIELD, Deceased.

AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR PSYCHICAL RESEARCH, Appt.

MARY H. McALISTER, Resp't.

(204 N. Y. 448, 97 N. E. 881.)

Will — signature — superadded sheets.

A holographic will executed on a printed blank is properly subscribed by the testator at the end of it, if the signature appears in the proper place in the blank, although in the blank left for the disposing clause testator states that he disposes of his property as per the provisions of the pages attached and consecutively numbered to a number specified, which sheets are then pinned in the blank, one on top of the other, with writing on one side only, and when read as though inserted where pinned, the will reads logically and consecutively.

(February 20, 1912.)

APPEAL by a legatee from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a decree of the Surrogate's Court for Kings County refusing to admit to probate the will of Warren B. Field, deceased. Reversed.

Statement by Vann, J.:

A paper purporting to be the last will and testament of Warren B. Field, deceased, dated January 10, 1910, was refused probate by the surrogate of Kings county on the 25th of July, 1910. The American Society for Psychical Research, one of the legatees not cited in the surrogate's court, appealed to the appellate division, where the order of the surrogate was unanimously affirmed, and thereupon an appeal was taken to this court.

The paper was partly written and partly Note.—The question when a will is deemed to have been signed or subscribed at the end is treated in notes to Sears v. Sears, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 353, Mader v. Apple, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 515, and Re Stinson, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1173.

The question whether writing the name in the body of a holographic will is a signature thereto is discussed in the note to Meads v. Earle, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 64.

printed; but all the writing was by the decedent's own hand. In drafting it, a printed form was used, consisting of one sheet, at the head of the first page of which the printed part was as follows: "In the name of God, Amen. I, ..., being of sound and disposing mind and memory, and considering the uncertainty of this life, do make, publish, and declare this to be my last will and testament as follows: First, after all my lawful debts are paid, I." Then followed a blank space of 5 or 6 inches. Near the bottom of the sheet was the following printed matter: "I hereby appoint to be execut... of this my last will and testament, hereby revoking all former wills. In witness whereof I have hereunto subscribed my name and affixed my seal the day of in the year of our Lord one thousand, nine hundred Witnesses."

The first blank in the printed form was filled with the name of the decedent, and the last blanks with the name of the Kings County Trust Company, as executor, and the date in the clause commencing "In witness whereof." In the blank space of 5 or 6 inches, and directly beneath the printed line reading, "First, after all my lawful debts are paid, I," the decedent wrote as follows: "will and direct that my estate be settled as per the provisions of the pages hereto attached and numbered from one to six inclusive, and this is to stand unchallenged and unchanged in any form provided I decease before a will is drawn by my attorney." Immediately after these words in said blank space, there was attached, by two pins, six sheets in the handwriting of the decedent, numbered by him at the top consecutively from one to six, which contain the disposing provisions of the will. The first of the attached sheets begins as follows: "January 10, 1910. Provisions which I desire made in my will and which, should I pass away before will is drawn, that I desire executed exactly as though drawn in an ironclad legal form. Therefore, I, Warren B. Field, of 42 Garden Place, Brooklyn, N. Y., do appoint as my attorney to draw said will the law firm of George V. Brower, Temple Bar, Brooklyn, N. Y., and as executor of my said will the Kings County Trust Company, of Brooklyn, N. Y., under the following positive directions and instructions, to wit." Then follow the testamentary dispositions made in great detail. The last sentence of the sixth sheet of those attached in simply a direction to pay a certain fund in various proportions to three individuals.

Nothing was written in the blank spaces of the printed form, except as stated. The signature of the decedent was written in the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

usual place on the right-hand side at the bottom of the printed form, directly beneath the clause commencing, "in witness whereof," as filled out with the date. The signatures of the two witnesses were to the left of the signature of the decedent, and right beneath the printed word "witnesses" on the form. Below the signatures was a printed attestation clause; but it was not filled out or signed. When the paper was signed by the decedent and the two witnesses, the six separate pages were already attached in the manner above described. Due proof of the execution of the paper as a will in compliance with the requirements of the statute was shown by the testimony of the subscribing witnesses. The original paper, furnished for use on this review, reads continuously and naturally from the beginning to the end thereof; each of the "attached sheets" being written on one side only, so that it can be conveniently turned over backward in reading the instrument in the usual way.

Mr. Miles M. Dawson, for appellant:

Upon the respondent's theory that the will should be read commencing at the top of the printed form, the will is notwithstanding signed at the end thereof.

Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516; Re Dake, 98 App. Div. 628, 90 N. Y. Supp. 213; Re Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294, 56 N. E. 529, 43 App. Div. 394, 60 N. Y. Supp. 141.

Messrs. McKeen, Brewster, & Morgan, for respondent Mary H. McAlister:

The will was not subscribed at the end thereof.

Re Fults, 42 App. Div. 594, 59 N. Y. Supp. 756; Re Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, 60 Am. St. Rep. 616, 47 N. E. 272; Re Field, 144 App. Div. 737, 129 N. Y. Supp. 590; Re Emmons, 110 App. Div. 701, 96 N. Y. Supp. 506; Re Dake, 75 App. Div. 403, 78 N. Y. Supp. 29; Re Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294, 56 N. E. 529; Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516; Re Blair, 84 Hun, 581, 32 N. Y. Supp. 845.

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The surrogate refused probate, because the paper purporting to be a will was not "subscribed by the testator at the end" thereof as required by statute, and the decree was affirmed by the appellate division for the same reason. As the essential facts were stipulated, and the original paper itself is produced as one of the facts agreed upon, the question whether it was signed at the end is a question of law. The entire printed form was treated below as the first page, the sheets numbered from one to six as succeeding pages, and thus the conclusion was reached that the decedent did not sign at the end of the paper. When read in this way the instrument does not read naturally or consecutively, and does not make sense. The physical position of the six sheets, the place and method of attaching them, and the closing paragraphs at the bottom of the printed form, are substantially ignored. The natural order of reading the paper is subverted and an artificial order substituted, not to aid, but to overturn, the obvious intention. The natural order of reading it is to begin with the opening words on the printed blank and, continuing with form and sense reasonably connected, to read the first of the numbered sheets, and, turning it over in the usual way with legal papers, to read the other sheets in their actual order, and after the last has been read, to turn that over also, when the closing paragraphs of the printed form follow, the end of the instrument is reached, and no part thereof follows the signature. Who would read it in any other way, unless he wished to destroy it as a will? Who would turn over the six sheets without reading them, read the testimonium clause, and then turn back to read the rest? In reading an ordinary card calendar with the record of the month of December printed on the card itself and descriptive matter printed above, with the records of the other months on slips attached in the usual way, that of January being on top, who would not regard December as the end, both of the calendar and the card? The slips become by the place and method of attachment virtually embodied in the card. So the six sheets of the paper in question are part of the body of the will, being physically incorporated therein, and not, as in some of the cases, wholly without the body and merely referred to therein. The essence of the paper subscribed is not the printed form alone, but the printed form with the six sheets so inserted therein as to become blended therewith at the point of insertion. Thus the physical and the literary beginning, body, and end of the instrument are the same, and the signature of the testator is found at the end.

The position of the courts below, however, finds some support in the adjudged cases; for we have gone far to protect testators from the danger of imposition and fraud through unauthorized additions and changes in their wills. That danger does not exist when, as in this case, the will is holographic, and, while we do not regard that fact as controlling, it is worthy of remark that none of the six numbered sheets could have been changed without the co-operation of the testator himself. While the pins could be removed and other sheets substituted, this is true of many wills written on different sheets and fastened together by rivets or tape. There is no statute forbidding the use of separate sheets, or directing how they shall be joined together. Cases where wills have been altered after execution are very rare, as the records of the courts show, while cases where the intention of the testator has been wholly defeated by a rigid construction of the statute requiring subscription at the end of the will are alarmingly frequent. Thus, Judge Cullen, writing for the appellate division in Re Andrews, 43 App. Div. 394, 401, 60 N. Y. Supp. 141, 146, said: "With every disposition to uphold this will, we do not see how it can be done by this court. If limitations or qualifications are to be made on the cases on which this opinion is based, those limitations must proceed from the court of appeals. If the decision now made by us should be upheld by that court, it will follow that at least six wills (including one in the fourth department, Re Fufts, 42 App. Div. 593, 59 N. Y. Supp. 756), undoubtedly containing the true testamentary dispositions of testators, and executed by those testators with the intent to conform with the statutes of this state, will have been held void because of the interpretation placed on the statutory requirements for safeguards against fraud. The rule which our decision enforces in this case operates only to prevent fraudulent additions to testamentary instruments, and not as a security against wills forged in their entirety. We think the decisions of the courts of this state will be examined in vain in the attempt to find six cases of alleged fraudulent additions to wills, or even half that number; and it must be conceded that as to this supposed danger the remedy has proved in practice far worse than the disease. In England a statute similar to our own, and construed as strictly by the courts of that country as our statute has been construed by our courts, was passed in 1837 (1 Vict. chap. 26). The evils resulting from it proved so great that in 1853 (15 and 16 Vict. chap. 24) it was modified. 1 Jarman Wills, 5th Am. ed. 106."

The evil of fraudulent changes in wills is rare, while the evil of defeating wills altogether in the manner suggested is common. Hence we think we have gone far enough in the direction of rigid construction, and that the doctrine of certain authorities should not be extended, lest, in the effort to prevent wrong, we do more harm than good.

The appellate division, not without some reason, relief upon Re Whitney, 153 N. Y. 259, 60 Am. St. Rep. 616, 47 N. E. 272, and Re Andrews, 162 N. Y. 1, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294, 56 N. E. 529. In the earlier case, the facts, as stated by Judge Edward T. Bartlett, in his opinion, were as follows: "The will is drawn upon a printed blank covering only one page, and the testator and subscribing witnesses signed at the foot thereof. The subdivisions of the will, marked, respectively, 'first' and 'second,' fill the entire blank space in the printed form, and at the end of the second subdivision are the words 'see annexed sheet.' On a separate slip of paper are written two additional subdivisions, marked, respectively, 'third' and 'fourth,' and this is attached to the face of the will, immediately over the first and second subdivisions, by metal staples, so that the slip annexed has to be raised up or turned back, in order to read the first two clauses." We held that probate of the instrument was properly denied, citing Re O'Neil, 91 N. Y. 516, and Re Conway, 124 N. Y. 455, 11 L.R.A. 796, 26 N. E. 1028.

In the O'Neil Case, the instrument was drawn on a printed blank, the formal commencement being on the first page, and the formal termination at the foot of the third page. The blank space was filled on the first, second, and third pages, and the last or thirteenth clause of the will was partly written on the third, and the balance carried over to the blank fourth page. The names of the testator and the witnesses were subscribed near the bottom of the third page, below the formal printed termination of the will, and there only. The last clause was below and beyond the signature.

In the Conway Case, there was a similar state of facts, with the exception that at the end of the provisions in the body of the will were the words "carried to back of will," and upon the back of the sheet was the words "continued." Following this word were various bequests, and then below them were added the words "signature on face of the will," and there only was the will signed.

In the Whitney Case, as is well said by the learned counsel for the appellant, the order of the sheets had to be disturbed, if the will was to be read consecutively, while in the case at bar the order must be disturbed violently, if one is to escape reading the will consecutively. The sheets attached in the Whitney will covered the preceding clauses thereof, and prevented its being read consecutively; in the case at bar, they covered only the subsequent clauses, and so enable it to be read consecutively. In other words, we held in the Whitney Case that when the instrument could not be read without turning the leaves backward and forward, it did not comply with the statute. That is not this case, and while the facts are somewhat similar, the principle involved cannot be extended without danger.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In Re Andrews, a printed form was used, consisting of one sheet, the two leaves of which were joined from top to bottom on the left side. After the printed formal part at the top of the first page was a blank space that was filled by the draftsman, who then skipped the second page, which had the attestation clause at the top, and filled the third, writing at the top thereof "2d page." He then wrote on the second page, at the top, "3d page," filled out the attestation clause directly beneath, and it was subscribed and witnessed at that point only. Hence the end of the will was found on the second page, and the part written on the third page was neither subscribed by the testator, nor incorporated by reference into the part that was subscribed by him. When read in its natural order, the will did not run consecutively. It did not make sense without skipping backward and forward. As was said by Judge Bartlett in his opinion: "We have here on one entire piece of paper, folded so as to make four pages, a complete will, so far as form goes, on the first and second pages, and then follows on the third page of the blank, and after the signatures of testatrix and witnesses on the second page of the blank, a page marked '2d page,' not connected with the will proper in any way, but complete by itself." 162 N. Y. 10, 48 L.R.A. 662, 76 Am. St. Rep. 294, 56 N. E. 532.

We regard the decision in the Andrews Case as extreme, and as marking a boundary beyond which we should not go. The natural end of a will is where the draftsman stopped writing in the consecutive order of composition, which, in the Andrews will, preceded the third page, and in the will before us succeeded the six numbered pages. The will before us, when read consecutively as the mass of mankind would read it, has the signature at the physical and natural end thereof. We think that the will of the decedent should have been admitted to probate. We base our decision largely on the natural and consecutive method of reading, without turning backward or skipping a part and then looking forward, only to turn backward again, in order to have the sense connected and continuous. Form should not be raised above substance, in order to destroy a will, and the substantial thing in this case is a paper which reads straight-forward and without interruption from the beginning to the end, and when thus read the signature is found at the end.

The order of the Appellate Division and decree of the Surrogate should be reversed, with costs in all courts payable out of the estate, and the proceeding remitted to the Surrogate of Kings County, with directions to admit the will to probate.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Haight, Werner, Willard Bartlett, Chase, and Collin, JJ., concur.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.
(In Banc.)

TUNNEL MINING & LEASING COMPANY, Appt.,
v.

J. E. COOPER.

(50 Colo. 390, 115 Pac. 901.)

Trial — excessive verdict — remittitur — judgment for new trial.

1. The court cannot enter judgment upon

Note. — Power of trial court to cure an excessive verdict by requiring or permitting a reduction where true measure of damages not ascertainable by mere computation.

I. Introductory, 1064.

II. Peremptory reductions, 1064.

III. Permissive remittiturs.

a. In general.

1. Theory that trial court has power, 1067.

2. Contrary doctrine, 1075.

b. Where there is prejudice or passion.

1. Not allowable, 1079.

2. Allowable, 1083.

I. Introductory.

This note relates to the power of the trial court, and is limited to verdicts in actions where the damages are not capable of computation. Cases where, under the local practice, motions for a new trial are made in the appellate court, or before a general term, are not included.

For cases on the power of appellate courts to interfere with verdict for excessive damages, see the note to Burdiet v. Missouri P. R. Co. 26 L.R.A. 384. The questions as to the reduction of verdicts which exceed the claim of the declaration or writ, and as to reductions for the purpose of ousting appellate courts, are also excluded.

The practice by the trial court of denying a motion for a new trial upon condition that the plaintiff remit a part of a verdict, even in cases where the damages are not liquidated, is growing in favor, and this is now the more general rule, though it is still opposed in some jurisdictions. A few courts go further and permit this practice by the trial courts even where there is passion and prejudice in the verdict. As to peremptory reductions, there seems to be no court except that of Wisconsin which requires a reduction of part of a verdict for damages of this character without the con-a verdict after remittitur, which was excessive as a result of passion or prejudice, where the statute provides for a new trial in such cases.

Same — finding of prejudice.

2. A finding by a court that the verdict in a personal-injury action was excessive, and its direction of a remittitur, amounts, as matter of law, to a finding that it was the result of passion or prejudice, where, under the statute, the court has no authority to interfere with the verdict except for such cause, although the court may expressly declare that it is not able to see that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice.

Same — judicial declaration of prejudice.

3. The court will declare that the allowance of $38,750, for injury to a miner capable of earning $1,200 per year, which consists of the fracture of his collar bone, which shortened in knitting, and of three sent of the party in whose favor the verdict is rendered.

The remittitur of wrongful items is, of course, not within the scope of this note, but it may be mentioned that, following the general rule as to such items, it has been held that a remittitur of exemplary damages will cure a wrongful inclusion of them in the case, if such inclusion has not had an improper influence on the rest of the verdict. (See Freiberg v. Elliott, — Tex. —, 8 S. W. 322; Stone v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 88 Wis. 98, 59 N. W. 457; also San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Morgan, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 169, which was, however, reversed on another ground in 92 Tex. 98, 46 S. W. 281. The reader will remember that the action of the trial court in ordering a new trial absolutely for excessive unliquidated damages is rarely disturbed in the appellate courts.

II. Peremptory reductions.

As heretofore stated, in actions for unliquidated damages the trial court may not enter reductions of damages without the consent of the party favored by the verdict. Kennon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696 (dictum); Duke v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 172 Fed. 684 (dictum) affirmed in 112 C. C. A. 564, 192 Fed. 306; Albin v. Kinney, 96 Ill. 214 (dictum) Brown v. McLeish, 71 Iowa, 381, 32 N. W. 385; Sourwine v. Truscott, 25 Hun, 67 (as explained in Williams v. Empire Woolen Co. 7 App. Div. 345, 39 N. Y. Supp. 941); Isley v. Virginia Bridge & Iron Co. 143 N. C. 51, 55 S. E. 416; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cogswell, 23 Okla. 181, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 837, 99 Pac. 923; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118 (dictum); Young v. Cowden, 98 Tenn. 577, 40 S. W. 1088 (dictum); Rodgers v. Bailey, 68 W. Va. 186, 69 S. E. 693. See also, as indicating a similar view, Dickie v. Henderson, 95 Ark. 78, 128 S. W. 561; Shayne v. White, 81 App. Div. 600, ribs, which failed to unite, so that normal protection is not given to certain vital parts, and he has to wear a belt to protect them, and the shortening of one leg a half inch, so that he is left slightly lame, is, because of its amount, the result of passion or prejudice, or of a total misconception by the jury of its duties and obligations.

(May 1, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Teller County, entered upon a verdict in plaintiff's favor, after remittitur, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Milton Smith and Charles R. Brock, for appellant:

The court erred in allowing a remittitur,

81 N. Y. Supp. 372. See contra, Wisconsin cases, infra.

In Kenyon v. Gilmer, 131 U. S. 22, 33 L. ed. 110, 9 Sup. Ct. Rep. 696, an action for personal injuries, the Supreme Court of the United States, in reversing the decision of the supreme court of a territory, which reduced the amount of a judgment absolutely, without giving the plaintiff his election said, after referring to the Montana statutes: "Under these statutes, as at common law, the court, upon the hearing of a motion for a new trial, may, in the exercise of its judicial discretion, either absolutely deny the motion, or grant a new trial generally, or it may order that a new trial be had unless the plaintiff elects to remit a certain part of the verdict, and that, if he does so remit, judgment be entered for the rest. . . . In a case in which damages for a tort have been assessed by a jury at an entire sum, no court of law, upon a motion for a new trial for excessive damages and for insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, is authorized, according to its own estimate of the amount of damages which the plaintiff ought to have recovered, to enter an absolute judgment for any other sum than that assessed by the jury."

In Massadillo v. Nashville & K. R. Co. 89 Tenn. 661, 15 S. W. 445, where the plaintiff, under protest, remitted a part of the verdict in order to prevent a new trial, it was held that this was error; that therefore the verdict must be considered as intact; and as it appeared to be excessive, and showed that there was passion and prejudice, a new trial was ordered.

Cutting off defendant's appeal.

In this connection it may be noted that the court may not, as a condition of a reduction, cut off the defendant's right to appeal.

In Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. 81 S. C. 522, 62 S. E. 848, where the trial court ordered "that if the defendant, within thirty days from the date of the filing of this order, tenders to plaintiff the sum of $10,000 and costs, in full satisfaction of said verdict, and if the plaintiff declines to accept said amount and release the defendant upon record from all further liability for said verdict, then a new trial is ordered; but if defendant fail or decline, within said period of time, to make the tender aforesaid, then a new trial be, and is hereby, refused,"—it was held that this order was erroneous, and that it must be changed to an order granting the defendant a new trial unless the plaintiff should, within a certain time, remit $5,000 from the verdict, which was for $15,000.

F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, 31 Colo. 82, 71 Pac. 384; Deep Min. & Drainage Co. v. Fitzgerald, 21 Colo. 533, 43 Pac. 210; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fox, 11 Bush, 495; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Scott, 34 Colo. 99, 81 Pac. 763.

Mr. Charles C. Butler, for appellee:

The verdict was not the result of passion or prejudice.

Mitchell v. Broadway & S. A. R. Co. 70 Hun, 387, 24 N. Y. Supp. 32; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Flaherty, 105 Ill. App. 14; Postal Teleg. Cable Co. v. Coote, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 57 S. W. 912; Colorado Springs Electric Co. v. Soper, 38 Colo. 126, 88 Pac. 161; Todd v. Demeree, 15 Colo. 88, 24 Pac. 563; Browns v. Lutin, 16 Colo. App. 263, 64 Pac. 674; Haycraft v. Griggsby, 94 Mo. App. 74, dered "that if the defendant, within thirty days from the date of the filing of this order, tenders to plaintiff the sum of $10,000 and costs, in full satisfaction of said verdict, and if the plaintiff declines to accept said amount and release the defendant upon record from all further liability for said verdict, then a new trial is ordered; but if defendant fail or decline, within said period of time, to make the tender aforesaid, then a new trial be, and is hereby, refused,"—it was held that this order was erroneous, and that it must be changed to an order granting the defendant a new trial unless the plaintiff should, within a certain time, remit $5,000 from the verdict, which was for $15,000.

The same was held in a similar case in Jackson v. Southern Cotton Oil Co. 81 S. C. 564, 62 S. E. 854.

See also Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Wallace, 90 Miss 609, 122 Am. St. Rep. 321, 43 So. 469 (infra, III. a, 1, Constitutional power of trial court).

In Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Foster, 10 Lea, 351, the court, in reversing the judgment, said: "Upon considering the motion for a new trial, the court below stated that for certain specified reasons he considered the verdict excessive; but that, if the plaintiff would consent to reduce it one half, or to $5,000, he would not grant a new trial; but if the plaintiff agreed to so reduce the amount of the verdict, the defendant must agree not to appeal, or else the verdict should stand for the whole amount; whereupon the plaintiff offered to reduce the amount of recovery to $5,000, if the defendant would agree not to appeal, and would pay the amount and all costs promptly. This defendant declined to do. Whereupon the court overruled his motion for a new trial. This proceeding was in effect an attempt to compel the defendant to compromise the suit by paying an amount fixed by the court or else pay the whole amount of a verdict which, as is fairly deducible from the record, he considered excessive to 67 S. W. 965; La Salle Pressed Brick Co. v. Coe, 126 Ill. App. 308; Harrison v. Harrison, 129 Ga. 282, 58 S. E. 831; Papot v. Southwestern R. Co. 74 Ga. 296; City & Suburban R. Co. v. Waldhaur, 84 Ga. 706, 11 S. E. 452; Bennett v. Runyon, 4 Dana, 422; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Connelly, 9 Ky. L. Rep. 993, 7 S. W. 914; Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Rice, 46 Ill. App. 60; Deep Min. & Drainage Co. v. Fitzgerald, 21 Colo. 533, 43 Pac. 210.

Bailey, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this action, for the recovery of damages for personal injuries, the plaintiff had a verdict for $38,750. One assignment of the motion for a new trial is based upon the fifth subdivision of § 217 of the Code, providing therefor, where excessive damages appear to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. The trial court found the award excessive, and advised the plaintiff that a new trial would be granted, unless $28,750 were remitted from the verdict. To this plaintiff assented and there was judgment for $10,000. The defendant objected and excepted to the order allowing such remittitur, and to the judgment for $10,000, claiming that, since the verdict was held excessive, it had an absolute right, under the Code, to a new trial.

These objections, with many others, are here for consideration, the case having been the extent of $5,000. He should have granted a new trial."

It may be here noted that in St. Louis & N. A. R. Co. v. Mathis, 76 Ark. 184, 113 Am. St. Rep. 85, 91 S. W. 763, it was held "that it was beyond the power of a legislature to prohibit an inquiry in this court as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the amount of damages assessed by a jury, or require a litigant to surrender his right of appeal as a condition upon which he may accept the reduction by the trial court of an excessive verdict," and that therefore the statute of Arkansas of 1901 was so far invalid. The statute provides: "The verdict of any jury, rendered in any action for the recovery of damages, where the measure thereof is indeterminate or uncertain, shall not be held to be excessive, or be set aside as excessive, except for some erroneous instruction, or upon evidence, aside from the amount of the damages assessed, that it was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice; provided, that the circuit judge presiding at the trial may, on motion for a new trial, filed by the losing party, if he deems the verdict excessive, indicate the amount of such excess, and thereupon, if the losing party shall offer to file and enter of record a release of all errors that may have accrued at the trial if the prevailing party will remit the amount so deemed excessive, and the prevailing party shall refuse to remit the same, the verdict shall be set aside."

Wisconsin practice.

In Wisconsin there has recently been created a peculiar method or practice which involves the reduction of a verdict without the plaintiff's consent, and the cutting off of the defendant's right of appeal as a condition. This is stated in Heimlich v. Tabor, 123 Wis. 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10, as, on the one hand, permitting the plaintiff to remit, "and also to permit the defendant, in such a situation, to terminate the litigation, whether plaintiff is willing or not, by consenting to judgment for a sum sufficiently less than the verdict to, in the judgment of the court, cure the error."

This method was laid down as the course to be pursued in the appellate court, in Rueping v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 123 Wis. 319, 101 N. W. 710, and is illustrated in Beach v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 135 Wis. 550, 116 N. W. 245, where the court said, in affirming the judgment: "The plaintiff had a verdict for $20,000, and the trial court, upon motion for a new trial, stating, among other things, that the damages awarded by said verdict were excessive, granted said motion conditionally; that is to say, regarding $9,000 as the maximum amount for which an impartial jury would probably find a verdict for the plaintiff, and $5,000 as the minimum, he awarded to the plaintiff the option to take judgment for $5,000 and costs, to the defendant the option to submit to judgment for $9,000 and costs, and in case neither party exercised his option, the verdict to be set aside and a new trial ordered. The plaintiff elected to take judgment for $5,000 damages, and for this amount, with costs, judgment was rendered in his favor." And the opinion of the trial judge was approved, wherein he said: "The right and duty of this court to give the parties the option of having judgment entered for a less amount rather than be compelled to retry the case are no longer in doubt in this state. Rueping v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 123 Wis. 319, 101 N. W. 710; Heimlich v. Tabor, 123 Wis. 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10. And it is immaterial what caused the jury to render the excessive verdict. It is sufficient that it is excessive, from prejudice or other cause. An excessively large verdict, in the absence of any other explanation, may be usually treated as prima facie evidence that the jury was not unprejudiced, fair, and impartial. . . . The court is not authorized to determine what amount of damages the plaintiff shall recover, thus substituting his judgment for that of the jury. But the court is to determine the maximum and minimum amounts that an impartial and unprejudiced jury would probably name, as no two juries, brought up by defendant for review on appeal.

Whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions, in this state it is settled, in the case of F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, 31 Colo. 82, 71 Pac. 384, in a well and carefully considered opinion, upon a comprehensive review of all the decisions to this point, that where, in an action for damages for personal injuries, and in other like actions, the verdict is excessive, and is returned as a result of passion or prejudice, it is beyond the power of the trial court to allow a remittitur of the excess, and enter a judgment for the residue, but that the verdict must be set aside, and a new trial granted. The conclusion of the court in that case, in an opinion by Chief Justice fair and impartial and unprejudiced, would arrive at the same amount. The question is, what would be the smallest amount that any such jury might assess, and what the largest amount that any other such jury might honestly assess? and the only way suggested for solving this question is by ascertaining what such juries have done in similar cases, and what amounts have been held to be excessively large or small. When these two limits have been arrived at, reasonable doubts being resolved in favor of making the minimum small and the maximum large, the court then gives the defendant the option of consenting to judgment against him for the larger amount, and if he does not so elect, the option is then given to the plaintiff to take judgment for the smaller amount, and, in the event of neither option being exercised, the verdict is set aside and a new trial awarded."

This is an abandonment of the former views of the court, as shown in Schultz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 48 Wis. 375, 4 N. W. 399, where the court said: "The learned circuit judge denied the motion for a new trial, but stated that he thought the damages assessed by the jury excessive; and he declined to sign judgment for the sum so assessed until the plaintiff stipulated to discharge the judgment if the defendant should, within sixty days after the judgment should be signed, pay thereon the sum of $3,000, together with the costs. . .

We are aware of no law or rule of practice which authorizes the court to impose the terms here imposed as a condition precedent to signing judgment. The court may grant or refuse a new trial, or, in a proper case, may grant a new trial nisi; but should do one thing or the other. It should not, as was done in this case, require the prevailing party to remit a portion of the damage awarded, and then deprive the other party of the benefit of the reduction unless he submits to onerous terms." But the court, considering that the entire damages awarded by the verdict in the first place were not so great as to have required them to reverse the judgment, it was affirmed.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Campbell, was stated in this emphatic and unmistakable language:

"The result of our conclusion is—and that is the only point which we decide—that, under our Code, where, in an action for personal injuries, and others standing on like grounds, a verdict is excessive, and was returned as the result of passion or prejudice upon the part of the jury, it should be set aside in its entirety and a new trial awarded; and that it is beyond the power of a trial court to order a remittitur as to the part which it deems excessive, and enter judgment for the residue, because the entire verdict is vitiated by the improper motive, and it is impossible for the court to determine that any particular part is free from objection and some other part is bad.

III. Permissive remittiturs.

a. In general.

1. Theory that trial court has power.

As heretofore stated, it is now the more general rule that the trial court may make an order denying the motion for a new trial upon the condition that the successful party will remit a certain sum from the verdict, although the amount remaining is not capable of definite computation from the evidence. Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590; Blunt v. Little, 3 Mason, 102, Fed. Cas. No. 1,578; Bierbach v. Goodyear Rubber Co. 15 Fed. 490 (C. C. E. D. Wis.); Wood v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 88 Fed. 44; Porter v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. 134 Fed. 155 (C. C. D. N. J.); Darnell v. Krouse, 134 Fed. 509 (C. C. E. D. Pa.); Bulduzzi v. James Ramage Paper Co. 140 Fed. 95 (C. C. D. Vt.); Scheu v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 141 Fed. 495 (C. C. W. D. Pa.); Duke v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 172 Fed. 684 (C. C. W. D. Ark.); Gagnon v. Klauder-Weldon Dyeing Mach. Co. 174 Fed. 477 (C. C. N. D. N. Y.); Latchtimacker v. Jacksonville Towing & Wrecking Co. 181 Fed. 276 (C. C. S. D. Fla.); Montgomery Traction Co. v. Knabe, 158 Ala. 458, 48 So. 501; Southern P. Co. v. Tomlinson, 4 Ariz. 126, 33 Pac. 710; Gila Valley G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 13 Ariz. 270, 112 Pa. 845, overruling Southern P. Co. v. Fitchett, 9 Ariz. 128, 80 Pac. 359; Little Rock & Ft. S. R. Co. v. Barker, 39 Ark. 491 (remittitur voluntarily offered); George v. Law, 1 Cal. 363; Benedict v. Cozzens, 4 Cal. 381; Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 201, 11 Pac. 628; Davis v. Southern P. Co. 98 Cal. 13, 32 Pac. 646; Tobin v. Omnibus Cable Co. — Cal. —, 34 Pac. 124; North v. New Britain, 77 Conn. 715, 58 Atl. 699; Noxon v. Remington, 78 Conn. 296, 61 Atl. 963; Sinclair v. Washington & G. R. Co. MacArth. & M. 13; Hennessy v. District of Columbia, 8 Mackey, 220; Thomas v. Fischer, 71 Ill. 576; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Dickson, 88 Ill. 431; Albin v.

The learned district judge, upon first impression, was of opinion that the verdict should be set aside in its entirety; but, upon subsequent investigation, concluded that the power to order a remittitur, though not strictly one that was inherent in the court, might nevertheless be exercised if the plaintiff consent, because the reduction of the verdict is in favor of the defendant, and therefore he is not in a position to complain. This reason, at first blush plausible, is the one often given. The injury to a defendant in such circumstances does not consist in the mere striking from a verdict of a portion of it, but in entering judgment against him for any part of a verdict, the whole of which is vitiated by improper motives of a jury. The judgment should be reversed and the cause remanded, and it is so ordered."

So that, if it can be fairly seen and held that the jury here returned an excessive verdict, influenced by passion or prejudice, or from any wrongful motive, a new trial must be granted, as it is a just inference that a finding for the plaintiff at all may have been brought about by improper considerations.

The legislature has given to a losing party an absolute right to a new trial when he brings his cause within any of the seven stated grounds for which new trials are to be granted under the Code. The provision upon which the court acted in allowing the remittitur in this case, and which ground,

Kinney, 96 Ill. 214; Union Rolling Mill Co. v. Gillen, 100 Ill. 52; Libby, McNeill & Libby, v. Scherman, 146 Ill. 540, 37 Am. St. Rep. 191, 34 N. E. 801; Clayton v. Brooks, 150 Ill. 97, 37 N. E. 574, affirming 31 Ill. App. 62; Cicero & P. Street R. Co. v. Brown, 193 Ill. 274, 61 N. E. 1093; Amann v. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. 243 Ill. 263, 90 N. E. 673; Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. Doody, 25 Ill. App. 305; Kolb v. Flages, 27 Ill. App. 531; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Des Lauriers, 40 Ill. App. 654; Stummer v. Pitchman, 22 Ill. App. 399; Goldie v. Werner, 50 Ill. App. 297, affirmed in 151 Ill. 551, 38 N. E. 95; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Robinson, 58 Ill. App. 181; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Wheeler, 73 Ill. App. 368 (in effect); Haymarket Theater Co. v. Rosenberg, 77 Ill. App. 183; McNulta v. Hendele, 92 Ill. App. 273; Johnson v. Eckberg, 94 Ill. App. 634; Hirsch v. Chicago Consol. Traction Co. 146 Ill. App. 501; Tucker v. Hyatt, 151 Ind. 332, 44 L.R.A. 129, 51 N. E. 469; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckett, 11 Ind. App. 547, 39 N. E. 429; Brockman v. Berryhill, 16 Iowa, 183; Van Winter v. Henry County, 61 Iowa, 684, 17 N. W. 94; Duffy v. Dubuque, 63 Iowa, 171, 50 Am. Rep. 743, 18 N. W. 900; Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa, 599, 72 N. W. 790; Doran v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. 117 Iowa, 442, 90 N. W. 815; Union P. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 56 Kan. 324, 43 Pac. 244; Argentine v. Bender, 71 Kan. 422, 80 Pac. 935; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brandon, 77 Kan. 612, 95 Pac. 573; Landry v. New Orleans Shipwright Co. 112 La. 515, 36 So. 548; Reems v. New Orleans G. N. R. Co. 126 La. 511, 52 So. 681 (recognizing the power); Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 44 L.R.A. 500, 77 N. W. 948; Marshall v. Saginaw Valley Traction Co. 157 Mich. 541, 122 N. W. 131; Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712; Pratt v. Pioneer-Press Co. 35 Minn. 251, 28 N. W. 708; Hall v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 46 Minn. 439, 49 N. W. 239; Trow v. White Bear, 78 Minn. 433, 80 N. W. 1117; McKnight v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 96 Minn. 480, 105 N. W. 673; Viou v. Brooks Scanlon Lumber Co. 99 Minn. 97, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

108 N. W. 891, 9 Ann. Cas. 318; Goss v. Goss, 102 Minn. 346, 113 N. W. 690; Burnside v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 110 Minn. 401, 125 N. W. 895; Clark v. Scandinavian-American Bank, 113 Minn. 93, 128 N. W. 1114; Kerling v. G. W. Van Dusen & Co. 113 Minn. 501, 123 N. W. 1048; Loyd v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 53 Mo. App. 509; Walser v. Thies, 56 Mo. App. 89; Burdick v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. 221, 26 L.R.A. 384, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528, 27 S. W. 453; Gordon v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 222 Mo. 516, 121 S. W. 80; Barbour v. McKee, 7 Mo. App. 587; Holmes v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 48 Mo. App. 79 (in effect); Freeman v. Missouri & K. Teleph. Co. 160 Mo. App. 271, 142 S. W. 733; Lewis v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Mont. 207, 92 Pac. 469; Harrington v. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. 39 Mont. 22, 101 N. W. 149; Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. French, 48 Neb. 638, 67 N. W. 472; Schofield v. Territory, 9 N. M. 526, 56 Pac. 306 (apparently); O'Donnell v. American Sugar Ref. Co. 41 App. Div. 307, 58 N. Y. Supp. 640; Brangan v. Long Island R. Co. 28 App. Div. 461, 51 N. Y. Supp. 112 (recognizing the power); Kalfur v. Broadway Ferry & M. Ave. R. Co. 34 App. Div. 267, 54 N. Y. Supp. 503 (recognizing the power); affirmed in 161 N. Y. 660, 57 N. E. 1113; (see also Williams v. Empire Woolen Co. 7 App. Div. 345, 39 N. Y. Supp. 941, for an explanation of Sourwine v. Truscott, 25 Hun, 67; Harvey v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 153 N. C. 567, 69 S. E. 627; Carl v. Pierce, 20 Ohio C. C. 68, 10 Ohio C. D. 711; Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Rahmaun, 22 Ohio St. 446 (not essential to decision); Adcock v. Oregon R. Co. 45 Or. 173, 77 Pac. 78; Sorenson v. Oregon Power Co. 47 Or. 24, 82 Pac. 10; Doyle v. Southern P. Co. 56 Or. 495, 108 Pac. 201; Wirsing v. Smith, 222 Pa. 8, 70 Atl. 906; Myers v. Litts, 3 Lack. Leg. News, 363; Smith v. Times Pub. Co. 178 Pa. 481, 35 L.R.A. 819, 36 Atl. 296 (obiter); Finch v. Finch, 21 S. C. 342; Hall v. Northwestern R. Co. 81 S. C. 522, 62 S. E. 848; Branch v. Bass, 5 Sneed, 366; Young v. Cowden, 98 Tenn. 577, 40 S. W. 1088; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118; Alabama G.

among others, was relied upon by defendant for a new trial, reads thus:

"Fifth. Excessive or inadequate damages appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice."

It is apparent that trial courts here, under this provision, no longer have power to set aside verdicts because simply excessive, but can only do so when it is also found that the excess award is due to passion or prejudice. When the finding is that the verdict was so reached, a new trial must be granted, as it is then beyond the power of the court to permit a remittitur of a portion of the verdict, and enter a judgment for such sum as, in its judgment, the jury should have returned.

Substantial support is found for this view

S. R. Co. v. Roberts, 113 Tenn. 488, 67 L.R.A. 495, 82 S. W. 314, 3 Ann. Cas. 937; (for Texas cases see infra); Reddon v. Union P. R. Co. 5 Utah, 344, 15 Pac. 262; Brown v. Southern P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 288, 26 Pac. 579; Kennedy v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 18 Utah, 325, 54 Pac. 988; Preston v. Bowen, 6 Munf. 271 (apparently); McDonough v. Great Northern R. Co. 15 Wash. 244, 46 Pac. 334; Tyler v. North American Transp. & Trading Co. 24 Wash. 252, 64 Pac. 162; Grissom v. Hofius, 39 Wash. 51, 80 Pac. 1002, 4 Ann. Cas. 125; Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. 44 Wash. 470, 87 Pac. 517; Bailey v. Cascade Timber Co. 35 Wash. 295, 77 Pac. 377 (dictum); Schultz v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 48 Wis. 376, 4 N. W. 399; Corcoran v. Harran, 55 Wis. 120, 12 N. W. 468; Gillen v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 91 Wis. 633, 65 N. W. 373; Donovan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 93 Wis. 373, 67 N. W. 721; Taylor v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 103 Wis. 27, 79 N. W. 17; Heimlich v. Tabor, 123 Wis. 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10; Beach v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 135 Wis. 550, 116 N. W. 245; (see contra Nudd v. Wells, 11 Wis. 408). See also, as indicating a like opinion, Cunningham v. Underwood, 53 C. C. A. 92, 116 Fed. 803; Richardson v. Birmingham Cotton Mfg. Co. 116 Ala. 381, 22 So. 478; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Davis, 69 Miss. 444, 13 So. 693.

The contrary opinions expressed in Zurfluh v. People's R. Co. 46 Mo. App. 636, and in Unterberger v. Scharff, 51 Mo. App. 102, are to be disregarded, in view of the foregoing Missouri cases.

In the brief report of Sourwine v. Truscott, 25 Hun, 67, it is stated that it was held "that the county court, on adjudging the damages to be excessive, could only order a new trial; it had no power to order judgment for a reduced sum, the damages being unliquidated, and the jury being the only tribunal by whom the amount of the damages could be fixed." But it is stated in Williams v. Empire Woolen Co. 7 App. Div. 345, 39 N. Y. Supp. 941, that "the case of Sourwine v. Truscott, supra, cited by the appellant, was a case where a trial 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) in the case of Wall v. Livezey, 6 Colo. at page 465, where this is said: "In relation to the amount of damages awarded the plaintiff, we have to say that, in cases of this character, the law does not warrant us in disturbing the verdict where no important error has occurred on the trial unless the amount of damages allowed is so manifestly disproportionate to the injury received as to make it apparent that the jury were influenced by prejudice, misapprehension, or by some corrupt or improper consideration."

And again, in Denver v. Dunsmore, 7 Colo. 328, 3 Pac. 705, this court said: "Second. Upon the exception reserved to the overruling of the motion for a new trial, on the ground assigned by appellant, that had been had in the county court and a verdict rendered, and the county court fell into the error of having ordered absolutely a reduction of the verdict."

In Pendleton Street R. Co. v. Rahmann, 22 Ohio St. 446, where the court, on a verdict of $10,000 gave the plaintiff his election to take $5,000 or a new trial, the court, in affirming the judgment, stated that they did not find that the original verdict was excessive, and therefore thought that there could be no objection to the reduced verdict, and that they could not presume that there had been prejudice and passion, which, under the statute, would have required a new trial.

In Smith v. Times Pub. Co. 178 Pa. 481, 35 L.R.A. 819, 36 Atl. 296, a case without the scope of this note, Mitchell, J., remarked that "it is customary, in setting aside verdicts as excessive, for the common pleas to fix an amount which, in their judgment, would not be unreasonable, and to give the party the choice to accept it, or take the chances of a new trial."

In Preston v. Bowen, 6 Munf. 271, an action for damages against an official surveyor, for failure to furnish copies of official surveys and for conspiracy to defraud, where the trial court thought the damages excessive, but had denied a motion for a new trial after a remittitur, and this judgment was affirmed, the case is not sufficiently reported to show whether there was any basis of computation.

In Huston v. Quincy, O. & K. C. R. Co. 151 Mo. App. 335, 131 S. W. 714, where the trial court granted a new trial for other reasons, notwithstanding remittiturs, on appeal, the court, in reversing the judgment, directed judgment on the remittiturs.

Constitutional power of trial court.

In Yazoo & M. Valley R. Co. v. Wallace, 90 Miss. 609, 122 Am. St. Rep. 321, 43 So. 469, where the trial court refused to reduce a verdict of $50,000, on the ground that it had no power under the statute, the supreme court, in reversing the judgment for various reasons, stated, that the statute in the damages given by the jury were excessive, many of the same principles just announced apply. The true measure of damages is, as contended for, compensatory only. But where the amount of damages does not depend on computation, as in cases for personal injuries, as we said in Wall v. Livezey, supra: 'It is exclusively the province of the jury to estimate and assess the damages, and the amount to be allowed in such cases rests largely in their sound discretion.' And, as there announced, to warrant the court in interfering with that discretion, it must be apparent that the amount of damages given by the jury is so disproportionate to the injury received as to show that the jury were influenced by prejudice, misapprehension, or by some corrupt or improper consideration."

To the like effect is Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Heckman, 45 Colo. 470, 101 Pac. 976.

In 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. at page 125, it is said: "When by statute a new trial is given as of right to the defendant, and the recovery is excessive, a remittitur cannot be entered without his consent."

In 14 Enc. Pl. & Pr. page 756, it is said: "Where the damages are unliquidated or there is no fixed rule by which the measure of damages can be ascertained, as in torts and personal-injury cases, the amount is referred to the discretion of the jury, and the court will not ordinarily interfere. In such cases no mere difference of opinion as to the amount of damages will justify an interferquestion was unconstitutional, and said: "Section 4910 of the Code of 1906 is this (italics being ours) 'The circuit court shall not in any case have the authority to cause the plaintiff to enter a remittitur on pain of suffering a new trial, but if there is no other error committed during the trial of any such cause except that the verdict is, in the opinion of the court, excessive, the court shall overrule the defendant's motion for a new trial. But the supreme court may, where it thinks the verdict of the jury excessive, reverse the case unless the appellee will enter a remittitur in such sum as the supreme court shall direct.' The court said: "This statute is plainly unconstitutional and void. It is for the benefit of plaintiffs. It shuts out defendants from having complete and final disposition of their rights in a forum provided by the organic law for all, and into which they have been forced by plaintiffs. It compels them to appeal which otherwise they might not wish to do, and then concludes with a clause, as a salve, by attempting, in the very face of the Constitution, to give the supreme court original, instead of mere appellate, jurisdiction. It works only against the defendant litigant. If the verdict against him be for too much, he must bear the injustice; but note, if it be for too little, the favored plaintiff is not concluded, but may move for new trial. If the jury gave too much, by a miscalculation of the amount due on a promissory note, the defendant must suffer or appeal. He must do this, even if the verdict be without any sort of support in the evidence. No other than the monstrous conclusions above indicated can be drawn from this act. . . . Such a clause as § 4910 would hardly have received a vote in a convention of the people to adopt a Constitution. If adopted by such a convention, it would probably be void, as in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, which forbids the deprivation of property 'without due process of law.' Our own Constitution provides (§ 31) that 'the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate' When this was adopted, 'trial by jury' meant a 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) trial in court under the forms of law, with a judge presiding to direct the proceedings in conformity with it. Twelve men in the woods or on a street corner were not imagined."

Where rule not applicable.

An error of law affecting the entire verdict will not be cured by a remittitur.

Thus, in Jacoby v. Johnson, 56 C. C. A. 637, 120 Fed. 487, an action for tearing down the plaintiff's signs, it was held to be error to allow a remittitur, where there was a failure of the court sufficiently to instruct the jury upon the measure of damages, which omission affected here the whole verdict.

So, where the jury were erroneously permitted to find punitive damages, but did not state them separately, it was held that the error was not cured by a remittitur which did not show to what it applied. Reed v. Keith, 99 Wis. 672, 75 N. W. 392.

In reversing the judgment in Re Holmes, 79 Ill. App 59, the court said: "If the court was of opinion, as it stated on the hearing of the motion for new trial, that for the alleged improper remarks of plaintiff's counsel to the jury said verdict should be reduced to $400, then a new trial should have been granted, for it seems impossible that the learned trial judge could have determined to what extent the verdict was induced by counsel's remarks."

In Flood v. Great Northern R. Co. 102 Minn. 81, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1196, 112 N. W. 875, the court, in reversing the judgment, said: "The jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the sum of $15,000, which the trial court considered excessive, and reduced it by one third. To what extent the verdict was influenced by the condition of the switch, as found by the juror who visited the yards, does not appear; but it will be presumed that the knowledge so obtained was prejudicial, and under such circumstances the error cannot be cured by a mere reduction of the verdict."

In Lauth v. Chicago Union Traction Co. 244 Ill 244, 91 N. E. 431, reversing 146 Ill.

ence by the court unless the amount is so unreasonable and excessive as to be indicative of passion, prejudice, partiality, or corruption of the jury."

The case of Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 580, was an action for damages for assault and personal injury; there was a verdict for $10,000; upon motion for new trial the plaintiff remitted $8,500; thereupon the motion was denied and judgment entered for $1,500. From this ruling defendant appealed, and assigned error upon it, and the court, after commenting upon the authorities relied upon to support the ruling, said:

"These, it will be seen, are but the ordinary cases of permitting a remittitur where the measure of damages is matter of law, and the court can determine with certainty

what damages the plaintiff is entitled to recover by applying the law to the evidence. But the present is a very different case. Here the law furnishes no other criterion by which to measure the damages which may be given than the discretion and sense of right and justice of the jury; and reserves to the court no other control over the verdict than to grant a new trial where the damages are so excessive as to bear the evident impress of prejudice, passion, gross ignorance, or corruption. . . . In cases where there is no certain measure of damages . . . the court will not substitute its own sense of what would be the proper amount of the verdict, and will not set aside a verdict for excessive damages, unless there is reason to believe that the jury were actu-

App. 584, for the admission of incompetent testimony, where there had been a remittitur by the appellate court the supreme court said: "Where an error has been committed as to some substantive fact which bears upon the right of recovery or the measure of damages in respect to some matter which is not susceptible of computation, a remittitur will not cure it."

So, in Hughes v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 150 Iowa, 232, 129 N. W. 956, it was held that an erroneous instruction as to damages under the circumstances was not cured by the remittitur.

Where plaintiff objects.

If the plaintiff enters a remittitur in accordance with the court's conditional order, he cannot question the order, or appeal from it. Pensacola Gas Co. v. Pebley, 25 Fla. 381, 5 So. 593; McCausland v. Wonderly, 56 Ill. 410; Colorado City v. Liafe, 28 Colo. 468, 65 Pac. 630.

Where the plaintiff in his remittitur objected to the court's jurisdiction to make a conditional order, as no notice had been given, it was held that his appeal was properly dismissed. Harrington v. Butte, A. & P. R. Co. 39 Mont. 22, 101 Pac. 149.

In Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Davis, 69 Miss. 444, 13 So. 693, the court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff, said: "The cross appeal is not maintainable. The consent to a remittitur was not compulsorily obtained. The appellee might have declined to yield to what she thought the arbitrary course of the court, and, if the court had persisted, and had actually set aside the verdict and awarded a new trial, by taking appropriate steps the appellee might have had this court rectify the arbitrary action complained of, if, indeed, it had been ascertained to be wrongful. The appellee prudently chose not to take the hazard of that heroic course, and must be held to have voluntarily consented to the remittitur. She made her election to take the sure sum of $2,000 rather than incur the chances of total loss, and we are not prepared to say she did not act wisely in making that election."

But it was held in Massadillo v. Nashville & K. R. Co. 89 Tenn. 661, 15 S. W. 445, that it was error to permit a remittitur "under protest."

For cases where, on the plaintiff's declining to remit, the order granting a new trial was affirmed, see Gregg v. San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. 59 Cal. 312; Swett v. Gray, 141 Cal. 63, 74 Pac. 439; Ingraham v. Weidler, 139 Cal. 588, 73 Pac. 415; Howey v. New England Nav. Co. 83 Conn. 278, 76 Atl. 469; Rigney v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 9 Wash. 245, 37 Pac. 297; McOwen v. Seattle Electric Co. 48 Wash. 362, 93 Pac. 518.

But in Plaunt v. Railway Transfer Co. 90 Minn. 499, 97 N. W. 433, where the plaintiff declined to consent to a reduction of $450 from a verdict for $600, the appellate court directed the verdict to be reinstated, on the ground that it was not excessive. See also, Beller v. Levy, 127 N. Y. Supp. 237, for a similar decision.

In Kohler v. Fairhaven & N. W. R. Co. 8 Wash. 455, 36 Pac. 253, 681, where the plaintiff appealed from an order granting a new trial, having refused to enter a remittitur, it was held that, on appeal, he could not be allowed to enter the remittitur, as there was nothing that the appellate court could do under the circumstances but affirm the order for a new trial.

Judicial statements and explanations of the rule.

In Northern P. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 765, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 590, the court said in affirming a judgment of the supreme court of a territory, which had affirmed a judgment in an action for personal injuries where the trial court had ordered a new trial unless the plaintiff would remit $15,000 of $25,000, which he did: "The exaction, as a condition of refusing a new trial, that the plaintiff should remit a portion of the amount awarded by the verdict, was a matter within the discretion of the court. It held that ated by passion, or by some undue influence, perverting the judgment. . . . No more will the court substitute its sense of what would be the proper amount of the verdict where it is so excessive as to warrant the belief that the jury have been misled either by passion, prejudice, or ignorance; but will set the verdict aside altogether, and grant a new trial. For to permit the verdict to be reduced to an amount which the court might think reasonable in such a case would be to substitute the opinion of the judge for the verdict of the jury, and, in effect, to deny the aggrieved party the right to a trial by an impartial jury. Where the verdict was confessedly so flagrantly excessive as the remittitur admits it to have been in this case, it must be ascribed to prejudice, partiality, passion, or some undue or improper influence or cause, perverting the judgment of the jury; and to permit any part of it to stand would not be consistent with the preservation of the impartiality, integrity, and purity of the trial by jury."

The right, by this provision, to grant new trials because of excessive verdicts, unless influenced by passion or prejudice, having been withdrawn from the courts, it logically follows that when, under this particular subdivision of the Code, it was found that the verdict was excessive, and a remittitur of nearly three-fourths of it was required, such finding, although the judge may have declared that he was not able to say that the verdict was returned as the result of passion or prejudice, was, as mat-the amount found was excessive, but that no error had been committed on the trial. In requiring the remission of what was deemed excessive, it did nothing more than require the relinquishment of so much of the damages as, in its opinion, the jury had improperly awarded. The corrected verdict could therefore be properly allowed to stand."

In Montgomery Traction Co. v. Knabe, 158 Ala. 458, 48 So. 501, the court said, in declining to interfere with a judgment entered after a certain amount of the damages had been remitted by the plaintiff: "On motion to set aside a verdict on account of excessive damages, followed by the offer of the plaintiff to reduce the verdict to a certain amount, the trial court, if of opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to recover, but that the judgment is excessive, may properly make such reduction of the verdict, and enter judgment accordingly. Indeed, that such power and authority inhere in the trial court seems to be fully recognized by this court in the case of Richardson v. Birmingham Cotton Mfg. Co. 116 Ala. 381, 22 So. 478. See also Western U. Tele. Co. v. Frith 105 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118; 13 Cyc. 134."

In Gila Valley, G. & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 13 Ariz. 270, 112 Pac. 845, where the court below, upon the plaintiff's offer of remittitur, entered a judgment for the balance, the appellate court, in affirming the judgment, stated that the court below had determined that the jury was not influenced by passion or prejudice, and that they saw no reason for not accepting its conclusion, and (overruling Southern P. Co. v. Fitchett, 9 Ariz. 128, 80 Pac. 359) said: "There is authority for the position that in no case of unliquidated damages should the court permit a remission where the verdict is excessive, without the consent of the defendant; but as we now view it, the great weight of authority supports the practice. . . . It is argued that to permit a remittitur, or to require it as a condition of refusing a new trial, is to substitute the court's judgment for that of a jury, to the latter of which the defendant is entitled. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

But it is to the jury's judgment that defendants object when they appeal to the court for new trials on the ground of excessive verdicts."

In George v. Law, 1 Cal. 363, it was held that where the court orders a new trial unless the plaintiff remits part of his verdict, and the plaintiff thereupon does so remit, there is no ground to object to the remittitur, as it makes the judgment smaller.

In Libby, McNeill, & Libby v. Scherman, 146 Ill. 540, 37 Am. St. Rep. 191, 34 N. E. 801, the court said: "It is urged that the court erred in rendering judgment for $5,000, after finding that the damages awarded by the jury were excessive, and requiring the plaintiff to remit $2,500 from the amount awarded, under penalty of setting the verdict aside and granting a new trial. The practice of requiring the plaintiff to remit a portion of his damages, and rendering judgment for the residue, where there is no ground for a new trial, except that the damages awarded by the jury are excessive, is so well established in this state that it cannot now be successfully called in question."

In Kolb v. Flages, 27 Ill. App. 531, the court, in affirming a judgment for the plaintiff where there had been a remittitur in an action for damages by a savage dog, said: "It is well settled practice in this state to enter judgment in cases sounding in damages, after requiring the plaintiff to remit from the verdict rendered by the jury, and while such remittitur will not always be regarded by the reviewing court as removing all vice from the verdict, yet it will, as a rule, sanctify it."

In Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckett, 11 Ind. App. 547, 39 N. E. 429, which was an action for putting a passenger off a train because of a refusal to pay an excess of fare, the court said, in affirming a judgment where the trial court had required the plaintiff to remit part of the verdict or submit to a new trial: "The right of the trial court to direct or permit a remission of a part of a verdict in cases where there is no definite standard by ter of law, a finding to that effect, and the verdict must be so treated. Upon such a verdict, defendant had an absolute right, under the Code, to a new trial, and the court had no more authority to deny it, or disregard a portion of the verdict and enter a judgment upon the residue, than it had to deny the plaintiff a jury trial, or enter judgment against it without any trial at all. Still, without a verdict for that sum, and, indeed, without a lawful verdict, judgment was given for $10,000 upon the mere consent of plaintiff to accept it. That action was a plain violation of law, because what the Code of Civil Procedure gives, in the situation here disclosed, and all that it gives, is a right to the losing party to have, and it makes it the duty of the court to grant, a new trial.

In Sloan v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 1 Hun, 540, a personal-injury case, the New York court said: "The court cannot, in an action of tort, reduce the verdict of a jury because it is deemed excessive. The only remedy in such a case is to set it aside and order a new trial."

In 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. page 144, it is said: "Where the damages are so excessive as to be accounted for only on the ground of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, a remittitur will not cure the error, as such passion or prejudice will be deemed to have influenced the finding of the jury on the issues of fact."

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coon, 69

which to measure the damages seems not to have been definitely determined in our state. . . . While there is some conflict of authority, the great preponderance of the decisions appears to favor the right of the courts to direct conditionally the remission of a part of the damages in such cases where they deem them excessive."

In Detzur v. B. Stroh Brewing Co. 119 Mich. 282, 44 L.R.A. 500, 77 N. W. 948, where, upon a verdict of $10,000 the court required a remittitur of $6,500, the appellate court, in affirming the judgment, said: "We are also of the opinion that making a new trial dependent upon a refusal to remit a portion of the verdict in cases of this kind, is a well-settled practice in this state, where, as in this case, the amount of unliquidated damage is the only question involved. It has always been considered lawful for the trial judge in such a case to set aside a verdict as excessive; and it has been a common practice to grant a portion of the relief asked by requiring a remission of a portion of the verdict as a condition upon which the new trial will be denied. This has always been a matter of discretion and, where it is not clearly erroneous, the action of the trial court should not be disturbed."

In Branagan v. Long Island R. Co. 28 App. Div. 461, 51 N. Y. Supp. 112, where the trial court had said: "If it were not that I consider the weight of precedent against it, I should certainly grant a new trial unless plaintiff stipulated to reduce the verdict to $500," the appellate division, in commenting upon this, and in reducing the verdict, or ordering a new trial unless it was reduced, said: "The final sentence may be open to the construction that the learned justice stated that the weight of precedent was against the right of the trial court to set aside or to reduce a verdict at the trial term, and it is only for this reason that we take occasion to say that the residence of such a power in the court at trial term is inherent and beyond question, and needs no citation of authority. We have had frequent occasion during the existence of the present appellate division of the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) supreme court to exercise the power of reducing verdicts which we considered excessive, but this power can never be used more satisfactorily than at the trial term, where the court has the opportunity, not only of seeing and hearing the parties and witnesses, but of judging of their behavior on the stand. Bannon v. McGrane, 13 Jones & S. 517. It is to be regretted that this power has not more frequently been resorted to in cases where it is so clear that such manifest injustice has been done that the appellate division has been constrained to review and reduce the amount of verdicts which have apparently been rendered under the influence of passion, prejudice, partiality, sympathy, or misconception." This was quoted with approval in Kalfur v. Broadway Ferry & M. Ave. R. Co. 34 App. Div. 267, 54 N. Y. Supp. 503. Compare a contrary dictum of Hunt, Ch. J., in Cassin v. Delany, 38 N. Y. 178.

In Young v. Cowden, 98 Tenn. 577, 40 S. W. 1088, the court, in affirming a judgment where there had been a remittitur, said: "We see no valid objection to the rule as laid down and followed in this state, and in almost all the states of the Union, of suggesting a remittitur as a condition of not granting a new trial, and while it cannot be made peremptory upon the plaintiff, but must remain optional, still, when it is accepted by plaintiff, and there is no attempt to prevent an appeal on the part of the defendant, and thus to coerce him to submit to the judgment, he has no right to complain, inasmuch as the court fixes the damages at an amount lower than that fixed by the jury."

In Corcoran v. Haran, 55 Wis. 120, 12 N. W. 468, where the appellate court had permitted the plaintiff in assault and battery to remit a part of the damages given by the verdict, the court said: "The practice adopted by the trial judge is clearly sanctioned by the great weight of authority. We must therefore hold that, in actions of tort as well as contract, where the damages are clearly excessive, the trial judge may either grant a new trial absolutely, or give the plaintiff the option to

Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492, the court, in a suit for personal injury to a passenger, said: "The trial judge concluded that it was excessive, as he required plaintiff to enter a remittitur of $3,000 as a condition to his overruling the motion for a new trial. If the judge was of opinion the verdict was excessive, he should have granted a new trial. The damages are assessed by the jury; if the verdict is excessive, the judge, in actions like this, has no measure by which to determine how much it is excessive; his attempt to do so is an invasion of the rights of the jury. His only course in such a case is to grant a new trial."

Since, therefore, on principle and authority, the finding of the court that the verdict was excessive must be treated, in legal effect, as a finding that it was returned under the influence of passion or prejudice, it was reversible error to allow plaintiff to remit a portion of it, and enter judgment for the residue, because the gist of the whole matter is that no trial by an impartial jury has been had. To permit the court, in such situation, to substitute its judgment, as to the amount which the plaintiff ought to have, for that of a jury, would be in effect to deny the right of the defendant to such a trial as the general laws provide and the Constitution guarantees.

Independent of a consideration of the finding of the court in its purely legal effect, in the light of former decisions of this court, and of the courts of last resort in other states, upon the same question, it is remit the excess; and in case he does so order, the verdict to stand for the residue. Certainly the practice will tend to promote justice and lessen the expense to litigants and the public. Besides, the allowance of such option is no more of an exercise of arbitrary power by the trial judge than it would be for him to set aside the verdict absolutely, upon the sole ground that it is excessive, and then, in effect, direct a jury to bring in a verdict for a smaller sum, but not in excess of an amount named by the court. But we are unwilling to say that the verdict, as returned in this case, was so excessive as to authorize the interference of this court."

The excess in such cases is not necessarily the result of passion or prejudice. See infra, III. b. 1.

In Conrad Seipp Brewing Co. v. Doody, 25 Ill. App. 305, the court, while inclined to disagree with the remittitur in the trial court, nevertheless said: "Unless we can clearly see that the verdict is the result of misapprehension, or of passion, we are not authorized to set it aside."

Texas.

In Texas the earlier cases were opposed to the power of the trial court of allowing a remittitur where there was no criterion of computation. Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 580; Heidenheimer v. Schlett, 63 Tex. 394; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492; Kaufman v. Armstrong, 74 Tex. 65, 11 S. W. 1048; Clifford v. Lee, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 23 S. W. 843; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 37 S. W. 992; Nunnally v. Taliaferro, 82 Tex. 286, 18 S. W. 149. And it was held in Hoskins v. Huling, 4 Tex. L. Rev. 183, that the statute permitting a remittitur did not apply in such case, the court there saying: "It is provided by statute that any party in whose favor a verdict has been rendered may, in open court, remit any part of such verdict (Rev. Stat. art. 1351), and that such remittitur, from the making thereof, shall cure any error in the verdict or judgment 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

by reason of such excess. (Rev. Stat. art. 1357.) These provisions of the statute, however, do not apply in an action to recover damages for a tort, when the damages are uncertain and rest within the discretion and sense of justice of the jury. . . .

In cases where there is no certain measure of damages, or where the evidence does not clearly and definitely ascertain the amount which should be awarded, the court cannot substitute its own sense of what would be the proper amount of the verdict, but must set the verdict aside altogether and grant a new trial."

In Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Perry, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 78, 27 S. W. 496, where, during the argument for a new trial, the verdict being for $9,000, the trial court intimated that he thought a verdict for more than $5,000 was excessive, and the plaintiff thereupon voluntarily remitted one half the verdict, without direct suggestion or condition from the court, the appellate court, in reversing the judgment also on other grounds said: "It is quite clear to our minds that the trial judge regarded the verdict for $9,000 as excessive, and so regarding the verdict, he would have doubtless done his duty and granted a new trial but for the entering of the remittitur. It is equally clear that appellee's counsel understood the views of the judge as to the verdict, and filed a remittitur to meet the difficulty, cure the error, and obtain favorable action on the motion for new trial. There is no statutory authority in our trial courts to receive a remittitur to cure the error of excessiveness in a verdict where the excess is not ascertainable by any rules of law or certain fixed methods of calculation, and the decisions of our supreme court have condemned the practice as erroneous. . . . Had the remittitur not been in response to the views of the trial judge that the verdict was excessive, but purely voluntary on the part of appellee, an entirely different question would be presented for our consideration. It is fairly manifest from the language of the trial judge, qualifying the bill of exceptions that he let counsel for appellee understand that he inconceivable that, upon the facts proven, a verdict for the extraordinary sum of $38,750 represents the sound, wholesome, unimpassioned and impartial judgment of a jury, whose sole duty, under the law and facts, was to award just and reasonable compensatory damages only. Upon all of the evidence, the amount of the award here, considered in comparison with verdicts in similar cases, which our own and other courts of last resort have said furnish inherent evidence, solely because of the large sums allowed, of having been returned through the influence of passion or prejudice, such or like considerations must also be held to have been the moving cause for the one under review. We are all the more persuaded to this view because another jury, at a former trial, having equal opportunity with the one that returned this verdict, to ascertain and know the character and extent of the injuries sustained, and as well all the facts and grounds upon which plaintiff's right to recover at all were based, fixed the sum of $5,200 as proper compensation; and by the further fact that the presiding judge at the trial in which this particular verdict was returned required that $28,750 should be remitted therefrom; and also by the further fact that the plaintiff consented to the surrender of that vast sum. If $38,750 fairly represented the amount which plaintiff justly ought to recover for the injuries, temporary and permanent, which he sustained, and for his mental suffering and physical pain, we are quite persuaded that considered the verdict excessive. He might as well, as far as effect be concerned, have told counsel that he considered the motion for a new trial based upon excessiveness of the verdict as well grounded, and then received the remittitur as curing the error. If the views of the trial court as to excessive verdict had not been made to appear, then the question of the excessiveness of the verdict as originally rendered would be addressed to this court."

But in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Wilkes, 68 Tex. 618, 2 Am. St. Rep. 515, 5 S. W. 491, where the plaintiff's attorney voluntarily remitted a part of the damage, the court affirmed the judgment on the ground that as the original amount was not excessive, there could be no objection to the remission.

And in Gulf, C. & S. F. Co. v. Redeker, 75 Tex. 310, 16 Am. St. Rep. 887, 12 S. W. 855, an action by a father for the loss of his son, it was held that as it was possible from the evidence to make an estimate of the loss with some distinctness, there was no error in a remittitur which left the damage less than was indicated by the evidence.

But since the passage of § 1029a, 1 Sayles's Civil Statutes, which gives the court of civil appeals power to refuse to grant a new trial on condition that a party will remit a part of the damages, it has been held that the trial court may take a similar course.

In Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Johnson, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 180, 58 S. W. 622, the court said: "If the remittitur entered in the district court is the same as this court would have required, the result is the same as if this court had enforced it. If less, this court may require further reduction, and the result would be the same as if this court had exacted the entire reduction. We do not deny the district court's power or discretion to grant new trials in cases of excessive verdicts, but we think if they see fit to entertain a remittitur, there is no necessity of our reversing the judgment upon that ground, when we have express authority to require 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) remittitur, which carries the power to approve them."

In San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Connell, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 533, 66 S. W. 246, the court approved the practice of a remittitur in the trial court, but required an additional remittitur as a condition of affirmance. A similar course as to successive remittiturs was followed in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Williams, 55 Tex. Civ. App. 176, 118 S. W. 758, and in Producers Oil Co. v. Barnes, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 120 S. W. 1023; also in International & G. N. R. Co. v. Shaughnessy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 81 S. W. 1026, where, however, on rehearing, the case was reversed on another ground.

And the practice of remittiturs in the trial court as a condition of denying motions for a new trial is now established. Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Linthicum, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 375, 77 S. W. 40; Houston, E. & W. T. R. Co. v. Jackson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 61 S. W. 440; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Hengst, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 217, 81 S. W. 832; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Rhodes, 35 Tex. Civ. App. 432, 80 S. W. 869; St. Louis Southwestern R. Co. v. Price, 44 Tex. Civ. App. 217, 99 S. W. 120; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Poe, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 62 S. W. 1071; Roscoe, S. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 872; Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Gehring, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 137 S. W. 754.

2. Contrary doctrine.

In some jurisdictions the view obtains that the trial court may not allow remittiturs where there is no basis of computation. F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, 31 Colo. 82, 71 Pac. 384; TUNNEL MIN. & LEASING Co. v. COOPER; Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Harper, 70 Ga. 119; Carlisle v. Callahan, 78 Ga. 320, 2 S. E. 751; Brunswick Light & Water Co. v. Gale, 91 Ga. 813, 18 S. E. 11; Albany v. Sikes, 94 Ga. 30, 26 L.R.A. 653, 47 Am. St. Rep. 132, 20 S. E. 257; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Perkerson, 112 Ga. 923, 53 L.R.A. 210, 38 S. E. 365, overruling Central R. Co.

it is highly improbable that another jury would have declared less than one seventh as much sufficient to satisfy his claim; nor is it likely that the judge presiding at the trial in which the verdict was returned, being well and fully advised, with all material facts before him, would, or could, under such circumstances, say that the amount returned was almost four times the sum which, in his calm, impartial, and judicial judgment, the jury should have given; nor does it seem possible that had the plaintiff himself, or his counsel, believed that he was entitled, in fairness and truth, to $38,750, there would have been voluntarily remitted of that amount, once secured to him, more than two thirds of it.

The plaintiff was by occupation a miner, and able, according to proofs, by working continuously, to earn approximately $1,200 a year. That plaintiff was seriously, painfully, and to a degree permanently, injured, seems clear from the evidence. It appears that his right collar bone was fractured, and three ribs of the lower left side broken; that his general circulation was impaired, and that the broken ribs have never united, but extend out from the general contour of the chest about an inch, and do not give such full protection to some of the vital parts as they should and would afford in normal condition. That the right collar bone is shortened one half an inch, and also the left leg, to a like extent, which makes him permanently lame. He is compelled to constantly wear a belt, to mitigate the dis-

v. Crosby, 74 Ga. 737, 58 Am. Rep. 463; Daniel v. Bailey, 118 Ga. 408, 45 S. E. 379; Tifton, T. & G. R. Co. v. Chastain, 122 Ga. 250, 50 S. E. 105; Seaboard Air-Line R. Co. v. Randolph, 129 Ga. 796, 59 S. E. 1110 (brushing aside any remarks to the contrary in Augusta R. Co. v. Glover, 92 Ga. 132, 18 S. E. 406); Southern R. Co. v. Tollerson, 135 Ga. 74, 68 S. E. 798; Brown v. Morris, 3 Bush, 81; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Earl, 94 Ky. 368, 22 S. W. 607; Hanson v. Henderson, 20 S. D. 456, 107 N. W. 670; Murray v. Leonard, 11 S. D. 22, 75 N. W. 272 (as suggesting, if not necessarily holding, this view); Unfried v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 34 W. Va. 260, 12 S. E. 512; Osborne v. County Ct. 68 W. Va. 189, 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 418, 69 S. E. 470 (as stating this view); Watt v. Watt [1905] A. C. 115, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 438, 69 J. P. 249, 53 Week. Rep. 547, 92 L. T. N. S. 480, 21 Times L. R. 386, 2 Ann. Cas. 672.

It will be seen that in TUNNEL MIN. & LEASING Co. v. COOPER, it is held that under the Colorado statute the power to set aside a verdict as excessive is confined to cases of prejudice and passion, and that therefore, if the court interferes at all, it must order a new trial.

The court follows the decision in F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, 31 Colo. 82, 71 Pac. 384, as will be seen from its quotation of the opinion in that case. These cases would seem to settle the law in Colorado, but they do not refer to Colorado City v. Liae, 28 Colo. 468, 65 Pac. 630, where both parties appealed, and the court, in affirming the reduced judgment, said: "The plaintiff voluntarily remitted $15,000. It was not the less voluntary because the court declined to allow the verdict of $20,000 to stand, and intimated that unless there was a remittment he would grant a new trial; because the plaintiff had the alternative of submitting to a new trial or accepting a verdict for the sum of $5,000; and having accepted a verdict for the sum of $5,000, we think he cannot now complain that the court refused to enter judgment upon the verdict as rendered. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Harper, 70 Ga. 119, where the trial court had ordered a new trial unless the plaintiff would write off part of the verdict, which he did, the judgment was reversed. The court quoted the statute which provided that "the question of damages being one for the jury, the court should not interfere, unless the damages are either so small or excessive as to justify the inference of gross mistake or undue bias" and said: "To require a portion of the amount so found by them to be remitted, and the balance to stand as their verdict, it seems to us unauthorized, either by the words of the law, or by the precedents and practice in such cases."

In Carlisle v. Callahan, 78 Ga. 320, 2 S. E. 751, an action for damages in forcibly entering and holding certain property, the court said: "The court has no power to write off, or order written off, any part of a verdict for damages in an action sounding in tort, where the tort is to the person; aliter, where it is to property."

But the practice was also condemned in torts as to property in Albany v. Sikes, 94 Ga. 30, 26 L.R.A. 653, 47 Am. St. Rep. 132, 20 S. E. 257; Daniel v. Bailey, 118 Ga. 408, 45 S. E. 379; Southern R. Co. v. Tollerson, 135 Ga. 74, 68 S. E. 798.

In Brunswick Light & Water Co. v. Gale, 91 Ga. 813, 18 S. E. 11, the court said: "Where the action is for a personal injury and for pain and suffering resulting therefrom, and there are no other elements of damage for which a recovery can be had, such as loss of earning capacity, etc., there is no guide or criterion by which the amount of damages may be measured, except the enlightened conscience of impartial jurors. There is no criterion, therefore, by which the court can estimate the proper amount of damages, and he has no power to reduce the verdict by ordering a certain amount written off. If the verdict is so excessive as to cause him to suspect bias or prejudice, he can set it aside and order a new trial before another jury, but he must do this unconditionally."

In Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Perker

comfort caused by the condition of the broken ribs. No injury is shown to his mental faculties; none of his limbs were broken, and none of his senses are impaired. The testimony shows that at the time of the trial he was able to be about without the aid of crutches or other assistance, and that he had recently been upon prospecting tours. The only direct evidence going to his ability to work at the time of the trial was the answer of the physician who attended him in his illness, to the question whether, in his present condition, he could do a man's work, which was, "Not at the present time."

The nature and extent of the injuries considered, the verdict is quite the largest to be found in the annals of judicial history. The deliberations of the jury are secret;

the presence or absence of passion or prejudice concerning them must therefore, as a rule, be determined from the amount of the verdict itself. If there is in the verdict inherent evidence of such passion or prejudice, there should be no hesitancy on the part of the court to so declare, and act accordingly. There are three cases of special interest which have been determined by this court, where it was held that the verdicts, because of their respective amounts, carried inherent evidence that they were induced by passion or prejudice. We refer to the reasoning in these opinions in support of our conclusion here, as being in harmony with it. The cases are Deep Min. & Drainage Co. v. Fitzgerald, 21 Colo. 533, 43 Pac. 210, F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, 31 Colo.

son, 112 Ga. 923, 53 L.R.A. 210, 38 S. E. 365, the court said: "After mature consideration, we are of the opinion that upon principle the rule denying the power of a trial judge to order a remittitur as a condition to the overruling of a motion for a new trial in actions for personal injuries should apply with equal force to an action for a tortious homicide; and, indeed, to all cases where, by the application of fixed principles of law to the evidence, the excess in a verdict cannot be accurately ascertained."

In view of the more recent Georgia cases it may be doubted whether the court would now approve the decision in Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Godkin, 104 Ga. 655, 69 Am. St. Rep. 187, 30 S. E. 378, where the plaintiff, on the motion for a new trial, before any intimation by the trial court, "wrote off" a part of the verdict, and in affirming the judgment so reduced the appellate court said: "It does not appear from the record that a new trial was refused in this case because of the voluntary action on the part of the plaintiff in writing off a portion of his verdict. . . . The voluntary reduction of the verdict by plaintiff's counsel, whether they had a right to take such action or not, is not a matter of which the defendant can complain."

In Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Earl, 94 Ky. 368, 22 S. W. 607, where the court, on condition of denying a motion for a new trial, required the plaintiff to consent to the reduction of a verdict of $4,000 to $2,600, the appellate court said: "Both parties complain, and it is evident that if the company were entitled to a new trial, it should have been granted without the imposition of any terms. If not, the appellee should have had her judgment in pursuance of the jury finding. In any event, the judgment for $2,600 is erroneous, and must be reversed."

It may be noted that in Merrick v. Holt, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 162, the court, in reversing a judgment where there had been a remittitur, did so on the ground that the entire verdict was impeached with the taint of positive wrong or reckless indifference; and 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

that a similar principle is stated in the reversal in Evansville Grain Co. v. Stout, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 927, where, however, the case is not sufficiently reported to show what had occurred in the trial court.

The former English practice was to order a new trial if the parties would not come to terms. See Davidson v. Molyneux, 17 L. T. N. S. 289.

However in Belt v. Lawes, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 358, 53 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 249, 50 L. T. N. S. 441, 32 Week. Rep. 607, an action for libel, the court approved the course of the trial court in refusing a new trial on condition that the plaintiff remit a certain part of his damages.

But in Watt v. Watt [1905] A. C. 115, 74 L. J. K. B. N. S. 438, 69 J. P. 249, 53 Week. Rep. 547, 92 L. T. N. S. 480, 21 Times L. R. 386, 2 Ann. Cas. 672, where the court of appeal had made an order for a new trial unless the plaintiff consented to a reduction, which he did, the House of Lords reversed the judgment, holding that the court had no power, on consent of one party, to render judgment for an amount different from that found by the jury. Halsbury, L. C., stated that the question was raised in the Belt Case, but was not necessary for its decision, and said: "The theory of all the cases seems to me to be that the right of the court to interfere with a jury's verdict was only to be by the assent of both parties. Assume it to be the constitutional view that a person can only have damages assessed against him for a tort, what right has a court to intervene and say that damages which, in its judgment, are appropriate, shall be the amount assessed against him? The only judgment by a jury is one which the court itself, by the hypothesis, says is unreasonable and excessive. Has not the defendant a right to say, 'I refuse to have judgment assessed against me by a court. The law gives me a right to a jury, and how does the fact that a jury have already found a verdict against me, which you decide cannot be allowed to stand, because it is unreasonable and excessive, displace my right to have the verdict of a jury upon the question?'"

82, 71 Pac. 384, and Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Scott, 34 Colo. 99, 81 Pac. 763. In each the record shows the injuries to have been certainly as grievous as those received by plaintiff, and without doubt, in the Fitzgerald Case, vastly more serious and abiding.

An instructive and leading case, also in accord with our views, where a large number of authorities are reviewed and discussed, is that of Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fox, 11 Bush, 495. That was an action for personal injuries, to recover the sum of $150,000, with $5,000 added for medical treatment and attendance, and $500 for baggage lost. The verdict was for $35,500. The opinion states that the value of the baggage was shown to have been $500, and the expense of medical treatment and attendance $5,000; and for personal injuries, $30,000. There was no evidence in the case of passion or prejudice, except as furnished by the amount of the verdict. Upon a full consideration of the whole record, and a searching analysis of the entire transaction, the court reached the conclusion that the amount of the verdict alone furnished evidence that it must have been reached through the influence of passion or prejudice. The injuries to Fox seem to have been far more severe and permanent, and his suffering far greater, than plaintiffs'. In concluding the opinion, having reference to the duties and obligations of courts under such circumstances, it was said:

"We concede that courts of all grades

Lord Davey, in concurring, said: "Can the court, when it considers that the damages are disproportionate and excessive, say there shall be no new trial if the plaintiff is willing to accept a verdict for a reduced amount, or (in other words), with the consent of the plaintiff, impose upon the defendant, without his consent, the payment of damages, the amount of which has been fixed by the court, and not by a jury? It was held by the court of appeal in Belt v. Lawes, supra, that the court has this jurisdiction. . . . No authority for the proposition laid down in Belt v. Lawes, supra, is quoted by the learned judges in that case, and no authority earlier than that case was brought to our attention by Mr. Mathew in his very careful argument. On the other hand, there are numerous dicta of learned judges to the contrary."

Upon this side of the question reference may be made here to the views expressed in some of the earlier Texas cases, although no longer of force in that jurisdiction.

In Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 580, an action for assault and battery, where the plaintiff remitted $8,500 from a verdict of $10,000, the court, in reversing the judgment, said: "Where the verdict was confessedly so flagrantly excessive as the remittitur admits it to have been in this case, it must be ascribed to prejudice, partiality, passion, or some undue or improper influence or cause, perverting the judgment of the jury; and to permit any part of it to stand would not be consistent with the preservation of the impartiality, integrity, and purity of the trial by jury. . . .

Where the law recognizes some fixed rules and principles to regulate the measure of damages, by which it may be determined in how much the verdict is excessive, as in actions on contracts, and for torts done to property, the value of which may be ascertained by evidence, a remittitur of the excess may be received as an answer to a motion for a new trial, on the ground of excessive damages. . . . But where there are no such rules and principles by which to ascertain the excess, and it is uncertain and considerable, a new trial ought to be awarded."

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492, where the judgment was reversed for other reasons, and the original verdict was for $10,000, the court said: "As the case will be reversed for the error just pointed out, we do not deem it proper to express our opinion as to whether the verdict was excessive. The trial judge concluded that it was excessive, as he required plaintiff to enter a remittitur of $3,000 as a condition to his overruling the motion for a new trial. If the judge was of opinion the verdict was excessive, he should have granted a new trial. The damages are assessed by the jury; if the verdict is excessive, the judge, in actions like this, has no measure by which to determine how much it is excessive; his attempt to do so is an invasion of the rights of the jury. His only course in such a case is to grant a new trial."

In Nunnally v. Taliaferro, 82 Tex. 286, 18 S. W. 149, where, in an action of slander, the plaintiff remitted the exemplary damages and part of the actual damages, the court, in reversing the judgment, said as to this practice that where the "excess is not ascertainable by any rules of law, and 'the excess is uncertain and considerable,' it should not be permitted. Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 584. In a case like this, the discretion of the jury and their sense of right and justice, as applied to the facts, is the only guide the law furnishes for the measure of damages. This discretion, whether legally and wisely exercised or abused, is ascertained from their verdict alone. If, then, a remittitur be allowed and judgment is entered not predicated on that verdict, but for a different sum, can it be said that the judgment for damages is that ascertained and reached by the discretion of the jury and their sense of right and justice under the facts? Unquestionably not. Concede that the evidence authorized a verdict for plaintiff for damages; how was the court to determine the amount of such damages, after deciding that the ver-should exercise extreme caution in interfering with the verdicts of juries, and that an appellate court should hesitate not only because of the delicacy of undertaking to set aside the finding of the constitutional triers of fact, but because of the concurrence with the jury of the judge presiding at the trial. But if, after giving due weight to the verdict of the jury and the approval of the circuit judge, this court is clearly convinced, in a case in which the plaintiff is only entitled to recover compensatory damages, that the jury has gone beyond compensation, and inflicted punishment on the defendant, under the influence of passion or prejudice, it is bound by the weightiest considerations of duty to direct a new trial. To refuse to do so is to abandon the defendant to the arbitrary will of the jury. The supervising control of the courts, both of original and appellate jurisdiction, is, in this country, an integral part of the jury system, and as indispensable to the right administration of justice as the panel of twelve men.

"We are well satisfied that the damages are excessive and the result of passion or prejudice in the jury, and the judgment is reversed and the cause is remanded, with directions to grant the appellant a new trial."

These suggestions are specially applicable here, and correctly, as we think, indicate the duty of the court in the present case, as upon a full consideration of the entire record, with all inferences legitimately to dict was excessive and allowing the remittitur? It could only be determined by the court's own construction of the testimony; or, in other words, the amount permitted to remain would be that which the court's discretion and sense of right and justice, under the facts, recognized as being the proper measure of damages. This would manifestly be the substitution of the court's opinion for that of the jury, and necessarily a trial of the cause exclusively by the court. Thomas v. Womack, 13 Tex. 585; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Coon, 69 Tex. 730, 7 S. W. 492. There are disclosures made by the record sustaining the charge that the verdict was influenced by passion and prejudice or other improper motives."

b. Where there is prejudice or passion.

1. Not allowable.

It is generally held, even in jurisdictions which generally permit a remittitur, that such a remittitur will not cure a verdict tainted by prejudice and passion. Southern P. Co. v. Tomlinson, 4 Ariz. 126, 33 Pac. 710 (dictum); Loewenthal v. Streng, 90 Ill. 74; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Cummings, 20 Ill. App. 333; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Barnett, 56 Ill. App. 384; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Krueger, 68 Ill. App. 450; West Chicago Street R. Co. v. Johnson, 69 Ill. App. 147; Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Binkowski, 72 Ill. App. 22; Chicago Street R. Co. v. Wheeler, 73 Ill. App. 368 (in effect); Chicago City R. Co. v. Fennimore, 78 Ill. App. 478; Pennsylvania Co. v. Greso, 78 Ill. App. 127; Nicholson v. O'Donald, 79 Ill. App. 195; North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Hoffart, 82 Ill. App. 539; Chicago Terminal Transfer R. Co. v. Helberg, 99 Ill. App. 563; Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Story, 104 Ill. App. 132; Belt R. Co. v. Charters, 123 Ill. App. 322; Sackheim v. Miller, 136 Ill. App. 132; (see contra, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ebert, 74 Ill. 399); Ahrens v. Fenton, 138 Iowa, 559, 115 N. W. 233; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 567, 15 Pac. 409; Steinbuechel v. Wright, 43 Kan. 307, 23 Pac. 500; Atchison, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwelle, 44 Kan. 394, 24 Pac. 500; Parsons & P. R. Co. v. Montgomery, 46 Kan. 120, 26 Pac. 403; Bell v. Morse, 48 Kan. 601, 29 Pac. 1086; Drumm v. Cessnum, 58 Kan. 331, 49 Pac. 78; Atchison v. Plunkett, 61 Kan. 297, 59 Pac. 646; Argentine v. Bender, 71 Kan. 422, 80 Pac. 935 (dictum); Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Brandon, 77 Kan. 612, 95 Pac. 573 (dictum); Chitty v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 148 Mo. 64, 49 S. W. 868; Partello v. Missouri P. R. Co. 217 Mo. 645, 117 S. W. 1138; Doty v. Steinberg, 25 Mo. App. 328; Adcock v. Oregon R. Co. 45 Or. 173, 77 Pac. 78 (dictum).

In Southern P. Co. v. Tomlinson, 4 Ariz. 126, 33 Pac. 710, the court, in affirming a judgment entered upon a remittitur, said: "Of course, if it is apparent to the trial court that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice, a remittitur should not be allowed, but the verdict should be set aside. In passing upon this question the court should not look alone to the amount of the damages awarded, but to the whole case, to determine the existence of passion or prejudice, and to determine how far such passion or prejudice may have operated in influencing the finding of any verdict against the defendant. When the circumstances, as they may appear to the trial court, indicate that the jury deliberately disregarded the instructions of the court, or the facts of the case, a remittitur should not be allowed, but a new trial should be granted."

In Belt R. Co. v. Charters, 123 Ill. App. 322, the court said, in reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, where a child injured on a turntable recovered a verdict of $14,000, which was reduced to $7,000: "We, however, believe that no case can be found in which a judgment based upon a remittitur, although approved by the trial judge, has been allowed to stand where the reviewing tribunal is satisfied from the record that the verdict rendered was based upon passion or prejudice, or was founded upon a misconception of the evidence. In such a case the infirmity pervades the entire verdict; and the remission of the one half or be drawn therefrom, we reach the irresistible conclusion that, when viewed in the light of the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence, a verdict of such unusual proportions must have been the result of either passion or prejudice, or of a total misconception by the jury of its duties and obligations under the law. In either event it is vitiated in its entirety. Upon the authority of F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, supra, such a verdict could not properly be made the basis for any judgment whatever. A new trial should have been granted.

There is no general charge of negligence in the complaint. The negligence complained of is alleged specifically, and is charged in these words:

of any other part of the whole amount does not free the remaining part from the taint."

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 567, 15 Pac. 499, the court, in reversing a judgment where, upon a verdict of $50,000, there had been a remittitur of $25,000, said: "Evidently when the court below required the plaintiff either to remit $25,000 of the damages found in his favor, or to take a new trial, the court must have found that the verdict of the jury was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice. And certainly if one half of the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, the other half must also have been rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice; and, as it is doubtful whether the jury should have rendered any verdict in favor of the plaintiff, it may be that this passion or prejudice affected the entire verdict and also the special findings, and caused the jury to find in favor of the plaintiff, where, except for the passion or prejudice, they would not have found in his favor at all."

In Adcock v. Oregon R. Co. 45 Or. 173, 77 Pac. 78, the court, in affirming a judgment where there had been a remittitur, said: "We are clear, therefore, that it is within the power of a trial court, as a condition to overruling a motion for a new trial, to require the entry of a remittitur of a part of the verdict in an action of tort, when, in its opinion, the verdict is excessive. It is contended, however, that in this case the court could not have required the plaintiff to remit one half of the verdict in her favor, except upon the theory that the jury were influenced by passion and prejudice. If such had been the view entertained by the court, the proper practice would undoubtedly have been to grant a new trial, as the part of the verdict allowed to stand would have been as much tainted by passion and prejudice as that which was remitted. Where the damages assessed are excessive, in the opinion of the trial court, or not justified by the evidence, the error may in many cases be obviated by remitting the excess; but where it clearly appears that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice, the error cannot be cured by merely remitting a part of the verdict, but it must be entirely rejected."

"Plaintiff alleges that on the said 1st day of May, 1905, when the plaintiff entered on the first work of the day, the defendant Walter Swanson entered the stope and ordered him to get a bar and spread the top posts of the top square set so as to allow a displaced cap to slip back in its place; that plaintiff refused to do so, replying to Swanson that the braces below were shot away and it was dangerous to spread top posts without restoring them, and that if let alone he would restore the cap to its place safely and properly; that said Swanson, then knowing that the braces were shot away, and that pressure spreading the top posts would probably cause the entire timbering to collapse, without replacing the braces, negligently spread the top udice, the error cannot be cured by merely remitting a part of the verdict, but it must be entirely rejected."

The same view has been taken where the verdict was the result of inconsiderate judgment or unfairness. Thus, where the trial court allowed a remittitur for an amount which it still considered to be $500 too much, the appellate court, in reversing the judgment, said: "In the face of this expressed opinion, finding in reality that the verdict, as returned, was excessive, and in the face of the fact that, as remitted by plaintiff, it was still excessive by at least $500, it cannot be allowed to stand. It has repeatedly been held by this court that, if a verdict for damages is, in the judgment of the trial court, excessive, and the result of inconsiderate judgment or unfairness of action, it is its duty to set it aside and award a new trial, instead of ordering a remittitur of the amount deemed to be excessive." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 58 Kan. 344, 49 Pac. 436.

So, where the jury has misconceived the evidence. In Szczzech v. Chicago City R. Co. 157 Ill. App. 150, the court, in reversing a judgment where there had been a remittitur, said: "The verdict is clearly the result of a misconception of the probative force of the evidence by the jury. The remittitur of four tenths of the amount of the verdict, so far from curing the vice confessedly in it, but accentuates its illegality. The assessment of damages, proceeding, as it does, upon improbable premises, cannot be maintained. It is clearly excessive as including compensation for ailments not traceable, upon a proper weighing of the evidence, to the accident chargeable to the negligence of defendant."

Probably the trial judge did not intend to suggest and defect as serious as passion or prejudice in the verdict in Beller v. Levy, 68 Misc. 182, 124 N. Y. 411, where, in reducing a verdict, he said: "It is apparent to me that the jury, in awarding her the sum of $750, must have been influenced by sympathy or partiality. The amount so awarded is excessive for the injuries received, and should be reduced to the sum of posts with a crossbar, and thereby caused the whole timbering at the point to collapse, burying plaintiff in the ruins, without any fault or negligence on his part."

The testimony of the plaintiff shows that the thing which in fact caused the timbering to collapse, burying him in the ruins, was the act of Swanson in giving a violent surge on the bar and throwing his weight heavily against one of the posts of the square set.

Upon his cross-examination the following testimony was adduced to this point:

Q. Do you mean to tell the jury that the collapse occurred without the stopping bar being tightened any more at all?

A. Yes, sir.

$350, to which reduction the plaintiff should stipulate; and on her refusal to so stipulate, I order a new trial, without costs." But on appeal (127 N. Y. Supp. 237) the verdict was restored as not excessive, the court seeing nothing in the contention that the jury was swayed by sympathy.

Excess is not necessarily due to passion or prejudice. In Lewis v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Mont. 207, 92 Pac. 469, the court said, in affirming a judgment where a remittitur of $7,400 had been made from a verdict of $17,400: "In a given case, it may be that the amount awarded is due to miscalculation, or based upon a wrong standard. In such cases the excessive award is not the result of passion or prejudice, but the result of an honest mistake; and in any case there is no presumption of wrongdoing, unless the award is so grossly out of proportion to the injury, looking to all the circumstances, as that it cannot be otherwise accounted for; for the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1171, subd. 5) allows a new trial on the ground of passion or prejudice only when one or the other is apparent."

In Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa, 599, 72 N. W. 790, the court said: "Conceding that the effect and purpose of what was done were to overrule the motion for a new trial on condition that the plaintiff would accept judgment for the amount for which it was rendered, and, if he would not, that the motion would be sustained, that does not show that the district court found that the jury was influenced by passion and prejudice in reaching its verdict. It merely shows that, in the opinion of the court, the evidence did not authorize a verdict for so large an amount as that fixed by the jury. Juries may, and frequently do, err in estimating the amount of a recovery, when there is no ground for claiming that they were influenced by prejudice or passion."

In Doran v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. 117 Iowa, 442, 90 N. W. 815, the court said: "As to the complaint that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, it is enough to say that the only evidence of passion and prejudice relied on is the amount of damages named in the verdict. It is not 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. How did that happen?

A. Mr. Swanson was standing here, and I stepped back, started to step out from here, where it was perfectly safe, and Mr. Swanson yelled at me; he said, 'The bar isn't tight yet,' at the same time giving a violent surge on the bar, throwing his weight heavily against this corner post here, and the square sets collapsed, and caught both of us.

There was other testimony by plaintiff, which showed that the bar between the square sets had not been tightened, and that there was no pressure from it against the timbers, and that the violent surge upon the bar and pressure of Swanson upon the corner post, in throwing his weight heavily contended but that there was some evidence to support a verdict, and therefore the mere fact that a verdict was found for the plaintiff would certainly not indicate passion and prejudice. It is true that the trial court found the amount of the verdict to be excessive, and refused a new trial only on condition that a considerable amount should be remitted. But an excessive verdict is not necessarily a verdict which results from passion and prejudice. We could not assent to a proposition that wherever the trial court finds that the verdict was for too large an amount in cases of personal injury, we should conclude that it ought to have been entirely set aside on the other ground."

In Argentine v. Bender, 71 Kan. 422, 80 Pac. 935, where the trial court had given the plaintiff the opportunity of remitting two thirds of a verdict of $7,500, stating that "the error of the jury in fixing the amount of damages does not permeate the entire verdict, but only affects the amount of the same," the appellate court, in affirming the judgment on the remittitur, said: "This court must enter upon the consideration of this case with the assumption that the evidence could not sustain the recovery of a greater amount than $2,500. This is conclusively settled for the present purpose by the action of the district court. The mere fact that the jury, in estimating plaintiff's damage, so far exceeded this limit, must be regarded as having some tendency to show unfairness. If aided by anything in the evidence or elsewhere in the record tending in the same direction, or possibly if not offset by something of a contrary tendency, this fact alone might justify a conclusion that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice, and require a reversal. On the other hand, the very departure from a proper amount should be otherwise accounted for if a reasonable basis for so doing can be found. A sufficient explanation of the course of the jury, without involving the supposition that they were actuated by unfair motives, may be found in the meagerness of the instruction given them as a guide to the amount of recovery."

be drawn therefrom, we reach the irresistible conclusion that, when viewed in the light of the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence, a verdict of such unusual proportions must have been the result of either passion or prejudice, or of a total misconception by the jury of its duties and obligations under the law. In either event it is vitiated in its entirety. Upon the authority of F. M. Davis Iron Works Co. v. White, supra, such a verdict could not properly be made the basis for any judgment whatever. A new trial should have been granted.

There is no general charge of negligence in the complaint. The negligence complained of is alleged specifically, and is charged in these words:

of any other part of the whole amount does not free the remaining part from the taint."

In Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 567, 15 Pac. 499, the court, in reversing a judgment where, upon a verdict of $50,000, there had been a remittitur of $25,000, said: "Evidently when the court below required the plaintiff either to remit $25,000 of the damages found in his favor, or to take a new trial, the court must have found that the verdict of the jury was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice. And certainly if one half of the verdict was rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice, the other half must also have been rendered under the influence of passion or prejudice; and, as it is doubtful whether the jury should have rendered any verdict in favor of the plaintiff, it may be that this passion or prejudice affected the entire verdict and also the special findings, and caused the jury to find in favor of the plaintiff, where, except for the passion or prejudice, they would not have found in his favor at all."

In Adcock v. Oregon R. Co. 45 Or. 173, 77 Pac. 78, the court, in affirming a judgment where there had been a remittitur, said: "We are clear, therefore, that it is within the power of a trial court, as a condition to overruling a motion for a new trial, to require the entry of a remittitur of a part of the verdict in an action of tort, when, in its opinion, the verdict is excessive. It is contended, however, that in this case the court could not have required the plaintiff to remit one half of the verdict in her favor, except upon the theory that the jury were influenced by passion and prejudice. If such had been the view entertained by the court, the proper practice would undoubtedly have been to grant a new trial, as the part of the verdict allowed to stand would have been as much tainted by passion and prejudice as that which was remitted. Where the damages assessed are excessive, in the opinion of the trial court, or not justified by the evidence, the error may in many cases be obviated by remitting the excess; but where it clearly appears that the jury were influenced by passion or prej-

"Plaintiff alleges that on the said 1st day of May, 1905, when the plaintiff entered on the first work of the day, the defendant Walter Swanson entered the stope and ordered him to get a bar and spread the top posts of the top square set so as to allow a displaced cap to slip back in its place; that plaintiff refused to do so, replying to Swanson that the braces below were shot away and it was dangerous to spread top posts without restoring them, and that if let alone he would restore the cap to its place safely and properly; that said Swanson, then knowing that the braces were shot away, and that pressure spreading the top posts would probably cause the entire timbering to collapse, without replacing the braces, negligently spread the top udice, the error cannot be cured by merely remitting a part of the verdict, but it must be entirely rejected."

The same view has been taken where the verdict was the result of inconsiderate judgment or unfairness. Thus, where the trial court allowed a remittitur for an amount which it still considered to be $500 too much, the appellate court, in reversing the judgment, said: "In the face of this expressed opinion, finding in reality that the verdict, as returned, was excessive, and in the face of the fact that, as remitted by plaintiff, it was still excessive by at least $500, it cannot be allowed to stand. It has repeatedly been held by this court that, if a verdict for damages is, in the judgment of the trial court, excessive, and the result of inconsiderate judgment or unfairness of action, it is its duty to set it aside and award a new trial, instead of ordering a remittitur of the amount deemed to be excessive." Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 58 Kan. 344, 49 Pac. 436.

So, where the jury has misconceived the evidence. In Szczzech v. Chicago City R. Co. 157 Ill. App. 150, the court, in reversing a judgment where there had been a remittitur, said: "The verdict is clearly the result of a misconception of the probative force of the evidence by the jury. The remittitur of four tenths of the amount of the verdict, so far from curing the vice confessedly in it, but accentuates its illegality. The assessment of damages, proceeding, as it does, upon improbable premises, cannot be maintained. It is clearly excessive as including compensation for ailments not traceable, upon a proper weighing of the evidence, to the accident chargeable to the negligence of defendant."

Probably the trial judge did not intend to suggest and defect as serious as passion or prejudice in the verdict in Beller v. Levy, 68 Misc. 182, 124 N. Y. 411, where, in reducing a verdict, he said: "It is apparent to me that the jury, in awarding her the sum of $750, must have been influenced by sympathy or partiality. The amount so awarded is excessive for the injuries received, and should be reduced to the sum of posts with a crossbar, and thereby caused the whole timbering at the point to collapse, burying plaintiff in the ruins, without any fault or negligence on his part."

The testimony of the plaintiff shows that the thing which in fact caused the timbering to collapse, burying him in the ruins, was the act of Swanson in giving a violent surge on the bar and throwing his weight heavily against one of the posts of the square set.

Upon his cross-examination the following testimony was adduced to this point:

Q. Do you mean to tell the jury that the collapse occurred without the stopping bar being tightened any more at all?

A. Yes, sir.

$350, to which reduction the plaintiff should stipulate; and on her refusal to so stipulate, I order a new trial, without costs." But on appeal (127 N. Y. Supp. 237) the verdict was restored as not excessive, the court seeing nothing in the contention that the jury was swayed by sympathy.

Excess is not necessarily due to passion or prejudice. In Lewis v. Northern P. R. Co. 36 Mont. 207, 92 Pac. 469, the court said, in affirming a judgment where a remittitur of $7,400 had been made from a verdict of $17,400: "In a given case, it may be that the amount awarded is due to miscalculation, or based upon a wrong standard. In such cases the excessive award is not the result of passion or prejudice, but the result of an honest mistake; and in any case there is no presumption of wrongdoing, unless the award is so grossly out of proportion to the injury, looking to all the circumstances, as that it cannot be otherwise accounted for; for the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 1171, subd. 5) allows a new trial on the ground of passion or prejudice only when one or the other is apparent."

In Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa, 599, 72 N. W. 790, the court said: "Conceding that the effect and purpose of what was done were to overrule the motion for a new trial on condition that the plaintiff would accept judgment for the amount for which it was rendered, and, if he would not, that the motion would be sustained, that does not show that the district court found that the jury was influenced by passion and prejudice in reaching its verdict. It merely shows that, in the opinion of the court, the evidence did not authorize a verdict for so large an amount as that fixed by the jury. Juries may, and frequently do, err in estimating the amount of a recovery, when there is no ground for claiming that they were influenced by prejudice or passion."

In Doran v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. 117 Iowa, 442, 90 N. W. 815, the court said: "As to the complaint that the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, it is enough to say that the only evidence of passion and prejudice relied on is the amount of damages named in the verdict. It is not 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Q. How did that happen?

A. Mr. Swanson was standing here, and I stepped back, started to step out from here, where it was perfectly safe, and Mr. Swanson yelled at me; he said, 'The bar isn't tight yet,' at the same time giving a violent surge on the bar, throwing his weight heavily against this corner post here, and the square sets collapsed, and caught both of us.

There was other testimony by plaintiff, which showed that the bar between the square sets had not been tightened, and that there was no pressure from it against the timbers, and that the violent surge upon the bar and pressure of Swanson upon the corner post, in throwing his weight heavily contended but that there was some evidence to support a verdict, and therefore the mere fact that a verdict was found for the plaintiff would certainly not indicate passion and prejudice. It is true that the trial court found the amount of the verdict to be excessive, and refused a new trial only on condition that a considerable amount should be remitted. But an excessive verdict is not necessarily a verdict which results from passion and prejudice. We could not assent to a proposition that wherever the trial court finds that the verdict was for too large an amount in cases of personal injury, we should conclude that it ought to have been entirely set aside on the other ground."

In Argentine v. Bender, 71 Kan. 422, 80 Pac. 935, where the trial court had given the plaintiff the opportunity of remitting two thirds of a verdict of $7,500, stating that "the error of the jury in fixing the amount of damages does not permeate the entire verdict, but only affects the amount of the same," the appellate court, in affirming the judgment on the remittitur, said: "This court must enter upon the consideration of this case with the assumption that the evidence could not sustain the recovery of a greater amount than $2,500. This is conclusively settled for the present purpose by the action of the district court. The mere fact that the jury, in estimating plaintiff's damage, so far exceeded this limit, must be regarded as having some tendency to show unfairness. If aided by anything in the evidence or elsewhere in the record tending in the same direction, or possibly if not offset by something of a contrary tendency, this fact alone might justify a conclusion that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice, and require a reversal. On the other hand, the very departure from a proper amount should be otherwise accounted for if a reasonable basis for so doing can be found. A sufficient explanation of the course of the jury, without involving the supposition that they were actuated by unfair motives, may be found in the meagerness of the instruction given them as a guide to the amount of recovery."

against it, was in fact the proximate cause of the collapse. It is urgently argued by counsel that there is such variance between the proofs which show the particular negligence which resulted in the injury complained of, and that which is specifically charged in the complaint, as having occasioned it, that a recovery in the present state of the record cannot properly be sustained. While we do not place the reversal of the judgment upon this assignment, we recognize the force of the claim, and suggest, in the event of a new trial, that the complaint, out of proper caution, be amended to correspond to the proof.

Since we conclude that the judgment must, in any event, be reversed for the reason stated, we deem it unnecessary and unwise to consider or pass upon the other numerous errors assigned and argued. The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded to the trial court for further proceedings, in conformity with the views here expressed.

Reversed and remanded.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Des Lauriers, 40 Ill. App. 654, where, in an action for the death of a child three years of age, the trial court required a reduction of the verdict from $3,750 to $2,000, to prevent the granting of a new trial, the court, in affirming the judgment, said: "This, it is said, was a substitution of the verdict of the judge for that of the jury, and thus not only deprived the defendant of its right to a trial by jury, but is a clear indication that, in the opinion of the trial judge, the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice. . . . Where juries are left to estimate damages, not from evidence, but from their varying observation and opinions founded thereon, it is not to be wondered at that their verdict should differ as widely as have the circumstances by which they have been surrounded. There are, doubtless, many parents who could truthfully affirm that, however poignant their sorrow, the death of a child of three could not be considered a pecuniary loss to its parents; many other parents think very differently. The trial judge in this case did not agree with the jury in this regard; but in the entire absence of evidence upon the question, how can it be said that the verdict of the jury was the result, not of their honest convictions, but of passion or prejudice?"

Yet, upon the question whether, in a particular case, there has been prejudice or passion, the amount or proportion of the remittitur is generally an important element. And there are many cases where the decision that there was such prejudice and passion rested largely, if not entirely, upon the relation of the amount of the remittitur to the verdict. Thus, this has been done where the verdict was reduced:

—by $\frac{1}{2}$. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Cummings, 20 Ill. App. 333.

—by $\frac{1}{3}$. Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Binkopski, 72 Ill. App. 22.

—by $\frac{1}{4}$. Chicago City R. Co. v. Fennimore, 78 Ill. App. 478.

—by $\frac{1}{5}$. North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Hoffart, 82 Ill. App. 539.

—by $\frac{1}{6}$. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Story, 104 Ill. App. 132.

—by $\frac{1}{7}$. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cone, 37 Kan. 507, 15 Pac. 499; Atchison v. Plunkett, 61 Kan. 297, 59 Pac. 646; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dwelle, 44 Kan. 394, 24 Pac. 500.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

—by $\frac{1}{8}$. Bell v. Morse, 48 Kan. 601, 29 Pac. 1086.

—by $\frac{1}{9}$. Steinbuechel v. Wright, 43 Kan. 307, 23 Pac. 560.

In Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Cummings, 20 Ill. App. 333, where, upon the requirement of the court, the plaintiff abated more than two thirds of his verdict in an action where he was assaulted by the defendant's conductor, the appellate court, while seeming to think that there would have been no error in law in affirming the judgment, stated, that they had power to reverse where that course would best tend to promote the impartial administration of justice, and said: "A verdict in such a case as this, so excessive that seven tenths of it will be remitted to prevent a new trial, cannot but be regarded as the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury, and it is difficult to see how the vice in such a verdict can be cured by a remittitur, for the passion and prejudice was in the jury, and must have entered into and permeated the whole finding, and must abide in that which remains as well as in that which is remitted."

In Ahrens v. Fenton, 138 Iowa, 559, 115 N. W. 233, where the jury allowed the defendant damages on a counterclaim, including exemplary damages for the malicious suing out of an attachment, the trial court reduced both the actual and the exemplary damages of the defendant. The appellate court, in reversing the judgment on the plaintiff's appeal, said: "The trial court evidently thought the verdict was the result of passion and prejudice, for it reduced the allowance of exemplary damages from $800 to $500. . . . As the allowance of exemplary damages is wholly within the discretion of the jury in a case where there is a legal basis for the allowance of such damages (Reizenstein v. Clark, 104 Iowa, 287, 73 N. W. 588), the finding of the jury can only be interfered with on the ground of such error of judgment as to indicate passion and prejudice; and where the allowance is so grossly excessive under the evidence that it should not be allowed to stand, the verdict should be set aside. Saunders v. Mullen, 66 Iowa, 728, 24 N. W. 529; Tynberg v. Cohen, 76 Tex. 409, 13 S. W. 315. If the verdict is vitiated by improper conduct of the jury, it is vitiated as a whole, and not simply to the extent that the trial court may think it in excess of what should reasonably be allowed. Darland v. Wade, 48 Iowa, 547; Loewenthal v. Streng, 90 Ill. 74. The trial court should have sustained plaintiff's motion for new trial, and in rendering judgment against plaintiff for a portion of the amount found by the jury to be due by way of exemplary damages committed an error."

But, on the other hand a heavy reduction from a verdict has often been approved as not necessarily indicating that the original verdict was the result of prejudice and passion.

Thus, judgments have been affirmed where the verdict has been reduced:

—by §. Goldie v. Werner, 50 Ill. App. 297 (affirmed in 151 Ill. 551, 38 N. E. 35.)

—by over 45 per cent. Doran v. Cedar Rapids & M. C. R. Co. 117 Iowa, 442, 90 N. W. 815; Baxter v. Cedar Rapids, 103 Iowa, 599, 72 N. W. 790; Carl v. Pierce, 20 Ohio C. C. 68, 10 Ohio C. D. 711.

So, in a number of cases, reductions in the trial court have been followed by further remittiturs in the appellate court, which together reduced the verdict in a material proportion.

Thus, a verdict for:

—$7,500, reduced to $4,000, was further reduced on appeal to $1,000 (Phelps v. Cogswell, 70 Cal. 201, 11 Pac. 628).

—$12,500, reduced to $10,000, was further reduced to $7,000 (Burdick v. Missouri P. R. Co. 123 Mo. 221, 26 L.R.A. 384, 45 Am. St. Rep. 528, 27 S. W. 453).

—$50,000, reduced to $35,000, was further reduced to $25,000 (Gordon v. Kansas City Southern R. Co. 222 Mo. 516, 121 S. W. 80).

—$10,000, reduced to $6,300, was further reduced to $5,000 (Fremont, E. & M. Valley R. Co. v. French, 48 Neb. 638, 67 N. W. 472).

—$25,000, reduced to $15,000, was further reduced to $10,000 (O'Donnell v. American Sugar Ref. Co. 41 App. Div. 307, 58 N. Y. Supp. 640).

—$2,250, reduced to $1,500, was further reduced to $1,000 (Comrade v. Atlas Lumber & Shingle Co. 44 Wash. 470, 87 Pac 517).

2. Allowable

In a number of jurisdictions remittiturs are allowed although the amount of the original verdict is the result of prejudice or passion. Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712; Trow v. White Bear, 78 Minn. 433, 80 N. W. 1117; Bremer v. Minneapolis, St. P. & Ste. M. R. Co. 96 Minn. 469, 105 N. W. 494; Goss v. Goss, 102 Minn. 346, 113 N. W. 690; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 167, 58 S. W. 118; Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roberts, 113 Tenn. 488, 67 L.R.A. 495, 82 S. W. 314, 3 Ann. Cas. 937; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Darby, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 413, 67 S. W. 446; Gulf, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. O'Neill, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 411, 74 S. W. 960; Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Wallis, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 120, 104 S. W. 418; Reddon v. Union P. R. Co. 5 Utah, 344, 15 Pac 262 (cited and followed in Kennedy v. Oregon Short Line R. Co. 18 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Utah, 325, 54 Pac. 988); Brown v. Southern P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 288, 26 Pac. 579; Gillen v. Minneapolis, St. P. & Ste. M. R. Co. 91 Wis. 633, 65 N. W. 373; Heimlich v. Tabor, 123 Wis. 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10; Beach v. Bird & W. Lumber Co. 135 Wis. 550, 116 N. W. 245; McNamara v. McNamara, 108 Wis. 613, 84 N. W. 901 (dictum).

In Craig v. Cook, 28 Minn. 232, 9 N. W. 712, an action for assault and forcible ejection from premises of one in possession, the jury found a verdict for $1,200, and the trial court, on the ground that the damages were so clearly excessive as to evince something like passion or prejudice, required a new trial or a remittitur of $900. The appellate court held that the finding of passion and prejudice was not before them for review, and affirmed the judgment as with in the right of the trial court when it considers there has been passion or prejudice, although it should usually in such cases order a new trial.

In Trow v. White Bear, 78 Minn. 433, 80 N. W. 1117, the court, in affirming a judgment where a remittitur from $1,400 to $800 had been made, said: "The position of appellant's counsel is that, where it is determined by the trial court that excessive damages have been so awarded by a jury, a new trial should be granted, and the error of the jury cannot be corrected by a reduction of the verdict. Taken from a statutory point of view, there is, in the opinion of the writer, much logic and good sense in counsel's position. Our statutes provide for granting a new trial in cases where excessive damages have been awarded by a jury acting under the influence of passion and prejudice, and contain no exception or saving clause under which the trial court may correct the erroneous conduct of the jury by reducing the verdict. A strict following of the statutes would therefore require a new trial whenever such a verdict is returned. But the practice of correcting the error of the jury by reducing the damages to what the trial court deems reasonable and fair, not only in cases where it is found that the jury was actuated by motives other than passion and prejudice, but in cases where there was no other apparent cause, is too firmly rooted in this state to be now departed from. Of course, in cases where there is such a degree of passion and prejudice as to make it clear to the court that it permeated the entire case, and influenced the jury upon questions other than damages, such misconduct on the part of the jury (for it amounts to misconduct) will not be overlooked, or any attempt made to correct it by a reduction of damages."

After this decision any doubt shown by the opinion in Hall v. Chicago, B. & N. R. Co. 46 Minn. 439, 49 N. W. 239, may be disregarded.

In Goss v. Goss, 102 Minn. 346, 113 N. W. 690 the court, in affirming a judgment, said: "The rule is too well settled to be seriously questioned that the trial court may, in actions of tort, as well as in actions on contract, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, when it deems a verdict excessive and the result of passion and prejudice on the part of the jury, deny a new trial on condition that the prevailing party remit such sum as shall leave the recovery not excessive in the judgment of the court. When, however, the damages are so excessive, and the circumstances, as disclosed by the evidence as to other issues, are such as to indicate a fair probability that the jury were influenced by passion or prejudice in the determination of the other issues, a new trial should be granted. Whether in any given case a new trial should be granted or denied on condition that the verdict be reduced rests largely in the sound judicial discretion of the trial court."

In Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Frith, 105 Tenn. 187, 58 S. W. 118, the court said, in affirming a judgment against a telegraph company for negligence in failure to deliver a telegram, where there had been a remittitur: "An ingenious and forcible argument is made, and it is not without authority, that in actions for personal injuries, when there is no fixed standard for the measure of damages, every verdict which is by the trial court considered as excessive must be so deemed on account of passion, prejudice, corruption, or caprice on the part of the jury; and that when a trial court refuses to approve such verdict, it can only be upon such ground. Even if this be conceded to be true, and if it be admitted that in the present case the trial judge refused to approve the verdict because he deemed it to be so excessive as to indicate passion, prejudice, corruption, or caprice, still the question remains, should the verdict be set aside, or a less amount approved and judgment rendered therefor upon a remittitur? Although a verdict may be the result of passion, prejudice, caprice, or corruption, it is nevertheless a valid verdict until and unless it is set aside. If it is reduced by the trial judge to such an amount as makes it a proper verdict on the facts of the case, and this is assented to by the plaintiff, it is purged of its taint, and judgment may be rendered for such reasonable amount without the necessity of another trial. This has been the practice and rule of this court and the court below for a long number of years; and we can see no reason why it should not apply in cases of tort as well as in cases of contract. It is true a plaintiff cannot be forced to remit, and if he protest and object the trial court should not render judgment, but should grant a new trial. The trial judge can only suggest, and if the plaintiff accept without protest or objection, then judgment may be rendered by the court."

In Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Roberts, 113 Tenn. 488, 67 L.R.A. 495, 82 S. W. 314, 3 Ann. Cas. 937, the court said: "In a number of cases it has been held that when the damages are so excessive as to evince passion, prejudice, or caprice, the error cannot be corrected by remittitur, because such passion, prejudice, and caprice will be presumed to have permeated the entire verdict, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) and to have influenced or caused the finding of the question of any liability on the facts. . . . We cannot admit the soundness of the view of these cases under our practice."

And it seems from the opinion that the court probably took a similar view in Branch v. Bass, 5 Sneed, 366, where, in an action for damages for the abduction of the plaintiff's daughters, two thirds of a verdict of $20,000 had been remitted in the trial court to save a new trial, and it was held on appeal that this was the proper course to pursue.

In Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Darby, 28 Tex. Civ. App. 413, 67 S. W. 446, the court said: The verdict of the jury was for $22,500. The appellee voluntarily remitted $7,500 thereof, and the trial court, being of the opinion that it was still excessive, required a further remittitur of $5,000, which was made, and judgment was entered for $10,000. This amount is not complained of, but the complaint is that the amount of the verdict was so excessive as to show such a bias on the part of the jury as prevented them from giving proper consideration to the facts. It is a peculiar case, but the amount for which the judgment was entered having been arrived at by remitter, and being an amount that this court can approve, and the verdict as to liability being supported by the evidence, and there being no other ground for a reversal thereof, it is our duty to affirm the judgment."

This case was followed in Gulf, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. O'Neill, 32 Tex. Civ. App. 411, 74 S. W. 960, where the court said: "Counsel discusses only the excessiveness of the verdict, and is insistent upon the proposition that the judgment should be reversed because the facts and the amount of the verdict show that the jury was influenced by passion and prejudice; that the trial court held that they were by requiring the remitter; and that, as the passion affected the amount, it naturally affected the verdict on the issue of liability. This question has heretofore been presented, and has been determined against the contention of appellant."

In Galveston, H. & N. R. Co. v. Wallis, 47 Tex. Civ. App. 120, 104 S. W. 418, in an action for death by negligence, where the trial court had made a remittitur a condition of denying a motion for a new trial, the appellate court, in affirming the judgment, said: "We understand the contention of appellant under this assignment to be that because the verdict of the jury was so excessive as to indicate that it was the result of some improper motive, it should be set aside and a new trial granted, notwithstanding the remittitur filed by appellees may have reduced the judgment to a reasonable amount. There is force in the contention that where the evidence is conflicting upon the issue of liability and the verdict against the defendant is so unreasonably large as to show passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, that the right of the defendant to a trial by a fair and impartial jury, is denied when he is forced to accept upon the issue of liability the verdict of a jury that has shown, by the unreasonable amount of the damages assessed, that it has been influenced by prejudice, sympathy, or some other improper motive. The point, however, was expressly decided by this court against appellant's contention in the case of Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Darby, supra, and, by the refusal of a writ of error, that decision was approved by the supreme court."

In Reddon v. Union P. R. Co. 5 Utah, 344, 15 Pac. 262, the court, in affirming a judgment, said: "The appellant asks that the judgment be reversed because the damages were excessive, appearing to have been given under the influence of passion or prejudice. The argument is that the trial court, having determined that the damages are excessive, it taints the whole verdict, and that none of it should stand. The practice which was pursued in this case is thoroughly established by precedent. 1 Sutherland, Damages, 813-815, and cases there cited. It is a supervision which courts exercise over verdicts for the protection of defendants in what are deemed to be proper cases, and if the rule is ever to be disturbed, it should be on the application of parties injured, and not those who are benefited by it. We are not prepared to say that the damages, after the reduction, are excessive, in view of the severe character of the injuries."

In Brown v. Southern P. R. Co. 7 Utah, 288, 26 Pac. 579, where the verdict was for $12,000, which was reduced in the trial court to $10,000, on appeal the judgment was reversed on the ground that the verdict was given under the influence of prejudice or passion; but the plaintiff then offering to reduce his verdict to $4,000, judgment was affirmed for that amount.

In Gillen v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 91 Wis. 633, 65 N. W. 373, an action for putting a passenger off a train, the jury found a verdict for $1,500. The trial court made the denial of a motion for a new trial conditioned on the plaintiff's remitting $750, and the appellate court made an affirmance conditional on the further remittance for all damages in excess of $350. The court said: "The judge might well have set aside the verdict altogether, for the large proportion of the verdict which he required to be remitted sufficiently indicates that he entertained the opinion that the verdict was so large as to make it manifest that it was the product of prejudice, partiality, or other improper bias. The parties are entitled to have even an assessment of damage made by a fair and impartial jury, and to have the impartial judgment of the jury in that behalf. But the trial court has a large discretion, in such cases, whether it will allow a part to be remitted and the verdict to stand for the balance, or whether it will set the verdict aside altogether and grant a new trial."

Any hesitation or doubt in the Gillen Case is now immaterial, as the doctrine is emphatically approved in the Heimlich Case, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

123 Wis 565, 68 L.R.A. 669, 102 N. W. 10, and the Beach Case, 135 Wis. 550, 116 N. W. 245.

Passion and prejudice affecting other questions than amount of damages.

While the language of some of the opinions is very broad, probably no court would avowedly hold that a verdict tainted with passion and prejudice in matters of fact outside the question of the amount of damages should be permitted to stand for any purpose or in any amount. The court in such cases should set it entirely aside. Ewing v. Stickney, 107 Minn. 217, 119 N. W. 802; see also the foregoing quotations from Trow v. White Bear and Goss v. Goss.

So, also, the affirming opinion in McKnight v. Minneapolis, St. P. & S. Ste. M. R. Co. 96 Minn. 480, 105 N. W. 673, indicates that the passion and prejudice might be so great as to require a new trial, and this was the ground of the decision in Ger-mann v. Great Northern R. Co. 114 Minn. 247, 130 N. W. 1021.

In McNamara v. McNamara, 108 Wis. 613, 84 N. W. 901, where, in an action by a son against his father for services for assisting him in his practice as a physician, the verdict was $11,000, from which there was a remittitur of $5,000 in the trial court, the appellate court, in reversing the judgment, said: "Where it appears with reasonable certainty that the recovery is so excessive as to create the belief that the jury have been misled by 'passion, prejudice, or ignorance' the trial court may either grant a new trial absolutely, or give the plaintiff the option to remit the improper excess. But the rule is only applicable in cases where it is clear that the perverse conditions mentioned only affected the amount of the recovery. If it appears that the elements of passion and prejudice may have entered into, and probably did affect, the decision of other questions in the case, the court's duty is to grant a new trial absolutely. Such we believe to be the situation in this case."

— B. B. B.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

FENNER B. BAKER, Appt.,

v.

W. W. BAILEY.

(— Ark. —, 145 S. W. 532.)

Innkeeper — passing time — liability for baggage.

1. One who goes into a hotel merely to Note. — What acts with respect to baggage of an intending guest will initiate the relation of innkeeper and guest so as to create liability for its loss or injury.

This question was treated in the note in 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1107, and, in addition to pass the time and write letters, without registering or purchasing any accommodations, is not a guest so as to render the keeper responsible for the safe-keeping of his baggage.

Same — gratuitous bailee — liability.

2. The acceptance by a hotel porter of baggage from one who intends to become a guest at the hotel, but does not do so, establishes merely a gratuitous bailment, and the innkeeper is bound to use only slight care in protecting it.

Trial — loss of baggage — care — question for jury.

3. Whether or not an innkeeper who has assumed the obligation of a gratuitous bailee for the care of baggage has performed his duty is, in case of an attempt to hold him liable for its loss, a question for the jury.

(March 18, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Sebastian County in defendant's favor in an action brought to enforce the liability of defendant as an innkeeper for the loss of certain baggage while in his possession. Reversed.

Statement by Kirby, J.:

Appellant, a traveling salesman, brought suit against appellee for the loss of one of his grips containing wearing apparel and other personal effects. He was passing through Ft. Smith on his journey, and on arriving there handed his baggage, two grips, to the porter of the Hotel Main, who was at the station to receive the baggage of incoming guests. The complaint alleged "that plaintiff went direct to the hotel from said station with the intention of remaining until some time the following day; but, upon arriving at said hotel, found that the train he would take would depart much earlier than he had anticipated, and, owing to the time of the departure, he did not procure a room, but remained in and about the hotel." The answer denied that appellant became a guest at the hotel, and any liability for the loss of his grip. He testified: "I was under the impression that the Kansas City Southern train going north left something like 4 or 5 o'clock next morning, and gave the porter the baggage with the expectation of staying all night there if the train did go at this time. When I reached the hotel, I found that the train went out earlier than I expected, upon inquiry of the clerk, and consequently I did not have any time to speak of to get any sleep if I had gone to bed, and did not register. If I had known the train was to leave as early as it did, I would have checked my baggage at the station, and not gone to the hotel." He stated further that he arrived at the hotel about 10 o'clock, too late for supper, and went out to a near-by restaurant for that meal, which consumed some time; that he later returned to the hotel and wrote some letters, and stayed in and around there until the time of the departure of his expected train, when he asked the clerk for his grips, and only one was returned to him, the one containing the wearing apparel and other effects not being found. There was some testimony relative to the rules of the hotel, as to its liability for baggage only when checked and put in the baggage room, and that there was a notice to this effect upon the check room door. From other testimony, it was doubtful whether this notice was in such a place as would likely attract the attention of or be seen by persons required to observe its provisions. The hotel porter testified that he took all the grips that were handed to him at the station; that he supposed he got the two belonging to appellant, although he did not know him, and that it was so dark at the station that he could not easily recognize any of the persons turning their grips over to him. He said, also, that he brought all the baggage delivered to him to the hotel; that none was lost; and that he put it down on the floor of the lobby at the accustomed place. When appellant got ready to leave, he inquired for and demanded his grips, but only one was delivered to him; the clerk not being able to find the other, which he the cases therein cited, reference may be had to Flint v. Illinois Hotel Co. 149 Ill. App. 404, declaring that the relation of innkeeper and guest may be established by the reception of baggage by the innkeeper; and that therefore where baggage is delivered to an innkeeper as the property of an intending guest, who, within a reasonable time thereafter, actually becomes a guest, the responsibility of the innkeeper for the safe-keeping of the baggage relates back to the time when it was delivered.

Generally, as to when the relation of innkeeper and guest is initiated, see the note to the case of Memphis Hotel Co. v. Hill, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 420. The case itself holds 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that a traveler who is met at the door of an inn by a servant of the establishment, and delivers to him his baggage, which is placed with that of other guests, and who repairs to the dining room, where he is served with food for which he pays the customary price, is a guest, for the safety of whose baggage the innkeeper is responsible, although he does not register or notify the clerk or other officer of his intention to become a guest, or give any directions as to the care of the baggage.

On the duty of an innkeeper as to effects of one who has left without intention of returning as a guest, see the note in 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 495. L. A. W.

thought might have been taken by mistake by some of the baseball club that had gone from the hotel out to Poteau, Oklahoma, to play there the next day. The clerk also stated that it was the rule of the hotel to require baggage checked before any responsibility for loss was assumed by it, of which rule notices were posted in the hotel. There was testimony, also, as to the value of the lost grip and its contents. The court directed a verdict for appellee. From the judgment thereon, this appeal comes.

Messrs. H. C. Locklar and Fred A. Isgrig, for appellant:

If the porter of a hotel had authority to receive baggage of guests, and appellant's baggage was delivered to the porter at the station, the hotel keeper became liable for the redelivery of the same to the appellant.

Cookery v. Nagle, 83 Ga. 696, 6 L.R.A. 483, 20 Am. St. Rep. 333, 10 S. E. 491; Eden v. Drey, 75 Ill. App. 102; Williams v. Moore, 69 Ill. App. 618; Dickinson v. Winchester, 4 Cush. 114, 50 Am. Dec. 760; Sasseen v. Clark, 37 Ga. 242.

If appellant delivered his baggage to the porter of the hotel at the station, and went direct to the hotel himself, with the intention of remaining over night at the hotel, but, upon arriving at the hotel, found his train would depart at a much earlier hour than he had anticipated, and for this reason did not register or take a room, but remained in and about the public room of the hotel, he became a guest.

Overstreet v. Moser, 88 Mo. App. 72; Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co. 124 Tenn. 376, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420, 136 S. W. 997.

It is not necessary that the baggage should be in the innkeeper's special keeping, but it is generally sufficient that it is in the inn under his implied care.

Packard v. Northcraft, 2 Met. (Ky.) 439; Norcross v. Norcross, 53 Me. 163.

Messrs. Read & McDonough, for appellee:

The relation of landlord and tenant never having existed, defendant is not liable.

Bunn v. Johnson, 77 Mo. App. 596; Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co. 124 Tenn. 376, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420, 136 S. W. 997; Gastenhofer v. Clair, 10 Daly, 265; Tulane Hotel Co. v. Holohan, 112 Tenn. 214, 105 Am. St. Rep. 930, 79 S. W. 113, 2 Ann. Cas. 345; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 518; Brewer v. Caswell, 132 Ga. 563, 23 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1107, 131 Am. St. Rep. 216, 64 S. E. 674, 16 Ann. Cas. 936.

The liability of the gratuitous bailee in case of loss arises only in consequence of gross negligence on his part.

16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 531; O'Brien v. Vaill, 22 Fla. 627, 1 Am. St. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 219, 1 So. 137; Wear v. Gleason, 52 Ark. 364, 20 Am. St. Rep. 186, 12 S. W. 756.

Kirby, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is insisted that appellant became a guest of the hotel, and that it was liable to him as such for the loss of his property; but we do not agree to this contention. In Gastenhofer v. Clair, 10 Daly, 265, the court said: "The universal rule seems to be that one cannot become the guest of a hotel unless he procures some accommodation. He must procure a meal, room, drink, feed for his horse, or at least offer to buy something of the innkeeper, before he becomes a guest." Tulane Hotel Co. v. Holohan, 112 Tenn. 216, 105 Am. St. Rep. 930, 79 S. W. 113, 2 Ann. Cas. 345. In Hill v. Memphis Hotel Co. 124 Tenn. 376, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 420, 136 S. W. 997, the court said: "To establish the relation of host and guest, the traveler must visit the inn for the purpose of availing himself of the entertainment offered, and the innkeeper must receive the traveler for the purpose of entertaining him," and it is not necessary that he should register. And further: "An application to the innkeeper for entertainment is sufficient notice of the traveler's intention to become a guest; and supplying his wants and furnishing the entertainment in the way in which the innkeeper publicly professes to entertain travelers are sufficient acceptance to constitute the relation of host and guest." "It is sufficient if he visit the inn for the purpose of receiving entertainment and is entertained by the keeper." Appellant did not take supper nor a room, neither did he buy anything at the hotel after his arrival, and, at most, wrote a few letters upon its stationery without expense to himself. According to his own statement, he spent nothing but the evening with the hotel; neither did he offer to spend anything else, and we hold that he did not become a guest thereof under the circumstances, and the hotel company incurred no liability on that account.

Its porter, however, was duly authorized for that purpose, and received the baggage of appellant, at the train, who at the time of its delivery to him intended to become a guest of the hotel, and the undisputed testimony shows that the grip containing the wearing apparel was not returned to him. Certainly, if he had procured some entertainment or refreshment at the hotel, the relation of guest and host would have been established, and the hotel company's liability fixed in accordance with such relation. Not having done so, and the porter of the hotel having received his grips and placed them in the hotel, along with the baggage of all others stopping there, the hotel thereby became a bailee of such baggage. The bailment, being solely for the bailor's benefit, was a gratuitous one, and the hotel was only bound to the use of slight care in the protection of the property, and responsible for its loss only in case of gross neglect. 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, pp. 518, 531; Wear v. Gleason, 52 Ark. 364, 20' Am. St. Rep. 186, 12 S. W. 756; Van Zile, Bailm. § 19; Story, Bailm. § 23.

As to whether the bailee, the hotel, exercised the care the law required in the protection of appellant's property, or was guilty of such gross negligence as would make it responsible for the loss thereof, was a question of fact to be determined by the jury, under proper instructions from the court. Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 34 L. ed. 788, 11 Sup. Ct. Rep. 162.

It follows that the court erred in directing a verdict, and the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

RE ESTATE OF PATRICK KIRBY, Deceased.

JAMES KIRBY, Assignee, Appt.

BRIDGET MANNION, Admx., etc., of Jane Roach, et al., Resp'ts.

(— Cal. —, 121 Pac. 370.)

Descent — murder of ancestor — statutory disinheritance.

A conviction of manslaughter does not come within a statute forbidding an heir to inherit any portion of the estate of an ancestor for whose murder he has been convicted, where by statute technical words are to receive their technical meaning in statutory construction.

(January 27, 1912.)

A PPEAL by James Kirby, assignee of an interest in the estate of Patrick Kirby, deceased, from an order of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco distributing said estate. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, for appellant:

In the absence of the positive declaration contained in § 1409, Civil Code, appellant's assignor would still be entitled to inherit.

Re Stanford, 126 Cal. 114, 45 L.R.A. 788, 58 Pac. 462; Carpenter's Estate, 170 Pa. 203, 29 L.R.A. 145, 50 Am. St. Rep. 765, 32 Atl. 637; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 25 L.R.A. 564, 59 N. W. 935; Deem v. Milliken, 53 Ohio St. 668, 44 N. E. 1134; Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 240, 6 S. E. 794; Gollnik v. Mengel, 112 Minn. 349, 128 N. W. 292; Re Kuhn, 125 Iowa, 449, 101 N. W. 151, 2 Ann. Cas. 667; Wellner v. Eckstein, 105 Minn. 444, 117 N. W. 831.

Messrs. Cullinan & Hickey, for respondents:

Under the common law one who feloniously killed another could not inherit from the slain person.

Box v. Lanier, 112 Tenn. 393, 64 L.R.A. 458, 79 S. W. 1042; Lundy v. Lundy, 24 Can. S. C. 650; Gollnik v. Mengel, 112 Minn. 349, 128 N. W. 292; Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 5 L.R.A. 340, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819, 22 N. E. 188; Wellner v. Eckstein, 105 Minn. 444, 117 N. W. 830.

Shaw, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a final order of distribution of the estate of Patrick Kirby, deceased.

Note. — Homicide as affecting devolution of property.

This note is supplemental to that part of the note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 726, which applies to transfers by devise or operation of common-law rules, and is intended to include only such cases as have been decided since that time. The part of that note that relates to the proceeds of life insurance is supplemented by the note to Filmore v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 675.

In Perry v. Strawbridge, 209 Mo. 621, 16 L.R.A.(N.S.) 244, 123 Am. St. Rep. 510, 108 S. W. 641, 14 Ann. Cas. 92, it was held that a husband who murders his wife cannot inherit one half of her estate under a statute which gives the widower of a childless wife one half the estate of which she died seized; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

and so a claim to title to such an estate by children, by a former marriage, of a man who killed his wife and then committed suicide, was denied.

In Beddingfield v. Estill, 118 Tenn. 39, 9 L.R.A.(N.S.) 640, 100 S. W. 108, 11 Ann. Cas. 904, it was held that a man holding an estate by entail with his wife does not, upon her death, inherit it from her, within the meaning of a statute which provides that anyone who feloniously kills one from whom he would inherit property shall forfeit all right thereto.

In Wellner v. Eckstein, 105 Minn. 444, 117 N. W. 830, by reason of a divided court, the question of the right of a widow who had murdered her husband that she might acquire his realty, to inherit under the statute of descent, was not decided.

But in Gollnik v. Mengel, 112 Minn. 349,

Patrick Kirby died intestate on January 18, 1910, leaving neither wife, issue, father, nor mother surviving. His surviving heirs, according to § 1386 of the Civil Code, were two brothers, Michael and James Kirby, one sister, Bridget Mannion, and the children of Ellen Daly, a deceased sister. On December 1, 1910, Michael Kirby transferred his interest in Patrick's estate to one James Kirby, a son of said Michael. Said James Kirby is the appellant herein. On February 23, 1910, Michael Kirby was duly charged by information, in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, with the murder of said Patrick Kirby. On July 1, 1910, he was, upon said charge, convicted of the crime of manslaughter. An appeal was taken from the judgment of conviction, and it has been affirmed and has become final. Because of this conviction, the court below refused to distribute the share of Michael Kirby to his assignee, James Kirby, and distributed the entire estate to the other persons above mentioned. It is claimed that this was error.

By § 1386, if a person dies intestate, leaving neither issue, husband nor wife, father nor mother surviving, his estate goes to his brothers and sisters, and to the children or grandchildren of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation. An exception to this rule is declared by § 1409, a new section added to the same title in 1905. It is as follows: "No person who has been convicted of the murder of the decedent shall be entitled to succeed to any portion of his estate; but the portion thereof to which he would otherwise be entitled to succeed descends to the other persons entitled thereto under the provisions of this title." If Michael Kirby was not "convicted of the murder" of Patrick Kirby within the meaning of this section, then James Kirby, the assignee of Michael, is entitled to succeed to one fourth of the estate. What, then, is the true meaning of the words last quoted?

"Words and phrases are construed according to the context and approved usage of the language; but technical words and phrases, and such others as may have acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in law, or are defined in the succeeding section, are to be construed according to such peculiar and appropriate meaning or definition." Civil Code, § 13. The word "murder" is a technical word. It not only has acquired a peculiar and appropriate meaning in the law of this state, and in the law generally, but it has been precisely defined by our statute. The Penal Code defines it as follows: "Murder is the unlawful killing of a human being, with malice aforethought." Section 187. It is divided into two degrees, the first degree including all premeditated, wilful, and deliberate murders, and all killing done in the perpetration or attempt to perpetrate certain lesser crimes, the second including all other kinds of murder. Section 189. Murder of the first degree is punishable by death or imprisonment for life. Murder of the second degree by imprisonment not less than ten years. In ordinary usage and at common law the word has the same meaning. Webster's Dict; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law. § 303. The word "manslaughter," whether 128 N. W. 292, it was held that under the statutes a widow who had been convicted of murder in the second degree, because of the killing of her husband, was not barred from her statutory inheritance in her husband's property because his death was caused by her criminal act; the ground for the decision being that the court deemed itself powerless to interfere with the statutory devolution of property, though recognizing the injustice of permitting a murderer to inherit the property of the victim. Judge O'Brien said: "We are now asked to add a clear and unambiguous statute an exception, and while the demand in this instance appeals to every normal person's sense of justice, it would establish a rule of construction the limitation of which no one could foresee. This is well illustrated by the present case. The respondent was convicted of murder in the second degree, which excludes the idea of deliberation or premeditation, so that the motive for the crime could not have been the acquisition of her husband's property. If her right to inherit in this case is denied, the same reasoning would justify a similar denial where the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) claimant was convicted of homicide in a still lower degree, and the judgment of judicial officers as to when and in what cases the statutory heir is entitled to inherit would be substituted for a legislative determination of that question." But Judge Lewis, who concurred in the result, because of the fact that it did not conclusively appear that the murder was committed for the purpose of acquiring property of her husband, said: "I am of the opinion that the statute of descent was never intended to apply to a case such as Wellner v. Eckstein, supra. When a statute may be construed in accordance with reason, and a strict reading of the language leads to a result abhorrent to reason, the rule of implied exception should apply. In the application of this rule to cases of murder in the first degree, I can see no infringement of the legislative power, nor danger of conflict between the co-ordinate branches of the government. According to the construction given the statute by the majority, it becomes an inducement for the commission of murder."

J. H. B.

in common usage, at common law, or by our statute, has a very different meaning. The Penal Code defines it as "the unlawful killing of a human being, without malice," and declares it to be of two kinds: First, "voluntary,—upon a sudden quarrel or heat of passion;" second, "involuntary,—in the commission of an unlawful act, not amounting to felony; or in the commission of a lawful act which might produce death, in an unlawful manner, or without due caution or circumspection." The meaning at common law and in ordinary usage is substantially the same. See Webster's Dict. 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, §§ 304, 305. It will be noted that it excludes the element of deliberation and premeditation.

With relation to each other, the provisions of the four Codes must be construed as though they were all parts of the same statute. Pol. Code, § 4480. From these rules and definitions the conclusion necessarily follows that a conviction of manslaughter is not a conviction of murder. It is a conviction of a different offense, an offense which does not include all the criminal elements of the crime of murder. The distinction has indeed been carried so far that it is well settled that a conviction of manslaughter upon a charge of murder is, in legal effect, an acquittal of the murder charge. People v. Gilmore, 4 Cal. 376, 60 Am. Dec. 620; People v. Backus, 5 Cal. 278; People v. Gordon, 99 Cal. 230, 33 Pac. 901; People v. Muhlner, 115 Cal. 307, 47 Pac. 128. It follows that Michael Kirby has not been convicted of the murder of Patrick Kirby; that he does not come within the exception made by § 1409, and that he was entitled to the share provided by § 1386. Whether this accords with natural right and justice is a question upon which we cannot enter. The right of inheritance in this state does not depend upon the ideas of court or counsel as to justice and natural right. The entire matter is in the control of the legislature, and depends wholly upon the provisions of the statute, regardless of our notions of natural right and justice. Re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 284, 49 Pac. 181; Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 91, 52 Pac. 134, 586; Re Porter, 129 Cal. 88, 79 Am. St. Rep. 78, 61 Pac. 659. The statute having made the distinction between murder and manslaughter, the courts cannot ignore it, or create a definition of the word "murder" different from that declared in the statute and from that of the common-law and ordinary usage. There is no ambiguity in the language, and nothing is left to construction. The appellant should have received one fourth of the estate, and the refusal to give it to him was erroneous.

The order is reversed.

We concur: Sloss, J.; Angellotti, J.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

HENRY W. WATSON, Resp't.,

CARMELO GUGINO, Appt.

(204 N. Y. 535, 98 N. E. 18.)

Corporation — contract for services — duration — withdrawal — liability.

A promoter of a corporation who undertakes, as part of the inducement to the undertaking, to devote his whole time and attention to the corporate business, without specifying the period over which the services are to extend, is not bound to continue such services for a reasonable time, but may cease to render them at pleasure, without liability to persons who invested their money on the faith of the promise, although the withdrawal of the service wrecks the corporation.

(March 8, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Fourth Department, reversing a judgment of nonsuit of a Trial Term, Part III., for Erie County, in an action brought to recover damages for alleged breach of contract to organize a corporation for the manufacture and sale of macaroni. Reversed.

Statement by Vann, J.:

This action was brought to recover damages from the defendant on account of his alleged breach of a contract made by him with the plaintiff. Upon the trial, it appeared that for some time prior to October, 1904, the firm of Gugino Brothers, composed of Carmelo and Natale Gugino, was engaged in the manufacture and sale of macaroni in the city of Buffalo. They had a plant, machinery, and stock worth about $10,000, of which Carmelo owned two thirds and Natale one third. About the 20th of October, 1904, Carmelo, who was an expert manufacturer of macaroni, familiar with the business and acquainted with the customers, induced the plaintiff, who knew nothing about the manufacture, business, or customers, to purchase the interest of Natale, and he did so, paying therefor the sum of $3,400 in cash. On the same day that the money was paid, Carmelo and the plaintiff entered into an agreement of which the following is a copy, the purely formal parts being omitted:

Note. — As to duration of contract of hiring which specifies no term, but fixes compensation at a certain amount per day, week, month, or year, see note to Warden v. Hinds, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 529.

"The said parties above named have agreed, and by these presents do agree, to form and organize a corporation under and pursuant to the laws of the state of New York, to carry on and conduct the business heretofore conducted by Gugino Brothers, and to that end and purpose the said Carmelo Gugino hereby agrees to put into said corporation all of his interest and property now owned by him in said copartnership of Gugino Brothers, and the sum of eight hundred dollars ($800) in cash; and the said Henry W. Watson hereby agrees to put into said corporation all the property this day sold to him by Natale Gugino, being said Natale Gugino's interest in said copartnership business of Gugino Brothers, and also to put into said corporation the sum of four hundred dollars ($400). And the said Carmelo Gugino, in the consideration of the forming and organizing of said corporation, hereby covenants that the title to all the property used in the said copartnership business of Gugino Brothers is free and clear of any lien or encumbrance, and that the machinery used in the plant of Gugino Brothers is in perfect running order and in good repair.

"The said parties further agree that upon the organization of said corporation, sixty-five shares of the stock therein shall and will be issued to Carmelo Gugino, and he is to be president and manager thereof; one share of stock in said corporation to be issued to Antonio Gugino, and he is to be vice president of said corporation; one share of stock to be issued to Henry W. Watson, who is to be the secretary and treasurer of said corporation; and the remaining thirty-three shares of stock is to be issued to Hiram R. Watson.

"The said Carmelo Gugino further agrees to devote his whole time and attention to the said corporation business, and is to receive the weekly salary of twenty dollars ($20), and the said Henry W. Watson is to receive a weekly salary of fifteen dollars ($15), and also to devote his entire time, and the said Antonio Gugino is to receive the weekly salary of ten dollars ($10); and it is further agreed that the said Henry W. Watson shall have entire charge of the office work, and all checks of said corporation to be signed by treasurer and countersigned by the president.

"The said Carmelo Gugino hereby gives said Henry W. Watson an option on sixteen shares of stock in said corporation, and the said Carmelo Gugino hereby agrees to sell unto the said Henry W. Watson sixteen shares of stock at $100 per share, at any time within six months, upon demand, and in the event of such transfer of stock, an inventory is to be had and proportionate dividends apportioned at date of transfer, before said transfer.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

"Carmelo Gugino further agrees that if, by reason of illness or other cause of which said Carmelo Gugino does not now know of, which would necessitate his giving up business, said Carmelo Gugino agrees to provide a person fully as competent as he is, and who is acceptable to said Henry W. Watson, to take his place."

Within a few days after the agreement was executed, the parties organized a corporation under the name of "the Gugino Macaroni Company," each transferred his interest in the firm assets to the corporation, and each paid thereto the amount agreed upon. Officers were elected and stock issued in accordance with the terms of the agreement. The directors were the three officers, who were also the incorporators. The corporation accepted the property transferred and the money paid to it, and forthwith employed the parties and paid them the salaries agreed upon. For a short time, Carmelo attended to his duties, the enterprise prospered, and the company made money. Evidence was given tending to show that after a few months had passed Carmelo left the business, at first temporarily, under the pretext of sickness, and then permanently. He ceased to be either an officer or director. He substituted his brother Natale in his place as manager, and not only abandoned the business absolutely, but organized a rival corporation, which undersold the Gugino Company and took away its customers. In February, 1906, it was forced out of business, and its assets were sold at a sacrifice.

The plaintiff, alleging that he lost the greater part of his investment through the failure of the defendant "to devote his whole time and attention to the said corporation business," as provided in the contract, brought this action to recover $3,400 as damages for the breach of said covenant. While fraud in making the contract is suggested, but not distinctly alleged in the complaint, no evidence was given in support of that theory. On the trial, at the close of the evidence for the plaintiff, the defendant moved to dismiss the complaint, substantially on the grounds, among others, that the cause of action, if any, did not belong to the plaintiff, but to the corporation, and that no period was specified in the contract during which Carmelo was to devote his whole time and attention to the business. The motion was granted, although the plaintiff asked to go to the jury. An exception was taken to this ruling, and no other appears in the record. On appeal, the appellate division reversed the judgment entered accordingly and granted a new trial. The defendant appealed to this court, and at first did not give the usual stipulation for judgment absolute; but this omission was finally corrected by stipulation and order.

Messrs. Thomas E. Boyd, and Henry W. Willis, with Mr. Gordon F. Matthews, for appellant:

Plaintiff established no breach of the agreement, rather that it was modified, and as modified fully performed by defendant.

Kidd v. Belden, 19 Barb. 266; Jenks v. Robertson, 2 Thomp. & C. 255, affirmed in 58 N. Y. 621; Brooklyn Oil Refinery v. Brown, 61 N. Y. 643; Rutty v. Consolidated Fruit Jar Co. 52 Hun, 492, 6 N. Y. Supp. 23; Myers v. DeMier, 52 N. Y. 647; Weller v. Tuthill, 66 N. Y. 347.

Any breach by defendant, if made, was waived by plaintiff, who was first in default in performing the agreement.

Winch v. Mutual Ben. Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 618; Dunn v. Steubing, 120 N. Y. 232, 24 N. E. 315; Pike v. Nash, 3 Abb. App. Dec. 610, 1 Keyes, 335; Allen v. Robinson, 2 Barb. 341; Sinclair v. Tallmadge, 35 Barb. 602; Parker v. Parmele, 20 Johns. 130, 11 Am. Dec. 253; Johnson v. Wygant, 11 Wend. 48; Gallagher v. Nichols, 60 N. Y. 438; Martin v. Johnston, 6 Misc. 310, 26 N. Y. Supp. 1105, affirmed in 148 N. Y. 740, 42 N. E. 724.

Mr. Edward C. Randall for respondent:

Vann, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The learned justices of the appellate division held that the action was not brought by one stockholder against another to recover for corporate losses, and that the covenant of the defendant to devote his whole time and attention to the business of the corporation was personal to the plaintiff. They also held in effect that said covenant required the defendant to continue with the corporation for a reasonable time, and that it was a question of fact for the jury to decide "whether the agreement was broken by the defendant to the damage of the plaintiff." 140 App. Div. 33, 124 N. Y. Supp. 321.

The defendant claims that, while the corporation was not bound by the agreement entered into between its promoters before it was organized, it had the power, when incorporated, to ratify the contract, which, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) on the happening of that event, became its property, so far as it applied to the corporate business, and could be enforced by it or against it. He further claims that just before the corporation was formed the plaintiff owned an interest in the copartnership assets worth $3,400 and had the sum of $400 in money, while at the same time the defendant had an interest in the copartnership assets worth $6,800 and had the sum of $800 in money; that, pursuant to the contract between the promoters, of which the corporation is presumed to have had knowledge as soon as it was incorporated, they transferred to it their respective interests in the firm property and paid over to it said sums of money; that the corporation promptly accepted said transfers, employed the promoters, who were also the incorporators, at the salaries provided, and thus adopted the contract and made it its own: that the promoters' agreement thereupon became the property of the corporation, and imposed upon it a corresponding liability: that the legal interest of the promoters therein then ceased, and in the place of such interest and of the property and money transferred, they simply owned shares of stock in the corporation; that therefore their sole interest was that of stockholders; and that for any subsequent breach by either of the provisions relating to corporate matters, the only remedy of the other was through the corporation in an action brought by it, or, if it refused to act, or was under hostile control, by a representative action brought by one stockholder in behalf of all; the corporation being made a party defendant. Much could be said in support of this theory; but a majority of the judges prefer not to consider it, as the order appealed from must be reversed, in any event, upon another ground.

The covenant sued upon is as follows: "The said Carmelo Gugino further agrees to devote his whole time and attention to the said corporation business, and is to receive the weekly salary of $20." It is to be observed that no period of service was specified, and even if the stipulation as to "the weekly salary" implies a hiring by the week, it would not aid the plaintiff. The effect of a general contract of hiring, no time being specified, varies in different jurisdictions. In England, it is presumed to be a hiring for a year, regardless of the nature of the service, unless there is a custom relating to the subject, and it appears that the contract was made with reference to the custom. Fawcett v. Cash, 3 Nev. & M. 177, 5 Barn. & Ad. 904, 3 L. J. K. B. N. S. 113; Lilley v. Elwin, 11 Q. B. 742, 17 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 132, 12

Jur. 623; Davis v. Marshall, 4 L. T. N. S. 216, 9 Week. Rep. 520. In some states, a stipulation as to the method of payment, such as weekly, monthly, or yearly, is held to denote the period of service contracted for. Tatterson v. Suffolk Mfg. Co. 106 Mass. 56; Franklin Min. Co. v. Harris, 24 Mich. 116; Beach v. Mullin, 34 N. J. L. 343. In this state, the rule is settled that, unless a definite period of service is specified in the contract, the hiring is at will; and the master has the right to discharge, and the servant to leave, at any time. In Martin v. New York L. Ins. Co. 148 N. Y. 117, 42 N. E. 416, the defendant employed the plaintiff to take charge of its real estate department at a salary of $5,000 a year. Subsequently his salary was raised to $6,500, and finally to $10,000 a year, payable monthly. We held that the hiring was at will, and that the contract could be terminated at any time by either party. Judge Bartlett, speaking for the court, adopted the language used by Mr. Wood in § 136 of his work on Master and Servant, as follows: "The rule is inflexible that a general or indefinite hiring is prima facie a hiring at will; and if the servant seeks to make it out a yearly hiring, the burden is upon him to establish it by proof. A hiring at so much a day, week, month, or year, no time being specified, is an indefinite hiring, and no presumption attaches that it was for a day even, but only at the rate fixed for whatever time the party may serve. . . . A contract to pay one $2,500 a year for services is not a contract for a year, but a contract to pay at the rate of $2,500 a year for services actually rendered, and is determinable at will by either party. Thus, it will be seen that the fact that the compensation is measured at so much a day, month, or year does not necessarily make such hiring a hiring for a day, month, or year, but that in all such cases the contract may be put an end to by either party at any time, unless the time is fixed, and a recovery had at the rate fixed for the services actually rendered." 148 N. Y. 121, 42 N. E. 417.

This rule was deliberately adopted, all the judges concurring to settle the differences of opinion which had prevailed in the lower courts. It applies to the contract before us, and must control the decision of this appeal, unless the theory of the appellate division is correct, that the covenant, under the circumstances, means a hiring for a reasonable time. No authority was cited by the learned court in support of this position. As the contract is in writing, it is presumed to express all that the parties intended. No parol evidence was offered to explain any latent ambiguity. No contract can be implied, because the express contract covers the entire subject-matter. There is nothing in the context to enlarge the covenant, and no stipulation inconsistent with a hiring at will. Even when the contract is read in the light of the surrounding circumstances, that the defendant had much experience in the business and the plaintiff none, it does not change the hiring from an unspecified into a specified period of service, or to one for a reasonable time. The other attending circumstance, that the interest of the defendant in the business was double that of the plaintiff, was doubtless regarded as enough to hold him in his position as manager. When the parties contracted for a hiring at will, it is presumed that they meant a hiring at will, and that if they had intended a hiring for a reasonable time, they would have said so. Whether the covenant was personal to the plaintiff or finally passed to the corporation, either party could end the service at any time. The right of the master to discharge, and of the servant to leave, was absolute.

We find no error in the record that justified the action of the Appellate Division, and their order must therefore be reversed, and the judgment of the Trial Term affirmed, with costs in both courts.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Haight, Werner, Hiscock, and Collin, JJ., concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 1.)

D. M. BLUNK, Plff. in Err.,
v.

B. J. WAUGH et al.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 717.)

Intoxicating Liquor — possessory action — evidence.

1. In an action by one individual against another individual to recover the possession

Headnotes by AMES, C.

Note. — Right of one who intends to make an illegal use of property to invoke aid of court for recovery from one who has wrongfully taken the same.

As to the general question of the right to levy legal process upon intoxicating liquors, see Hines v. Stahl, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1118, and note. It is to be observed that this note does not include cases as to the right of the government or official to confiscate property; nor cases that turn upon the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the of intoxicating liquors, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to affirmatively show that the defendant did not secure possession of the liquors under the provisions of § 7, art. 3, of chapter 69 of the Session Laws of the state, 1907 and 1908.

Same — distributing agent — rights.

2. One Blunk, doing business under the name "Oklahoma Distributing Company," was engaged in the business of receiving large consignments of intoxicating liquors, consigned to him as consignee by a brewer in another state. These consignments were intended for distribution to a number of individuals whose names were written upon the respective parcels. Blunk's business was to pay the freight, receive the shipments, and deliver the several parcels to the various persons whose names were written thereon. Held:

(a) That this business is in violation of the laws of the state of Oklahoma (Comp. Laws 1909, § 4180).

(b) That this business is not protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States regulating interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors.

(c) That the courts will not entertain an action of replevin to enable Blunk to recover such intoxicating liquors from a trespasser, where it is shown by his pleadings in the case that the purpose of his attempted recovery is to engage in a business in violation of the laws of the state.

(March 12, 1912.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Oklahoma County to review an order sus-seizure of the property. So the right to maintain an action for the conversion of such property is beyond the scope of the note.

The courts are not in accord as to whether one who intends to make an unlawful use of property may invoke the aid of the courts to recover possession of it from one who has wrongfully deprived him of the possession thereof.

Thus, in Ridgeway v. West, 60 Ind. 371, which was an action of replevin by the owner of gambling devices, against an officer who had seized them, the court held that, in the absence of a statute or ordinance authorizing their seizure and destruction, the owner was entitled to recover their possession.

In Monty v. Arneson, 25 Iowa, 383, where intoxicating liquor belonging to plaintiff was seized by an officer under an execution against another person, it was held that plaintiff could recover possession of it in an action of replevin, though it was kept by him in violation of law.

And in Barron v. Arnold, 16 R. I. 22, 11 Atl. 298, which was an action of replevin for liquors attached while in the hands of an agent for the agent's debt, it was held that plaintiff was entitled to recover them, though they were being kept for sale in taining a motion to quash a writ of replevin procured by plaintiff for the recovery of possession of intoxicating liquors. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Giddings & Giddings for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Charles West, Attorney General, amicus curiæ:

The business of transporting liquor for another from depot to home is illegal.

United States v. First Nat. Bank, 190 Fed. 336; Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733; State v. Wignall, 150 Iowa, 650, 34 L.R.A.(N.S.) 507, 128 N. W. 935.

Ames, C., delivered the opinion of the court:

D. M. Blunk, the plaintiff, brought an action of replevin, in the superior court of Oklahoma county, against B. J. Waugh and John Queenan, the defendants, to recover the possession of 105 casks of beer. He alleged that he was the special owner of the beer, because it had been shipped to the Oklahoma Distributing Company, which was the name under which he was doing business, from St. Louis, Missouri, and that his purpose was to deliver it to certain parties, for whose benefit it was intended by the shippers. He procured the issuance of a writ of replevin, and in his affidavit on which the writ was based he sets up violation of law, notwithstanding a statute which provided that "no action of any kind shall be had or maintained in any court of this state for the possession or value of any liquors held, purchased, or sold contrary to the provisions of this chapter;" this provision being held to operate only to prevent the enforcement of an unlawful transaction between plaintiff and defendant, and not to render such property open as free booty to anyone who might seize it.

However, in the similar case of Donohue v. Maloney, 49 Conn. 163, under a statute providing: "Nor shall any action be maintained for the possession of any intoxicating liquor held by the owner or possessor thereof contrary to law," it is held that recovery of possession cannot be had, the court saying: "Therefore, if, by his illegal act and intent, the owner of intoxicating liquors makes them a nuisance, and while in that condition they are lost to his possession by the peaceful act of an officer of the law, under the forms of law, it will leave them in his possession so far forth as this writ of replevin is concerned; and this, not because the defendants have any rights in the matter which it is bound thus to protect, but for the reason that, in listening to the complaint of the plaintiffs, the court has come to a knowledge of the fact that they are the facts constituting his claim of special ownership as follows: "Now comes D. M. Blunk, plaintiff, doing business under the name and style of the Oklahoma Distributing Company, and says that he is the special owner of, and entitled to the immediate possession of, the following described property, to wit, 105 casks of Anheuser-Bush beer, known as Budweiser beer, each cask marked 'B. S.' and each cask of the value of $10.02, said 105 casks being of the aggregate value of $1,052.10, each cask containing thereon certain tags by which it could further be identified, but said tags have been destroyed and obliterated by the defendants since they obtained possession thereof, as hereinafter set forth, and plaintiff cannot give any further description thereof. Plaintiff alleges that his special ownership of said beer arises out of the following facts: That said beer was shipped from the state of Missouri by the Anheuser-Busch Company, consigned to the Oklahoma Distributing Company, which is the style under which plaintiff is doing business, to certain parties in Oklahoma City, whose names were marked upon each cask, but whose names have been obliterated by the defendants since they took possession thereof; it being intended by the consignors and consignees that plaintiff, in whose name they were consigned for the benefit of said parties, should receive the same from the railroad company, pay the freight thereon, and deliver same to said consignee. That plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession of said beer, but the same is wrongfully detained from him by the said defendants, and that said property was not taken in execution or on any order of judgment against said plaintiff, or for the payment of any tax, fine, or amercement assessed against him, or by virtue of any order of delivery issued in replevin, or any other valid means or final process issued against him." Some of the material facts disclosed by this affidavit are: (1) That the beer was shipped from another state; (2) that the plaintiff was the consignee; (3) that he was doing business under the name of the Oklahoma Distributing Company; (4) that the names of a number of people were marked on the casks; (5) that it was intended by both the consignor and the consignees that the plaintiff should receive the beer from the railroad company; (6) that he should pay the freight thereon; (7) and that he should deliver the same to the various persons for whom it was intended. Bond was given, a writ was issued, and the beer taken under the writ. The defendants filed a motion to quash the writ, for the following reasons: "That the affidavit filed in said cause is insufficient in that it does not state that said property was not taken under or by reason of any order, execution, or writ issued under and by virtue of the provisions of § 7 of article 3 of chapter 69 of the Session Laws of the state of Oklahoma asking its aid in regaining possession of that which by their act had become a nuisance; which they held and intended to use in violation of law; and which the law does not recognize as property. And upon this knowledge, the statute compels the court to close its ear to any further suggestion from them; they are not to have its assistance in violating the law, and by the statute this result ensues, regardless of the fact that this complaint is against defendants, who gained a peaceful possession of the liquors under forms of law, and not against an officer who had seized them for condemnation as a nuisance. The illegal acts and intents of the plaintiffs are proven in a cause instituted by themselves; and they have had their day in court upon that question. This satisfies the law."

In Robertson v. Porter, 1 Ga. App. 223, 57 S. E. 993, the court denies the right of a person to invoke the aid of the court in recovering property intended to be used for an unlawful purpose, saying: "Courts are created for the upholding of the law and of morals, and will therefore decline to allow their processes used to further the maintenance of crimes and public evils. The law has the right of self-defense; it will not, by its own strong arm, assist in placing into the possession of anyone instrumentalties designed for no other purpose than the breaking of the law. . . . The plaintiff, by his demurrer, is not entitled to challenge the legality of the raid, or of the methods by which the property was seized, or of the purposes for which it was being held. So long as he concedes, as he must do in order to demur, that the articles sought to be recovered are instrumentalities of crime, designed for that use, and intended to be returned to that employment, the law will not hear him at all."

In Marienthal, L. & Co. v. Shafer, 6 Iowa, 223, in which the vendors of intoxicating liquor sought by replevin to recover possession of them after they had been seized by an officer under an attachment by creditors of the vendee, the vendors claiming ownership of the liquors on the ground that the sale was illegal and void, it was held that they were not entitled to the aid of the court in recovering possession of them, but that they would be left in the hands of the officer, regardless of whether the officer could sell them without violation of law.

And in Howe v. Stewart, 40 Vt. 145, the court says the courts will not aid in reclaiming the possession of liquors when sold and held with the deliberate intention of violating the law.

R. L. S.

for the years 1907 and 1908, commonly called the 'Billups bill.' That said affidavit is insufficient in that it does not show that the plaintiff or affiant has such an ownership in the property as entitles him to the possession thereof." This motion was sustained by the trial court, and this appeal is prosecuted to review that ruling.

The first question presented is whether or not it is necessary, in an action of replevin to recover intoxicating liquors, for the plaintiff to show that they have not been seized by the defendants pursuant to the provisions of § 7, art. 3, chap. 69, of the Session Laws of 1907 (Comp. Laws 1909, § 4186), which provides as follows: "No liquors, vessels, fixtures, furniture, or other property seized by virtue of any warrant issued under the provisions of this act, shall be taken from the possession of the officer seizing same under any replevin or other process." The affidavit complies with the requirements prescribed for an affidavit in replevin. Comp. Laws 1909, § 5688. There is nothing in this record to show that the defendants are officers, or that they had seized, or had a right to seize, the liquor by virtue of any authority. If they were officers and had made this seizure pursuant to their duties, it would have been very easy for them to have disclosed this fact, and thereby brought themselves within the protection of the statute quoted. It is the settled law of this state that a person may acquire intoxicating liquors in a lawful way and for lawful purposes. Schwedes v. State, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 245, 99 Pac. 804; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 26 Okla. 300, 109 Pac. 230; Titworth v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 268, 101 Pac. 288; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 28 Okla. 754, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 456, 116 Pac. 176. It is also held that the mere possession of intoxicating liquor in considerable quantities is not a violation of the law. Johnson v. State, 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 490, 119 Pac. 1019; McCarthy v. State, 6 Okla. Crim. Rep. 483, 119 Pac. 1020.

As such liquors may be lawfully held, the mere fact that one seeks to recover their possession by an action of replevin does not raise any presumption that the defendants have seized them because the plaintiff was holding them for the purpose of violating the law, and it therefore follows that the plaintiff is not required to negative the theory that he is guilty of an intent to violate the law, because guilt is never presumed. We do not think, therefore, that the first ground of the motion to quash is well taken. This conclusion finds support in Easter v. Traylor, 41 Kan. 493, 21 Pac. 606; Ament v. Greer, 37 Kan. 648, 16 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Pac. 402; Black, Intoxicating Liquors, § 342.

A more serious question is raised by the second ground of the motion to quash, and in considering this question we will determine: First, whether the business in which the plaintiff is engaged is in violation of the laws of this state; second, if so, is it protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States regulating interstate commerce; and, third, if not so protected, has the plaintiff such a right of property in the liquors as will be protected in a civil action.

The affidavit in replevin has been previously analyzed. The business in which the plaintiff is engaged is that of receiving large consignments of intoxicating liquors, paying the freight thereon, and delivering the same to numerous persons for whom the various packages are intended. The name under which the plaintiff transacts this business is suggestive,—"Oklahoma Distributing Company." It does not appear whether the plaintiff is the agent for the consignors or the ultimate purchasers, or both, or whether the orders are solicited by him. But it does distinctly appear that he is engaged in the business as stated. Such a business might be carried on in various ways. The 105 persons for whom these 105 casks of beer were intended might have requested the plaintiff to make the order for them, and he might have communicated this request to the brewery, and the brewery might have consigned him the beer with the several names of these 105 persons on the several casks. The plaintiff might have solicited the orders from these 105 persons, and then ordered from the brewery. The brewery might have sold direct to the 105 persons, and shipped to the plaintiff to distribute for it. It is manifest that, in order to engage in this business, there must have been concert of action between the plaintiff and the brewery, and likewise between the plaintiff and the individuals for whose benefit the beer was shipped. Section 4180 of Comp. Laws 1909 is as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person, individual, or corporate, to manufacture, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish, except as in this act provided, any spirituous, vinous, fermented, or malt liquors, or any imitation thereof or substitute therefor; or to manufacture, sell, barter, give away, or otherwise furnish any liquors or compounds of any kind or description whatsoever, whether medicated or not, which contain as much as one half of 1 per centum of alcohol, measured by volume, and which is capable of being used as a beverage, except preparations compounded by any licensed pharmacist, the sale of which would not subject him to the payment of the special tax required by the laws of the United States; or to ship or in any way convey such liquor from one place within this state to another place therein, except the conveyance of a lawful purchase as herein authorized; or to solicit the purchase or sale of any such liquors, either in person or by sign, circular, letter, card, price list, advertisement, or otherwise, or to distribute, publish, or display any advertisement, sign, or notice where any such liquor may be manufactured, bartered, sold, given away, or otherwise furnish, or to have the possession of any such liquors with the intention of violating any of the provisions of this act. A violation of any provisions of this section shall be a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, and by imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than six months; provided, however, that the provisions of this act shall not apply to the manufacture and sale of unfermented cider and wine made from apples, grapes, berries, or other fruit grown in this state, and to the use of wine for sacramental purposes in religious bodies."

If the plaintiff was the agent of the brewery and was distributing its beer for its benefit, it is manifest that he was furnishing such liquor within the prohibition of the statute. If, on the other hand, the plaintiff received this consignment as the agent of the 105 persons to whom the beer was to be delivered, it is plain that, after he received it from the railroad company, it had been delivered to the consignee, he being the consignee, and that his subsequent acts in delivering the 105 casks to the 105 owners was conveying it from one place to another within this state. It is likewise manifest, if the plaintiff was engaged in the business on his own account, that he was merely operating a saloon in this ingenious manner, and that therefore he was either selling or giving away, or otherwise furnishing, the beer. It is manifest therefore that the business of the plaintiff is in violation of the laws of this state.

The next inquiry, therefore, is whether such unlawful business is protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States regulating interstate commerce. The Constitutional provision is as follows (article 1, § 8): "Congress shall have power: . . . To regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several states, and with the Indian tribes; . . . to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof." Under this section of the Constitution, it was held, in Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 681, popularly known as the "original package decision," that intoxicating liquors were protected as interstate commerce after their shipment into a prohibition state, and until their sale in the original package in which they were transported. As the effect of this decision was practically to strike down the prohibition laws of any state, Congress passed an act on August 8, 1890, commonly known as the "Wilson act," providing as follows (Act Aug. 8, 1890, chap. 728, 26 Stat. at L. 313, 3 Fed. Stat. Anno. 853, U. S. Comp. Stat. 1901, p. 3177): "That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any state or territory, or remaining therein, for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall, upon arrival in such state or territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such state or territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such state or territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise."

The question soon arose as to the proper interpretation of the words "upon arrival in such state," and they were finally interpreted to mean upon arrival in the state and delivery to the consignee. State v. 18 Casks of Beer, 24 Okla. 786, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 492, 104 Pac. 1093; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. State, 26 Okla. 300, 109 Pac. 230; Schwedes v. State, 1 Okla. Crim. Rep. 245, 99 Pac. 804; High v. State, 2 Okla. Crim. Rep. 161, 28 L.R.A. (N.S.) 162, 101 Pac. 115; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 42 L. ed. 1088, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 664; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co. 170 U. S. 468, 42 L. ed. 1111, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 674; Heyman v. Southern R. Co. 203 U. S. 270, 51 L. ed. 178, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 104, 7 Ann. Cas. 1130; Adams Exp. Co. v. Kentucky, 206 U. S. 129, 51 L. ed. 987, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 606. On March 4, 1909, Congress, in order to further restrict interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, enacted §§ 238, 239, and 240, of the New Federal Criminal Code (Act March 4, 1909, chap. 321, 35 Stat. at L. 1136, 1137; Fed. Stat. Anno. Supp. 1909, 472, 473, U. S. Comp. Stat. Supp. 1909, pp. 1464, 1465). Section 238 is as follows: "Any officer, agent, or employee of any railroad company, express company, or other common carrier, who shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered to any person other than the person to whom it has been consigned, unless upon the written order in each instance of the bona fide consignee, or to any fictitious person, or to any person under a fictitious name, any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, which has been shipped from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned not more than two years, or both." It will be observed that this section accomplishes two objects: First, it prohibits any employee of any carrier from delivering such a shipment to any one except the bona fide consignee, or upon his written order; and, second, it prohibits any such employee from making any such delivery to any fictitious person, or to any person under a fictitious name. The question may arise as to whether the Oklahoma Distributing Company is a fictitious name; but it is not necessary for us to determine that precise question in this case.

Section 239 is as follows: "Any railroad company, express company, or other common carrier, or any other person, who, in connection with the transportation of any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, shall collect the purchase price or any part thereof, before, on, or after delivery, from the consignee, or from any other person, or shall in any manner act as the agent of the buyer or seller of any such liquor, for the purpose of buying or selling or completing the sale thereof, saving only in the actual transportation and delivery of the same, shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars." It will be noticed that this section prohibits C. O. D. business, and also prohibits any person from in any manner acting as the agent of the buyer or seller of any such liquor, for the purpose of buying or selling or completing the sale thereof, saving only in the actual transportation and delivery. Un-39 L.R.A. (N.S.) der this section Judge Amidon, sitting as a district judge in North Dakota, has sustained the conviction of a bank for collecting a draft to which was attached a shipper's order bill of lading for a consignment of liquor. United States v. First Nat. Bank (D. C.) 190 Fed. 336.

Section 240 is as follows: "Whoever shall knowingly ship or cause to be shipped, from one state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any state, territory, or district of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, any package of or package containing any spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind, unless such package be so labeled on the outside cover as to plainly show the name of the consignee, the nature of its contents, and the quantity contained therein, shall be fined not more than five thousand dollars; and such liquor shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the seizure and forfeiture of property imported into the United States contrary to law." It will be observed that this section prohibits the shipment of intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce without plaintiff designating the name of the consignee, the contents of the package, and the quantity of liquor.

It is manifest that these three sections greatly limit the previous course of dealing in interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors, and, broadly speaking, they limit such commerce to a direct transportation only of the liquor from the seller to the buyer. If the plaintiff is "any person under a fictitious name," then it was a criminal offense for the carrier to deliver to him the liquor. If he was the bona fide consignee, then the interstate transaction was completed upon delivery to him, and any subsequent delivery by him to the 105 owners was a plain violation of the state law. If he was not the bona fide consignee, then it was a violation of the congressional act for the liquor to be delivered to him without a written order. If he was acting as the agent of the buyer in completing this sale, then he was guilty of a criminal offense. If he was acting as the agent of the seller in completing the sale, then he was guilty of a criminal offense. If the payment of the freight was a payment of the purchase price, or any part thereof, then a criminal offense was committed. Even before these last expressions of Congress on the subject, the court had held that a state had the power to prohibit a foreign dealer in liquors from maintaining a soliciting agent in the state, although the sales were not completed until acceptance outside the state, and the agent did nothing but solicit the orders. Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S. 93, 51 L. ed. 724, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 447, 10 Ann. Cas. 733. And in Buchanan v. State, 4 Okla. Crim. Rep. 645, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 83, 112 Pac. 32, it was held that an agent of the buyer of intoxicating liquor sold in violation of the law is guilty of a crime. And in the recent case of State v. Wignall, 150 Iowa, 650, 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 507, 128 N. W. 935, the supreme court of Iowa has upheld a statute prohibiting a consignee from employing a third person to transport intoxicating liquor from the depot to his residence, although the correctness of this decision is subject to doubt in view of § 238 of the Penal Laws previously quoted, as well as the decisions of this court and of the criminal court of appeals of this state, which have previously been cited. Comp. Laws 1909, § 4197.

The argument is made by the plaintiff, however, that if these 105 casks of beer might have been shipped in 105 separate express packages, and have been delivered by the express company to the 105 consignees, there is nothing illegal in the business which he is transacting. This argument, however, overlooks the fundamental and substantial difference between the plaintiff and the express company. The express company is a common carrier pure and simple, and can be compelled to accept for transportation and delivery any legitimate article of commerce, and its entire service rendered in connection with a shipment of intoxicating liquors is in the actual transportation and delivery thereof. For us to believe this of the plaintiff requires an amount of credulity which we do not possess. The plaintiff is engaged in the business of receiving large consignments of intoxicating liquor by interstate carrier, and distributing them to a large number of small consumers in Oklahoma City. He is either the bona fide consignee of these large shipments, or he is not. If he is the bona fide consignee, it is plain that the shipment is terminated when received by the plaintiff, and certainly his disposition of it thereafter cannot possibly be protected as a part of interstate commerce. To do so would in substance reinstate the original package law, which Congress has expressly legislated against. If the plaintiff is not the bona fide consignee, then his business involves a violation of the sections in the Penal Laws of 1909, which we have quoted. It therefore seems to us a demonstrable fact 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) that the business of the plaintiff is not, and cannot be, protected by the Constitution and laws of the United States, and this conclusion is reached without considering several other aspects of the plaintiff's business which seem to conflict with those sections of the Penal Laws.

The last question for consideration, then, is whether the plaintiff will be permitted to recover this property which he designs to use in violation of the laws of the state. Will the courts open their doors to enable a man to engage in a business which is condemned by the law? In this case the plaintiff bases his application for the writ of replevin upon a desire to complete a violation of our laws, which the seizure by the defendants has interrupted. It seems to us that the mere asking of this question is its answer, and particularly is this true when we bear in mind the provision of our statute (Comp. Laws 1909, § 4192) which is as follows: "There shall be no property rights of any kind whatsoever, in any liquors, vessels, appliances, fixtures, bars, furniture, and implements kept or used for the purpose of violating any provision of this act." Some of the cases which support this conclusion are Oviatt v. Pond, 29 Conn. 479; Preston v. Drew, 33 Me. 558, 54 Am. Dec. 639; Lord v. Chadbourne, 42 Me. 429, 66 Am. Dec. 290; Barron v. Arnold, 16 R. I. 22, 11 Atl. 298; Harrison v. Nichols, 31 Vt. 709. There are several decisions which hold that, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, the owner of such liquors may maintain an action for their possession. Smith v. Dinkelspiel, 91 Ala. 528, 8 So. 490; Niles v. Fries, 35 Iowa, 41; Priest v. Pinkham, 18 N. H. 520. Other cases are referred to in 23 Cyc. 334, and 17 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 302.

It is well established—we might say universally established—that the courts will not enforce any rights which directly arise out of an illegal contract. Holden v. Lynn, — Okla. —, 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 239, 120 Pac. 246; Citizens' Nat. Bank v. Mitchell, 24 Okla. 488, 103 Pac. 720, 20 Ann. Cas. 371; Wagner v. Minnie Harvester Co. 25 Okla. 558, 106 Pac. 969; Binswanger v. Stanford, 28 Okla. 429, 114 Pac. 621, in which the earlier Oklahoma cases are cited; Bowman v. Phillips, 41 Kan. 364, 3 L.R.A. 361, 13 Am. St. Rep. 292, 21 Pac. 230; Tatum v. Kelley, 25 Ark. 209, 94 Am. Dec. 717; Graves v. Johnson, 156 Mass. 211, 15 L.R.A. 834, 32 Am. St. Rep. 446, 30 N. E. 818; Banchor v. Mansel, 47 Me. 58; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 20 L. ed. 439; Fisher v. Lord, 63 N. H. 514, 3 Atl. 927.

If the courts will not open their doors to enforce an illegal contract, we do not think they should lend their aid to enable a person to unlawfully engage in the liquor traffic, particularly where the statute provides that "there shall be no property rights of any kind whatsoever" in any liquors kept or used for illegal purposes.

The attorney general presents an elaborate brief in support of the position that the various acts of Congress prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Indian county are still in force in this state; but, in view of the conclusion that we have reached, it is unnecessary for us to determine this question.

For the reasons herein stated, we think the judgment of the trial court should be affirmed.

Petition for rehearing denied April 9, 1912.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

T. M. DODSON et al., Appts.,
v.

TURNER BUTLER, Admr., etc., of Joseph Meehan, Deceased.
MALINDA M. PLAIR, Intervener.

(— Ark. —, 142 S. W. 503.)

Judgment — reversal — restitution — contempt.

Contempt proceedings will not lie to enforce an order of restitution of money secured in satisfaction of a judgment which is subsequently reversed, if, when the order is passed, the money is no longer in possession of the judgment creditor.

(January 1, 1912.)

Note.—Refusal to restore money or property secured under judgment subsequently reversed or set aside, as contempt.

The decision in DODSON v. BUTLER, to the effect that contempt proceedings will not lie to enforce an order of restitution of money secured in satisfaction of a judgment which was subsequently reversed, where, when the order was passed, the money was no longer in the judgment creditor's possession, is in accord with the rule that courts have not the power to punish by contempt proceedings disobedience of their orders of restitution, where it is not found that the specific property in question, or the specific fund involved, is in the possession or under the control of the one ordered to make restitution.

This rule was given effect in Johnson v. Yoemans, 41 Ga. 368, by holding that a party who was successful on the trial of a possessory warrant, and received the property in controversy upon giving security, could not be attached for contempt, when, before the reversal of the judgment under 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A PPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Ashley County adjudging them in contempt for failure to obey an order directing them to pay money into court for distribution. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Greaves & Martin for appellants.

Messrs. Turner Butler and George W. Norman for appellee.

Frauenthal, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from a judgment declaring the appellants guilty of contempt for a failure to comply with an order adjudging that they pay into court certain funds received by them under a judgment which was subsequently reversed. The case has been before this court on two former occasions, and the opinions then rendered will be found in the cases of Butler v. Dodson, reported in 78 Ark. 569, 94 S. W. 703, and 95 Ark. 615, 130 S. W. 581.

Briefly stated, the matters leading up to the present appeal are these: The appellants originally instituted an action for debt against one Joseph Meehan, and at the same time sued out a writ of attachment, which was levied upon certain personal property owned by him. The attached property was sold by virtue of an order of the circuit judge, made in vacation, which was subsequently confirmed by the circuit court; and the proceeds arising therefrom were then held by the sheriff making the sale. In that suit, Malinda Plair intervened, and claimed the property by virtue of a mortgage executed to her by said Meehan. Upon a trial which he had received possession, he had sold the property. The court said: "Johnson, by his answer, shows that it is out of his power to deliver the property. Is a man in contempt for failing to obey an order of the court which it is admitted he cannot obey? At the time he disposed of the property there was no order requiring him not to do so, and it is not therefore proper to punish him for contempt in selling it; and it is just as improper to punish him for contempt for not obeying the order now that it is impossible for him to do so. For myself, I am of opinion that, after the property was turned over to Johnson, on his giving the bond required by the statute, there could be no supersedeas of the judgment. It is idle to talk about superseding a judgment that has been performed, and when the property was, in pursuance of the judgment, turned over to Johnson, on his giving the bond required by the statute, the judgment was performed. If, subsequently to this, a certiorari was sued out, and the judgment was reversed, it was not in the power of the court to order the property back by such a proceeding as this. Why of the case in the circuit court, the attachment was dissolved, and personal judgment was rendered in favor of the appellants against the estate of Meehan (who in the meanwhile had died) for the amount of their debt, and also in favor of Melinda Plair for the amount of her debt; and the court then adjudged that the funds in the hands of the sheriff arising from the sale of the attached property should be divided between the appellants and said Plair in proportion to the amounts for which they had recovered judgment. No appeal was taken from the order dissolving the attachment, but an appeal was taken to this court from the judgment ordering the distribution of the funds in the hands of the sheriff. No supersedeas was given to stay the further proceedings under said judgment of distribution, and the sheriff by virtue thereof paid to appellants their proportion of the funds arising from the sale of said attached property.

In disposing of that appeal, this court affirmed the personal judgment in favor of appellants for the recovery of their debt, but reversed so much thereof as ordered any portion of the funds arising from the sale of the attached property turned over to them. The cause was remanded, with directions for further proceedings to determine the amount due to Malinda Plair upon her mortgage, and, upon such amount being ascertained, it was ordered that the money in the hands of the sheriff should be applied to the payment thereof, and that the balance, if any, should be paid to the legal representatives of Meehan, deceased.

Upon the case being remanded to the cir-is not this just such a case as one in which a money judgment is had, and the money collected under it, and subsequently the judgment is reversed on certiorari? Can the magistrate, in such a case, order the money paid back, and punish the party for contempt if he fails? Clearly not. And so I think in this case. Having permitted the judgment to be performed, before he sued out his certiorari, Yoemans is left, on the reversal of the judgment, to the ordinary remedies. He can proceed against Johnson, as though such judgment had never been had, but he cannot punish him for having obeyed it whilst it was unreversed."

But in accord with the distinction drawn in DODSON v. BUTLER, where it does not appear that the person ordered to make restitution has not the money or the property in his possession, it seems to be generally held that he may be punished for contempt if he fails to comply with an order directing restitution.

Thus, in Jenkins v. State, 60 Neb. 205, 82 N. W. 622, where the Code conferred upon courts of record authority to punish 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

cuit court, the respective parties appeared, and that court proceeded to try the issues as to the amount which was due from Meehan to Malinda Plair on said mortgage, and as to the amount which had been paid to appellants by order of the court out of the funds arising from the sale of said attached property. The jury returned a verdict finding that the mortgage indebtedness to Malinda Plair amounted to $2,591.32, and that the sum of $1,232.75 had been paid to appellants out of funds arising from the sale of said attached property. The court then proceeded to hear the motion of said intervener, Plair, to require appellants to pay the money thus received by them into court, and entered a judgment in which is the following: "The court doth order and adjudge that the plaintiffs, T. M. Dodson and C. W. Dodson, shall, within thirty days from this date, pay into court the said sum of $1,232.75, to be distributed, after being so paid into court, according to the further order thereof to be made herein." From that judgment, an appeal was taken to this court, and the same was affirmed. But in the opinion rendered in that case it was stated: "The question whether the judgment can be enforced by contempt proceedings is not presented by the record, and we do not decide that point."

The judgment of affirmance was rendered in July, 1910, and in August, 1910, upon motion of appellee, the circuit court made an order commanding appellants "to show cause, if any they had, why they should not be adjudged in contempt of this court for failing to pay into court the sum of money in obedience to the order of this as for criminal contempt any wilful disobedience of, or resistance wilfully offered to, any lawful process or order of the court, it was held that the plaintiff in a replevin suit, who received possession of the property after giving the statutory bond, might be convicted of a contempt where he wilfully failed to comply with an order for restitution made after the judgment of the lower court in his favor was vacated upon appeal.

But it was held in this case that the defendant might purge himself from the contempt by showing that his failure to comply with the order was due to an inability, not voluntarily created, to obtain the property or the necessary funds. Ibid.

In Dawley v. Brown, 43 How. Pr. 17, where judgment had been awarded to the plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain premises, and the judgment was set aside, it was held that disobedience of an order directing a restitution of the premises might be treated as a contempt.

And a party to an action is punishable as for a contempt by commitment, for a failure to comply with an order of restitution di-court heretofore made." Notice of this order being served upon appellants, they filed a response thereto, in which, amongst other things, they stated that, "if any sum of money was paid to these respondents in this cause, said sum of money has long since been expended, and the same is not now in the possession, custody, or control of the respondents;" and therein also alleged that "the only lawful way in which said money can be recovered, if these respondents owe defendant any sum, which they deny, would be to procure a judgment and sue out execution thereon." The court held that the matters set out in the response were not sufficient to set up a defense to the motion asking that appellants be adjudged guilty of contempt for failure to pay said money into court, and thereupon it entered a judgment declaring them guilty of contempt, and further ordered that they "be imprisoned in the county jail of Ashley county until they comply with said orders, or be otherwise legally discharged from said imprisonment."

It will thus be seen that this was a proceeding to require a restitution by judgment creditors of money received by them under an order or judgment of court which was subsequently declared erroneous and annulled, and to enforce such restitution by attachment and punishment as for contempt in failing to comply with the order directing such restitution. In this case, certain attached personal property had been sold under the judgment of the circuit court, and the funds arising therefrom had by its order been paid to appellants. Subsequently the judgment was reversed, and that portion thereof adjudging appellants entitled to any part of the funds arising from the sale of the attached property was annulled.

It is well settled that when a judgment is reversed restitution must be made of all that has been received under it. When a court enters a judgment which is subsequently declared erroneous and reversed, the party against whom such judgment was rendered should be restored to all that he has lost thereunder, so far as this can be done. In the case of Bank of United States v. Bank of Washington, 6 Pet. 8, 8 L. ed. 299, it is said: "The reversal of the judgment gives a new right or cause of action against the parties to the judgment, and creates a legal obligation on their part to restore what the other party has lost by reason of the erroneous judgment; and, as between the parties to the judgment, there is all the privity necessary to sustain and enforce such right." As long as the erroneous judgment is in force, it is a protection to an officer acting thereunder, and to all persons who purchase in good faith. But such judgment is no protection to the party in whose favor it was rendered, because it was subsequently reversed and as to him became the same as if it never had been recting her to restore, by payment to the county treasurer, money obtained by her from the depository of the court under and by virtue of a judgment previously rendered in her favor and thereafter reversed on appeal. Devlin v. Hinman, 161 N. Y. 115, 55 N. E. 386.

And in Anonymous, 2 Salk. 588, it was held that where a judgment is set aside for irregularity after it has been satisfied, no scire facias for restitution is necessary, but an attachment should be granted upon the rule for contempt if there is not a restitution.

In Greer v. McClelland, 1 Phila. 128, where the plaintiff had obtained judgment in ejectment, which was afterwards set aside by an agreement of the parties under which their relation to the land was entirely changed, and the possession left in the defendant, it was held that restitution might be enforced by order and attachment for contempt.

In Newell v. Hall, 74 App. Div. 278, 77 N. Y. Supp. 610, it appeared that one section of the Code provided that the court had power to punish by fine and imprisonment, or both, a party to an action for the nonpayment of money ordered by the court to be paid, in a case where by law execution could not be awarded for the collection of it, and, further, that in any other case where an attachment or other proceeding to punish for contempt had usually been adopted to enforce a civil remedy, or protect the rights of a party, the punishment referred to might be imposed; another section provided that where any sum of money directed to be paid by a court was not paid within the time specified, an execution might issue against the personal property of the party required to pay, but further provided that nothing therein should be so construed as to relieve a party from punishment as for contempt of court for disobedience to an order in any case where the remedy of enforcement by such proceedings then existed; and a third section provided that where the offense consisted of a refusal to obey an order requiring the payment of a sum of money, and the court was satisfied that a personal demand had been made and payment refused or neglected, it might issue without notice a warrant to commit the offender to prison until the money was paid, or until he was discharged according to law. Under these several provisions it was held that the court had power to punish the plaintiff for contempt where it appeared that a receiver had been appointed who had collected and paid money to the plaintiff, which the latter refused to return after the receiver's appointment had been set aside and an order made for the return of the money.

J. T. W.

made. The court, by its own act having occasioned wrong by the rendition of an erroneous judgment, has the inherent power by summary proceedings to afford redress to the injured party. The redress to which the aggrieved party is entitled is the restitution of the specific property which he has lost by the enforcement of the erroneous judgment, if that can be done. It is the duty and legal obligation of the party to the action securing such property to make restitution upon a reversal of such erroneous judgment; and the court, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties, has ample authority to enforce the performance of that duty. Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. 374, 21 L. ed. 965; Reynolds v. Harris, 14 Cal. 677, 76 Am. Dec. 459; Jones v. Hacker, 5 Mass. 264; Fleming v. Riddick, 5 Gratt. 272, 50 Am. Dec. 119; Lott v. Swezey, 29 Barb. 87; Haebler v. Myers, 132 N. Y. 363, 15 L.R.A. 588, 28 Am. St. Rep. 589, 30 N. E. 963; Hess v. Deppen, 125 Ky. 424, 101 S. W. 362, 15 Ann. Cas. 670.

But an erroneous judgment is valid until it is reversed. By the rendition of such judgment, it is the court which makes the mistake, and not the party in whose favor it is rendered. The judgment, though erroneous, is not void, and protects all persons acting under it until it is reversed. The judgment creditor who has simply permitted the law to take its course, and received money on the judgment in his favor, is only liable for the money so received after such judgment is reversed. Freeman, Executions, § 346; Rorer, Judicial Sales, §§ 590, 599.

Where property has been recovered or money has been received upon a judgment subsequently reversed, the remedy of the judgment debtor is to obtain restitution of the identical property recovered, or specific money received, if that can be done; but, in event this cannot be had, because the same is not in the possession of the judgment creditor, then the remedy of the judgment debtor is the recovery against him for the value of such property obtained by him, or of such money received. In such a case, the remedy afforded to the judgment debtor is thus stated, in substance, by Freeman on Judgments, and is quoted with approval by this court in the case of McCracken v. Paul, 65 Ark. 556, 67 Am. St. Rep. 948, 47 S. W. 855: "Plaintiff purchasing at his execution sale on reversal of the judgment under which the sale is made, is entitled to the benefits of the order of restitution, so that he may restore the property in specie, if he can. If he cannot, he is responsible to the defendant for its loss. If the property is purchased by a third person, the measure of damages is the price it brought at the sale, and interest; and if the defendant is purchaser, there is no recovery against plaintiff, except for money paid, because the defendant has what he claims." See also Ringgold v. Randolph, 13 Ark. 328; Stout v. Brown, 67 Ark. 481, 55 S. W. 838.

When the property taken under a judgment which is subsequently reversed is in the actual possession or control of the judgment creditor, or, in case the identical funds received by him thereon are still in his possession or under his control, then the court may compel specific restitution thereof by a proper order, and, in event such order is not complied with, may enforce the same by contempt proceedings. 18 Enc. Pl. & Pr. 182.

As is said in the case of Meeks v. State, 80 Ark. 679, 98 S. W. 378: "According to the decided weight of authority, an order directing the payment of specific funds adjudged to be in the possession or control of the person at the time of the trial may be enforced by contempt proceeding, and punishment may be inflicted for disobedience of the order." See also Hand v. Haughland, 87 Ark. 105, 112 S. W. 184.

But this power to punish, as in cases of contempt for disobedience of such order of restitution, only applies where the court has first found that the specific property, or the specific funds, are in the possession or under the control of the person ordered to make restitution thereof at the time of the trial. Coughlin v. Ehlert, 39 Mo. 285; Clements v. Tillman, 79 Ga. 451, 11 Am. St. Rep. 441, 5 S. E. 194. A party may be put in contempt for disobeying a lawful order of court for the performance of acts within his power. But where such order is for the production of specific property or specific funds, before it can be said that he is in contempt of the court in failing to comply with its order to produce or restore the same, he must be able and unwilling to obey the order. When such judgment creditor shows that his failure to make restitution is not attributable to mere contumacy, but is due to an inability to comply with the order, for the reason that he has not the possession and control of the specific funds ordered restored, then he purges himself of any contempt for which he can be legally punished. Jenkins v. State, 60 Neb. 205, 82 N. W. 622.

This is not a case where a party had wrongfully, and without the order of the court, taken the possession of attached property which was still in custodia legis. That would be in the nature of an abuse of the process of the court, and punishable as such, as was held in the case of Atkins v. Swope, 38 Ark. 528. In the case at bar, the appellants received the money upon an order of court, valid at the time of such receipt. If the funds so received by them were spent in good faith before the reversal of such judgment and the institution of these restitution proceedings, and if they did not actually have same in their possession or under their control at the time of the trial thereof, then it was error to require specific restitution of such funds, and to adjudge them in contempt of court upon failure to comply with such order.

In their response, the appellants in effect alleged that they had obtained the money lawfully from the officer under an order of court, and had thereafter, in good faith, disposed thereof, and that they did not have possession or control of such money or funds, either at the time of the institution of the proceedings for restitution, or of the trial thereof. If these allegations are true, the appellants should not be adjudged in contempt of court for failure to comply with its order to make restitution of these specific funds. In such event, the remedy of the judgment debtor is to obtain judgment against appellants for the full amount paid to them upon the reversed judgment, with interest. By § 1240 of Kirby's Digest, it is provided: "If any judgment of the circuit court shall be reversed by the supreme court on writ of error or appeal, and such judgment may have been carried into effect before the reversal thereof, such defendant may recover from the plaintiff in such judgment the full amount paid thereon, including costs."

We are of opinion that the remedy given by this statute is not exclusive, where the specific property or funds recovered or received upon such judgment, before reversal thereof, are still in the possession or under the control of the party obtaining same at the time of the institution of the proceedings for the restitution thereof. We think that the court has, in such case, the inherent power to order the restitution of such specific property or funds, and to enforce such order by proceedings in the nature of contempt. The remedy given by the statute is cumulative in such case; and it becomes the sole remedy in those cases only where the specific property or fund is not in the possession or control of the party obtaining it under the judgment which was subsequently reversed.

In the present case, the circuit court entered an order finding that the appellants had received, on a judgment which was subsequently reversed, the sum of $1,232.75, and adjudging that they should pay the same to the appellee. This, we think, was in effect held by this court, upon the former appeal, to be a judgment against appellants 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

for said sum. Upon this judgment, therefore, an execution may be issued.

We are therefore of the opinion that the Circuit Court erred in finding that the response filed by the appellants did not state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to the contempt proceeding. For this error, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

ARKANSAS SUPREME COURT.

FRED ASHFORD et al., Appts.,

v.

A. J. MACE.

(— Ark. —, 146 S. W. 474.)

Landlord and tenant — illegal use — knowledge of intention — effect.

A lease is not rendered void by mere knowledge on the part of the lessor of intention to sublet the premises for the purpose of running a bawdyhouse.

(Hart and Kirby, JJ., dissent.)

(March 11, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Garland County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover rent alleged to be due and unpaid. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Greaves & Martin, for appellants:

Where real property is leased with knowledge that it is to be used for an illegal purpose, a recovery cannot be had.

Sherman v. Wilder, 106 Mass. 537; Riley v. Jordan, 122 Mass. 231; Graves v. Johnson, 179 Mass. 53, 88 Am. St. Rep. 355, 60 N. E. 383; Benjamin, Contr. 2d ed. 280; 2 Taylor, Land. & T. 8th ed. §§ 521, 644; 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 316; Sherman v.

Note. — Effect of landlord's knowledge that tenant intends to use premises in violation of law.

This note is supplementary to the note to Harbison v. Shirley, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 663.

It will be noticed that the court in ASHFORD v. MACE make a distinction as to mere knowledge on the part of the landlord, and an intention, that the leased premises are to be used in violation of law. This distinction has been noted in previous cases, but by reference to the earlier note it will be seen that not all courts have agreed with the court in ASHFORD v. MACE, but that some have refused to enforce the terms of a lease where the premises were rented with the mere knowledge on the part of the landlord that they were to be used in violation of law.

Wilder, 106 Mass. 537; Edelmuth v. McGarren, 4 Daly, 467; Ernst v. Crosby, 140 N. Y. 364, 35 N. E. 603; Mitchell v. Scott, 62 N. H. 596; Dougherty v. Seymour, 16 Colo. 289, 26 Pac. 823; Sprague v. Rooney, 104 Mo. 349, 16 S. W. 505; Ryan v. Potwin, 62 Ill. App. 134; Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 33 L.R.A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63, 45 Pac. 1015; Mound v. Barker, 71 Vt. 253, 76 Am. St. Rep. 767, 44 Atl. 346; Ralston v. Boady, 20 Ga. 449; Kathman v. Walters, 22 La. Ann. 54; Hunstock v. Palmer, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 459, 23 S. W. 294; State v. Wilson, 73 Kan. 334, 117 Am. St. Rep. 511, 80 Pac. 639, 84 Pac. 737.

The lessor is criminally liable for leasing the premises.

State v. Porter, 38 Ark. 637; Lismore v. State, 94 Ark. 207, 126 S. W. 853; Com. v. Harrington, 3 Pick. 26; Dougherty v. Seymour, 16 Colo. 289, 26 Pac. 823; Benjamin, Contr. 2d ed. 248; Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386; Martin v. Hodge, 47 Ark. 378, 58 Am. Rep. 763, 1 S. W. 694.

On petition for rehearing.

One who runs a bawdyhouse is indictable and punishable in this state for misdemeanor.

State v. Porter, 38 Ark. 637; Lismore v. State, 94 Ark. 207, 126 S. W. 853.

All persons who aid, participate in, or assent to the commission of, misdemeanors, are indictable and punishable as principals.

Bishop, New Crim. Law, § 1090; Com. v. Harrington, 3d Pick. 26; Dougherty v. Seymour, 16 Colo. 289, 26 Pac. 823; Cahn v. State, 110 Ala. 56, 20 So. 380; Com. v. Kellar, 8 Ky. L. Rep. 537; Bourlier v. Com. 10 Ky. L. Rep. 154; Rhodes v. Com. 10 Ky. L. Rep. 722; Ford v. Com. 11 Ky. L. Rep. 860; State v. Frazier, 72 Me. 95, 8 Atl. 347; State v. Leach, 50 Mo. 535; People v. Erwin, 4 Denio, 129; Smith v. State, 6 Gill, 425; Com. v. Johnson, 4 Clark (Pa.) 398; Wolf v. State, 3 Shannon Cas. 345; Bishop, Contr. § 560; Martin v. Hodge, 47

Ark. 378, 58 Am. Rep. 963, 1 S. W. 694; Tucker v. West, 29 Ark. 386.

Messrs. Rector & Sawyer, for appellee: The mere avowal by the lessee of an intent to use the leased premises for an immoral purpose does not justify the lessor in repudiating his contract.

Michael v. Bacon, 49 Mo. 474, 8 Am. Rep. 140; O'Brien v. Brietenbach, 1 Hilt. 304; Almy v. Greene, 13 R. I. 350; Updike v. Campbell, 4 E. D. Smith, 570; Tegler v. Shipman, 33 Iowa, 194, 11 Am. Rep. 118; Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205; Smith v. White, L. R. 1 Eq. 626, 35 L. J. Ch. N. S. 454, 14 Week. Rep. 510, 14 L. T. N. S. 350.

Wood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal is whether or not mere knowledge on the part of the lessor that his lessee intended to sublet the premises leased for the purpose of running a bawdyhouse would render the contract or lease void. In the case of O'Bryan v. Fitzpatrick, 48 Ark. 487, 3 S. W. 527, liquor was sold with knowledge on the part of the seller that the liquor would be resold in violation of the law, and under circumstances which showed that the seller intended that it should be resold. This court, speaking through Judge Cockrill, said: "Mere knowledge by the vendor that liquor is to be resold in violation of the statute, without a participation in the illegal act, will not vitiate the sales he may make to the intermediate dealers; . . . but if the vendor designedly contributes to the scheme, or is to derive a benefit from it, or if there is a unity of purpose between him and the party to be supplied, he is infected with the latter's criminality, and the contract is void."

In Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Mason, 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 506, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 46 N. W. 558, the court,

In Stillman v. Loveless, 152 Ill. App. 332, where the agent of the landlord understood that the premises were to be used for gambling, it was held that there could be no recovery for rent during a period when the premises were vacant. It does not clearly appear from the opinion in this case whether the court regarded mere knowledge as sufficient to avoid the lease, or whether it is meant to state that the agent participated in the unlawful purpose.

In Hickey v. Sciutto, 10 B. C. 187, where a building which had not a sufficient number of rooms to comply with the law as to hotels was leased with the agreed purpose of both parties that it should be used as a hotel, the lease was held void, and recovery of rent was denied.

In McRae v. Cassan, 15 N. M. 496, 110 Pac. 574, it was assumed that it was necessary to show an intent, and that mere knowledge that the leased building was to be used as a house of prostitution was not sufficient to avoid the lease; but there is no direct holding to this effect.

In Burgett v. Loeb, 43 Ind. App. 657, 88 N. E. 346, a case not exactly in point, a lease of a building for saloon purposes for a period of five years was held not void, although the lessee had a license for only one year, and without a license it was against the law to sell intoxicating liquors.

So, in Gaston v. Gordon, 208 Mass. 265, 94 N. E. 307, it was held that a lease that bound the lessee to use the leased premises for the period of three years for the retail liquor business was not rendered void because the lessee failed to obtain a license, without which his selling would be in violation of law.

W. A. E.

after referring to the cases of Tracy v. Talmage, 14 N. Y. 162, 67 Am. Dec. 132, and Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205, said: "These cases, now regarded as leading on this side of the Atlantic, announce the rule to be that mere knowledge by a vendor of the unlawful intent of a vendee will not bar a recovery upon a contract of sale, yet, if in any way the former aids the latter in his unlawful design to violate a law, such participation will prevent him from maintaining an action to recover. The participation must be active to some extent. The vendor must do something in furtherance of the purchaser's design to transgress, but positive acts in aid of the unlawful purpose are sufficient, though slight." Continuing, the court said: "While it is certain that a contract is void when it is illegal or immoral, it is equally as certain that it is not void simply because there is something immoral or illegal in its surroundings or connections. It cannot be declared void merely because it tends to promote illegal or immoral purposes. The American text writers generally admit this to be the prevailing rule of law in the States upon this point."

There is an exception to the rule in cases where the seller knows that the commodity sold is intended to be used by the buyer "in flagrant violation of the fundamental rights of man or of society, as in cases of murder, treason, or other heinous felonies that are mala in se." See Steele v. Curle, 4 Dana, 381; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Asso. v. Mason, 44 Minn. 318, 9 L.R.A. 506, 20 Am. St. Rep. 580, 46 N. W. 558; Hanauer v. Doane, 12 Wall. 342, 20 L. ed. 439; Milner v. Patton, 49 Ala. 423; Lewis v. Latham, 74 N. C. 283; Bickel v. Sheets, 24 Ind. 1. In the cases of Tatum v. Kelley, 25 Ark. 209, 94 Am. Dec. 717, Ruddell v. Landers, 25 Ark. 238, 94 Am. Dec. 719, and McMurtry v. Ramsey, 25 Ark. 350, the court held that the payee in a note given for the purchase of articles to be used in the war between the states, who knew at the time the articles were to be used in aid of the Confederate states, could not recover. These decisions were based upon the ground that the buyer was engaged in rebellion, which was treason, against the government, and that therefore the seller, knowing of these facts, concurred with and actively promoted the treasonable purpose of the buyer. From the viewpoint of the judges who then constituted the court, and who participated in and rendered these opinions, it was treason against the government to sell articles to be used by the Confederate army. Hence those cases came within the exception to the general rule. But in the later cases this court, while citing these decisions in 25th 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Arkansas, nevertheless refused to follow them in cases similar to the one under consideration.

While the keeping of bawdyhouses on account of its corrupting influence on public morals and its detrimental effects upon society, has been denounced in the jurisprudence of civilized nations as a common nuisance, a flagrant misdemeanor, nevertheless it has not heretofore been classified by law makers and law writers among the heinous felonies, such as treason, murder, rape, etc. 3 Coke, Ins. 205; 1 Bishop, Crim. Law, 1083—3; 1 Russell, Crimes, 299; 4 Bl. Com. 1671; Rex v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1232; Rex v. Rogier, 2 Dowl. & R. 431, 1 Barn. & C. 272, 25 Revised Rep. 393; 1 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 1449. Hence it is within the rule, and not the exception mentioned above. In the case of Hollenberg Music Co. v. Berry, 85 Ark. 11, 122 Am. St. Rep. 17, 106 S. W. 1172, where the seller knew that it was the intention of the buyer to use the article purchased in a house of prostitution, this court cited all the former cases, but followed the rule announced by Chief Justice Cockrill in O'Bryan v. Fitzpatrick, supra, and said: "The rule supported by the weight of authority, and approved by this court, is that, though the contract is entered into by one of the parties for the furtherance of an illegal purpose, the contract will not be rendered illegal as to the other party, though he had knowledge of such illegal purpose, provided he does nothing in furtherance thereof." Again, in Belmont v. Jones House Furnishing Co. 94 Ark. 96, 140 Am. St. Rep. 112, 125 S. W. 651, the same rule is recognized and adhered to.

The instant case cannot be distinguished in reason and principle from the latter cases. The lower court, in its admission and exclusion of evidence, and in the giving and refusing of prayers for instructions, followed the rule announced by this court in Belmont v. Jones House Furnishing Co. and Hollenberg Music Co. v. Berry, supra. We believe that the rule announced in these cases is in accord with the weight of authority in this country, though we are free to confess that there is great conflict in the adjudicated cases. In 9 Cyc. p. 571, it is said: "In the United States, while some courts have followed the English rule, most of the courts have taken a different view, and have held that the mere knowledge of the seller of goods or services, or of the vendor or lessor of property, that the buyer intends an illegal use of them, is no defense to an action for the price or for rent." From such research as we have been able to give, we are of the opinion that this is a correct statement. See Ralston v. Boady,

20 Ga. 449; Michael v. Bacon, 49 Mo. 474, 8 Am. Rep. 138; Almy v. Greene, 13 R. I. 350. One of the most exhaustive and thoroughly considered cases in this country is that of Hill v. Spear, 50 N. H. 253, 9 Am. Rep. 205, where the authorities in the opinion and in the dissenting opinion are extensively reviewed. In that case the court said: "We are bound to look at the contract alone, quite independent of subsequent transactions growing out of it. The contract was ended when Stewart delivered the goods, and subsequent dealings with the property by Emerson and others, either in furtherance of or contrary to the original design of the purchaser, cannot relate back to the original sale, and make that illegal which at the conclusion of the original contract was not illegal." So here the contract of lease was complete when the parties agreed upon the price to be paid, the time the premises were to be occupied, and when possession thereof was taken under the contract. Although the lessor may have had knowledge that the premises would be used for an immoral purpose, unless, coupled with that knowledge, there was an intention on his part when he executed the lease that the premises should be used for such immoral purpose, the lease contract would not be void. Unless there was a common intent on the part of the lessor and the lessee at the time the contract was made, that the leased premises should be used for the unlawful purpose indicated, the contract would not be against public policy and void. The lessor is not the keeper of the conscience of the lessee, and has no police control over him in such matters, and mere knowledge on the lessor's part that the lessee is going to use the premises for an unlawful purpose does not make the lessor a participant in that purpose; for mere knowledge that the lessee may or will use the premises for an unlawful purpose is not of itself sufficient to show that the lessor intended that they must or shall be so used. The lessee might change his mind and use the leased premises for a lawful purpose. If he did not do so, but proceeded to put the premises to an unlawful use, then the lessor might sue in equity to restrain the unlawful use, but he could not forfeit the lease. See 18 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 379. The lease contract is good, unless, as stated, the intention of both parties in making it is that the premises shall be used for the unlawful purpose. In the case of Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, 133 U. S. 469, 33 L. ed. 760, 10 Sup. Ct. Rep. 461, the court says: "An obligation will be enforced, although indirectly connected with an illegal transaction, if it is supported by an independent 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) consideration, so that the plaintiff does not require the aid of the illegal transaction to make out his case,"—citing a number of authorities. The appellee did not require the aid of the illegal use of the property to enable him to recover on the lease contract. The consideration of that was independent of the illegal use to which the premises were afterwards devoted. See Armstrong v. American Exch. Nat. Bank, supra. The judgment is affirmed.

Hart and Kirby, JJ., dissent.

Petition for rehearing denied.

IDAHO SUPREME COURT.

ENDA R. KOHNY, Admr., etc., of Albert B. Kohney, Deceased, Respt.,

v.

WILLIAM C. DUNBAR, Probate Judge, Appt.

(21 Idaho, 258, 121 Pac. 544.)

Husband and wife — community.

1. Under the statute of this state (§§ 2680, 3060, Rev. Codes), all property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, not defined by §§ 2676 and 2679 as the separate property of the husband or wife, is community property.

Same — management — statutory provision.

2. Under the provisions of § 2686, the husband has the management and control of the community property, with the like absolute power of disposition as he has of his separate property.

Same — descent.

3. Under the provisions of § 5713, on the death of either husband or wife, one half of the community property goes to the survivor, subject to the community debts, and the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the deceased husband or wife.

Same — respective rights of parties.

4. Under the community property law of this state, the wife has an equal interest and ownership with the husband in com-

Headnotes by AILSHIE, J.

Note. — Liability of community property to succession tax.

This note is supplemental to a note covering the same question, appended to Re Moffitt, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 208.

Aside from KOHNY v. DUNBAR, no other case subsequent to that note has been found which has passed upon the question as to whether community property is liable to the succession tax.

In Re Majot, 199 N. Y. 29, 29 L.R.A.

munity property, and the only particular in which their rights differ is in the fact that the statute constitutes the husband the managing and sales agent and trustee of the community partnership, and authorizes him to sell and pass title to such property, and exercise absolute control over the same.

Same—right of surviving wife.

5. The one-half interest which the wife receives from the community property upon the death of her husband comes to her in her own right by reason of the death of the community agent and her survival of the dissolution of the community partnership.

Tax—inheritance—community.

6. The wife is not liable under § 1873, Rev. Codes, upon the death of her husband, to pay an inheritance tax on her one half of the community property, for the reason that the property does not pass to her "by will or by the intestate laws of this state."

Definition—Intestate laws.

7. "The intestate laws of this state" comprise that body of laws which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their property by last will or testament. One who dies intestate dies without leaving a will and without disposing of his property and estate by will or testament.

(January 30, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Ada County reversing a judgment of the Probate Court which refused to settle the accounts of the administratrix until she had paid an inheritance tax. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. D. C. McDougall, Attorney General, O. M. Van Duyn and J. H. Peterson, Assistant Attorneys General, and C. P. McCarthy, for appellant:

Inheritance tax statutes should be given a reasonable and liberal interpretation, with a view to effectuate the intention of the legislature.

State ex rel. Foot v. Bazille, 97 Minn. 11, 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 732, 106 N. W. 93, 7 Ann. Cas. 1056; State ex rel. Kalme v. Vance, 97 Minn. 532, 106 N. W. 98; Re Gordon, 186 N. Y. 471, 10 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1089, 79 N. E. 722; Re Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 207, 95 Pac. 653, 1025.

(N.S.) 780, 92 N. E. 402, where certain property acquired in a state where the law gave the wife no community interest in her husband's property was claimed to be exempt from the transfer tax by virtue of the laws of the country where the husband and wife had previously lived and were married, and which gave the wife community interest in it, the decision that such property was subject to the tax was based on the grounds that the laws of such foreign country had no extraterritorial effect. The court declined to decide as to whether the 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The legal title to the community property is in the husband.

Re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 330, 36 L.R.A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, 48 Pac. 228; Sharp v. Loupe, 120 Cal. 89, 52 Pac. 134, 586.

The interest of the wife is a mere expectancy, like the interest which any heir may possess in the property of his ancestor.

Re Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 207, 95 Pac. 653, 1025; Van Maren v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 308; Packard v. Arellanes, 17 Cal. 525; Fallrock Irrig. Dist. v. Abila, 106 Cal. 362, 39 Pac. 794; Platt, Property Rights of Married Women, § 38, p. 122; People v. Lebus, — Cal. —, 96 Pac. 1118; Re Kennedy, 157 Cal. 523, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428, 108 Pac. 280; Re Wilmerding, 117 Cal. 284, 49 Pac. 181; Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 799; Hall v. Johns, 17 Idaho, 224, 105 Pac. 71; Ray v. Ray, 1 Idaho, 566; Wilson v. Wilson, 6 Idaho, 597, 57 Pac. 708; Bedal v. Sake, 10 Idaho, 270, 66 L.R.A. 60, 77 Pac. 638; Bank of Commerce v. Baldwin (Bank of Commerce v. Bowers) 14 Idaho, 75, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 676, 93 Pac. 504.

Messrs. Cavanah & Blake and J. F. Nugent, for respondent:

The wife's half interest in the community property, and which her husband cannot dispose of by will, is not inherited from him.

Re Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 207, 95 Pac. 654, 1025; McKay, Community Property, § 462; Wright v. Hays, 10 Tex. 130, 60 Am. Dec. 200; Edwards v. Brown, 68 Tex. 329, 4 S. W. 380, 5 S. W. 87; Kircher v. Murray, 54 Fed. 626; Cullers v. James, 66 Tex. 494, 1 S. W. 314; Arnold v. Hodge, 20 Tex. Civ. App. 211, 49 S. W. 715; Johnson v. Harrison, 48 Tex. 268; Holyoke v. Jackson, 3 Wash. Terr. 235, 3 Pac. 841; Sadler v. Niesz, 5 Wash. 182, 31 Pac. 630, 1030; Adams v. Black, 6 Wash. 528, 33 Pac. 1074; Tustin v. Adams, 87 Fed. 377; Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 484, 44 L. ed. 555, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404; Arnett v. Reade, 220 U. S. 311, 53 L. ed. 477, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1040, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425; Ryan community interest of a wife in the property of the husband, under the law of such foreign country, is such as to constitute her the present and continuing owner during their married life, of an undivided one-half interest in his personal property acquired during his residence in such foreign country.

For a note on conflict of laws as to matrimonial property, see 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 781. As to succession tax on dower, curtesy, statutory homestead, or allowances, see note in 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 428.

J. H. B.

v. Fergusson, 3 Wash. 356, 28 Pac. 910; Lawrence v. Bellingham Bay & B. C. R. Co. 4 Wash. 664, 30 Pac. 1099; Re Hill, 6 Wash. 285, 33 Pac. 585; Re Cannon, 18 Wash. 101, 50 Pac. 1021; Re Riemann, 42 Misc. 648, 87 N. Y. Supp. 731; Re Weiler, 122 N. Y. Supp. 608; Re Starbuck, 137 App. Div. 866, 122 N. Y. Supp. 585; Re Green, 86 Misc. 1, 124 N. Y. Supp. 863; Commonwealth's Appeal, 34 Pa. 204; Small's Estate, 11 Pa. Co. Ct. 1.

An inheritance or succession tax is a special, not a general, tax, and must be strictly construed against the government, and favorably to the taxpayer.

People v. Koenig, 37 Colo. 283, 85 Pac. 1130, 11 Ann. Cas. 140; Lynch v. Union Trust Co. 90 C. C. A. 147, 164 Fed. 163; Eidman v. Martinez, 184 U. S. 578, 46 L. ed. 697, 22 Sup. Ct. Rep. 515; Clapp v. Mason, 94 U. S. 589, 24 L. ed. 212; 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 340.

Allshie, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This appeal involves the construction of § 1873 of the Rev. Codes, commonly known as the "inheritance tax law." The respondent, Edna R. Kohny, is the widow of Albert B. Kohny, deceased, and is the administratrix of his estate. On the 9th of February, 1909, the administratrix duly made and returned to the probate court of Ada county an appraisal of the estate of her deceased husband, which showed the estate to be of the value of $88,962.70, of which sum $25,485 was the separate estate of Albert B. Kohny and $63,477.70 represented the community estate and property of Albert B. Kohny and Edna R. Kohny, his wife. The administratrix offered to pay the inheritance tax upon one half of the community property less the amount of her exemption under § 1877, but the probate judge refused to settle, approve, and allow her final account until she first paid the inheritance tax upon the whole of the community property, less her exemption of $10,000. The administratrix appealed to the district court from the ruling and order of the probate judge, and her contention was there sustained, and the probate judge thereupon appealed to this court.

Section 1873 of the Rev. Codes provides, among other things, as follows: "All property which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, from any person who may die seised or possessed of the same while a resident of this state, . . . shall be and is subject to a tax hereinafter provided for, to be paid to the treasurer of the proper county. . . ." It necessarily follows from the plain wording of the statute that this tax is laid upon the transfer of any and all property "which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state." The vital question then to be determined is whether the one-half interest which the wife has in the community property passes to her by will or by the intestate laws of the state. This proposition may be further reduced for the reason that it is not contended that she receives it by will, so the only remaining question is: Does she receive a one-half interest in the community property through or under the intestate laws of this state?

It ought not to be difficult to determine what is meant by the words "intestate laws of this state." One who dies intestate dies without leaving a will and without disposing of his property and estate by last will and testament. Re Green, 68 Misc. 1, 124 N. Y. Supp. 863; 4 Words & Phrases, 3732; 23 Cyc. 41, notes 40 and 41. The intestate laws of this state comprise that body of the statutes which provide and prescribe the devolution of estates of persons who die without disposing of their estates by last will or testament. In other words, intestate laws deal with intestate estates, and provide for the passing of title to such person or persons as the lawmakers in their judgment and wisdom have thought best entitled to such estates. Now, then, it being conceded that Albert B. Kohny did not dispose of his property and estate by will, and that he therefore died intestate, the question to be determined is, Did his widow, Edna R. Kohny, come into the possession and enjoyment of one-half of the community estate under and by virtue of the intestate laws of the state? In order to intelligently determine this question, it is necessary to consider the nature and character of the estate known as "community property."

Section 3060 of the Rev. Codes defines community property as follows: "Community property is property acquired by husband and wife, or either, during marriage, when not acquired as the separate property of either." Chapter 3, title 2, of the Civil Code, comprising §§ 2674 to 2693, inclusive, is devoted to the subject "Husband and Wife." Section 2676 defines the separate property of the wife, and 2677 gives her the "management, control, and absolute power of disposition of her separate property," both real and personal, and authorizes her to sell and convey her separate property without procuring the consent or concurrence of her husband. Section 2679 defines the separate property of the husband, and § 2680 is as follows: "All other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife, including the rents and profits of the separate property of the husband and wife, is community property, unless by the instrument by which any such property is acquired by the wife, it is provided that the rents and profits thereof be applied to her sole and separate use; in which case the management and disposal of such rents and profits belong to the wife, and they are not liable for the debts of the husband."

Section 2686 constitutes the husband the agent and trustee of the marital community, and is as follows: "The husband has the management and control of the community property, with the like absolute power of disposition (other than testamentary) as he has of his separate estate; but such power of disposition does not extend to the homestead, or that part of the common property occupied or used by the husband and wife as a residence." It will be seen from an examination of the chapter on Husband and Wife, and especially the above enumerated sections, that the law deals with the husband and wife as a kind of partnership with reference to all their community property accumulations. It segregates all property "owned by . . . [the wife] before her marriage and that acquired afterwards by gift, bequest, or descent, or that which she shall acquire with the proceeds of her separate property" as her "separate estate," and it likewise segregates "all property owned by the husband before marriage and that acquired by gift, bequest, devise, or descent" as his "separate property." It then provides "all other property acquired after marriage by either husband or wife" shall constitute the community property. The statute therefore intends that all property acquired by either the joint effort of the two members of the community or their individual and separate effort shall constitute a community fund and estate. The lawmakers evidently thought it wise and expedient in the interest of business and commercial transactions, that this community have a business and managing agent vested with the authority to manage, sell, and transfer such property, and so they prescribed by § 2686 supra, that the husband should be the managing and sales agent and a kind of trustee for the community. The statute, however, has given to the husband no better or higher title to the community property than it has given to the wife.

The only difference or distinction whatever the law has made between the husband and wife with reference to community property is that during the continuance of the community the husband is the managing agent, vested with absolute power of disposition of the property, and that the wife cannot sell or encumber such property except in specified instances. The receipts, however, from any disposition that may be made of the property, still remain community property, and the wife's interest in the receipts from any sale of community property are just as great as they were in the original community property which was thus sold or transferred.

Section 5713 of the Rev. Codes, which was in force at the time of the death of Albert B. Kohny, provides: "Upon the death of either husband or wife, one half of the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, and the other half shall be subject to the testamentary disposition of the deceased husband or wife, subject also to the community debts. In case no testamentary disposition shall have been made by the deceased husband or wife of his or her half of the community property, it shall descend equally to the legitimate issue of his, her, or their bodies. If there be no issue of said deceased living, or none of their representatives living, then the said community property shall all pass to the survivor, to the exclusion of collateral heirs, subject to the community debts, the family allowance, and the charges and expenses of administration."

The foregoing section of the statute recognizes the husband and wife as equal partners in the community estate, and it authorizes each to dispose of his or her half by will. It also provides that the survivor shall continue to be the owner of half of such property, subject only to the payment of the community debts. This statute clearly and unmistakably provides that the surviving spouse take his or her half of the community property, not by succession, descent, or inheritance, but as survivor of the marital community or partnership. The same section provides, further, that, in the event there be no issue of the marriage living at the time of the death of one of the spouses, and he or she leaves no will or testament, the half of the community property which belonged to the deceased shall go to the survivor as an heir, and, therefore, by descent and under and by virtue of the "intestate laws of this state." While, therefore, the survivor in this case receives the entire community estate by reason of the death of her husband, half of it was already hers, and the only additional interest or right she acquires in that half by reason of the death of her husband is the right of management, control and disposition. The death of the statutory managing agent and trustee leaves the wife without such agent, and reduces her to the status of a feme sole, and the law authorizes her to act in her own right. Death has worked a dissolution of the community partnership, and left the surviving partner to act for herself. She also receives the other half of the community property, but by an entirely different means. It comes to her likewise by reason of the death of the husband, but through the means of her heirship. The statute makes her an heir of her husband, and so, in the absence of testamentary disposition of the husband's share of the community property, she inherits his half, and therefore takes her share under the intestate laws of the state. It is clear, however, that she does not inherit her share of the common property.

Counsel for appellant have called our attention to the case of Hall v. Johns, 17 Idaho, 224, 105 Pac. 71, wherein this court said: "The title to community property is in the husband, and during the existence of the community the wife's interest in the community property is a mere expectancy." That case involved the right of the wife to contract in a matter which did not have reference to her separate property and estate, and to bind the community thereby, and the above observation was made in the course of a consideration of the power of the wife to bind herself or separate estate or the community estate by contract which had no reference to her separate property and estate. It was held that she could not bind the community in such manner, and in that connection it was suggested that her interest during the continuance of the marital relation was a mere expectancy. Similar language has been frequently used by the courts, and especially in California, as will be seen from an examination of Re Burdick, 112 Cal. 387, 44 Pac. 734; Spreckels v. Spreckels, 116 Cal. 339, 36 L.R.A. 497, 58 Am. St. Rep. 170, 48 Pac. 228, and Re Moffitt, 153 Cal. 359, 20 L.R.A.(N.S.) 207, 95 Pac. 653, 1025. The California court in Re Moffitt, supra, held under a statute almost identical with ours, that the interest of the wife in the community property during the continuance of the community is a mere expectancy, and that upon the death of the husband the wife takes her share of the community property, not as survivor or in her own right, but (in some manner not clearly disclosed) under the intestate laws of the state or the laws of descent and succession, and that she is liable to pay an inheritance tax on her half of such estate. That case apparently rests upon the authority of Re Burdick and Spreckels v. Spreckels. The Burdick Case held that the "wife takes her interest in such property (community property) by way of succession from the husband, and through distribution of his estate." Mr. Justice Harrison dissented from that view, and wrote a separate opinion dealing with this phase of the statute, and Mr. Justice Garoutte concurred in this dissent. The opinion by Justice Harrison is very clear and concise, and, to our minds, expresses the logical and reasonable interpretation of the statute, and is better reasoned than the opinion of the court. Among other things he says: "She receives it [half the community property], however, not as the heir of her husband, but in her own right as her half of the property which was acquired by herself and her husband during the marriage, but freed from all restrictions in its use and enjoyment, and with the same title as if the marriage had been dissolved by a decree of divorce." The community property law has been in force in Washington since about 1869. It has been changed slightly from time to time with reference to the right of disposition of the property and the management and control by the husband, but the community property law in the main has been in force continuously in that state. In Warburton v. White, 18 Wash. 511, 52 Pac. 233, 532, the question arose as to the necessity of the wife joining the husband in the disposition of community property. The case was carried by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, and in Warburton v. White, 176 U. S. 485, 44 L. ed. 555, 20 Sup. Ct. Rep. 404, the Supreme Court of the United States, speaking through Mr. Justice (now Chief Justice) White, reviewed the Washington decisions on the subject, and considered the matter at some length, and in commenting upon the right or interest of the wife in the community property, said: "Property acquired during marriage with community funds became an acquêt of the community, and not the sole property of the one in whose name the property was bought, although by the law existing at the time, the husband was given the management, control, and power of sale of such property; this right being vested in him, not because he was the exclusive owner, but because by law he was created the agent of the community, the proceeds of the property being sold by him becoming an acquêt of the community, subject to the trust which the statute imposed upon the husband, from the very nature of the property relation engendered by the provision for the community." In Arnett v. Reade, 220 U. S. 311, 55 L. ed. 477, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1040, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 425, the Warburton Case was quoted with approval, and the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Holmes, said: "It is very plain that the wife has a greater interest than the mere possibility of an expectant heir; for it is conceded by the court below and everywhere, we believe, that in one way or another she has a remedy for an alienation made in fraud of her by her husband."

Mr. McKay of the Seattle bar, in his work on the Law of Community Property, p. 542, says: "In Washington the question has not been expressly decided whether the wife takes her moiety by inheritance from her husband, but the decisions defining her right are so clear and decisive that but one conclusion is possible, viz., that she does not. Assuming this conclusion to be true, no inheritance tax could be imposed on her moiety on the death of her husband." In a note to the same section (476) the author says: "The state board of tax commissioners expressly disclaim any power to impose an inheritance tax on the survivor's share of the common property." Since the interests of both husband and wife are the same and equal in and to the community property, and each takes one half upon the death of the other, and each may dispose of a one-half interest therein by will, it is clear to us that, if the wife must pay an inheritance tax on her half of the property upon the death of the husband, the husband would likewise be obliged to pay an inheritance tax on his half of the property on the death of his wife. The law clearly places them both on an equality in this respect. This illustration, however, accentuates the unreasonableness of the contention, for no one claims that the husband is required to pay such tax on his interest in the community estate.

Counsel have called our attention to a number of other authorities which consider and discuss this question, but we shall not enter upon an analysis of them here. The following are some of the cases which deal with this question: Wright v. Hays, 10 Tex. 130, 60 Am. Dec. 200; Edwards v. Brown, 68 Tex. 329, 4 S. W. 380, 5 S. W. 87; Kircher v. Murray (C. C.) 54 Fed. 626; Tustin v. Adams (C. C.) 87 Fed. 377; Holyoke v. Jackson, 3 Wash. Terr. 235, 3 Pac. 841; Adams v. Black, 6 Wash. 528, 33 Pac. 1074; Re Hill, 6 Wash. 285, 33 Pac. 585; Re Starbuck, 137 App. Div. 866, 122 N. Y. Supp. 585; Re Green, 68 Misc. 1, 124 N. Y. Supp. 863; Re Weiler, 122 N. Y. Supp. 608; Billings v. People, 189 Ill. 472, 59 L.R.A. 807, 59 N. E. 798; Re Gordon, 186 N. Y. 471, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1089, 79 N. E. 722.

We conclude that upon the death of husband or wife the survivor takes one half of the property in his or her own right as survivor, and is not liable under § 1873 to pay an inheritance tax on such interest in the community estate.

The judgment is affirmed, with costs in favor of respondent.

Stewart, Ch. J., and Sullivan, J., concur.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

GERTRUDE L. JENREE

v.

METROPOLITAN STREET RAILWAY COMPANY et al., Appts.

(86 Kan. 479, 121 Pac. 510.)

Sidewalk — duty to repair — railway company.

1. A city ordinance granted to a street railway company the right to construct, maintain, and operate its railway over a viaduct forming a part of a street in the city. One of the conditions was that the railway company should repair and maintain in good condition and safe for public travel all parts of the viaduct. The ordinance was accepted, and the railway was constructed and operated. A sidewalk forming a part of the structure, but not the part used by the railway company, was suffered to become out of repair and unsafe for Headnotes by BURCH, J.

Note. — Will breach of contract with municipality to keep a street or highway in repair sustain an action by a person injured directly against the contractor.

As indicated in its title, this note is concerned merely with the question whether the breach of a contract with a municipality to keep a street or highway in repair will render the contractor directly liable to a person injured because of a defect or dangerous condition of the highway for which, in the absence of such a contract, it would not be responsible. The general subject of the liability of a street railway company for a defect in the track or street is covered in the notes to Groves v. Louisville R. Co. 52 L.R.A. 448, and Slater v. North Jersey Street R. Co. 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 841, and the cases there cited are not in point in this note, except as they may involve the question whether a contract by a street railway company with the municipality to keep the highway in repair affords an independent ground of liability, assuming that the company has not been guilty of any act or omission in respect of its track or highway which would render it responsible in the absence of such a contract. The question, moreover, presupposes that the contractor has been guilty of a breach of his contract for which he would be answerable at least to the municipality; and is therefore not concerned with cases that turn upon the question as to the duty of the contractor under the terms of the contract, or whether there had, in fact or law, been a breach of that duty.

The doctrine that a contract with a municipality to keep a street or highway in repair will sustain an action by the person injured, directly against the contractor, has been adopted in a number of cases either as the sole or as an alternative ground of liability on the part of a street railway com-use, in consequence of which the plaintiff, while traveling on the sidewalk, was injured. Held, the plaintiff may recover directly from the railway company the damages resulting from the injury.

Municipal corporation — ordinance — street repair — primary liability.

2. The ordinance further provides that the railway company shall respond to the city and save it harmless from damage resulting from acts and negligence of the railway company. Held, this provision of the ordinance merely secures to the city the right to be reimbursed in the event that its own liability, which, under the law, still exists, shall be enforced. It does not confine the railway company's liability to the city alone.

(February 10, 1912.)

pany that has so contracted toward a person injured by a defect in the street. Rockford City R. Co. v. Matthews, 50 Ill. App. 267 (dictum); Ober v. Crescent City R. Co. 44 La. Ann. 1059, 32 Am. St. Rep. 386, 11 So. 818; McMahon v. Second Ave. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 231; Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469; Sullivan v. Staten Island Electric R. Co. 50 App. Div. 558, 64 N. Y. Supp. 91; Bateman v. Forty-Second Street & M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 5 N. Y. Supp. 13.

So, where the duty to repair a street is imposed upon a railway company by statute or ordinance, one injured as the result of the breach of that statutory duty may maintain a suit against the company. Mayberry v. Second & T. Streets Pass. R. Co. 9 W. N. C. 404. And this is so whether the city is liable (Doyle v. New York, 58 App. Div. 588, 69 N. Y. Supp. 120) or not (Houston City R. Co. v. Dawson, 2 Posey Unrep. Cas. (Tex.) 223).

And in Philadelphia v. Weller, 4 Brewster (Pa.) 24, it is held, as against the contention that a street railway was primarily liable for death by nonrepair of street, that it is immaterial whether, under the acts of assembly and the city ordinances, the primary duty to keep the streets in repair is upon the city or railway company, for both are liable in damages to a citizen injured by neglect to repair, and he may recover against whichever party he sues.

So, in Simon v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 29 Misc. 126, 60 N. Y. Supp. 251, it is held that notice is not a condition precedent to the performance by a street railway of the duty assumed by it of keeping the public thoroughfare in repair, neglect of which renders it liable in a civil action to any one of the public sustaining special damage from such neglect.

And it is held in Indianapolis Traction & Terminal Co. v. Springer, 47 Ind. App. 35, 93 N. E. 707, that where the duty on the part of a railway company to repair the street is one imposed by law, a failure so to do renders the company liable for any injury resulting therefrom.

So, a person injured by reason of a defective highway bridge which a railroad APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Wyandotte County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendants' negligence. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O. L. Miller, O. A. Miller, and Nathan Cree for appellants.

Mr. James F. Getty, for appellee:

One who, for a consideration, agrees with a municipal corporation to perform a public duty which the law imposes upon it, and negligently fails to perform such duty, is liable jointly with such corporation to one who is injured by reason of such failure.

McMahon v. Second Ave. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 231; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan.

effective highway bridge which a railroad company undertakes to care for and maintain may sue the company notwithstanding that an action would lie for the injury against the township. Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 16 L.R.A. 554 (see note to this case as to right of one injured on highway to proceed in the first instance against the one ultimately liable).

So, one contracting with the state to repair a canal (Phinney v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 201 Mass. 286, 131 Am. St. Rep. 400, 87 N. E. 490; Fulton F. Ins. Co. v. Baldwin, 37 N. Y. 648; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713), or canal bridge (French v. Donaldson, 57 N. Y. 496; Johnson v. Belden, 47 N. Y. 130; Conroy v. Gale, 5 Lans. 344, affirmed in 47 N. Y. 665), is liable to a suit by one suffering special damage as the result of the breach of such contractual duty.

And where a company contracted with a city to lay water pipes and to keep the work properly guarded, and to be responsible for damages which might occur by the neglect of their employees, a party injured through a defect or want of repair in a street, occasioned by the neglect or carelessness of such a contractor in doing the work, or of those for whose acts he is responsible, may, at his election, sue the contractor for redress, or pursue his remedy against the municipality. St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 485.

That a contractor may be held directly responsible to one injured in consequence of the breach of its statutory or contractual duty to keep a street or highway in repair is also assumed in some cases in which the liability in the particular instance was denied because a breach of such duty had not been established. See, for example: Crotty v. Danbury, 79 Conn. 379, 65 Atl. 147; Leary v. Boston Elev. R. Co. 180 Mass. 203, 62 N. E. 1; Hyde v. Boston, 186 Mass. 115, 71 N. E. 118; Snell v. Rochester R. Co. 64 Hun, 476, 19 N. Y. Supp. 496; Swift v. Brooklyn Heights R. Co. 134 App. Div. 134, 118 N. Y. Supp. 827; Campbell v. Frankford & S. City R. Co. 139 Pa. 522, 21 Atl. 92.

J. D. C.

83, 37 Pac. 1012; Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713; Fulton F. Ins. Co. v. Baldwin, 37 N. Y. 648; Johnson v. Belden, 47 N. Y. 130; French v. Donaldson, 57 N. Y. 496; Weet v. Brockport, 16 N. Y. 163; Bolster v. Ithaca Street R. Co. 79 App. Div. 239, 79 N. Y. Supp. 597; Doyle v. New York, 58 App. Div. 588, 69 N. Y. Supp. 120; Gates v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 150 Pa. 50, 16 L.R.A. 554, 24 Atl. 638; St. Paul Water Co. v. Ware, 16 Wall. 566, 21 L. ed. 485; Kincaid v. Walla Walla Valley Traction Co. 57 Wash. 334, 135 Am. St. Rep. 982, 106 Pac. 918; Bateman v. Forty-Second Street M. & St. N. Ave. R. Co. 5 N. Y. Supp. 13.

The railway company and the city were properly joined.

Kansas City v. File, 60 Kan. 157, 55 Pac. 877; Union Street R. Co. v. Stone, 54 Kan. 83, 37 Pac. 1012; Osage City v. Larkin, 40 Kan. 206, 2 L.R.A. 56, 10 Am. St. Rep. 186, 19 Pac. 658; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Merrill, 61 Kan. 671, 60 Pac. 819; Kansas City v. Slangstrom, 53 Kan. 431, 36 Pac. 706; Fliege v. Kansas City Western R. Co. 82 Kan. 147, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 734, 107 Pac. 555; Carstesen v. Stratford, 67 Conn. 428, 35 Atl. 276; Call v. Portsmouth K. & Y. Street R. Co. 69 N. H. 562, 45 Atl. 405; Jarrell v. Wilmington, 4 Penn. (Del.) 454, 56 Atl. 379; Pollock, Torts, 181, 182; Sweet v. Perkins, 196 N. Y. 482, 90 N. E. 50; Eining v. Georgia R. & Electric Co. 133 Ga. 458, 66 S. E. 237; Clabaugh v. Southern Wholesale Grocers' Assn. 181 Fed. 706; Brown v. Cox Bros. & Co. 75 Fed. 689; Allison v. Hobbs, 96 Me. 28, 51 Atl. 245; Day v. Louisville Coal & Coke Co. 60 W. Va. 27, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 167, 53 S. E. 776; Straulhal v. Asiatic S. S. Co. 48 Or. 100, 85 Pac. 230.

The judgment may stand against the city, even if reversed as to the railway company.

St. John v. Andrews Institute, 191 N. Y. 254, 83 N. E. 981, 14 Ann. Cas. 708; Hubbell v. Meigs, 50 N. Y. 480; Buffum v. Ramsdell, 55 Me. 252, 92 Am. Dec. 589; Whiting v. Cochran, 9 Mass. 532; Shirley v. Lunenburg, 11 Mass. 379; Citizens' R. & Light Co. v. Atwood, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 138 S. W. 1101; Sweeney v. Hanley, 61 C. C. A. 153, 126 Fed. 97; Louisville Southern R. Co. v. Tucker, 105 Ky. 492, 40 S. W. 314; Mulderig v. St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. 116 Mo. App. 655, 94 S. W. 801; Norton v. Parker, 17 Ohio C. C. 715, 8 Ohio C. D. 572; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Enos, 92 Tex. 577, 50 S. W. 928; Alter v. State, 62 Neb. 239, 86 N. W. 1080; Southern R. Co. v. Forgey, 105 Va. 599, 54 S. E. 477; Kansas City v. File, 60 Kan. 157, 55 Pac. 877; Washington Gaslight Co. v. Lansden, 172 U. S. 534, 43 L. ed. 543, 19 Sup. Ct. Rep. 296, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Burch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

An ordinance of the city granted to the railway company the right to construct, maintain, and operate street railways upon the streets of the city, and upon and over certain viaducts and bridges forming portions of such streets. Section 25 of the ordinance contained the following provision: "Said railway company shall re-floor, repair, and maintain in good condition and safe for public travel all parts of the aforesaid bridges and viaducts, including the viaduct approaches." The terms of the ordinance were accepted by the railway company, and a line of street railway was constructed upon and operated over what is known as the "Seventh street viaduct," over the tracks, yards, and grounds of the Union Pacific and Chicago, Rock Island, & Pacific Railroad Companies. A sidewalk forming part of the viaduct was negligently suffered to become out of repair and dangerous for public use, in consequence of which the plaintiff, while traveling upon it, was seriously injured. She recovered damages against both the city and the railway company, and both appeal.

The railway company denies liability under the section of the ordinance referred to, and reinforces its contention by appealing to another section, numbered 13, which reads as follows: "In constructing, repairing, and operating such street railway, said company shall use every reasonable and proper precautions to avoid damages or injury to persons or property, and shall at all times respond to the city of Kansas City, and save it harmless from all and every damage, loss, cost, or expense caused or occasioned by reason of any act or negligence of said company in the construction, reconstruction, repairing, or repaving of said streets, or the operation of said street railway, or by reason of any and every act done under the provisions of this ordinance."

The argument is that the ordinance is merely a private contract between the city and the railway company; that § 25 merely determines between the parties which one of them shall be to the expense of keeping the viaduct in repair and safe for public use; that § 13 limits the liability of the railway company to respond in damages to actions by the city; and that the plaintiff, not being privy to the contract, and being only incidentally and indirectly benefited by it, is not entitled to sue for a breach of it. The sidewalk is 6 feet wide, and is supported by cantilevers on the east side of the viaduct. West of the sidewalk is a roadway for vehicles, and the railway track is laid upon this portion of the structure.

The railway company made no use of the sidewalk, and the regulation concerning it had no reference to the construction, maintenance, or operation of the railway itself, so that the duty, default, and liability of the railway company, if any existed, lay outside the scope and boundaries of its ordinary business. The petition counted upon the negligence of the company in suffering the sidewalk to become out of repair and unsafe for use. The ordinance was pleaded as the source of the company's duty to keep the sidewalk in proper condition. If the duty existed, it was created by that instrument.

The railway company refuses to view the ordinance as anything but a private contract. It is more than a contract, and there are cogent reasons for giving to § 25 the effect of a public statute. It is not necessary, however, to rest the decision upon this ground, and the obligation of the railway company may be treated simply as one which was contractually assumed. In granting to the railway company the right to occupy and use the streets for railway purposes, the city was acting in its governmental capacity for the welfare of the general public. Its private, proprietary affairs were not involved, except as they might be related in the most incidental way to the public ends to be attained. The benefit resulting from a secure sidewalk was one to be reaped by the public. The maintenance of such a way was a matter of public concern. The duty to keep the sidewalk in a condition which would prevent it from becoming a public nuisance, and which would permit all pedestrians, including the plaintiff, to use it in safety, was a public duty, and the manifest purpose of § 25 was to cast this duty which the city owed to the traveling public, including the plaintiff, upon the railway company as a condition to the street railway grant. The city was not engaging a contractor or employing an agent or servant to perform for it and on its behalf the work of inspection, repair, reconstruction, and the like, essential to the maintenance of a secure way. It was taking advantage of an opportunity to shift the whole burden of taking those steps upon another, who should stand, in relation to the public safety and convenience, in the city's place and stead. The obligation being a public one, to be performed for the public benefit, the party assuming it was responsible to the public. Therefore the contract was one for the benefit of the plaintiff as a member of the public.

The principle involved was apprehended and stated with reasonable clearness by Lord Abinger in the case of Winterbottom v. Wright, 10 Mees. & W. 109, 114, which 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) is one of the familiar landmarks of the law on the subject of liability to third persons for the negligent breach of a contractual duty. The opinion contains the following observations: "Where a party becomes responsible to the public by undertaking a public duty, he is liable, though the injury may have arisen from the negligence of his servant or agent. So, in cases of public nuisances, whether the act was done by the party as a servant or in any other capacity, you are liable to an action at the suit of any person who suffers. Those, however, are cases where the real ground of the liability is the public duty, or the commission of the public nuisance. There is also a class of cases in which the law permits a contract to be turned into a tort; but unless there has been some public duty undertaken, or public nuisance committed, they are all cases in which an action might have been maintained upon the contract." Perhaps the leading American cases in which the principle has been stated and applied are Brooklyn v. Brooklyn City R. Co. 47 N. Y. 475, 7 Am. Rep. 469, and McMahon v. Second Ave. R. Co. 75 N. Y. 231. In the Brooklyn Case a portion of the opinion reads as follows: "A municipal corporation by the conferring and acceptance of a charter with powers of opening and controlling streets and ways has put upon it the correlative duty to the public of keeping those ways in repair, so that they may be safe for the passage of the public. When one contracts with that corporation to keep any portion of those streets in repair, in consideration of a license to use them to his benefit in an especial manner, he in effect contracts to perform that duty to the public in the place and stead of the municipality, and the way is given over to him for that purpose, and he takes it into his care and charge therefor; and his failure to perform his contract is a failure to do that duty, and the damages which naturally and proximately result from nonperformance are all the damages which naturally and proximately fall upon the corporation from the duty not being performed. The different principles which govern the different classes of cases grow out of the differences in the contracts with which the classes of cases are respectively concerned. The one relates to private matters alone. The other relates to matters with which the public and third persons are also concerned. And, as we read the decision in Robinson v. Chamberlain, 34 N. Y. 389, 90 Am. Dec. 713, that case goes on the same principle, or one near of kin. That was an action against the defendant, a contractor with the state to keep in repair a section of the canals, for an injury resulting to a boat of the plaintiff from a lock gate being out of repair. It was held that, by the contract of the defendant with the state, he assumed the duties and was invested with the powers of a public officer, and that the portion of canals covered by the defendant's contract was a public highway; that he, by his contract, assumed the duty of keeping in repair a public thoroughfare, and was therefore liable in a civil action to any one of the public sustaining special damage from his neglect to keep it in repair. His contract was not with the injured party, but with the state. But it was a contract to perform a duty to the public, for a neglect of which the state, but for its sovereignty, would be liable to the party injured. And so, by the force of his contract, he having thereby assumed public duties, he was held liable to one injured by a neglect to perform them." 47 N. Y. 485. In the McMahon Case the conclusion of the court is stated in the headnote to the opinion as follows: "Where one contracts with a municipality to perform in its stead the duty resting upon it of keeping its streets in repair and safe for the passage of the public, and where, because of neglect to perform the duty, a cause of action arises against the municipality, the action may be brought by the party injured directly against the contractor." 75 N. Y. 231.

It is impossible to say that the plaintiff was a stranger to the contract. The subject of the undertaking was a sidewalk, safe for use as such. The public interest in that subject cannot be refined away, and, unless mere fiction and form are to prevail over substance and fact, the contract was made for the benefit of every individual whose rights as one of the public might be specially affected. Because the city owed the plaintiff the duty to keep the sidewalk in repair and safe for travel, the plaintiff had a legal interest in the performance of the contract, and so became privy to it. "To give a third party who may derive a benefit from the performance of the promise an action, there must be, first, an intent by the promisee to secure some benefit to the third party, and, second, some privity between the two, the promisee and the party to be benefited, and some obligation or duty owing from the former to the latter which would give him a legal or equitable claim to the benefit of the promise, or an equivalent from him personally. It is true there need be no privity between the promisor and the party claiming the benefit of the undertaking, neither is it necessary that the latter should be privy to the consideration of the promise; but it does not follow that a mere volunteer can avail himself of it. A legal obligation or duty of the promisee [in this case the city] to him [the plaintiff] will so connect him with the transaction as to be a substitute for any privity with the promisor [the railway company] or the consideration of the promise, the obligation of the promisee furnishing an evidence of the intent of the latter to benefit him, and creating a privity by substitution with the promisor." Vrooman v. Turner, 69 N. Y. 280, 283, 25 Am. Rep. 195. The words of the contract, "safe for public travel," were equivalent to "safe for the traveling public;" and in principle the plaintiff, as a traveler on the sidewalk, stood toward the railway company in the same relation of privity that a mortgagee bears to a grantee of the mortgagor, who assumes and agrees to pay the mortgage debt. In the case of Mott v. Water Co. 43 Kan. 12, 15 L.R.A. 375, 30 Am. St. Rep. 267, 28 Pac. 989, in which it was held that the water company was not liable to an individual for damages which it had agreed with the city to pay when occasioned by an insufficient supply, the city itself was under no obligation either to furnish water or to pay the contemplated damage. Here the duty rests upon the city to keep the street safe for use and to pay all damages which result proximately from a breach of the duty. It may be observed, however, that the modern tendency is to hold that a contract made between a municipality and a public-service corporation inures directly to the benefit of the individual citizen in the very cases in which the city rests under no legal duty or liability respecting the subject of the contract. Independent School Dist. v. Le Mars City, Water & Light Co. 131 Iowa, 14, 10 L.R.A. (N.S.) 859, 107 N. W. 944; Pond v. New Rochelle Water Co. 183 N. Y. 330, 1 L.R.A. (N.S.) 958, 76 N. E. 211, 5 Ann. Cas. 504.

Section 13, upon which the railway company relies, must be interpreted in the light of the true meaning and effect of § 25. It is not clear that the damages suffered by the plaintiff fall within the terms of § 13. There is a room for the contention that the city is to be indemnified only for damages resulting from the prosecution of street work in a negligent or otherwise wrongful manner. Leaving this question undetermined, however, the section merely secures to the city the right of reimbursement in the event that its liability, which, notwithstanding the railway company's contract, remained uncanceled, should be enforced.

In the brief for the city reasons are given for reversing the judgment against the city in case it should be reversed as to the railway company. Because of the conclusion which the court has reached, the question thus presented need not be decided.

The judgment of the District Court is affirmed.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

MAGGIE HILL, by Guardian ad Litem, Appt.,
v.

CARY HILL, by Next Friend.

(— Fla. —, 56 So. 941.)

Husband and wife — desertion — what constitutes.

1. The essence of a wilful, obstinate desertion by a wife consists in her refusing to live with her husband when he does his marital duty, and wants her to live with him.

Divorce — desertion — duty of husband.

2. Where a very young wife, without her husband's consent, goes to her parents' home, and soon thereafter the first child of the couple is born at her parents' home, and the husband makes no proper effort in the discharge of his duty to the wife and child, and the wife and child remain with her parents, he is not entitled to a divorce on the statutory ground of a wilful, obstinate desertion by his wife.

(December 6, 1911.)

APPEAL by defendant from a decree of the Circuit Court for Jackson county in complainant's favor in a suit for divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William B. Farley, for appellant:
Complainant was not entitled to a divorce on the ground of desertion.

Williams v. Williams, 130 N. Y. 103, 14 L.R.A. 221, 27 Am. St. Rep. 517, 29 N. E. 98; Herold v. Herold, 9 L.R.A. 696, and note, 47 N. J. Eq. 210, 20 Atl. 375; Newing v. Newing, 45 N. J. Eq. 498, 18 Atl. 166; Wright v. Wright, 80 Mich. 572, 45 N. W. 365; 14 Cyc. 613 (b.); Hardie v. Hardie, 162 Pa. 227, 25 L.R.A. 697, 29 Atl. 886; Dennis v. Dennis, 68 Conn. 186, 34 L.R.A. 459, 57 Am. St. Rep. 95, 36 Atl. 34.

Messrs. Thomas E. Walker and Paul Carter, for appellee:

If the husband establishes a matrimonial domicile, and makes a peremptory and unconditional demand upon the wife to live with him, her refusal to do so, if without justification and persisted in for the statutory period of time, constitutes a desertion.

14 Cyc. 613.

Whitfield, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The complainant husband obtained a divorce on the ground of "wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion of complainant by the defendant for one year," and the defendant wife appealed. It is alleged that the parties were married September 8, 1908; that shortly after the marriage the defendant wife without cause deserted the complainant husband and remained away for six weeks, but by persuasion of the husband she returned; that she then lived with complainant till July 12, 1909, when she again, without reason and without cause, deserted complainant, and returned to her parents' home, where she has continuously remained ever since, notwithstanding complainant has tried to persuade her to return to the home of complainant, but she refuses to return, and complainant has no hopes of her ever returning because of her extreme youth and of the influence of her mother over her. The bill of complaint was not demurred to, and, after final decree, all fair intendments should be indulged in favor of the sufficiency of the pleading. Kirton v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 57 Fla. 87, 49 So. 1026.

It is essential to prove an intention to desert where the ground upon which a divorce is sought is wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion. Continued separation between husband and wife, which may be consistent under the proofs with no intention to wilfully and obstinately desert, is not a desertion within the meaning of the statute. Crawford v. Crawford, 17 Fla. 180.

If a wife deserts without cause, and afterwards realizes that she has acted foolishly, and would return if the way was open for her, but her husband refrains from doing anything to induce her to return, for the purpose of making her absence a ground of divorce, her desertion is not obstinate. Trall v. Trall, 32 N. J. Eq. 231.

The essence of the wrong of desertion by a wife consists in her refusing to live with her husband when he wants her to live with him. Newing v. Newing, 45 N. J. Eq. 498, 18 Atl. 166.

When a husband, not entirely blameless for the act, makes no effort to prevent his desertion by his wife, and acquiesces in and appears satisfied with its continuance, he is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of desertion. Herold v. Herold, 47 N. J. Eq. 210, 9 L.R.A. 696, 20 Atl. 375.

The evidence shows that the husband was about seventeen and the wife about fifteen years of age at the time of the marriage; that they lived for a time with the husband's parents, and the wife was not happy in her new surroundings; that the couple removed to a home given by the husband's father not far from the parental home; that life here was not happy for the young wife, because of the uncongeniality of the husband's parents; that the first time the wife left the husband as alleged it was to visit her parents not far off; that on July 12th the wife went to visit her parents, and met her husband at church the next day; that they disagreed there, and she returned to the home of her parents, and he to his home. There was little if any communication between the couple thereafter; and in September, 1909, a child was born to the couple. It clearly appears that the husband made no proper and sufficient manly effort to prevail upon his wife to return to his home. The birth of the child two months after her return to her parents' home is some justification for remaining there, and it does not appear that the husband paid any attention whatever to his child, or manifested any desire to do so as he should have done; there being no indication that he could not have done so had he desired to, even though he was not on very friendly terms with his wife's parents. This condition did not relieve the complainant of his obligations as husband and father, but imperatively demanded persistent effort in the line of parental duty. He failed to do his full duty, and this indicates a desire on his part to allow time to mature a cause of divorce on the ground of desertion. The entire evidence does not show a wilful, obstinate desertion of the husband by the wife, particularly in view of the peculiar duties due from the husband and father to his wife and infant child under the circumstances disclosed by the record. It is his duty to do all in his power to make a happy home for his wife and child, and to make the relations between the wife and his parents as pleasant as possible. This case is wholly unlike that of Hudson v. Hudson, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 51 So. 857, 21 Ann. Cas. 278.

Headnotes by WHITFIELD, Ch. J.

Note. — See note, post, 1118.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

The evidence does not show a wilful and obstinate desertion of the complainant by the defendant, and the decree is reversed.

Shackleford and Cockrell, JJ., concur.

Taylor, Hocker, and Parkhill, JJ., concur in the opinion.

Note.—Effort by one spouse to induce the other to return home as a condition of desertion by the latter.

I. Scope, 1118.

II. In general, 1119.

III. Duty of husband.

a. Separation not caused by his misconduct.

1. Generally, 1120.

2. Consent or mutual agreement, 1121.

3. Unjustified and wilful departure of wife, 1122.

b. Separation caused by his misconduct, 1123.

IV. Duty of wife.

a. Separation not caused by her misconduct, 1125.

b. Effect of wife's consent or misconduct, 1126.

I. Scope.

The question here discussed is as to whether the party alleged to have been deserted was bound to take the initiative and induce a reconciliation and the other spouse's return. The question whether the party alleged to have been deserted is bound to accept the deserter's offer to return is not within the scope of the note.

The duty of the husband will be treated separately from that of the wife, because in a few jurisdictions it is expressly declared that the duty devolving upon the wife is not always the same as that imposed upon the husband in similar circumstances, and for the further reason that, although in other jurisdictions this distinction is not expressly made, it may have entered into the decisions, inasmuch as a determination of this question is apt to turn upon the particular facts of a case.

Elsewhere discussed are such analogous questions as condonation of desertion:¹ whether the plaintiff's desertion or cruelty constitutes a defense to an action for divorce upon the ground of the defendant's subsequent adultery;² whether insisting upon a separation constitutes cruelty;³ desertion by forcing spouse to leave marital home;⁴ whether the refusal of the wife to follow the husband upon a change of domicile constitutes desertion;⁵ and as to the effect of the relations between one spouse and the relatives of the other upon the question of desertion or cruelty.⁶

¹ See the note to Laflamme v. Laflamme, post, 1133.

² See the note to Ellett v. Ellett, post, 1135.

³ See McClintock v. McClintock, post, 1127, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

⁴ Note in 29 L.R.A. (N.S.) 614.

⁵ Note in 4 L.R.A. (N.S.) 145.

⁶ Notes in 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 222, and 34 L.R.A. (N.S.) 759.

II. In general.

This question, depending as it does largely upon the particular facts presented, does not lend itself to any generalization further than the statement that the courts quite uniformly make an effort at reconciliation a condition of desertion, except, of course, where, in a particular case, the arbitrary application of that doctrine would work a hardship or injustice. The rule is not, as has sometimes been intimated or declared obiter, that when one party, without cause, terminates the cohabitation by desertion, the other is not bound to take any steps to restore it.⁷ The rule is rather that a divorce will not be granted for abandonment only, if it appears that the parties may be reconciled by a reasonable effort on the part of the complaining party;⁸ and certainly neither party can make a separation which was begun and prolonged by their common consent a ground of divorce, where neither has ever made an effort at reconciliation.⁹ A fortiori, where one spouse withdraws from cohabitation, entertaining a reasonable belief that by reason of the actual misconduct of the other the cohabitation cannot be longer continued with health, safety, or self-respect, wilful desertion does not begin until the offending party has in good faith exhausted all reasonable efforts to right the wrong, and to satisfy the injured spouse that there will be no recurrence of the causes which induced the separation, nor until the lapse of a reasonable time for a consideration of the overtures for a reconciliation.¹⁰ To be effective, the overtures must be made before the other party acquires a right to divorce;¹¹ and they must be bona fide,¹² and not made simply for the purpose of laying a founda-

⁷ Ford v. Ford, 143 Mass. 577, 10 N. E. 474, which makes such a declaration summarily, although it holds only that where a husband files a libel for divorce for adultery before the lapse of the statutory period of desertion, he cannot maintain a suit upon the ground of desertion upon the lapse of such statutory period.

While the point involved in this note was apparently not urged in Prather v. Prather, 26 Kan. 273, the existence of any duty upon the part of the husband to seek a reconciliation under the facts of that case was negated by the court's statement that a wife cannot deliberately abandon her husband, sue for separate maintenance, and, when defeated in such action, issue under the advice of counsel formal propositions for reconciliation, which are never received by the husband, and then, without personally approaching him, defeat an action for abandonment.

And the existence of any duty upon the part of the husband in this respect was negated in Fulton v. Fulton, 36 Miss. 517, holding that where a wife unjustifiably left her husband because of his refusal to permit the visits of a son by a former marriage, her officer to return to him upon the condition that the son should visit her did not terminate the desertion, nor deprive it of the character of wilfulness, so as to disentitle the husband to a divorce.

⁸ Friemann v. Friemann, 120 Mo. App. 430, 97 S. W. 186.

⁹ Gilmer v. Gilmer, 37 Mo. App. 672.

¹⁰ Stocking v. Stocking, 76 Minn. 292, 79 N. W. 172, 668.

¹¹ If an offending husband desires to put his wife in fault as a deserter by an offer of reconciliation, it must be made before she acquires the right to a divorce against him. Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 467; Bovaird v. Bovaird, 78 Kan. 315, 96 Pac. 666.

¹² Phelan v. Phelan, 135 Ill. 445, 25 N. E. 751; Paul v. Paul, 75 Ill. App. 383; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Grady v. Grady, — N. J. Eq. —, 64 Atl. 440; Middleton v. Middleton, 187 Pa. 612, 41 Atl. 201.

And if, at the time of offering to return to live with his wife, the husband was in fact living in adultery, or was at least willing to let her believe that he was so living, the offer to return cannot be considered as one made in good faith. Lister v. Lister, 65 N. J. Eq. 109, 55 Atl. 1093, affirmed without additional opinion in 66 N. J. Eq. 434, 57 Atl. 1132; Fred v. Fred, 67 N. J. Eq. 495, 58 Atl. 611.

The expression of a willingness to receive the wife again, when made under duress of arrest for nonsupport, and neither accompanied nor followed by any facts or even words to indicate that he was honestly desirous that she should return, cannot be considered as sufficient proof that he wished to change their relation or the separation to come to an end, so as to entitle him to a divorce upon the ground of wilful and obstinate desertion. Broom v. Broom, 47 N. J. Eq. 215, 20 Atl. 377, affirmed without additional opinion in 49 N. J. Eq. 347, 25 Atl. 963.

See also Howard v. Howard, 134 Cal. 346, 66 Pac. 367, where it was contended that the husband was not entitled to a divorce for desertion since his effort to bring about a reconciliation was not sincere or made in good faith, and the court seems to accept the contention as a logical one, but held that it did not apply since the offer was made in good faith.

It is held in McMullin v. McMullin, 140 Cal. 112, 73 Pac. 808, that where the parties to the marriage separate by consent, in which case either party may under the provisions of the statute revoke his consent, and in good faith seek a reconciliation and restoration, the refusal of the other to yield constitutes desertion, which, if continued for a year, becomes a ground for divorce. In this case there is a strong dissenting opinion, which takes the position tion for the suit.¹³ So, too, they must have been conciliatory, and without unreasonable conditions,¹⁴ such as, for instance, requiring a wife to relinquish all claims in the husband's real estate;¹⁵ and not merely requests which are formal and perfunctory,¹⁶ or which partake of the nature of a command rather than of an invitation,¹⁷ or are couched in terms calculated to arouse resentment.¹⁸ In short, the invitation must have at least the appearance of being sincere, and must manifest an actual desire for the absent one's return.¹⁹ Indeed, it is held that where the husband's misconduct on account of which the wife left, is such that it in itself constitutes a ground for divorce, he cannot, by mere invitation to her to return, put her in the position of a wife who has wilfully and obstinately deserted the husband, even if she refuses to come back.²⁰

In Louisiana this question is governed by that the evidence showed that the officer of reconciliation was not made in good faith.

¹³ Olcott v. Olcott, — N. J. Eq. —, 26 Atl. 469.

¹⁴ Middleton v. Middleton, 187 Pa. 612, 41 Atl. 291.

A husband must, in a conciliatory manner and in good faith, and without conditions, invite the wife to return, before wilful desertion and abandonment can be made out of her continuation of a voluntary separation which took place upon his demand, when he refused longer to live with her upon her confession that she no longer loved him, although she was willing to remain with him for appearance sake. Woolard v. Woolard, 18 App. D. C. 326.

To entitle a husband who deserts his wife to invoke a statutory provision that the husband may choose any reasonable place or mode of living, and that, if the wife does not conform thereto, it is desertion, he must show that the place or mode of living chosen by him is reasonable. Kenniston v. Kenniston, 6 Cal. App. 657, 92 Pac. 1037.

¹⁵ Day v. Day, 84 Iowa, 221, 50 N. W. 979.

¹⁶ A husband who leaves his wife, and unsuccessfully prosecutes an action for divorce upon the alleged ground of her impotency, cannot render her the deserter by taking a witness with him and making a formal and perfunctory request for her return to the marital home, where she replies that she will take the matter under consideration and he never thereafter makes any overtures. Chambers v. Chambers, 20 Pa. Co. Ct. 41.

¹⁷ Musgrave v. Musgrave, 185 Pa. 260, 39 Atl. 961.

¹⁸ A husband who leaves his wife cannot make her the deserter by making a formal offer of a home to her in a letter couched in terms calculated to arouse resentment. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

a statute providing that the abandonment with which the husband or wife is charged must be made to appear by three reiterated summonses made to him or her from month to month, directing him or her to return to the place of the matrimonial domicile, and followed by a judgment which has sentenced him or her to comply with such request, together with a notification of said judgment given to him or her from month to month for three successive times.²¹

III. Duty of husband.

a. Separation not caused by his misconduct.

1. Generally.

The husband must seek the wife's return after a separation,²² and he cannot, without doing this, accept her departure as a desertion and demand a divorce,²³ where she and opposition, and not giving her a reasonable time to consider the matter. Heaton v. Heaton, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 658.

¹⁹ Wright v. Wright, — N. J. Eq. —, 43 Atl. 447.

²⁰ Crickler v. Crickler, 58 N. J. Eq. 427, 43 Atl. 1064.

²¹ Derby v. Dancy, 112 La. 891, 36 So. 795, in which the court said that the law presupposes the possibility of a reconciliation of the parties, and that no separation can be decreed for cause of abandonment without a strict compliance of all the requisites of the statute.

²² Briggs v. Briggs, — N. J. Eq. —, 59 Atl. 878.

²³ A husband cannot accept the departure of his wife from the home as a desertion and demand a divorce, when he refuses to invite her return, makes no effort to induce her to resume her place in his household, and rejects her overtures for a reconciliation. McElhanev v. McElhanev, 125 Iowa, 333, 101 N. W. 93.

A husband will not be granted a divorce for desertion where he made no effort to induce the wife to return to him after the dismissal of a former suit instituted by him upon the same ground, and after a continuance granted therein upon her statement to the judge that she was willing to live with him if he would treat her as his wife. Bradley v. Bradley, 160 Mass. 258, 35 N. E. 482. The court said in this case that, so far from showing desertion by her since the first suit was dismissed, these facts indicated desertion by him.

Where a man uses undue means to coerce a girl of fourteen to marry him against her declarations that she has no love for him, and contrary to the advice of friends, he will not be divorced for her absence among her friends without clear and decided efforts to win her affections and induce her to live with him. Bigelow v. Bigelow, Wright (Ohio) 416.

fails to return from a visit,²⁴ or after going away for medical attention,²⁵ or to engage in business;²⁶ and the same is true where the estrangement follows the husband's departure from home for the purpose of finding employment,²⁷ or because of financial necessity.²⁸ But the right of the husband to a decree upon the ground of desertion is not dependent upon his having made an effort to effect a reconciliation, where the circumstances attending or following the separation afford a ground for reasonable belief that any such effort on his part to induce the wife's return would most probably have resulted in strengthening her determination to remain away,²⁹ that is, where it is reasonably clear that any efforts on his part would have been unavailing,³⁰ or that, even if successful in bringing the desertion to an end, it would be so only temporarily.³¹ The true rule has been stated to be that when the circumstances under which the separation occurred were such as to impose upon the husband the duty of using active efforts to terminate it, by making such advances or concessions as might reasonably be expected to induce the wife to return to him, he is excused from making such efforts when, and only when, it is manifest from the facts in the case that to do so will be unavailing.³²

2. Consent or mutual agreement.

A voluntary separation does not amount to desertion, nor can desertion be inferred from the mere unaided fact that the parties do not live together. To establish a case of desertion, it should appear that the wife left her husband of her own accord, without his consent and against his will, or that she obstinately refused to return without just cause upon his request,³³ and therefore, ²⁴ An effort to induce the wife's return is necessary to entitle a husband to a divorce for desertion where, after living peaceably with him for thirty five years, she left their home and went to a distant state on a visit, after which no correspondence passed between the parties. Wright v. Wright, 80 Mich. 572, 45 N. W. 365.

And it was declared in Conger v. Conger, 13 N. J. Eq. 286, that where the wife left home with the consent of her husband, and with a bona fide purpose of visiting her mother, her subsequently formed purpose not to return could not convert her absence into a wilful desertion as of the date of her departure, the court apparently taking the position that she did not become a wilful deserter until her husband had made an effort to induce her to return and she had refused.

²⁵ A divorce will not be granted a husband upon the ground of desertion, where the wife left the home temporarily for medical attention, and remained away during convalescence, and for a few months thereafter due to the express indifference of the husband, who a few months after her departure sold the household furniture and never requested her to return. Kupka v. Kupka, 132 Iowa, 191, 109 N. W. 610.

²⁶ A husband who permits his wife to engage in business elsewhere than at their home city, without making any effort to have her remain with him, and without offering any inducements for her return, and who on the contrary appears pleased at her departure, is not entitled to a divorce for desertion, since her departure was not against his will. Beller v. Beller, 50 Mich. 49, 14 N. W. 696.

²⁷ A wife who goes to live with her friends when her husband departs to work at a distance for several months is not guilty of wilful desertion, where it does not appear that upon his return he sought her, desired her to return, or informed her that he had returned. Frarell v. Frarell, Wright (Ohio) 455.

²⁸ The fact that a wife who was separated from her husband by reason of financial necessity may not have wanted him to come to her until he could support her and the family does not absolve him from his duty to find her and solicit her return. Ferrari v. Ferrari, — N. J. Eq. —, 22 Atl. 261.

²⁹ Trall v. Trall, 32 N. J. Eq. 231.

³⁰ Hudson v. Hudson, 59 Fla. 529, 29 L.R.A.(N.S.) 614, 138 Am. St. Rep. 141, 51 So. 857, 21 Ann. Cas. 278; Ojserkis v. Ojserkis, — N. J. Eq. —, 62 Atl. 113; Currier v. Currier, 68 N. J. Eq. 7, 59 Atl. 4, affirmed without additional opinion in 68 N. J. Eq. 797, 64 Atl. 1133.

³¹ Where a husband is in no way responsible for his wife's departure, and it is apparent from the circumstances that an honest effort on his part to terminate the separation will be unavailing, or only temporarily successful, no duty to make such effort devolves upon him. Purnell v. Purnell, — N. J. —, 70 Atl. 187. So, too, where her desertion, though not without some fault on his part, was unjustified. Lammertz v. Lammertz, 59 N. J. Eq. 649, 45 Atl. 271.

³² Hall v. Hall, 60 N. J. Eq. 469, 46 Atl. 866; Hall v. Hall, 65 N. J. Eq. 709, 55 Atl. 300. The latter decision, although affirming — N. J. Eq. —, 53 Atl. 455, thus states the rule in correction of a statement in the opinion in 53 Atl. 455, to the effect that when the facts show that the action of a wife in leaving her husband is the result of a settled determination on her part to separate from him, the husband is not bound to seek her out and endeavor to induce her to return to him; but that it is only when the wife leaves her husband on the impulse of the moment, without premeditation, that this duty rests on the latter.

³³ Jennings v. Jennings, 13 N. J. Eq. 38; Taylor v. Taylor, 28 N. J. Eq. 207.

where the parties are living apart under articles of separation,³⁴ or where the husband assents either expressly or by implication to the separation or to the wife's continued absence,³⁵ he will not be entitled to a divorce until he has revoked that consent by seeking a reconciliation³⁶ by something more than a mere request for her return, unaccompanied by an offer in any sense of protection, maintenance, or a home, or a manifestation of any sincere desire to reinstate her to the conjugal relation.³⁷ And especially where the parties separate after the marriage and never live together, the wife does not become a deserter until she has refused a bona fide offer of a home.³⁸ Likewise, where the wife leaves upon the husband's insistence, although it was induced by her conduct,³⁹ or the parties separate because of mutual incompatibility,⁴⁰ or because of a quarrel,⁴¹ the husband will not be granted a divorce, unless he sincerely and unreservedly sought her return, for, as said in one case when a husband, upon disagreement with his wife and her declaration that she will not live with him, assents to her going where she chooses, and furnishes her with money for her support, and never insists, as a condition of her support, that she shall perform her duties as a wife, although he asks and entreats her to come back, it has too much the character of a friendly arrangement to be called wilful, obstinate, and continued desertion.⁴²

3. Unjustified and wilful departure of wife.

The view has been taken that where the wife deserts the husband without cause, he is not called upon to make overtures to her or to entreat her to return, upon the theory that his silence should be construed as a consent to her separation from him;⁴³ and that it is sufficient in such circumstances if the wife has not refused an unconditional offer to return.⁴⁴ While this position may be warranted under the peculiar facts of a particular case,⁴⁵ or under a particular ³⁴ And where the parties are living apart under articles of separation, a divorce for desertion will not be granted where the plaintiff has not expressed a desire to revoke the agreement. Moore v. Moore, 16 N. J. Eq. 275.

³⁵ Rose v. Rose, 50 Mich. 92, 14 N. W. 711; Simpson v. Simpson, 31 Mo. 24; Scott v. Scott, 44 Mo. App. 600.

³⁶ Reed v. Reed, 62 Ark. 611, 37 S. W. 230; Gates v. Gates, 59 N. J. Eq. 100, 43 Atl. 436, affirmed without additional opinion in 60 N. J. Eq. 486, 46 Atl. 1100; Ojserkis v. Ojserkis, — N. J. Eq. —, 62 Atl. 113; Currier v. Currier, 68 N. J. Eq. 7, 59 Atl. 4, affirmed without additional opinion in 68 N. J. Eq. 797, 64 Atl. 1133; Luper v. Luper, — Or. —, 96 Pac. 1099; Butler v. Butler, 1 Pars. Sel. Eq. Cas. 329.

³⁷ Eisenberg v. Eisenberg, 1 Pa. Co. Ct. 590.

³⁸ Ball v. Ball, 8 Pa. Dist. R. 678.

³⁹ Smithkin v. Smithkin, 62 N. J. Eq. 161, 49 Atl. 815.

⁴⁰ Where, from mutual dislike, incompatibility of temper, uncongeniality, or other cause, the parties voluntarily separate, such separation, however long continued, will not of itself constitute desertion on either side, within the meaning of the statute; and it becomes such when, and only when, a renewal of marital cohabitation is sincerely sought by the complaining party. Hankinson v. Hankinson, 33 N. J. Eq. 66.

So, a husband who makes no effort to induce his wife's return will not be granted a divorce for desertion against his wife, where she left as a result of their mutual incompatibility, it appearing that there were some things alleged against the husband which would give countenance to the wife's departure. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 9 R. I. 57.

⁴¹ An order denying the husband a divorce. L.R.A. (N.S.)

divorce for desertion will not be disturbed where it appears that the parties have been living separate and apart for several years, owing to a trifling quarrel, and that neither of them has ever attempted to become reconciled, or to resume the marital relations, but that they have been mutually satisfied with existing relations, without making any serious charges of misconduct against each other. Hosmer v. Hosmer, 53 Minn. 502, 55 N. W. 630.

So, a husband who makes no effort at a reconciliation will not be entitled to a divorce for wilful and malicious desertion, where, upon the wife's departure as the result of a quarrel, he declared that this act ended everything between them. Thorpe v. Thorpe, 30 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 133.

No such abandonment as constitutes a ground for limited divorce is shown by the fact that the parties were living apart as the result of a disagreement, and with the virtual consent and approbation of the plaintiff (husband). Adams v. Adams, 20 N. Y. Supp. 765.

⁴² Goldbeck v. Goldbeck, 18 N. J. Eq. 42.

⁴³ Ogilvie v. Ogilvie, 37 Or. 171, 61 Pac. 627.

⁴⁴ Seeds v. Seeds, 139 Iowa, 717, 117 N. W. 1069 (desertion by wife).

⁴⁵ To entitle a husband to a divorce upon the ground of wilful desertion, it is not necessary that he manifest an active desire for her return, where she left him without legal cause and without his consent or connivance, and soon thereafter instituted a suit for separate maintenance. Hitchcock v. Hitchcock, 15 App. D. C. 81.

So, where a wife leaves her husband with the purpose of not returning, although she leads him to believe that she will return, and immediately institutes in bad faith an action for divorce, it cannot be said that because he has not since solicited her re-statute,⁴⁶ the better rule, as a general proposition, would seem to be that though the wife's desertion may have been wilful and unjustified, it does not become obstinate, so as to constitute a ground for divorce, until the husband has sought a reconciliation,⁴⁷ since it devolves upon the husband, as the head of the household, to take the initiative in the maintenance or re-establishment of domestic harmony.⁴⁸ Where, by refusing to accompany him upon his change of domicile,⁴⁹ or in some other manner, the wife wilfully and unjustifiably separates herself from her husband, and he passively acquiesces in the separation,⁵⁰ for the purpose of making her absence a ground for divorce,⁵¹ he will be denied relief. A fortiori, where it appears that the wife had on previous occasions left him, but had always yielded to his persuasions to return, his failure to urge her return will be fatal to his application for relief;⁵² and likewise he has no standing to seek a divorce where he has ignored her conciliatory letters upon the assumption that they were insincere and untruthful.⁵³

b. Separation caused by his misconduct.

The reasons which impel the courts to charge the husband with the duty of seeking the return of a wife who has left him without his own fault apply with greater force where her departure was due to misconduct on his part. He must make an effort at reconciliation where he is not blameless for the separation.⁵⁴ Thus, where he is himself turn, and is willing for her to stay away, he has consented to the separation, so as to disentitle him to a divorce upon the ground of desertion. Redford v. Redford, 162 Mo. App. 127, 144 S. W. 125.

⁴⁶ A statute authorizing a divorce for wilful or malicious desertion or absence of either party without a reasonable cause, for two years, was held in Lanier v. Lanier, 5 Heisk. 462, to warrant a divorce in favor of the husband, irrespective of his efforts for a reconciliation, where his wife left him without cause during a sickness, there being ground for suspicion on his part that his illness was due to poison administered by her.

The view was taken in Patterson v. Patterson, 45 Wash. 296, 88 Pac. 196, that a statute merely providing that "abandonment for one year" should be a cause for divorce did not require that a husband who was abandoned by his wife should make any effort to induce her to return, the court saying: "Whether or not this is a wise statute, and whether it would not be better to require the husband, after desertion by the wife, to make an earnest effort to secure her return before instituting divorce proceedings, and whether the question of the age of the parties and their situation should, or should not, accord the court some discretion in the premises, are questions that are not before us, but are matters that might pertinently be addressed to the attention of the legislature."

⁴⁷ Sterling v. Sterling, 71 N. J. Eq. 59, 63 Atl. 548; Taylor v. Taylor, 73 N. J. Eq. 745, 70 Atl. 323; Hunt v. Hunt, — N. J. Eq. —, 59 Atl. 642.

And where a husband who is told by his wife that she is about to leave him, invites her to remain with him, but never thereafter asks her to return or remonstrates with her for her continued absence, although he at all times knew where she was, he will be deemed to have acquiesced in her absence, and cannot successfully seek a decree of divorce upon the ground of 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

obstinate desertion. Payne v. Payne, — N. J. Eq. —, 28 Atl. 449.

⁴⁸ Wood v. Wood, 63 N. J. Eq. 688, 53 Atl. 51.

⁴⁹ Gunther v. Gunther, — N. J. Eq. —, 57 Atl. 1015.

⁵⁰ Although the wife's departure is unjustified, yet where it appears from the fact that he never asked her to return, and from other circumstances, that he passively acquiesced in the separation, he is not entitled to a divorce for desertion, under a statute defining desertion to be the voluntary separation of one of the married parties from the other, or the voluntary refusal to renew a suspended cohabitation without justification either in the consent or the wrongful conduct of the other. Droege v. Droege, 55 Mo. App. 482; Davis v. Davis, 60 Mo. App. 545.

In Twigg v. Twigg, 107 Md. 676, 69 Atl. 517, the court, in denying the husband a divorce for desertion, thus summarized the evidence: "So far as the plaintiff was concerned, the separation was regarded by him with entire complacency, a complacency so profound that he has been living in the same city with his wife and seven children for nearly four years, and has made absolutely no effort either to win her back, or to meet in any way the natural obligation under which he was and is to provide for and take care of his own flesh and blood."

⁵¹ Taylor v. Taylor, 28 N. J. Eq. 207, following Bowlby v. Bowlby, 25 N. J. Eq. 406, affirmed without additional opinion in 25 N. J. Eq. 570.

⁵² Smith v. Smith, 72 N. J. Eq. 5, 65 Atl. 986.

⁵³ Meier v. Meier, 68 N. J. Eq. 9, 59 Atl. 234.

⁵⁴ A husband who, not being blameless for the act, makes no effort to prevent his desertion by his wife, and appears to acquiesce in and be satisfied with its continuance, is not entitled to a divorce on the ground of desertion. Herold v. Herold, 47 N. J. Eq. 210, 9 L.R.A. 696, 20 Atl. 375.

guilty of desertion,⁵⁵ or cruelty,⁵⁶ or even where his conduct has been nothing more than overbearing and unkind,⁵⁷ or consisted only of threats,⁵⁸ he will be denied a divorce unless he takes proper steps to induce her to return, and to assure her of her future happiness in the home. This applies not only where the indignities to which he subjects the wife justify her in leaving the marital home, though not themselves constituting grounds for divorce,⁵⁹ but even where his treatment of her is merely a provoking cause of the separation, but not a justification therefor.⁶⁰ This rule, of course, applies where the wife leaves in obedience to his counsel,⁶¹ or where he excludes the wife from the home and forbids her to remain there,⁶² or because she cannot live peaceably with the members of his family in the household,⁶³ and even where the wife leaves the husband because of his misconduct and declares that she will not return, he cannot seize upon that declaration and make it a pretext for disposing of his home, so as to prevent her from returning, and then claim that he is entitled to a divorce.⁶⁴

⁵⁵ A husband who deserted his wife after his discharge from arrest for cruel treatment is in no position to claim that she is the deserter, where he never made any effort at reconciliation. Goldstein v. Goldstein, — N. J. Eq. —, 26 Atl. 862.

A husband who without cause deserts his wife cannot make her the deserter by showing that he requested her to come and reside with him, but must show that he in good faith offered her a home. Phelan v. Phelan, 135 Ill. 445, 25 N. E. 751; Paul v. Paul, 75 Ill. App. 383.

So, where the wife leaves the marital home under circumstances that more nearly tend to place him in the position of a deserter, he cannot, in turn, base an action of divorce for desertion upon her absence, without making an offer of reconciliation in good faith and with the appearance of sincerity. Spille v. Spille, 68 N. J. Eq. 647, 61 Atl. 742.

⁵⁶ And a husband will not be granted a divorce for desertion from the wife who left him because of his cruelty, and thereafter stated in response to a conciliatory letter of his that any attempt at reconciliation was useless, where thereafter he became satisfied with the separation, and admits that he did not care about her coming back. Grant v. Grant, 38 N. J. Eq. 502.

Where the wife leaves the husband by reason of his cruel and inhuman treatment, the separation is, so far as she is concerned, involuntary at its inception, and it does not thereafter become voluntary so as to constitute a ground of divorce, where he makes no effort at a reconciliation. Jakubke v. Jakubke, 125 Wis. 635, 104 N. W. 704.

A husband who by personal violence, gross language, and constant neglect, has driven the wife from his home, is not entitled to a divorce for desertion, where he has made no effort to induce her to return. Meldowney v. Meldowney, 27 N. J. Eq. 328.

⁵⁷ A husband whose wife leaves him because of his overbearing and unkind conduct is not entitled to a divorce upon the ground of desertion, unless he makes sincere and opportune concessions and advances to induce her return. Hall v. Hall, 59 N. J. Eq. 402, 45 Atl. 690, modified for further reasons in 60 N. J. Eq. 469, 46 Atl. 866.

⁵⁸ A divorce for wilful desertion will not be granted in favor of a husband whose wife left him because of threats superinduced by his belief that she took money in his possession, where, upon discovering that she did not take it, he took no steps to induce her return, or to assure her of her future happiness in the home, for in such circumstances the desertion is not wilful, but is deemed to have been with his consent. Ward v. Ward, 7 Penn. (Del.) 364, 75 Atl. 611.

A divorce from the wife upon the ground of obstinate desertion will not be granted where she leaves because of threatening language and conduct of the husband, and he, instead of seeking to induce her to return, publishes an advertisement stating that she has left him and warning the public against trusting her on his account. Rittenhouse v. Rittenhouse, 29 N. J. Eq. 274.

⁵⁹ Dwyer v. Dwyer, 16 Mo. App. 422.

⁶⁰ Cornish v. Cornish, 23 N. J. Eq. 208; Bowlby v. Bowlby, 25 N. J. Eq. 406, affirmed without additional opinion in 25 N. J. Eq. 570; Van Wart v. Van Wart, 57 N. J. Eq. 598, 41 Atl. 965; Loux v. Loux, 57 N. J. Eq. 561, 41 Atl. 358; Sarfaty v. Sarfaty, 59 N. J. Eq. 193, 45 Atl. 261.

⁶¹ A wife is not guilty of wilful desertion of her husband where she leaves the home upon what she regards as his counsel or consent, and he makes no effort to induce her to return; and it is immaterial whether or not she misunderstood his language, for it was his duty to invite her to return if he repented and desired her to return, or if he was misunderstood. Smithson v. Smithson, 7 Mackey, 227.

⁶² And a husband who excludes his wife from their home, and tells her she can no longer remain there, cannot convert her absence into a desertion by writing a cold and formal note which is more of a command than an invitation, that she return to his house, "which you have wilfully and without cause deserted," the letter containing an intimation of his purpose to institute proceedings for divorce if she neglected to comply with his request. Musgrave v. Musgrave, 185 Pa. 260, 39 Atl. 961.

⁶³ When a wife leaves her husband with the announcement that she cannot live with his mother, her departure does not become wilful and obstinate desertion until he makes a bona fide effort of reconciliation. Edwards v. Edwards, 69 N. J. Eq. 522, 61 Atl. 531.

⁶⁴ Gillinwaters v. Gillinwaters, 28 Mo. 60.

IV. *Duty of wife.*a. Separation not caused by her misconduct.

The duty of a deserted husband to induce the return of the wife does not devolve with all its rigor upon a deserted wife,⁶⁵ and although a divorce will not be decreed to the wife merely upon evidence that the husband went away and lived apart from her,⁶⁶ a deserted wife is not bound to hunt for the husband, or to go to the place to which he has fled.⁶⁷ And no duty devolves upon her to seek the return of an absent husband, who deserted her without reason on his part or fault on hers,⁶⁸ or who left with her consent to obtain employment, but failed in any way to contribute to her support on account of his drunkenness.⁶⁹ Indeed, the position has been taken that where the husband's desertion is wilful and without cause, the wife may be found entitled to a divorce although she ignored his indefinite and obviously insincere letters touching upon an ultimate resumption of the marital relation.⁷⁰ So, where he deserts her after making her life miserable in pursuance of an avowed purpose, she is relieved of the necessity of making an effort to terminate the separation,⁷¹ for if by his conduct he has alienated her affections, and given her good cause to dislike him, and to have no desire to live with him, he cannot take advantage of her feelings to excuse himself for the continued desertion, without any serious and honest effort to terminate it.⁷²

But where the husband's departure does not constitute desertion in the first instance,⁷³ as in the case of an enforced separation because of the wife's ill health,⁷⁴ his absence does not become desertion until the wife in good faith demands a resumption of the marital relationship. So, where, so far from attempting to effect a reconciliation, a wife is prosecuting a suit for divorce on the ground of adultery, she cannot maintain that the separation during the pendency of such suit was obstinate on the part of the husband as that term is used with reference to desertion as a ground for divorce.⁷⁵

And while a wife is not justified in leaving merely because of quarrels with the husband,⁷⁶ nor relieved of the duty to seek a reconciliation merely because to some extent their financial circumstances were reduced by his dissipated habits,⁷⁷ where she leaves the husband because of intoxication, cruelty, and other misconduct of such a character that he is deemed the deserter, a divorce will be granted her, unless during the statutory period of desertion he reforms with her knowledge.⁷⁸ Indeed, it has even been held that where the separation is due to the cruelty and drunkenness of the husband, it is his duty to reform his habits, and after such reformation within the statutory period, to seek out the wife and urge her to return, giving her reasonable assurances of his sincerity, of his reformation, and of her probable safety in resuming the marital relation,⁷⁹ although it is otherwise where it appears that the wife failed to keep him informed as to her whereabouts, and otherwise apparently acquiesced in the separation without regard to whether he had reformed or not.⁸⁰ Where her acquiescence in his continued absence is superinduced by a reasonable belief that if he should return, he would, notwithstanding

⁶⁵ McVickar v. McVickar, 46 N. J. Eq. 490, 19 Am. St. Rep. 422, 19 Atl. 249; Wilson v. Wilson, 66 N. J. Eq. 237, 57 Atl. 552.

⁶⁶ Cook v. Cook, 13 N. J. Eq. 263.

⁶⁷ Millowitsch v. Millowitsch, 44 Ill. App. 357.

⁶⁸ Sargent v. Sargent, 36 N. J. Eq. 644.

⁶⁹ Coe v. Coe, 68 N. J. Eq. 157, 59 Atl. 1059.

⁷⁰ Gordon v. Gordon, 208 Pa. 186, 57 Atl. 525.

⁷¹ Martin v. Martin, 78 N. J. Eq. 423, 79 Atl. 261.

⁷² Smith v. Smith, 55 N. J. Eq. 222, 37 Atl. 49.

⁷³ Provost v. Provost, 71 N. J. Eq. 204, 63 Atl. 619.

⁷⁴ An enforced separation because of the wife's ill health does not become desertion on the part of the husband, where, convalescent, she makes no offer to return, after having been compelled to refuse compliance with his request that she do so, because made before her recovery. Keech v. Keech, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 641, 38 L. J. Prob. N. S. 7, 19 L. T. N. S. 462. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

⁷⁵ Chipchase v. Chipchase, — N. J. Eq. —, 22 Atl. 588 affirmed without additional opinion in 49 N. J. Eq. 594, 26 Atl. 468.

⁷⁶ A wife is not justified in leaving the marital home merely because of quarrels with the husband; and when she does so, she cannot assert that there is a desertion on his part, where she never offers to return; and her duty to make the offer is not affected by his removal to a foreign country, it not appearing that the place of his residence was unknown to her. Edwards v. Edwards, 20 Grant, Ch. (U. C.) 392.

⁷⁷ Provost v. Provost, 71 N. J. Eq. 204, 63 Atl. 619.

⁷⁸ McVickar v. McVickar, 46 N. J. Eq. 490, 19 Am. St. Rep. 422, 19 Atl. 249.

⁷⁹ Jerolaman v. Jerolaman, — N. J. Eq. —, 54 Atl. 166; Lister v. Lister, 65 N. J. Eq. 109, 55 Atl. 1093, affirmed without additional opinion in 66 N. J. Eq. 434, 57 Atl. 1132.

⁸⁰ But the wife cannot escape the consequences of her failure to notify the husband that she would come to him if he would reform, upon the ground that she did not her efforts to effect his reformation, resume his course of objectionable conduct, she will not be denied a divorce;⁸¹ nor is her right to relief affected by the fact that she made an offer to live with him conditional upon his giving up his habits of intemperance and gambling, at least where it appears that at the time of the offer he was living in adultery and stated that he had given up his wife.⁸²

b. Effect of wife's consent or misconduct.

Although, as stated in the last subdivision, the duty of the deserted wife to invite her husband to return is not measured by the rule which is applied to the case of a deserted husband, reason and justice make it at least her duty, when her husband has been absent from her for years pursuant to their express and mutual agreement, plainly to signify to him when it is possible for her to do so, that she withdraws from that agreement, before his absence will become an obstinate desertion.⁸³ It is fatal to the wife's application for divorce upon the ground of desertion, that she has consented to the separation either by way of a mutual agreement,⁸⁴ or by implication arising from the fact that she, without objection, permitted him to leave for a trifling cause;⁸⁵ and this is especially true where, in pursuance of an antenuptial agreement, the parties have never lived together.⁸⁶

Likewise the wife's failure to make any effort towards reconciliation disentitles her to a divorce where she refused to follow the husband when he left because of trouble with members of her family;⁸⁷ or where she voluntarily absented herself and subjected the husband to groundless charges;⁸⁸ or where he abandoned her after being arrested upon her complaint and discharged from the charge.⁸⁹

L. A. W.

know whether or not he had reformed, where he left her with her approval to find employment after he had lost his position because of drunkenness, and she failed to keep him informed as to her whereabouts, and otherwise apparently acquiesced in the separation without regard to whether he had reformed or not. Grover v. Grover, 63 N. J. Eq. 771, 50 Atl. 1051.

⁸¹ Wilson v. Wilson, 66 N. J. Eq. 237, 57 Atl. 552.

⁸² Gibson v. Gibson, 29 L. J. Prob. N. S. 25.

⁸³ Costill v. Costill, 47 N. J. Eq. 346, 21 Atl. 35.

⁸⁴ King v. King, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 33.

A wife is not entitled to a divorce upon the ground of abandonment and failure to support, where the parties separated and remained apart by mutual consent, neither making any effort at reconciliation, and the husband never having been requested to contribute to the support of his family, and never having refused to make such provision. Barnett v. Barnett, 27 Ind. App. 466, 61 N. E. 737.

Ingersoll v. Ingersoll, 49 Pa. 249, 88 Am. Dec. 500, holds merely that separation by mutual agreement, made necessary by the husband's thriftlessness, does not of itself constitute wilful and malicious desertion on his part, although he failed to provide for his wife or to answer her letters.

⁸⁵ And where the husband leaves as the result of a quarrel, and without objection on the part of the wife, his desertion will not be deemed obstinate so as to entitle her to a divorce, where, although she sees him often, she neither by word or act indicates that she is willing that he shall return. Kipp v. Kipp, 77 N. J. Eq. 585, 78 Atl. 682.

⁸⁶ Where, in pursuance of an antenuptial agreement, the parties lived separately, the husband cannot be deemed to have abandoned or deserted her so as to entitle her to a decree of separation, where she has made no attempt to require him to live with her. Dennison v. Dennison, 52 Misc. 37, 102 N. Y. Supp. 621.

³⁹ L.R.A. (N.S.)

Where the parties intermarry clandestinely without any intention of establishing a matrimonial domicile, and on an agreement to live separately for the present, the separate living of the husband will not be a desertion of the wife until she repudiates the agreement for separate living by offering to live with him, and demands that he should provide for their living together; and a demand by the wife that the husband should support her will not be sufficient unless accompanied by a bona fide offer to live with him. McAllister v. McAllister, 71 N. J. Eq. 13, 62 Atl. 1131.

Where it appears that the parties separated temporarily and by mutual consent the day following the marriage, and that shortly thereafter the wife came to the locus fori with the avowed purpose of acquiring a residence in order to get a divorce, and has remained steadfast to that purpose, it is clear that the separation was not against her will and she will not be granted a divorce. McGean v. McGean, 63 N. J. Eq. 285, 49 Atl. 1083.

⁸⁷ The wife will not be granted a divorce for desertion by her husband, who, upon being upbraided by her father, left the home with the request that she accompany him, with which she refused to conform, where she has never offered to live with him or expressed her willingness to do so. Mayer v. Mayer, 30 N. J. Eq. 411.

⁸⁸ A wife who voluntarily absents herself from the marital home for a number of years, and subjects her husband to suits upon groundless charges, cannot, merely because he refused to let her stay in the home, upon her sudden appearance there with friends, have a decree of separate maintenance upon the ground of their living apart "without her fault," unless the manner of her return was of a conciliatory nature and not inconsistent with the possibility that she came to resume the marital relation. Jenkins v. Jenkins, 104 Ill. 134.

⁸⁹ A wife whose husband abandoned her after his discharge from arrest upon her complaint for cruel treatment will not be granted a divorce for desertion, where it appears that the separation was quite to her liking, and she never made any effort at reconciliation. Goldstein v. Goldstein, — N. J. Eq. —, 26 Atl. 862.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

MAGGIE ROGERS McCLINTOCK, Appt.,
v.

J. D. McCLINTOCK.

(147 Ky. 409, 144 S. W. 68.)

Venue — divorce — residence of wife.

1. A wife who has separated from her husband and gone to the home of a relative to live, with the intention of making it her home, establishes there a residence so as to give the courts of the county jurisdiction of a suit by her for divorce.

Divorce — separation — grounds — impairing health.

2. Under a statute permitting the court to grant a separation for such cause as, in its discretion, it may deem sufficient, one may be granted with separate maintenance to a wife whose husband has treated her with indifference and neglect, and said and done things in the presence of strangers to annoy and humiliate her, has exhibited rage towards her without cause, and told her they must separate, the effect of which has been to make her ill.

Same — alimony — amount.

3. $100 per month may be awarded to a wife as support, upon granting her a separation from her husband, with the custody and care of her infant child, where he is worth from $20,000 to $40,000, and has an income from his business of from $2,000 to $3,000.

(March 7, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Fayette County, dismissing her petition, and denying her any relief whatever in a suit for divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Note. — No other cases have been found which deal with the question whether the mere fact that a spouse insisted upon a separation, apart from other acts or statements, constitutes cruelty within the divorce law.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. George C. Webb and Talbot & Whitley, for appellant:

There can be no doubt about the jurisdiction of the Fayette circuit court to try and determine plaintiff's case.

Gooding v. Gooding, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 967, 42 S. W. 1123; Johnson v. Johnson, 12 Bush, 487; Hall v. Hall, 102 Ky. 299, 43 S. W. 429.

The mother, when a suitable person, is the proper one to have charge of the child.

Irwin v. Irwin, 105 Ky. 636, 49 S. W. 432, 96 Ky. 320, 28 S. W. 664, 30 S. W. 417; Thiesing v. Thiesing, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 115, 26 S. W. 718; Adams v. Adams, 1 Duv. 169; Baker v. Baker, 27 Ky. L. Rep. 535, 85 S. W. 729.

Allowance for the support and maintenance of the appellant and her child should be granted.

Tuggles v. Tuggles, 17 Ky. L. Rep. 221, 30 S. W. 875; Tilton v. Tilton, 16 Ky. L. Rep. 539, 29 S. W. 290; Pore v. Pore, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 1981, 50 S. W. 681.

Mr. Maury Kemper also for appellant.

Messrs. Allen & Duncan and Denis Dundon for appellee.

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appellant and appellee were married in July, 1906, and separated in August, 1909. Shortly after the separation she instituted a suit for divorce a mensa et thoro, on the statutory grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment. The answer is a traverse. Much proof was taken, covering practically all of the married life of the litigants, and upon final submission the chancellor dismissed the petition, and denied plaintiff any relief whatever. She appeals.

In the lower court the point was made that the Fayette circuit court had no jurisdiction to try and determine the case. The evidence shows that when appellant left her husband's home in Paris, Bourbon county, she went out to the home of a relative near that city, and a few days later went to Lexington to the home of another relative. Shortly thereafter she brought this suit in Fayette county. She had no home of her own to go to, and had to decide where she wanted to live. It was purely a matter of election on her part, and, as said by this court in Gooding v. Gooding, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 967, 42 S. W. 1123, "the intention of the party and fact of location at any point make the residence." It is conceded that, had she rented premises in Lexington and gone to housekeeping, under the authority of the Gooding Case, her residence would have been established in Fayette county; but that, because she stopped with a relative, a different rule should apply. This reasoning is not sound. One may have a residence in a boarding house as well as in a rented building or property owned outright. The question is not how she lived, but had she determined to make Lexington her home? In her petition she says that she had, and the best evidence of such determination on her part we find in her going there and declaring when she filed her suit that it was her home. The trial court correctly so held. While denying the plaintiff any relief whatever, the chancellor in his judgment awarded to her the custody of their eighteen-months-old child, and directed that her husband should pay monthly for the support of herself and her child, during this litigation, $62.50 per month; but made no provision for the support of either the appellant or the child after the termination of this litigation. The judgment giving to the wife the custody of the child was eminently proper, and the provision made for its father to see it at stated intervals and to have the custody of it on certain days of the week was fair and reasonable to both parties. The child is still in the custody of the court; and, although no order has been made by the court for its support by its father after the termination of this litigation, the chancellor would have ample power to make such further order from time to time as its needs and condition required.

The question whether an effort by one spouse to induce the other to return home is a condition of desertion by the latter is treated in the note to Hill v. Hill ante, 1118. In that note also will be found references to other notes on analogous questions.

The real question raised upon this appeal was the correctness of the chancellor's ruling in dismissing plaintiff's petition. Under our rule of evidence, allowing neither husband nor wife to testify in divorce proceedings, it frequently happens that no accurate insight into their home life can be obtained, and we are furnished but fragmentary or broken bits of evidence of their marital woes. This record presents such a case. Appellee, at the date of their marriage, was past fifty years of age. Appellant was about twenty-five. His habits in life were fixed. Hers were in the formative period. He was a man of the world, of large business experience. She was raised in the country, and was apparently younger in experience than in years. He was a shrewd, cool, calculating, methodical business man; she, an unsophisticated country girl. She was of a very affectionate disposition; he not at all demonstrative. Shortly after their marriage she was taken sick of a trouble peculiar to women, and it became necessary for her to submit to a surgical operation a few months after their marriage. She remained at the hospital in Lexington for some weeks and until she was apparently relieved of the trouble. About a year after her return home a girl baby was born to them. The record furnishes but little evidence of their home life during the interval between her return from the hospital and the birth of their child. Some difference arose between them as to the proper method of raising the child. Appellee did not think that his wife's milk was sufficiently nourishing. She insisted that it was and wanted to nurse her baby, and was opposed to raising it on a bottle. After some considerable trouble over the matter, she was permitted to have her way. But this difference was evidently not regarded by her as of a serious nature, because in the spring of 1908, when she went on a visit to some of her people in St. Paul, Minnesota, she wrote frequent letters to her husband, and from the tone thereof it is apparent that she entertained none other than the kindest of feelings towards him. All of these letters are filled with terms of endearment, and manifest beyond question that she was entertaining no feeling of resentment toward her husband for his trying to make her wean her baby or raise it by hand.

She was a member of the Christian Church before they were married, and it appears that, during a revival in the Christian Church in Paris in the winter of 1908 and 1909, at the earnest solicitation of John McClintock, a brother of appellee, she put her letter in that church, and, while she made no secret at her home of her intention so to do, and discussed the matter with her brother-in-law, Mr. McClintock, in the presence of her husband, it is reasonably apparent that her husband did not know she had done so, and did not discover this fact until the latter part of February or early in March, 1909. His attention was drawn sharply to this fact by a request on the part of his wife that he pay her dues to the church, then amounting to some $12 or $13. He became very much offended on account of his wife's having put her letter in the church without notifying him, and worked himself up into such a rage over it that it was necessary to send for and have a doctor minister to him in order to quiet his nerves. At that time, and while he was in what the witnesses term a "tantrum," he notified his wife that there would have to be a separation. Insisting that she had done no wrong in transferring her membership from the country church to the city church of the same faith, and that he was wholly unjustified in treating her in the way and manner in which he was on account of it, she nevertheless pleaded with him not to carry out his intention of separating from her, and urged that, even though he had no regard for her, he should not do so on account of their child. He left the home on that night, and did not return for two days. According to the testimony of the witnesses, when he did return, he still said that a separation would be necessary and insisted that it should take place, and wanted to arrange to have one of his wife's relatives make proper division of his estate among himself, his wife, and their child. He was a member of the First Presbyterian Church, which, at that time, however, was not holding services regularly. From that time until their separation it is apparent that the home life of Mrs. McClintock was very unhappy. Mr. McClintock was engaged in looking after his business affairs. He would eat his breakfast in the morning, go downtown, returning at noon for his lunch, when he would again leave, and not return until time for dinner in the evening, and after dinner it was his custom to go back downtown and remain there until 9 or 10 o'clock. His wife spent practically all of her time at home with her baby. She saw little of her husband. He paid but little attention to her. The servant testifies that many times she found her in tears, and that this was particularly true during the two latter months of her stay at her husband's home, when she cried most every day. The latter part of June, or early in July, the baby was taken sick with summer complaint and whooping cough. Dr. Vansant was called upon to treat her. Mrs. McClintock did not think that the child was improving under this treatment, and became dissatisfied with it, and wanted another doctor. Her mother had a prescription which she had used successfully in the treatment of her own family and others for whooping cough, and she wanted it filled and the child given some of that medicine. It thereupon resulted that, on account of the anxiety of each parent for the health and welfare of their child, another quarrel was brought on, and again he notified his wife that they would have to separate; that, while he had sought to avoid it, he found it to be necessary. At that time she was in a highly nervous condition, due to the return of the old trouble for which she had been treated at the hospital prior to the birth of her child, and the worry incident to its present sickness, and, following this quarrel with her husband and the announcement on his part that there would have to be a separation, she was taken down sick and remained in bed under the care of a physician and a nurse for some eight or ten days. During this illness her husband paid no attention to her whatever, did not go to her room or manifest any interest in her further than to inquire of the nurse how she was. When she had practically recovered from this illness, she notified her brother, living in the Northwest, of the trouble she was having with her husband, and he came on to render such assistance as he could. He called upon her husband for an explanation of his conduct, and asked him why he had notified his wife that there would have to be a separation. Appellee at first denied having made the statement, but, when confronted by his wife with the charge that he had, he admitted that he had lost control of his temper, and did not know what he did say. He made no effort whatever to effect a reconciliation with his wife and offered no explanation, further than that he had lost his temper, for the way and manner in which he had treated her. Shortly thereafter she took her baby and left his home, and thus the separation, which he had declared in February or March was necessary, was brought about.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

He insists that the whole trouble was due to the presence in his home of his wife's mother a good part of the time, and her sister on two or three occasions, and perhaps a dissipated brother, who visited them on one occasion for a few weeks. There is no foundation in fact for this charge. The record shows that there was never the slightest disagreement or unpleasantness between Mr. McClintock and either Mrs. Rogers, his mother-in-law, or her sister, Miss Rogers. The relation between them at all times was cordial. It is in proof that he insisted on Mrs. Rogers making her home with them, and Miss Rogers was there for the purpose of assisting his wife with sewing for his wife and her baby. Nothing occurred to mar the pleasantness of the family relations during the period that they were visited by his brother-in-law, although it is shown that during his stay there he was frequently intoxicated, and Mr. McClintock would have to go out and bring him in, much to their mortification, though he did not complain to the family or anyone else, so far as the record shows, or blame his wife on account of the trouble they were having or humiliation they were being put to because of her dissipated brother. The whole trouble, as appears from this record, is that Mr. McClintock, prior to his marriage, had become so fixed in his ways and habits of living, and had been so accustomed to doing as he pleased, that he found it difficult to accommodate himself to the changed condition, and he was wholly lacking in appreciation of the duties which the marriage state imposed upon him. Instead of treating his wife like a helpmate or companion, he seemed to look upon her as a tool or piece of machinery, brought into the house to add to his further pleasure. Many illustrations are given in the record evidencing this lack of appreciation of the duties he owed to his wife. Instead of trying to please her, he was given to saying things and doing things in the presence of visitors that were calculated to greatly annoy and embarrass her. When she traded with merchants who were not customers of his in his business, he threatened to advertise her if she did not quit. When she used the long-distance telephone in an emergency call to talk to a lady friend in Lexington who had been very nice to her, he notified her that, if she did not stop it, he would take out the telephone. And just a short time before the separation, when she was sitting on their porch, in the presence of two neighbor women, he asked her if she had given their child the medicine, as directed. She stated that she had not, because the child had been asleep most of the time; and in a very unkind, fault-finding tone, he said: "About as I expected;" and then stated that he would have to get a trained nurse to attend to the wants of his child.

Although finding fault with her because she had transferred her membership to her own church without consulting him, there is not a line of evidence that during the three years of their married life he ever accompanied her to church or offered to accompany her to church, either to his or to her church. His lady acquaintances called upon them after their marriage, and appellant wished to return the calls of some of them who lived too far away for her to walk conveniently. It is in proof that he declined to furnish her a means of conveyance in order that she might return these calls; nor was he willing to share even a part of this expense, although it is shown that he is worth from $20,000 to $40,000 and had a good business that produced annually from $2,000 to $3,000 besides. Frequently she wanted money, and his response to her would be that she did not have sense enough to spend money intelligently, and, when he did give her any, he did it apparently begrudgingly. During the whole and particularly the latter part of their married life, according to the record, he was dogmatic, domineering, and dictatorial in his treatment of her, and, while he furnished her a good home, suitable provisions, necessary clothing, and the service of servants when required, he seemed utterly oblivious of the fact that the one thing needed by his wife to make her supremely happy was withheld from her. She wanted some manifestation, some evidence, that he loved and cared for her. She wanted to feel that she was more to him than the dogs of his kennel, or his moneys in the bank, or his interests in the many businesses conducted by him. These essentials to her happiness were wholly lacking; and it is not surprising that when, for the second time, he told her there would have to be a separation, she acceded to his demands, accepted the inevitable, and left him.

We have carefully searched the record, and find no evidence of any wrongdoing whatever upon her part. When her baby was to be born, she went to an infirmary, away from him, alone, to pass through that trying ordeal. She returned to him as soon as she was able to do so, and from that time on she was a dutiful, loving wife. She wanted to raise her baby herself, as every true mother wants to do. She was opposed to raising it by hand as he wanted her to do, and surely this desire on her part furnished to her husband no just ground of complaint. The transfer of her letter from the country church to the city church should have been pleasing to him rather than otherwise, for his brother was a pillar in that church, and he seems fond of his brother. Since he had not been accompanying his wife to church, either to his own or to hers, the reason he gives for wanting to know when she was going to put her letter in the church is not satisfactory. And since no complaint was made until she was called upon to pay her church dues, we are forcibly impressed with the idea that he opposed the transfer of membership in order to avoid the expense. But, whatever his reasons for objecting may have been, the conduct of his wife furnished him no ground of complaint.

And, lastly, coming down to the trouble that culminated in her leaving home, she did nothing which any fond and considerate mother might not do. The medicine which Dr. Vansant was giving was doing the child no good. She was with it day and night, watching over it, and knew much better than her husband the effect the medicine was having upon it, and she wanted a change; and instead of finding fault with her for wanting a change, he should have joined her in welcoming any suggestion that would look toward the improvement of the child. Instead, however, of sympathizing with his wife in her distress over its sickness, we find him flying into a rage and declaring that nothing short of a separation would satisfy him.

The question that presents itself is, To what extent must a wife submit to indignities of this character? How far shall her feelings be outraged because of the ungovernable, uncontrollable temper of her husband? Will the law afford her no relief, or must she silently submit to this character of treatment until he actually physically ejects her from his home? She is not seeking an absolute divorce, but merely a separate maintenance. Section 2121 of the Kentucky Statutes provides, in part, that "judgment for separation or divorce from bed and board may also be rendered for any of the causes which allow divorce, or for such other cause as the court in its discretion may deem sufficient." In Freeman v. Freeman, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 824, 13 S. W. 247, and again in Zumbiel v. Zumbiel, 113 Ky. 841, 69 S. W. 708, this statute was construed. In the former case, in speaking of the power of the court, it is said: "It is plain, however, from the language of the statute, that he is not restricted to the statutory grounds which authorize an absolute divorce. Before the adoption of our statutes the law gave to the wife, upon sufficient grounds, the right to a decree of separation and alimony, although no legal cause for divorce existed." And in the latter case the court said: "It is to be observed that the circuit court is not restricted to the statutory causes for granting divorces a vinculo matrimonii in granting divorce from bed and board. He may, in his discretion, grant the latter separation for a less cause than those enumerated in the statute. Section 2117. But, as said in Shrock v. Shrock, 4 Bush, 684: 'Of course, the discretion thus conferred is not to be understood as arbitrary or unlimited, but a sound legal discretion, and only to be exercised for such causes as may be deemed sufficient, when considered with a just and reasonable regard to the legal rights and obligations of both parties.'" In Reinhard v. Reinhard, 96 Wis. 555, 65 Am. St. Rep. 66, 71 N. W. 803, the court had under consideration the right of a wife to a divorce from her husband on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. It was shown in that case that they lived in the same house, ate at the same table the food prepared by her, and that frequently he failed to speak to her except in an unkind manner for as much as three months at a time. The court held that the wife was entitled to the decree, and in the course of the opinion said: "Marriage implies companionship, and is supposed to be based upon mutual regard and affection. For a husband and wife to live and sleep in the same house, and eat at the same table food prepared by the wife, without the husband speaking to the wife, except in anger, for a period of three months at a time, must have been, at least, very disagreeable, if not unbearable. That such was the fact does not seem to be very seriously disputed. It certainly evinced abnormal affections, persistent wantonness, and deliberate perversity. The effect of such conduct upon a nervous, sensitive woman can better be imagined than described, and may have seriously impaired the plaintiff's health, as found by the court. This court has repeatedly held that personal violence, whether actual or threatened, or even gross and abusive language, is not absolutely essential to constitute cruel and inhuman treatment." In Robinson v. Robinson, 66 N. H. 600, 15 L.R.A. 121, 49 Am. St. Rep. 632, 23 Atl. 362, a divorce was sought upon the ground of cruelty, and "treatment endangering reason or injuring health," as authorized by the statute. It appears that in that case the parties were married and lived happily together for two years, when the wife became interested in Christian Science, attended lectures, took a course of instruction, and subsequently received the degree of Doctor of Christian Science. She began and continued to practise as such doctor. Her husband did not believe in the doctrine, and had no sympathy with his wife in her advocacy of or practice under it. He did not object to her believing in it, but was opposed to her practising it, because it exposed him to ridicule and injured his business as a druggist; and he requested his wife to give it up. She refused to do so and a separation resulted. Thereafter he sought to bring about a reconciliation and induce his wife to return to him, making as a basis of such proposition, however, that she give up the practice of Christian Science. This she declined to do. The court found that the only ground for difference between them rested in her determination to practise this doctrine, in which she was a firm believer. In disposing of the question the court said: "Whether one party has been so treated by the other as seriously to injure health or endanger reason is a pure question of fact. It cannot be declared as matter of law that any particular treatment may not have that effect. The gist of these causes of divorce is the injury to health and the danger to reason. Conduct which to a serious extent produces either, though not intended to have such a result, . . . is a cause of divorce." We have no such statute as that upon which the judgment in the case quoted from was rested. But the provision of the Kentucky statute is even broader, in that it authorizes the chancellor, in the exercise of his discretion, to grant to the wife a separate maintenance where, from the evidence, it appears that the best interests of the parties require it, even though a cause for absolute divorce may not have been made out.

In Gardner v. Gardner, 104 Tenn. 410, 78 Am. St. Rep. 924, 58 S. W. 342, the court, in considering the plaintiff's rights under a statute very similar to ours, said: "It is now well settled by this court that cruel and inhuman treatment within the meaning of the statute is not confined to acts of personal violence, but includes such treatment as endangers the wife's health and renders cohabitation intolerable." The ground upon which the divorce was sought there was excessive intercourse. In Cole v. Cole, 23 Iowa, 433, a divorce was sought on the ground of cruel and inhuman treatment. In the course of the opinion the court said: "If the conduct is marked with cruelty, if it is cruel and unfeeling, indicating an absence of that kindness and tenderness that belongs to a human being, it is sufficient, if it endangers life." In that state the statute authorized a divorce for cruel and inhuman treatment endangering life, and in the case under consideration it was insisted that any treatment which merely showed an injury to health would not authorize a divorce under this statute. But the court, in further considering the question, said: "It is true that not every fancied or real wrong which may for a while render unpleasant the complainant's life or subject her to momentary pain or temporary illness would amount to legal cruelty. But if the act involves—that is, if it is connected by natural consequences or effects with—the health, not for a moment, not temporarily, but to its actual and real prejudice, it amounts to legal cruelty." In Reed v. Reed, 4 Nev. 395, the court used this language: "There may be extreme cruelty without the slightest violence. The happiness of a life may be destroyed by a course of conduct which could furnish no ground for apprehending bodily harm or injury. . . . In our judgment it is the effect and probable consequence of the misconduct complained of which should control the actions of the courts more than anything else. Hence, if it appear probable that the life of one of the parties is rendered miserable by any character of misconduct on the part of the other, although no personal violence be apprehended, or if there be reason to apprehend bodily harm if the marriage relations be continued, the separation should be decreed." In Glass v. Wynn, 76 Ga. 319, in defining legal cruelty, the court uses this language: "Mental anguish, wounded feelings, constantly aggravated by repeated insults and neglect, are as bad as actual bruises of the person; and that which produces the one is not more cruel than that which causes the other." In Myrick v. Myrick, 67 Ga. 771, after reviewing at length the facts of the various cases under which 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a divorce was authorized on the ground of cruel treatment, the court says: "Thus, if the husband, by neglect and indifference, or by studied acts of insult and wrong practised upon the wife, that have an open and manifest tendency to degrade the wife in her social position, to render her life miserable and unhappy, to make her life intolerable, and her intercourse with her husband a source of pain and suffering rather than of pleasure and happiness, although no personal violence is done or threatened, in all such cases a divorce should be granted." In Rosenfeld v. Rosenfeld, 21 Colo. 16, 40 Pac. 49, the court said: "The law does not require that acts of cruelty authorizing a divorce should show that it was absolutely impossible for the parties to live together as husband and wife. Extreme cruelty, under our statute, may consist of words and of personal treatment and conduct short of acts of personal or physical violence." And in Marks v. Marks, 62 Minn. 212, 64 N. W. 561, it is held that "a systematic course of ill-treatment, consisting of continual scolding and fault-finding, using unkind language, studied contempt, and many other petty acts of a malicious nature, may, when sufficiently long continued, and when producing sufficiently serious results, constitute cruel and inhuman treatment."

Upon the current weight of authority, it may be said that any conduct on the part of the husband or wife which is calculated to seriously impair the health or permanently destroy the happiness of the other is sufficient ground to justify an absolute divorce; and that a divorce from bed and board will be granted upon grounds insufficient to support a decree of absolute divorce. In either case the object of the court is not to punish the offender, but to protect the unfortunate; and while a decree should never be granted upon slight differences, which are likely to arise from time to time in the best of well-regulated families, it should not be denied when it is made clearly to appear that the conduct of the offending party is such that to continue the marital relation would either permanently destroy the happiness or ruin the health of the other.

In the case at bar it cannot be doubted that the declaration on the part of the husband in the early spring that there would have to be a separation had a very serious and injurious effect upon the life and health of his wife, for, according to the testimony of his servant, who was a most unwilling witness upon this point, appellant spent much of her time in tears thereafter. And while she bore her sorrow in silence and with becoming fortitude, this cruel, inexcusable, and uncalled-for declaration on the part of her husband undoubtedly caused her great mental distress and suffering, and, when it was repeated in August, it so unnerved, unstrung, and affected her that she become very sick, and was for some time under the care of a physician.

If appellant had done anything in any way to justify this treatment on the part of her husband, the record fails to disclose it. In all of the testimony that he has produced there is not even an intimation that she was not at all times a kind, affectionate, loving, and dutiful wife. Physically weak and nervous, this conduct on his part had a very injurious effect upon her health. She did not want a separation. She did everything that a woman could reasonably be expected to do to avoid it, and only finally yielded to this expressed desire of her husband when she was satisfied that it could not be avoided. To deny her any relief under such circumstances would be both inequitable and unjust. If the conduct of her husband has made life so intolerable in his home that she can no longer remain there without endangering her health and destroying permanently her peace and happiness, he should be required to support her elsewhere; and the chancellor, in the exercise of his discretion, should have so directed.

The evidence shows that appellee is worth from $20,000 to $40,000, and has an income of from $2,000 to $3,000. His wife has nothing. The court properly awarded her the custody of her child. It must be supported. The provision which the chancellor made is not sufficient, taking into consideration his financial condition and standing in life. He should have allowed her at least $100 a month for the support of herself and child; and this sum may be increased as the child grows older and its wants and necessities for clothing, schooling, etc., require the expenditure of additional sums, or it may be reduced if the circumstances of the parties require it. The judgment is reversed and cause remanded, with instructions to the chancellor to enter a judgment granting to appellant the relief sought; to wit, a divorce from bed and board and a separate maintenance, which he will fix in his order for the present at $100 per month, to be paid upon the first of each and every month.

Petition for rehearing denied.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

FRANCIS X. LAFLAMME

v.

MARY H. LAFLAMME.

(210 Mass. 156, 96 N. E. 62.)

Divorce — desertion — renewal of cohabitation — effect.

Under a statute permitting divorce for desertion for three years next preceding the filing of the libel, renewal of cohabitation as man and wife, even for four days after the three years have expired, removes the cause of divorce, which is not revived by renewed desertion at the expiration of the four days.

(October 17, 1911.)

REPORT by the Superior Court for Worcester County for the opinion of the Supreme Judicial Court, after a ruling against libellant, of a proceeding to secure a divorce on the ground of desertion. Libel dismissed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. W. Williams and S. D. Vincent for libellant.

No appearance for libellee.

Sheldon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We must take it that no difficulty arose in this case under the provisions of Rev. Laws, chap. 152, §§ 4, 6. The only question is whether, upon the findings of the judge, it ought to be ruled as matter of law that the libel cannot be maintained. We are of opinion that this ruling properly was made.

It is true, as was argued in behalf of the appellant, that in December, 1909, he had become entitled to a divorce from his wife on the ground of her desertion. Cargill v. Cargill, 1 Swabey & T. 235. He did not, however, attempt to avail himself of this right, but visited her at the house in which she was living, at Milford, in this common-

Note. — Divorce: condonation of desertion.

The Oregon court takes the position that a case of desertion is not a proper one for the application of the rule that the subsequent cohabitation is upon an implied or express understanding that the offender, in seeking a renewal of the marriage relation, is acting in good faith, and is promising not to repeat the offense, so that when a breach of this condition occurs, the former offense is revived. "This," says the court, "in general terms, is the law of condonation, applicable to a cause of action for divorce arising out of a specific or single act, such as cruelty or adultery. But desertion, for which a divorce will be granted, is a breach wealth, and remained there with her for about four days. During this period, it is found that "they cohabited together as man and wife." This was a complete renewal in all respects of the marriage relation between them. It was not simply that they occupied the same room and bed, although this also was found. Accordingly we need not consider whether the latter fact alone, unexplained, would not import as a necessary inference the complete cohabitation as man and wife which has been found. The wife's desertion ceased and he again received her as his wife when they thus resumed the matrimonial relations that had been interrupted in 1906 by her desertion. If afterwards, no matter how soon, she deserted him anew, this was merely a new act of matrimonial duty, accompanied by an intent to desert in the mind of the offender, concurrently existing in uninterrupted combination during at least the entire statutory period of one year, and until the entry of a decree. . . . It must be a continuous, unbroken desertion. Two periods of desertion cannot be added together for the purpose of making up the time required by the statute." Luper v. Luper, — Or. —, 96 Pac. 1099. A like result is reached in Burk v. Burk, 21 W. Va. 445 (in which it appeared that the husband cohabited with his wife for the greater part of the statutory period before instituting the suit); and Tracey v. Tracey, — N. J. Eq. —, 43 Atl. 713.

And it has been declared by the English courts that as soon as there is a resumption of cohabitation, the previous desertion is blotted out. Williams v. Williams [1904] P. 145, 73 L. J. Prob. N. S. 31, 68 J. P. 188, 90 L. T. N. S. 174, 23 Times L. R. 213; Ex parte Aldridge, 1 Swabey & T. 88.

So, it is held that where the husband makes the absent wife occasional visits, and at times remains overnight, and occupies the same bed with her, the continuity of her desertion will be broken, even though it be conceded that she was guilty of wilful desertion in the first instance. Reed v. Reed, 62 Ark. 611, 37 S. W. 230. In this case the court said: "We do not hold that a husband whose wife had wilfully deserted him would, if he afterwards visited her and assisted in supporting her, necessarily lose his right to divorce, or condone such desertion. Such acts might, under some circumstances, evince regret for her absence and a desire for her return, and serve to make more clear the fault of the wife in remaining away from his home. But, if he goes further, and continues to exercise the right of matrimonial intercourse upon such visits, he will be treated as having condoned the conduct of the wife, and the continuity of her desertion will be broken."

This being true, there is no abandonment for a year within the meaning of the statute, where, within one year before the institution of the suit, the parties met and of misconduct on her part. But it is not barely "utter desertion continued for three consecutive years" that is a ground for divorce under our statute; the three consecutive years must have been "next prior to the filing of the libel." Rev. Laws, chap. 152, § 1. Here, the parties lived together as husband and wife in December of 1909, though only for four days; and so there was no desertion for the "three consecutive years next prior to the filing of the libel." For this reason, no cause of divorce was shown at the hearing, and the ruling made was correct. Gaillard v. Gaillard, 23 Miss. 152.

It cannot be said that the husband's conduct in resuming matrimonial relations with his wife was merely a condonation or cohabited on different occasions. Woolfolk v. Woolfolk, 96 Ky. 657, 29 S. W. 742.

So, where a husband deserts his wife and again leaves her after a reconciliation of but ten days, during which the parties lived together as man and wife, the continuity of the separation is broken, and the two periods of desertion cannot be tacked so as to entitle the wife to a divorce upon the statutory ground of "wilful, continued, and obstinate desertion for the term of three years." Gaillard v. Gaillard, 23 Miss. 152.

And where the husband visits the wife and cohabits with her on several occasions, remaining at least on one occasion a week or more, he will be deemed to have condoned her desertion. Phelan v. Phelan, 135 Ill. 445, 25 N. E. 751.

But making a single visit to the absent wife within the space of two years, and remaining on that occasion with her during one night and a portion of two days, does not constitute a condonation of her wilful desertion, where it was not then or at any other time agreed that she would return and perform her marital duties, and she at no time evinced an inclination to do so. Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250.

And a divorce from a wife for "utter desertion continued for three consecutive years," within the meaning of the statute, may be granted where she deserts her husband and remains away from him for the full period continuously, and unreasonably refuses to return, although once during that time he visited her, and for two or three nights occupied the same bed with her. Danforth v. Danforth, 88 Me. 120, 31 L.R.A. 608, 51 Am. St. Rep. 380, 33 Atl. 781.

As to whether the plaintiff's desertion or cruelty or nonsupport, etc., constitutes a defense to an action for divorce for subsequent adultery, see the note to Ellett v. Ellett, post, 1135.

See also the note to Hill v. Hill, ante, 1118, dealing with the question whether an effort by one spouse to induce the other to return home is a condition of desertion by the latter, and also containing references to other L.R.A. notes on analogous questions.

L. A. W.

conditional forgiveness of her previous misconduct; and that her subsequent refusal to accompany or follow him to his home in Canada was the beginning of a new desertion by her (Franklin v. Franklin, 190 Mass. 349, 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 145, 77 N. E. 48, 5 Ann. Cas. 851), which avoided the effect of his condonation, and so entitled him to rest his libel upon her first desertion. If we assume that this reasoning otherwise would be correct, yet we have not here a case of mere condonation, although it doubtless included that element. It was voluntary action on the part of the libellant, which, by putting an end to the earlier desertion, made it impossible to say that any desertion had continued for the statutory period up to the filing of this libel. It was an absolute removal of the existing clause of divorce, and the fact that it involved also a forgiveness of the past wrong that had been done, cannot diminish its full effect.

The cases of Danforth v. Danforth, 88 Me. 120, 31 L.R.A. 608, 51 Am. St. Rep. 380, 33 Atl. 781, and Kennedy v. Kennedy, 87 Ill. 250, turned on the fact that in them no complete renewal of matrimonial cohabitation was found. It is not necessary to consider whether, under the same facts, we should be inclined to follow those decisions. See Woolfolk v. Woolfolk, 96 Ky. 657, 29 S. W. 742; Burk v. Burk, 21 W. Va. 445; Reed v. Reed, 62 Ark. 611, 37 S. W. 230; Holmes v. Holmes, 44 Mich. 555, 7 N. W. 228.

Under the terms of the report, the libel must be dismissed.

So ordered.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

F. M. ELLETT, Appt.,

v.

ELIZABETH B. ELLETT.

(157 N. C. 161, 72 S. E. 861.)

Evidence — adultery — character.

1. To justify a divorce for adultery, a preponderance of evidence of the fact is suf-

Note. — Divorce: desertion or cruelty as a recriminatory defense to subsequent adultery.

See the note to Hill v. Hill, ante, 1118, for reference to other notes on analogous questions.

Upon the principle that the province of the courts in divorce proceedings is to grant relief to those who have been wronged, it is settled in this country, except under statutory provisions hereinafter shown, that one who has been guilty of misconduct which is in itself a ground for absolute divorce efficient; it need not be clear, cogent, and convincing.

30 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Divorce — abandonment — adultery — effect.

2. That a man maliciously turned his wife out of doors is no defense to a suit by him for divorce on the ground of her subsequent adultery, where she could have maintained an action for separate maintenance.

(Hoke, J., dissents in part.)

(November 22, 1911.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Rockingham County in defendant's favor in a suit for a divorce. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. F. L. Fuller, C. O. McMichael, A. D. Ivie, and W. P. Bynum for appellant.

Mr. A. L. Brooks for appellee.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for an absolute divorce, brought by the husband against the wife.

The seventh issue was as follows: "(7) Did the defendant commit adultery with one George B. Gatling, as alleged in the complaint?" On this issue, the judge charged: "The plaintiff must show such adulterous intercourse by evidence which is clear, cogent, and convincing. If you find from the evidence, which is clear, cogent, and convincing, that the defendant committed adultery with George B. Gatling, your answer to the seventh issue will be, 'Yes.' If not, your answer to the seventh issue will be, 'No.'" The exception of the plaintiff to this charge must be sustained. In criminal cases the burden is upon the plaintiff to prove the charge "beyond a reasonable doubt," or "to the satisfaction of the jury." But in civil cases the rule is that the party upon whom lies the burden of proof is called upon to establish his allegation merely "by the preponderance of the evidence." There are some exceptions to this in matters of an equitable nature, as to which the evidence must be "clear, strong, and convincing."

has no standing to demand a divorce upon the ground of the other party's subsequent adultery. This is upon the ground that, since the legislature has seen fit to put other marital misconduct upon the same basis as adultery as a ground for absolute divorce, the parties will be denied relief because they are deemed in equal fault, although the misconduct of one may involve more of moral turpitude than the other. This principle, however, does not apply where the plaintiff's misconduct falls short of that which constitutes a ground for absolute divorce. A fortiori, a wife cannot de-

For instance, when a party asserts, and endeavors to prove by parol, that a deed which is absolute on its face was in fact a mortgage. 8 Enc. Ev. 714; Watkins v. Williams, 123 N. C. 174, 31 S. E. 388; Porter v. White, 128 N. C. 45, 38 S. E. 24, and cases cited therein. The same rule as to intensity of proof applies, also, where a party seeks the reformation of a written instrument. Ely v. Early, 94 N. C. 1; Kornegay v. Everett, 99 N. C. 30, 5 S. E. 418; Hemphill v. Hemphill, 99 N. C. 436, 6 S. E. 201; Southern Finishing & Warehouse Co. v. Ozment, 132 N. C. 846, 44 S. E. 681. Also the same intensity of proof is required to prove the terms of a lost will, and there are a few other instances. But they are all cases in which formerly the facts would have been found by the chancellor. Ferrell v. Broadway, 95 N. C. 551. Such intensity of proof is not required as to the issues in divorce, which is an action at law. Certainly it has never been required in this state.

It is true that in Kinney v. Kinney, 140 N. C. 321, 63 S. E. 97, the judge charged the jury that the evidence of adultery must be "strong, convincing, and conclusive," but, notwithstanding this erroneous charge, the jury found the issue "Yes," and therefore there was no appeal by the plaintiff which would have presented the question as to the correctness of that part of the charge.

The plaintiff contends, however, that, inasmuch as the jury found "Yes," in response to the eighth issue, "Did the plaintiff, before an action for divorce upon the ground of adultery by setting up misconduct on the part of the husband, which, although not a ground for absolute divorce, would have entitled her to immediate relief such as, for instance, a decree of separate maintenance, since in such circumstances she cannot be heard to contend that when she was left without the necessities of life, she was justified in forming a new alliance. This last is substantially the position of ELLETT v. ELLETT, which also intimates that, if left without means or provisions, in circumstances which did not afford any immediate relief, she might perhaps excuse the formation of a new alliance so as to disentitle the husband to a divorce for adultery.

It has been said in cases holding desertion or cruelty, when itself a ground for absolute divorce, a good defense to adultery, that the English ecclesiastical courts took the contrary view, but such is not the case, for at the time those courts considered the question, desertion or cruelty was not a ground for absolute divorce, and therefore one guilty of cruelty or desertion was not in eodem delicto with one who was guilty of adultery. For this reason it was held that a wife could not plead cruelty as a bar to divorce for her violation of the marriage bed. Harris v. Harris, 2 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 376; Chambers v. Chambers, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 439. In other cases, the ecclesiastical courts assumed or recognized that cruelty was not a bar: Dillon v. Dillon, 3 Curt. Eccl. Rep. 86, holding that the allegation of cruelty in bar is not rendered permissible by the fact that the cruelty may have been committed with the ulterior design of getting rid of the wife by driving her into adultery; Cocksedge v. Cocksedge, 1 Rob. Eccl. Rep. 90, holding that while cruelty cannot be pleaded alone in bar, it may be set up in connection with a recrimination of adultery, upon the theory that it lays a good ground for the probability of the truth of the charge of adultery; and Arkley v. Arkley, 3 Phillim. Eccl. Rep. 500, holding that the husband's cruelty, though not a bar to a charge of adultery, might be pleaded as introductory to the history of an adulterous intercourse.

That desertion was likewise not a bar to an action for divorce for adultery seems to have been the position taken by the ecclesiastical courts. This rule was recognized in Forster v. Forster, 1 Hagg. Consist. Rep. 144; and it was declared obiter in Sullivan v. Sullivan, 2 Addams, Eccl. Rep. 299, that the husband's desertion, though malicious, was not a bar to a divorce for the wife's adultery, since desertion was not a substantive ground of divorce.

Later in England this matter was expressly adjusted by statute which gave the courts jurisdiction to deny a divorce where the plaintiff had been guilty of certain specified acts or misconduct "conducting to the" defendant's adultery. While it will be of no avail in this connection to discuss the cases which involve merely the application of that statute, a further point made in two of such cases throws considerable light upon the position of the English courts. Thus, after denying a divorce in obedience to the statute referred to, the court in Lempriere v. Lempriere, L. R. 1 Prob. & Div. 569, 37 L. J. Prob. N. S. 78, 19 L. T. N. S. 50, 16 Week. Rep. 1192, intimated that possibly if the husband were to seek merely a judicial separation on the ground of adultery, the fact that he had been guilty of cruelty and desertion would disentitle him to the relief sought, since so far as a judicial separation was concerned, adultery and cruelty stood upon the same basis. This point was passed upon in Hodgson v. Hodgson, 74 L. J. Prob. N. S. 140 [1905] P. 233, 93 L. T. N. S. 446, 53 Week. Rep. 623, 21 Times L. R. 601, where, after a dissolution of the marriage upon the petition of the husband was denied, apparently by virtue of the same statute, the petitioner filed an amended bill for a judicial separation, upon the ground of adultery, and the question arose as to whether the desertion would constitute a defense to such petition. The court said that it felt bound to do what in its opinion the ecclesiastical courts would have done in similar circumstances, if a divorce a mensa et thoro had been fore the time of the alleged adultery, maliciously turn the defendant out of doors?" that the error in the instruction as to the intensity of the proof on the seventh issue was harmless error. But this proposition is neither good law nor good morals. There is no legal or moral reason why a woman who has been abandoned by her husband shall be privileged to commit adultery any more than if she were a widow or a single woman. It is true that, prior to the act of 1872 (now Revisal 1908, § 1561 [2]), such was deemed the law in this state (Moss v. Moss, 24 N. C. [2 Ired. L.] 55), and that the same was practically reiterated after that act in Tew v. Tew, 80 N. C. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 84, but, as was strongly intimated in Steel v. Steel, 104 N. C. 636, 10 S. E.

707, the latter decision cannot be sustained, "and was evidently tinged by the restrictive ideas of the older law." The court further says in the latter case that the reason of the former law was that the wife, having no property (which at that time all belonged to the husband, as the law was formerly), might be forced, and probably would be, to form a new connection, in order to obtain a support, "but now, under our statutes of 1869, 1874, and 1879, she can compel her husband to provide her adequate support, both for herself and her children." Steel v. Steel in effect overruled Tew v. Tew on that point.

Nor is an agreement for separation, as formerly, ipso facto void, because "against law and public policy." As Smith, Ch. J., sought upon the ground of adultery, and thereupon proceeded to hold that since desertion for a certain period had, by statute, been made a ground of relief, and that since the desertion in this case had brought about the wife's adultery, a decree of judicial separation should have been denied the husband. So, it seems that even in the English courts the test for determining whether the parties were in the same fault so as to warrant the application of the doctrine of recrimination was not whether the respective acts of misconduct were of the same moral turpitude, but was essentially whether the law attached to them the same legal consequences. In short, any misconduct which stood legally on a level with adultery was, in England, a good recriminatory defense thereto, and therefore conduct which was a ground for a judicial separation only was not a bar to an absolute divorce for adultery, although it was a bar to a judicial separation, even though the latter was sought upon the ground of adultery.

This is quite in harmony with the American cases which hold that where the legislature has put desertion, cruelty, and adultery on the same level by making them all a ground for absolute divorce, each is a good recriminatory defense to the other. The only American cases found to dissent from this proposition are decisions of the courts of Illinois, where it seems that desertion and cruelty are grounds for divorce a vinculo matrimonii only. But it is to be observed that the cases do not discuss the matter, but simply declare summarily that a right of action upon the ground of adultery is not affected by the fact of the plaintiff's previous desertion (Bast v. Bast, 82 Ill. 584; Huling v. Huling, 38 Ill. App. 144), or "extreme and repeated cruelty" (Stiles v. Stiles, 167 Ill. 576, 47 N. E. 867, obiter; Zimmerman v. Zimmerman, 242 Ill. 562, 90 N. E. 192; Hughes v. Hughes, 133 Ill. App. 654).

But as said before, it is settled by the great weight of authority that where certain marital misconduct is a ground for divorce a vinculo matrimonii, it is a good recriminatory defense to an action for divorce upon the ground of adultery. Where each of the married parties has committed a matrimonial offense which the law has made a ground for divorce in favor of the other, so that the conduct of each, disassociated from that of the other, warrants a divorce in favor of the latter, the court will grant the prayer of neither. This prevents a divorce for adultery in favor of one guilty of legal cruelty (Wilson v. Wilson, 89 Neb. 749, 132 N. W. 401; Church v. Church, 16 R. I. 667, 7 L.R.A. 385, 19 Atl. 244; Pease v. Pease, 72 Wis. 136, 39 N. W. 133; Bordeaux v. Bordeaux, 30 Mont. 36, 75 Pac. 524, assuming, incidentally to the discussion of other matters, that the husband's cruelty was a good defense to a divorce upon the ground of adultery, where the statute defined recrimination as "a showing by defendant of any cause of divorce against the plaintiff," and another provision made cruelty a ground for divorce); and likewise makes desertion, when continued for the statutory period, a good defense to an action for divorce upon the ground of adultery (Pierce v. Pierce, 70 Vt. 270, 40 Atl. 728).

The argument is that the rule of recrimination applies to all the causes for divorce, and that an action for divorce on any one of the statutory grounds may be defeated by proof of the existence of another statutory ground, without regard to the nature or gravity of the several causes; and that therefore an appellate court will not set aside a decree denying to the husband a divorce for adultery where he had been guilty of extreme cruelty and gross neglect of duty, and the decree was rendered in the exercise of the discretion granted in a statute providing that, when the parties appear to be in equal wrong, the court may in its discretion refuse to grant a divorce. Day v. Day, 71 Kan. 385, 80 Pac. 974, 6 Ann. Cas. 169. Here the court referred to the rule of the ecclesiastical courts that there could be no recrimination unless the offenses were of the same character, and also the rule of some American cases that have refused to allow a cause to be barred by any pointed out in Sparks v. Sparks, 94 N. C. 532, the law now recognizes the validity, under certain conditions, of such a deed, by providing in Code, § 1831 (now Revisal, § 2116), that "every woman who shall be living separate from her husband . . . under a deed of separation executed by said husband and wife, and registered, . . . shall be deemed and held . . . a free trader," etc. Sparks v. Sparks, supra, has been cited as authority in Smith v. King, 107 N. C. 273, 12 S. E. 57; Cram v. Cram, 116 N. C. 294, 21 S. E. 197. Besides, under Code, § 1292 (now Revisal, § 1567), the wife who has been abandoned or deserted by her husband can sue for a support for herself and children, without asking for a divorce. Cram v. Cram, 116 N. C. 288, 21 S. E. 197; Skittletharpe v. Skittletharpe, 130 N. C. 72, 40 S. E. 851; Bidwell v. Bidwell, 139 N. C. 409, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 324, 111 Am. St. Rep. 797, 52 S. E. 55. Our older authorities, therefore, which made the adultery of the wife committed after desertion or abandonment by her husband, no ground for divorce, are without the reason which gave support to such rulings. They have now as little support in law as they ever had in morals.

The remedy which the statute gives to a wife abandoned or deserted by her husband is alimony and divorce a mensa et thoro. It does not privilege either one to commit adultery. If she does, the husband is entitled to a divorce. This was the ecclesiastical law. Nelson, Divorce, § 430. His wrong does not authorize her to commit a greater one. She can go back to live with him after his desertion; but he cannot be required to live with her after her adultery. The American decisions are conflicting, being based upon statutes of varying tenor.

Besides, in this case, the husband placed the wife in a sanatorium for the cure of her habit of drunkenness, and paid her, or for her benefit, regularly $50 per month for her support under the agreement of separation. He also paid her $400 per year rent for a matrimonial offense other than adultery, but held that since the legislature, in prescribing ten grounds for divorce, had treated each ground as the equal of any other, and had visited upon each offense the same legal consequences, the court could not well distinguish between them because one offense might appear to involve more of turpitude or disgrace than the other.

Likewise it was declared in Hall v. Hall, 4 Allen, 39, that whatever may be the doctrine in jurisdictions in which desertion was not a legal ground for divorce from the bonds of matrimony, there was no sufficient reason why desertion continued for the statutory period might not be set up in defense of the wife's libel against the husband charging him with adultery, where, as in Massachusetts, a continued wilful desertion by the wife for the period of five years would, as respects her husband, who had fully observed his conjugal duties, be as good a cause for divorce as adultery. To a like declaration, the New Jersey court added that it would be inconsistent to grant a divorce to one who is himself liable to a charge which, if true, is a foundation for a divorce. Reading v. Reading, — N. J. Eq., 5 Atl. 721 (denying husband who was guilty of cruelty a divorce for the wife's subsequent adultery). In Rapp v. Rapp, infra, it was pointed out that cruelty was a ground of divorce a mensa et thoro only.

Indeed, it is held that where desertion is a ground for absolute divorce, the court will seize upon the husband's desertion for the statutory period as a recriminatory defense, though it is not pleaded by the wife, where in his suit upon the ground of adultery he has shown his own guilt. Rapp v. Rapp, 67 N. J. Eq. 236, 58 Atl. 167.

It has been further held that a statute providing that the court may deny a divorce though the adultery be established, in case of connivance, condonation, or laches, does not impliedly abrogate the principle that one cannot have redress for breach of the marriage contract which he has violated by committing an offense of the legal status, so as to disentitle a wife who is sued for a divorce upon the ground of adultery, to set up the recriminatory defense of cruelty and inhuman treatment. Pease v. Pease, 72 Wis. 136, 39 N. W. 133. So, in Nagel v. Nagel, 12 Mo. 53, in which a husband was denied a divorce for the wife's adultery, where, in confirmation of the wife's recriminatory plea, the husband was found guilty of cruelty and inhuman conduct, the court pointed out that, although it was possibly true that by enacting a statute providing that in case of collusion, or where "both parties have been guilty of adultery," no divorce shall be decreed, the legislature intended at the time to limit recrimination to cases of adultery, it was but just to allow recrimination for all enumerated offenses, where, since the passage of the act referred to, the grounds of divorce had been extended from adultery and desertion merely, so that there were nine separate causes for divorce, and the principle pervading the whole act seemed to be that a divorce should be decreed only to an innocent party.

Recognizing that intolerable severity and refusal to support, which is a ground for absolute divorce, is a defense to an action for an absolute divorce upon the ground of the wife's adultery, the court in Tillison v. Tillison, 63 Vt. 411, 22 Atl. 531, holds that the rule is not applicable, and the defendant will not be permitted to set up such conduct in defense, where a previous bill for divorce based upon those grounds was dismissed on its merits.

So, the rule does not apply where the plaintiff's conduct, although partaking of the nature of the acts prescribed in the home worth $5,000, which he had given her, and supported the children himself. She was not therefore subjected to temptation by the necessity of procuring a support, which was the reason for the rulings of the court in Tew v. Tew, 80 N. C. 316, 30 Am. Rep. 84, and cases prior thereto.

It may be that on another trial the jury will again find the wife was not guilty, but the plaintiff is entitled to a new trial, to the end that the issue may be submitted under proper instructions as to the intensity of proof required to establish the charge. Error.

Allen, J., concurs in result.

Hoke, J., concurring in the result:

I concur in the decision awarding a new trial in this case for the error in the charge of the court on the degree of proof required to establish the seventh issue, and it may statute in relation to absolute divorce, does not, because not sufficiently serious or for other reasons, amount to the marital offenses specified. Thus, a divorce will not be denied upon the finding that, although the wife's conduct did not amount to desertion, there was on her part an unmindfulness of the marital obligations (Cushman v. Cushman, 194 Mass. 38, 79 N. E. 809); nor will it be denied where the plaintiff's conduct, though justifying the defendant's separation, did not constitute statutory cruelty (Bailey v. Bailey, 67 N. H. 402, 29 Atl. 847). So, a divorce will be granted notwithstanding a recriminatory defense of desertion, where the conduct alleged did not in fact constitute desertion, either because the separation occurred by the defendant's consent (Stokes v. Stokes, 1 Mo. 320), or had not continued for the statutory period (Adams v. Adams, 17 N. J. Eq. 324; McCannon v. McCannon, 73 Vt. 147, 50 Atl. 799), at the time of the defendant's adultery (Wilson v. Wilson, 40 Iowa, 230; Dupont v. Dupont, 10 Iowa, 112, 74 Am. Dec. 378; Hall v. Hall, 4 Allen, 39; Clapp v. Clapp, 97 Mass. 531; Walker v. Walker, 172 Mass. 82, 51 N. E. 455).

And the rule of recrimination does not apply where the statute vests a discretion in the court to grant either absolute or limited divorces, it being held in such circumstances that the applicant must, in order to obtain relief a vinculo matrimonii, be without reproach, and however guilty the defendant, if the applicant is chargeable either with similar guilt or with an offense to which the law attaches similar consequences, the relief must be denied; but that if the applicant, though not thus guilty, is still not blameless, the relief must be limited to a divorce a mensa et thoro. Through the application of this doctrine, it was held that, to be an absolute bar, desertion must be that there are no facts amounting to legal evidence tending to show that plaintiff maliciously turned defendant out of doors. I do not agree to the position, however, nor do I think that it has the support of any authoritative decision, that a husband who has wrongfully abandoned his wife may successfully maintain an action for divorce a vinculo on account of her adultery. Under a long line of well-considered precedents, relief in such case was denied, not because the act of the wife was justifiable,—it was never so regarded,—but because the husband, on account of his own conduct in wrongfully withdrawing his association and protection from the wife, was not in a position to ask relief from the court. Neither the moral nor the legal aspect of this position is changed, because the wife may, under certain conditions, now obtain alimony. The doctrine and the principle upon which it rests lie deeper, and, in my opinion, should now and always prevail.

have continued long enough to constitute a statutory ground of divorce, and that where a wife's desertion had not continued for the statutory period, though she was entitled to equitable relief upon the ground of the husband's subsequent adultery, that relief must be limited to a divorce a mensa et thoro, where her departure was without excuse or justification. Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249, 70 Am. Dec. 717.

And, of course, a wife who is guilty of abandonment cannot claim a divorce for the husband's subsequent adultery, under a statute authorizing a divorce "in favor of the wife, where the husband shall have left her for three years with intention of abandonment, or where he shall have abandoned her and lived in adultery with another woman." Johnson v. Johnson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 23 S. W. 1022.

Then again, where the conduct alleged in defense is such as is made a ground for divorce only from bed and board, although it is such as is made in other jurisdictions a ground for absolute divorce, it is held to constitute no defense to subsequent adultery. Thus, it is held in New York that cruel and inhuman treatment entitling the party to a limited divorce is not a good defense against a complaint showing a right to an absolute divorce on the ground of adultery. Griffin v. Griffin, 23 How. Pr. 183. So it was held in a later case that the husband's abandonment, though of sufficient duration to entitle the wife to a limited divorce, cannot be regarded as disentitling him to a divorce upon the ground of her subsequent adultery, upon the theory that because he deserted the defendant he thereby consented to the adultery charged against her, or that there was in any sense either connivance, privity, or procurement of the act. Mattison v. Mattison, 60 Misc. 573, 113 N. Y. Supp. 1024, expressly disapproving a holding to the contrary in a referee's report which was affirmed per curiam in Richardson v. Richardson, 114 N. Y. Supp. 912. In the Mattison Case the court said: "Abandonment confers no license on the deserted party to offend against the marital vows. If deserted, she has her remedy under the law; but she may not violate its enactments without incurring its penalties. I am not unmindful of the duties imposed upon the husband, nor of the consequences which may result when an abandoned wife, a stranger in a great city, is forced to battle against adverse circumstances. However, if spouses live apart, whether by consent or by decree, each is liable for any transgression of the conjugal relationship; and, should either disobey the statute, an action for divorce would lie, and it seems to me that the same rule applies to the case of desertion. In the cause before me, the abandonment was conceded, and, whether justified or not, need not, in the view I take of it, be considered." But see Reading v. Reading, — N. J. Eq. —, 5 Atl. 721, supra. The Richardson Case, in which it appeared that the wife left the husband wilfully and unjustifiably and without other reason than that she had ceased to love him, placed its decision not only upon the broad ground that one who breaks the marriage contract should not be permitted to take advantage of the other's subsequent breach of it, or claim absolution for herself and punishment for him; but also upon the ground that she must be deemed to have consented and connived at his offense. In discussing the latter ground, the referee said that since the wife testified that she naturally supposed that when she left him he would seek the embraces of other women, she must be deemed to have consented to such action on his part, and also to have connived in the sense of "winking at" or helping by not hindering.

It will be observed that in the Mattison Case, supra, the court called attention to the fact that the wife had a remedy which she should have pursued instead of violating the marriage vows. This is not only in line with the position taken in ELLETT v. ELLETT, but also accords with a statement in an English case. Thus, in referring to the early English decisions, the court said in Hodgson v. Hodgson, 74 L. J. Prob. N. S. 140 [1905] P. 233, 93 L. T. N. S. 446, 63 Week. Rep. 623, 21 Times L. R. 601, that it was easy to understand why in some cases cruelty had been held not a bar, since cruelty was committed at some time when the parties were living together, and that the moment the wife chose to separate from the husband she could at once have taken proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts on the ground of cruelty, and that therefore it was of no use for her afterwards to say, when she was charged with subsequent adultery, that her misconduct occurred after the husband's cruelty,—that is, inasmuch as she had a remedy at the time, she had no reason herself to become guilty of matrimonial misconduct.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Likewise, in Van Horn v. Arantes, 116 La. 130, 40 So. 592, the failure of the wife to pursue the statutory remedies was held fatal to her recriminatory defenses of abandonment and nonsupport. Here it was pointed out that, to be a ground for a separation from bed and board, abandonment must, under the statute, be established by three monthly reiterated summonses directing the absent spouse's return, followed by a judgment directing compliance and three monthly notices of such judgment. In addition to this, another statute made the husband's wilful desertion and failure to support a misdemeanor, and authorized the courts to suspend sentence and order the payment of a weekly sum to the wife. The court declared that since the wife had neither taken the statutory steps in relation to a separation from bed and board for abandonment, nor availed herself of the statute which indirectly afforded her a relief for nonsupport, there was no conduct on the part of the husband which constituted even a ground for a separation from bed and board. In a general way the court stated the true rule to be that, to admit of recrimination, the mutual fault of the parties must be such as to furnish grounds for a divorce or separation from bed and board, and must be of a similar nature or gravity.

In this connection, attention is also directed to Mayer v. Mayer, 5 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 444, which seemed to attach little or no importance to the fact that the wife had in fact obtained a decree for separate maintenance, where the husband had wilfully deserted her, whom he had married after seducing her while the wife of another,—holding that in such circumstances he must be deemed to have abandoned her knowing her weakness and liability to commit adultery, and that therefore his petition for a divorce against her on that ground should be dismissed. L. A. W.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

AUGUST E. FISCHER, Resp't.,

v.

CLARENCE D. HILLMAN et al., Appts.

ALBERT E. STAATS, Resp't.,

v.

SAME, Appts.

(— Wash. —, 122 Pac. 1016.)

Vendor and purchaser — rescission — fraud — negligence of purchaser.
That a purchaser might have ascertained

Note.—Fraud: may fraud be predicated of misstatement as to title to real property.

As to the right of a purchaser of land to rely upon representations of the seller as to the untruthfulness of the representation does not prevent his rescinding a contract for purchase of real estate because the vendor falsely represented that he had a good title, that the land was in a recorded plat to which the deed referred, and that he would build an electric railway line and a highway to the property.

(April 10, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from judgments of the Superior Court for King County in plaintiffs' favor in actions brought to rescind a contract for the purchase of certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

boundaries, see note in 14 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1210; whether fraudulent representations by the vendor as to area within boundaries correctly pointed out are actionable, see note in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 487; and whether fraudulent representations by the vendor of the extent or proportion of land of a particular kind included within the tract sold are actionable where the purchaser inspects the land, see note in 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 55; as to misrepresentations as to the location of land, see note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 301; whether or not false statements as to cost, selling or market price of property, or as to offers therefor, constitute fraud, see note in 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 175; as to whether false statements as to the use to which property is to be put are ground for rescinding a deed thereof, see note in 32 L.R.A.(N.S.) 127; and as to the effect of the purchaser's concealment or misrepresentation of facts affecting the value of real estate, see note in 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 748.

The present note is supplemental to a note on the same subject in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 202.

Executory contracts.

As to executory contracts to purchase real property, the rule very generally obtains that if the vendor's title to the property is defective, the purchaser may rescind the contract of purchase, and recover the amount paid thereon, without reference to whether or not the vendor made false or fraudulent statements as to the title. Min-to v. Moore, 1 Ala. App. 556, 55 So. 542; Musselwhite v. Olson, 60 Fla. 342, 53 So. 944; Tague v. McCollm, 145 Iowa, 179, 123 N. W. 960; Parsons v. Kelso, 141 Mo. App. 369, 125 S. W. 227; Kling v. A. H. Greef Realty Co. — Mo. App. —, 148 S. W. 203; Justice v. Button, 89 Neb. 367, 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1, 131 N. W. 736; Reynolds v. White, 143 App. Div. 595, 128 N. Y. Supp. 529; Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 330, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973, 100 Pac. 752; Colpe v. Lindblom, 57 Wash. 106, 106 Pac. 634; McWhorter v. Fornay Bros. — Wash. —, 125 Pac. 164.

And the rule applies although the contract of purchase merely calls for a quit-
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Messrs. Frederick R. Burch and Oliver Hulback, for appellants:

Failure of title will not, under any circumstances, support a decree of rescission and cancellation of the deeds.

Washington Cent. Improv. Co. v. Newlands, 11 Wash. 212, 39 Pac. 366; Slaughter v. Gerson, 13 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 627; West Seattle Land & Improv. Co. v. Herren, 16 Wash. 665, 48 Pac. 341; Griffith v. Strand, 19 Wash. 686, 54 Pac. 613; Walsh v. Bushell, 26 Wash. 576, 67 Pac. 216; Samson v. Beale, 27 Wash. 557, 68 Pac. 180; Hulet v. Achey, 39 Wash. 91, 80 Pac. 1105; Irby v. Tilsley, 41 Wash. 211, 83 Pac. 97; Tacoma v. Tacoma Light & Water Co. 16 claim deed. Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 330, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973, 100 Pac. 752.

And also where, because of the destruction of the records of title, the vendor is unable to produce evidence of a marketable title at the time agreed upon. McDermott v. Chatfield, — Cal. App. —, 123 Pac. 539; Crim v. Umbsen, 155 Cal. 697, 132 Am. St. Rep. 127, 103 Pac. 178.

Where the title is defective, a purchaser of real estate on executory contract may refuse to complete the contract, without reference to whether it is procured through the fraud of the vendor. Wilson v. Bolen, 152 Ill. App. 210; Rochella v. Brockman, 152 Ill. App. 253.

For a fraudulent representation by the vendor of real estate as to his title, the purchaser may either rescind the executory contract of purchase, or he may sue and recover damages resulting to him from such fraud. Maxwell v. Sherman, — Ala. —, 55 So. 520.

Where the vendor of land, by selling same by executory contract, receives from the purchaser money paid in reliance upon false representations by the former that he has a valid title to the land, the money so paid may be recovered by the purchaser in an action at law. O'Neal v. Miller, 9 Ga. App. 180, 70 S. E. 971.

In Allen v. Talbot, — Mich. —, 131 N. W. 97, without discussing the question as to the right to rely thereon, it is held that false statements by the vendor with reference to his title, if relied upon by the purchaser of real estate by executory contract, authorize a rescission of the contract.

And for false representations by the vendor that the land he is selling is entitled to certain water rights, the purchaser, if he relies thereon, may rescind the executory contract of purchase, and recover the amount paid on the purchase price. Martinez v. Coggin, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 699.

On the theory that it constituted a constructive fraud for the vendor to undertake to sell land to which he does not have the title he purports to have, the right of a purchaser to rescind is sustained in Jay v. Sweatt, 8 Ga. App. 481, 70 S. E. 16.

It has been held that to obtain a rescis-

Wash. 288, 47 N. W. 738, 17 Wash. 458, 50 Pac. 55; Simons v. Cissna, 52 Wash. 115, 100 Pac. 200.

The promise to build an electric railroad to Everett, or to build a wagon road to English, or to furnish an abstract, is not an existing material fact.

13 Cyc. 583; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 385; 1 Beach, Contr. 978; Dawe v. Morris, 149 Mass. 188, 4 L.R.A. 158, 14 Am. St. Rep. 404, 21 N. E. 313; Adams v. Schiffer, 11 Colo. 15, 7 Am. St. Rep. 202, 17 Pac. 21; Beard v. Bliley, 3 Colo. App. 479, 34 Pac. 271; Moore v. Cross, 87 Tex. 557, 29 S. W. 1051; Balue v. Taylor, 136 Ind. 368, 36 N. E. 269; Smith v. Parker, 148 Ind. 127, 45 N. E. 770; Chicago, T. & M. C. R. Co.

v. Titterington, 84 Tex. 218, 31 Am. St. Rep. 39, 19 S. W. 472.

Whatever representations concerning title were made, they are merged in the warranties and covenants in the deed; and plaintiff's remedy for any failure of title or peaceable enjoyment is an action on the covenants and warranties contained in the deed.

West Coast Mfg. & Invest. Co. v. West Coast Improv. Co. 25 Wash. 627, 62 L.R.A. 763, 66 Pac. 97; Jackson v. McAuley, 13 Wash. 298, 43 Pac. 41; Leddy v. Enos, 6 Wash. 247, 33 Pac. 508, 34 Pac. 665; Decker v. Schulze, 11 Wash. 47, 27 L.R.A. 335, 48 Am. St. Rep. 858, 39 Pac. 261; 1 Sugden, Vendors, p. 383; Rawlins v. Timberlake, 6 T. B. Mon. 225; James v. M'Kernon, 6

sion of an executory contract for the purchase of real estate on the ground of fraudulent representations by the vendor as to encumbrances on the property, the burden is upon the purchaser to prove the fraud, and also to establish his right to rescind because thereof. Adams v. Hill, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 149 S. W. 349.

The right to rescind, either on the ground of defect or failure of title, or false representations as to title, is lost if not exercised before the defect complained of has been cured by the vendor. Buckingham v. Thompson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 135 S. W. 652.

In an action to rescind an executory contract for the purchase of real estate on the ground of fraud, in that there was an encumbrance existing against the property, oral evidence to show that the purchaser knew of the encumbrance and assumed same is inadmissible where the written contract is not ambiguous, and contains no reference to an encumbrance, and provides how the purchase price shall be paid. Parsons v. Kelso, 141 Mo. App. 369, 125 S. W. 227. The foregoing case is not disposed of on the theory of fraud, but on the theory that a court of equity in a proper case will declare a rescission of an executory contract to purchase real estate for the violation of covenants in the same, since it would be against conscience to permit a person to violate such a contract and still hold the other party thereto to a compliance with it.

Executed contracts.

And even as to executed contracts of sale, the rule has been applied that the purchaser of real estate under such a contract may rescind for defective title, and recover the purchase price paid, and the doctrine is asserted that it is not necessary in such case to prove actual fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the vendors. "It is enough if both parties believed defendants possessed a good title which they were authorized to convey, and it was subsequently found that the title was in third parties, and the deed 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to plaintiff proved ineffective to vest in her the property she had purchased. Such mistake would involve no fraud in the moral sense of that word; but to permit the seller to insist upon an advantage so obtained, and refuse to place the purchaser in statu quo, so far as that is possible by a proper decree, would be to make the law an instrument of fraud." Strothers v. Leigh, 151 Iowa, 214, 130 N. W. 1019.

So, where a purchase of real estate is made under a mistake as to title, the purchaser, upon discovering the mistake, is entitled to rescind, although the contract has been executed. Howard v. Sebastian, 143 Ky. 237, 136 S. W. 226.

Although the contract for the sale of land is executed, the title having wholly failed, the purchaser is entitled to defend an action by the vendor on purchase money notes, by setting up such failure of consideration, and also entitled in the same action to recover the amount paid on the purchase price. Joiner v. Ardmore Loan & T. Co. — Okla. —, 124 Pac. 1073.

The purchaser of land subject to a mortgage the interest on which the vendor falsely represented he had paid is entitled to recover the amount of unpaid interest, where the purchaser relied upon the statements of the vendor in this regard. Timmerman v. Whiting, — Minn. —, 137 N. W. 9.

False and fraudulent representations as to the title to land, if relied upon, furnish ground for an action for deceit, although the land is conveyed by a quitclaim deed. Carr v. Sanger, 138 App. Div. 32, 122 N. Y. Supp. 593.

It has been held that when land is conveyed by quitclaim deed, although the grantor had no title thereto, there is not a failure of consideration, and the purchaser is not entitled to recover the purchase price paid, on the theory that to hold otherwise would be to give a quitclaim deed the same effect as a deed of warranty. A recovery, however, may be had if the vendor has been guilty of false representations as to title, and such representations induce the purchaser to contract for the land. Goldman v. Hadley, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 122 S. W. 282.

Johns. 543; Bumpus v. Platner, 1 Johns. Ch. 213; Woodruff v. Bunce, 9 Paige, 443, 38 Am. Dec. 559; Denston v. Morris, 2 Edw. Ch. 37; Simpson v. Hawkins, 1 Dana, 303; Chase v. Weston, 12 N. H. 413; English v. Thomasson, 82 Ky. 281; Litchfield v. Cowley, 34 Wash. 574, 76 Pac. 81; Johansson v. Stephanson, 154 U. S. 625, appx. and 23 L. ed. 1009, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 1180.

Mr. James A. Snoddy, for respondents: Knowledge by the vendor of the falsity of his representations is not necessary.

20 Cyc. 27; Kirkpatrick v. Reeves, 121 Ind. 280, 22 N. E. 139; Hanson v. Tompkins, 2 Wash. 511, 27 Pac. 73; Sears v. Stinson, 3 Wash. 618, 29 Pac. 205; Lawson v. Vernon, 38 Wash. 429, 107 Am. St. Rep. 880, 80 Pac. 559; 9 Cyc. 418.

The representation that the vendors intended, and their promise, to construct two means of access to this land, the land having no other, and the promise to furnish an abstract showing clear title, were made with an intention to induce a purchase, were material, and are proved to have been false. This justifies rescission.

Livermore v. Middlesborough Town Lands Co. 106 Ky. 140, 50 S. W. 6; Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 459, 50 J. P. 52, 55 L. J. Ch. N. S. 650, 53 L. T. N. S. 369, 33 Week. Rep. 911; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Dubuque Light & Traction Co. 89 Fed. 794; 20 Cyc. 63b.

As to the covenant of seisin, it was broken as soon as it was made.

Wick v. Rea, 54 Wash. 424, 103 Pac.

Right to rely on representations.

In general.

Where the land is in another state, a person taking an encumbrance thereon has the right to rely upon positive statements of fact as to the title to the land and the priority of the security. Hall v. Bank of Baldwin, 143 Wis. 303, 127 N. W. 969.

If the purchaser of land has actual knowledge that the title is not as represented, and, notwithstanding, carries out the contract on his part, it cannot be said that he relied on the false representations in such a sense as to entitle him to damages. Howerton v. Augustine, 145 Iowa, 246, 121 N. W. 373.

Whether matter of opinion.

Whether a representation as to title to real property is but a matter of opinion, upon which a charge of deceit cannot be founded, and therefore the rule of caveat emptor applies, and requires the purchaser to exercise due diligence instead of relying upon the representations, depends upon the form of the representation. If the vendor assumes to represent his title as good when he knows it is bad, and the vendee is deceived thereby, he cannot escape liability for deceit by claiming that the representation is but a matter of opinion. Carr v. Sanger, 138 App. Div. 32, 122 N. Y. Supp. 593.

And in this connection see also the language used in Snyder v. Stemmons, 151 Mo. App. 156, 131 S. W. 724,—an action for fraud and deceit practised by the vendor of real estate in asserting ownership of and title to the property he sold, wherein the doctrine is asserted: "If the defendant had affirmed positive knowledge of his ownership when he had no positive knowledge, and the purchaser had relied upon the assertion, then responsibility would have been visited upon him; because in such case he would have been conscious that he was ignorant concerning the subject-matter of which he spoke, yet falsely asserting that it was within his own personal knowledge."

But in Corbett v. McGregor, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 131 S. W. 422, although the evidence showed that the vendor of real estate, in an executed contract for the exchange thereof, represented that he had a good title to the land and that the abstract showed it; that the abstract had been examined by a certain lawyer and the title to the land pronounced good, it was nevertheless held that such representations constituted a mere matter of opinion, and hence did not constitute fraud, although the title of the vendor was defective; especially where the purchaser relied upon the opinion of the attorney to whom the vendor referred, rather than the opinion of the vendor. And this is true, although the vendor had previously been informed by a third person that he claimed the title to the property, and was about to bring an action against the vendor to test the same. The court said that the failure to inform the purchaser of this fact did not constitute fraud which would justify a rescission of the contract, since the purchaser acted upon the opinion of the attorney rather than that of the vendor. It was, however, conceded, that if the vendor had known of an outstanding title paramount to his own, and had not revealed that fact to the purchaser, and the purchaser had acted in the matter on his representations, it would form a ground for rescission; but it is said that it was not known then to anyone, nor is it known now, that any person had title to the land superior to that of the vendor. In this connection, and as bearing upon the question whether the mere fact that there is danger of litigation over the title to the land is not itself a sufficient defect to render the title unmarketable, see note in 38 L.R.A. (N.S.) 14.

Negligence of purchaser.

Where one party to an exchange of property relies on a warranty of title, such warranty amounts to a written representation of title; and he is not precluded by a mere lack of prudence in a preliminary investigation of the title from recovering damages if the title turns out not to be as represented. If he in fact relied upon the representations, he is not to be defeated in his action for deceit by proof that a reasonably pru-

482; Thomas v. West & Wheeler, 64 Wash. 344, 116 Pac. 1074; Black v. Barto, 65 Wash. 502, 118 Pac. 623.

Selling the land upon representations that the same is free and clear from liens and encumbrances, when it is not, entitles the vendee to rescind.

Moody v. Spokane Street R. Co. 5 Wash. 699, 32 Pac. 751; Friday v. Parkhurst, 13 Wash. 439, 43 Pac. 362; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, 2d ed. 996; Shaw v. O'Neill, 45 Wash. 103, 88 Pac. 111; Davis v. Lee, 52 Wash. 336, 132 Am. St. Rep. 973, 100 Pac. 752; Morris v. Witcher, 20 N. Y. 41; Best v. Offield, 59 Wash. 466, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 55, 110 Pac. 17; Stelter v. Fowler, 62 Wash. 345, 113 Pac. 1096, 114 Pac. 879; Younge v. Harris, 2 Ala. 108; Smith v. Robertson, 23 Ala. 312; Lindsey v. Veasy, 62 Ala. 421; Crutchfield v. Danilly, 16 Ga. 432; Anderson v. Buck, 66 Iowa, 490, 24 N. W. 10; Breckinridge v. Moore, 3 B. Mon. 629; Parkam v. Randolph, 4 How. (Miss.) 435, 35 Am. Dec. 403; Shiffer v. Dietz, 53 How. Pr. 372, 83 N. Y. 300; Woods v. North, 6 Humph. 309, 44 Am. Dec. 312; Kenny v. Hoffman, 31 Gratt. 442; Bryant v. Boothe, 30 Ala. 311, 68 Am. Dec. 117; Hayes v. Nourse, 8 N. Y. S. R. 397; Napier v. Elam, 6 Yerg. 108; Ingram v. Morgan, 4 Humph. 66, 40 Am. Dec. 626; Topp v. White, 12 Heisk. 165; Fristoe v. Laytham, 18 Ky. L. Rep. 157, 36 S. W. 920; Mauk v. Lee, 66 Wash. 184, 119 Pac. 185; Blum v. Smith, 66 Wash. 192, 119 Pac. 183; Dickerson v. Spokane, 26 Wash. 292, 66 Pac. 381; Browder v. Phinney, 30 Wash. 74, 70 Pac. 264; Filley v. Murphy, 30 Wash. 1, 70 Pac. 107; Russner v. McMillan, 37 Wash. 422, 79 Pac. 988; State ex rel. Barto v. Drainage Comrs. 46 Wash. 474, 90 Pac. 660; Brown v. Baldwin, 46 Wash. 114, 89 Pac. 483; McMillen v. Hillman, 66 Wash. 27, 118 Pac. 903.

Dunbar, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These two actions were brought by the respondents severally and separately to rescind a contract for the purchase of lands, and were afterwards, for convenience sake and for economy, joined and tried together. In what may be termed the Fischer Case, the complaint, after setting up the interest of Clarence D. Hillman and his relation to the C. D. Hillman's Snohomish Land & Railroad Company, matters concerning which there seems to be no real controversy, alleges: That Clarence D. Hillman represented and claimed that he owned and had a perfect title to certain lands described in the complaint. That said lands were free and clear of any and all liens and encumbrances. That there were no outstanding claims to them or interest therein. That Hillman also represented that he was going to cause to be constructed in close proximity to said lands an electric interurban railway, extending from Everett, in the county of Snohomish, to Bellingham, in the county of Whatcom; represented and promised that he would cause to be constructed a good wagon road from said lands to the town of English, in the county of Snohomish, and, in connection with such representations and promises, offered said lands for sale to plaintiff, and by and through said representations and promises sought to induce plaintiff to purchase the same, in addition thereto promising and agreeing that, if plaintiff would purchase said lands, Hillman would furnish to plaintiff an abstract showing such title as he claimed and represented that he had, and that he would at once proceed to do the various things which, it was represented by him, he was going to do, and which he promised to do. That there were situated upon the lands certain buildings, with certain furniture and fixtures therein, which the defendant Hillman claimed and represented that he owned and would sell with the land upon which they were located. That the defendant Hillman then represented that such lands were known as lots 2, 3, 4, 13, and 14, in block 109, and lots 5, 6, 7, and 8, in block 110, of C. D. Hillman's Birmingham water front addition to the city of Everett, division No. 3. That a plat of said division and addition dent person would have acted otherwise, and would have ascertained the facts by an examination which the contract did not call for. Howerton v. Augustine, 145 Iowa, 246, 121 N. W. 373.

The doctrine has been asserted that in a contract for the sale of land, it is the duty of the purchaser to guard himself against defects of title; and if he fails to do so, it is his own folly, for the law will not afford him a remedy from the consequences of his own negligence. If, however, representations are made by the vendor which may reasonably be relied upon by the purchaser, and they constitute a material inducement to the contract, and are false within the knowledge of the party making them, and cause loss and damage to the party relying on them, and he has acted with ordinary prudence in the matter, he is entitled to relief. Shell v. Roseman, 155 N. C. 90, 71 S. E. 86.

Waiver of right to rescind.

That a purchaser of real estate, before undertaking to rescind for defect in title, prosecuted proceedings to quiet the title he had acquired, which were unsuccessful, is not a waiver of or bar to his right to rescind for such defect. Strothers v. Leigh, 151 Iowa, 214, 130 N. W. 1019. A. G. S.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

was of record in the office of the auditor of Snohomish county. That Hillman offered the lands to plaintiff for the sum of $1,600, and the buildings and furniture and fixtures therein for an additional $100. That plaintiff, relying upon the representations and promises of Hillman, and believing the same to be true, and that Hillman would do all that he represented and promised that he would do, agreed to purchase the lands shown to him and represented to be technically known as hereinbefore stated, and on or about the 20th day of November, 1909, paid Hill the sum of $1,700; and said Hillman caused to be executed and delivered to plaintiff a purported deed to the same (a copy of which deed is set forth in the complaint), and upon the delivery of said deed promised plaintiff that he would furnish the abstract theretofore promised within the course of a few days. That, relying upon the representations aforesaid, plaintiff entered upon said lands and commenced and made various improvements thereon, which were reasonably worth the sum of $1,535.

The plaintiff alleges: That none of the representations made by Hillman as inducements to plaintiff to purchase the lands were true when made; nor have they since transpired. That neither the said Clarence D. Hillman nor the said C. D. Hillman's Snohomish Land & Railroad Company, at the time said representations were made, was the owner of said lands, free and clear of liens and encumbrances, or free and clear of outstanding claims and interests, nor were they the owners of the buildings upon the lands, nor the furniture or furnishings therein; but, on the contrary, they were owned by the Lake Godwin Lumber & Shingle Company, and are now owned by it. That neither said Hillman nor the C. D. Hillman's Snohomish County Land & Railroad Company owned or had a title to said lands, free and clear of liens and encumbrances or outstanding interests. That at no time was there, or is there now, of record in the office of the county auditor of the county of Snohomish, any plat showing or containing a third subdivision of C. D. Hillman's Birmingham water front addition to the city of Everett, and that the purported deed, hereinbefore set forth, given to this plaintiff upon his payment of said sum of $1,700 in cash to said Hillman, does not describe any land in the county of Snohomish, or elsewhere, susceptible of identification, and has no value to this plaintiff as muniment of title. Alleges that neither said Hillman nor the said C. D. Hillman's Snohomish County Land & Railroad Company, nor anyone else, has built or caused to be built any electric railroad in close proximity to said lands, or built any road from said lands to the town of English; nor have they made any improvements promised plaintiff by them that they would make; nor have they ever given or furnished to this plaintiff any abstract of title showing a good title in fee in said Hillman nor the said C. D. Hillman's Snohomish County Land & Railroad Company, free and clear of all encumbrances; nor have they given or furnished to this plaintiff any abstract of title whatsoever, although during the time since the said 20th day of November, 1909, they have often been requested so to do. And plaintiff alleges that, at the time Hillman made such representations and promises with respect to title and with regard to the intended and promised improvements, said representations and promises were false, and were known by the said Hillman to be false and untrue. The complaint alleges certain expenses incurred by plaintiff for the purpose of obtaining title to the land, and the discovery by the plaintiff that the representations made by Hillman as to the title were false and untrue. Alleged the discovery that there was no plat of the third addition of C. D. Hillman's Birmingham Water Front Addition to the city of Everett. That the lands had been located in another division than that described, and that they discovered that the defendants did not own the buildings or furniture which they represented to the plaintiff that they did own. That immediately upon making such discoveries plaintiff gave notice to the defendants of his rescission of the pretended purchase, and tendered to them a good and sufficient deed of reconveyance, containing an exact description of the land described in the deed which had been furnished him, and his surrender of the possession of said lands, together with the buildings thereon, furniture, and equipment, etc., and demanded of them the return to this plaintiff of the amount paid, together with the expenses incurred by the plaintiff; and plaintiff continued the tender and made it good in court, and prayed for a judgment for $3,247 against the defendants Clarence D. Hillman and C. D. Hillman's Snohomish County Land & Railroad Company. Demurrer was interposed to this complaint, which was overruled by the court. The defendants interposed an answer, admitting certain things and denying others, and the cause went to trial. The court, after a view of the premises, decreed that the contract of purchase be rescinded and annulled, and that the plaintiff recover of the defendants $2,281, together with the costs and expenses of this action.

What is said in relation to this case applies with equal force to the companion case of Staats v. Hillman, so that we will not discuss them separately.

It is earnestly contended by appellants that the demurrers to these complaints should have been sustained; that the plaintiff was in a position to ascertain the truthfulness of the statements and representations made by the defendants; that there was no fiduciary relation existing; and that it was the plaintiff's duty to ascertain the truth or falsity of said statements; and many cases are cited to sustain this rule. It may be admitted that some of the earlier cases decided by this court, notably the case of Newland v. Dobson, 11 Wash. 90, 39 Pac. 240, laid down a rule that gives color, at least, to appellants' contention, and that the language used was broad enough to sustain such contention. But that rule has been mitigated by the later decisions of this court, and, as we view it now, was probably not fully justified by the authorities extant at the time it was announced. It has been supplanted by the more reasonable and humane rule that a party will not be allowed to shield himself, because the party with whom he was dealing was careless or too confiding; and that, while the state cannot stand in loco parentis to all its citizens, the crafty and designing will not be allowed, by cunning artifice tending to deceive the simple-minded, to rob them of what justly belongs to them.

This doctrine was announced in Wooddy v. Benton Water Co. 54 Wash. 124, 132 Am. St. Rep. 1102, 102 Pac. 1054, where it was said: "Nor can we agree with the court below that the doctrine of caveat emptor applies to the representations made by the respondents, to the effect that the entire tract was under the level of the canal and susceptible of irrigation therefrom. Strong language has been used by this and other courts in defining the duties of purchasers, from which it might be inferred that vendors have an unbridled license to lie and deceive; but such has never been the law, and the tendency of the more recent cases has been to restrict, rather than extend, the doctrine of caveat emptor." The court then quotes from Strand v. Griffith, 38 C. C. A. 444, 97 Fed. 854, where it was said: "There is no rule of law which requires men, in their business transactions, to act upon the presumption that all men are knaves and liars, and which declares them guilty of negligence, and refuses them redress, whenever they fail to act on that presumption. The fraudulent vendor cannot escape from liability by asking the law to applaud his fraud and condemn his victim for his credulity. 'No rogue should enjoy his ill-gotten plunder, for the simple reason that his victim is by chance a fool.'" And citing Noyes 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

v. Belding, 5 S. D. 603, 59 N. W. 1069, where the court said: "The unmistakable drift is towards the just doctrine that the wrongdoer cannot shield himself from liability by asking the law to condemn the credulity of his victim." [Fargo Gas & Coke Co. v. Fargo Gas & Electric Co. 4 N. D. 224, 37 L.R.A. 593, 59 N. W. 1066.] See also Watson v. Molden, 10 Idaho, 570, 79 Pac. 503. In 14 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. pp. 120, 121, the rule is thus stated: "By the overwhelming weight of authority, ordinary prudence and diligence do not require a person to test the truth of representations made to him by another as of his own knowledge, and with the intention that they shall be acted upon, if the facts are peculiarly within the other party's knowledge or means of knowledge, though they are not exclusively so, and though the party to whom the representations are made may have an opportunity of ascertaining the truth for himself. By the weight of authority, and in reason, the rule that a person who is voluntarily blind as to facts concerning which false representations are made cannot complain if the same applies only where the parties have equal present opportunity and means to ascertain the truth at the time of the transaction; and does not apply merely because it is possible to ascertain the facts. Indeed, it has been held that a person is justified in relying on a representation made to him in all cases where the representation is a positive statement of fact, and where an investigation would be required to discover the truth." The doctrine announced in this case has been reaffirmed many times since by this court. See also, as sustaining this rule: McMullen v. Rousseau, 40 Wash. 497, 82 Pac. 883; Lindsay v. Davidson, 57 Wash. 517, 107 Pac. 514; Bailie v. Parker, 56 Wash. 353, 105 Pac. 834; Best v. Offield, 59 Wash. 466, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 55, 110 Pac. 17; West v. Carter, 54 Wash. 236, 103 Pac. 21; Godfrey v. Olson, — Wash. —, 122 Pac. 1014.

It must be borne in mind that these were not simply the expressions of opinion made by the vendor, wherein another rule obtains, but were statements of fact which were relied upon as facts by the purchaser. The demurrers were properly overruled, and the trial of the cause upon its merits justified the decree rendered by the court. The defendants in this case were, to say the least, smooth, experienced real-estate men, who resorted to extreme measures to sell the lands offered. Excursions were promoted and clackers employed to harangue the credulous and unsuspecting, while the purchasers in these particular cases were men of simple habits and thought, seafaring men who had spent their lives at sea, and were not mentally equipped to withstand the blandishments which were brought to bear upon them.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mount, Morris, Fullerton, and Ellis, JJ., concur.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBERT PETERSON, Admr., etc., of Charles Peterson, Deceased, Resp't.,
v.

P. BALLANTINE & SONS, Appt.

(205 N. Y. 29, 98 N. E. 202.)

Highway — crossing street — negligence of pedestrian.

One who attempts to cross a street diagonally at a point other than a cross walk, having his ears covered and looking straight ahead, without heed to traffic on the street, is negligent, and cannot recover for injuries received by being run down by a passing team.

(March 19, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Trial Term, Part IV., for King's County, in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a motion for new trial in an action brought to recover damages for the death of plaintiff's intestate, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Grant C. Fox, with Messrs. Ashbel P. Fitch, Mott & Grant, for appellant:

The plaintiff's intestate was guilty of contributory negligence as matter of law.

Perez v. Sandrowitz, 180 N. Y. 397, 73 N. E. 228; Baxter v. Auburn & S. Electric R. Co. 190 N. Y. 439, 83 N. E. 469; Weiss v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 33 App. Div. 221, 53 N. Y. Supp. 449; Wecker v. Brooklyn, Q. C. & S. R. Co. 136 App. Div. 340 120 N. Y. Supp. 1020; Barker v. Savage, 45 N. Y. 191, 6 Am. Rep. 66; Dolfini v. Erie R. Co. 178 N. Y. 1, 70 N. E. 68; Smedis v. Brooklyn & R. B. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 14; Wieland v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 167 N. Y. 19, 82 Am. St. Rep. 707, 60 N. E. 234; Belton v. Baxter, 54 N. Y. 245, 13 Am. Rep. 578; McClain v. Brooklyn City

R. Co. 116 N. Y. 465, 22 N. E. 1062; Harvey v. Nassau Electric R. Co. 35 App. Div. 307, 55 N. Y. Supp. 20; Wiwirowski v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 124 N. Y. 420, 26 N. E. 1023.

Mr. Martin T. Manton, for respondent: Plaintiff's intestate was free from contributory negligence.

Harrison v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 127 App. Div. 804, 111 N. Y. Supp. 812; Paulding v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 132 App. Div. 70, 116 N. Y. Supp. 518; Hickman v. William Schimper & Co. 125 App. Div. 217, 109 N. Y. Supp. 325; Kettle v. Turl, 162 N. Y. 258, 56 N. E. 626; Hodges v. Westcott Exp. Co. 39 App. Div. 346, 57 N. Y. Supp. 318.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The appellate division, by a divided court, has affirmed a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, upon the verdict of a jury, in an action brought to recover damages of the defendant upon a charge of negligence. The plaintiff alleged that the death of his intestate was caused by the negligent driving of the horses attached to a wagon belonging to the defendant, in one of the streets of the borough of Brooklyn, and that the deceased did not contribute to the result by any negligence on his part. The accident occurred in the daytime, while the deceased was crossing Forty-Second street, between Third and Second avenues. One of the defendant's brewery wagons, drawn by a pair of horses and driven by one of its men, was coming from Third avenue, at the time. The horses came into collision with the deceased, who fell and was run over by one of the front wheels of the wagon. While the way in which the accident happened was disputed, the evidence for the plaintiff warranted the jury in finding it to have been as stated. The testimony of plaintiff's chief witness of the occurrence justified the jurors in believing that the horses were being driven at a fast gait, and that the driver and a fellow servant occupying the seat with him were looking over their shoulders, in the direction of where an organ grinder was playing. Upon the question of the negligence of the defendant's servants, there is no serious contention. They were inattentive and failed in their duty, while driving through the public street, to be watchful lest they should cause injury to others having equal rights to be there.

But the plaintiff was wholly unable to support the allegation of his complaint by any evidence proving, or tending to show, that the deceased did not contribute to the accident. It was shown by the same witness to whom reference has been made, a Mrs.

Note. — As to duty of pedestrian crossing or traveling public street to avoid passing teams, see notes to Spokane Toilet Supply Co. 19 L.R.A.(N.S.) 161, and Mugge v. Bracken, ante, 481.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

McLoughlin, that she was at the window of her house when the deceased was leaving the sidewalk and started to cross the street. When he got to a point about the middle of the street, the horses were coming fast towards him, and she saw him struck down by them. She says that he had "a heavy overcoat turned up and a heavy earcap down." The witness narrated the occurrence, as she watched it from her window, from the time he left the sidewalk. From her account it appears that the deceased "did not go straight. He went . . . slanting, . . . more towards Third avenue," in "the direction from which the horses were coming." There was "a clear space" between him and them. There "was nothing to prevent him from seeing the brewery horses." He walked at "the same gait all the time, . . . until he was struck."

She was asked and answered the following questions:

Q. At that time did you see him look towards the brewery horses?

A. No, sir. I did not. He was going right straight across.

Q. Was he looking up, or looking down, that you could see?

A. He was looking right straight across ahead of him.

Q. Right in front of him?

A. Yes, sir; right ahead of him. He was going catercornered across the street.

Q. You did not see him do anything at the time but keep on walking?

A. No, sir. He did not move, only go right ahead.

Q. Did not go any faster?

A. No, sir.

That was all of the evidence upon the subject of the conduct of the deceased, from the one witness upon whom the plaintiff relied, and, so far from exonerating him from fault, it leads to the inference that, if in the position of the faculty of observation, he failed to exercise it at a moment when it was highly incumbent upon him to do so.

He had the right to cross the street between its regular crossings; but he was bound, when doing so, to be reasonably careful, and the plaintiff was not entitled to charge the defendant with liability for the accident, however negligent its servants, unless he could adduce evidence, which proved, or tended to prove, that the deceased was free from fault at the time. The difficulty with the case is in the plaintiff's failure in that respect.

Less evidence may be required to show freedom from fault where the injured party is dead; but, nevertheless, there must be some facts which, reasonably considered, 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

permit of such an inference. The relaxation of the rule is not as to the burden of proof on the plaintiff, in such an event. It is as to the quantum of proof, and greater latitude is allowed in permitting the inference of an exercise of care. Baxter v. Auburn & S. Electric R. Co. 190 N. Y. 439, 83 N. E. 469. It was as essential to plaintiff's case to establish that by some evidence, as it was to show the negligence for which the defendant was responsible; for, where both parties concur in acts causing the injury, the blame cannot be placed exclusively upon the defendant. And where the evidence is as consistent with a neglect of duty or care on the part of the injured party, as it is with their exercise, upon what principle shall a jury be allowed to speculate upon the probabilities? On the evidence it is impossible to conclude whether the deceased was in some condition which rendered him indifferent to danger (as to which there was some evidence in the case), or whether he was reckless of the possible impediment to hearing or sight from the turned up overcoat and the turned down earcaps.

This case, in its material facts, is not to be distinguished from that of Perez v. Sandrowitz, 180 N. Y. 397, 73 N. E. 228, where we reversed a judgment recovered by the plaintiff, and the following quotation from the opinion in the latter case is apposite: "The deceased was going in the direction from which the horses were coming. The danger was apparent, and had he used his eyes, as he was bound to do, it must have been evident to him. However negligent the driver of the wagon, the plaintiff's evidence failed to meet the burden imposed by the law in such cases, of showing that the deceased was free from fault." Page 400 of 180 N. Y.

The defendant was entitled to the dismissal of the complaint upon its motion, and therefore the judgment should be reversed and a new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Haight, Vann, Werner, Hiscock, and Collin, JJ., concur.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

GEORGE FRANK SMITH

v.

DAVID B. CROCKETT COMPANY, Appt.

(85 Conn. 282, 82 Atl. 569.)

Principal and agent — bribery of purchasing agents — effect.

1. No compensation can be recovered by a salesman for services rendered under a contract which contained a provision for reimbursing him a certain sum to be allowed purchasing agents for turning business his way.

Evidence — bonus to sales agent — purpose.

2. In an action by a sales agent to recover compensation under a contract which contains a provision for reimbursing him for money paid unknown persons as bonuses, evidence is admissible that the bonuses were used to influence purchasing agents in order to secure their business.

(March 7, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for New Haven County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover compensation for services rendered under a contract for salary and expenses. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. James A. Marr for appellant.

Mr. William B. Stoddard for appellee.

Hall, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Paragraph 1 of the complaint alleges that on the 6th of April, 1906, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into the following written agreement:

April 6, 1906.

Agreement made this day between the David B. Crockett Company of Bridgeport, party of the first part, and Mr. G. F. Smith of Milford, Connecticut, party of the second part. The party of the first part agrees to pay the party of the second part the sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) per annum, and if the sales of the said party of the second part reach the sum of thirteen thousand dollars ($13,000) between the first day of May, 1906, and the first day of May, 1907, they agree to pay the further sum of five hundred dollars ($500), and if the sales reach twenty thousand dollars ($20,000) the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) will be paid in addition to the $2,000. The party of the second part agrees on his part to use his best endeavors to sell the goods manufactured by the party of the first part to railroads, steam, trolley, etc.; the party of the first part agrees also on the first of every month to pay the party of the second part one hundred dollars ($100) for expenses during the month following, also to allow the party of the second part to pay to persons unknown to the party of the first part a bonus amounting to not more than twenty-five cents (25 cts.) per gallon.

Paragraphs 2 and 3 allege that the plaintiff continued in the employ of the defendant under said contract, performing his duties, until October 1, 1909, when by mutual agreement said contract was abandoned, and that there remains due the plaintiff under the contract, for salary and expenses, the sum of $2,500, for which a bill of particulars was filed by the plaintiff, showing the amount of his salary during said period to be $7,000 the amount of his expenses incurred to be $4,200, and the amount paid to him to be $8,650. In its second defense the defendant alleges, in substance, that the agreement under which the plaintiff sues provides that, in order to make sales of the goods in question, the plaintiff was permitted to pay a bonus of not more than 25 cents per gallon to persons who were to be unknown to the defendant, and that it was so made for unlawful objects, and that it is void as being contrary to public policy.

The defendant attached to his answer a statement showing that, in rendering the services and incurring the expenses for which this suit is brought, the plaintiff paid bonuses to persons unknown to the defendant, and which have been repaid to the plaintiff, to the amount of $547.95. The court found that the defendant had paid to the plaintiff the $7,000 salary, the $547.95 bonuses, and that there was due the plain-

Note. — Salesmen's right to recover compensation as affected by employment of improper methods to make sales.

This note is confined solely to the right of a salesman to recover compensation where, as in SMITH v. DAVID B. CROCKETT Co., with knowledge of his employer the salesman uses improper methods to effect a sale, and which in no way prejudices his principal. Aside from SMITH v. DAVID B. CROCKETT Co., but one other case has been found which has considered this question, and it is in accord with the latter case in holding that, such agreements being contrary to public policy, recovery cannot be had.

40 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Thus in McDonell v. Rigney, 108 Mich. 276, 66 N. W. 52, it was held that an agreement between a real estate agent receiving commissions for the sale of certain lots and the owner of those lots, that the agent should make colorable purchases of the lots for the purpose of inducing others to buy, is void as against public policy, and so a nonsuit was properly granted in an action to recover commissions on sale of lots made by those means.

For note on fraud and secret dealings or interest of real estate brokers as affecting their commissions, see note in 45 L.R.A. 1.

J. H. B.

tiff $1,750 under the provision of the contract giving him $100 a month for expenses, which sum with interest made up the judgment in favor of the plaintiff of $1,927.33.

During the trial the defendant, in support of its claim that said agreement for the payment of bonuses was illegal, asked of the plaintiff as a witness various questions to show what was done in the payment of bonuses, and whether they were paid to the agents who purchased goods, and for the purpose of influencing such agents to purchase such goods for their principals. These questions were excluded by the trial court, apparently upon the grounds that the provision concerning the payment of bonuses, even though invalid, is separable from the other provisions of the agreement, and is not the provision of the contract sued upon or sought to be enforced by the plaintiff. That such was the view of the trial court is indicated by its statement in excluding the offered evidence that, if the plaintiff were seeking to recover the $500 bonus which he had paid out, he would be "standing on quite a different basis."

We are of opinion that by the present action the plaintiff is in effect asking the court to enforce the objectionable provision of the contract concerning bonuses. While the finding shows that the plaintiff has been repaid the large sum, which in accordance with the items of the contract he paid as bonuses, he has not been fully paid, as the contract provided he should be, for his services in procuring such sales, and he is by this action asking for the payment of the remainder of the compensation which under the contract he was to receive for his services and expenses in making sales by the method providing by the contract. The duty of the plaintiff under the contract, and the real and only purpose for which he was employed, and for which he was to be paid, was to make sales of the goods manufactured by the defendant. What these goods were the contract does not indicate, any further than that they were goods to be sold by the gallon. The finding, however, states that they were varnishes. The plaintiff was to sell these goods to "railroads, steam, trolley," etc. The contract provided that in order to make such sales the plaintiff might pay bonuses to parties unknown to the defendant. It also contemplated the plaintiff would devote his time, wholly or in part, to the making of such sales, and would incur other expenses than the payment of the bonuses. For all such services and expenses, if the sales made between May, 1906, and May, 1907, did not reach $13,000, the plaintiff was to receive $2,000 per annum, the further sum of $100 per month, and apparently such sum as he should pay in bonuses to unknown parties not exceeding 25 cents per gallon.

In accomplishing the sales which he has made, it appears that the plaintiff has paid between $500 and $600 as bonuses, in accordance with the provisions of the contract. If these bonuses were intended to be paid, and were paid, as bribes to purchasing agents of the railroads to induce such agents to purchase the defendant's varnishes for their principals, or to afford such agents the opportunity of graft, which is the receiving of personal gain without rendering compensatory services, by persons holding positions of trust and confidence, and is but a form of bribery (State v. Sheridan, 14 Idaho, 222, 15 L.R.A.(N.S.) 497, 93 Pac. 656; Dixon v. Chappell, 133 Ky. 663, 118 S. W. 929; Quinn v. Review Pub. Co. 55 Wash. 69, 133 Am. St. Rep. 1016, 104 Pac. 181, 19 Ann. Cas. 1077), if such, we repeat, were the purposes of these bonuses, this provision of the contract was intended to induce persons to violate the confidence reposed in them by their employers and principals. Such an agreement is opposed to honesty in business. It is contrary to public policy. It is illegal, and the time spent and the expense incurred by the plaintiff in so accomplishing or attempting to so accomplish sales were as much a part of the illegal transactions as was the actual payment of the bonus itself. If such was the real character of this provision, the plaintiff could neither recover for services rendered, nor for expenses incurred, nor for bonuses paid in making the sales.

The law will not compensate the plaintiff for such act, or for any act or service or expense whatever rendered or incurred in the accomplishment or attempt to accomplish sales by such methods. The promise to pay for such services would be based upon an illegal consideration. Every contract the consideration of which is illegal is void, and so is every engagement which has such illegal contract as its basis, or which may properly be considered part and parcel of such contract. Sturges v. Bush, 5 Day, 452, 460. "Contracts which are opposed to open, upright, and fair dealing are opposed to public policy. A contract by which one is placed under a direct inducement to violate the confidence reposed in him by another is of this character." Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 135, 18 Am. Rep. 459. "Courts not only redress fraud, but seek to prevent it by removing temptation." McDonald v. Haugh- ton, 70 N. C. 399. "The law avoids contracts and promises made with a view to place one under wrong influences; those which offer him a temptation to do that which may affect injuriously the rights and interests of third persons." Bollman v. Loomis, 41 Conn. 581, 584. Neither courts of law nor equity are open to enforce such contracts. If both parties are in pari delicto, the courts will leave them where they find them.

This rule, however, permits either party to plead and prove by proper evidence the illegal character of the contract. Funk v. Gallivan, 49 Conn. 124, 128, 44 Am. Rep. 210.

We come, then, to the questions of whether the defendant should have been permitted to prove facts showing that, by the language used, the parties contemplated that the bonuses should be paid for corrupt and unlawful purposes.

An agreement to pay a bonus is not necessarily a corrupt and unlawful agreement. Generally a bonus is a sum given or paid beyond what is legally required to be paid to the recipient. The words "payment of a bonus" may also be used in the sense of payment of a bribe (Century Dictionary); of the payment of a sum to weaken or destroy the fidelity of a trusted agent.

The defendant had pleaded that the provision for the payment of bonuses to unknown persons was for unlawful purposes, and was void, as contrary to public policy.

If, when read in connection with the entire writing, the provision in question was "ambiguous or of doubtful import," the defendant was entitled under its answer to present evidence showing in what sense the parties used the word "bonus" (Adams v. Turner, 73 Conn. 38, 45, 46 Atl. 247; Parker v. Selden, 69 Conn. 552, 38 Atl. 212; Re Curtis, 64 Conn. 501, 514, 42 Am. St. Rep. 200, 30 Atl. 769) and that it was used with the intention of providing for the payment of bonuses for unlawful and corrupt purposes.

This rule does not permit either party to a contract to testify on direct examination what the intention of the parties was, or what his intention was, in using the words or terms of doubtful import, but only to prove facts and circumstances not inconsistent with the writing itself, tending to prove in what sense the parties used such words or terms. Brown v. Slater, 16 Conn. 192, 196, 41 Am. Dec. 136; Fairfield v. Lawson, 50 Conn. 501, 510, 47 Am. Rep. 669. Such was the apparent purpose of the questions asked the plaintiff which were excluded.

We think the defendant was entitled to prove to whom, and under what circumstances, and for what purposes, the bonuses were in fact paid by the plaintiff, and that the court erred in excluding the questions asked of the plaintiff for that purpose, and in holding that the provision respecting the payment of bonuses was separable from those regarding the payment of the $2,000 a year, and the $100 a month.

There is error, and a new trial is ordered.

In this opinion the other Judges concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 2.)

ROBERT JOHNS, Doing Business under the Name of Standard Talking Machine Company, Appt.,

v.

OZIAS P. JAYCOX et al., Respts.

(67 Wash. 403, 121 Pac. 854.)

Principal and agent—warranty to effect sale — binding effect.

1. A traveling agent for the sale of talking machines, who carries printed order blanks, has no implied authority to warrant that one buying a large number of machines to be given away for advertising purposes will sell a certain number of records for each machine within a given time after it is given out, and the purchaser therefore has no right of action for breach

Note. — Extent of a commercial traveler's implied or ostensible authority to warrant goods.

The majority of the cases which have passed upon the implied authority of commercial travelers to warrant limit the authority as it is limited in JOHNS v. JAYCOX, to making such warranties as are usual or customary to the business in which such traveler is engaged.

Thus, in Dingle v. Hare, 7 C. B. N. S. 145, 29 L. J. C. P. N. S. 143, 6 Jur. N. S. 679, 1 L. T. N. S. 38, it was held that where it is usual for fertilizers to be sold with a warranty, that a traveling commercial agent has implied authority to warrant that the superphosphates in certain fertilizers sold by him contain a certain per cent of lime.

In Pickert v. Marston, 68 Wis. 465, 60 Am. Rep. 876, 32 N. W. 550, it was held that a traveling agent for a fish house has implied authority to make the usual war-of such warranty, if authority to make it had not been actually conferred upon the agent.

Sale — waiver of warranty — necessity for goods.

2. That when a customer learns that the seller repudiates a guaranty made by his agent to effect the sale of his product, he has placed himself in a position where he must have the goods, does not affect the effect of his ordering them to be shipped with knowledge of the repudiation, as a waiver of the warranty.

(March 9, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Walla Walla County for less than the relief demanded in an action brought to recover a balance due on a written contract for goods alleged to have been sold and delivered to defendants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

ranties, and it is for the jury to say whether a warranty that fish intended to be shipped a long distance would reach the purchaser in good condition is such a usual one.

In Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 180, 34 Am. Rep. 4, a salesman of safes was held to have such implied authority to warrant as is customary in the sale of such articles, and if the jury should find that it was customary to warrant that the safe was made of a certain peculiar tough kind of iron, and would withstand any attempt by a burglar, armed with the best implements of his trade to enter it, for a certain period of time, such warranty would bind his principal, in the absence of an express prohibition brought to the notice of the purchaser. On a second appeal of this case, reported in 73 Ala. 446, it is stated that the custom of sellers of safes must be so well settled, notorious, and continuous as to raise a fair presumption that it was known to buyer and seller, and that the sales were made in reference to it.

In Reynolds v. Mayor, L. & Co. 39 App. Div. 218, 57 N. Y. Supp. 1145, the court lays down the same rule, and says that where it is shown that the salesman always assumed to warrant goods, and that it was the universal custom of dealers in plumbers' supplies so to warrant, the jury might find that a traveling salesman of a plumber's supply house had implied authority to warrant that a certain tank was as good as that of another make named by the purchaser.

So, it was held in Waupaca Electric Light & R. Co. v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 112 Wis. 469, 88 N. W. 308, that a salesman of electrical machinery may make the usual and customary warranties.

So, where the warranty was usual or customary, it has been held that a salesman has implied authority to warrant, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Messrs. W. B. Mitton and Brooks & Bartlett, for appellant:

If defendants had information and knowledge of facts which, in the exercise of common sense and ordinary prudence, were sufficient to put them upon inquiry and lead them to knowledge of the truth, they will be liable the same as if they had actual knowledge.

Estee, Pl. § 2732; Hospes v. North Western Mfg. & Car Co. 48 Minn. 174, 15 L.R.A. 470, 31 Am. St. Rep. 637, 50 N. W. 1117.

Mere representations by way of commendation, or which merely express the vendor's opinion, belief, judgment, or estimate, do not constitute warranties.

Sauerman v. Simmons, 74 Ark. 563, 86 S. W. 429; Collins v. Tigner, 5 Penn. (Del.) 345, 60 Atl. 978.

Where a party makes false representations of material facts which he believes to be true, and the other party has equal opportunity of ascertaining their truth or —that automobile oil is noninflammable and safe. Conkling v. Standard Oil Co. 138 Iowa, 596, 116 N. W. 822; —that a binder will do as good work as any other in the market. Canham v. Plano Mfg. Co. 3 N. D. 229, 55 N. W. 583;

—that a band cutter and feeder will do good work. Parsons Band Cutter & Self Feeder Co. v. Haub, 83 Minn. 180, 86 N. W. 14;

—that a pump is good. Nelson v. Cowing, 6 Hill, 336;

—that clocks will run and keep good time for twelve months with proper care. Woodford v. McClenahan, 9 Ill. 85.

So, a salesman has been held to have implied authority to warrant the goods sold by him generally. Hunter v. Jameson, 28 N. C. (6 Ired. L.) 252 (clocks); Murray v. Brooks, 41 Iowa, 45 (reapers).

In Boothby v. Scales, 27 Wis. 626, a salesman authorized to sell fanning mills was held to have implied authority to warrant the mill to clean grain for the market by running through once, and for seeding by running through twice; that it would clean a certain number of bushels per hour, and that it would separate oats from wheat, unless the purchaser knew that the salesman's authority was limited, and that he was exceeding his powers.

In the absence of a custom or usage so to warrant, the implied authority of a traveling salesman to warrant has been denied, —where a salesman assumed to warrant that goods manufactured by his employers and known as "zebeline" were absolutely all wool. Ellner v. Priestley, 39 Misc. 535, 80 N. Y. Supp. 371;

—where a salesman assumed to warrant that oil sold by him would dry in twenty-four hours. Pennsylvania & D. Oil Co. v. Spitelink, 27 Misc. 557, 58 N. Y. Supp. 311; —where a salesman assumed to warrant that flour sold by him would keep sweet falsity, or has the means of informing himself by use of reasonable diligence, such statements do not furnish a ground for even equitable relief.

Brooks v. Hamilton, 15 Minn. 26, Gil. 10; Buckner v. Street, 5 McCrary, 59, 15 Fed. 365; Seeley v. Reed, 25 Fed. 361; Manlock v. Fairbanks, 46 Wis. 415, 32 Am. Rep. 716, 1 N. W. 167; Parke v. Boston, 175 Mass. 464, 56 N. E. 718; Stimson v. Helps, 9 Colo. 33, 10 Pac. 290; Southern Development Co. v. Silva, 125 U. S. 247, 31 L. ed. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 881, 15 Mor. Min. Rep. 435.

Messrs. T. P. Gose and C. C. Gose for respondents.

ELLIS, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action to recover a balance due upon a written contract for 200 talking machines sold by the plaintiff to the defendants through an agent. The material facts are during a long sea voyage. Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163. Compare with Talmage v. Bierhausa, infra; —where a salesman for a manufacturer of felt cloth assumed to warrant that the goods would make an ulster, and that it "wears like buckskin." Bierman v. City Mills Co. 10 Misc. 140, 30 N. Y. Supp. 929. This case was reversed on other grounds in 151 N. Y. 482, 37 L.R.A. 799, 56 Am. St. Rep. 635, 45 N. E. 856.

In Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter, 139 Ala. 359, 36 So. 12, it was held that the mere fact that one is a traveling salesman for a fish packing house, with authority to take orders for fish, did not give him implied authority to bind his house by warranty that the fish would keep sound for twelve months.

The commercial traveler has implied authority to warrant that the goods sold by him will be equal to the sample. Thus, in Loomis Mill Co. v. Vawter, 8 Kan. App. 437, 57 Pac. 43, a general traveling agent for the sale of flour to be manufactured for the purchaser was held to have implied authority to warrant that it would be equal to certain brands made by another, and adopted as a sample for the purchase of such sale.

And in Dreyfus v. Goss, 67 Kan. 57, 72 Pac. 537, a traveling salesman for a liquor house was held to have implied authority to warrant that the goods would be of the character and quality of the sample carried by him.

Nothing is said as to implied authority to warrant in Victor Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rheinschild, 25 Kan. 534, but a sewing machine company was held bound by the warranty of one who represented himself as a general agent, that the machines were better than those of another company named by the dealer.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

nearly all admitted. The machines were purchased to give away to defendants' customers as an advertisement. When first approached, the defendants declined to make the purchase. The agent then proposed that, if the defendants would execute the printed form of contract which he produced, he would give them a written guaranty that the defendants would sell an average of twenty-five records to each customer to whom a machine was given. Thereupon the defendants and the plaintiff by his agent executed in duplicate and mutually delivered the printed contract for the purchase of 200 machines, with nine 7-inch records each, at a price of $8.20 for each machine and its nine records. In the contract the plaintiff agreed to furnish to defendants any number of 7-inch disc records at 30 cents each net, with the understanding that they would be retailed by defendants at 50 cents each or given away without charge. The agent then executed in

In Talmage v. Bierhausa, 103 Ind. 270, 2 N. E. 716, an argument that it was necessary to prove that sales such as were under consideration were usually attended with warranties was disapproved, and it was held that a traveling salesman upon whom had been conferred general authority to sell rice would be presumed to have authority to warrant that the rice would keep all summer, if kept in a dry, cool place.

In Haynor Mfg. Co. v. Davis, 147 N. C. 267, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 193, 61 S. E. 54, nothing is said as to the necessity of proving that warranty is customary. An agent for the sale of what was claimed to be a non-alcoholic beverage was held to have implied authority to warrant the same to be such, and the company was bound by the agent's agreement with the customer to make good any sum such customer would be required to pay because of its alcoholic nature.

The implied authority of a commercial traveler to warrant the character of oil sold by him does not include the power to warrant as to subsequent sales made by his principals direct. Wait v. Borne, 123 N. Y. 592, 25 S. E. 1053.

The salesman has usually no implied authority to warrant as to matters other than those directly connected with the article he is selling. Thus, in Lucile Min. Co. v. Fairbanks, M. & Co. 27 Ky. L. Rep. 1100, 87 S. W. 1121, a salesman of pumps was held to have no implied authority to warrant that a boiler of the purchasers was of sufficient size to operate the pump at a certain rate.

And in J. M. Case Mill Mfg. Co. v. Vickers, — Ky. —, 144 S. W. 76, a salesman of flour milling machinery was held to have no implied authority to warrant that the power in the purchaser's mill was sufficient to operate a sifter system which the salesman had sold.

W. A. E.

the name of the plaintiff, and delivered to the defendants, the following guaranty:

Part of contract attached between Standard Talking Machine Company and O. P. Jaycox & Company. All machines and records not sold or given away four months from receipt of goods, and returned in good condition freight paid to Chicago, Illinois. Cost price of each machine and records will be refunded to A. P. Jaycox & Company. Guarantee sale of twenty-five records on average to each machine given away four months from date customer has received machine.

Standard Talking Machine Company,

[Signed] F. P. Howard, Salesman.

The memorandum delivered to the defendants was a carbon duplicate; but it was claimed by the plaintiff that the agent did not send to him the original nor any copy thereof, but only the plaintiff's duplicate of the printed contract. There being no evidence to the contrary, we must assume this as a fact. There was evidence that one of the defendants, Bridges, before payment for the first shipment of machines had been made, called upon the plaintiff's manager in Chicago, and was there informed that the plaintiff would not guarantee sales of records; that the agent had no authority to do so; that no more goods would be shipped until there was a definite understanding, and that an understanding was then reached that the plaintiff would not be held to guarantee the sales of records. The defendant Bridges claimed that he had no memory of such an agreement. It is unquestioned, however, that, after a part of the machines and records were delivered, and a further instalment was ordered, the plaintiff, being then informed of the memorandum, wrote to the defendants that he would not guarantee the sales of the records; that the agent had no such authority; that the order would be held up awaiting reply, "and if satisfactory to you, you can wire us upon receipt of this communication and we will make prompt shipment of the order." The defendants replied by wire, "Ship fifty machines and records as ordered at once." At that time the defendants were compelled to have the remaining number of the machines to supply to customers to whom tickets had already been issued. The remaining machines and records were then furnished. A part of the agreed purchase price remaining unpaid, action was commenced for its recovery. The defendants interposed a counterclaim for loss of profits upon sales of records which should have been made to meet the guaranty contained in the memorandum. The cause was tried to the court without a jury. The court found that the guaranty was a part of the contract; that defendants' loss of profits was $400; that there remained unpaid of the purchase price $410. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff for $10 and costs. The plaintiff has appealed.

The appellant contends that the memorandum of guaranty was never a part of the contract, because the agent had no authority to make it; that when he appeared with a printed form of contract he was without apparent authority to modify it, and the respondents were not warranted in believing that he had authority to make the memorandum of guaranty or warranty. While an agent's authority can hardly be limited by the form of blanks he carries, that circumstance and the nature of the business should put a purchaser on inquiry. The apparent scope of his authority was that of a sales agent, and it is upon the powers implied by that relation that any sound decision of this case must rest. There is much seeming confusion in the adjudicated cases upon this question. There are decisions which hold that an agent upon whom general authority to sell is conferred will be presumed to have authority to warrant unless the contrary appears. Talmage v. Bierhaue, 103 Ind. 270, 2 N. E. 716; Woodford v. McClenahan, 9 Ill. 85; Alpha Mills v. Watertown Steam Engine Co. 116 N. C. 797, 21 S. E. 917; Dennis v. Ashley, 15 Mo. 453; Milburn v. Belloni, 34 Barb. 607; Manley v. Ackler, 76 Hun, 540, 28 N. Y. Supp. 181; Schuchardt v. Allen, 1 Wall. 359, 17 L. ed. 642. But an examination of those cases shows that, while announcing a very broad rule, they in reality, when applied to the given facts, go only to the extent that the implied power of warranty by the agent, upon which a purchaser may rely, extends to those things necessary to consummate the contract and usually incident thereto and relating to the title, quality, or condition of the thing sold. In none of them was the rule actually applied as authorizing warranties so extraordinary as that here presented.

A careful consideration of the authorities cited in the briefs, as well as an independent search, leads us to the conclusion that the rule laid down in 31 Cyc., as the one supported by the more numerous and more recent decisions, is also the one in consonance with the better reason. It is as follows: "The rule which is supported by the more numerous and more recent decisions is that, if in the sale of that kind or class of goods which the agent is empowered to sell, it is usual in the market to give a warranty, the agent may give that warranty in order to effect a sale, and the law presumes that he has such authority; and that if an agent with express authority to sell has no actual authority to warrant, no authority can be implied, where the property is of a description not usually sold with warranty. . . . The implied power of an agent to warrant title and quality rests upon the necessity and propriety of such warranties in the sale of goods. It is not therefore to be extended to other warranties of an extraordinary sort, however impossible the agent may find it to make a sale without giving such warranties." 31 Cyc. pp. 1353, 1355, 1356.

The correct principle, briefly stated, is that an agent under a general employment to make sales is impliedly authorized to employ only those means for the purpose usual to the business, and that the purchaser cannot safely assume that he has authority to make any extraordinary guaranty or warranty, or one beyond the usage of the business in which the agent is employed. Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163; Wait v. Borne, 123 N. Y. 592, 25 N. E. 1053; Bierman v. City Mills Co. 10 Misc. 140, 30 N. Y. Supp. 929; Hayner v. Churchill, 29 Mo. App. 676; Palmer v. Hatch, 46 Mo. 585; Reese v. Bates, 94 Va. 321, 26 S. E. 865; Waupaca Electric Light & R. Co. v. Milwaukee Electric R. & Light Co. 112 Wis. 469, 88 N. W. 308; Troy Grocery Co. v. Potter, 139 Ala. 359, 36 So. 12; Anderson v. Bruner, 112 Mass. 14.

The rule thus stated appeals to us the one best calculated to preserve that just balance which the law is intended to maintain, between a reasonable protection of the principal from the unauthorized acts of his agent, and a reasonable protection of the purchaser from an unwarranted repudiation by the principal of the acts of the agent. We have been cited to no authority, and a careful search has revealed none, in which it has ever been held that an agent employed to make sales at wholesale has an implied authority not only to warrant the quality of the thing sold, but also to guarantee that the purchaser will make sales thereof at retail in any particular amount or at any given profit. A more extraordinary guaranty can hardly be imagined. We can conceive of no sound principle upon which such a holding could rest. There was no evidence of any prevailing custom in the business of selling talking machines, which would warrant an assumption on the purchaser's part that the guaranty was authorized. The extraordinary nature of the guaranty made proof of such custom essential to a recovery upon the guaranty. In the absence of any showing of an express authority. So far as disclosed, there was no such custom.

As has been said in a similar case: 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

"Usages of trade are not recognizable, unless they have the essential elements of certainty, notoriety, and continuity, bringing themselves home to the knowledge of those who are concerned in the trade or business to which they may pertain. The courts adhere strictly to this principle, as essential to a fair administration of justice. If it were departed from, uncertainty, insecurity in the transaction of business, and injustice would result. Parties could not know what were their rights or duties, if they were to be determined by loose evidence of some merely local, indefinite, and partial usage." Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446, 454, 455; Upton v. Suffolk County Mills, 11 Cush. 586, 59 Am. Dec. 163.

The respondents argue that, since the guaranty induced the contract, there was no contract if the guaranty be held void. It is manifest that, since the respondents had no right to rely upon the guaranty made by the agent, they cannot be heard to say that they did so rely. In the absence of a ratification by the appellant, they can base no rights either of an attack or defense upon the guaranty. There is no question that, if a principal elect to ratify a contract which the agent was not authorized to make, he must ratify the whole of it. If he ratifies the contract, he ratifies the warranties. But in this case there was no such ratification. The record shows that the appellant pointedly repudiated the guaranty as soon as he learned of it, and refused to further proceed with the contract if the guaranty was insisted upon. The evidence shows an acquiescence by the respondents in that repudiation. They accepted the performance of the contract without an affirmation of the guaranty. When the appellant wrote them to the effect that no further shipment would be made so long as the guaranty was claimed, the respondents answered authorizing the shipment as requested by the letter, thus plainly waiving the guaranty and affirming the contract without it. It can make no difference that they then had made arrangements to give away the whole number of machines. That arrangement had been made by them, not in reliance upon any act of the appellant indicating a ratification of the guaranty, but in sole reliance upon the guaranty of the agent, which, as we have seen, was of so extraordinary a character that they had no right to assume his authority to make it. To hold, as contended by counsel, that the appellant without knowledge or ratification should be estopped to question the guaranty because the respondents had placed themselves in a position where they must have the machines, in reliance upon the guaranty, would be to hold that the principal would be bound in almost every instance by the unauthorized acts of the agent, however palpably beyond the scope of his employment. It would be in effect to say that though in law the purchaser had no right to rely upon a guaranty on its face beyond the scope of the agent's employment, yet, if he does so rely to his injury, the principal will be bound. The paradox is too plain to require further comment.

The court was in error in sustaining the counterclaim. The finding that there was a balance of $410 due upon the purchase price of the machines was not excepted to by either party. The cause is therefore remanded, with direction to modify the judgment in favor of the plaintiff, making it for the sum of $410 and costs.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Crow, Morris, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT. (Department No. 1.)

G. A. C. ROCHESTER, Admr., etc., of W.
C. Bell, Deceased, Appt.,
v.

SEATTLE, RENTON, & SOUTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY, Respt.

(67 Wash. 545, 122 Pac. 23.)

Damages — wrongful death — minor heirs.

1. The damages to be recovered by a child for the wrongful death of its father are not limited to those suffered before attaining majority, under a statute giving heirs a right of action for death, and providing that if deceased leave no widow or issue, then his parents, sisters, or minor brothers who may be dependent upon him for support, may maintain the action, the jury to allow such damages as, under all the circumstances, may seem just.

Note. — Is minor's right to damages for the negligent killing of parent limited to the period of minority.

This note is supplementary to that to Butte Electric R. Co. v. Jones, 18 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1205.

No attempt has been made in this note to collect in general the cases in which an adult child has been allowed to recover, such as Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135; Demarest v. Little, 47 N. J. L. 28; Petrie v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 29 S. C. 303, 7 S. E. 515; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Butts, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 88; Tuteur v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 505, 46 N. W. 897. In principle, if an adult child may recover in such actions there is no reason 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Trial — instruction — measure of damages — wrongful death.

2. Whether or not the jury should be instructed to allow a minor such damages as they find he would suffer after majority, because of the wrongful killing of his father, will depend upon the character of the evidence, indicating the probability of such loss because of the character of the father.

(March 20, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from an order of the Superior Court for King County, granting a new trial after verdict in his favor in an action brought to recover damages for the death of his intestate, which was alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Peters & Powell, for appellant:

Whether a minor child will suffer any damages after attaining majority is a question for the jury to determine under all the facts and circumstances of the case.

Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street R. Co. 110 Cal. 277, 42 Pac. 822, 1063; Valente v. Sierra R. Co. 158 Cal. 412, 111 Pac. 95; Tuteur v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 505, 46 N. W. 897; Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co. 29 N. Y. 252, 86 Am. Dec. 297; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127; Demarest v. Little, 47 N. J. L. 28; Beaumont Traction Co. v. Dilworth, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 94 S. W. 352.

The damages sought to be recovered by a minor child cannot be limited to the period of minority.

Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Frost, 93 Ark. 183, 124 S. W. 748; Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 294; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Butts, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 88; Texas P. R. Co. v. Martin, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 204, 60 S. W. 803; Petrie v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 29 S. C. 303, 7 S. E. 516; Butte

why recovery by a minor child should be limited to the period of minority; but the note has been confined to cases in which the question annotated has been directly considered by the court.

In Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Frost, 93 Ark. 183, 124 S. W. 749, it is held that recovery by a minor child is not limited to the period of his minority, the court stating that the right to recover damages in such cases is limited by the statute only to the damages suffered, and not to any period of life. It is held further in this case that the right to recover beyond minority depends upon the evidence; and that, on the whole, it is a question for the jury to say whether or not damages for a period beyond minority may be recovered.

So, in Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 294, it was Electric R. Co. v. Jones, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1205, 90 C. C. A. 240, 164 Fed. 308; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 60 Md. 449; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135; Lazelle v. Newfane, 70 Vt. 440, 41 Atl. 511; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Adams, 55 Pa. 499.

Mr. Morris B. Sachs for respondent.

Gose, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is prosecuted by the administrator of the estate of W. C. Bell, deceased, for the recovery of damages sustained by his heirs in consequence of his death, which it is alleged was caused by the negligence of the defendant. There was a verdict for the plaintiff for $17,500. The court granted a new trial upon the sole ground that he had erred in instructing the jury that, in estimating damages, they could include such pecuniary loss as they might find from the evidence the minor son of the deceased would suffer after attaining his majority by reason of his father's death. The motion for a new trial was denied in all other respects. The plaintiff has appealed from the order granting a new trial.

On April 30, 1910, the respondent was operating an electric railway in the city of Seattle, and between that city and the town of Renton. On the date stated the appellant's intestate lost his life in consequence of a collision between the respondent's passenger car, upon which he was riding, and one of its freight cars. At the trial of the case the negligence of the respondent was conceded, and the single question submitted to the jury was the measure of damages. The decedent was forty-six years of age at the time of his death, and his sole heir is a son fourteen years of age, who is not of normal mentality. He was a lawyer, by profession, a resident of Harrodsburg, Kentucky, and had voluntarily retired from the circuit court bench of that state a few months before his untimely death, after having served a term of six years.

The single question presented by the appeal is whether the court erred in instructing the jury that they could allow such pecuniary loss as the evidence showed the son would sustain after his majority, from the father's death. The cause of action is based upon the statute. Rem. & Bal. Code, § 183. The applicable part of the statute is as follows: "When the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another, his heirs or personal representatives may maintain an action for damages against the person causing the death. If the deceased leave no widow or issue, then his parents, sisters, or minor brothers who may be dependent upon him for support, and who are resident within the United States at the time of his death, may maintain said action. . . . In held that the damages resulting to a child from the wrongful death of its father are not limited by statute to the period of the child's minority.

The holding in Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street R. Co. 110 Cal. 277, 42 Pac. 822, 1063, cited in note in 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1205, is approved in Simoneau v. Pacific Electric R. Co. 159 Cal. 494, 115 Pac. 320, and Valente v. Sierra R. Co. 158 Cal. 412, 111 Pac. 95; and in Peters v. Southern P. Co. 160 Cal. 48, 116 Pac. 400, it is held, in accordance with the decision in the Redfield Case, that the damages recoverable by minor children are not confined to the period of minority.

As shown in the earlier note, there is some authority for limiting the recovery to the period of minority. The statement there made, however, that the weight of authority is to that effect, is hardly justified when it is noted that in the following cases,—Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 33 Md. 542; Baltimore & R. Turnp. Road v. State, 71 Md. 573, 18 Atl. 884; McPherson v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 97 Mo. 253, 10 S. W. 846; Delahunt v. United Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 215 Pa. 241, 114 Am. St. Rep. 958, 64 Atl. 515; Hoadley v. International Paper Co. 72 Vt. 79, 47 Atl. 169,—which were cited in support of that statement, the instructions which did in form so limit the recovery were complained of, not by the plaintiff, but by the defendant,—on other 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) grounds, of course,—and hence those cases, while certainly not authority against that statement, cannot properly be regarded as affirmative authority in its favor. It also is to be observed from the earlier note that some of the cases merely limit the recovery to the period of minority as to particular elements of damages.

In Atlanta & W. P. R. Co. v. Venable, 67 Ga. 697, where the trial court had allowed damages to be computed from the date of the injury to the parent, instead of from the death, the appellate court held that such damages should have been computed from the date of the death; and in computing the amount by which the verdict was reduced, the court recognized the fact that the damages were limited to the period of minority; but there is no discussion nor holding on this point. There is also a statement to the effect that recovery in such cases is limited to the period of minority, in Davis v. Southwestern R. Co. 41 Ga. 223, but it is not clear that this was necessary to the decision in this case. The reason for this limitation of the right of recovery of minor children, as recognized by the Georgia courts, doubtless arises from the statute which was held in the subsequent Georgia case of Coleman v. Hyer, 113 Ga. 420, 38 S. E. 962, to exclude adult children from the benefit of a recovery thereunder, the words "child or children" being limited in meaning to minor children. W. A. E.

every such action the jury may give such damages as, under all circumstances of the case, may to them seem just." The old statute (2 Ballinger's Anno. Codes & Statutes, § 4828) was amended by Laws of 1909, p. 425, by adding the words which we have italicized. We think the instruction is a correct interpretation of the statute, and that the court erred in granting a new trial. Indeed, we do not think the statute is susceptible of any other reasonable interpretation. To construe the statute in any other way would require us to read into the statute the word "minor" before both the words "heirs" and "issue." There is nothing in the language to indicate in the remotest way that the lawmaking branch of the government intended such interpolation. Indeed, such construction would be an entire emasculation of the statute. It would lead to the absurd result that, under certain contingencies, an adult dependent sister would have a cause of action, while an adult dependent daughter would not have a cause of action. It cannot be doubted, we think, that even under the statute prior to the 1909 amendment, the instruction would be correct. As amended, however, the statute is entirely free from doubt, unless we assume that the legislature intended a limitation which it did not express in words. The fact that it made provision for minor dependent brothers shows clearly that the preceding words were advisedly used. One of two views must obtain. It must be held either that the word "heirs," in the first part of the statute, embraces and defines the several classes, "widow," "issue," "parents," "sister," and "minor brothers," or that the words "heirs" and "widow or issue" are intended to be synonymous terms. In either case the instruction is correct.

The trial court granted the new trial because he was of the opinion that the construction put upon the old statute by this court enunciated a principle not in harmony with the instruction. The respondent takes a like view. The cases relied upon as announcing a view not in harmony with the instruction are Dahl v. Tibbals, 5 Wash. 259, 31 Pac. 868; Noble v. Seattle, 19 Wash. 133, 40 L.R.A. 822, 52 Pac. 1013; Manning v. Tacoma R. & Power Co. 34 Wash. 406, 75 Pac. 994. In the Dahl Case the action was prosecuted by the widow and minor children for the recovery of damages for wrongfully causing the death of the husband and father. The only question before the court was the capacity of the plaintiffs to maintain the action. The court, however, said: "The sole object of such statutes is to give a right of action for damages in favor of, or for the benefit of, those who may be deprived of support and maintenance by death caused by the wrongful 'act or omission of another.'" In the Noble Case it was held that there was no right of action in the father and mother for the wrongful death of an adult bachelor son. In that case, also, the court said that the right of action only existed in favor of those heirs to whom the deceased while living owed the legal duty of support. In the Manning Case the mother, the father being dead, sought to recover damages arising from the death of her adult bachelor son, alleging that his death resulted from the wrongful act of the defendant. It was held, upon the authority of the Noble Case, that she had no right of action. The court, however, took occasion to intimate that it did not think the Noble Case correctly interpreted the statute, but that it would adhere to it on the ground of stare decisis. It is apparent that the quotation from the Dahl Case is only dictum, and that the statement of the same nature in the Noble Case was not called for by the facts before the court. It is also apparent that the court was not called upon to meet the precise question before us in any of these cases. If it may be said that they involved a similar principle, a sufficient answer is: (1) That we are not disposed to extend the rule of these cases beyond their letter, and (2) that we are here construing the law as amended. The instruction is supported by the following cases from other jurisdictions where the cause of action was predicated upon the allegation that death was caused by the negligence of the defendant: Redfield v. Oakland Consol. Street R. Co. 110 Cal. 277, 42 Pac. 822, 1063; Valente v. Sierra R. Co. 158 Cal. 412, 111 Pac. 95; Tuteur v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 77 Wis. 503, 46 N. W. 897; Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co. 29 N. Y. 252, 86 Am. Dec. 297; Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Kutac, 72 Tex. 643, 11 S. W. 127; Beaumont Traction Co. v. Dilworth, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 94 S. W. 352; Paris & G. N. R. Co. v. Robinson, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 127 S. W. 294; Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Butts, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 132 S. W. 88; Demarest v. Little, 47 N. J. L. 28; Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Frost, 93 Ark. 183, 124 S. W. 749; Petrie v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 29 S. C. 303, 7 S. E. 515; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135; Lazelle v. Newfane, 70 Vt. 440, 41 Atl. 511; Duzan v. Myers, 30 Ind. App. 227, 96 Am. St. Rep. 341, 65 N. E. 1046; Butte Electric R. Co. v. Jones, 90 C. C. A. 240, 18 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1205, 164 Fed. 308 (9th Ct.).

The Redfield Case was prosecuted by the husband and minor children for damages arising from the death of the wife and mother. The California statute (Code of Civil Procedure, § 377) upon which the cause of action was rested gave a right of action in such cases to the "heirs or personal representatives" of the deceased. In that case the following instruction was approved: "The pecuniary interest of children in the lives of their parents does not necessarily end with their arrival at the age of majority; but you may allow for the probable loss of any benefit, if any, of a pecuniary value, which the child would probably receive from its mother after its arrival at majority." The court said, in commenting upon the instruction: "Besides, the statute does not limit the right to prosecute the action or to recover damages to minor children or minor heirs." In the Valente Case the California court again ruled that the statute does not limit the right of recovery to minor children, and approved an instruction similar to the one given in the Redfield Case. In the Tuteur Case a recovery was had for the pecuniary loss sustained by adult children for the death of their mother; their father being dead. The statute upon which that action rested gave a right of action to the personal representatives of the deceased person, and directed that the amount recovered should belong and be paid over to the "lineal descendants" of the "lineal ancestors" where neither a husband nor a widow survived the deceased. Sanborn & B. Stat. (Wis.) 1898, § 4256. In the Tilley Case an instruction was approved which directed the jury that, for the wrongful death of the parent, they were at liberty to allow damages to the children through the whole period of their probable lives. The court said: "Nor do I perceive any sufficient legal reason for limiting the damages to the minority of the children if the jury are legally persuaded they would continue after that age." The decision was based on a statute permitting a recovery for the benefit of the "widow and next of kin." Laws of New York 1849, chap. 256. In the Kutac Case the right of recovery was not limited to the period of the minority of the children. In speaking of the rights of the adult child of the deceased, the court said: "He was a surviving child of the deceased, and the statute makes no distinction upon this ground." The statute referred to authorizes a recovery for the benefit of the "husband, wife, children, and parents." Revised Statutes (Tex.) 1895, art. 3021. In the Demarest Case the beneficiaries of the recovery were the adult children of the deceased. The statute in that state permits a recovery to the extent of the pecuniary injury resulting to the "widow and next of kin." In the Frost Case the trial court refused to confine the recovery to the damages suffered by the children, in consequence to the death of the father, to the period of their minority. The court said that the right to recover was limited only by the statute to the damages suffered, "and not to any period of life." The statute gave a right of recovery to the "widow and next of kin." Arkansas Digest, Kirby, 1904, § 6290. In the Petrie Case all of the children of the deceased were adults. The contention there made, that no damages could be recovered for their benefit unless they had some legal claim on the deceased, was held untenable. The statute permitted a recovery for the benefit of the "wife, husband, parent, and children" of the deceased. In the Jones Case the ruling of the trial court, extending the right of recovery on behalf of the son beyond the period of minority, was approved. The cause of action arose in the state of Montana. The court said that the Redfield Case (California) was based upon a statute "precisely similar" to the Montana Case, and that the Tilley Case (New York) was based upon a statute "similar in effect." The necessary deduction is that the court construed the words in the California statute, "heirs or personal representatives," and the words in the New York statute, "widow and next of kin," as practically synonymous.

The respondent has cited the following authorities: Baltimore & R. Turnp. Road v. State, 71 Md. 573, 18 Atl. 884; Goss v. Missouri P. R. Co. 50 Mo. App. 615; Delahunt v. United Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 215 Pa. 241, 114 Am. St. Rep. 958, 64 Atl. 515; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Golway, 6 App. D. C. 143; Hoadley v. International Paper Co. 72 Vt. 79, 47 Atl. 109; Coleman v. Hyer, 113 Ga. 420, 38 S. E. 963 (Ga.); Dueber v. Northern P. R. Co. (C. C.) 100 Fed. 425. In the first case cited the trial court instructed the jury that the damages should be estimated to the time the children attained their majority. The defendant appealed. While the court said the instruction was correct, the question was not before it for decision. In the Goss Case it was held that the children are only entitled "by law to support of the father during minority." The language of the statute is not set out in the opinion. In the Delahunt Case there was a judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed. The statute is not set forth. The trial court limited the recovery to loss sustained by the children for support and education during their minority. In the Golway Case the court held that "prospective gifts" were not recoverable as an element of damages in behalf of adult sons. In the Hoadley Case the trial court instructed the jury that, in estimating the pecuniary loss sustained by minor children in the death of their father, the physical, moral, and intellectual instruction and training which they would have received from him had he lived were proper elements for their consideration. The defendant's contention that this was not a proper element of damages was rejected. The question presented in this case was not considered. The Coleman Case and other cases cited from the state of Georgia hold that the word "children" in a similar statute means minor children only. The Dueber Case is based upon the same facts as the Noble Case. The respondent has cited a number of Maryland cases which we need not consider, in view of the fact that the later case of Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. State, 63 Md. 135, in principle supports the instruction in the case at bar.

The evidence in this case justifies the instruction. It seems hardly necessary to say that, if the deceased had been an immoral and improvident man, or in bad health, so that it would have been mere guesswork for the jury to find that the minor son would suffer any pecuniary loss after his majority, then such an instruction would not be proper. In other words, the facts in the particular case must determine whether the instruction should be given. We think the instruction was correct, and that the court was in error in granting a new trial.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to enter a judgment upon the verdict.

Dunbar, Ch. J., and Parker, Crow, and Chadwick, JJ., concur.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

M. D. ROUSE et al., Respts.,

v.

JIM BRANCH et al., Appts.,

(— S. C. —, 74 S. E. 133.)

Will — forfeiture for contesting — forgery.

Contesting a will upon probable cause for alleged forgery does not work a forfeiture

Note. — What amounts to a contest within forfeiture clause in will.

This is a continuation of the same subject discussed in the note to Re Hite, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953.

As to the effect generally of a provision in a will that any beneficiary who contests the instrument shall forfeit his interest, see note to Re Friend, 68 L.R.A. 447.

Conditions for the forfeiture of vested interests once bestowed by will are not believed of the law. They must be strictly construed in favor of the threatened beneficiary, and the burden of proof as to the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

under a provision therein that if anyone mentioned in the will shall attempt to break it, he shall have only a nominal sum, and his share shall be divided amongst other persons mentioned.

(March 25, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Barnwell County in plaintiffs' favor in an action for the partition of certain real estate left by the will of W. H. Mears, deceased, and for the construction of said will. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Bates & Simms, for appellant executors:

Where there was probabilis causa litigandi, and there was no gift over of the legacy or devise, a legatee or devisee did not, by unsuccessfully contesting the validity of the will, forfeit the legacy or devise given to him.

Powell v. Morgan, 2 Vern. 90; Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 399; Lloyd v. Spillet, 3 P. Wms. 344, 2 Atk. 148.

But if there was a gift over of the legacy or devise, the breach of the condition would work a forfeiture.

Cleaver v. Spurling, 2 P. Wms. 528; Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 793, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Fifield v. Van Wyck, 94 Va. 557, 64 Am. St. Rep. 745, 27 S. E. 446.

The condition in the will was not invalid as contrary to the policy of the law.

Cooke v. Turner, 15 Mees. & W. 727, 14 Sim. 493; Evanturel v. Evanturel, L. R. 6 P. C. 1, 43 L. J. P. C. N. S. 58, 31 L. T. N. S. 105, 23 Week. Rep. 32; Donegan v. Wade, 70 Ala. 501; Hoit v. Hoit, 42 N. J. Eq. 388, 59 Am. Rep. 43, 7 Atl. 856; Thompson v. Gaut, 14 Lea, 310; Bradford v. Bradford, 19 Ohio St. 546, 2 Am. Rep. 419; Breithaupt v. Bauskett, 1 Rich. Eq. 465; Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. 18, 60 Am. Dec. 107; Chew's Appeal, 45 Pa. 228; Van Dyke's Appeal, 60 Pa. 491; Cochran v. Cochran, 127 Pa. 486, 17 Atl. 981; Friend's Estate, 209 Pa. 442, 68 L.R.A. 447, 58 forfeiture is upon the party asserting it. Re Wall, 76 Misc. 106, 136 N. Y. Supp. 452.

"While 'contest,' as used in statutes, may be treated as a 'word of art,' it is hardly such in ordinary use and signification. The definition by Webster is 'to make a subject of dispute; to call in question; to dispute.' It is frequently used in the sense of, 'to litigate,' 'oppose,' 'to challenge,' 'to resist,' and, as applied to legal proceedings, it ordinarily implies a dispute between parties plaintiff and defendant before a court which is to decide the question put in issue. It is the contention of appellant that the words 'shall contest the same,' as em-

Atl. 853; Jackson v. Westerfield, 61 How. Pr. 399; Re Barandon, 41 Misc. 380, 84 N. Y. Supp. 937; Grote's Estate, 2 How. Pr. N. S. 140; Re Stewart, 1 Connolly, 412, 5 N. Y. Supp. 32; Magee v. O'Neill, 19 S. C. 170, 45 Am. Rep. 765; Re Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 953, 101 Pac. 443, 17 Ann. Cas. 993.

Mr. W. B. DeLoach also for appellants.

Messrs. W. A. Holman and R. C. Holman for respondents.

Gary, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The record contains this statement: "This is an action for partition between the plaintiffs and the defendants, other than the executors, of the real estate left by the played by the testator in the will before us, ought to be construed as referring to a direct assault upon the entire instrument as a will, upon grounds which, if established, would render it void in all its parts. That such an attack would be a contest of the will is certain, but that an attack upon the validity of a material part of the will which, if successful, would destroy the integrity of the plan adopted by the testator for the distribution of the estate, is not also a contest within the fair meaning of the words, cannot be conceded." Moran v. Moran, 144 Iowa, 451, 30 L.R.A.(N.S.) 598, 123 N. W. 202.

It will thus be seen that the tendency of the courts is to look to the essence of the condition imposed upon a legacy, and give effect to the lawful intention of the testator, and they will therefore decline to put any strained or overtechnical construction upon the verbiage employed, to enable a legatee to occupy the position of one who affirms a will so far as it is to his own profit, and at the same time repudiates the validity of its provisions for the benefit of others. Such a position is inequitable. Ibid.

Rouse v. BRANCH holds that, under a will providing that if any of the beneficiaries shall enter a suit in law to break the will, such beneficiary shall have a mere nominal sum, instead of his legacy, and the remainder of his share shall be divided among others, a beneficiary does not forfeit his share by attempting to show upon probable cause that the will is a forgery. Public policy forbids that he should be thus coerced into partaking of the fruit of what he believes to be a crime.

In Kayhart v. Whitehead, 77 N. J. Eq. 12, 76 Atl. 241, the will provided that if any beneficiary should file a caveat against the same, or in any other manner assist in an attempt to prevent its probate, all the expenses of probating the will should be taken by the executor from the share of such beneficiary. In an action by the executor to recover or retain from certain legacies the expenses of the probate, after deciding that the above provision of the will was valid, the court held not only that the beneficiary late W. H. Mears, of Hampton county, said state, under the terms of his last will and testament, and for the construction of the said will. The defendant executors in their answer likewise desired the instruction of the court as to the rights of the various parties under said will; and all the defendants denied the right of the plaintiffs to any interest in said estate, by reason of having required the will to be proven in due form of law, contending that the same was a forgery, and because of the proceeding thereunder taken, as contained in the printed record now on file in the supreme court in the case of Thomas v. Rouse, which record is likewise printed herein, as required by respondents."

The following provision appears in the who filed the caveat was liable for his share of the expense, but that two others were also liable, because they conferred with the caveator and aided or assisted his solicitors of record in the matter of securing or seeing witnesses; one of these beneficiaries was held liable also because she assured the caveator in writing that if the executor did not pay his legacy, she would pay him the same amount; she was also present in the orphans' court when the probate contest was on, and heard without protest the statement by an attorney that he appeared to argue on her behalf against the admission of the will to probate; his appearance for her was made a matter of record, and in the decree granting the probate it was recited that he appeared and was heard for her, and an allowance was made to him as fees as her counsel. She also filed an appeal to the prerogative court from the decree of the orphans' court admitting the will to probate, and since, upon such appeal, the whole question of probate comes up de novo, this was held to be of itself an attempt to prevent the probate of the will.

The mere filing of a caveat, however, will not be construed as a contest of a will, within the meaning of a provision therein that any legatee contesting or attempting to contest the will shall lose his legacy. McCahan's Estate, 221 Pa. 188, 70 Atl. 711.

A beneficiary who opposes the probate of a will on the grounds of alleged incompetency to make the will, and undue influence alleged to have been exercised upon the testator, even though there be probable cause for such allegations, thereby makes a contest of the will sufficient to work a forfeiture, under a provision for forfeiture in case of contest. Re Miller, 156 Cal. 119, 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 868, 103 Pac. 842.

Where a testator without right willed the separate property of his wife to his children, and provided that if any one of them should contest the will he should forfeit his share, it was held that each party was thus put upon an election, and that when one of the beneficiaries contested the will on the ground that the property was either the separate property of his mother, or the community will: "If any of the parties above mentioned shall enter a suit in law to break my will, he shall have $5 only, and his share shall be divided among them mentioned in the fourth division of my will." The appellants' attorneys in their argument, after discussing the authorities, say: "According to the weight of the foregoing authorities, the following principles seem to be established: (1) Conditions annexed to legacies and devises, providing a forfeiture in case the will is contested, are valid. (2) In case of a legacy, a breach of the condition will not work a forfeiture, unless there is a gift over of the subject-matter of the legacy. (3) If there is no gift over, and there was probabilis causa litigandi, a breach of the condition will not work a forfeiture, either as regards a legacy or devise. (4) Where the will is contested on behalf of an infant legatee or devisee, the forfeiture will not be decreed, irrespective of whether there was a gift over or not."

In the first place, let us turn to our own decisions to see to what extent this question is determined by them. In the case of Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. 12, 60 Am. Dec. 107, the testator by his will made certain provisions for some of his slaves, which were void under the statute. He bequeathed to his sister, J. M., $2,000, made her one of his residuary legatees, and then provided as follows: "Should any of the legatees under this my will complain, or express any dissatisfaction with my disposition of my estate herein made, I hereby direct and empower my executors, in their discretion, to revoke any and all legacies such complaining legatee or legatees might have been entitled to, and to dispose of the same between my other legatees, as to my executors may seem just and proper." The chancellor on circuit used the language in that case: "It is insisted on the part of the defendant that the complainant has forfeited her legacy of $2,000, as well as her interest in the residue, by calling in question the validity of the provisions made in the fourth clause. The general proposition on this subject was established as early as Powell v. Morgan, 2 Vern. 91. That was a legacy upon condition that the legatee did not disturb or interrupt the will of the testatrix. The validity of the will was, however, unsuccessfully contested by the legatee. It was held that this was no forfeiture of the legacy, as there was probabilis causa litigandi, and such is now the well-settled doctrine, to wit, that such condition is considered in terrorem merely.

property of his father and mother, he elected to recover as heir of his mother, and thereby forfeited his right as devisee of his father; he could not recover in both capacities. Massie v. Massie, 54 Tex. Civ. App. 617, 118 S. W. 219.

Where testator left a widow and children by her, and children by two deceased wives, and provided in his will that if any of the beneficiaries should attempt to change or break the will, the property should go to his surviving wife and his children by her, it was held that a suit by children of the first marriage to try title to, and for partition of, the land, was a contest such as to work a forfeiture, and that the forfeiture was of the rights of all the devisees, whether they joined in the attack upon the will or not. Perry v. Rogers, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 594, 114 S. W. 897.

Under a provision in a will to the effect that if a legatee should in any way dispute the will or the validity thereof, his legacy should be of no effect, but should fall into the residuary estate, when a legatee joins with others in bringing an action to have the will declared invalid, he thereby works a breach of the condition, and the fact that the legacy has been paid over to him before the suit is brought against the will does not affect the result; the executor of the will may recover it back. Kelley v. Winslow, 73 Misc. 642, 131 N. Y. Supp. 65.

In Re Wall, 70 Misc. 106, 136 N. Y. Supp. 452, it was held that the condition in a will for forfeiture in case of contest was invalid, because there was no gift over in case of forfeiture, and therefore the court did not decide whether the mere institution of an action to contest the validity of the will, which was discontinued after joinder of issue, was such a contest as to amount to a breach of the condition.

Under a provision of a will that in case any of the legatees shall contest the same, he shall forfeit his legacy, it was held, in Moran v. Moran, 144 Iowa 451, 30 L.R.A. (N.S.) 898, 123 N. W. 202, that a suit instituted and prosecuted by legatees asserting title in themselves independently of the will, to a large part of the estate which the testator had undertaken to dispose of by that instrument, was a breach of the condition.

Upon the probate of their father's will, either of three courses was open to the appellants. They could yield to its terms, and, by accepting the legacies, abandon all claims of right in hostility to the will; or they could by proper action in court seek to have the will decreed invalid in its entirety, upon allegation of proper grounds therefor; or, without asserting the invalidity of the instrument as a will, they could bring action to defeat its provisions by claiming ownership in themselves of the property of the estate independent of the will. They chose the latter course, denying the testator's title to the land, and impeaching the validity of the devise thereof by the will, and this election we think was a breach of the condition which the testator annexed to his gifts. Ibid.

H. C. Sh.

and does not operate a forfeiture of the legacy. But where there is not simply a declaration of forfeiture, but a valid bequest to a third person in case of breach of the condition, then if the legatee controvert the will, his interest will cease and vest in the other legatee. The exception is discussed by Sir William Grant in Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Meriv. 117. He says that different reasons have been assigned by different judges for the operation of a devise over; some holding that it was a clear manifestation of intention that the declaration of forfeiture was not merely in terrorem, and others that it was the interest of the devisee over which made the difference. But all agree that there must be a valid devise over, in order to defeat the legacy." He declared that the said clause of the will was null and void. There was an appeal to the court of appeals, in equity, and the case was heard by Chancellors Johnston, Dunkin, Dargan, and Wardlaw, the opinion of the court being delivered by Chancellor Wardlaw, who, after stating that said court was content with the chancellor's conclusion, and, in general, with his reasoning, although there was not entire concurrence of the members of the court in the same views, used the following language:

"Without intention or authority to commit the court to this extent, I express my own opinion, in which Chancellor Johnston fully concurs, that a condition subsequent of this description is void, whether there be a devise over or not, as trenching on the 'liberty of the law' 1 Shep. Touch. 132, and violating public policy. In Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 404, Lord Hardwicke held such a condition to be clearly in terrorem, and that no forfeiture could be incurred by contesting any disputable matter in a court of justice. In Powell v. Morgan, 2 Vern. 91, cited in the circuit decree, it was adjudged that breach of such condition involves no forfeiture, where there is probabilis causa litigandi. In one of the latest cases on this subject, Cooke v. Turner, 15 Mees. & W. 727, a condition was supported as valid that, if the devisee should dispute the sanity and competency of testator to make a will (although testator had been found by inquest to be a lunatic), or should refuse, when required by the executors, to confirm the will, the disposition in favor of such devisee should be revoked. In delivering the judgment of the exchequer, Lord Cranworth, now Lord Chancellor, then Sir R. M. Rolfe, admits that the policy of the state prevents a testator from making the continuance of an estate depend on the legatee's committing a crime, or refraining to do that which it is, or may be, the interest of the state that he should do, such as that he should not marry, should not engage in commerce, should not plow his arable land, or should not do anything else, the performance of which partakes of the character of a duty of imperfect obligation: but he insists that there is no duty of perfect or imperfect obligation on an heir to contest his ancestor's sanity, and that it matters nothing to the state whether the land be enjoyed by devisee or heir. It seems to me that this is a very narrow view of public policy. It is the interest of the state that every legal owner should enjoy his estate, and that no citizen should be obstructed, by the risk of forfeiture, from ascertaining his rights by the law of the land. It may be politic to encourage parties in the adjustment of doubtful rights by arbitration or by private settlement; but it is against the fundamental principles of justice and policy to inhibit a party from ascertaining his rights by appeal to the tribunals established by the state to settle and determine conflicting claims. If there be any such thing as public policy, it must embrace the right of a citizen to have his claims determined by law. . . . But the doctrine of the validity of such a condition, where there is a devise over, is too firmly established to be overruled, except upon grave consideration in some case where the point is necessarily involved in the decision; and that is not the fact here." The decree was affirmed.

There is also another case in our reports which we will discuss later. Turning to the authorities elsewhere, we quote the following language from the case of Cooke v. Turner, supra: "The conditions said to be void, as trenching on the liberty of law, are those which restrain a party from doing some act which it is supposed the state has or may have an interest to have done. The state, for obvious causes, is interested that its subjects should marry, and therefore will not, in general, allow parties, by contracts or conditions in a will, to make the continuance of an estate depend on the owner not doing that which it either is or may be the interest of the state that he should be. So the state is interested in having its subjects embarked in trade or agriculture, and therefore will not allow a condition defeating an estate in case its owner should engage in commerce, or should plow his arable lands, or the like. The principle on which such conditions are void is analogous to that on which conditions defeating an estate, unless the owner commits a crime, are void. In the latter case, the condition has a tendency to the violation of a positive duty; in the former, to prevent the performance of what partakes of the character of imperfect obligation. But in the case of a condition such as that before us, the state has no interest whatever, apart from the interest of the parties themselves. There is no duty [either perfect or imperfect] on the part of an heir . . . to contest his ancestor's sanity. It matters not to the state whether the land is enjoyed by the heir or the devisee; and we conceive, therefore, that the law leaves the parties to make just what contracts and what engagements they may think expedient as to raising or not raising questions of law or fact among one another, the sole result of which is to give the enjoyment of the property to one claimant, rather than another. . . . Where a condition is bad on grounds of public policy, it must obviously be bad whether it be precedent or subsequent. The law will no more allow anything contrary to public policy to be made the means whereby a party shall entitle himself to an estate, than [it will allow it to be a means] whereby he shall be made to lose that of which he is already in possession." See also Smithsonian Inst. v. Meech, 169 U. S. 398, 42 L. ed. 793, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 396; Re Hite, 155 Cal. 436, 101 Pac. 443, and notes to that case in 17 Ann. Cas. 993, and 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 953.

Conceding that the four propositions hereinbefore mentioned, for which the appellants' attorneys contend, are sound as general statement of law, it does not follow that they are applicable to the facts of this case.

The cases of Mallet v. Smith, 6 Rich. Eq. 12, 60 Am. Dec. 107, and Cooke v. Turner, supra, show—in fact, the principle does not seem to be disputed—that a testator cannot provide that the continuance of an estate shall depend upon the condition that the devisee or legatee shall not marry, or engage in commerce, or sow his arable lands, or the like, as such condition would be against public policy. We thus see that all conditions in wills upon which an estate shall be allowed to continue in the devisee or legatee are not valid; and the question in this case is whether the right to contest a will on the ground that it is a forgery stands upon the same footing as the right to contest a will when there is a condition that the devisee or legatee shall not marry, or engage in commerce, or sow his arable land, and the like.

In the case of Breithaupt v. Bauskett, 1 Rich. Eq. 465, the court had before it the question whether a devise to a mistress or illegitimate children, under the statute, was absolutely void, or only voidable at the election of the wife or legitimate children, and used this language: "Chief Justice Spencer, delivering the opinion of the court says that 'whenever the act done takes effect as to some purposes, and is void as to persons having an interest in impeaching it, the act is not a nullity; and therefore, in a legal sense, it is not utterly void, but merely voidable.' Another test of a void act or deed is that every stranger may take advantage of it, but not a voidable one. Humphrestons's Case, Leon. pt. 2, p. 218, Vin. Abr. title Void and Voidable A. pl. 11. Again, a thing may be void in several degrees: '1st. Void so as if never done, to all purposes, so as all persons may take advantage thereof; 2d. Void to some purposes only; 3d. So void by operation of law that he that will have the benefit of it may make it good.'"

A forged will certainly comes under the first head. No case has been cited, and we do not believe any can be found, sustaining the proposition that a devisee or legatee shall not have the right, upon probable cause, to show that a will is a forgery, without incurring the penalty of forfeiting the estate given to him by the will. The right of a contestant to institute judicial proceedings upon probable cause, to ascertain whether the will was ever executed by the apparent testator, is founded upon justice and morality. If a devisee should accept the fruits of the crime of forgery under the belief, and upon probable cause, that it was a forgery, he would thereby become morally a particeps criminis, and yet, if he is unwilling to commit this moral crime, be confronted with the alternative of doing so, or of taking the risk of losing all under the will, in case it should be found not to be a forgery. Public policy forbids that he should be tempted in such a manner. This is far more obnoxious to public policy than a condition in the will against marriage.

Judgment affirmed.

Woods and Hydrick, JJ., concur.

MAINE SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MARY E. LEWIS

v.

FRED O. GRAY.

(— Me. —, 83 Atl. 1.)

Lien — storage of hay — right.

The owner of a farm who permits hay to Note. — Right of one not in the storage business to a common-law lien for storage charge.

Obviously, this note does not purport to cover the cases of warehousemen, carriers, be stored on it under an agreement for the payment of storage charges has not, unless the contract provides therefor, any lien upon the property to secure payment of the charges.

(April 22, 1912.)

EXCEPTIONS by plaintiff to rulings of the Supreme Judicial Court for Franklin County, made during the trial of an action brought to recover damages for the alleged conversion of a certain amount of pressed hay, which resulted in a verdict for defendant. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

innkeepers, livery-stable keepers, garage owners, or artisans. Indeed, the question discussed is whether the considerations which govern the courts in giving a common-law lien to warehousemen and others in the business of storing goods require or permit a lien in favor of an ordinary owner of property who stores goods thereon.

The common-law lien given to warehousemen does not extend to cases of private storage. Merritt v. Peirano, 10 App. Div. 563, 42 N. Y. Supp. 97, affirmed without additional opinion in 167 N. Y. 541, 60 N. E. 1116 (pointing out that the statute gives a lien only to a warehouseman or a person lawfully engaged exclusively in the business of storing goods for hire). In Alton v. New York Taxicab Co. 66 Misc. 191, 121 N. Y. Supp. 271, decided upon the authority of the last case, it appeared that there was a failure to remove, after notice, goods stored for mutual benefit.

So, a private person who is under no legal obligations to receive and keep goods cannot claim a lien for storage upon property whose temporary custody he accepts. Lyungstrandh v. William Haaker Co. 16 Misc. 387, 38 N. Y. Supp. 129; Rivara v. Ghio, 3 E. D. Smith, 264.

Therefore, in the absence of an agreement, the common law does not give a lien to a landlord for storage charges on property left on his premises by an outgoing tenant (Whitlock Mach. Co. v. Holway, 92 Me. 414, 42 Atl. 799); and this, although he is entitled to compensation for the storage (Preston v. Neale, 12 Gray, 222).

A fortiori, a landlord cannot claim a lien upon the property, as against the tenant's mortgagee. Whitlock Mach. Co. v. Holway, supra; Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Murphy, 89 Miss. 264, 42 So. 288.

But it seems that leaving the goods on the landlord's premises after he has given notice that he will claim a lien if they are not removed constitutes an assent to the lien which will render it enforceable under the statute in relation to warehousemen. Schneider v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 396, 69 N. W. 829 (declaring that while the landlord was not a warehouseman within the meaning of the statute, yet, as between himself and the tenant, he had asserted his rights as such).

There are cases which, while denying a 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Mr. Frank W. Butler, for plaintiff:

Defendant had no lien for storage at common law.

Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 491, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Healey v. Gray, 68 Me. 489, 28 Am. Rep. 80; Ingallsbee v. Wood, 33 N. Y. 577, 88 Am. Dec. 409; Jones, Liens, § 968; Rivara v. Ghio, 3 E. D. Smith, 268; Alt v. Weidenberg, 6 Bosw. 176; Merritt v. Peirano, 10 App. Div. 563, 42 N. Y. Supp. 97; Re Kelly, 18 Fed. 528; Trust v. Pirsson, 1 Hilt. 292; Taylor v. Dexter Engine Co. 146 Mass. 613, 16 N. E. 462; Whitlock Mach. Co. v. Holway, 92 Me. 414, 42 Atl.

lien, do not hold that there cannot be a lien in any event, but are governed by special circumstances which would probably forbid a lien in favor of even a warehouseman. Thus, it is held that where it is expressly agreed that payments of storage charges are to be made at specified times, but there is no agreement that the goods shall remain until that time, there is no implied understanding that payment is to be made before delivery of the goods, and there is therefore no lien. Webster v. Keck, 64 Neb. 1, 89 N. W. 410 (agreement by a tenant, who left property on the landlord's premises, that he would pay a certain amount monthly until the goods were removed, there being no agreement that the property should remain that long, or that payment should be made when the property was removed).

So, no lien exists in favor of the owner of a store, who grants to another the right to store, repair and sell pianos therein for a specified amount, payable at the expiration of each month, it being agreed that the contract should not be regarded as a lease. This was held to differ very much from an agreement with a warehouseman; but it was declared that even if it could be so regarded, the agreement for the payment at the expiration of each month was wholly inconsistent with the retention of a lien. Trust v. Pirsson, 1 Hilt. 292. Upon the authority of this case it was held in Re Kelly, 18 Fed. 528, that in New York a person who is neither a warehouseman nor in the business of storing goods has no lien for compensation upon articles privately stored by him.

Generally as to innkeepers' liens, see the note in 21 L.R.A. 229; and as to the lien of an innkeeper on property of a third person, in possession of a guest, see the note in 24 L.R.A.(N.S.) 958.

As to the right of a garage owner to a lien, see subdivision X. of the note in 1 L.R.A.(N.S.) 240.

As to the right of a carrier to a lien for demurrage, see the note in 3 L.R.A.(N.S.) 327.

As to whether the improvement of personal property at the request of the bailee creates a liability against the bailor or the property, see the note in 38 L.R.A.(N.S.) 97.

L. A. W.

799; Preston v. Neale, 12 Gray, 222; Stoddard v. Crocker, 100 Me. 450, 62 Atl. 241.

Mr. Elmer E. Richards for defendant.

King, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action of trover for the value of a certain quantity of pressed hay. It appears from the exceptions that the plaintiff was the owner in 1907 of an undivided half of a farm; that the hay in question was cut that year on the farm, pressed, and stored on the premises; that in 1908 the plaintiff sold and conveyed her half of the farm to her cotenant, and thereafter the cotenant sold and conveyed the farm to the defendant, the pressed hay still being stored thereon; that, after the defendant came into possession of the premises, he notified the plaintiff to remove the hay; and that, if it remained there, storage would be claimed, and there was some evidence introduced tending to show an agreement to pay storage. The question was whether the defendant had lien on the hay for storage after his notice that storage would be claimed.

The presiding justice gave the jury explicit instructions relating to the question whether there was a contract on the plaintiff's part to pay storage, and then said:

"If they did come to an understanding, if a proposition was made, and assented to by her, that storage should be paid from that time, then I give you this rule, as it lies in my mind at present, that the defendant would be entitled to retain possession of that hay until a fair reasonable price for the storage was made or tendered. We have a class of cases on the subject of liens where things are put into the possession of another to do something to them, to mend them, or repair them, or do work upon them, in which case the one who does the work is entitled to retain them until pay for the work is made to him. And I think, and so rule to you, and it will be your guide in this case, that where one places a thing to be kept, to be stored for pay, under an agreement or an understanding that it is to be paid for, that he is entitled to keep it until he is paid."

It is not claimed that the defendant had any statutory lien, nor that he had any lien on the hay by virtue of any express contract therefore in the nature of a pledge. Did he have a common-law lien, so called,—a lien arising under the rules of the common law? We think not. It is quite impossible to find uniform rules by which it may always be determined when a common-law lien results. "Derived from the civil law, and founded on considerations of equity and justice, the rules by which they are governed vary with the grounds on which such rights are given." White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 106, 43 Am. Rep. 347.

Particular liens have always been admitted by the common law in favor of those persons, such as innkeepers, carriers, common carriers, and warehousemen, who are bound by law to serve the public in their trades and occupations. And the privilege of a particular lien—the privilege to detain and hold the possession of some particular property of another as security for some debt or obligation—has been extended to other persons, in a variety of cases, where such persons by their labor and skill have imparted an additional value to the goods. This includes artisans, tradesmen, mechanics, and laborers who receive property (although not obliged to receive it) for the purpose of mending, repairing, and improving its condition for hire; and they have, by the common law, a lien on such property until the reasonable charges for their labor and expenses thereon are paid.

But the defendant, under the facts in this case, cannot be classed with those persons who are allowed liens because they are bound by law to receive and care for the goods of others. He was under no obligation to permit the hay to remain on his premises. He was not a warehouseman, nor in the business of storing goods. He was, at most, a voluntary bailee of the hay, under an agreement with the owner that he was to be paid reasonable compensation for its storage. Nor can he be reasonably classed with those persons who are given liens on specific property which has been enhanced in its intrinsic value by their skill and labor bestowed upon it. True, the storage of the hay may properly be regarded as beneficial to its owner, for it may have preserved it from deterioration and destruction; but we do not think it can be held that, by the mere storage of the hay, the defendant has added to its intrinsic value, and thereby become entitled to a lien on it, under the application of this rule of the common law.

As suggested above, any effort to subject common-law liens to uniform rules is necessarily unsatisfactory; and therefore it becomes most important, in the determination of whether or not a lien should be admitted in any given case, to examine and consider judicial precedents.

Our attention has not been directed to any case, and we have found none, in any jurisdiction, which decisively admits a lien under facts and circumstances like those in the case at bar. Mr. Lummus, in his recent work on Liens, cited by defendant, says: "There seems to be no good reason for limiting the lien to persons making a business of acting as warehousemen. It seems that any person having possession of the goods and a valid claim for storing them ought to have a lien." Section 73. No authorities, however, are cited which directly support that proposition. In § 76 he, cites Schneider v. Dayton, 111 Mich. 396, 69 N. W. 829, as an authority for a lien where notice was given that storage would be charged, and the owner of the goods made no reply. But we find, upon examination of the report of that case, that the notice to the owner of the goods was that the landlord "would insist upon a lien for storage," and the court held that inasmuch as a lien for the storage was claimed in the notice, and the owner did not remove the goods, the lien was assented to.

In Whitlock Mach. Co. v. Holway, 92 Me. 414, 42 Atl. 799, cited by the plaintiff, this court said: "But, in the absence of any agreement, the common law does not give to a person, not an innkeeper or warehouseman, a lien on personal property for its storage." It is suggested that the above-quoted statement is only a dictum, as the case did not really involve that question. There may be merit in that suggestion, for that was a case where a tenant left on the premises a machine the title to which was in the plaintiff, and the question was whether, under those circumstances, the landlord had a lien on the machine for its storage. But, if that statement be only a dictum, it is, we think, a correct statement of the law as understood and applied by this court, and also in accordance with judicial precedent elsewhere.

In Allen v. Ham, 63 Me. 532, it was held that a livery-stable keeper, who had a horse in his possession which he had been keeping under an express contract with the owner of the horse to pay $1 per day for its care and keeping, had no lien at common law on the horse for any care and keeping furnished prior to the passage of act 1872, chap. 27, which provided a statutory lien for pasturing, feeding, and sheltering animals. The court there said: "Not being an innkeeper, or farrier, or trainer, he has no such lien by the common law. Miller v. Marston, 35 Me. 153, 56 Am. Dec. 694. He has none by any agreement with the respondent amounting to a pledge."

This court having thus held that a stable keeper had no lien at common law for stabling and feeding a horse under an express agreement to pay therefor, a fortiori must it be held that a person who is not a warehouseman, nor in the business of storing goods, but who permits the property of another to remain on his premises, under an agreement that storage is to be paid, has no lien therefor at common law. Stoddard 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Crocker, 100 Me. 450, 62 Atl. 241, may be cited as holding by implication that only warehousemen have a lien at common law for storage.

In Jones on Liens, § 968, it is said: "In some states a person not a warehouseman, and not in the business of storing goods, has no lien on goods for his compensation for storing them, unless there be an express agreement for a lien, or it is the legal duty of one to receive and hold the goods. A mere volunteer, under no such obligation, who accepts the temporary custody of goods without any agreement for a lien, can claim none for his compensation."

In Re Kelly, 18 Fed. 528 (D. C. S. D. N. Y.), it is said: "The authorities in this state hold that a person not being a warehouseman, nor in the business of storing goods, who has articles on private storage, has no lien upon them for his compensation any more than a landlord has on his tenant's goods for rent." See also Grinnell v. Cook, 3 Hill, 485, 38 Am. Dec. 663; Rivara v. Ghio, 3 E. D. Smith, 267, 268; Merritt v. Peirano, 10 App. Div. 563, 42 N. Y. Supp. 97; White v. Smith, 44 N. J. L. 105, 109, 43 Am. Rep. 347; Preston v. Neale, 12 Gray, 222.

If it be said that considerations of equity and justice seem to require that there should be a lien wherever a valid claim for storage exists, the answer may be made that such a lien can always be provided for by contract between the parties, and it may be created by legislative enactment.

It is therefore the opinion of the court that the ruling at nisi prius, that the defendant was entitled to a lien for the storage of the hay if there was an understanding or agreement between the parties that the storage was to be paid for, was erroneous, and accordingly the entry must be: Exceptions sustained.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

MARIANNE DUPONT, Resp.,
v.

VILLAGE OF PORT CHESTER, Appt.

(204 N. Y. 351, 97 N. E. 735.)

Highway — duty to remove snow from cross walk.

1. Under a charter duty to remove ob-

Note. — Duty to remove snow or ice from cross walks.

An exhaustive note to Elam v. Mt. Sterling, 20 L.R.A. (N.S.) 513, covers all phases of the question as to liability of municipal corporations for defects or obstructions in streets, and beginning at page 656, the particular question of snow and ice is constructions and encroachments from cross walks, a village is not bound to keep its cross walks free from accumulations of snow and ice, unless dangerous formations or obstacles have been created.

Municipal corporation — leaving snow on cross walks — negligence.

2. A village which is not required to remove the snow from its streets is not negligent in leaving the snow as it falls upon cross walks to facilitate driving in the street, unless there is something in the way in which it falls or the form which it subsequently takes which creates an encumbrance, obstruction, or special danger.

Appeal — presumption of sufficiency of evidence — absence of certificate.

3. Absence of a certificate that the printed case contains all the evidence in an attempt to review exceptions taken at the trial does not entitle the appellate court to assume that there was evidence at the trial sufficient to sustain the verdict, when the record does not disclose it, since such certificate is not necessary to raise such question.

(February 2, 1912.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of a trial term for Westchester County in plaintiff's favor, and from an order denying a new trial, in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jerome Alvord Peck, for appellant:

The defendant discharged its full duty to the plaintiff when it caused this cross walk to be cleaned between 2:30 and 4:30 o'clock on the day she was injured.

Ballard v. Hamburg, 143 App. Div. 719, 128 N. Y. Supp. 325; Lichtenstein v. New York, 159 N. Y. 500, 54 N. E. 67; Kortlang v. Mt. Vernon, 129 App. Div. 535, 114 N. Y. Supp. 252; Winckler v. New York, 129 App. Div. 45, 113 N. Y. Supp. 412; Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 59 Am. Rep. 492, 11 N. E. 642; Schneider v. New York, 143 App. Div. 216, 128 N. Y. Supp. 45.

Mr. Michael J. Tierney, with Mr. De Witt H. Lyon, for respondent:

The negligence of the defendant was clearly established, and justified the jury in finding that it not only allowed the dangerous condition of the cross walk to remain after notice of its existence, but had, in fact, actually created it by the embankments of snow on both sides of the cross walk.

Kopper v. Yonkers, 110 App. Div. 748, 97

sidered. The purpose of the present note is to set out the decisions upon this point rendered subsequent to that note, holding to the limitation of duty as to cross walks, and not including cases generally upon duty as to sidewalks.

As to liability of townships generally for defects in highways, see note to James v. Wellington Twp. 13 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1219.

In DUPONT v. PORT CHESTER, a distinction is drawn between the duty of a municipality in regard to the care of sidewalks and its duty in regard to cross walks, the court saying that, in the absence of express provision of statute, the obligation to keep sidewalks free from snow and ice does not apply to the same extent to cross walks. The removal of all snow and ice at every crossing would materially interfere with the convenient and practical use of the street for driving, and, moreover, because ordinary travel necessarily carries more or less snow upon the cross walks, it would be impossible, except by continuous effort, to keep such cross walks entirely clear.

The duty of a municipality, particularly a village, as to cross walks, is performed when they are kept free from dangerous formations or obstacles, and a temporary covering of snow from curb to curb, left to facilitate the use of the street for driving, does not of itself create a dangerous condition such as to require removal by the municipality, unless by some particular formation it constitutes a special obstruction. DUPONT v. PORT CHESTER. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

In reversing a judgment for plaintiff, who fell upon an icy cross walk at the foot of a steep descent, just after a freeze following a period of thawing and raining, at a time when all the streets were covered with ice, the court said that it is not every ridge or lump of ice which will render a municipality liable in damages to one injured thereby, especially such ridges and lumps as are necessarily formed in variable weather upon cross walks where horses, sleighs, and people pass and repass; in such cases the municipality is bound to use reasonable care only. Comstock v. Schuylerville, 139 App. Div. 378, 124 N. Y. Supp. 92.

In Brennan v. New York, 130 App. Div. 267, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578, which is discussed in DUPONT v. PORT CHESTER, the facts showed that for nearly two days a storm had continued with alternating freezing and thawing, and this, together with the ordinary travel in the streets, was deemed the cause of the presence of the ice upon the cross walk. It is manifest, says the court, that the cross walk could not be kept free from snow and slush during the period in question, if the city had any such duty; the locality was a busy one, and the streets covered with snow, which every passing vehicle carried along and dropped everywhere. No such impossible task belongs to the city. There must be reason in all things, even in an action for damages against a city. This decision was affirmed in 197 N. Y. 544, 91 N. E. 1110.

Actionable negligence by the municipality

N. Y. Supp. 425, affirmed in 188 N. Y. 592, 81 N. E. 1168; Brennan v. New York, 130 App. Div. 267, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578.

Chase, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff at about 11 o'clock on the night of December 23, 1904, fell, while crossing over the brick pavement at the intersection of North Main and Adee streets in the defendant village, and received the injuries for which this action is brought. The sidewalks along the streets used by her were clear of snow and ice.

The plaintiff testified that in crossing the street she first stepped in water, then took three more steps, when her feet went out from under her, and she fell. She further testified that, so far as she observed, the condition of the street between the curbs was all the same; that she did not see the ice before she fell, although after she was down she saw ice all around her, and that it was very rough. The brick pavement was covered with an accumulation of snow and ice from 3 to 6 inches deep, and it had been in that condition for several days. There was a slight grade toward North Main street. There had been a week or more of snowstorms and cold weather, and on the day of the accident, and, perhaps on the day preceding, it had moderated. In the line of the sidewalk, on the west side of North Main street, where people cross Adee street at the intersection of said streets, there was some depression in the snow and ice, which was from 2 to 4 feet wide. It was caused by people treading upon the snow as it fell, and as so packed down it was in some places smooth and in some places rough. The condition of such crossing extended from curb to curb, and was not confined to a particular place. The cross walks of the village were all in practically the same condition. There had been severe weather and frequent storms, and there were great quantities of snow and ice in the village, and sleighs drawn by horses were used upon the streets. It appears from the record that three persons had fallen while crossing at the intersection of said streets during the day or the day preceding the accident to the plaintiff, and one of the persons so falling had called the attention of a trustee of the village to the fact of his fall, and he testified that he told the trustee that the walk was in a dangerous condition and should be cleaned. The particular place where the plaintiff and the others mentioned slipped and fell does not appear. It may in each case have been within the bounds of the cannot be predicated of its allowing a gutter 10½ inches wide between the sidewalk and the cross walk to become filled with snow, ice, water, and dirt which, not being sufficiently frozen to bear the weight of a pedestrian who steps upon it, instead of across the gutter, causes her to fall; a municipality in the latitude of Dunkirk cannot be expected to keep its streets and gutters free from such material in March, nor can it be expected to keep such material packed down and solid. O'Connor v. Dunkirk, 143 App. Div. 696, 128 N. Y. Supp. 358, motion for reargument, and for leave to appeal to court of appeals, denied in 145 App. Div. 908, 129 N. Y. S. 1137, judgment reaffirmed without opinion in 136 N. Y. Supp. 1142.

But if a city fails to keep its sidewalks in a reasonably safe condition, so that pedestrians are forced to walk in the streets, and if it negligently allows water to escape from broken mains into the streets and freeze there in gullies, such city is liable for injuries sustained by one slipping upon ice thus formed. Bellevue v. England, — Ky. —, 118 S. W. 994.

Where a wooden approach from a sidewalk to a crossing is built on a slant, without cleats, and becomes coated with ice by reason of a storm, thereby giving rise to personal injury to a pedestrian, the municipality is not liable simply on account of the slippery condition of the approach, unless, after actual or implied notice, it allows the dangerous condition to remain; 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

but the law requires a corporation so to construct its walks that they will be reasonably safe under all ordinary climatic conditions incident to that locality, and with reference to the topography of the place, and if the slipperiness of the walk, when combined with a defect in its construction, causes an accident, the city will be liable. Although the icy condition is a cause of the accident over which the municipality has no control, yet it may be a cause which it should have anticipated, and should have guarded against. Smith v. Yankton, 23 S. D. 352, 121 N. W. 848.

Where contractors, under a permit from a municipality, were working upon a street, and in their operations were drawing water from a hydrant and pouring it upon the surface of the street at the rate of 17 or 18 gallons per minute, sixteen hours per day for over two weeks, and this water froze in consecutive layers until the street was a mass of ice from curb to curb, and where a horse bring driven along the street slipped upon a ridge of this ice and received injuries such that it had to be killed, this ice was deemed a defect in the street. The city under its permit, and by work done under its supervision, suffered its contractor to place an obstacle to travel in its public street. The court expressly calls attention, moreover, to the fact that this case is not in the category of the so-called "snow and ice cases," in that the cause of this accumulation was not natural, but artificial. Loretz v. New York, 132 N. Y. Supp. 988. H. C. Sh.

depression or upon the sides thereof, upon level and smooth, or rough, uneven, or slightly sloping, ice formations. The exact place where they slipped may have been and probably was different in each case.

There is a difference in the duty of a municipality regarding the care of sidewalks used wholly by pedestrians, and cross walks, or places where people cross over streets, which are used in winter with teams attached to sleighs. Where a street in a village is traveled by the public with sleighs in the usual way, when there is an accumulation of snow thereon, particularly in streets without specially formed cross walks, the removal of all snow and ice at every crossing would materially interfere with the convenient and practical use of the street for trucking and driving. Even if the entire removal of snow from a cross walk is desirable for its use by pedestrians, the ordinary travel upon a street necessarily carries more or less snow upon the cross walk, and when it thaws and freezes with the varying temperature it would be quite impossible, except by continuous effort, to keep cross walks or crossings wholly free from snow and ice. We repeat that the obligation resting upon a municipality to keep its sidewalks free from snow and ice does not, in the absence of express provision of statute, apply to the same extent to a cross walk or crossing on a public street.

By the charter of the village of Port Chester, it is provided that the trustees shall have power, and it shall be their duty: "To prevent and remove all encumbrances, obstructions, and encroachments, from any cause whatever, upon the public streets, alleys, bridges, docks, public squares or grounds, sidewalks, or cross walks of said village, and to cause the same to be removed, and the streets to be cleansed and unobstructed. . . ." Laws of 1868, chap. 818, title 3, § 1, subd. 7. "To compel all persons to keep clean and remove from the sidewalks and gutters in front of the premises owned or occupied by them, all snow, ice, and dirt, and to keep the said sidewalks and gutters and streets clean." Subdivision 8.

The charter does not expressly provide that the village shall keep the cross walks of the village free from snow and ice. The duty resting upon municipal corporations to remove accumulations of snow and ice becomes imperative only when dangerous formations or obstacles have been created. Harrington v. Buffalo, 121 N. Y. 147, 24 N. E. 186; Taylor v. Yonkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 209, 59 Am. Rep. 492, 11 N. E. 642; Kinney v. Troy, 108 N. Y. 567, 15 N. E. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

728; O'Shaughnessey v. Middleport, 93 App. Div. 93, 86 N. Y. Supp. 944; Owen v. New York, 141 App. Div. 217, 126 N. Y. Supp. 38.

In a municipality, particularly a village, where it is not required by charter that snow and ice be removed from the entire street, the duty as to cross walks and crossings is performed when they are kept free from dangerous formations or obstacles. A temporary condition caused by storms that, for the time being, cover the roadway with snow from curb to curb, does not of itself create a dangerous condition of the street, and if it is left to facilitate the use of the street for driving or otherwise it is not negligence on the part of the municipality, unless there is something in the way in which the snow is left, or the form which it subsequently takes, as to thereby create an encumbrance, obstruction, or special danger.

In this case, where there was no structural defect in the crossing itself, and its temporary condition was the same from curb to curb and as at all the other crossings in the village, and it does not appear that the plaintiff slipped by reason of any particular formation of snow or ice or obstruction or dangerous formation upon the crossing or street, the municipality is not liable.

In Brennan v. New York, 130 App. Div. 267, 268, 114 N. Y. Supp. 578, 580, the court, referring to an appeal from a judgment obtained in an action for personal injuries incurred by a fall upon a cross walk, say: "The claim is that the plaintiff slipped on hard or packed snow or ice on the cross walk. It is not enough to show snow or ice to show that the city was negligent. In this variable winter climate of ours, falls of snow, followed by rain or by thawing, and then by freezing, and so alternating from day to day, are common. The city is in no way responsible for such conditions; nor is the impracticable duty put upon it of keeping the streets free of such snow and slush. This general condition all over the city is the work of nature, and cannot be guarded against. But if the city should negligently suffer snow and ice to remain and accumulate in a particular place until it became of a permanent nature, and a dangerous obstruction to pedestrians, then it would be liable, and this is the measure of its liability." The judgment of reversal entered in the Brennan Case was affirmed in this court. Brennan v. New York, 197 N. Y. 544, 91, N. E. 1110.

The evidence disclosed by the record in this case is not sufficient to sustain the judgment against the defendant.

The respondent asserts that the certificate to the printed case does not show that such case contains all the evidence received upon the trial, and that therefore the appellate division had, and this court has, the right to assume that evidence was given upon the trial to sustain the verdict. Such a certificate is necessary for the appellant when he seeks to show that the judgment is contrary to the evidence or against the weight of evidence; but it is not necessary to enable him to review the exceptions taken at the trial, including an exception to a motion for a nonsuit or dismissal of the complaint. Halpin v. Phenix Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 165, 23 N. E. 482; Brayton v. Sherman, 119 N. Y. 623, 23 N. E. 471; Rosenstein v. Fox, 150 N. Y. 354, 44 N. E. 1027. An exception to a nonsuit or dismissal of the complaint on the ground that the evidence does not show a cause of action raises a question of law that can be reviewed in this court, unless the decision of the appellate division is unanimous.

The judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted, costs to abide the event.

Cullen, Ch. J., and Gray, Haight, Vann, Willard Bartlett, and Hiscock, JJ., concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

S. T. SHAYLOR, Exr., etc., of John N. D. Cloud, Deceased, et al., Appts.,
v.

J. L. CLOUD.

(— Fla. —, 57 So. 666.)

Vendor and purchaser — lien — origin.

1. A vendor's lien upon land conveyed by him does not result from agreement, but it

Headnotes by WHITFIELD, J.

Note. — Effect of statutory bar of action for purchase money upon right to enforce vendor's lien.

As to effect of bar of principal debt on right to foreclose mortgage or deed of trust, see note to Kulp v. Kulp, 21 L.R.A. 550.

As to effect of bar of other remedies to prevent a sale under power in trust deed or mortgage, see note to Foot v. Burr, 13 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1210.

The authorities are in conflict upon the question as to the effect of statutory bar of action for purchase money upon the right to enforce the vendor's lien.

Rule in case of mere equitable lien raised by implication of law.

In some jurisdictions it is held, in accord with SHAYLOR v. CLOUD, that the vendor's is a right given by implication of law and enforceable in equity where the vendor is entitled to it.

Same — enforcement — time.

2. Where land is conveyed and a note is taken for the purchase price without any collateral security or contract mortgage upon the property to secure the payment of the purchase price, the law by implication gives to the vendors a right in the nature of a lien upon the property for the purchase price, which right, if not waived or abandoned, may be enforced in equity at any time before the remedy by action on the note is barred by the statute of limitations.

Same — loss — expiration of legal right.

3. A vendor's lien is a right created by law as an incident to the debt, and ceases to be available in equity when the debt is not enforceable at law.

Pleading — vendor's lien — limitation — demurrer.

4. Where, in a suit to enforce a vendor's implied lien, it clearly appears by the specific allegations of the bill of complaint, admitted by the demurrer, that the remedy for recovery of the debt for the purchase price of land conveyed is barred by the statute of limitations, the vendor's implied lien will not be enforced; and, in the absence of other equities to sustain the bill of complaint, it is subject to appropriate demurrer.

(February 5, 1912.)

APPEAL by complainants from an order of the Circuit Court for Alachua County sustaining a demurrer to a bill filed to enforce a vendor's lien upon certain real estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. B. Ellis, Jr., and George U. Walker & Son for appellants.

Mr. F. Y. Smith for appellee.

Whitfield, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears that in March, 1903, John N. D. Cloud conveyed certain land to J. L.

Cloud's lien raised by implication of law and enforceable in equity is a mere remedy or security, an incident to the debt, and ceases to be available in equity when an action to enforce the debt is barred by the statute of limitations. Waddell v. Carlock, 41 Ark. 523; Ilett v. Collins, 103 Ill. 74; Cassell v. Lowry, 164 Ind. 1, 72 N. E. 640; Day v. Baldwin, 34 Iowa, 380; Yeates v. Weeden, 6 Bush, 438; Littlejohn v. Gordon, 32 Miss. 235; Madison County v. Powell, 71 Miss. 618, 15 So. 109; Borst v. Corey, 15 N. Y. 505; Callender v. Basquin, 26 Ohio C. C. 540; Fisher v. Fisher, 9 Baxt. 71; Thompson v. Thompson, 3 Lea, 126; Pitschki v. Anderson, 49 Tex. 1; Rindge v. Oliphint, 62 Tex. 682; Johnson v. Dyer, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 602, 47 S. W. 727; Laird v. Murray, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 111 S. W. 780.

In Fisher v. Fisher, 9 Baxt. 71, where the Cloud, the consideration being $1,100, for which a note was given by J. L. Cloud to John N. D. Cloud payable January 1, 1905. John N. D. Cloud died in 1904. By will he bequeathed the land and the note to his mother, Nancy J. Cloud, who being a resident of Georgia and non compos mentis, B. F. Langford was there appointed guardian of her person and property. S. T. Shaylor qualified in August, 1904, as executor of the will of John N. D. Cloud. The note for the purchase price not having been paid, this suit was instituted March 23, 1911, by S. T. Shaylor as executor, Nancy J. Cloud, by her next friend, and B. F. Langford, as her guardian, against J. L. Cloud to enforce a vendor's implied lien upon the land for the unpaid purchase price of it, represented by the note given by the vendee to the vendor at the time of the conveyance.

A demurrer to the bill of complaint upon the specific grounds of laches, and that the note was barred by the statute of limitations, and the vendor's lien, being merely an incident to the debt, is also barred, was sustained with leave to amend, and the legal title passed to the vendee by an absolute conveyance, without any reservation of a lien, the court said: "The vendor in such a case has lost his right to recover the purchase money, and cannot have an implied lien to secure that which he has no right to recover." And it was pointed out that the sale by title bond or a lien retained upon the face of the deed stand on a different footing.

In Cassell v. Lowry, 164 Ind. 1, 72 N. E. 640, it was held that a court of equity will employ a limitation statute to aid a vendee in removing from his title a cloud upon it by his confessed failure to pay for the property as he has agreed to do, where under the system of procedure there is but one form of action, and the statute of limitations applies alike to actions at law and suits in equity.

On the other hand, it is held that the vendor's lien is enforceable, though the debt is barred by the statute of limitations. Relfe v. Relfe, 34 Ala. 500, 73 Am. Dec. 467; Bizzell v. Nix, 60 Ala. 281, 31 Am. Rep. 38; Flinn v. Barber, 61 Ala. 530; Shorter v. Frazer, 64 Ala. 74; Chapman v. Lee, 64 Ala. 483; Ware v. Curry, 67 Ala. 274; Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Ch. 236; Moreton v. Harrison, 1 Bland, Ch. 491; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trimble, 51 Md. 99 (owely awarded in partition proceedings, which was held to be in the nature of a vendor's lien and governed by the same principles); Lewis v. McDowell, 88 N. C. 261; Smith v. O'Connor, 6 Ohio Dec. Reprint, 934.

In Maryland the courts put a vendor's lien, so far as the applicability of limitations is concerned, upon the same ground with a lien by mortgage. It is said that the lien of the mortgage "continues for twenty years, not because of the seal attached to the mortgage, for sealed instruments in this state are barred by twelve years, but because it is a deed of conveyance, the rights under which are not barred except by the lapse of twenty years, by analogy to the time of limitations under the statute of James, which saves the right of entry for that period." Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trimble, 51 Md. 112.

And in Moreton v. Harrison, 1 Bland, Ch. 491, it was said: "An equitable lien is founded upon the principle that the legal title has not been parted with, or ought not to be 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

considered as completely vested in the vendee, until the whole purchase money has been paid. . . . If the whole legal title remains in the vendor, he may bring an ejectment, to which a limitation of not less than twenty years is a bar; but if the formal legal title has been parted with by the vendor before payment, then his having so ceded it gives him an equitable right to enforce payment here [in chancery] with all the advantages he had as the actual holder of the legal title, that is, as a mortgagee coming here [in chancery] to foreclose; in which case, by analogy to the statute of limitations, no time short of the lapse of twenty years is ever deemed sufficient to raise a presumption of satisfaction." To the same effect is Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Ch. 236.

In Relfe v. Relfe, 34 Ala. 500, 73 Am. Dec. 467, it was held that the lien for the payment of the purchase money under an executory contract for the sale of land could not be regarded as a stale demand within less than twenty years after the sale, when the presumption of payment arises. It was said by the court: "The principle which preserves liens, notwithstanding the bar of the debt, is neither confined to those secured by a conveyance, as for example a mortgage, nor to those secured by a sealed instrument, nor even to those provided by an express contract. . . . The principle is that the statute of limitations does not extinguish the debt, but merely bars the remedy by action at law; and there is no inconsistency in the prosecution of another remedy after the action at law is barred."

In School Directors v. Anderson, 28 La. Ann. 739, it was held that an action to dissolve a sale of land on the ground that the purchase price was not paid was not barred because an action on the notes given therefor was barred by the statute of limitations.

—applicability of limitation statutes other than those affecting the debt.

In Missouri it is held that the mere equitable lien of the vendor not reserved by express contract is in the nature of an implied trust, and as such the provision of the statute of limitations concerning trusts growing out of realty, which limits the complainants appealed from such order, which is assigned and argued as error.

By § 1725 of the General Statutes (§ 1294, Revised Statutes), an action upon any contract, obligation, or liability founded upon an instrument of writing not under seal must be commenced within five years. This suit is to enforce a vendor's lien upon land, that is raised only by implication of law, and the suit was not commenced within five years from the date of the conveyance of the land, or from the date of the maturity of the note not under seal given for the purchase price.

right to enforce the same to ten years, is applicable. Zoll v. Carnahan, 83 Mo. 35; Hockaday v. Lawther, 17 Mo. App. 636.

It has been held that the equitable lien of a vendor who has conveyed the land by deed is barred by seven years' possession by the vendee after the maturity of the debt, by the provisions of a statute which declares that no suit at law or in equity shall be prosecuted to enforce any claim to lands but within seven years next after the cause of action accrued. Sheratz v. Nicodemus, 7 Yerg. 9; Thompson v. Thompson, 3 Lea, 126. But see infra, Gudger v. Barnes, 4 Heisk. 570, as to the application of the statute where the conveyance is by title bond; and also Wood v. Neely, 7 Baxt. 586, as to the application of the statute where the vendor retains a lien on the face of the deed.

So a vendor's lien is extinguished by the statutory bar of action for the purchase money, under the provisions of the California Civil Code, § 3046, giving one who sells real property a vendor's lien thereon, independent of possession, for the remaining unpaid and unsecured purchase price, otherwise than by the personal obligation of the buyer; and under § 2911, which provides that a lien is extinguished by the lapse of time within which, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, an action can be brought upon the principal obligation. California Sav. Bank v. Parrish, 116 Cal. 254, 48 Pac. 73.

In Washington v. Soria, 73 Miss. 665, 55 Am. St. Rep. 555, 19 So. 485, it was held that since a vendor of land might have brought an action at law against the vendee to recover the unpaid purchase money, his proceeding in equity to subject the land to the satisfaction thereof cannot be said to rest upon the "existence of a trust not cognizable by the courts of common law," within the meaning of the provisions of § 2763 of the Code, which limits to ten years the period in which suit may be brought, but is governed by § 2762, which declares that "whenever there be a concurrent jurisdiction in the courts of the common law and in the courts of equity, of any cause of action, the provisions of this chapter limiting a time for the commencement of a suit for such cause of action in a court of common law shall apply to all suits to 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

A vendor's lien upon land conveyed by him does not result from agreement, but it is a right given by implication of law and enforceable in equity while the vendor is entitled to it. See Johnson v. McKinnon, 45 Fla. 388, 34 So. 272; McKinnon v. Johnson, 54 Fla. 538, 45 So. 451.

Where land is conveyed and a note is taken for the purchase price, without any collateral security or contract mortgage upon the property to secure the payment of the purchase price, the law by implication gives to the vendors a right in the nature of a lien upon the property for the pur-be brought for the same cause of action in a court of equity."

A bill to enforce against the land a note given by a married woman for the purchase money thereof is subject to the statute of limitations applicable to that form of indebtedness, notwithstanding that the note of a married woman is not enforceable as a personal obligation. McNair v. Stanton, 57 Miss. 298.

It was held in the above case that while the note of a married woman was not enforceable as a personal obligation, she will be compelled by a court of chancery to pay it or surrender the property acquired by its execution, and because of this it was contended that, inasmuch as the obligation to surrender the land is a trust raised and imposed upon her by a court of equity, it becomes barred only after the period of limitation prescribed by the Code in cases of trusts not cognizable in courts of law.

Failure to present a claim for unpaid purchase money to the administrator of vendee's estate within two years from the grant of his letters, as provided by statute requiring all claims against a decedent's estate, to be presented to the personal representative within a given time, or be forever barred, is a bar to a bill to foreclose a vendor's lien for the purchase money for certain lands for which a note had been given. Linthicum v. Tapscott, 28 Ark. 267. The court said: "A vendor's lien is a remedy or security,—not a right of property, and does not vary the nature of the debt or take it out of the operation of the statute of limitations, and cannot be enforced after the bar of the statute has attached to the debt."

But the failure of the vendor, who afterwards becomes the administrator of the vendee's estate, to bring his claim for the unpaid purchase money into the administration, does not preclude the subsequent enforcement of his equitable lien as a vendor, notwithstanding the statute of nonclaim, especially where the estate was in fact insolvent, and the entire assets required to pay the debts of the estate that were presented and allowed. Flinn v. Barber, 61 Ala. 530.

And in Hood v. Hammond, 128 Ala. 569, 86 Am. St. Rep. 159, 30 So. 540, it was expressly held that the failure of the vendor to present his lien notes to the administrachase price, which right, if not waived or abandoned, may be enforced in equity at any time before the remedy by action on the note is barred by the statute of limitations. But, where the remedy by action at law on the note is barred by the statute of limitations, the vendor's lien given by implication of law will not be enforced in equity. The lien is a right created by law as an incident to the debt, and ceases to be available in equity when the debt is not enforceable at law. A vendor can ordinarily have no greater right by implication of law than he has by contract, when the implied right is an incident to the contract right.

for within the time required by the statute of nonclaim, or to file them in the probate court within nine months after the declaration of insolvency of the estate, as provided by statute, will not cut off the vendor's lien and remedy for its enforcement. "Such failures," it was said in the above case, "would only operate to bar the right of the vendor to participate in the distribution of the estate."

The question whether the statute of nonclaim is equivalent of limitations within the rule that the running of the latter against the debt secured will bar the remedy on the mortgage is treated in the note in 31 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1013.

Rule where vendor retains the legal title.

It has been held that where the contract for the sale of land provides that the vendor shall retain the legal title until the purchase money is paid, it is competent for the vendor to enforce specific execution of the contract, and to subject the land to sale for the purchase money in arrears, at any time short of the period sufficient to raise the presumption of payment, notwithstanding the bar of the statute of limitations to an action at law to recover the purchase money. Hanna v. Wilson, 3 Gratt. 243, 46 Am. Dec. 190; Phillips v. Adams, 78 Ala. 225.

To the same effect are the following cases, where vendor gave bond for title: Erskine v. North, 14 Gratt. 60; Coles v. Withers, 33 Gratt. 186; Paxton v. Rich, 85 Va. 378, 1 L.R.A. 639, 7 S. E. 531; Hull v. Hull, 35 W. Va. 155, 29 Am. St. Rep. 800, 13 S. E. 49; Evans v. Johnson, 39 W. Va. 299, 23 L.R.A. 737, 45 Am. St. Rep. 912, 19 S. E. 623; and Tunstall v. Withers, 86 Va. 892, 11 S. E. 505; Magruder v. Peter, 11 Gill & J. 217 (which held that only lapse of time from which the presumption of payment arises will cut off vendor's lien, even though he has parted with the legal title reserved in the deed); Randall v. Jaques, Fed. Cas. No. 11,553 (where vendor took purchase money mortgage).

In Phillips v. Adams, 78 Ala. 225, it was held that the lien of a vendor of land, when no conveyance is executed, is regarded in the nature of a mortgage, and is not im-

In this case no collateral security or mortgage was taken, and the note given for the purchase price was not renewed or put in judgment so as to continue the right to recover the debt.

Where, in a suit to enforce a vendor's implied lien, it clearly appears by the specific allegations of the bill of complaint, admitted by the demurrer, that the remedy for recovery of the debt for the purchase price of land conveyed is barred by the statute of limitations, the vendor's implied lien will not be enforced; and, in the absence of other equities to sustain the bill paired or destroyed because an action at law for the purchase money may be barred by the statute of limitations; that it does not become a stale demand, if a bill in equity to enforce the lien is filed within less than twenty years after the sale.

And in McGehee v. Blackwell, 28 Ark. 27, where the vendor retained the legal title, giving a bond for title to the vendee, it was pointed out that he had three remedies, viz., an action of law upon the note, an action at law for possession of the land, and an action in equity to enforce his lien and subject the land to the payment of the debt, which under the statute were subject to different periods of limitation; and that though one remedy may be barred, he might pursue another that was not barred.

Accordingly, in Coldcleugh v. Johnson, 34 Ark. 312, it was held that only the bar of adverse possession of the land for such time as would bar an action at law for its recovery can prevent the vendor by title bond from proceeding in rem in a court of equity to enforce his specific lien upon the land itself. To the same effect are Hall v. Denckla, 28 Ark. 510; Butler v. Douglass, 1 McCrary, 630, 3 Fed. 612; which followed Hall v. Denckla; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756, 28 L. ed. 1141, 5 Sup. Ct. Rep. 771, which followed Coldcleugh v. Johnson; Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. 119, 23 L. ed. 113, and Butler v. Douglass, 1 McCrary, 630, 3 Fed. 612, which also involved conveyances made in Arkansas, and followed the law of that jurisdiction.

In Williams v. Young, 71 Ark. 164, 71 S. W. 669, it is held that a trust relation arises where land is sold and notes given for the purchase price, and a bond for title to be made by the vendor upon the payment of the notes; and that the statute of limitations will not begin to run until there is a termination of the trust relation.

And in Adair v. Adair, 78 Mo. 630, it was held that where the vendor reserves the legal title as security for the unpaid purchase money, the possession of the vendee is consistent with the contract, and cannot be deemed adverse, and the statute of limitations will not begin to run until there is an express repudiation of the contract.

Driver v. Hudspeth, 16 Ala. 348, was a proceeding under a statute, at the instance of complaint, it is subject to appropriate demurrer. See 2 Jones, Liens, 2d ed. § 1099; 2 Warvelle, Vendors, § 709; 29 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 759; Trotter v. Erwin, 27 Miss. 772; Stephens v. Shannon, 43 Ark. 464; Borst v. Corey, 15 N. Y. 505; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483.

A contrary rule in Maryland seems to be based on analogy to the English statute of limitations as to the right of entry. See Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trimble, 51 Md. 99. The Alabama cases and possibly others do not accord with the decided weight of authority. In Browne v. Browne, 17 Fla.

607, 35 Am. Rep. 96, and Jordan v. Sayre, 24 Fla. 1, 3 So. 329, the lien was created by a mortgage under seal, and the court held that, there being in the mortgage an express promise to pay the debt, the statute of limitations respecting instruments under seal is applicable where the contract mortgage is being foreclosed, even though the note evidencing the debt is barred by the five-year statute of limitation.

The order is affirmed.

Taylor, Shackelford, Cockrell, and Hocker, JJ., concur.

of a vendee holding a bond for title, to compel the personal representatives of the vendor, who had died, to make him title. The purchase money had not been paid, but an action at law on the notes given for it was barred by the statute of limitations. It was held that a vendor retaining the legal title, and entering into bond for its conveyance only on payment of the purchase money, had a lien in the nature of a mortgage; that this lien the court would not divest until the purchase money was paid, and that it was not impaired because an action at law for the recovery of the purchase money was barred by the statute of limitations. The court said: "The fact that the notes were barred by the statute of limitations does not destroy the lien, which is regarded in the nature of a mortgage. If the vendor, whose notes are barred, or his heirs after his death, should bring ejectment to recover the land, and thus drive the purchaser into a court of equity to enjoin the action, it is very clear to my mind that the court of chancery would not interfere until he had paid up the purchase money, the remedy to recover which at law had been barred by the statute of limitations. The court of equity would not decree a specific performance in favor of one who withholds the compensation he stipulated to pay, upon the ground that the legal remedy to recover it is barred. The vendor is not bound to sue upon his note, but may rest upon the security furnished by his lien."

In Gudger v. Barnes, 4 Heisk. 570, it was held in the case of contract for conveyance by title bond, the legal title being retained as security for the purchase money, that the lien thus retained was not a claim for land within the provision of a statute limiting suits at law or in equity to enforce any claim to lands, to seven years, and was not barred by the fact that the purchaser held possession of the land under his contract for seven years, for the reason that the vendor held his lien in pursuance of the contract of the parties, and the vendee held his land likewise in pursuance of the same contract, and not adversely to the right of the vendor, and therefore the statute of limitations could not operate to perfect a right in him, or to defeat the right of the vendor against which there had been no adverse holding or antagonism asserted. The court said that this "applies with perfect accuracy to the lien of the vendor, whether retained on the face of the deed, or created by contract by retention of the legal title for the payment of the purchase money." To the same effect is White v. Blackmore, 8 Lea, 49. Ray v. Goodman, 1 Sneed, 587, was expressly overruled by the court in Gudger v. Barnes.

But in Trotter v. Erwin, 27 Miss. 772, it was held that the foreclosure of the vendor's lien was barred when the debt was barred by the statute of limitations, though it appeared that the vendor never conveyed, but gave merely bond for title, and offered to convey upon the payment of the purchase money. The court said in effect that a vendor's lien is not a mortgage, that it has merely the incident of a mortgage of being enforceable in equity against the property subject to the vendor's equitable claim; but consists solely in debt, and must be subject to all the incidents of the debt, and cannot be enforced when the debt could not be, and consequently it cannot be enforced when the debt is barred by the statute of limitations.

Rule where vendor retains lien on the face of the deed.

It has been held that a lien reserved on the face of the deed is but an incident to the debt thereby secured, and that an action to foreclose the lien is barred when the debt is barred by limitation: Chase v. Cartright, 53 Ark. 358, 22 Am. St. Rep. 207, 14 S. W. 90; Stephens v. Shannon, 43 Ark. 464; Benedict v. Griffith, 92 Ark. 195, 122 S. W. 479; Hemingway v. Long, 23 Ky. L. Rep. 1757, 66 S. W. 278; Hale v. Baker, 60 Tex. 217; Stephens v. Mathews, 69 Tex. 341, 6 S. W. 567; Brown v. Cates, 99 Tex. 133, 87 S. W. 1149; Dupree v. Mansur, 214 U. S. 161, 53 L. ed. 950, 29 Sup. Ct. Rep. 548, reversing 80 C. C. A. 213, 150 Fed. 329. Contra, Buckner v. Street, 5 McCrary, 59, 15 Fed. 365 (C. C. E. D. Ark.), holding a plea of statute of limitations to note given for purchase money unavailing to preclude to foreclose a vendor's lien reserved in the deed by which the lands were conveyed.

In Hale v. Baker, 60 Tex. 217, the court pointed out that when the debt is barred by limitations, a vendor who has reserved a lien must rely for his remedy upon the assertion of such rights only as his superior title to the land confers upon him as its owner, such as an action to recover possession.

Thus, it is held in Texas that a vendor who has reserved a lien upon the face of the deed, to secure the unpaid purchase money, is entitled, upon default of payment by the vendee, to reclaim the land in an action for the possession, notwithstanding the right of action for the recovery of the purchase money is barred by limitation. Baker v. Ramey, 27 Tex. 52; White v. Cole, 87 Tex. 500, 29 S. W. 759; McPherson v. Johnson, 69 Tex. 484, 6 S. W. 798; Johnson v. Lockhart, 16 Tex. Civ. App. 32, 40 S. W. 640; Dittman v. Iselt, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 52 S. W. 96; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Beckley, 93 Tex. 267, 54 S. W. 1027; Lumpkin v. Story, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 134 S. W. 298; Shotwell v. McCardell, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 174, 47 S. W. 39 (applying same rule in case of judicial sale of land by administrator made under order of court).

This is upon the theory that the reservation in the deed to secure the unpaid purchase money renders the contract executory, and the superior title remains in the vendor until the purchase money is paid. Ibid.

So, if the vendor acquires possession after the vendee has made default, he cannot be turned out by an action of trespass to try title, although the purchase money, as a debt, be barred by the statute of limitation. Dunlap v. Wright, 11 Tex. 597, 62 Am. Dec. 506; Burgess v. Millican, 50 Tex. 397; McPherson v. Johnson, 69 Tex. 484, 6 S. W. 798.

And a conveyance in consideration of an annuity to be paid to the grantors during their lives, which reserved a lien on the land to secure the payment thereof, entitles the heirs of the grantors to recover the land, though the debt due by the grantee to the grantors was barred by limitations. McRae v. Poor, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 48 S. W. 47.

In Wood v. Neely, 7 Baxt. 586, it was held that the enforcement of a lien retained by the vendor on the face of the deed was not a claim for land, within the meaning of the statute limiting suits at law or in equity to enforce any claim to lands to seven years, notwithstanding the fact that the purchaser held possession of the land under his contract for seven years, for the reason that the vendor held his lien in pursuance of the contract of the parties, and the vendee held the land likewise in pursuance of the same contract, and not adversely to the right of the vendor, and therefore the statute of limitations could not operate to perfect a right to him, or to defeat the right of the vendor, against which there had been no adverse holding or antagonism asserted.

Rule where notes given for the purchase money contain stipulation that a lien should exist upon the land.

In Waddell v. Carlock, 41 Ark. 523, it 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

was held that a note which recited that it was given for the purchase money of the lands, describing them, and adding: "This note is to stand as a lien on said land until fully paid," was not thereby made a lien to any greater extent or with any other legal effect than that which attaches in equity to all notes of like character given for the purchase money of land. The court said: "It was not a mortgage, for it conveyed nothing. Nor was it like a title bond, leaving the legal title in the hands of the vendor."

In Texas it is held that a stipulation that a lien should exist upon the land to secure the payment of the purchase money contained in the notes given for the purchase price, which are executed simultaneously with the deed, is equally effective as though the lien had been reserved in the face of the deed, and that the lien may be enforced by a recovery of the land though the notes are barred by the statute of limitations, as shown in the subdivision "Rule where vendor retains lien on the face of the deed." Barber v. Hoffman, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 37 S. W. 769; Ellis v. Hannay, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 64 S. W. 684; Miller v. Linquist, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 141 S. W. 170; Buckley v. Runge, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 136 S. W. 533.

While it is held that a mere assignee of a note given to secure the purchase money of land, for which an express lien is reserved by the vendor, may have the land sold and its proceeds applied to the satisfaction of the purchase money note held by him, he must do this before the note is barred by the statute of limitations, since the mere assignment of the note does not carry with it the superior title to the land, which is vested in the vendor until the purchase money is paid. Stephens v. Mathews, 69 Tex. 341, 6 S. W. 567; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Beckley, 93 Tex. 267, 54 S. W. 1027.

Yet after the note has been barred by limitation, the original vendor may assign his superior legal title to the holder of the note, who, as assignee of the note and the legal title, may, in case the statute of limitation has been pleaded, recover the land in like manner as the vendor could in case he retained the notes. Abernathy v. Bass, 9 Tex. Civ. App. 239, 29 S. W. 398; White v. Cole, 87 Tex. 500, 29 S. W. 759; Dittman v. Iselt, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 52 S. W. 96; Jackson v. Bradshaw, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 30, 57 S. W. 878; Ellis v. Hannay, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 64 S. W. 684; Finks v. Abeel, 33 Tex. Civ. App. 567, 77 S. W. 650; Rutherford v. Mothershed, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 360, 92 S. W. 1021; Atteberry v. Burnett, 52 Tex. Civ. App. 617, 114 S. W. 159.

Rule where vendor takes mortgage which shows that it is given for the purchase money.

The rule in Texas, which permits a recovery of the land after an action to enforce payment of the purchase money is barred by limitation, where a lien is reserved on the face of the deed, is applicable, though the conveyance is by an absolute deed, where the vendor takes a mortgage executed simultaneously with the deed, which shows that it is given for the unpaid purchase money. Dunlap v. Wright, 11 Tex. 597, 62 Am. Dec. 506; Jackson v. Palmer, 52 Tex. 427; Burgess v. Millican, 50 Tex. 397 (applying rule in case of judicial sale of land by administrator made under order of court).

Effect of new promise or acknowledgment of the debt to remove bar of statute of limitations to enforce vendor's lien.

A renewal of a purchase money note given for land, or a new promise, will not only extend the vendee's legal responsibility for the debt, but also prolong the life of the vendor's lien, and put the statute of limitation in operation against it only from the maturity of the renewal, or from the date of the new promise. Poindexter v. Rawlings, 106 Tenn. 97, 82 Am. St. Rep. 889, 59 S. W. 766; Moreton v. Harrison, 1 Bland, Ch. 491; Howard v. Windom, 86 Tex. 560, 26 S. W. 483; Moran v. Wheeler, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 26 S. W. 297.

But as against a subsequent grantee of the land, the lien cannot be enforced beyond the statutory limitation which would bar an action upon the notes given for the purchase money, and the first grantee cannot extend the lien by recognition and payments on the debt. Tate v. Hawkins, 81 Ky. 577, 50 Am. Rep. 181; McElwee v. McElwee, 97 Tenn. 649, 37 S. W. 560.

However, in Beck v. Tarrant, 61 Tex. 402, it was held that the revival of a personal judgment rendered against the maker of a note given for the purchase money of land operated to preserve the vendor's lien after limitation would have barred a recovery upon the note and furnished a foundation for proceedings against a purchaser of the land from the original vendee, to foreclose the vendor's lien.

Effect of vendee's discharge in bankruptcy.

The vendor's right to enforce the equitable lien for the unpaid purchase money against the land is not affected by the vendee's discharge in bankruptcy, where it does not appear that the bankrupt court, by any proceeding, had sold the land for creditors, or that it had ever been listed as a part of his assets. Barnett v. Salyers, 11 Ky. L. Rep. 465, 12 S. W. 303.

And in Lewis v. Hawkins, 23 Wall. 119, 23 L. ed. 113, it was held that the discharge in bankruptcy released the vendee from personal liability for his debt, but the statute of limitations cannot avail to protect the land in the hands of the purchaser of it from the vendee, from the vendor's lien upon it for the purchase money, upon the theory that the execution of notes for the purchase money and the title bond between the vendor and vendee established an express trust in the vendor for the legal title, and the vendee for the purchase money, and 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

that, as between trustee and cestui que trust in the case of an express trust, the statute of limitations has no application.
A. L. R.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 1.)

LIZZIE VANTINE

v.

MARY BUTLER et al., Appts.

(— Mo. —, 144 S. W. 807.)

Evidence — to support declarations of pedigree — necessity.

1. Preliminary proof of relationship is necessary to support declarations tending to establish pedigree.

Same — sufficiency.

2. Sufficient extrinsic proof of relationship to support declarations of a woman since deceased, that a child was the daughter of a man to whose estate she was attempting to establish heirship, exists where it is shown that the woman, who was the wife of the man, was driven from home pregnant, and shortly after bore a daughter, and that, after staying in the neighborhood of her former home for several years, disappeared with the announced intention of going to a certain place, and was never again seen in that community; that shortly afterwards a woman with her physical characteristics, habits, and beliefs appeared with a child corresponding to the one which had disappeared, arrived at a town near where the woman announced she was going, and made the declarations in controversy, while the father and members of his family recognized that the missing child was living in the locality to which the woman went.

(February 29, 1912.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Boone County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to establish her right as a pretermitted heir in the estate of her alleged father. Affirmed.

Statement by Woodson, J.:

Counsel for appellants make the following brief and clear statement of the issues, which I adopt as a partial statement of the case, viz.:

"This cause is in this court by appeal on the part of the defendant, Mary Butler, Loutitia Phelan, and Mary Butler, the younger, and Vincent D. Phelan, executors of the last will and testament of John Butler, deceased, defendants in the above-entitled cause, from a decree and judgment of the circuit court of Boone county, Missouri, in favor of the plaintiff establishing her right as a pretermitted heir.

Note. — As to admissibility of declarations of relatives of claimant upon the issue of his relationship or heirship to decedent, see note to Re Hartman, 36 L.R.A.(N.S.) 530.

"The petition is in ordinary form, and alleges that John Butler died testate on October —, 1906, as to all his heirs except this plaintiff, and that, by his last will and testament, he devised to his present widow, Mary Butler, all his real estate to hold during her natural life, and, after her death, disposed of it in fee to his children and grandchildren as provided in said will, not mentioning the plaintiff in his will in any way; that said John Butler possessed at the time of his death about 2,000 acres of land and personal property of about $10,000; that said land is fully set out and described in the said petition; that plaintiff is an heir at law in said estates and entitled to a one-sixth undivided interest therein, both in the realty and the personality thereof, after the marital rights of the widow have been assigned and set off to her; that said will of said John Butler, deceased, has been duly probated, and that by the terms of said will Mary Butler and Vincent D. Phelan are named as executors, and have duly qualified as such and taken possession of both the personal and real estate of the said deceased. Wherefore plaintiff prays that issues be framed to determine the facts aforesaid, and that she be adjudged a daughter and a lawful heir of said John Butler, and entitled to a one-sixth interest in his estate, both real and personal, and a tenant in common with the defendants in all of said real estate, and that an accounting be had between her and said executors, heirs, and devisees, and for all such other and further relief as to the court may seem just in the premises. The petition in this case was filed on the 11th day of January, 1908. On June 1, 1908, these defendants filed an answer denying each and every allegation in said petition. The record discloses that the question of the heirship of the plaintiff was the only vital issue in controversy between the parties to this proceeding."

The evidence in the case is quite voluminous. Some sixty witnesses testified in the case on behalf of the plaintiff, none for defendants, and their testimony covers over 200 pages of closely printed matter. For that reason, it will be impractical to set out even a summary of the testimony of each. We will, however, state generally what the evidence tended to show, which is as follows:

John Butler, the alleged father of the plaintiff, died testate in Boone county in the fall of 1906, owning about 1,800 acres of land, described in the pleadings, and about $15,000 worth of personal property. The will was duly probated, and he devised the lands to his widow, Mary Butler, for life, with the remainder in specific portions to the other defendants. John Butler and his first wife, Jane Butler, whom it is claimed was the mother of the plaintiff, were Irish Catholics, who came from New York to this state about the year 1857. They then had two children, Harry and William. Butler was a carpenter, and lived at or near Sturgeon, in said county, until August, 1857, when he moved to a farm near there. On the 16th day of that month a third child was born unto them, whom they named Annie Butler. Some time later they moved to another farm near by, where he resided until his death, and where he accumulated his property. He farmed, engaged in the mercantile business, and operated a grist and a saw mill. He and his wife did not live happily together, but there is no suggestion that she was unfaithful to him. He was high-tempered, exacting, and dictatorial, believing that the wife is the servant of the husband, or, at any rate, he acted on the theory that he had the right to inflict corporal punishment upon her whenever he saw fit to do so. In a fit of temper, about the year 1859, he beat her up badly, and drove her from home, she carrying the visible marks of his brutality with her. She was pregnant at the time, and, when driven from home, she started afoot to Sturgeon, some miles away, and was found by the wayside in a hazel thicket, about to be confined. W. T. Mathis and others discovered her, and carried her to a new hotel he was building in Sturgeon. He put up a bed for her, and placed her upon it, whereat the first night thereafter she gave birth to a baby girl claimed to be the plaintiff in this case. She remained there only three or four days, until she could walk, when she took the child back to the neighborhood of the home from which she had been driven. The exact date of the birth is not stated, except it was "in plum or hazelnut time," which, of course, was in midsummer or early fall.

Shortly after the separation, Butler sent the three older children back to New York, and he joined the Union army at the outbreak of the war, and served throughout that entire period. He never returned to Missouri until 1865, when he came back to his old home, near Sturgeon.

During the first two or three years of Butler's absence, his wife and child, according to the testimony of many witnesses, lived with various neighbors near her old home, working when she could, but depending largely upon charity. At one time she lived in the county poorhouse, and subsequently she went to Columbia, Missouri, and worked there for a while, and in 1862 she returned to Sturgeon, where she worked for John Moyhian and others. In 1863 she and her baby left Sturgeon and went to Mexico, Missouri, some 15 or 20 miles east. That was the last time they were ever seen in Boone county. Butler never questioned the legitimacy of the child, but frequently after his return from the war, and after her departure from the country, he spoke of the child, and upon several occasions expressed to the neighbors a desire to locate her; but as a rule he was very reticent about his wife and this child.

Annie Butler, a daughter of the deceased, John Butler, knew she had a sister, and some two or three months prior to her marriage she told the witness, W. T. Mathis, in the presence of Laura Hawkins, a neighbor girl, that she had a sister living in Monroe county, near Paris.

The following facts are practically undisputed, viz.: Mrs. Butler's given name was Jane, and her maiden name was Jane Gorden. At the date of the separation, she was about thirty years of age, of rather fair complexion, dark brown hair, blue eyes, dark eyelashes, medium height, and inclined to be fleshy. Mrs. Butler was at times intemperate, and prior to the separation she became intoxicated, fell in an open fire, and burnt one of her arms very seriously, resulting in a permanent disfigurement. The child was first called Caledonia by her mother, but prior to leaving Boone county she changed her name, and called her Lizzie. The first thing heard of Mrs. Butler and the child after they left Sturgeon for Mexico was in the month of October, 1863. One evening in that month a woman with a child came from the direction of Mexico on a foraging wagon of a company of Union soldiers bivouacked on the highway leading from Mexico to Paris. Some of these soldiers testified that the child was four or five years old with dark hair. They remained in the camp overnight, and in the morning Colonel Forbes, commander of the company, turned the child over to Dan Wyman, who was running a hack from Mexico to Paris. The latter departed with the child in the hack for Paris. The soldiers subsequently in November saw the child in Paris, and still later they saw her there at the home of Mr. Wetmore. After living with the latter six or seven months, Mr. and Mrs. Wetmore adopted the child, and reared and educated her, where she lived as a daughter until she was married. Shortly after the child arrived at Wyman's, this same woman appeared at Paris, who had a badly burned arm. She said her name was Jane Butler, and that the child was hers, and its name was Lizzie. Each of them were known in that community by their respective names. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Mrs. Butler stated to various persons in and about Paris that she was the wife of John Butler, of Boone county, and that he was the father of the child; also, that she had by him three other children living in Boone county. There was some evidence which also tended to show that the child was the daughter of Jane Gorden, the maiden name of Mrs. Butler. This woman who claimed to be Mrs. Butler sympathized with the Union cause, and was a Catholic, and objected to Mrs. Wetmore raising the child, because she was not a Catholic, and did not sympathize with the Union cause. When Mrs. Wetmore refused to give up the child, the mother called upon the Union soldiers for assistance in procuring its custody. This trouble, which assumed an ugly form at first, was, however, compromised, and Mrs. Wetmore gave the mother a photograph of the child and she left Paris, and has never been heard of since, except in a general way that she had long since died. John Butler subsequently remarried, and they separated, and he again married. There are some additional detail facts which will be noticed in the opinion.

The court found the issues for the plaintiff, and rendered judgment accordingly. In due time, and in proper form, some of the defendants appealed to this court.

Messrs. Whitecotton & Wight for appellants.

Messrs. Gillespy & Conley, for respondent:

The declarant must be related to the person by blood or marriage, as to whose pedigree his declarations are offered; he may be related to the plaintiff, in which case his declarations tend to prove the pedigree of the plaintiff, or to the deceased, in which case his declarations tend to prove the pedigree of the deceased.

Wigmore, Ev. § 1491, note 2; Re Hartman, 157 Cal. 206, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 530, 107 Pac. 105, 21 Ann. Cas. 1302; Re Clark, 13 Cal. App. 786, 110 Pac. 828; Overby v. Johnston, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 348, 94 S. W. 131; Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 614, 23 Am. St. Rep. 370, 15 S. W. 682; Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 51 Am. Rep. 207; Smith v. Smith, 140 Wis. 599, 123 N. W. 146; Hubatha v. Meyerhofer, 79 N. J. L. 264, 75 Atl. 454; Mann v. Cavanaugh, 110 Ky. 776, 62 S. W. 854.

The statements made by Mrs. Butler as to her name and the name by which she was known in Paris, and the statements of witnesses that the child in Paris was called Lizzie Butler, is not hearsay, but primary evidence. It is relied on as a source of knowledge.

Willis v. Quimby, 31 N. H. 485; Harris v.

Martin, 150 N. C. 367, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 531, 64 S. E. 120, 17 Ann. Cas. 685; Gillian v. State, 3 Tex. App. 132; Berniaud v. Beecher, 71 Cal. 38, 11 Pac. 802; 1 Wigmore, Ev. § 667; Koth v. Pallachucola Club, 79 S. C. 514, 61 S. E. 78; People ex rel. Yates v. Ferguson, 26 Cow. 102; Rich v. Mayer, 26 N. Y. S. R. 107, 7 N. Y. Supp. 69; People v. Leong Quong, 60 Cal. 107, 4 Am. Crim. Rep. 334; Lafin & R. Powder Co. v. Steytler, 146 Pa. 434, 14 L.R.A. 690, 23 Atl. 215; 6 Enc. Ev. 922; Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 12 S. W. 525; McNeil v. O'Connor, 79 Tex. 227, 14 S. W. 1058; Nehring v. McMurrin, 94 Tex. 45, 57 S. W. 943, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 45 S. W. 1032; 15 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. p. 918; Mullery v. Hamilton, 71 Ga. 720, 51 Am. Rep. 288; La Riviere v. La Riviere, 77 Mo. 512; Long v. McDow, 87 Mo. 197; State v. Ellwood, 17 R. I. 763, 24 Atl. 782; Schott v. Pellerim, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 43 S. W. 944.

Woodson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The sole ground assigned by counsel for appellants for a reversal of the judgment is thus stated: "The court committed error in admitting the testimony of certain witnesses as to the identity of Jane Butler by Jane Butler's own declaration with no other proof, and also as to her relation to John Butler for the same reason."

"The fact of the relationship of the declarant must be established by evidence other than her own declaration before the declaration became admissible." Or, to put it another way: "Not only is it necessary, in order that the declaration of a person afterwards deceased should be admissible in cases of pedigree, that the declarant should have been related to the family in question, or connected with the same by marriage, but this relationship must be established by some proof other than the declaration itself." Or, further, the rules of evidence governing statements of this kind are: "(1) The statement must be made ante litem motam. (2) The declarant must be dead. (3) A prior condition to both of these is, that it should be proved by some source of evidence independent of the statement itself, that the person making the statement is related to the family of whom she speaks." In support of that proposition, we are cited to the following authorities: 1 Wharton, Ev. p. 209; Elliott, Ev. §§ 380, 381; Wigmore, Ev. § 1490; 16 Cyc. p. 1229; Kennedy, Trial Ev. p. 22; 2 Jones, Ev. p. 712. In brief, the position of counsel for appellants is this: That there is no evidence whatever preserved in this record which shows or warranted the trial court in finding that the woman and child who appeared in Paris in October, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1863, and known as Jane Butler and Lizzie Butler, were the wife and child of John Butler, late of Sturgeon, Boone county, Missouri, or that Jane and Lizzie were their true names, save and except the declarations of the former to the effect that such were their names, and that they bore those relations to him.

Under the authorities cited, counsel insist that those declarations were inadmissible in evidence for the reasons previously stated, and that they should be stricken out by this court, the judgment reversed, and the bill dismissed, for the reason that, when so stricken out, there would remain no sufficient evidence to support the findings of the court. The clearest and soundest statement of the rule governing the admission of declarations of persons as to pedigree and relationship is stated in 16 Cyc. p. 1229, as follows: "Notwithstanding an early tendency to regard intimate acquaintance with the family as a sufficient basis for knowledge as to facts of pedigree, and so to receive the declarations of family physicians, intimate friends, persons living in the family, or servants and other persons having adequate knowledge of facts of family genealogy or opportunities for acquiring it, the rule is now settled that, both in cases of reputation and of direct statements, the only competent declarants are those related to the family; and that consequently the declarations as to pedigree made by intimate friends, neighbors, or even by persons living in the family, or by servants, however trustworthy or long employed in the family, are incompetent. A second condition of relevancy is that the declarant should be disinterested to the extent of having no motive which can fairly be assumed to be such as would induce him to state the fact otherwise than as he understood it. The statement, therefore, must be shown to have been made ante litem motam; a fortiori, before commencement of a suit involving the issue to which the declaration relates. It is not material, however, that a controversy has arisen regarding a cognate matter, unless indeed it clearly foreshadows one on the precise subject-matter of the declaration; that a controversy, since entirely abated, once existed; or that a state of affairs is known to exist out of which a controversy may at any time arise. On the other hand, the declaration is inadmissible if a controversy in fact exists, although the declarant be ignorant of it, or it has not reached the stage of litigation. A declaration made expressly with a view to a probable future contest is admissible quantum valeat; but declarations made in the process of collecting evidence to substantiate the claim involved in a subsequent lis are incompetent. It is universally held that declarations in pedigree cases are not admissible unless the declarant is dead."

Some of the states announce a more liberal rule; for instance, the court of appeal of California in the case of Re Clark, 13 Cal. App. 786, 110 Pac. 828, held that the declarations of the deceased father of claimants to the estate of an intestate, that the intestate was his sister, made in the lifetime of the intestate, were admissible without extrinsic preliminary proof of the relationship of the father to the intestate. This same general principle seems to be supported by the following authorities: 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 1491; Re Hartman, 157 Cal. 206, 36 L.R.A. (N.S.) 530, 107 Pac. 105, 21 Ann. Cas. 1302; Overby v. Johnson, 42 Tex. Civ. App. 348, 94 S. W. 131; Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 614, 23 Am. St. Rep. 370, 15 S. W. 682; Sitler v. Gehr, 105 Pa. 577, 51 Am. Rep. 207; Smith v. Smith, 140 Wis. 599, 123 N. W. 146; Hubatka v. Meyerhofer, 79 N. J. L. 264, 75 Atl. 454; Mann v. Cavanaugh, 110 Ky. 776, 62 S. W. 854. In our opinion, the former rule is the wiser and more sound of the two for the reason that, if the preliminary proof of relationship is not required, great injustice might be done, or a gross fraud perpetrated by a designing person, by simply declaring that he or some member of his family was related to a deceased person, who has no opportunity to contradict the statement or disprove the fact. It should be borne in mind that such evidence is purely hearsay, unsanctioned by any form of oath; therefore no punishment could be inflicted upon the declarant while living for his prevarication, nor successfully combated in many cases after death. For this reason it seems to us that a reasonable weight of preliminary proof of relationship should be required before receiving the declarations of such witnesses. In other words, all reasonable precautions should be used to protect the fountain source of such evidence, which at best is very unsatisfactory, from fraud and pollution. The degree of such proof must of necessity depend largely upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case, and no hard and fast or unbending iron rule can be laid down and enforced alike in all cases. The following cases will somewhat illustrate the degree of such proof that is required in a case: Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 389, loc. cit. 397, 29 L. ed. 915, 918, 6 Sup. Ct. Rep. 780; Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. Jr. 147, 9 Revised Rep. 154; Monkton v. Atty. Gen. 2 Russ. & M. 157; Young v. Schulenberg, 165 N. Y. 385, 80 Am. St. Rep. 730, 59 N. E. 135; Re Robb, 37 S. C. 19, 16 S. E. 241; Brown v. Lazarus, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 81, 25 S. W. 71; Fowler v. Simpson, 79 Tex. 614, 23 Am. St. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Rep. 370, 15 S. W. 682; Louder v. Schluter, 78 Tex. 105, 14 S. W. 205, 207; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 2d ed. 644, and cases cited; Layton v. Kraft, 111 App. Div. 842, 98 N. Y. Supp. 72.

So considering this case under the rule of the law thus enunciated, were the declarations of Mrs. Jane Butler regarding the relationship she and Lizzie Butler, the respondent in this case, bore to John Butler, of Sturgeon, Missouri, admissible in evidence? In our opinion that question should be answered in the affirmative, for the reason that in our judgment this record abounds with such preliminary proof, and is ample to satisfy even a more stringent rule than that announced by the authorities before mentioned.

Briefly stated, the proof is as follows (for convenience, we will use the name, "Paris Butler," when referring to the Jane Butler, who appeared in Paris with the child Lizzie in the fall of 1863): Independent of the means by which the fact was brought about, Paris Butler was known for a year or more up to her death in and about Paris as Jane Butler, presumably from her declarations; that was also the name of the wife of John Butler, who disappeared in 1863. The latter was about thirty years of age when she was driven from her home, and the former, according to the opinion of the witnesses, appeared to be about thirty-five when she appeared in Paris in the fall of 1863. Both had blue eyes, dark eyebrows, and dark auburn hair. Jane Butler had rather a fair complexion, while Paris Butler was of rather a dark complexion. This, however, might be accounted for, as suggested by counsel for respondent, by the fact that she was five or six years older at the latter date, and may have been tanned by exposure during her wanderings. Each of them were about the same height and weight, and both "chubby;" Paris Butler being probably a little heavier. Both were nervous, excitable, and of a roving disposition,—more marked in Paris. Both were sad and sombre in disposition. Each was poor, and had to toil with her hands for a living. Jane Butler was at times addicted to drink. The record, as to Paris, in that regard is silent. Both were Catholics and sympathized with the Union cause. This appears more from the conduct of Paris than from her words. Jane Butler was the mother of four children, the youngest a girl named Lizzie, born in the fall of 1859, and had dark hair. The last time Jane Butler and Lizzie, her daughter, were ever seen on this earth, so far as the evidence shows, was when they left Sturgeon for Mexico in the year of 1863; and the first time Paris Butler and Lizzie, her daughter, were ever seen or heard of on this earth, was when they mounted the foraging wagon of the Union soldiers, a few miles from Mexico, and rode thereon to the camp, near Paris. The exact period which expired between the time the former departed for Mexico and the time when the latter appeared at the camp is not disclosed by the evidence, but it could not have exceeded a few months. The latter child was four or five years of age when first seen at the camp, in October, 1863. Her hair was dark and her eyes were blue. Both women had a badly burnt arm, amounting to a disfigurement. The husband of Jane Butler was a Catholic, and served in the Union army. The conduct of Paris Butler, emphasizing her words in her appeal to the soldiers for aid in recovering the custody of her child, tends to show that her husband was also a Union soldier and a Catholic in religion. John Butler, the husband of Jane Butler, and father of Lizzie Butler, knew that the two latter had disappeared from Boone county, and upon several occasions expressed a desire to find the latter. And Annie Butler, the daughter of Jane and John Butler, and sister of Lizzie Butler, knew that the two latter had disappeared, and she told Mr. Mathis and others that her sister Lizzie lived in Monroe county, near Paris.

When we further consider the fact, that Boone, Audrain, and Monroe counties all adjoin each other, and were connected by railroads, with a somewhat sparse population, and where all must have had more or less acquaintance with each other, it seems to me as almost inconceivable that Jane Butler and her daughter Lizzie could all at once disappear from the face of the earth while going from Sturgeon to Mexico; and that almost immediately thereafter her daughter Lizzie could, unknown to the whole world, spring into existence a few miles north of Mexico, and both go to Paris, the former remaining there about a year, and the latter until she reached womanhood, without exciting word of comment, or calling forth an investigation of any kind, except upon the reasonable theory that Jane Butler and her daughter Lizzie of Sturgeon were none other than Jane Butler, whom we have been calling "Paris Butler," and her daughter Lizzie. Even in the absence of the declarations of Paris Butler as to the relationship she and her daughter bore to the deceased, John Butler, the evidence disclosed by this record is ample to establish the fact that Jane and Lizzie Butler of Sturgeon were the same persons as Jane and Lizzie Butler of Paris. And, when we corroborate that evidence with the declarations of Paris Butler, then their identity is established almost beyond a reasonable 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) doubt. No four persons could have so many qualities in common with each other. Moreover, the same names and ages, pedigrees and family history point with an unerring finger to the fact that they are the same persons. In our opinion the evidence was ample to support the findings and judgment of the court.

We therefore affirm the judgment.

All concur.

OKLAHOMA SUPREME COURT. (Division No. 2.)

SPRINGFIELD FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

HARRY HOMEWOOD.

(— Okla. —, 122 Pac. 196.)

Insurance — statutory valuation — Liability.

1. Where a fire insurance policy was written and the loss occurred while § 3199 of Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903 (which provided that "all insurance companies issuing policies in this territory shall be required to pay in case of total loss the full amount, and in case of partial loss, shall be required to pay the amount of loss so sustained for which the property is insured; provided, however, that no policy shall be issued which shall contain a sum greater than 75 per cent of the value of the property so insured") and § 3204 of Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903 (which provided that, "if there is no valuation in the policy, the measure of indemnity in an insurance against fire is the full amount stated in the policy; but the effect of a valuation in a policy of fire insurance is the same as in policy of marine insurance"), were in force, the company was liable, in case of total loss, for the full amount of the policy.

Headnotes by ROSSETT, C.

Note. — Constructive total loss of insured building.

This is a continuation of the same subject treated in the note to Monteleone v. Royal Ins. Co. 56 L.R.A. 784.

In that note, it is stated that two rules have been adopted: The earlier one, that the loss is total whenever the building has been so injured as to lose its identity and specific character as such; and the other, that it is not totally destroyed so long as a substantial remnant remains which a prudent, uninsured person would use in rebuilding.

In one recent case, both rules seem to apply and it is held that where a jury upon substantial evidence finds that the building has lost its identity and specific character as a building, and that it has become so far

Same — total loss.

2. When all combustible material in a railroad car is destroyed by fire, leaving only the trucks and steel used in its construction, and that is so injured by the fire as not to be of use in rebuilding the car, there is a total loss, within the meaning of the fire insurance policy, although the trucks and steel may be worth a small per cent of the original value of the car as old irons or scraps.

Same — appraisal — necessity.

3. Where there was a total loss of property covered by a fire insurance policy, governed by the provisions of §§ 3199 and 3204 of Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. 1903, no appraisal was necessary, though the policy provided for appraisal as a condition precedent to bringing suit thereon.

(January 16, 1912.)

disintegrated that it cannot be properly designated as a building, even though a portion thereof remains standing, and when the jury finds as well that the portion which remains standing is not such as a reasonably prudent man without insurance, desiring a building like the one insured prior to the fire, would use as a basis on which to rebuild or restore the same to its prior condition, it is thereby conclusively settled that the loss is total. Stevens v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 120 Mo. App. 88, 96 S. W. 684.

Most of the recent cases, however, follow the latter rule as laid down above, and apply the test of a substantial, usable remnant remaining.

In applying that rule and that test, the courts have held the loss to be total under the following circumstances:

—where an engine and dynamo insured as component parts of a manufactory were badly damaged, but not entirely destroyed, the court saying that the issue as to the amount of loss was not whether in its damaged state the machinery might have some value for other purposes, but whether it had any value left in it for the purposes of the factory in case the latter should be restored and operated; and that, if the machinery could not be repaired and replacements be restored to its intended use as an integral part of the factory, the fact that it might be sold for junk or even repaired in a way to make it useful for other purposes, and therefore of some value, did not alter its status as property totally destroyed. Rogers v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co. 157 Mo. App. 671, 139 S. W. 265;

—where barroom fixtures and furniture were blackened and charred by fire, but not entirely destroyed; the principle there stated being that, if property or any part of it is so damaged by fire as to render it useless for the purposes for which it has been used, such damage amounts to total loss within the meaning of the law. Manchester F. Assur. Co. v. Feibelman, 118 Ala. 308, 23 So. 759;

—where the walls and other portions of ERROR to the District Court for Pottawatomie County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a fire insurance policy. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. Burwell Crockett & Johnson, for plaintiff in error:

There was some considerable property of value, such as the steel and iron, left as salvage from the car after the fire. Under these circumstances the insurance company was entitled to have the damages appraised.

Carroll v. Girard F. Ins. Co. 72 Cal. 297, 13 Pac. 863; Zalesky v. Home Ins. Co. 102 Iowa, 613, 71 N. W. 566; Chippewa Lumber Co. v. Phenix Ins. Co. 80 Mich. 110, 44 N. W. 1055; Gauche v. London & L. Ins. Co.

the building left by the fire were of no value in rebuilding. Eureka F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Gray, 24 Ohio C. C. 268; —where a building was entirely destroyed, and the stone foundation on which it rested was rendered valueless for any purpose. Aetna Ins. Co. v. Glasgow Electric Light & P. Co. 107 Ky. 77, 52 S. W. 975;

—where a dwelling house was entirely burned except a glass front door, which was crushed after removal. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Noe, 75 Ark. 406, 88 S. W. 572;

—where a part of a building was burned and the roof over that part fell in, the rest being left charred and damaged, and the sides burned through in places, so that experienced builders testified that the building was left a mere shell worthless for repair, and not usable as a basis for repair; the court remarking that to make the loss total it is not necessary that the fire should entirely destroy and work an extinction of the house. Hinkle v. North River Ins. Co. — W. Va. —, 75 S. E. 54;

—where three walls of a building were entirely destroyed, although a small portion of the fourth was used in rebuilding, but so used over the protest of the superintending architect, and where no joists or flooring were left fit for use, and where only a small part of the foundation wall could be reused. American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Murphy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 61 S. W. 956;

—where a courthouse of three stories was so burned that the basement, the walls and floors of the first story, the floors and part of the walls of the second story, and part of the floors and part of the walls of the third story, remained, but the walls were so sprung, cracked, and impaired by water and heat that they were unsafe for use in rebuilding, and must needs be torn down, at least to the top of the first story, even though there was some evidence that portions could have been retained and the building reconstructed. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County Ct. 115 Ky. 109, 72 S. W. 739;

—where a private car was destroyed by fire as completely as a fire could destroy,

4 Woods, 102, 10 Fed. 347; Kahnweiler v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 57 Fed. 562; Fowble v. Phoenix Ins. Co. 106 Mo. App. 527, 81 S. W. 485; Stevens v. Norwich Union F. Ins. Co. 120 Mo. App. 88, 96 S. W. 684; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Carnahan, 63 Ohio St. 258, 58 N. E. 805; Graham v. German American Ins. Co. 75 Ohio St. 374, 15 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1055, 79 N. E. 931, 9 Ann. Cas. 79; Hood v. Hartshorn, 100 Mass. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 89; United States v. Robeson, 9 Pet. 319, 9 L. ed. 142; Fisher v. Merchants' Ins. Co. 95 Me. 486, 85 Am. St. Rep. 428, 50 Atl. 282; United States v. Ellis, 2 Ariz. 253, 14 Pac. 300; Adams v. South British & Nat. F. & M. Ins. Co. 70 Cal. 198, 11 Pac. 627; Carroll v. Gerard, F. Ins. Co. 72 Cal. 297, 13 Pac. 863; Old Saucelito Land & Dry Dock Co. v. Commercial Union Assur. Co. 66 Cal. 253, 5 Pac. 232; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Pennsylvania Coal Co. 50 N. Y. 250.

Under an open policy it is incumbent on the insured to show the value of the property destroyed in an action to recover for a loss.

4 Cooley, Briefs on Insurance, p. 3078; Williams v. Continental Ins. Co. 24 Fed.

767; Hanover F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 23 Fla. 193, 1 So. 863; German F. Ins. Co. v. Von Gunten, 13 Ill. App. 593; Millaudon v. Western Marine & F. Ins. Co. 9 La. 27, 29 Am. Dec. 433; Germier v. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. 109 La. 341, 33 So. 361; Home Ins. Co. v. Stone River Nat. Bank, 88 Tenn. 360, 12 S. W. 915.

The measure of the amount insured is entitled to recover is the fair cash value of the property at the time and place of the loss, not exceeding the amount of the insurance.

Mack v. Lancashire Ins. Co. 2 McCrary, 211, 4 Fed. 59; Perry v. Mechanics' Mut. Ins. Co. 11 Fed. 485; State Ins. Co. v. Taylor, 14 Colo. 499, 20 Am. St. Rep. 281, 24 Pac. 333; Holter Lumber Co. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. 18 Mont. 282, 45 Pac. 207; Huckins v. People's Mut. F. Ins. Co. 31 N. H. 238; Fowler v. Old North State Ins. Co. 74 N. C. 89; Grubbs v. North Carolina Home Ins. Co. 108 N. C. 472, 23 Am. St. Rep. 62, 13 S. E. 236; Boyd v. Royal Ins. Co. 111 N. C. 372, 16 S. E. 389; Ellmaker v. Franklin F. Ins. Co. 5 Pa. 183.

Appraisers must give notice of the time and place of hearing or meeting, and each although the iron and steel left might have a small value as scraps, but could not be used in rebuilding the car. SPRINGFIELD F. & M. Ins. Co. v. HOMEWOOD.

Under a contract whereby a company was to equip the property of another with fire extinguishers, and was to be indemnified by the other for any loss or damage by fire which might occur to the materials and equipment while on the premises of that other, where a fire destroyed certain materials, but left unharmed other materials that had been placed underground according to the contract, it was held that, since the latter became useless for the purposes of the contract when the plant was destroyed, the loss was total in the sense of the contract, and liability therefor was not dependent upon actual destruction by fire of the materials in the structure; and since the contract imposed no duty upon the company to recover such materials, it was not chargeable with their value as wreckage. Schaeffer Piano Mfg. Co. v. National Fire Extinguisher Co. 78 C. C. A. 293, 148 Fed. 159.

As stated in the former note, the result is sometimes affected by laws or ordinances prohibiting repair of the building in its original character. In such cases the loss will be considered total, even though portions of the structure may be left unharmed.

So where the loss by fire is partial, but the injury by the fire has rendered the building unfit for use for the purpose for which it was constructed, and where there are ordinances or laws prohibiting its reconstruction, the loss is total. In this case the building was a frame structure, and its 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

reconstruction as such within the fire limits was prohibited by city ordinances. Palatine Ins. Co. v. Nunn, — Miss. —, 55 So. 44.

Where walls only are left standing after the fire, and these may possibly be utilized in rebuilding, yet, if they are condemned by city authorities and ordered removed, the loss is total; and this result is not affected by the question whether the authorities are right or wrong in their judgment that the walls are unsafe. New Orleans Real Estate Mortg. & Secur. Co. v. Teutonia Ins. Co. 128 La. 45, 54 So. 466.

The fact that it would cost more to use the materials left than to use new materials goes to show that the loss is total. Hinkle v. North River Ins. Co. supra.

Fire insurance upon a vessel to lie moored in a river for use as a hospital for two years is not maritime, but is governed by the rules of ordinary fire insurance, and it is therefore incorrect to charge a jury that if, in their judgment, the cost of repairs after a fire would be more than the vessel would be worth when repaired, they should bring in a verdict as for total loss. Detroit v. Grummond, 58 C. C. A. 301, 121 Fed. 963.

Where a lessee of a hotel took out a policy on the "use and occupancy" of the building, and it was so far destroyed by fire that the business connected with it could not be carried on until repairs had been made, there was held to be a total loss of the use and occupancy within the meaning of the policy, although some of the rooms were not materially damaged. Chatfield v. Aetna Ins. Co. 71 App. Div. 164, 75 N. Y. Supp. 620. H. C. Sh.

party must be afforded an opportunity to introduce evidence in support of his contention.

Ostrander, Fire Ins. 2d ed. § 292, p. 642; Schoenich v. American Ins. Co. 109 Minn. 388, 124 N. W. 5; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 650; 1 Clement, Fire Ins. p. 167, rule 50; Slater v. La Grande Light & P. Co. 43 Or. 131, 72 Pac. 738; Shively v. Knoblock, 8 Ind. App. 433, 35 N. E. 1028; Continental Ins. Co. v. Garrett, 60 C. C. A. 395, 125 Fed. 589; Schreiber v. German-American Hail Ins. Co. 43 Minn. 367, 45 N. W. 708; Mason v. Fire Asso. of Philadelphia, 23 S. D. 431, 122 N. W. 423; Curtis v. Sacramento, 64 Cal. 102, 28 Pac. 108; Graham v. Woodall, 86 Ala. 313, 5 So. 687; Dormoy v. Knower, 55 Iowa, 722, 8 N. W. 670; Tiffany v. Coffey, 142 Mo. App. 210, 125 S. W. 1178; Warren v. Tinsley, 3 C. C. A. 613, 2 U. S. App. 507, 53 Fed. 689; Elmendorf v. Harris, 23 Wend. 628, 35 Am. Dec. 293; McFarland v. Mathis, 10 Ark. 560; McMahon v. New York & E. R. Co. 20 N. Y. 468; Day v. Hammond, 57 N. Y. 479, 15 Am. Rep. 522; Crowell v. Davis, 12 Met. 293; Billings v. Billings, 110 Mass. 225; Hills v. Home Ins. Co. 129 Mass. 345; Williams v. Schmidt, 54 Ill. 209, 2 Mor. Min. Rep. 23; Ingraham v. Whitmore, 75 Ill. 24; Alexander v. Cunningham, 111 Ill. 511; Lincoln v. Taunton Copper Mfg. Co. 8 Cush. 415.

Messrs. Blakeney & Maxey for defendant in error.

Rosser, C., filed the following opinion:

This was an action on a fire insurance policy by Harry Homewood, hereinafter called plaintiff, against the Springfield Fire & Marine Insurance Company, hereinafter called defendant, to recover for the burning of a certain private car, known as "Gertrude," the property of the plaintiff. The policy was issued September 10, 1907, for one year, and the loss occurred on the 27th of November, 1907, at Tecumseh, in this state.

There are only two questions raised by defendant's brief: First. That the loss was not appraised before suit was brought, as provided by the policy. It was stipulated in the policy that, in case of a disagreement between the insurer and the insured, the amount of loss should be determined by appraisal, the insured to select one appraiser, the company another, and the two appraisers thus selected to choose the third, and the three to appraise the property. At the time the policy was written, and when the loss occurred, § 3199 of Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. was in force. That section was as follows: "All insurance companies issuing policies in this territory shall be required to pay in case of total loss the full amount, and in case of partial loss, shall be required to pay the amount of loss so sustained for which the property is insured; provided, however, that no policy shall be issued which shall contain a sum greater than 75 per cent of the value of the property so insured." This section is quoted in Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A. (N.S.) 892, 116 Pac. 435, in the discussion of the necessity of appraising property destroyed by fire. Section 3204 of Wilson's Rev. & Anno. Stat. was also in force, both at the time the policy was written and when the loss occurred. That section provided that, "if there is no valuation in the policy, the measure of indemnity in an insurance against fire is the full amount stated in the policy; but the effect of a valuation in a policy of fire insurance is the same as in policy of marine insurance." This section was construed in the case of Oklahoma Farmers' Mut. Indemnity Asso. v. McCorkle, 21 Okla. 606, 97 Pac. 270. In that case it was held, under that section, that, "in the event of total loss the amount of insurance mentioned in the policy was payable absolutely, without further evidence as to the actual loss." See also Word v. Southern Mut. Ins. Co. 112 Ga. 585, 37 S. E. 897; Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 403, 26 L.R.A. 107, 45 Am. St. Rep. 570, 27 S. W. 718; Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Bush, 60 Neb. 116, 82 N. W. 313; Oshkosh Gaslight Co. v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 71 Wis. 454, 5 Am. St. Rep. 233, 37 N. W. 819; Reilly v. Franklin Ins. Co. 43 Wis. 449, 28 Am. Rep. 552. Both these sections were repealed by the act of March 25, 1909 (Laws 1909, chap. 21, art. 2).

Two questions then arise. The first is, Was there a total loss? And the second, If the loss was total, was appraisal necessary? It appears from the evidence that everything combustible in and about the car was burned, and all of the car that could burn was burned, and all of the contents that could be burned were burned. All that was left was the iron and steel work of the car, and that, according to the testimony, was so injured and changed by the fire as to make it incapable of use in another car, and had no value except as scrap iron or rubbish. It was then a total loss, so far as it was possible for fire to make it a total loss.

In the case of Seyk v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 67, 3 L.R.A. 523, 41 N. W. 443, where a similar question was involved, the court said: "Were the insured buildings wholly destroyed, within the meaning of § 1943? The evidence is that all the combustible material in the structures was destroyed, and, although portions of the brick walls were left standing, yet they were useless as walls, and many, perhaps most, of the bricks therein, were spoiled by the heat. It cannot be doubted that the identity and specific character of the insured buildings were destroyed by the fire, although there was not an absolute extinction of all the parts thereof. This was an entire destruction of the buildings, within the meaning of the statute."

In Palatine Ins. Co. v. Weiss, 109 Ky. 464, 59 S. W. 509, the court said: "It is unnecessary to multiply citations from authorities bearing upon this question. It is the opinion of the court that the words 'total loss,' when applied to a building, do not mean that the materials of which the building was composed were all totally destroyed and obliterated. It is not necessary that all of the parts and materials composing the building should be absolutely and physically destroyed; but the inquiry always is: Does the insured building, after the fire, still exist, preserving substantially its identity, or has it become so broken and disintegrated that it cannot be designated as the structure which was insured? There may be a total loss, within the meaning of the statute, even though some parts of the building may remain standing after the fire. See Wood, Ins. § 107; May, Ins. § 420a; Ostrander, Ins. 2d ed. § 610; Biddle, Ins. § 1375; Joyce, Ins. §§ 3025, 3030; Beach, Ins. § 890; Black, Law Dict. 'Total Loss'; Judah v. Randal, 2 Cal. Cas. 324; Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 71, 5 N. W. 12." See also Murphy v. American Cent. Ins. Co. 25 Tex. Civ. App. 241, 54 S. W. 407; Havens v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 123 Mo. 403, 26 L.R.A. 107, 45 Am. St. Rep. 570, 27 S. W. 718; O'Keefe v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 140 Mo. 558, 39 L.R.A. 819, 41 S. W. 922; Hamburg-Bremen F. Ins. Co. v. Garlington, 66 Tex. 103, 59 Am. Rep. 613, 18 S. W. 337; Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co. 54 Cal. 442, 35 Am. Rep. 77.

In Liverpool & L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Heckman, 64 Kan. 388, 67 Pac. 879, the court said: "The phrase 'total loss,' or its equivalent, 'wholly destroyed,' as used when applied to the subject of insurance, does not contemplate the entire annihilation or extinction of the property insured. Nor does it require that any portion of the property remaining after loss shall have no value for any purpose whatever; but it means only destruction of the property insured to such extent as to deprive it of the character in which it was insured."

When the car was burned, nothing remained but the débris or scraps. Although they may have had some value, 3 or 3½ per cent of the total value, still it was destroyed as a car; and fire had done all the damages it was possible for fire to do it. Destruction by fire, so far as fire could destroy, was the thought that was in the parties' minds at the time the policy was written. Total loss occurred, within the meaning of the policy, when everything was destroyed that fire could destroy.

It is obvious that if the total amount of the policy was payable in the event of total loss, no appraisal was necessary. The amount of the policy was the amount payable, and there was nothing to appraise. While the exact point was not decided in either case, the reasoning of both Oklahoma Farmers' Mut. Indemnity Asso. v. McOrkle, 21 Okla. 606, 97 Pac. 270, and the Farmers' & M. Ins. Co. v. Cuff, 29 Okla. 106, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 892, 116 Pac. 435, leads to this conclusion. In the case of Oshkosh Gaslight Co. v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 71 Wis. 454, 5 Am. St. Rep. 233, 37 N. W. 819, the court, speaking of a similar statute to the one in force at the time the policy in this suit was written and the loss occurred, said: "The statute must be regarded as a part of the contract of insurance, and the amount written in the policy as liquidated damages agreed upon by the parties conclusively in such contract." In Lancashire Ins. Co. v. Bush, 60 Neb. 116, 82 N. W. 313, the court said: "The statute, which is to be regarded as part of the contract, fixes conclusively the worth of the building which is the subject of insurance. If the property is wholly destroyed, its actual value is not to be determined by evidence, agreement, or arbitration. The damages are liquidated, and the measure of recovery already ascertained." A large number of cases, among which are German Ins. Co. v. Eddy, 36 Neb. 461, 19 L.R.A. 707, 54 N. W. 856; O'Keefe v. Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. 140 Mo. 558, 39 L.R.A. 819, 41 S. W. 922; Baker v. Phoenix Assur. Co. 57 Mo. App. 559; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Bourbon County, 115 Ky. 109, 72 S. W. 739; American Cent. Ins. Co. v. Noe, 75 Ark. 406, 88 S. W. 572; Marshall v. American Guarantee Mut. F. Ins. Co. 80 Mo. App. 18, and Ætna Ins. Co. v. Shacklett, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 57 S. W. 583, sustain the doctrine that, under statutes similar to the one governing this case, no appraisal is necessary, although stipulated for in the policy; and it was held in Pennsylvania F. Ins. Co. v. Drackett, 62 Ohio St. 41, 81 Am. St. Rep. 608, 57 N. E. 962; and Seyk v. Millers' Nat. Ins. Co. 74 Wis. 67, 3 L.R.A. 523, 41 N. W. 443, that a voluntary submission to arbitration did not preclude the insured from recovering the face of the policy, where there was a total loss, though the award was for a less amount.

Defendant's second contention is that the court erred in permitting Gertrude Homewood, the wife of plaintiff, to testify in the case. The execution of the policy is admitted, and the destruction of the property by fire was amply proved by several witnesses, both for the plaintiff and the defendant. Mrs. Homewood's testimony was entirely immaterial. It was not necessary to prove the value of the property. Marshall v. American Guarantee Mut. F. Ins. Co. 80 Mo. App. 18, when the execution of the policy was shown, and the destruction proven to be a total loss, the liability of the company was established. These facts were practically admitted by the company, and were proven by the other witnesses. Whether Mrs. Homewood's evidence was competent or not cannot affect the decision of the case. However, she testified that she had full control of the car and the contents in the absence of her husband, and her testimony was confined to conditions and transactions existing and occurring in his absence. Her testimony appears to have been competent. The judgment should be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

Adopted in whole.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ARIZONA SUPREME COURT.

W. G. DUMONT, Appt.,

v.

HARRY E. HEIGHTON, Admr., etc., of Charles H. Ferry, Deceased.

(— Ariz. —, 123 Pac. 306.)

Master and servant — death of employer — termination of contract.

1. The death of the employer within the year will not terminate a contract for the services, for a year, of one to do the annual assessment work on mining claims and take care of the camp and other property of the employer, the services not to be rendered under the direction of the employer.

Same — statutory direction — effect.

2. A statute requiring the personal representative to take into possession all the property of the decedent does not terminate a contract for the care, for a year, of the decedent's mining camp and other property, and the doing of the assessment work on the mining claims.

Note. — Termination of contract of employment by death of one of the parties.

The cases upon this question are collected in a note appended to Mendenhall v. Davis, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 914.

Apparently the only case upon the question, decided since the publication of that 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

(May 2, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Pima County holding that the contract of employment for the care for a year of a mining claim and for assessment work on certain mining claims terminated with the death of plaintiff's employer and that the plaintiff recover from the estate the sum of $93. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Mark A. Smith and Leslie C. Hardy, for appellant:

The contract of employment, as a matter of law, did not terminate with the death of the master, Chas. H. Ferry.

2 Parsons, Contr. 5th ed. pp. 530, 533; Chamberlain v. Dunlop, 126 N. Y. 45, 22 Am. St. Rep. 811, 26 N. E. 966; Kernochan v. Murray, 111 N. Y. 306, 2 L.R.A. 183, 7 Am. St. Rep. 744, 18 N. E. 808; Janin v. Browne, 59 Cal. 44; Harrison v. Conlan, 10 Allen, 85; Billings's Appeal, 106 Pa. 558.

Mr. Selim M. Franklin, for appellee:

If the contract was for such personal service that it would terminate with the death of the servant; so, on the other hand, and as corollary thereto, it must terminate with the death of the master.

Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 116, 6 L.R.A. 728, 16 Am. St. Rep. 800, 23 N. E. 452; Babcock v. Goodrich, 3 How. Pr. N. S. 53; 20 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 45; Castro v. Murray, 47 Or. 57, 81 Pac. 388, 883; Harris v. Johnson, 98 Ga. 434, 25 S. E. 525; Zinnell v. Bergdoll, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 508; Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Rosensteel, 24 Fed. 583; Yerrington v. Greene, 7 R. I. 589, 84 Am. Dec. 578.

Ross, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff in this case instituted this suit against the defendant, administrator of the estate of Chas. H. Ferry, deceased, on a contract for wages after the term of the contract had expired, alleging a breach thereof by the administrator. The contract was for one year's services by the plaintiff doing assessment work on twelve mining claims, and taking the proper care of camp note, is Re McPhee, 156 Cal. 335, 104 Pac. 455, in which it is held that men employed to fell trees and make them into ties at a certain price per tie, without any specific number of trees being contracted for, had no interest in the timber, and the employment was ended by the death of the employer.

R. L. S.

and other property belonging to deceased Ferry, for which services the plaintiff was to receive $150 per month, beginning January 1, 1910, and ending January 1, 1911. Ferry was to furnish all camp tools and explosives within reason. On the 2d day of May, 1910, Chas. H. Ferry died. The plaintiff was discharged by the administrator and dispossessed of the mines and improvements of the deceased on the 23d day of May, 1910. He sues for ten months' salary, alleging his damages at the stipulated wages of $150 per month or $1,500. A jury was impaneled in the lower court, and the plaintiff and defendant introduced their evidence, but the jury was discharged, without rendering any verdict, upon the following stipulation:

It is hereby stipulated by the respective parties in the above-entitled action that the jury be discharged, and that the cause be submitted to the court for its determination; that if the court find that the contract of employment alleged in plaintiff's complaint terminated with the death of the defendant Ferry, that the plaintiff recover from the estate of the said Ferry the sum of ninety-three ($93) dollars; and that if said contract survived the death of the said Ferry that he recover from the estate the sum of twelve hundred thirty-eight ($1,238) dollars, together with his costs, and the interest upon the respective amounts recovered.

Dated this 12th day of June, 1911.

Mark A. Smith,
Leslie C. Hardy,
Attorneys for Plaintiff.
Selim M. Franklin,
Attorney for Defendant.

The lower court, agreeable to such stipulation, thereafter "reached the conclusion that as a matter of law the contract terminated by the death of Ferry, or rather by the demand made by the administrator upon Mr. Dumont for the possession of the property," and rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $93. The appellant (the plaintiff below) assigns nine errors in the court below. We set forth two of such assignments, which present the only question to be decided by us; the other matters, as we conceive them, being concluded by the above stipulation. Those two errors are, first, that "the court erred in finding and holding that the contract of employment terminated, as a matter of law, by the death of the master, Chas. H. Ferry, for the reason that as a matter of law the said contract did not terminate with the death of the master;" and, second, in "holding that the contract of employment terminated by the demand made by the special administrator upon the appellant."

The stipulation entered into by the parties in the course of the trial leaves but one question to be decided, and that is as to whether this was a personal contract that terminated with the master's death. The contract in hæc verba is as follows: "Apropos of our conversations and previous letters, I now, after consultation with Mr. Ferry, am able to state to you here what will be expected of you in way of work and care of camp and salary to be paid. There are twelve (12) outlying claims in which Mr. Ferry and I are equal owners. These claims he agreed to do the location and assessment work for his interest, being that I discovered them. You will be expected to do the assessment work on these twelve claims, and take proper care of camp and other property belonging to Mr. C. H. Ferry, for which he is willing to pay you one hundred and fifty ($150) per month, beginning Jan. 1st, 1910, to Jan. 1, 1911. You can use camp tools, and Mr. Ferry is willing to furnish all explosives within reason. The law requires $100 worth of work on each and every claim, and whether it is done on one or for a group there must be $100 worth of work done for every claim. This work will require your affidavit. You can begin your assessment work now or any time during the year, but you ought to begin in time." The plaintiff, in his complaint, alleges that under the contract it became his duty to take "possession of all the property herein mentioned and described, and care for or cause to be cared for the same, and to prevent injury or waste thereof, . . . to do or cause to be done within the year beginning January 1st, 1910, the annual assessment work on twelve of said mining claims, said Ferry to furnish all tools, powder, caps, fuse, and things necessary to perform such work." And further alleges that he did thereafter take possession of such property. Freeman in his notes to Hawkins v. Ball, 68 Am. Dec. 755, says: "The law presumes that the parties to a contract bind not only themselves, but their personal representatives. A personal representative is therefore liable on all the contracts of the decedent which were broken in his lifetime, and, except those contracts whose performance requires his personal skill and taste, on all those that are broken after his death." Sustaining his statement of the law, he further quotes from 2 Chitty, Contr. 11th Am. ed. 1406: "An executor or administrator is liable, in general, to the extent of the assets which come to his hands to be administered upon all the contracts of the deceased remaining undischarged at his death. Accordingly, the executor or administrator is liable, so far as he has assets, for debts of every description due from the deceased, either debts of record, as judgments, statutes, or recognizances, or debts on special contract, as for rent, or on bonds, covenants, or the like, under seal, or debts on simple contracts as notes unsealed and promises not in writing, either expressed or implied.' In this all the authorities agree"—citing many cases. The author also says in the same note: "Contracts strictly personal in their nature determine upon death of the party by whom the personal service is to be performed. In such cases the personal representatives of the deceased contractor are not liable for the performance of his contracts. This is the only exception to the rule that the personal representative of a decedent is bound to perform his contracts. The exception itself is very generally admitted, but the difficulty arises in determining what contracts come within it"—citing authorities. "The question, after all, is one to be determined by ascertaining the intention of the parties. And if from the construction of the contract it appears that the intention of the parties is that the contractor alone in person is to perform it, and that it is not to be performed by any other person, then the contract is to be regarded as personal within the meaning of the exception."

In this case Ferry owned some mining claims upon which he wanted the assessment work done for the year 1910. He also owned some houses and improvements either on or adjacent to these twelve claims of which plaintiff was to be caretaker. In one of the houses there was a small stock of goods, and the evidence shows that the plaintiff was to look after that also. Ferry himself lived in New York, and was on the ground only occasionally, and then for the general purpose of consulting his superintendent and taking a general survey of his properties. His purpose in making this contract with the plaintiff, of course, was to have the assessment work done so as to preserve his rights and to have the improvements cared for and protected. The contract for services was let in full view of these circumstances. It was a matter of little concern to Ferry as to who should do the assessment work, providing it was done under the terms of the contract. The part of the contract with reference to looking after and caring for the property did not necessarily call for a person with peculiar skill, ability, or taste. It seems to us that it must have been the intention of Ferry, when he entered into this contract with plaintiff, to bind himself and his estate to the complete fulfilment of its terms. 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

We do not think that the conclusion at which we have arrived in this case is at variance with the decision of the court in the case of Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 109, 6 L.R.A. 728, 16 Am. St. Rep. 806, 23 N. E. 452, cited by appellee as the leading case on this subject. In the Lacy-Getman Case the testator, who had employed Lacy to do appropriate and ordinary work for a period of one year on his farm, in his will bequeathed a life estate in the farm to his widow, and the house and control of all his personal property whatsoever in the house and on the farm during the term of her natural life. The court in that case made this observation: "It is obvious at once that an element has come into the case as now presented which was not there when the general term first held that the contract survived. It now appears that the executrix could not have performed her side of the contract at all after the death of McMahan by force of her official authority, because she had neither the possession of the farm or personal property upon it, and no right to such possession during the life of the widow. She had no power to put her servant upon the land, or employ him about it, and in her representative character she had not the slightest interest in his service, and could derive no possible benefit from it. . . . We have, then, the peculiar case of a contract made to work for McMahan, and under his direction and control, which could not be performed because of his death, transmuted into a contract to work for Mrs. Getman upon a farm which she did not possess, and had no right to enter." And the court further on states: "And so it must be conceded that the death of the servant, employed to render personal services under the master's daily direction, dissolves the contract." As stated, the services to be rendered by the plaintiff in this case were not to be under the personal directions or supervision of Ferry. Indeed, it may be said that the plaintiff was placed in absolute charge and control to do the assessment work in any manner he chose within the time limited, and to look after and care for the improvements without any directions or instructions of a daily or personal nature from Ferry. In the case of Zinnell v. Bergdoll, 19 Pa. Super. Ct. 508, cited by appellee, after discussing the facts in relation to the employment and services of the plaintiff by the deceased, the court said: "There being no evidence from which a contract to render services upon the one hand, and pay for them, upon the other, for a longer period than each current month upon which the parties entered could have been implied, it was error to submit the case to the jury in this manner." Thus it will be seen that in this case there was a lack of contract.

The appellee also insists that the contract sued on in this case was terminated by the death of Ferry, for the reason that our statute (Civ. Code 1901, § 1825) provides that "the executor or administrator must take into his possession all the estate of the decedent, real and personal, and collect all debts due to the decedent or to the estate." The possession of the plaintiff was the possession of Ferry, and, upon the death of Ferry and the appointment of an administrator, by operation of law, the possession was transferred to the administrator, and therefore the possession of the plaintiff was, in fact, the possession of the administrator. The administrator doubtless would have had the right to discharge plaintiff from the performance of his contract for any neglect of duty or any wilful conduct injurious to the interests he represented, or for dishonesty, or for refusal to permit the administrator to exercise his powers and duties as administrator in any manner not in conflict with the terms of his contract.

We think the lower court committed error in not giving judgment to the appellant for the sum of $1,238, together with his costs and interest.

The case is remanded to the superior court in and for Pima county, with directions that judgment be entered for appellant for said sum of $1,238, together with costs and interest, the judgment to be paid in the due course of the administration of said estate.

Franklin, Ch. J., and Cunningham, J., concur.

Petition for rehearing denied.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE OF THE STATE OF ILLINOIS
v.
REGNERUS Y. DANTUMA, Plff. in Err.

(252 Ill. 561, 96 N. E. 1087.)

Trademark — union label — registration.

1. The legislature may provide for the registration of a union label, and make the unauthorized use thereof a misdemeanor.

Pleading — variance — ownership of label.

2. An allegation of infringement of a label of a local trades council is not supported by proof of infringement of a label of an international union.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Trademark — union label — unlawful use — subcontractor.

3. One not entitled to use a union label, who contracts to do a job of printing, is not subject to a penalty for use of the label on the work if it is placed there by a subcontractor who has a right to use it, and to whom the job was sublet in good faith with nothing in the contract to prevent it.

(December 21, 1911.)

ERROR to the Municipal Court of Chicago to review a judgment convicting defendant of unlawfully using a union label. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jesse Holdom, with Mr. Thomas F. Monahan, for plaintiff in error.

Mr. Zach Hofheimer, with Messrs. W. H. Stead, Attorney General, John E. W. Wayman, and W. Edgar Sampson, for the People.

Hand, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a criminal prosecution commenced in the municipal court of Chicago, against Regnerus Y. Dantuma and Gean Forget, doing business as the Galbraith Press, for violating § 5 of chapter 140 of Hurd's Statutes of 1909, by unlawfully using and displaying the union label of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Chicago, on 120,000 cards which they printed upon the order of J. L. Clark, for St. Vincent's Infant Asylum. A jury was waived and the case was tried by the court, and at the close of all the evidence Forget was discharged, and a fine of $100 was imposed upon Dantuma, and he was ordered to stand

Note. — Law as to union labels.

I. Protection as trademark, 1191.

II. Protection on ground of unfair competition.

a. In general, 1194.

b. Who entitled to use, 1197.

c. Right to relief against manufacturers of imitative label, 1198.

d. Right to relief as affected by wording of label, 1198.

III. Rights and remedy of person asserting right to use label where denied by union, 1199.

IV. Constitutionality of statutes for protection of union labels, 1199.

V. Civil suit based upon statute.

a. In general, 1200.

b. Relief as affected by extent of use, 1201.

c. Miscellaneous, 1201.

VI. Criminal prosecutions.

a. In general, 1202.

b. Form of indictment, 1202.

c. Matters of evidence, 1202.

committed until the fine and costs were paid. He has sued out a writ of error from this court to review said judgment, and has assigned as error, first, that the statute under which he was prosecuted and convicted is unconstitutional; and, secondly, conceding said statute to be constitutional, that the evidence was not sufficient to support the conviction.

Sections 1, 3, and 5 of the statute under consideration read as follows:

"Section 1. Whenever any person or any association or union of workmen has heretofore adopted or used, or shall hereafter adopt or use, any label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement, for the purpose of designating, making known, or distinguishing any goods, wares, merchandise, or other product of labor as having been made, manufactured, produced, prepared, packed, or put on sale by such person or association or union of workmen, or by a member or members of such association or union, it shall be unlawful to counterfeit or imitate such label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement, or to use, sell, offer for sale, or in any way utter or circulate any counterfeit or imitation of any such labels, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement."

"Sec. 3. Every such person, association, or union that has heretofore adopted or used, or shall hereafter adopt or use, a label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement, as provided in section one

I. Protection as trademark.

The courts are not agreed on the question whether a union label in the absence of statute, constitutes a technical trademark. In some jurisdictions it is held that a union label does not constitute a technical trademark, for the reason that it is not affixed to any article to which the union adopting the label or any of its members have any proprietary right, and for the further reason that it does not denote the origin of the article or its quality.

Thus, a label adopted by a union of workmen to indicate that the article to which it is affixed was manufactured by their labor has been said not to be a trademark, for the reason that the members of the union had not applied it to any vendible commodity placed upon the market, in which they deal or of which they are the owners or manufacturers, and also because it wants every essential element of a trademark in that it does not indicate by what person the articles to which it is affixed were made, but only membership in a certain association; that there is no exclusive use of it, but many persons not connected in business and unknown to each other may lawfully use it, and its rightful use is not connected with any business; that it cannot be transferred with any business and its use is dependent only on membership in the association. Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L.R.A. 640, 25 N. E. 46.

But in Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L.R.A. 508, 49 N. E. 308, it is said: Such a label "is part of the well-known machinery of trade unions, and the use of it is found, if a finding be necessary, to be of value to the union and its members. It would not be traveling too far from the record, perhaps, if we should assume that the use of the label is in fact, as certainly it might be, of far more economic importance to the union than are many or most of the trademarks, strictly so called, which are protected by the courts. Nevertheless, technical difficulties, which would have been hard to escape from without 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) some subtlety or a statute, prevented the plaintiff from recovering in a case like this."

And it has been held that, since an association of workmen is neither a manufacturer nor dealer, and has no trade in which the trademark can be used, a mark adopted to distinguish articles produced by them, as the labor of any of their members, is not a trademark. Com. v. Norton, 16 Pa. Super. Ct. 423.

In denying that a label adopted by a trades union constituted a legal trademark, in Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L.R.A. 125, 12 Am. St. Rep. 726, 41 N. W. 943, the court based its decisions upon the ground that the union was not a business corporation, association, or partnership engaged in the manufacture or sale of the article to which the label was affixed; that anyone joining any of the local unions acquires the right to use the label, and his right continues so long as he remains a member; and a manufacturer acquires the right to use it only by employing members of the union, and loses the right to use it when he ceases to employ such members. It is said that when affixed the symbol does not indicate the kind or quality, nor by whom made; that anyone seeing it affixed to an article cannot tell who of the many thousands of individuals authorized to use it had made, or caused to be made, the article to which it is affixed. All that he can learn from it is that the article was made by some one of the many thousands entitled to use the symbol; that the right in trademarks, or the exclusive right to use certain symbols or devices placed upon goods offered for sale, is property, and hence the law affords a remedy to the owner against one who violates the right. The court defines a trademark as a word, mark, or device adopted by a manufacturer or vendor to distinguish his productions from other productions of the same article; hence it is said to be essential that the symbol or device shall be adopted to distinguish the productions of the manufacturer or vendor from those of others, and it must so dis-

(1) of this act, shall file the same for record in the office of the secretary of state, by leaving two (2) copies, counterparts, or facsimiles thereof with said secretary, and by filing therewith a sworn statement specifying the name or names of the person, association, or union on whose behalf such label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement shall be filed, the class of merchandise, and a particular description of the goods to which it has been or is intended to be appropriated; that the party so filing, or on whose behalf such label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement shall be filed, has the right to the use of the same, and that no other person, firm, association, union, or corporation has the right to such use, either in the identical form or in any such near resemblance thereto as may be calculated to deceive, and that the facsimile copies or counterparts filed therewith are true and correct. There shall be paid for such filing and recording a fee of one (1) dollar. Any person who shall for himself, or on behalf of any other person, association, or union, procure the filing of any label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement in the office of the secretary of state, under the provisions of this act, by making any false or fraudulent representations or declarations, verbally or in writing, or by any fraudulent means, shall be liable to pay any damages sustained in consequence of any such filing, to be recovered by or on behalf of the party injured to distinguish them. There is a very strong dissenting opinion by Judge Mitchell, concurred in by Vanderburgh, Judge.

Although not necessary to the decision in Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777, it is conceded that a label by a trade union or association does not answer to the definition ordinarily given of a technical trademark, because it does not indicate with any degree of certainty by what particular person or firm the article to which it is affixed is manufactured, nor does it serve to distinguish the goods of one manufacturer from another, and the user has no vendible interest in the label, but merely a right to use it on articles of his own make so long as he remains a member of the union. Hence the court cannot interfere to protect such a label as ordinary trademark cases, on the ground that one person is appropriating a mark, symbol, device or word which has become the exclusive property of another, when used by him to distinguish goods of a certain class.

In other jurisdictions a more liberal view is taken, and it is said that a trademark is calculated to distinguish the article to which it is attached from those of other makers or vendors, and it need not indicate any particular person as maker, manufacturer, or vendor, or give the name, or address of either. When the mark has become recognized by purchasers as a distinctive designation, it will be sufficient indication of the origin or ownership within the rule requisite to its protection as such, although purchasers may not, from the label or otherwise, be able to tell the particular maker or seller of the article. Godillot v. Harris, 81 N. Y. 263.

And it has been said that, apart from its application and use, a trademark has no recognized ownership; its value is in its employment in marking the goods upon which it is placed; this gives to it the character of property. It is then a symbol of reputation and good will. State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9.

The reasoning against the right of a labor 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

union to acquire a property right in a label, as urged in Weener v. Brayton and Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, supra, — that the label did not indicate by what persons the articles labeled were made, but only indicated that they were made by one of many persons who were not connected with each other in any business,—is answered in Schmalz v. Woolley, 57 N. J. Eq. 303, 43 L.R.A. 86, 73 Am. St. Rep. 637, 41 Atl. 939, wherein it is said that this objection unduly restricts the law of trademarks as everywhere recognized, for it is established that whatever be the quality indicated by a trademark, the mark need not point out the particular person from whom that quality is derived. The law has placed no limit upon the number of persons who may unite for business purposes and jointly acquire property in the trademark, and yet it is evident that if there be many, some of them may have no personal share in producing the article identified by the mark.

Following the same line of reasoning, in denying the rule that a union label does not constitute a technical trademark, it has been asserted that the fact that goods are produced by the work of one person in the service of another to whom they belong, and that a label cannot be placed upon them without the consent of the owner, is not a bar to the right of the workman, through the means of a trademark which he has affixed to the product of his labor, to acquire a right of property in such trademark, since the good will in the result of his work in his department of business, in the production of articles of merchandise, may be essentially valuable to him; and what may be available to one may in like manner be accomplished by an association of workmen engaged in the same business and the production of similar articles of merchandise for the market. People v. Fisher, 50 Hun, 552, 3 N. Y. Supp. 786.

Hence, members of a trade union may adopt as a trademark a label to designate the result of their labor, and for that purpose it is entitled to protection in its relation to such products as a proprietary thereby in any court having jurisdiction, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding two hundred (200) dollars; or by imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both such fine and imprisonment. The secretary of state shall deliver to such person, association, or union so filing or causing to be filed any such label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement so many duly attested certificates of the recording of the same as such person, association, or union may apply for, for each of which certificates said secretary shall receive a fee of one (1) dollar. Any such certificate of record shall, in all suits and prosecutions under this act, be sufficient proof of the adoption of such label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement. Said secretary of state shall not record for any person, union, or association any label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement that would reasonably be mistaken for any label, trademark, term, design, device, or form of advertisement theretofore filed by or on behalf of any other person, union, or association."

"Sec. 5. Every person who shall use or display the genuine label, trademark, or form of advertisement of any such person, association, or union, in any manner not authorized by such person, union, or association, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail not less than three months nor more than one year, or by a right for their benefit. The fact that their work is not performed under a single employment, but under many different employers in as many widely separated shops, goes to the value of the mark in its application to the articles made by them, rather than to the right to its protection as such. Ibid.

The contention that ownership of the article to which a trademark is affixed is necessary to the acquisition of a property right in the mark is denied in Schmalz v. Wooley, 57 N. J. Eq. 303, 43 L.R.A. 86, 73 Am. St. Rep. 637, 41 Atl. 939, and it is said that this personal element is not important; that "the public object sought in the protection of trademarks is to bring upon the market a better class of commodities, and the means for attaining that object is by securing to those who are instrumental in supplying the market whatever reputation they gain by their efforts toward that end. The workman by whose handicraft the commodity is made is one of these instruments, just as is his employer who furnishes the raw material and owns and sells the finished product; and if the former is permitted by the owner to place upon the commodity a mark to indicate whose workmanship it is, and thereby commend his workmanship to other employers, this license from the owner should be deemed a right against everybody else. His aptitude in his trade is his property, and if by a mark he can have it identified as his in the market, he may enhance its salable value, and thus secure the same sort of advantage as his employer by similar means. No reason exists why this advantage should not be protected by the courts in the same manner and to the same extent as is the like advantage of the employer. The mere fact that one rather than the other of these persons has placed the product upon the market has no rational bearing upon the matter, for both alike have had the market in view in the efforts they have made, and through those efforts the market is supplied."

And in opposition to the doctrine that a union label does not constitute a valid 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

trademark, it has been asserted that identity of proprietorship in a trademark and the article to which it is affixed is not necessary to sustain a trademark. It is sufficient if the mark is designed as a symbol to distinguish an article produced by the labor of the members of the union, and as indicative of the quality of the article only so far as it is incident to or dependent upon workmanship. In this respect such a trademark represents a valuable property right in the workman, and is entitled to protection as such. People v. Fisher, supra.

This view is well stated in Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 39 L.R.A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180, wherein the court says: "The known reputation of a particular kind of skilled labor employed in the development of a particular product or class of products determines, to a large degree, the value or price of such products when put on the markets. To stamp or label a commodity as the product of a particular kind or class of skilled labor determines the demand for and the price of such product or commodity. The marketable price of a commodity influences the scale of wages paid for its manufacture. The higher the price, the higher the wages paid; hence it is indisputable that the employee whose skilled labor in the production of a particular commodity creates a demand for the same, that secures for him higher remunerative wages, has as definite a property right to the exclusive use of a particular label, sign, symbol, brand, or device adopted by him to distinguish and characterize said commodity as the product of his skilled labor, as the merchant or owner has to the exclusive use of his adopted trademark on his goods."

Although refusing to commit itself on this question, in State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, 33 N. E. 223, the court said that it may be urged with considerable force that where a label indicates the origin of the goods so far as the workmanship is concerned, guarantying that they have been made by one of a large association which has acquired a high reputation for the skill of all its members, this is a sufficient indi-fine of not less than $100 nor more than $200, or both. In all cases where such association or union is not incorporated, suits under this act may be commenced and prosecuted by any officer or member of such association or union, on behalf of and for the use of such association or union."

The facts, in brief, are as follows: In June, 1911, Clark called up Dantuma on the phone at the place of business of the Galbraith Press, and said to him he wanted to have 120,000 cards printed for "field day," for the benefit of St. Vincent's Infant Asylum, and that he wanted the union label thereon. Dantuma replied he could print the cards, but he did not have the right to use the union label. Clark then asked him if he could not have the printing done with the union label on, and he replied he could. Dantuma thereupon caused a proof of the card to be set up in the Galbraith Press office, with the exception of the union label, and arranged with one F. W. Colwell, who had the right to use the union label, to place thereon the union label, and to have the plate as then completed electrotyped; and the cards were then printed and delivered to Clark, or to the St. Vincent's Infant Asylum. The evidence was conflicting as to whether the printing was done at the office of the Galbraith Press, or at the office of Colwell.

The information charged the defendants with wrongfully using the union label of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Chicago, and, to prove the charge, introduced evidence of origin, without its pointing out the particular individual from whom it emanated, and hence the association may acquire such a general reputation for the high character of its workmanship that its mark will be such assurance of the worth of the goods as to make it a property right in the association or membership in general.

Since the employment and wages of a workman depend somewhat upon his reputation as such, he has a valuable interest in the good will of his workmanship, and hence he may have a proprietary right in the result of his labor. People v. Fisher, supra.

II. Protection on ground of unfair competition.

a. In general.

The weight of authority sustains the jurisdiction of equity to protect union labels against unfair competition by the unauthorized use of labels imitative of the union label, with the evident purpose of thereby deceiving the public as to the origin of the goods to which the imitation label is affixed, at least as regards workmanship, and thus unfairly gain whatever advantage there may be in inducing the public to believe that the article is the product of union labor. In some jurisdictions, however, notably Connecticut and Massachusetts, the power of equity to protect a union label against counterfeiting or simulating by persons not authorized to use the genuine label is denied.

Thus, in Lawlor v. Merritt, 78 Conn. 630, 63 Atl. 639, a complaint alleging the adoption by an association of workmen of a label to designate the product of the labor of the members thereof, and that the defendants, for the purpose of obtaining advantage of the market for articles bearing said label, and of palming off their product as the product manufactured by the members of said association, and of defrauding and deceiving the public and of injuring the association, have adopted and used, without authority or right, labels made in imitation and counterfeit of the association's label, was held not to state a case for equitable interposition, since, said the court, "neither at common law nor by the general principles of equity, is a man entitled, at least in the absence of actual fraud, to protection in the exclusive use of a label for goods, unless it is one he is using to distinguish some visible commodity owned or traded in by him." On the question whether intent to defraud is a necessary element in granting relief against unfair competition, see note in 4 L.R.A.(N.S.) 960. The cases in that note fully support the doctrine that actual fraud is shown under such circumstances as is alleged in the complaint which the court in the Lawlor Case found to be insufficient. This case was subsequently before the court in 79 Conn. 399, 65 Atl. 295, and it is there held that the failure of the label itself to show that the article to which it is attached was the product of the labor of members of the association cannot be remedied by parol proof of this fact, and that, since the label does not announce that the hats to which it was attached were manufactured by members of the association, but rather imports that the hats were owned, manufactured, or sold by the association itself, which is not true, it is radically defective, and entitled to no protection against fraudulent use or simulation by others.

In Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 9 L.R.A. 640, 25 N. E. 46, it was alleged that articles made by members of a trade union, upon which was affixed a label adopted by the union, had acquired a valuable reputation, and that, in consequence, the right to the exclusive use of such label was of great value, and it was charged that the defendant had used imitations of such label on boxes containing inferior articles of the same character, and not made by members of the union, the counterfeit label so closely resembling the union label as to deceive purchasers, and that, for the purpose of deceiving purchasers and of obtaining higher prices, he had sold boxes on which were pasted such counterfeit in evidence a certificate of the secretary of state, showing a union label registered by the International Typographical Union of North America, of Indianapolis, Indiana. When the proof was in, leave was granted the state to amend the information by striking out the words "Allied Printing Trades Council of Chicago," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "International Typographical Union of North America, of Indianapolis, Indiana," but the information was not amended.

It is urged by the plaintiff in error that the union label involved in this case, or any union label, for that matter, is not a trademark, in this: That it does not show origin or ownership, within the meaning of those terms as the same are used in the law pertaining to trademarks (Kidd v. Johnson, 100 U. S. 617, 25 L. ed. 769; Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Trainer, 101 U. S. 51, 25 L. ed. 993; Columbia Mill Co. v. Alcorn, 150 U. S. 460, 37 L. ed. 1144, 14 Sup. Ct. Rep. 151), and that, a registered union label not being a trademark, it cannot be protected, and its use by others prohibited by law. We think it may be conceded that a union label like the one here sought to be protected does not fall within the meaning of a trademark, in the broad sense in which that term is used at common law. Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L.R.A. 125, 12 Am. St. Rep. 726, 41 N. W. 943. Still, we think the legislature may lawfully provide for the registration of a labels, well knowing the articles contained therein were not made by members of the union, and were inferior in workmanship and quality to those rightfully sold under the union label. Nevertheless, the court held that no relief in equity could be granted, since the complainant was not a manufacturer, dealer in, or owner of the articles which were fraudulently represented by the counterfeit label or advertisement to be his. And it is said that, "however disreputable and dishonest it may be falsely to represent goods made by other persons to have been made by members of the union, upon which subject there can be but one opinion, those who do not carry on any business to which the use of the label is incident, who have not applied it to any vendible commodity which has been placed upon the market, in which they deal, or of which they are the owners or manufacturers, cannot maintain a bill to restrain the use by the defendant of the label as a trademark."

In the foregoing case the court cites as authority Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391, which will be hereafter referred to, and which, as will also hereafter be shown, was in part at least disapproved in a later New Jersey decision, which also disapproves in part Weener v. Brayton.

In the New Jersey case referred to (Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 39, 14 Atl. 812) it is asserted that a trade union is not entitled to equitable relief to restrain the imitation or counterfeit of a label adopted by it, although it is alleged that the label is a guaranty that cigars contained in the boxes to which it is attached have been manufactured by skillful workmen, and are not coolie, prison, or tenement house work, and that the sale of cigars thus marked has, since the adoption of the label, largely increased, and they now command a higher price in the market than cigars not thus distinguished; and hence the exclusive right to use the label is a valuable one; and it is also alleged that the defendant has obtained possession of counterfeit labels and placed the same on cigars not made by members of the association. (N.S.)

tion, and is putting them on the market in violation of the rights of the complainants and to the great injury of the public. The court, while conceding that the defendant was conducting his business in such a manner as to deceive and cheat all who deal with him, by representing that to be true which he knew to be false, and that he was seeking to get gain by the use of counterfeit tokens, nevertheless held that it was powerless to correct such delinquencies, and that the complainants could have no relief because they had not shown a clear property right and the invasion of that right by the defendant, for they had no property in the label or mark imitated, since there can be no such thing as a trademark distinguished from or unconnected with a vendible commodity; it can have no existence as property or a thing distinct from and wholly unconnected with the article of traffic. And it is asserted that no person can acquire a right to a trademark except he put merchandise or a vendible commodity on the market, marked and distinguished by his particular mark.

Compare with the language of the court in Schmalz v. Wooley, 57 N. J. Eq. 303, 43 L.R.A. 86, 73 Am. St. Rep. 637, 41 Atl. 939, wherein it is said that the language used in the foregoing case is unwarranted, since the purpose of such an association is the profit to be derived from their skill in the trade and their mutual assistance in profiting by its practice; that "this connection is as clearly one for business purposes as is that of members in a partnership or of stockholders in a corporation. Although it is a comparatively novel species of relationship, it has become an established one, and therefore calls for the application of those general principles of law and equity which are applied to other species of business associations. According to these principles, we think a workman or a number of workmen engaged in the same branch of industry and banded together for their mutual profit in the pursuit of their common vocation, may acquire a right of property in a trademark designed to distinguish their workmanship from that of other persons, and union label similar to the one herein involved, and protect its use, and such is the holding of the courts of last resort in Massachusetts and Kentucky. Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L.R.A. 508, 49 N. E. 308; Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 39 L.R.A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180. See also State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9; Schmalz v. Wooley, 57 N. J. Eq. 303, 43 L.R.A. 86, 73 Am. St. Rep. 637, 41 Atl. 939; People v. Luhrs, 195 N. Y. 377, 25 L.R.A. (N.S.) 473, 89 N. E. 171. And this court is, we think, committed to that view in Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L.R.A. 821, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60.

We see no valid reason, and none has been suggested by counsel, why those engaged in skilled employment may not so designate the result of their labor by a union label as to enable them to secure to themselves the fruit of their skill. The skilled workman by his labor creates wealth, and, if the employer of labor can, by a registered trademark, secure to himself the wealth which he has created by his industry, there can in law or justice be no reason why the man who labors, and who by his skill and industry has created a demand for a particular commodity that secures for him more remuneration, may not be equally protected by a registered label which notifies the public that the commodity offered for sale, and upon which skilled labor has been expended, was manu-that a trademark so owned is entitled to the same protection as other trademarks."

On this point, in Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777, it is said no valid reason can be pointed out why the principle which underlies the decisions protecting a user of labels against unfair competition, even though the label does not constitute a technical trademark, does not entitle a union label to protection, since the right of the court to grant relief on the ground of unfair competition is predicated on the ground that the conduct of the parties proceeded against, in intentionally marking, labeling, wrapping, or advertising their wares so that they would be mistaken for the goods of some other manufacturer, is fraudulent. "That and the fact that the fraud complained of had a natural tendency to injure the business of a person whose marks, labels, etc., had been simulated, by lessening his sales or injuring the reputation of his goods."

In Strasser v. Moonelis, 23 Jones & S. 197, 11 N. Y. S. R. 270, the court takes the view that the right to such a label is a valuable one, since it appears that boxes of cigars to which the label is affixed sell in the market for a higher price than do the same cigars when in boxes upon which the label does not appear. Hence, it is said that the natural result of the use of a fraudulent simulation of a label is such an injury as entitles the members of the union to protection by the court.

On this point, in Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 39 L.R.A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180, the court, while conceding that a union label did not constitute a trademark in the ordinary sense of the word, in that it was not a brand put on the goods of the owner to separate or distinguish them from the goods of others, said that they could not agree on that account that the label does not represent a valuable right which may be the subject of legal protection, and the court reasons thus: "Why may not those engaged in skillful employment so designate the result of their labor as to entitle them to the fruits of their skill, when it is admittedly a source of pecuniary profit to them? And this, though they may not own the property itself? They are not, it is true, 'in business' for themselves in the ordinary sense, but they have property rights nevertheless. They may not select a label and be protected in its use apart from its connection with some commodity; but they not only select it in this instance; they apply it to property, and it does not at all matter that the tangible property is that of another. In order to get the benefit of the superior reputation of cigars made by them, the appellees select and apply this label as a distinguishing brand or mark. And it would be strange if this thing of value, this certificate of good workmanship, and which makes the goods made by them sell, and thus increases demand for their work, be entitled to no protection, because those making the selection and application are not business men engaged in selling cigars of their own. The man who is employed for wages is as much a business man as his employer, in that larger sense in which the word 'business' has come to be used by statement and legislators."

And it has been asserted that a laborer has the same valuable interests in the good will of his labor as a manufacturer has in the good will of his trade. Every man has a property right to the result of his labor, and that he has sold his right by a contract for wages is no reason why he should be deprived of the right to designate the origin of the result of his work. That it is impossible to attach to this result any badge or label indicative of origin or interest, unless with the consent of the owner of the physical property itself, does not affect the principle applicable. If certain laborers, through a union, have increased a demand for their labor, and the union designates the labor of the members by a particular symbol, label, or sign descriptive of the origin or ownership of the labor, such a device is entitled to the protection of a court of equity from fraudulent simulation. Strasser v. Moonelis, supra.

In McVey v. Brendel, 114 Pa. 235, 13 L.R.A. 377, 27 Am. St. Rep. 625, 22 Atl.

factured or created by skilled labor. We are therefore of the opinion the act providing for the registration and the protection from use by others of a union label is a valid, constitutional enactment.

The information alleged that the label infringed was the registered union label of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Chicago, while the evidence showed the label used in printing the cards delivered to Clark or the St. Vincent's Infant Asylum by the defendants was the registered label of the International Typographical Union of North America, of Indianapolis, Indiana. There was here, therefore, a fatal variance between the information and the proof. This variance was sought to be obviated by an amendment to the information, but no amendment was made. The variance was therefore not cured. It is said, however, in the brief filed by the people, that there was no variance, as the Allied Printing Trades Council of Chicago was a subordinate branch of the International Typographical Union of North America, of Indianapolis, Indiana, and had the right to use and control said label. This may be true, but the evidence does not show that fact, and upon the face of the record the variance is fatal to a conviction.

It also appears from the testimony of Colwell that the contract for the printing of the 120,000 cards, which is the basis of this prosecution, was sublet to him, and that he did the printing of said cards at his office, and used the union label in so 912, it is apparently assumed that a proper label would be given equitable protection if the complainant came into court for such protection with clean hands, but if the label contains improper language, then complainant does not come into court with clean hands, and equitable relief will be denied. This doctrine is well settled. It may be doubted; however, whether it was properly applied in this case, since the bad conduct charged to the complainant was the use in the label of language similar to that used in Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777; Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L.R.A. 821, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60; State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 169, 33 N. E. 223; Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 39 L.R.A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180; Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 4 v. Lindner, 2 Ohio N. P. 114, 3 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 244. As will be hereafter seen, in these cases a different construction is placed upon this language. See infra, d.

In asserting the right to have a union label protected in equity against unfair and dishonest competition, in State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9, the court reasoned that the law not only protects the owner in the use of a technical trademark, but it protects him in the use of other insignia by label, symbol, or otherwise, which he may attach to merchandise to distinguish it from all other articles of merchandise in the market. This protection may be had by injunctive proceedings on the theory of unfair competition in the unauthorized use of an imitative label for the purpose of deception.

Hence, where it is alleged and admitted by demurrer that the defendant, with intent to defraud the plaintiff and impose on the public, has sold and continues to sell cigars not made by the members of the plaintiff's union, packed in boxes bearing a label falsely purporting to be issued by such union, and imitating the said label so closely as to be calculated to deceive the public and lead them to believe that such cigars were manufactured by this union, to the irreparable 39 L.R.A. (N.S.) damage of the plaintiff, a good cause of action is stated. Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. C. 88.

For other cases supporting the doctrine that on the ground of unfair competition, equity will protect a union label against counterfeiting or imitation for the purpose of deceiving the public as to the workmanship of the article to which the label is affixed, see cases immediately following.

b. Who entitled to use.

Anyone having a lawful right to use a union label, who is especially damaged by a third person using it fraudulently and without right, is entitled to the equitable protection of the law against such wrongdoer. State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, 33 N. E. 223.

Hence, members of a trade union have in a label adopted by them, indicative of the fact that the article to which it is attached is produced by the labor of members of their association, a right which in equity the law will protect against frauds and counterfeits. Ibid.

Members of an association of employees, who adopt a label to distinguish the product of their labor, have an interest in the proper use of the label which may be sufficient grounds to entitle them to invoke equitable aid to protect, by injunction, such label against inequitable use by another. Strasser v. Moonelis, 23 Jones & S. 197, 11 N. Y. S. R. 270, affirmed without opinion in 108 N. Y. 611, 15 N. E. 730.

Although a label authorized by a trade union or association may not be entitled to protection as a trademark, it will be protected in a court of equity by the issuance in that court of an injunction against the unauthorized use of such label, or a counterfeit thereof, with the evident design to deceive the public by concealing the true origin of the goods, as well as injuring a complainant who has a clear right to use the label. Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777 (action by manufacturer).

On the theory of unfair competition, an unlawful use of a union label may be redoing, as he had the right to do. While his testimony was contradicted by that of A. Bartels, we do not think the uncorroborated testimony of Bartels upon that subject sufficient to sustain a conviction. He was a discharged employee of the defendants, and his testimony in many particulars was very uncertain and unsatisfactory. There was nothing in the contract between the defendants and Clark which prevented the defendants from subletting their contract with Clark to Colwell, and if they had sublet such contract in good faith, and without the intention, by subterfuge or otherwise, of using or displaying unlawfully the union label upon said cards, they, or either of them, would not be liable to a prosecution under the statute.

The judgment of the Municipal Court of Chicago will be reversed, and the case remanded.

strained by injunctive proceedings instituted by a member of a union against a competitor in business using the label without authority. State v. Bishop, 128 Mo 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9.

By an equally divided court in Allen v. McCarthy, 37 Minn. 349, 34 N. W. 416, a judgment was affirmed, holding that individuals, as officers and members of a designated trade union, were entitled to maintain suit to restrain a third person from putting up, selling, labeling, or offering for sale any boxes containing a particular article having thereon a label or trademark in imitation of plaintiff's label.

Under a statute providing in part that those who are united in interest must be joined as plaintiffs or defendants, except as otherwise prescribed, and where the question is one of common or general interest to many, and it is impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all,—the members of a union, may invoke the aid of equity, to protect a label of the union. Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. C. 88.

But it has been asserted that "it is necessary for those who claim that their right of property in a trademark has been invaded, to show that they are in some way by themselves, or with others, the owners thereof, by reason of some business which they are transacting together, and to which its use is incident, and that it is not merely a personal privilege which they possess as members of a particular association of wide extent and embracing many persons of varied interest, to advertise, or have advertised by those by whom they are employed, the articles made by them as being made by members of such association." Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 8 L.R.A. 640, 25 N. E. 46.

c. Right to relief against manufacturers of imitative label.

The conduct of a person in manufacturing and selling labels imitative of those used by a trade union is equally as culpable as that of the manufacturer of articles who buys and uses the spurious labels, and the loss which the manufacturer of similar articles, authorized to use the genuine labels, sustains by the use of the spurious labels on a competing article, is as directly attributable to persons who make and sell counterfeit labels as to the dealer who buys 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and uses them. Hence, to be entitled to relief on the ground of unfair competition, it is not necessary to allege that the defendants have affixed any of the spurious labels to articles of their own manufacture, or that they have sold any articles bearing the counterfeit certificates or labels, but it is sufficient if it appears that they have made and sold spurious labels and advertised them for sale, since from these facts the court will presume that the defendants intended that they should be used by the persons who purchased them, and that they manufacture and sell them for that purpose. Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777.

d. Right to relief as affected by wording of label.

A label reciting, among other things, that the article to which it is attached is produced by a designated trade union, "an organization opposed to inferior, rat shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship," is not an open attack on the products of all other laborers, nor does it characterize their products as unfit for use. State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, 33 N. E. 223.

Referring to the same language in Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L.R.A. 821, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60, the court reasoned: This language "says, simply, in effect, these cigars are not the product of inferior, rat shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship. Can it be said that one may not, without condemning or aspersing the product of other manufacturers, commend the article he has for sale? If he may do so himself, may he not procure the certificate of others as to the quality of the article he puts upon the market? If one is engaged in the manufacture of wine, is it an aspersion upon the product of other manufacturers that a wine growers' association certifies that his wine is the pure juice of the grape, free from adulteration? Certainly not. This label does not say, or purport to say, that cigars made by nonunion men are of the inferior class mentioned, or that cigars made by nonunion men are not free from the impurity or taint to which they might be subjected by such workmanship. It does, in effect, say that cigars are upon the market which are the product of rat shops, filthy basements, of Chinese establishments, of prisons and tenement houses, and proposes to assure customers that cigars sold under this label are not the product of such establishments. This and nothing more. And can it be doubted that public policy would be best served if all manufacturers of cigars would truthfully make the like assurance to the public?" Similar language is used as to the same label in State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 169, 33 N. E. 223; Carsons v. Ury, 5 L.R.A. 614, 39 Fed. 777; Hetterman Bros. v. Powers, 102 Ky. 133, 39 L.R.A. 211, 80 Am. St. Rep. 348, 43 S. W. 180; Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 4 v. Lindner, 2 Ohio N. P. 114, 3 Ohio S. & C. P. Dec. 244.

This label received entirely different construction in McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 13 L.R.A. 377, 27 Am. St. Rep. 625, 22 Atl. 912, wherein the court says: "It says to the public in spirit and in effect: 'Buy the cigars that bear this label, because they were made by a member of this union. Do not buy those not bearing it, because they were made by workmen who do not belong to us. Such cigars are the product of "inferior, rat shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship." It is the request of a powerful labor organization to 'all smokers throughout the world' to take sides with it in its contest with those who are outside of its membership, by refusing to buy the work of such persons. It is an attempt to use the public as a means of coercion upon them, compelling them to unite with the union in order to find a market for their goods or their labor."

The real question now before us is whether the international organization of workmen shall have the help of a court of equity in making war upon all cigar makers who do not belong to it, and in driving their work out of the market by representing it as coming from inferior rat shops, from coolies, prisons, or filthy tenement houses. A 'first class workman' is one who does first class work, whether his name is on the rolls of any given society or not. Filthiness and criminality of character depend on conduct, not on membership of the union. Legitimate competition rests on superiority of workmanship and business methods, not in the use of vulgar epithets and personal denunciation. When the Cigar Makers' International Union of America stigmatizes those who do not belong to it, and seeks to induce the public to discriminate against them and their work by covering them with opprobrious epithets, it is not engaged in 'promoting the mental, moral, and physical welfare of its members,' but in trying to hurt and destroy those who do not choose to become members. While the courts would aid the former purpose in all ways within their power, they cannot help the latter."

III. Rights and remedy of person asserting right to use label where denied by union.

Although an employer of union labor is permitted to use a stamp adopted by the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

union, such stamp nevertheless belongs to the union, since it is the sign by which the business world is advised that the goods manufactured were union made, and the employer so using it has no right to its use except when his goods are made by union labor. It cannot lawfully be used by him except on goods made by him by union labor, and he has no cause for action if, at the termination of their contract, the members of the union quit his employ and refuse longer to permit his use of the stamp. Saulsberry v. Coopers' International Union, post, 1203.

Before a person claiming to have been unlawfully deprived of the right to use a union label, by the action of the organization controlling the same, can appeal to the courts for redress, he must exhaust all the remedies provided for him by the organization. Raych v. Hadida, 72 Misc. 469, 130 N. Y. Supp. 346.

Where the final right and authority to close a shop to the use of a union label rests with an executive board of the main organization, and all the preliminary proceedings before a branch union or its members are simply for the purpose of placing the facts before the executive committee of the main organization for final action, in an action against a local union, the court cannot restore to a person his right to the use of the union label if he has been wrongfully deprived thereof by the executive committee of the main organization. Ibid.

An action for breach by a trade union of an agreement to furnish union labels to a manufacturer cannot be brought against a few members of a particular union making the contract, "individually and for themselves and others, officers and members," of the designated union. Ehrlich v. Willenski, 138 Fed. 425.

IV. Constitutionality of statutes for protection of union labels.

The state by appropriate legislation may protect the use of a union label, and may prohibit its use by persons other than members of the union or persons who employ members thereof in the manufacture and sale of articles to which the label is affixed. No personal rights or principles of public policy are violated by such legislation, and this is true even though the legislature has used the term "trademark" in a sense that is ordinarily understood and used by text writers and defined by judicial decisions. State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9.

The law for the protection of union labels is not invalid as violative of the provision of the Constitution against granting exclusive privileges to private associations or individuals by any special laws, since such act, including as it does every locality in the entire state and embracing every association of union workmen or women existing or that may thereafter organize, is in no sense local or private, but is in every sense a general law. Perkins v. Heert, 153 N. Y.

306, 43 L.R.A. 858, 70 Am. St. Rep. 483, 53 N. E. 18.

A statute the purpose of which is to protect trademarks when adopted by associations or unions of workmen to designate or distinguish goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured or prepared by them, is not class legislation within the inhibition of the Constitution against granting to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity, since the law does not relate to particular persons or things of a class, but embraces within its provisions all associations or unions of workmen. State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9, disapproving State v. Berlinsheimer, 62 Mo. App. 188, and followed in State v. St. Clair, 137 Mo. App. 188, 117 S. W. 648.

A statute for the purpose of permitting the adoption of labels by any person, association, or union of workmen is not void as being obnoxious to the constitutional inhibition against any local or special laws granting any incorporation, association, or individual any special privilege, immunity, or franchise. Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L.R.A. 821, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60.

An act protecting labels adopted by associations of workmen to designate the articles produced through their labor is not unconstitutional as class or special legislation; neither does such a law violate the 14th Amendment of the Federal Constitution by depriving, without process of law, persons of their property, or by denying to them the equal protection of the laws, since the Federal Constitution cannot be invoked against any consequences arising from the use of spurious and untruthful labels. Com. v. Morton, 23 Pa. Co. Ct. 386.

Neither is a law providing for the protection of labels or trademarks adopted by unions of laboring men unconstitutional and void as being violative of public policy in that it unjustly authorizes discrimination in favor of the members of associations or unions as against that of nonunion workmen. Perkins v. Heert, supra.

A statute for the protection of union labels is unconstitutional where it provides for the recovery of a penalty in addition to full compensation for the injury done, in an amount not designated except by a maximum and minimum sum, since such a law confers on the plaintiff the power of fixing, within the limits prescribed, the amount of penalty to be recovered by him, thus taking the property of another without due process of law. Cigarmakers' International Union v. Goldberg, 72 N. J. L. 214, 70 L.R.A. 156, 111 Am. St. Rep. 662, 61 Atl. 457.

The title of an act in reality an act to protect associations, unions of workmen, and persons in their labels, trademarks, and forms of advertising, does not violate the constitutional provision that no act shall embrace more than one subject, which shall be expressed in the title, because it contains provisions relative to the punishment of imitators or counterfeiters and those using such imitation and counterfeits, since such provisions are merely means for the accomplishment of the general purpose of the act. Cohn v. People and Perkins v. Heert, supra; Com. v. Meads, 29 Pa. Super. Ct. 321.

V. Civil suit based upon statute.

a. In general.

The effect of the law in New York for the protection of labels adopted by labor organizations is to give to such labels a greater privilege than could have been obtained under the common-law trademark decisions. Under the latter the use of a similar design or device will be enjoined only when the public are likely to be deceived thereby, and the resemblance is such as to deceive a purchaser of ordinary caution. But by the law as to union labels, the use of a colorable imitation of the label is prohibited, even though by the use of other words or names the public would not be deceived in believing that the products are union made. Myrup v. Friedman, 58 Misc. 323, 110 N. Y. Supp. 1106, affirmed without opinion in 128 App. Div. 888, 112 N. Y. Supp. 1138.

A statute in part providing that every person, association, or union adopting a label, trademark, or form of advertisement, may proceed by action to enjoin the manufacture, use, display, or sale of any counterfeit or imitations thereof, confers a right of action, without reference to the good faith of the defendant or whether, in the use of an imitation label, he acted knowingly. Beebe v. Tolerton & S. Co. 117 Iowa, 593, 91 N. W. 905.

Where a statute does not make knowledge or intent an ingredient of the offense of selling or offering for sale goods with the label simulating that adopted and used by an association of workmen to designate articles made through the labor of the members of the association, it is not necessary to allege or prove knowledge or intent of the accused in order to be entitled to a conviction. And this is true although in the pleadings knowledge and intent of the accused are alleged, since such allegations may be treated as surplusage. Bulena v. Newman, 10 Misc. 460, 31 N. Y. Supp. 449.

In an action by a member of a trade union against a third person to recover the statutory penalty for keeping, selling, or offering for sale goods with a label affixed thereto simulative of a union label, or for the unauthorized use of such a label, the plaintiff must establish that the defendant himself has clearly violated the statute, where the latter did not deliver the goods, although he made the contract for their sale; and where the purchaser knew that he was not purchasing of the defendant, the mere fact that the goods when delivered had affixed to them a label imitative of a union label, is not sufficient to authorize conviction. Higgins v. Dakin, 86 Hun, 461, 33 N. Y. Supp. 890.

Under a statute for the protection of union labels, such labels are entitled to protection against one form of swindling as well as another, and against the use of real labels in a fraudulent way as well as against the use of counterfeits. Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L.R.A. 508, 49 N. E. 308.

In Connecticut there is a statute providing that whenever any person, association, or union of workmen have adopted for his or its protection any label, trademark, or form of advertisement announcing that the goods to which such label, trademark, or form of advertisement shall be attached were manufactured by such a person, or by a member or members of such association or union, it shall be unlawful to counterfeit such label, trademark, or form of advertisement. There is also a provision against the use of any counterfeit or imitation of such label, etc., and for the recovery of damages for such use, etc. In an action by the secretary of an unincorporated association of workmen, named the United Hatters of North America, for the use of such association, the court refused to protect a label reading "The United Hatters of North America, Union Made, Registered," even as against the action of a third person who, without authority or right, was using labels in imitation or counterfeit of this label, and for the purpose of obtaining the advantage of the market for hats bearing the genuine label, and of palming off their hats as hats manufactured under the rules of such association, and thereby defrauding and deceiving the public. This conclusion was reached on the theory that this label did not show that the hats to which it was attached were made by the members of the United Hatters Association, although it was conceded that the label sufficiently announced that the hat to which it was attached was union made, and that it was a union label. This the court said naturally imported that it was made by a union, whereas in fact, according to the complaint, it is not the United Hatters of North America that makes hats bearing the label, but some manufacturer for whom its members work. And the rule is asserted that under this statute a label may become the proper subject of equitable protection, and any member of the association owning it, although neither he nor the association may be a manufacturer or owner of, nor dealer in, the goods to which it is attached, may be invested with a right of action for the protection of the label; but it is said that the label on which the plaintiff relies is one of very different character; that instead of announcing that the hat to which it is affixed has been manufactured by a member or members of the United Hatters of North America, if it announces anything as to its origin, it is that it was manufactured by the association itself. In this connection reference is made to the complaint, which states that the plaintiff is an unincorporated association of workmen formed to promote the welfare of its members, to assist them in obtaining remunerative wages and permanent employment, and to maintain a high standard of workmanship in the making and finishing of hats; that it has adopted for its protection certain labels to be applied to hats made by its members, for the purpose of announcing to the public that hats bearing said label were made by them. Lawlor v. Merritt, 78 Conn. 630, 63 Atl. 639.

b. Relief as affected by extent of use.

Although but one violation of the right of a union to their label is shown, nevertheless, at the suit of the union, the court will enjoin against further violations. United Garment Workers v. Davis. — N. J. Eq. —, 74 Atl. 306.

c. Miscellaneous.

Where the statute expressly creates or recognizes the right of trade unions to be protected in the use of labels for trade union purposes, the defense cannot be made that such a union or association is unlawful. Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L.R.A. 508, 49 N. E. 308.

Where the application is verified by the officer of the main organization, and the trademark is registered for the use of a branch organization connected therewith, this is a sufficient interest in common to entitle the mark to be registered. State v. Montgomery, 57 Wash. 192, 106 Pac. 771.

A statute entitled, "An Act to Protect Manufacturers from the Use of Counterfeit Labels and Stamps," includes unincorporated associations or unions of workmen where, by express provision, reference is made to any person, association, or union, and it applies to them as they ordinarily are, that is as associations of workmen, not as manufacturers or vendors of goods. It contemplates that the labels will be applied to merchandise, as, of course, they must be, and as these labels are. Tracy v. Banker, 170 Mass. 266, 39 L.R.A. 508, 49 N. E. 308.

A label of a trade union which may be used by any manufacturer of certain articles who employs union labor, and who is authorized by the union in that regard, is not within the provisions of a state statute providing that any person, etc., who is a citizen of the state and entitled to the exclusive use of any lawful trademark, label, brand, etc., may obtain protection therefor by complying with certain requirements. State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, 33 N. E. 223.

Under a statute permitting a union or association of employees to adopt a device in the form of a label for the purpose of designating the products of the labor of the members, the right to use a label adopted by an international union may be assigned to different branches thereof, and their use limited to certain territory; and under such circumstances both the international union and the branch union may join in an action against a third person to restrain the imitation of such label or its unauthorized use. Lynch v. John Single Paper Co. 115 App. Div. 911, 101 N. Y. Supp. 824.

Although a statute for the protection of persons, associations, unions of workmen, and others in their labels, trademarks, and forms of advertising, authorizes the court to require a defendant to pay to a person bringing an action under the statute the profits derived from the wrongful use of the forged label, no allowance may be made in the absence of proof as to the amount of the profits. There must also be proof that the defendant acted in bad faith. Beebe v. Tolerton & S. Co. 117 Iowa, 593, 91 N. W. 905.

VI. Criminal prosecutions.

a. In general.

Under a statute making it an offense for any person to manufacture, use, or display, or keep for sale, any counterfeit or colorable imitation of a label adopted by a trade union, a wholesale dealer is guilty of violating the statute when he purchased the goods to which the false label was affixed in good faith, believing it to be genuine, and offered the same for sale, under such belief. Bulena v. Newman, 10 Misc. 460, 31 N. Y. Supp. 449.

Where the purpose of the statute is to protect associations or unions of workmen in any label, advertisement, or symbol they may adopt as their trademark, the act not only embraces technical trademarks, but it includes any label, symbol, or advertisement which may be or has been adopted by any association or union of workmen as a trademark, in accordance with its provisions; and a person is guilty of a misdemeanor under this statute if he knowingly places a counterfeit of a label adopted by such an association on articles sold by him. State v. Bishop, 128 Mo. 373, 29 L.R.A. 200, 49 Am. St. Rep. 569, 31 S. W. 9.

A statute against counterfeiting or imitating any trademark, label, or device adopted or used by any person or any association or union of workmen, or against knowingly selling or disposing of or keeping in his possession with intent to sell, etc., any goods, wares, merchandise, or other product of labor, covers labels or trademarks on bottles. Vincendeau v. People, 219 Ill. 474, 76 N. E. 675.

Where it is not alleged in an indictment, and it does not appear, that the labels the accused is charged with imitating or counterfeiting are those of any association or union of workmen, or that any person connected with the latter has any connection with a company whose union labels were counterfeited or imitated, it is insufficient to support a conviction. Comer v. State, 103 Ga. 69, 29 S. E. 501, approved in Butler v. State, 127 Ga. 700, 56 S. E. 1000.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

b. Form of indictment.

In a prosecution for unlawfully imitating or counterfeiting a duly registered union label, it is sufficient if the charging part of the complaint is in substantially the words of the statute relating thereto. State v. Montgomery, 57 Wash. 192, 106 Pac. 771.

An indictment for counterfeiting a label in violation of a statute protecting the same is not defective because the label itself is pasted therein as the means of informing the defendant of the instrument an imitation or counterfeit of which he is charged with using. State v. Niesman, 101 Mo. App. 507, 74 S. W. 638.

An indictment is not defective because failing specifically to aver the filing of an affidavit with the label as required by statute, where the indictment contains the allegation that the labels so adopted and used were duly filed for record, etc., as by law provided, since the averment that the labels were duly filed for record as by law provided means that the copies, counterparts, or facsimiles were left with the secretary, and that they were accompanied by the necessary sworn statement, and that both were by the secretary filed for record. Vincendeau v. People, 219 Ill. 474, 76 N. E. 675.

Where a statute to protect union labels creates three distinct offenses, and the evidence to sustain the prosecution or maintain a defense differs widely as to each, the defendant cannot be informed against as to one offense and arrested and held for trial as to another. People v. Streep, 126 N. Y. Supp. 172.

c. Matters of evidence.

Where it is shown that the labels counterfeited were issued by an association of workmen, and proof of the adoption of the label by such association is made by introducing in evidence the certificate of the secretary of state of the filing of the label, as required by law to entitle the certificate to be received as sufficient proof of the adoption of the label and the right to adopt the same, and it is shown that such association is an association of workmen, and that the labels upon the articles purchased from the accused were counterfeit labels, the evidence is sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty. Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 486, 23 L.R.A. 821, 41 Am. St. Rep. 304, 37 N. E. 60.

A conviction cannot be sustained unless it is proved that the label was recorded as required by the statute under which the prosecution is had, although it is shown that the label had been adopted or used by its owner prior to the time of the alleged offense. The prosecution cannot be successfully maintained under such a statute, except for action done after the copies of the label or other mark or device, with the accompanying affidavit, has been filed with the secretary of state for record, since the only method provided for establishing the fact that the label has been adopted or used by any person, association, or union, is by the certificate of the secretary of state. Vincendeau v. People, 219 Ill. 474, 76 N. E. 675.

A certified copy made by the secretary of state of the application for registration of a union label is competent evidence to prove the adoption of the label and its filing, etc., and the fact that the secretary received and filed the application is sufficient prima facie proof that all necessary acts, including the filing of the necessary copies of the label, were performed to entitle the label to registration. State v. Montgomery, 57 Wash. 192, 106 Pac. 771.

The fact that the label offered in evidence in the trial of a prosecution for imitating or counterfeiting it had the autograph signature of the president of the trade union, while in the copy of the label presented to the secretary of state as a trademark of the union, the autograph signature of the president of the association was erased, and the space was marked at the end of the label in brackets, "For autograph signature of the president," does not constitute a fatal variance. State v. Niesman, 101 Mo. App. 507, 74 S. W. 638.

Where the defendant merely contracted as agent for the sale of goods to which a counterfeit label was affixed, and he did not personally deliver the goods, evidence of the purchaser that at the time he made the purchase he understood he was buying goods with a union label affixed thereto is incompetent. Higgins v. Dakin, 86 Hun. 461, 33 N. Y. Supp. 890. A. G. S.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

E. G. SAULSBERRY, Appt.,
v.

COOPERS' INTERNATIONAL UNION et al.

(147 Ky. 170, 143 S. W. 1018.)

Conspiracy — labor union — refusal to renew contract — ruining business.

1. A manufacturer is entitled to no equitable relief to compel a labor union to renew a contract for the continued services of its members in his business on the same terms accorded his competitors, although its refusal to do so is the result of a conspiracy between the union and his competitors to ruin his business, and his employees are willing to continue work on the basis of the old contract.

Note. — As to the law of union labels, see note appended to People v. Dantuma, ante, 1190.

As to civil liability for inducing servant to quit his employment, see note in 5 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1091.

As to lawfulness of strike or of threat to cause or so to act as to induce strike, when there is no dispute between the strikers and their own employers, see note in 6 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1067.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Injunction — against removal of union stamp.

2. A manufacturer cannot enjoin a labor union from removing its stamp from his shop on failure to renew a contract for labor, although the result of the removal will be to prevent a sale of his product, and the failure to renew the contract is the result of a conspiracy between the union and his competitors to ruin his business.

(February 27, 1912.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Kenton County in defendants' favor in an action brought to compel defendants to renew a contract with plaintiff, or to return to him its union stamp. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Myers & Howard, for appellant:

A conspiracy or combination to cause a strike for the purpose of injuring and destroying the business and property of another, or of depriving another of his liberty or property without just cause, is unlawful and criminal.

State v. Stockford, 77 Conn. 227, 107 Am. St. Rep. 28, 58 Atl. 769; Reynolds v. Davis, 198 Mass. 294, 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162, 84 N. E. 457; Owens v. State, 16 Lea, 1; Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 3 Am. St. Rep. 320, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898, 6 Am. Crim. Rep. 570; United States v. Wootten, 29 Fed. 702; United States v. Lancaster, 10 L.R.A. 333, 44 Fed. 896; People v. Petheram, 64 Mich. 252, 31 N. W. 188; McKee v. State, 111 Ind. 378, 12 N. E. 510; Arner v. State, 106 Ind. 426, 7 N. E. 225; 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, 1398.

A combination is a conspiracy in law whenever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public or oppress individuals, by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates, giving effect to the purpose of the latter, whether of extortion or mischief.

1 Hawk. P. C. chap. 27, § 2; 2 Russell, Crim. Law, 674; 2 Wharton, Crim. Law, § 2322; 2 Bishop, Crim. Law, § 172; Deaty, Crim. Law, 1138; Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. 1830.

Conspiracy to do an illegal thing is actionable if injury proceeds from it; and

As to controversy over open or closed shop as justification for means employed to aid strike, see note in 17 L.R.A.(N.S.) 162.

As to system of work as justification for strike, see note in 37 L.R.A.(N.S.) 179.

As to the right of a labor union to impose a fine on members as a means of inducing them to join strike, see note in 23 L.R.A.(N.S.) 1236.

where the illegal purpose has been executed, it is false and malicious wherever the motive for the conspiracy to execute it was false and malicious.

Smith v. Nippert, 76 Wis. 86, 20 Am. St. Rep. 26, 44 N. W. 846; Haldeman v. Martin, 10 Pa. 370.

Everyone who enters into a common purpose or design is generally, in law, a party to every act which had before been done by the others, and a party to every act which may afterwards be done by any of the others in furtherance of such common designs.

Card v. State, 109 Ind. 415, 9 N. E. 591; McKee v. State, 111 Ind. 378, 12 N. E. 510; Williams v. State, 47 Ind. 568; Jones v. State, 64 Ind. 473; Walton v. State, 88 Ind. 9; Archer v. State, 106 Ind. 426, 7 N. E. 225; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 111; Newman v. Com. 8 Sadler (Pa.) 127, 7 Atl. 132.

It is sufficient that the means used was threatening, and intended to overcome the will of others,—to prevent customers from dealing with and laborers from working for the complainant.

Arthur v. Oakes, 25 L.R.A. 414, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 744, 11 C. C. A. 209, 24 U. S. App. 239, 63 Fed. 321, 9 Am. Crim. Rep. 169; Beck v. Railway Teamsters' Protective Union, 118 Mich. 497, 42 L.R.A. 417, 74 Am. St. Rep. 421, 77 N. W. 13; Casey v. Cincinnati Typographical Union No. 3, 12 L.R.A. 193, 45 Fed. 135; Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803; Oxley Stave Co. v. Coopers' International Union, 72 Fed. 695; Martin, Modern Law Labor Unions, 94; Pickett v. Walsh, 192 Mass. 572, 6 L.R.A. (N.S.) 1067, 116 Am. St. Rep. 272, 78 N. E. 753, 7 Ann. Cas. 638; Old Dominion S. S. Co. v. McKenna, 30 Fed. 48; Plant v. Wood, 176 Mass. 492, 51 L.R.A. 339, 79 Am. St. Rep. 330, 57 N. E. 1011; Coons v. Chrystie, 24 Misc. 296, 53 N. Y. Supp. 668; Erdman v. Mitchell, 207 Pa. 79, 63 L.R.A. 543, 99 Am. St. Rep. 783, 56 Atl. 327; Purvis v. Local No. 500, U. B. C. & J. 214 Pa. 348, 12 L.R.A. (N.S.) 642, 112 Am. St. Rep. 757, 63 Atl. 585, 6 Ann. Cas. 275; Underhill v. Murphy, 117 Ky. 640, 111 Am. St. Rep. 262, 78 S. W. 482, 4 Ann. Cas. 780.

Messrs. Cogan & Williams and Howard N. Ragland for appellees.

Lassing, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

E. G. Saulsberry is a manufacturer of beer cooperage in Covington, Kentucky. In March, 1910, he entered into a contract with the Coopers' International Union No. 159, Cincinnati, Ohio, by the terms of which said union was to furnish him union labor to run his business for one year at the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

stipulated price of 35 cents per hour for a day's work consisting of nine hours. The union supplied his shop with a stamp marked "C. I. U. No. 52," which was to be used on all the cooperage manufactured at his factory. This stamp was under the control of a member of said union in his employ, known as a "monitor." Under this agreement, the business was conducted during the life of the contract. About the time it terminated,—just before or just after,—representatives of the union notified him that they would not work longer under the terms of the old agreement, and that, if he wanted to continue his business as a union shop, he would have to pay an advance in wages, and accept shorter hours for a day's work. The new agreement sought by the representatives of the union provided for an eight-hour day at 40 cents per hour. Saulsberry refused to accede to this demand, on the ground that other cooperage plants in that locality had made contracts with the union under more favorable terms, and so notified the representatives of the union. They thereupon took possession of the stamp, and notified the employees that they were "out of a job." It is a rule of the union that none of its members can work in a shop not supplied with a stamp, and hence the removal of the stamp effectually closed this shop to union labor. Conceiving that he was being unjustly discriminated against to his damage, Saulsberry instituted a suit, in which he sought either to compel the union to return to him the stamp for use in his business, or else to compel it to make a contract with him on the same terms upon which it was furnishing labor to his competitors in that vicinity. Two of the representatives of the union, termed "walking delegates" were made parties to the suit. No defense was made for the union; but the two defendants, Lineback and McManus, answered, and, in addition to specifically denying the charge that they had conspired with any of plaintiff's competitors to injure him in his business, pleaded affirmatively that, as the representatives of the union, they had simply demanded better pay and shorter hours for the men before they would enter into any further contractual relation with plaintiff, and, that this demand having been refused, they took the stamp from the shop, and notified all of the employees who were members of the union that they could no longer work, as the factory was not entitled to the use of the stamp. They further pleaded that the stamp was the individual property of the union. The affirmative matter in the answer was traversed in the reply. Upon the issues joined and proof taken the case was submitted for judgment.

The chancellor was of opinion that plaintiff had failed to make out a case, and dismissed the petition. Plaintiff appeals.

The evidence shows that at the time the dispute arose the contract between plaintiff and the union had expired; and, while some of the men in plaintiff's employ were willing to continue to work under the old contract, the union withheld its consent for them to do so; and because of plaintiff's inability to make a new contract with the union he was compelled to close his shop, and it had, up to the date of the submission of the case, remained closed. He has a large amount of money invested in his business, and, as it appears he cannot dispose of his output unless it bears the stamp of the union, he has and must necessarily sustain a serious loss. It likewise appears that others of his competitors have contracts more favorable than that which the union was exacting of him. On this state of facts, what are the rights of the parties?

A man's labor is his own, and he has the right to dispose of it upon the best terms he can secure. If one to whom it is offered or by whom it is desired is unable or unwilling to pay the price demanded for it, we have presented simply a case where the parties to a proposed contract cannot agree as to terms. So, too, when one has been in the employ of another under a contract, and that contract has expired, neither party is under any obligation to continue in the employment except upon terms satisfactory to him, and no ground of complaint is afforded either employer or employee for refusing to continue longer the contractual obligations. This principle is universally recognized. The influences which actuate the employer in discharging the servant, or the servant in quitting the employ of the master, are not a proper subject of inquiry. If they possess the right to terminate the employment, they may exercise it, although the one so doing may know it works inconvenience, if not a positive injury, to the other. The exercise of a legal right by one in a proper manner will not be denied, although damage or loss may result to another as a necessary consequence thereof. If, instead of a labor union, this was a controversy between plaintiff and an individual employee, and there was no contractual relation requiring him to continue in plaintiff's employ, he could refuse to work longer except upon such terms as were acceptable to him, and plaintiff would be powerless to compel him to work, and would have no just cause of complaint because he quit. If the same principle applies to a union, which is but an organization of men for mutual benefit and protection, the plaintiff is remediless, even though his business is ruined.

The right of laborers to organize for protection, in the way of securing better wages, shorter hours, and improved facilities whereby their condition is bettered, has been many times before the courts of this country, and such right has been uniformly upheld. In the case of Hopkins v. Oxley Stave Co. 28 C. C. A. 99, 49 U. S. App. 709, 83 Fed. 912, this right is thus stated for the court by Judge Thayer: "The courts have invariably upheld the right of individuals to form labor organizations for the protection of the interests of the laboring classes, and have denied the power to enjoin the members of such associations from withdrawing peaceably from any service, either singly or in a body, even where such withdrawal involves a breach of contract."

Such right is not disputed by counsel for appellant, but it is argued that the men did not want to cease working. They were satisfied with the old contract, and wanted to continue under it. Undoubtedly some were, but, being members of the union, they were bound by it and its rulings and judgment so long as they remained members thereof. The old contract had been made by the union. The union alone was clothed with power to contract for its members, and the contract, if made at all, had to be made by the union. Hence the wish or will of individual members cannot be considered in determining the rights of the parties to this controversy. If the union had a right, through its representatives, to contract, which is not denied, then the desire of individual members cannot be taken into consideration at all; and it is immaterial whether they were satisfied or dissatisfied with the proposed arrangement. The union was willing to make a contract, but it demanded one more favorable in terms for the men than the old contract. Should it be enjoined from doing so because some of the members of the union were satisfied with the old contract? Undoubtedly, if the officers of the union are clothed with power to represent and speak for it, this right cannot be taken from them or abridged, except by the union itself. It is not a matter for judicial determination at the instance of anyone save the union. It is not denied that Lineback and McManus spoke for and represented the union, and, as said by Judge Taft in Thomas v. Cincinnati, N. O. & T. P. R. Co. (C. C.) 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 788, 62 Fed. 803, in dealing with the rights and powers of officers and representatives of unions to advise and direct the men: "They have the right to appoint officers who shall advise them as to the course to be taken by them in their relations with their employer. They may unite with other unions. The officers they appoint, or any other persons to whom they choose to listen, may advise them as to the proper course to be taken by them in regard to their employment, or, if they choose to repose such authority in anyone, may order them, on pain of expulsion, from their union, peaceably to leave the employ of their employer, because any of the terms of their employment are unsatisfactory." We take it that Lineback and McManus were acting clearly within their right in attempting to procure for the union a better contract than it theretofore had, and in refusing to permit or sanction the men to continue longer in plaintiff's employ under the old contract. They were guilty of no act of violence, but simply, in effect, declared a strike because they could not secure for the union such a desirable contract. The result of their action was that all of the union men in plaintiff's employ quit work. It was a concerted action. Had they the right to do so?

This precise question was raised in the suit of Union P. R. Co. v. Ruef (C. C.) 120 Fed. 114, the court there saying: "The defendants acted within their right when they went out on a strike. Whether with good cause, or without any cause or reason, they had the right to quit work for the Union Pacific Railway Company, and their reasons for quitting work were reasons they need not give to anyone. And that they all went out in a body by agreement or preconcerted arrangement does not militate against them or affect this case in any way. Such rights are reciprocal, and the company had the right to discharge any or all of the defendants, with or without cause, and it cannot be inquired into as to what the cause was." As the union at that time had no contract with the plaintiff, he had the undoubted right to discharge all the men in his employ at once, without notice or warning; and so the men had the right to quit; and, when they did so, they were not required or called upon to give or assign any reason therefor.

The stamp belonged to the union, and they took it away when they quit plaintiff's employ. It was the sign by which the business world was advised that the goods manufactured were union made, and plaintiff had no right to its use except when his goods were made by union labor. The stamp could not lawfully be used by him except upon goods made by union labor. So his real complaint is not that the stamp was removed, but that the union refused to contract with him upon terms which he was willing to make. To grant the relief sought would be to compel the union to contract with him upon the same terms it had with other manufacturing concerns engaged in like business in that locality. We have been unable to find any authority supporting such contention. In effect, it would be the substitution of the judgment of the court, exercised through its mandatory processes, for the will of the union. It would take away from the union the right to contract for itself, and open the door for needless litigation between employer and employee, and make of the court an arbiter in advance of all questions of wages or compensation for labor. If the employer could compel the employee to contract with him upon terms acceptable to him, the employee could, with equal propriety, compel the prospective employer to hire him upon terms agreeable to him, and as favorable and as high as other employers were paying for like services. The proposition falls from its own weight. The relief sought cannot be granted.

No ground for injunctive relief is presented. The sum and substance of appellee's offense is that Lineback and McManus, being unable to agree with plaintiff on a scale of wages for the members of the union, ordered a strike, and took from plaintiff's shop the stamp,—the property of the union. They offered no violence whatever. They threatened the destruction of no property. They did not do anything in any way, shape, or form calculated to interfere with plaintiff in procuring other labor; but simply stood upon their rights and refused to labor upon terms not acceptable to them. The inability of plaintiff to make a contract for this union labor has undoubtedly worked a hardship upon him; but this is his misfortune rather than appellees' fault. When he first built and occupied his plant, if he had been unable to make a contract with the union at that time, he would likewise have sustained a loss, but such loss could not justly be charged to the union. And appellant has no better right now to complain of the union than he would have if he had been unable to affect an agreement with them as to the scale of wages the year before.

There is an intimation in the pleading, if not a positive charge, that the failure of appellees to contract with appellant was the result of a conspiracy entered into between the walking delegates, Lineback and McManus, and appellant's competitors, for the purpose of destroying his business. We find no substantial evidence in the record to justify or support this charge. But, even if it were true, it would be of no avail; for, since appellees had the right to cease laboring for appellant, it is immaterial what moved them to exercise this right. Appellant is furnished no ground of complaint because the members of the union ceased to work for him. If appellant was seeking to recover damages from his competitors, a different question would be presented. If it was shown that they had conspired to destroy his business, and, as a result of such conspiracy, deprived him of the benefit of the labor of his employees, they might be answerable in damages for such injury. But that question is not here. The simple question presented by this record is, Can a labor organization be required to enter into a contract with one desiring the services of its men upon terms not acceptable to it? The lower court held that it could not: In that conclusion we concur.

Judgment affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

WILLIAM G. JOHNSON et al., Appts.,

v.

WILLIAM H. HARRISON.

(— Ind. —, 97 N. E. 930.)

Pleading — complaint — anticipating defense.

1. A complaint in an action to recover on a negotiable instrument may set out facts tending to show plaintiff to be a bona fide holder, for the purpose of anticipating a defense of fraudulent inception of the instrument.

Checks — diversion — bona fide purchaser — risk of loss.

2. One who draws a check and places it in possession of another assumes, as against a bona fide purchaser, the risk of its being diverted from the purpose for which it was executed.

Same — absence of funds — effect of knowledge.

3. The bona fides of one purchasing a check is not destroyed by the fact that he knows there are no funds on deposit to meet it.

Same — staleness — effect.

4. That one takes an overdue check from the payee does not, in the absence of other suspicious circumstances, subject him to equitable defenses in an action against the drawer.

Note. — Bona fides of purchaser of check as affected by his knowledge that there are no funds to meet it.

Besides JOHNSON v. HARRISON, and Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 823, which is sufficiently set out in the former case, there appears to be but one additional case on the point here annotated.

In Spero v. Holoschutz, 36 Misc. 764, 74 N. Y. Supp. 852, it was held that parties 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Pleading — bona fides of purchase — check — note — payment.

5. Failure to allege that a note given for a check was negotiable does not show absence of value, so as to destroy the bona fides of the purchase, if it is alleged that the note was paid.

Check — indorsee — first holder.

6. One who takes from a payee, who indorses the instrument, a check with the understanding that he is to lend money to the drawer, with the check as security, is a first holder, and not entitled to the rights of a bona fide indorsee, and cannot use any part of the proceeds in satisfaction of his claim against the indorser.

Same — duty of inquiry — representations of agents.

7. That the one attempting to raise a loan on a check for the benefit of its maker is willing to have a material portion of the proceeds applied on his own debt to the one to whom the paper is offered charges the latter with the duty of inquiring from the maker as to the facts of the transaction, and he can gain no rights in excess of the authority actually conferred on the agent.

(March 12, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Superior Court for Howard County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover the amount due on a check. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. B. F. Harness, B. C. Moon, and W. R. Voorhis for appellants.

Messrs. James L. Overson, Arthur G. Manning, James F. Morrison, and Joseph C. Herron for appellee.

Cox, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action brought by the appellee against the appellants as parties doing business under the firm name of Kokomo Trunk Company. The complaint is based on two checks, one of which was given in renewal of the other. It was answered by five paragraphs, one of which was the general denial. Appellants, in this appeal, claim that the judgment against them resulted from alleged errors of the trial court in sustaining appellee's demurrer to their fifth paragraph who accept a check bearing indorsements showing that it has passed through a bank and been marked "N.G." on its face, in payment of merchandise purchased some two months prior thereto, will not, from all the facts and circumstances disclosed, be considered bona fide purchasers in good faith and for value, and thus permitted to recover thereon, where the drawer has paid the check, but they will be held to have taken the check subject to the equities existing between the drawer and the payee.

of answer, and in overruling their motion for a new trial.

The fifth paragraph of appellee's complaint makes the following allegations: "That defendants were, on or about the 10th or 12th day of January, 1907, and still are, doing business as partners in the city of Kokomo, under the name of the Kokomo Trunk Company. That on or about said 10th or 12th day of January, 1907, the defendants by their check, a copy of which this plaintiff is unable at this time to file and make a part of this paragraph, for reasons hereinafter set out, requested the Howard National Bank of Kokomo, Indiana, to pay W. B. Hendricks or order ($200) two hundred dollars, and delivered the same to W. B. Hendricks. That on the 16th day of January, plaintiff, William H. Harrison, for good and valuable consideration, purchased and obtained said check from said Hendricks, and said check was properly indorsed to plaintiff, and that said check was purchased and received by the plaintiff in good faith before the same had been presented to the Howard National Bank or any other bank for payment, and before the maturity of said check. That said plaintiff obtained said check for a valuable consideration, in due course of business, and without any knowledge or notice of any defense or equities on the part of the makers at the time said valuable consideration was paid by plaintiff, and gave possession of same to him. That on several occasions previous to said 16th day of January, 1907, plaintiff had cashed for said W. B. Hendricks checks in various amounts drawn on the Howard National Bank of Kokomo, Indiana. The exact amount or face of these checks is to this plaintiff at this time unknown, also the dates of their issue. That they were regularly signed by the said Kokomo Trunk Company, per Almira Reed. That at the time said checks were indorsed to plaintiff and a valuable consideration paid for them, plaintiff was requested by said W. B. Hendricks, at the instance of said Kokomo Trunk Company, to defer cashing the same at the Howard National Bank until a period of time had elapsed after receiving the same (the exact length of time is to this plaintiff unknown at this time). That plaintiff was notified at the time of receiving said checks, and at the time of the request to delay before the presentment of same to said Howard National Bank, that said Kokomo Trunk Company had no money in said bank belonging to said Kokomo Trunk Company, but would have at the time indicated by said Hendricks, when said checks were to be presented at the various times chosen and payments were promptly made by said bank. That afterwards, to wit, on the 10th or 12th day of January, 1907, said W. B. Hendricks personally appeared before plaintiff and requested that he buy a check drawn on the Howard National Bank for the sum of $200, payable to W. B. Hendricks or order, and regularly signed by said Kokomo Trunk Company, per Almira Reed, with the request of said Kokomo Trunk Company, through its lawfully authorized agent, W. B. Hendricks, that the said check be not presented to said bank for a period of sixty days, as said Kokomo Trunk Company had no funds in said bank at that time, but would have at the time stipulated. That plaintiff gave for said check his personal promissory note, at the Citizens' National Bank, Kokomo, Indiana, due sixty days after date in the sum of $150. Further, that upon the ——— day of ———, 1907, plaintiff paid off said note, $150 in amount, to said Citizens' National Bank. Plaintiff further released, and as additional consideration of having said check assigned to him, a claim and account he then held against said Hendricks for medical services rendered said Hendricks, in amount, to wit, $50. That all of said acts were done in the city of Kokomo, where said check was issued. That said plaintiff, on or about the 10th day of March, 1907, indorsed and presented said check to said bank and demanded payment, which was refused. That on many occasions after the 10th day of March said check was presented to said bank and to defendants and payment demanded, and plaintiff all times was met with a refusal from said parties. That on or about the 6th day of August, 1907, a new check, a copy of which is filed herewith, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this complaint, was made out by the defendants and substituted for the check heretofore described (check drawn on or about the 12th to 16th day of January, 1907). That said check drawn on or about said date was destroyed when 'Exhibit A' was received in its place. That plaintiff, on or about said 6th day of August, 1907, accepted and obtained possession of said check from defendants, marked 'Exhibit A' in this paragraph, presented at once the same to the Howard National Bank, of Kokomo, Indiana, and also to defendants, and demanded payment, which was refused. That said check marked 'Exhibit A' is now due and unpaid. Wherefore plaintiff demands judgment in the sum of $200, together with interest to date, and all other just and proper relief."

Copy of check (Exhibit A):

Howard National Bank of Kokomo, Ind.
Kokomo, Ind., Aug. 6, 1907.

Pay to W. B. Hendricks or order $200.00 two hundred ⁰⁰/₁₀₀ dollars.

Kokomo Trunk Co.
Per Almira Reed.

Indorsed on back: "W. B. Hendricks."

The fifth paragraph of answer contained the following allegations: "For answer to all the paragraphs of complaint based upon the check dated August 6, 1907, the defendants say: The check sued upon in this action was executed under the following circumstances and conditions, to wit: on the 10th day of January, 1907, the defendants Johnson and Cain were and still are partners doing business in the city of Kokomo under the name of the Kokomo Trunk Company, and on said day said Johnson and Cain and William B. Hendricks, the payee of the check in suit, executed to the Kokomo National Bank of the city of Kokomo their promissory note dated January 10, 1907, for the sum of $200, due in ninety days after date. That said note was executed for the purpose of borrowing money to pay a partnership debt of said Johnson and Cain, as the Kokomo Trunk Company, and the proceeds of said note, to wit, $196, was used in the payment of a debt then and theretofore owing by said Kokomo Trunk Company, to the Boston Artificial Leather Company. That William B. Hendricks signed said note upon the first line and was in form the principal in said note, but was in fact surety thereon for the reason that the whole of the proceeds of said note were used in the payment of said debt of said Kokomo Trunk Company. That on or about the 10th or 12th day of January, 1907, the said William B. Hendricks procured the defendants Johnson and Cain, as the Kokomo Trunk Company, through Almira Reed, their bookkeeper, in the name of the Kokomo Trunk Company, to execute to William B. Hendricks at said city of Kokomo, a check dated on or about the 10th or 12th day of January, 1907, for the sum of $200. That he represented to defendants that it was proper and necessary for said check to be issued to him to indemnify him against the payment of the note for $200 which he had so executed to said Kokomo National Bank with said Johnson and Cain as aforesaid. That said William B. Hendricks represented to said defendants, and agreed with them, that said check was not to be paid and would not be cashed or used by said Hendricks in any way until the maturity of said note to the Kokomo National Bank, and would then be cashed and used by him only in the event that he (the said Hendricks) should be compelled to pay said note for $200 to the Kokomo National Bank. That said Almira Reed, as the bookkeeper of the defendants, in the name of the Kokomo Trunk Company, executed to said William B. Hendricks said check under said circumstances and under said representations and said promises, and for no other or different consideration than for the purpose of indemnifying said Hendricks against the payment of the $200 note to said Kokomo National Bank. That said defendants Johnson and Cain have paid said note, as they were in duty bound to do, to the Kokomo National Bank, and said William B. Hendricks had not paid any part thereof, and has been fully relieved from such payment of said note by the defendants Johnson and Cain. That said William B. Hendricks, on or about the 16th day of January, 1907, and four days or more after the date of said check, sold said check to the plaintiff, William Harrison, at said city of Kokomo, where said check was issued, and said plaintiff, William Harrison, at the time he so purchased the same, knew that said check was four days old, and knew that there was no money in the bank at the time to pay the same, but that he purchased said check at a large discount with full knowledge that the same was not issued and in circulation in the ordinary course of business. That the plaintiff, William Harrison, held said check, issued as aforesaid and indorsed to him as aforesaid, until on or about the 6th day of August, 1907, when he surrendered said check to said William B. Hendricks and received from said Hendricks in lieu thereof the check in suit in this action, which was executed and delivered to the plaintiff as a renewal of said check of January 10 or 12, 1907, and without any new or other additional consideration whatever, except the surrender to William B. Hendricks of the said first check issued in January, 1907. Wherefore the defendants say that plaintiff is not entitled to recover in this action."

The contention that the court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the fifth paragraph of answer is involved with objections to the unusual character of the allegations of the fifth paragraph of the complaint, and the question presented is whether the answer was good as to it.

It is true, as contended by counsel for appellants, that it is not commendable pleading for a plaintiff, in his complaint as the indorsee or holder of a check or other negotiable instrument, to recover on it against the drawer or maker, to anticipate and avoid a defense of fraud between the drawer or maker and the payee. The formal and proper practice in such case is for the plaintiff to state his cause of action on the instrument. If to the complaint the defendant sets up by answer fraud which would be a defense between him and the payee, the plaintiff may then reply the facts constituting him a bona fide purchaser and thereby avoid the answer. Uhl v. Harvey, 78 Ind. 26, 30; First Nat. Bank v. Ruhl, 122 Ind. 279, 23 N. E. 766; Shirk v. Neible, 156 Ind. 66, 72, 83 Am. St. Rep. 150, 59 N. E. 281; Ray v. Baker, 165 Ind. 74, 90, 74 N. E. 619; Zink v. Dick, 1 Ind. App. 269, 27 N. E. 622.

And where a plaintiff states in his complaint, together with facts constituting a cause of action, other material and relevant facts which are a defense to the cause of action, and does not allege facts avoiding such defense, his complaint will not withstand a demurrer. Behrley v. Behrley, 93 Ind. 255; Knopf v. Morel, 111 Ind. 570, 13 N. E. 51; Latta v. Miller, 109 Ind. 302, 10 N. E. 100; Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Yopst, 118 Ind. 248, 3 L.R.A. 224, 20 N. E. 222; Morgan v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 130 Ind. 101, 28 N. E. 548; Bowlus v. Phenix Ins. Co. 133 Ind. 106, 20 L.R.A. 400, 32 N. E. 319; Karr v. Putnam County, 170 Ind. 571, 85 N. E. 1; Jessup v. Jessup, 7 Ind. App. 573, 34 N. E. 1017; Andrews v. Sellers, 11 Ind. App. 301, 38 N. E. 1101.

But the mere fact that a complaint, otherwise good, sets up also a defense to the cause of action pleaded, does not make the pleading bad where matter avoiding the defense is also pleaded. Latta v. Miller, 109 Ind. 302, 10 N. E. 100; Bowlus v. Phenix Ins. Co. 133 Ind. 106, 20 L.R.A. 400, 32 N. E. 319; Chicago, C. & L. R. Co. v. West, 37 Ind. 211; Hunt v. State, 93 Ind. 311, 316; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland, 162 Ind. 406, 63 L.R.A. 948, 69 N. E. 138; Bunting v. Mick, 5 Ind. App. 289, 31 N. E. 378, 1055; Bradley, H. & Co. v. Whicker, 23 Ind. App. 380, 55 N. E. 490.

It has also been decided that it is not anticipating a defense, and that it is not improper to allege facts not ordinarily necessary, but which in the particular instance strengthen the plaintiff's case, or bring it within an exception to a general rule, or merely incidentally disclose a possible defense. Hunt v. State, 93 Ind. 311, 316; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Holland, 162 Ind. 406, 63 L.R.A. 948, 69 N. E. 138; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Moore, 170 Ind. 328, 354, 82 N. E. 52, 84 N. E. 540.

That the indorsee and holder suing on a check or other negotiable instrument obtained or put into circulation fraudulently has the burden of proving that he became a holder before maturity, without notice of the fraud, and for a valuable consideration, is firmly settled. Giberson v. Jolley, 120 Ind. 301, 22 N. E. 306; First Nat. Bank v. Ruhl, 122 Ind. 279, 23 N. E. 766; Shirk v. Neible, 156 Ind. 66, 72, 83 Am. St. Rep. 150, 59 N. E. 281; Ray v. Baker, 165 Ind. 74, 90, 74 N. E. 619.

We know of no reason or rule of pleading which would prevent a plaintiff in such case assuming such burden in the first instance by making proper allegations in his complaint of facts showing him to be a bona fide holder. It could deprive the defendant of no right that would otherwise be his, and the practice has been recognized and permitted. Bunting v. Mick, 5 Ind. App. 289, 31 N. E. 378, 1055; Bradley, H. & Co. v. Whicker, 23 Ind. App. 380, 55 N. E. 490; Kimble v. Christie, 55 Ind. 140; Cooper v. Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank, 25 Ind. App. 341, 57 N. E. 569.

The question then arises whether the facts alleged in the fifth paragraph of the complaint for the purpose of showing that appellee was a bona fide holder were sufficient for that purpose, and therefore sufficient to avoid the defense of fraud pleaded in the fifth paragraph of answer. Or whether, if these facts had not been first pleaded in the complaint, but had been pleaded as a reply to the answer of fraud, they would have been sufficient as such.

The charge of fraud injected into the issue by the fifth paragraph of answer, as will be seen by a look at his allegations, is that Hendricks fraudulently put into circulation, by indorsement to appellee, a check which appellants' firm had drawn in his favor to indemnify him as a surety on their note, which note was afterwards paid by them; that he had sold and indorsed the check to appellee four days after it was drawn and delivered to him, in violation of his collateral agreement with appellants not to cash or use it until the maturity of the note, and then only in the event that he should be compelled to pay the note. The allegations relating to this fraud are supplemented with others that appellee took it knowing it was four days old, that there was no money to appellants' credit at the time with which to pay it, and that the second check was merely executed and delivered to appellee as a renewal of the first, without new consideration therefor, except the surrender of the first.

That negotiable paper was diverted from the purpose for which it was drawn, made, accepted, or indorsed, or that the person intrusted with it for a specific purpose misapplied or misappropriated it, or its proceeds, in fraud of the maker or indorser, is not available as a defense in an action upon the instrument by a bona fide holder for value without notice. Stoner v. Brown, 18

Ind. 464; Wells v. Sutton, 85 Ind. 70; Galvin v. Syfers, 22 Ind. App. 43, 52 N. E. 96; 8 Cyc. 44; Joyce, Defenses to Com. Paper, §§ 380 et seq.

The holder of a negotiable instrument is not bound by a private agreement between the maker and indorser unless he had notice of the agreement, and took the bill subject to the condition. Hence it is no defense against an innocent holder that by such an agreement the maker was not to be held liable on the instrument except upon a condition or contingency. Deardorff v. Foreman, 24 Ind. 481; Whitcomb v. Miller, 90 Ind. 384; Galvin v. Syfers, 22 Ind. App. 43, 52 N. E. 96; 8 Cyc. 56, 57.

This is in accordance with the well-settled rule of law that when two innocent persons are harmed by the act of another, one of the two must bear the loss who has put it into the power of the wrongdoer to harm the other. So, if appellee was a bona fide purchaser, appellants, according to the allegations of their pleadings, having drawn the check to Hendricks as the payee, and put him in possession of it, must suffer the loss, and not appellee.

It is, however, insisted that appellee is not an innocent holder, for the reason that, as he knew there was no money in the bank to meet the check at the time he took it, knowledge is to be imputed to him that there was such irregularity about it as to destroy the bona fides of his purchase. The position is not tenable. We are not unaware of the fact that checks are not infrequently drawn and delivered to the payee, not to be immediately presented for payment, when the drawer has not funds, but intends to have at the time the check is presented.

It is true, as stated by counsel in their brief, that the issuance of a check implies, ordinarily, that there is money in the hands of the drawee belonging to the drawer to pay it, and that it is a fraud to put a check into circulation when there is not money to pay it. But this, obviously, is not fraud on the drawer, but on the payee, or one to whom it is indorsed who has no knowledge of the lack of funds. Where such knowledge is imparted to the payee and by him to the indorsee, and the check nevertheless is taken, to be presented at the time when it is represented funds will be available, there can be no fraud involved. The taking of the check, under such circumstances, imparts notice that it cannot be cashed at once, but it is not calculated to carry notice of any fraudulent infirmity in the contract. Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 823. And this is particularly true where, as alleged in the complaint in this case, the drawers had, at the hands of Hendricks, previously procured appellee to cash similar checks drawn by them when they were out of funds, with a similar request that they be not presented until a time designated, when appellants would have the money to meet them, which checks were afterwards paid as agreed.

We cannot see that the transaction carries a more distinct warning of fraud to a possible purchaser than would a postdated check; or a memorandum check which is, between the drawer and payee, an evidence of indebtedness, and may carry an agreement between them that it shall not be presented for payment at the bank on which it is drawn. Neither a postdated check or memorandum check in themselves are notice of fraud in putting them in circulation sufficient to destroy the bona fides of a purchaser for value. Symonds v. Riley, 188 Mass. 470, 74 N. E. 926; Dykers v. Leather Mfrs. Bank, 11 Paige, 612; Morse, Banks and Bkg. 4th ed. §§ 388, 389; Dan. Neg. Inst. 4th ed. §§ 1578, 1583; 7 Cyc. 954.

Nor can the contention of appellants be sustained that the check, having been taken by appellee four days after its date, was overdue and stale, and was therefore subject to defenses which might exist between the original parties. Such is not the law. It is true that where one takes a check from the payee after a reasonable time for demanding payment for the drawee has elapsed, and during the delay loss occurs to the drawer by the failure of the bank, he may defend against the holder. The holder of a check, who gets it after a reasonable time has passed for demanding payment, takes it with the risk of the failure of the bank, so far as the drawer is concerned. But it is no defense that the check was not presented at once, or in a reasonable time, where no contingency such as the failure of the bank has intervened and caused loss to the drawer by the delay. Morse, Banks & Bkg. 4th ed. § 421; Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. §§ 1586 et seq.; Van Schaack, Checks, chap. 4.

But aside from this, the rule is that the fact that the holder has taken a check from the payee four days or even more after its date, unconnected with other suspicious circumstances, does not subject him to equitable defenses in an action by him against the drawer. Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. § 1634; Morse, Banks & Bkg. 4th ed. § 442; Tiedeman, Com. Paper, § 446; Estes v. Lovering Shoe Co. 59 Minn. 504, 50 Am. St. Rep. 424, 61 N. W. 674; Fealey v. Bull, 163 N. Y. 397, 57 N. E. 631; Citizens' State Bank v.

Cowles, 89 App. Div. 281, 86 N. Y. Supp. 38; Ames v. Meriam, 98 Mass. 294; First Nat. Bank v. Harris, 108 Mass. 514; Re Brown, 2 Story, 502, Fed. Cas. No. 1,985; Bull v. First Nat. Bank, 123 U. S. 105, 31 L. ed. 97, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 62; Matlock v. Scheuerman, 51 Or. 49, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747, 93 Pac. 823.

Again, it is contended that it does not appear from the complaint that appellee was a bona fide indorsee, in that it is not alleged that the note he gave in exchange for the check was payable to order or bearer at a bank in this state, so as to make it negotiable under our statute as an inland bill of exchange, and that therefore no payment of the consideration for the assignment of the check was shown. It is, however, alleged that appellee subsequently, at the bank at which it was given, paid the note, and this sufficiently makes it appear that he paid the consideration for the assignment. It also appears that, as additional consideration, he released a debt he held against the payee, and a check as well as any other negotiable instrument may be transferred in payment of an antecedent debt. Dan. Neg. Inst. 5th ed. §§ 184, 780; Walker v. Geisse, 33 Am. Dec. 60, note. See also note to Matlock v. Scheuerman, 17 L.R.A. (N.S.) 747.

The court did not err in sustaining the demurrer to the fifth paragraph of answer to the fifth paragraph of complaint. As to its sufficiency as an answer to the other paragraphs of complaint on which appellee had judgment we express no opinion, as the question is not presented.

By the fifth paragraph of the complaint and the other paragraphs on which the appellee had his verdict and judgment, he sued as a bona fide indorsee of the check, for value. The court gave a series of instructions applicable to this theory. It is contended that the evidence does not sustain the verdict on the issue presented. It appears from the testimony of the appellee and Hendricks that the latter presented the check to appellee, not as his own, to be sold for his own benefit, but, as Hendricks claimed in behalf of appellants, to secure a loan of money for sixty days, to use in their business; that appellee understood that he was making a loan to the appellants, and that he was taking the check as the evidence of it. This evidence fixes his relation to the check, and it is not that of an indorsee. He became the first holder,—in effect, the payee,—and manifestly cannot protect himself with the shield of a bona fide indorsee, but must meet such defenses as may be open to a drawer or maker against a payee. As the owner of the check, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Hendricks could have sold it to appellee for cash, could have exchanged it for anything else he pleased of whatever value, or could have paid with it an antecedent debt he owed appellee. Appellee would become a bona fide holder for value. On the other hand, if he took it to appellee merely as the agent of appellants, as the evidence of a loan which he was to secure for appellants from appellee, he could not use it or any part of the proceeds for his own profit in paying his debt to appellee, and make appellants liable to appellee therefor, for appellee would take it as payee, direct from appellants. Stainback v. Bank of Virginia, 11 Gratt. 269; Dowden v. Cryder, 55 N. J. L. 330, 26 Atl. 941; Merchants' & M. Nat. Bank v. Ohio Valley Furniture Co. 57 W. Va. 625, 70 L.R.A. 312, 50 S. E. 880; Stainer v. Tysen, 3 Hill, 279.

But the reason for disallowing defenses in such case is that there is privity of contract, and it may be said that there was not actual privity between appellee and appellants, so as to give him knowledge of the fraud involved. It may justly be answered that the circumstances were such as to charge him with constructive notice of it,—to require him to inquire into the transaction. That Hendricks was so anxious to raise money on the check for the appellants that he was willing to take a release and discharge of his own debt to appellee in a sum equal to one fourth of the amount of the check, without apparent authority from the drawers, was sufficient to require him to ascertain from them the facts. Their place of business was in the same city, where he could have readily reached them. If the agency of Hendricks existed, it was only to raise money on the check for his principals. It carried no implication of authority to deal with the check for his own profit. And the rule is that, if the agency of the party is made to appear, the principal will not be bound beyond the authority given. And where, as in this case, the party dealt with has notice that the other party is acting as agent in the transaction, he is bound to inquire into his authority. 1 Randolph. Com. Paper, 388. Having sued as an indorsee of the check, appellee cannot recover on evidence showing him to be the payee. Bixel v. Bixel, 107 Ind. 534, 8 N. E. 614; Smelser v. Wayne & U. Straight Line Twp. Co. 82 Ind. 417.

Questions are raised on instructions given and refused and on rulings on evidence which may not arise again, and they are not, therefore, considered.

Judgment reversed, with instructions to grant appellants a new trial.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

LENOIR COUNTY, Appt.,

v.

C. W. CRABTREE.

(158 N. C. 357, 74 S. E. 105.)

Estoppel — county commissioners — tolerating building.

1. Permitting a building to stand below high-water mark so as to interfere with the operation of a drawbridge for a period of fourteen months does not estop the county commissioners from requiring its removal.

Riparian rights — building below high-water mark — interference with bridge.

2. A riparian owner having a qualified title to the land between high and low water mark of a navigable river cannot place a building thereon in such a manner as to interfere with the free operation of a public drawbridge over the stream.

Bridge — action to prevent interference with — private instigation — effect.

3. That a rival merchant instigated the action of county commissioners to require the removal of a building which interferes with the free operation of a public drawbridge is no ground for interfering with such removal.

Action — party — county — removal of obstruction to bridge.

4. An action to compel removal of an obstruction to the operation of a county drawbridge is within a statute permitting actions to be brought in the name of the county.

(March 20, 1912.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Lenoir County in defendant's favor in a proceeding for a mandatory injunction to restrain defendant from maintaining a certain building alleged to interfere with the free operation of a public drawbridge. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. G. V. Cowper, for appellant:

The state has delegated to the commissioners the power and authority to build and maintain bridges, provided they comply with certain United States regulations, and this delegation of authority must necessarily carry the easements and rights vested in the state in lands between high and low water mark for the benefit of the public.

Gibson v. United States, 166 U. S. 271, 41 L. ed. 998, 17 Sup. Ct. Rep. 578; Sands v. Manistee River Improv. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 152, 8 Sup. Ct. Rep. 117; Hutton v. Webb. 124 N. C. 755, 59 L.R.A. 33, 33 S. E. 169; Hilger v. Chrisp, 98 Ark. 490, 136 S. W. 660; Champlain Stone & Sand Co. v. State, 66 Misc. 434, 123 N. Y. Supp. 546; Burke County v. Catawba Lumber Co. 115 N. C. 597, 20 S. E. 707, 847; Greenleaf v. Pasquotank County, 123 N. C. 34, 31 S. E. 264; Chilton v. Metcalf, 234 Mo. 27, 136 S. W. 701; Shreveport Cottonwood Co. v. Missouri Valley Bridge & I. Co. 90 Ark. 608, 117 S. W. 750; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Meadows, 56 Tex. Civ. App. 131, 120 S. W. 521; Ward v. Willis, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 183, 72 Am. Dec. 570; Shepard's Point Land Co. v. Atlantic Hotel, 132 N. C. 522, 61 L.R.A. 937, 44 S. E. 39; State v. Twiford, 136 N. C. 603, 48 S. E. 586; Escambia Land & Mfg. Co. v. Ferry Pass. Inspectors & Shippers Asso. 59 Fla. 239, 138 Am. St. Rep. 121, 52 So. 715.

The maintenance and operation of the bridge is a matter within the sound discretion of the board of commissioners, provided they do not oppress anyone, and they act in good faith.

Greenleaf v. Pasquotank County. 123 N. C. 34, 31 S. E. 264; Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244; Harrington v. King, 117 N. C. 117, 23 S. E. 92; Mathis v. Duplin County, 122 N. C. 416, 30 S. E. 23; Burke County v. Catawba Lumber Co. 115 N. C. 597, 20 S. E. 707, 847; 11 Cyc. 388, 404; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Goldsboro, 155 N. C. 356, 71 S. E. 514; State v. Parrott, 71 N. C. 311, 17 Am. Rep. 5; Gathman v. Chicago, 15 A. & E. Ann. Cas. 842, note.

Mr. E. R. Wooten, for appellee:

Defendant owns the land to the low-water mark at the place where his building is situated, and, until there is condemnation proceedings instituted, and the proper procedure had under the law, his property cannot be taken for public purposes.

State v. Eason, 114 N. C. 787, 23 L.R.A. 520, 41 Am. St. Rep. 811, 19 S. E. 88;

Note. — Interference by riparian owner with bridge.

No other case directly in point has been found. But in East Montpelier v. Wheelock, 70 Vt. 391, 41 Atl. 432, it is declared that when the lowering of the water in a dam is necessary to enable a town to perform its duty to repair a bridge, the town may, during proper operations, require the owner of the dam to cease obstructing the flow, and to allow the water to flow substantially as it was accustomed to flow at the time the owner's grantors obtained their grant from the state and acquired riparian rights. And from this it was held to follow that the owner was not entitled to recover for the consequent damage which he suffered.

As to the liability for damming back water of stream by bridge, see the note in 28 L.R.A.(N.S.) 156. L. A. W.

Broadnax v. Baker, 94 N. C. 675, 55 Am. Rep. 633; Phillips v. Postal Teleg. Cable Co. 130 N. C. 513, 89 Am. St. Rep. 868, 41 S. E. 1022; State v. Wolf, 112 N. C. 894, 17 S. E. 528; Stewart v. Frink, 94 N. C. 487, 55 Am. Rep. 618.

Clark, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a proceeding for mandatory injunction to prohibit the defendant from further maintaining or adding to a building which is built so near to a public bridge over the Neuse river as to prevent the draw therein from being operated except in one direction. For something over 100 years the county of Lenoir maintained a bridge across Neuse river, a navigable stream at that point. In 1884 the present bridge was built by the county about 15 feet from where the old bridge stood, and it was furnished with a modern drawbridge, which was constructed for the purpose of turning up or down stream as necessity might arise. There was a draw in the former bridge, but it does not appear whether or not it could be operated in both directions, nor is it material.

Revisal, § 1318(8), among other duties, imposed upon the county commissioners that of "providing draws in bridges where same may be necessary for the convenient passage of vessels," etc., and Revisal, § 2698, provides that the counties may erect bridges, and "shall by their board of commissioners provide and keep draws in all such bridges."

It is a matter which rests in the discretion of the county commissioners should they establish draws that turn both ways, certainly unless it were a clear abuse of their powers. Brodnax v. Groom, 64 N. C. 244. On the contrary, it is common knowledge that a draw should open both up and down stream, as on high water an emergency may require such to be done in safety to the navigation. The bridge or vessels might at times be endangered, or navigation seriously interfered with, if the draw could not be freely turned in either direction, especially in high water.

Though it is not expressly found by the judge, it appears from the admission in the defendant's brief, and is not denied in the evidence, that the building is partly at least, if not altogether, built on land between high and low water mark. The judge finds that it was put there within fourteen months before this action begun, and is so close to the bridge that the draw cannot be opened downstream. Indeed, the evidence shows, without contradiction, that the building extends within 2 feet of the bridge on the down side thereof.

By act of Congress the state can authorize bridges to be built over navigable streams wholly within the state, provided the plans are submitted to and approved by the War Department. As the plan of this bridge, built in 1884, provided a draw which opened both ways, it must have been so approved, and an obstruction making it less convenient for navigation without the approval of the War Department is doubtless indictable in the Federal court. Nor can its usefulness be impaired by obstructing its operation in any way without the consent also of the board of county commissioners. It might be inferred from his Honor's judgment that he was of opinion that the fact that the building has stood at that point for fourteen months without objection from the county commissioners was an estoppel upon the county. If so, this view is erroneous. In the recent case of Shelby v. Cleveland Mill & Power Co. 155 N. C. 196, 35 L.R.A.(N.S.) 488, 71 S. E. 218, Brown, J., says: "It is well settled that, unless by legislative enactment, no title can be acquired against the public by use alone, nor loss to the public by nonuser. Com. v. Moorehead, 118 Pa. 344, 4 Am. St. Rep. 601, 12 Atl. 424, and cases cited; 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, p. 1190. Public rights are never destroyed by long-continued encroachments or permissive trespasses."

The county commissioners, in many cases, might not have their attention called to an encroachment of this kind upon the public rights, or they might not be properly advised as to the injurious effect. Certainly the public cannot lose their rights by the want of vigilance in the temporary occupations of their office. There is no statute of limitations against the public from which a right can be presumed to have been granted by the county commissioners to the defendant to interfere with the use of the public property for his own use, which is the basis of a statute of limitations. Indeed, the statute expressly prohibits the application of the statute of limitations against the public by reason of such encroachment. Revisal, § 389.

The land between high and low water mark belongs to an individual only sub modo and subject to the superior right of the public to use it for all purposes incident to navigation. The erection of a bridge across a navigable stream with a draw of the most modern construction, opening both ways, is an incident of navigation which cannot be defeated by the erection of a building or other obstruction on such strip of land between high and low water mark, or so near to the bridge as to interfere with the free operation of the draw. Gould, Waters, § 151, and cases there cited. Land lying between low and high water mark is not subject to entry. Ward v. Willis, 51 N. C. (6 Jones, L.) 183, 72 Am. Dec. 570; Shepards' Point Land Co. v. Atlantic Hotel, 132 N. C. 522, 61 L.R.A. 937, 44 S. E. 39; State v. Twiford, 136 N. C. 609, 48 S. E. 586. At most, the occupant can have only an easement therein subject to the superior right of the public to the use of the stream for navigation, and, as here, for the incidental purpose of a bridge so constructed as to interfere the least with navigation.

The judge below dismissed the action upon the ground, as we understand it, that he knew of no law which required that a draw over a navigable stream should open both ways, that the building had been there for fourteen months without objection by the county commissioners, and because he was "firmly of the opinion that the owner of an opposition store inspired this action." The first two propositions we have discussed. As to the last, the action is brought in behalf of the county by its county commissioners, and it is immaterial whether an opposition storekeeper influenced the commissioners or not. They were discharging their duty in objecting to a longer interference with the free use of the bridge, which was provided with a double draw by their authority when the bridge was erected, and which had been approved, and was probably required, by the War Department. Nor is it a matter for consideration that to require the defendant to remove his house so as to allow the draw to be operated freely would be an expense to him. He placed his building there without authority of law and in derogation of the public right, and must suffer the consequences of an order to remove it.

This action is brought by "Lenoir county, who sues through the commissioners for the county of Lenoir." His Honor seems to have been of opinion that this was defective in that the action should have been brought by the board of commissioners, and expresses a doubt whether the defect was cured because no objection was taken by demurrer. Revisal, § 1309, constitutes every county a "body politic and corporate," and Revisal, § 1310, authorizes a county "to sue and be sued in the name of the county." We see no reason, therefore, why the action might not be brought simply in the name of "Lenoir county," as other actions have been brought to this court without objection. It is true that there are decisions that a county should be sued through its commissioners, but Judge Pell, in his notes to Revisal, § 1310, justly calls attention to the fact that the statute had since been amended. Even if it had not been, the designation of the plaintiff would have been sufficient in the absence of a demurrer raising objection thereto. The action was properly brought 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) on behalf of the county. Burke County v. Catawba Lumber Co. 115 N. C. 590, 20 S. E. 707, 847.

The order dismissing the action is set aside, and upon the facts found judgment should be entered requiring the defendant to remove the building within such reasonable time, and to such reasonable distance, as may be found just, upon investigation by the court below.

Reversed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

CECIL C. WILKERSON
v.

O. F. WILKERSON, Appt.

(— N. C. —, 74 S. E. 740.)

Malicious prosecution — nolle prosequi with leave — effect.

1. A nolle prosequi, with leave, after which the prosecution is never renewed, is sufficient termination of the proceeding to support an action for malicious prosecution.

Trial — malicious prosecution — probable cause — question for the court.

2. The question of what is probable cause

Note. — When is an action sufficiently at an end to support a suit for malicious prosecution.

The earlier cases upon this question are collected in a note to Graves v. Scott, 2 L.R.A.(N.S.) 927.

It has been held that a termination of the prosecution so as to support an action for malicious prosecution was effected:

—by dismissal by the prosecuting officer on the ground that defendant was a minor, acting under directions of her mother in committing the trespass charged. Rutherford v. Dyer, 146 Ala. 665, 40 So. 974;

—by a discharge of plaintiff upon the solicitor's motion to nolle prosequi the case. Snead v. Jones, 169 Ala. 143, 53 So. 188;

—by a discharge by the committing magistrate, it being unnecessary to show further an investigation and failure to indict by the grand jury. Stewart v. Blair, 171 Ala. 147, 54 So. 506;

—by a discharge of plaintiff by the justice of the peace on the ground that he had been arrested and paid a fine for the same offense before another justice. Donati v. Righetti, 9 Cal. App. 45, 97 Pac. 1128;

—by dismissal of the warrant by the court having jurisdiction on motion of the solicitor, in the absence of any showing that defendant had attempted to renew the prosecution. Josey v. Cochran, 9 Ga. App. 656, 72 S. E. 42;

—by dismissal of the prosecution on the same day that the suit for malicious prosecution was commenced, there being no presumption from this fact that the suit was in an action for malicious prosecution being one of law, the court must, in instructing the jury, point out what facts which the evidence tends to support would, if found to exist, constitute probable cause.

(April 24, 1912.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Durham County in plaintiff's favor in an action brought to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Crawford Biggs and Bramham & Brawley, for appellant:

A not pros. may be a sufficient determination.

Hatch v. Cohen, 84 N. C. 602, 37 Am. Rep. 630.

What is probable cause is a question of law for the court, and it was error for the court to leave the question to the jury under a general charge.

Jones v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 125 N. C. 230, 34 S. E. 398; Vickers v. Logan, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 394; Moore v. First Nat. Bank, 140 N. C. 303, 52 S. E. 944.

Messrs. Manning & Everett and Bryant & Brogden, for appellee:

The criminal action had been terminated, Marcus v. Bernstein, 117 N. C. 33, 23 S. E. 38.

There was not probable cause for the prosecution. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law. 2d ed. 607; Moore v. First Nat. Bank, 140 N. C. 303, 52 S. E. 944; Cabiness v. Martin, 14 N. C. (3 Dev. L.) 455; Beale v. Roberson, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 284; Smith v. Deaver, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 513.

Walker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action for malicious prosecution. The defendant had caused the arrest and prosecution of the plaintiff, who was not related to him, upon the charge of having feloniously stolen certain admission tickets belonging to him as proprietor of the Arcade Theater in Durham.

The criminal proceedings were brought before the recorder, and when the solicitor stated that he had not been able to examine the case, and the defendant insisted upon an immediate trial, a not pros., with leave, was entered at the suggestion of the recorder, in order to preserve the rights of the state, but the prosecution of the case was never renewed. It is now contended that this was not a sufficient determination of the proceeding to authorize the bringing of this suit. It was held, though, in Hatch v. Cohen, 84 N. C. 602, 37 Am. Rep. 630, and Marcus v. Bernstein, 117 N. C. 31, 23 S. E. 1.

commenced before the prosecution was terminated. Enright v. Gibson, 119 Ill. App. 411;

—by the discharge upon habeas corpus proceedings of one bound over to the grand jury by a magistrate. Millar v. Sollitt, 131 Ill. App. 196;

—by dismissal of the prosecution by the prosecuting attorney without any trial. Sasse v. Rogers, 40 Ind. App. 197, 81 N. E. 590;

—by a dismissal of the case and taxation of costs against the county. White v. International Text-Book Co. — Iowa, —, 136 N. W. 121;

—by discharge by the magistrate upon the merits, though the costs were paid by plaintiff upon being told that unless he did so he would have to go back to jail. Cascarella v. National Grocer Co. 151 Mich. 15, 114 N. W. 857;

—when the prosecution is terminated by procurement of defendant or agreement of the parties. Wickstrom v. Swanson, 107 Minn. 482, 120 N. W. 1090;

—by dismissal by the county attorney after an appeal to the district court, though no enforceable judgment was ever pronounced in the justice court, so that the statute of limitations ran from the date of such dismissal. Hackler v. Miller, 79 Neb. 209, 112 N. W. 303, 114 N. W. 274;

—by the charge against plaintiff being presented to the grand jury and being ignored by it. Weisner v. Hansen, 81 N. J. L. 601, 80 Atl. 455; 39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

—where plaintiff was arrested and arraigned and held in bail before a magistrate, and then discharged after one or two adjournments. McDonald v. National Art Co. 69 Misc. 325, 125 N. Y. Supp. 708;

—by refusal of the grand jury to indict plaintiff. Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Lester, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 110 S. W. 499;

—by dismissal, after several continuations, of an appeal to the county court from a conviction before a justice of the peace. Evans v. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. 105 Va. 72, 53 S. E. 3;

—by a discontinuance by defendants of the injunction suit alleged to have been commenced by them maliciously. Powell v. Woodbury, — Vt. —, 83 Atl. 541;

—by withdrawal of the charge in open court by the Crown attorney. Fancourt v. Heaven, 18 Ont. L. Rep. 492, 15 Ann. Cas. 153;

—where neither the witnesses, accused, nor constable appeared at place of hearing, in consequence of prosecutrix hearing of facts tending to exonerate the plaintiff: the costs being paid by the prosecutrix. Beemer v. Beemer, 9 Ont. L. Rep. 69, 4 Ont. Week. Rep. 540;

—by an abandonment of one charge and acquittal upon the other, of one charged with breaking and entering a house, and therein committing an indictable offense. Seary v. Saxton, 28 N. S. 278.

In McSwain v. Edge, 6 Ga. App. 9, 64 S. E. 116, the petition showed that a land-38, that a nolle prosequi is a legal determination of the original suit within the meaning of the law concerning malicious prosecution. But defendant contends that this rule does not apply to a nol. pros. with leave, as in the latter case the prosecution is kept on foot, or, in other words, is not ended. This, we think, is a misapprehension of the true reason upon which those cases were decided.

A nol. pros. in criminal proceedings is nothing but a declaration on the part of the solicitor that he will not at that time prosecute the suit farther. Its effect is to put the defendant without day; that is, he is discharged and permitted to go whithersoever he will, without entering into a recognizance to appear at any other time. It is not an acquittal, it is true, for he may afterwards be again indicted for the same offense, or fresh process may be issued against him upon the same indictment, and he be tried upon it. To prevent abuse the power of the solicitor to issue new process upon the same bill is checked and restrained by the fact that a capias, after a nol. pros., does not issue as a matter of course upon the mere will and pleasure of the officer, but only upon permission of the court, which will always see that its process is not abused to the oppression of the citizen. This was laid down as fully as we have stated it in State v. Thornton, 35 N. C. (13 Ired. L.) 256, and ever since has been considered to be the settled practice. The only difference between a general or unqualified nol. pros. and one "with leave" is that in the latter case the leave to issue a capias upon the same bill is given by the court in advance, instead of upon a special application made afterwards, State v. Smith, 129 N. C. 546, 40 S. E. 1. Referring to this kind of nol. pros., the court in State v. Smith, supra, said: "While we recognize the fact that the courts should control its process and see that it is not used to the oppression of the citizens of the state, it is also necessary to so use it as to bring offenders to trial and justice. If the court thinks proper to grant such leave at the time the nol. pros. is entered we do not see why it may not do so; and we do not feel like reversing a practice so universally adopted in the state." The suit is terminated as much by one form of entry as by the other, because in both the prisoner is discharged without day, and that seems to be the true test. In both he can be taken upon a fresh capias, in one by special order, and in the other under the general leave to issue. Our opinion is therefore against the defendant on this point.

lord maliciously took out a dispossessionary warrant and evicted his tenant, whose term had not expired, for the purpose of injuring and damaging the tenant; and it was held that upon the eviction being completed the dispossessionary action was ended so that an action for malicious prosecution thereof could be commenced.

And in Smith v. Clark, 37 Utah, 116, 26 L.R.A.(N.S.) 953, 106 Pac. 653, Ann. Cas. 1912 B, 1366, it is held that evidence of the discharge and dismissal of plaintiff by a magistrate without hearing is competent for the purpose of showing an unsuccessful termination of the prosecution.

However, in Halberstadt v. New York L. Ins. Co. 194 N. Y. 1, 21 L.R.A.(N.S.) 293, 86 N. E. 801, 16 Ann. Cas. 1102, affirming 125 App. Div. 830, 110 N. Y. Supp. 188, it was held there was no such termination of the prosecution as would support the action, where the prosecution was dismissed because accused fled from the jurisdiction before process could be served upon him, and remained away so that the prosecution could not be carried on.

In Gaiser v. Hurlleman, 74 Ohio St. 271, 113 Am. St. Rep. 953, 78 N. E. 372, where, on affidavit of defendant charging blackmailing, plaintiff was brought before a justice and held to answer the charge, and upon the evidence presented the grand jury returned an indictment for that offense and also returned an indictment for assault with intent to rob, based on the same transaction, it was held that quashing of the indictment for blackmailing did not amount to such a termination of the proceeding as would support an action for malicious prosecution, the indictment for assault with intent to rob being deemed a continuation of the proceeding commenced before the justice.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

In Hales v. Raines, 162 Mo. App. 46, 141 S. W. 917, where an involuntary nonsuit was taken in a civil action and another action subsequently commenced for the same cause, it was held that the second was such a continuation of the first as would prevent an action for malicious prosecution for the first suit.

In Baxter v. Gordon, I. & F. Co. 9 Ont. Week. Rep. 194, it is held that a mere release as a result of a compromise or agreement is not such a favorable termination of a prosecution as will support an action for malicious prosecution.

And a termination which will support an action for malicious prosecution is not shown by dismissal of the prosecution before a justice of the peace, for the purpose of recommencing it in the district court, and commencing it there the same day. Schipel v. Norton, 38 Kan. 567, 16 Pac. 804.

Nor is a release on habeas corpus a sufficient termination. McKinnon v. McLaughlin Carriage Co. 37 N. B. 3.

And a civil action will not be considered as determined so as to allow an action to be brought for its malicious prosecution while an appeal is pending. Griffith v. Ward, 20 U. C. Q. B. 31.

R. L. S.

But we think there is error in the charge of the court upon the question of probable cause. The court charged the jury as follows: "If you find from the evidence in this case, and by the greater weight thereof, that the defendant procured the arrest of the plaintiff on a charge of stealing tickets, and at the time the facts and circumstances were not such as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence reasonably to believe that such offense had been committed, and that the plaintiff was guilty of committing the offense, then there was not probable cause for the prosecution." The decisions of this and many other courts are to the effect that the judge must instruct the jury as to what facts, if found by them, will show that there was or was not probable cause. We have followed the ruling in the celebrated case of Johnstone v. Sutton, 1 T. R. 510, 545, 1 Bro. P. C. 76, 1 Revised Rep. 269, 1 Eng. Rul. Cas. 766, where it was held that the question of probable cause is a mixed proposition of law and fact. Whether the circumstances alleged to show the cause to be probable or not probable are true and existed is a matter of fact; but whether, supposing them to be true, they amount to a probable cause, is a question of law, and upon this distinction, Lord Mansfield said, proceeded the case of Reynolds v. Kennedy, 1 Wils. K. B. 232. This case was approved in Stewart v. Sonneborn, 98 U. S. 187, 25 L. ed. 116.

Following the rule of Johnstone v. Sutton, supra, this court decided, in Plummer v. Gheen, 10 N. C. (3 Hawks) 66, 14 Am. Dec. 572, that the parties are entitled to the opinion of the court upon the facts as they may be found by the jury, as to whether there was probable cause or not; and Chief Justice Taylor said: "As the question of probable cause is compounded of law and fact, the defendant had a right to the opinion of the court distinctly on the law, on the supposition that he had established, to the satisfaction of the jury, certain facts. Whether the circumstances were true was a question for the jury. Whether, being true, they amounted to probable cause, is a question of law." In the later case of Beale v. Roberson, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 280, the court said: "This case brings up again the question whether probable cause is a matter of law, so as to make it the duty of the court to direct the jury that if they find certain facts upon the evidence, or draw from them certain other inferences of fact, there is or is not probable cause; thus leaving the questions of fact to the jury, and keeping their effect, in point of reason, for the decision of the court, as a matter of law. Upon that question, the opinion of the court is in the affirmative, and therefore this judgment must be reversed." The court then reviewed the authorities, and thus commented upon them, and established the rule as we have stated it: "Such a series of decisions in our own courts the same way would protect the doctrine laid down in them from being drawn into debate now, even if we entertained doubts of its correctness originally. But, independent of authority, our reflections satisfy us that the principle is perfectly sound. It is a question of reason whether certain ascertained facts and circumstances constitute a probable and rational ground for charging a particular person with crime." And after remarking that it is not the prosecutor's belief of the other's guilt which will excuse him, for he must take care that he acts only on a reasonable belief, a just suspicion, the court further said: "Now our inquiry is whether for the determination of the question as to the sufficiency or the insufficiency of the grounds of suspicion, supposing them to exist in fact, the court or the jury be the more competent; and we think, very clearly, that the court is, because it is a question of general and legal reasoning, and can best be performed by those whose professional province and habit it is to discuss, weigh, and decide on legal presumptions. The only argument against that is the difficulty in cases of many and complicated facts, and contradictory evidence, as in Plummer v. Gheen, of properly separating, to the comprehension of the jury and to the satisfaction of the judge, the matters of law and fact. But that only proves the difficulty of deciding such cases, whether by the court or jury, and does not at all help us in saying whether this or that point should be decided by the one or the other." The court, therefore, held upon the added authority of Panton v. Williams, 2 Q. B. 169, that "in an action of this sort . . . the judge must determine whether the facts, if proved, or any of them, constitute such cause, leaving it to the jury to decide only whether the facts or those inferred from them exist: and as that is so when the facts are few and the case simple, it cannot be otherwise when the facts are numerous and complicated. It would seem, then, that making a question on this subject must be regarded as an attempt to move fixed things, and cannot be successful either in England or here. As the case goes back to another trial, on which the facts may appear differently, we think it unnecessary to consider those that came out on the former trial, in reference to the question of probable cause, further than to remark that few cases perhaps could better illustrate the danger of leaving that question to the discretion of a jury, whose decision of it is not susceptible of review in another court." This has been considered as the leading case upon the subject, and has been followed in all subsequent cases, as stating the law correctly. The instruction in Beale v. Robertson was substantially like that given in this case, and was held to be erroneous.

The following more recent cases assert the same doctrine, and approve Beale v. Robertson; Swain v. Stafford, 26 N. C. (4 Ired. L.) 392; Vickers v. Logan, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 393; Bradley v. Morris, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 395, and Jones v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 125 N. C. 227, 34 S. E. 398, which is directly in point. In Smith v. Deaver, 49 N. C. (4 Jones, L.) 514, Judge Battle thus sums up the matter: "What is probable cause is a question of law, to be decided by the court upon the facts, as they may be found by the jury. Beale v. Robertson, 29 N. C. (7 Ired. L.) 280; Vickers v. Logan, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 393. As a guide to the court, it is defined to be 'the existence of circumstances and facts sufficiently strong to excite, in a reasonable mind, suspicion that the person charged with having been guilty was guilty.' It is a case of apparent guilt as contradistinguished from real guilt. It is not essential that there should be positive evidence at the time the action is commenced, but the guilt should be so apparent at the time as would be sufficient ground to induce a rational and prudent man who duly regards the rights of others as well as his own to institute a prosecution; not that he knows the facts necessary to insure a conviction, but that there are known to him sufficient grounds to suspect that the person he charges was guilty of the offense." The cases of Brooks v. Jones, 33 N. C. (11 Ired. L.) 261; Kelly v. Durnham, Traction Co. 132 N. C. 372, 43 S. E. 923, and Downing v. Stone, 152 N. C. 527, 136 Am. St. Rep. 841, 63 S. E. 9, 21 Ann. Cas. 753, cited by plaintiff's counsel, do not sustain the instruction. The court in those cases was dealing with a question of malice. In Downing v. Stone, supra, Justice Hoke applies the rule as we have stated it when he says: "Where it is proven that legal advice was taken by a prosecutor, this, too, is a relevant circumstance in connection with other facts, admitted or established, to be considered by the court in determining the question of probable cause. Morgan v. Stewart, 144 N. C. 424, 57 S. E. 149; Pittsburg, J. E. & E. R. Co. v. Wakefield Hardware Co. 143 N. C. 58, 55 S. E. 422." He expressly adopts the rule in Morgan v. Stewart, supra, in the following words, citing the cases: "It is accepted doctrine with us that on facts admitted or established the question of probable cause is one of law for the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

court. Jones v. Wilmington & W. R. Co. 125 N. C. 229, 34 S. E. 398; Bradley v. Morris, 44 N. C. (Busbee, L.) 395; Swain v. Stafford, 26 N. C. (4 Ired. L.) 392. See also Newell Malicious Prosecution, §§ 276, 277; 16 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law 2d ed. p. 689. Unless we overrule the many cases which have been decided by us and have settled the rule, we must hold that the judge's instruction was insufficient, and left to the jury to decide what he should have decided for them; that is, whether upon any given state of facts, which may have been found by the jury, there was or was not probable cause. As it is, the jury were only required to apply a definition of probable cause to the facts, without any opinion of the court to guide them, as to how the law considered the different phases of the evidence. This was a clear violation of the rule, if we are to adhere to it. We think there was evidence for the jury to consider as to whether there was probable cause or not. The facts are not complicated, but simple, and it should not be difficult to arrange them so as to inform the jury clearly upon the law. This error of the court requires us to remand the case for a new trial. We will add that, in our opinion, there was no positive error in the charge upon the question of damages, although it was not as full and explicit as it might have been. We do not understand the charge to mean that plaintiff can recover punitive damages upon proof of general malice, such as would be sufficient to establish liability, but only upon proof of particular or actual malice, as defined in the cases. See Stanford v. A. F. Messick Grocery Co. 143 N. C. 419, 55 S. E. 815, where this question is discussed.

New trial.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

CLEVELAND TERMINAL & VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

STATE OF OHIO EX REL WADE H. EL-LIS, Attorney General.

(85 Ohio St. 251, 97 N. E. 967.)

State — grant — revocation.

1. In conducting transactions with respect to its lands, the state acts in a proprietary, and not in a sovereign, capacity, and, being Headnotes by SHAUCK, J.

Note. — No other cases have been found passing upon the right of the state to revoke a grant of land made for a consideration, in the absence of mistake or fraud or amenable to all the rules of justice which it prescribes for the conduct of its citizens, it will not be permitted to revoke a grant of lands made upon a valuable consideration which it retains.

Vendor and purchaser — municipality — use — revocation.

2. When land is granted to a city upon a valuable consideration, to be used for streets and other purposes, the title will not, in the absence of an express stipulation to that end, revert in the grantor because the land is subsequently used for street and railroad purposes.

Municipal corporation — lease of lands — railroad purposes.

3. When the governor, in the exercise of authority expressly conferred upon him by statute, grants to a municipality "all the interest of the state" in lands which it owns in fee to be used for streets and other purposes, the municipality, reserving the right to use the same for street purposes without compensation, may execute a valid lease of such lands to a railroad company for its general purposes.

(Spear, J., dissents.)

(January 16, 1912.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Franklin County to review a judgment ousting defendants from the further exercise of their alleged right of occupation for railroad purposes of certain lands which had formerly been a part of the canal system of the state. Reversed.

Statement by Shauck, J.:

The state, on relation of the attorney general, filed its petition in quo warranto on September 12, 1908, in the circuit court of Franklin county, to oust the plaintiffs in error from the further exercise of the alleged right to maintain their tracks, etc., on certain lands in the city of Cleveland, which had formerly been a part of the canal system of the state.

The petition alleged the corporate character of the two railway companies. That on and prior to the 29th day of April, 1872, the state was the owner in fee and in possession of the premises described, being a strip of land averaging about 100 feet in width, and being about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in length in the city of Cleveland. That on that day the general assembly passed an act (69 Ohio Laws, p. 182) entitled, "An Act to Authorize the City of Cleveland to Enter upon and Occupy a Part of the Ohio Canal." In substance the 1st section enacts that the city shall be authorized "to take, enter upon, improve, and occupy as a public highway, or for other purposes, and for laying therein gas and water pipes, and for sewerage purposes, as the city council of said city may determine," the strip described, "but said grant shall be made subject to all outstanding rights or claims, if any, with which it may be in conflict."

The 2d section provides: "Sec. 2. That said city of Cleveland shall be liable for all damages that may accrue from the vacation and abandonment of so much of said canal as shall be taken by said city; but nothing herein shall relieve the lessees of said canal, or their assigns, from any responsibilities imposed upon them by law, or in any way arising from the instrument or instruments of lease held by them and executed pursuant to any law of the state of Ohio, except as and to the extent of so much of said canal as shall be by said city taken and occupied under the grant herein authorized. Any person, persons, or corporation, including the lessees of said canal, who may claim damages by reason of the vacation or abandonment of any part of said canal, shall file their claim therefor in writing with the clerk of said city of Cleveland, within one year after the expiration of the time required for the publication of the notice hereinafter required, and for the purpose of ascertaining whether any of the claims so filed are valid against the state, and if so, for the purpose of ascertaining the amount thereof; the lessees of said canal, or any other person or party filing such claim, are hereby authorized and empowered to bring an action in the court of common pleas of Cuyahoga, Portage, or Franklin county, Ohio, against said city of Cleveland, and said action shall be conducted in all respects to final judgment, as other civil actions in cases between private individuals, and either party shall have the right to second trial, and appeal from the judgment and order of the said court of common pleas, and prosecute writs of error as provided for in suits between individuals under the act to establish a Code of Civil Procedure, passed March 11, 1853, or any act supplementary thereto.

"Whenever the city council of said city, by a vote of not less than two thirds of the whole number of members thereof, shall decide to take and use so much of said canal as is herein authorized, the said council failure to take some step necessary to complete title to the land.

The rule concerning suits by states, however, is that when a state voluntarily comes into court and invokes its aid in a matter not touching its sovereignty, it is bound by 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

the same rules concerning the administration of justice as a private person, with the exception that it cannot be made defendant to a cross action concerning a matter not connected with that involved in the principal suit. 36 Cyc. 907, 910. R. L. S.

shall publish notice thereof, as required by § 563 of the act to provide for the organization and government of municipal corporations, passed May 7, 1869, and shall also make known their said decision to the governor of the state, and shall deposit with the governor a written release executed by the lessees of the public works, relinquishing any rights they may have in that part of said canal proposed to be taken and occupied by said city, or a bond duly executed and to the satisfaction of the governor, indemnifying the state from all liabilities and damages which may result from said vacation, and shall in like manner deposit a bond securing the performance of an agreement on the part of said city, to be also filed with the governor; that before said city shall take possession of said part of said canal; or disturb the use thereof, for canal purposes, the said city shall, at its expense and under the direction of the board of public works, connect said canal with the Cuyahoga river at or near the southerly terminus of that portion to be occupied by said city, procure the right of way, unless the same shall be owned by the state, at the desired locality, make the necessary excavations, embankments, walls, gates, and locks, needed to connect said canal with said river at the point aforesaid, and remove the present weightlock to such place as shall be determined by the board of public works; said city shall have the power, and shall provide by ordinance, to regulate and prescribe the rate to be charged by tugboats for towing boats and floats navigating the Ohio canal, to and from the locks at the intersection with the Cuyahoga river, to the wharves, docks, or any point on said river, where said boats or floats may desire to discharge or receive freight, which rate shall be graduated according to distance, and shall in no case exceed $2.50 for each trip; said city having the right to appropriate to its own use the gates, locks, and material taken from that portion of the canal taken by said city; provided, the said city of Cleveland shall forever, or so long as the Ohio canal shall be used for the purpose of navigation, keep the channel of the Cuyahoga river, by dredging or otherwise, in good navigable order, for any boats that may now or hereafter be employed in navigating said canal, from the point of intersection to Lake Erie, and thereupon the governor, on behalf of the state, being satisfied that said connection has so been made and approved and accepted by the board of public works, shall execute and deliver to the city of Cleveland a grant of all the interest of the state in that part of said Ohio canal herein described, to be forever used and occupied by said city, as its counsel shall determine, for any or all of the purposes before mentioned. The attorney general shall prepare the form of said grant, also the form of the release, bonds, and agreement herein named.
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

"Sec. 4. This act shall take effect on its passage."

That pursuant to the provisions of said act, the governor of the state did, on the 31st of October, 1879, execute and deliver to the city of Cleveland a deed granting to it the right to use and occupy said lands, as its council should determine, for any and all of the purposes mentioned, upon the terms and conditions of said act. The petition exhibits the deed, in which the governor recites that, by virtue of authority vested in him by the act of April 29, 1872, to authorize the city of Cleveland to enter upon and occupy a part of the Ohio canal, he did, for "divers good and sufficient causes and considerations hereinafter named, give, grant, and forever quitclaim unto the city of Cleveland, and its assigns, all the right, title, and interest in the state of Ohio, in all that part of the Ohio canal," etc., describing the strip in controversy. This release upon the part of the state is made for and in consideration of the faithful and entire performance on the part of said city of all and singular the conditions and stipulations of said act of the general assembly, and of the directions and requirements of the board of public works and of the state of Ohio as set forth in the minutes of said board, accepting and approving of said work agreeably to the provisions of said act; said property as herein transferred to be held and forever used and occupied or disposed of by said city in whatever way the council of said city have determined or may hereafter determine.

The petition further alleges the acceptance of said grant by the city of Cleveland, and that on the 26th of October, 1875, the city entered into a contract with the Valley Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Ohio, for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad with its northern terminus in the city of Cleveland and its other terminus at Bowerstown, Harrison county, Ohio, by which contract said city agreed that it would execute to said company a lease of all the lands granted to it by the said act of April 29, 1872, as soon as title to said lands should be conveyed to the city by the state; that on the 24th of March, 1879, the city authorized its mayor and city solicitor to obtain title to said lands and to arrange for the lease thereof to the Valley Railway Company, stipulating that, upon the requirement of said title and the preparation of said lease, the mayor should notify the railway company that the city is ready to execute the lease upon the delivery by said company to the city of $265,000 gold-bearing bonds in accordance with the original contract, provided further that said Valley Railway Company should agree, subject to forfeiture of said lease if not complied with, that said railroad shall be completed from the city of Cleveland to the city of Canton not later than September 1, 1879. It further alleged the actual execution of said lease pursuant to the direction of the city, and upon compliance with the general terms of the preceding arrangement, upon the condition that the said lessee should perform all the stipulations incumbent upon the city; the city also reserving the right to construct a bridge across the canal bed to Canal street and the ground necessary therefor.

It was further stipulated that the lessee should use said lands for its railway purposes, and upon failure to so continue, the lease should become void at the option of the city. By the terms of said lease the city also reserves to itself the right to lay in or under said land all gas, water, or other pipes used in any city improvement, construct sewers upon said land or across the same whenever in its judgment it should be necessary, and the right to open or extend streets across said lands and tracks thereon of such width as it might determine without making any compensation therefor, and it was further stipulated that the lessee should pay all state, county, and city taxes, and all special assessments levied upon said land, and that a failure to do so should operate as a forfeiture of the lease. It also contained the following stipulation: "And it is hereby expressly understood and agreed that in case there is hereafter any failure in said title to the lands hereby leased, or in the authority of said city to lease the same for the purposes herein stated, the said city shall not be liable to said company for any damages caused by said failure." Through said lease the Valley Railway Company took possession of said lands and occupied the same throughout its entire length by means of tracks, side tracks, switches, depots, etc., in the operation of its road.

The petition further alleges that by a judicial sale the property of said Valley Railway Company, including the premises aforesaid, was conveyed to trustees by whom it was subsequently conveyed to the plaintiff in error the Cleveland Terminal & Valley Railway Company, by which latter company the aforesaid occupation of said premises continues until the filing of the petition. The petition also alleges that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, plaintiff 39 L.R.A.(N.S.) in error, owns a majority of the common and preferred stock in the Terminal Valley Railway Company; that the city of Cleveland has never occupied as public highways any portion of said premises, except two strips 20 feet in width; that the city of Cleveland by reason of its failure to use said lands, and by reason of said pretended lease to the Valley Railway Company, has forfeited all rights under said act and the governor's deed in pursuance thereto. It further alleges that the city was without authority to grant any of said rights or privileges to the Valley Railway Company, and that the said railway company, by reason of its exercise of the same, is now, and has been since 1895, usurping and unlawfully exercising and using rights, privileges, and franchises in violation of the rights of the state of Ohio, and in contravention of law, and that the said Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, by reason of the facts aforesaid, is guilty of a like usurpation.

To this petition plaintiffs in error demurred specially because of want of jurisdiction of the subject-matter by the court; because of the defect of parties defendant, it appearing from the petition that the city of Cleveland should be made a party; because the franchises challenged have been exercised for more than twenty years before the action was brought, and generally because the petition did not state a cause of action. The circuit court overruled the demurrer. Thereupon the defendants filed separate answers containing substantially like averments. They admitted the passage of the act of April 29, 1872, the execution of the deed by the governor, the contract between the city of Cleveland and the Valley Railway Company, the passage of the various resolutions by the city, and the alleged action of the mayor with respect to the execution of the lease to the Valley Railway Company; that the lease was in terms as set out in the petition, the erection of its railroad tracks, etc., upon the premises described, the succession of the defendant railways to the rights of the Valley Railway Company as alleged in the petition, and their continued occupancy of the premises, and denying all other allegations of the petition.

The answers then allege numerous acts out of which it is alleged estoppels arise against the prosecution of this suit by the state. The first of these is contained in the second defense, and it is a legal estoppel arising out of the passage by the general assembly of the act of April 29, 1872, and the governor's deed executed in pursuance thereof, whereby it is alleged the fee simple title in the land described was conveyed to the city of Cleveland and its assigns, and thence by it to the railway company, whereof the state is estopped to maintain the action. In the remaining defense are alleged numerous acts out of which equitable estoppels are alleged to arise against the prosecution of this action by the state. Stated in a somewhat condensed form, they are: The contemporaneous interpretation of the said act of April 29, 1872, by all of the parties, whereby the state, with knowledge, acquiesced in the interpretation thereof put upon the act by the city of Cleveland and the railway companies; the city at its own expense, upon that construction, expended large sums of money under the direction of the board of public works, and paying all claims presented for damages by reason of the vacation and abandonment of that portion of the canal land described in the petition connecting the Ohio canal with the Cuyahoga river, and in making necessary excavations, embankments, walls, gates, and locks in connecting said canal with the river at the designated point further south; the removing of the weighlocks then standing to the place determined by the board of public works, and performing all and singular the conditions imposed upon the city by said act; and that the state by its acquiescence therein, with knowledge thereof, and its acceptance of, and its constant use from that date to this of, the substituted connection with the Cuyahoga river, being the benefits resulting to the state from said act so performed, is also estopped. Further that the state, with full knowledge, acquiesced in the expenditure of large sums of money by the railway company, and that the city of Cleveland and the railway companies were in all respects acting upon the assumption and understanding that said deed conveyed to the city a title in fee to said premises; that possession was taken under said instruments, large sums of money were expended in construction, the Valley Railway Company executing to the city of Cleveland its mortgage gold bonds in the sum of $265,000, which bonds were afterward paid by the railway company. Further, by way of equitable estoppel, it is alleged that disputes having arisen as to the precise boundaries of the said premises, the general assembly, with full knowledge thereof, and with full knowledge that all of the adversary parties were in good faith acting upon the belief that a title in fee had been conveyed to the city, passed an act entitled, "An Act to provide for the Boundaries of the Bed of the Part of the Ohio Canal which has been Abandoned and Conveyed to the City of Cleveland;" the act being as follows:

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the court 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of common pleas of the county of Cuyahoga shall, upon application of the city solicitor of Cleveland, appoint a commission consisting of not less than three nor more than five suitable persons, who shall at once proceed to survey and determine the boundaries of the land formerly owned by the state for the purpose of said canal before its abandonment; and to mark the same by proper monuments, and to make maps and plats of the said land, with necessary descriptions, to be preserved as hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 2. Said commissioners, in the performance of their duties as such, shall be governed in all respects in accordance with law describing the duties of country surveyors, as laid down in §§ 1187-1189 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, and upon the completion of their work they shall deliver their report, with all the evidence taken, to the country surveyor, who shall forthwith dispose thereof as directed in cases of surveys made and evidence taken by law under the requirements of 1190 of said statutes, as amended April 20, 1881, and the legal effect and use of such plat, survey, and deposition shall be governed as the effect and use of the plat, survey, and depositions are governed by the provisions of § 1191 of said statutes, as amended April 20, 1881.

"Sec. 3. All costs and expenses of these proceedings, including the compensation of said commissioners, shall, after allowance by said court of common pleas, be paid by the person or persons or corporation at whose instance or request said proceedings were instituted by the said city solicitor, and the payment of the same shall be secured by a good and sufficient bond to said city by such person, persons, or corporation, to the acceptance of the city council of said city; provided, however, that all costs made by the taking of said case or proceedings, or any part thereof, to the district or supreme courts, shall be taxed and paid as the court may direct.

"Sec. 4. This act shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage." 79 Ohio Laws, p. 105.

This act was passed with full knowledge on the part of the state of the execution of the lease aforesaid, and that possession had been taken by the railway company thereunder, and it had constructed thereon its railroad tracks, switches, and depots, and in the belief that the city had full authority to execute the lease therefor; that pursuant to the passage of the last-mentioned act, and for the purpose of settling the boundaries of said strip, the city solicitor of the city of Cleveland, the railroad company having indemnified it as the act required, applied to the court of common pleas for the exercise of power conferred by said act, and expended large sums of money; and that that act was an assurance to the city of Cleveland and the railway company that the state claimed no title to, or interest in, said land, but admitted that they were adversely held by title in fee; that thereafter general taxes and excise were paid by the original defendants to the state, county, township, and city, upon the basis of the ownership thereof in fee; and that the state, with like knowledge, acquiesce in the payment of large sums of money by the railway companies in the improvement of their said properties, in the purchase, transfer of title by judicial decree through trustees aforesaid, under the statutes of the state, to the Terminal Valley Railway Company; that upon the execution of said deed in conformity with the understanding between said state and the city and the plaintiff in error, the state immediately abandoned that portion of its canal. The answer further alleges that on the 30th of March, 1896, the general assembly passed the following joint resolution: "Joint resolution. Concerning the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the ownership of certain property. Whereas, the Ohio Canal Commission, in their last annual report, make the claim that the Valley Railway Company is illegally in possession of valuable state property in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, therefore, be it resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that a select committee of three members on the part of the house, and three on the part of the senate, be appointed, to thoroughly investigate the claims of the state, and report at their earliest convenience all the facts pertaining thereto, together with such recommendation as will in their judgment enable the state to secure said property, should it be found that the state has any interest therein."

That, pursuant to said joint resolution, a select committee was appointed, which upon investigation reported that the railway company was not occupying any land in the city of Cleveland which belongs to the state; that it occupied that portion of the Ohio canal which was granted to the city of Cleveland under an act passed April 29, 1872, entitled, "An Act to Authorize the City of Cleveland to Enter upon," etc.; that the Cleveland Terminal & Valley Railway Company since that date had occupied, and is now in the possession of, said land; that at the time of the passage of said act, it was understood and contemplated by the city that said lands were to be leased by said city to the Valley Railway Company, and that said act was designed and intended to, and in fact did, authorize the conveyance to said city of the entire interest of the state of Ohio therein, upon the performance by said city of certain conditions named in said act, which said city fully performed prior to October 31, 1879, expending in so doing upwards of the sum of $280,000. The committee further reported that the governor had executed a deed to the city of Cleveland in pursuance of the authority conferred upon him by said act. That the city had leased the lands to the Valley Railway Company for a period of ninety-nine years, receiving as a consideration therefor $265,000, first mortgage bonds, principal and interest of which have been fully paid, and concluding: "Your committee therefore finds that the state of Ohio has no interest whatsoever in said lands; that the absolute fee therefore is vested in the city of Cleveland, and that the occupation of the same by the Valley Railway Company, as tenants of said city, was and is lawful, and not in contravention of any right or interest of the state of Ohio. Your committee therefore respectively recommends the adoption of a joint resolution for the purpose of forever quieting the title of the city of Cleveland in and to said lands." Thereupon, on the 23d day of April, 1896, the general assembly passed the following joint resolution: "Joint Resolution. Ratifying deed given by Ex-Governor Bishop to the city of Cleveland for certain canal land. Be it resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the deed from Richard M. Bishop, governor of the state of Ohio, to the city of Cleveland, dated October 31, 1879, executed in pursuance of an act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio, passed April 29, 1872, entitled, 'An Act to Authorize the City of Cleveland to Enter upon and Occupy a Part of the Ohio Canal,' be and the same is hereby ratified, confirmed, and approved as a deed in fee simple conveying all the interests of the state of Ohio in and to said lands. And the state of Ohio hereby disclaims any interests whatsoever in said lands."

The answer further alleges that, after the passage of said joint resolution, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company purchased a large amount of the stock of the Cleveland Terminal & Valley Railway Company, and advanced large sums of money to that company by way of loans, which was used in the construction of tracks, etc., adapting said premises more fully to railroad purposes; and in like reliance citizens of Cleveland and corporations operating in the city had made improvements on land adjacent to said real estate, as aforesaid, in contemplation of its use for railroad purposes, and upon reliance of the acquiescence of said state therein; that by the passage of said joint resolution, the state of Ohio elected to waive, and did waive, irrevocably any and all right which it might theretofore have had to object to the execution by the governor of his deed of October 31, 1879, as well as to the execution by the city of Cleveland of the lease, and to the exercise of the railway companies of the things of which complaint is made in the petition. The answer further pleads that the action is barred by § 6789, Revised Statutes, and that the construction of the act of the legislature prayed for in the petition would result in the impairment of contracts and in taking of property of the defendant companies without due process of law.

To these answers demurrers were interposed in the circuit court. The demurrers were sustained, and a judgment of ouster entered in conformity with the prayer of the original petition. The railway companies prosecute the petition in error here for the reversal of said judgment.

Messrs. Kline, Tolles, & Morley, F. A. Durban, and Robert J. King for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. John A. Alburn, Frank Davis, Jr., and David K. Watson, with Mr. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney General, for defendant in error:

Since it is admitted that the state was the owner in fee of those lands on April 29, 1872, it must be presumed that the state continues as owner in fee, unless the state has clearly and unequivocally parted with all its title to such lands.

1 Cooley, Const. Lim. 7th ed. 565; Blair v. Chicago, 201 U. S. 400, 50 L. ed. 801, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 427; Cleveland Electric R. Co. v. Cleveland, 204 U. S. 116, 51 L. ed. 399, 27 Sup. Ct. Rep. 202; Perrine v. Chesapeake & D. Canal Co. 9 How. 172, 13 L. ed. 92; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Canal Comrs. 21 Pa. 22; New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 34 La. Ann. 429.

The act of 1872 granted only a privilege, permit, or license to the city of Cleveland, giving the city authority to use these lands, but not a title in the lands.

State ex rel. Richards v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 53 Ohio St. 189, 41 N. E. 205; Morrill v. Mackman, 24 Mich. 282, 9 Am. Rep. 124; Stewart v. Cincinnati, W. & M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 315, 17 L.R.A. 539, 50 N. W. 852; Smith v. Cheyenne, 3 Wyo. 513, 31 Am. St. Rep. 122, 27 Pac. 807; Cook v. Stearns, 11 Mass. 533; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72; Clark v. Glidden, 60 Vt. 702, 15 Atl. 358; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 398; Rodefer v. Pittsburg, O. V. & C. R. Co. 72 Ohio St. 281, 70 L.R.A. 844, 74 N. E. 183; Yeager v. Tuning, 79 Ohio St. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

124, 19 L.R.A. (N.S.) 700, 128 Am. St. Rep. 679, 86 N. E. 657; 25 Cyc. 640; Fowler v. Delaplain, 79 Ohio St. 286, 21 L.R.A. (N.S.) 100, 87 N. E. 280; Malone v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 655, 34 Ohio St. 541; State v. Snook, 53 Ohio St. 521, 42 N. E. 544; State v. Griffner, 61 Ohio St. 201, 55 N. E. 612; Miller v. Wisenberger, 61 Ohio St. 583, 56 N. E. 454.

When the city of Cleveland transferred the land to the railroad company to be used for the purpose of a railroad, it permitted the use of the land for a purpose which thwarted and defeated the purpose for which the land was conveyed to the city of Cleveland.

Amos v. State, 73 Ala. 501; Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 41 L.R.A. 196, 32 Pac. 659; Shepherd v. Helmers, 23 Kan. 508; Ryerson v. Utley, 16 Mich. 277.

Shauck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Notwithstanding obvious and important differences between the case here presented, and that which was presented in State ex rel. Richards v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. 53 Ohio St. 189, 41 N. E. 205, some propositions which are material here, and which might otherwise be regarded as doubtful, are determined in that case. Conclusions material to this case which are settled in that and in other cases, and statutory provisions cited in the briefs of counsel, may be stated without argument as being no longer open for discussion. Their statement will conduct us to the points in the present case entitled to further consideration. The propositions to be taken as established are: The state became the owner in fee of all the lands, which it originally used in the construction of its canal system, including the lands in controversy. Quo warranto will lie to protect the interest of the state in lands so acquired. The circuit court of Franklin county had jurisdiction of the subject of the action. No limitation bars the action, since it does not seek the forfeiture of a charter, or to prevent the exercise of a power or franchise under its charter. The statutes of the state empower the attorney general to make this relation without further authorization. To test the rights asserted by the railway companies under the lease from the city of Cleveland, it is not necessary that the city be joined as a party, and the deed of the governor to the city of Cleveland is valid and effective only so far as it is authorized by the act of April 29, 1872 (69 Ohio Laws, p. 182), or ratified by subsequent acts of the state.

The case cited (State ex rel. Richards v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co.) presents not only points of resemblance, but points of difference, which are of not less legal importance. That case affirmed the authority of the state by a proceeding in quo warranto to preserve and protect an interest which it retained in lands, notwithstanding its previous grant of a mere easement. It is no authority whatever for the statement that such an action may be maintained in a case where the state has no interest whatever to protect; and it leaves the question of the state's interest in the present case wholly unaffected. In the present case the grant in controversy was upon a valuable consideration; in the former case it was upon no consideration whatever. In that case nothing was granted but an easement. In the present case the act of the general assembly provided that "the governor on behalf of the state, being satisfied that said connection has been so made and approved and accepted by the board of public works, shall execute and deliver to the city of Cleveland a grant of all the interest of the state in that part of said Ohio canal herein described, to be forever used and occupied by said city, as its council shall determine, for any and all the purposes before mentioned." And the governor, in the exercise of the powers so conferred upon him, did "give, grant, and forever quitclaim unto the city of Cleveland and its assigns, all the right, title, and interest of the state of Ohio" in that part of the canal. In the case cited the city of Cincinnati vacated and abandoned Pearl street, which was a prominent portion of the grant; whereas, here the city has reserved the right to cross the premises leased to the railway company for such streets as it may desire to establish, without the payment of compensation therefor, and it is continuing in the exercise of that right. In that case nothing occurred after the making of the grant whereby the state could be said to be estopped from the assertion of the rights which it claimed, except the legal estoppel arising from its deed and the enactment by which it was supposed to be authorized; whereas, here are numerous acts out of which, by familiar doctrines of equity, estoppels arise against the prosecution of this action by the state, if equitable estoppels may be pleaded against the sovereign.

Moreover, the obvious attempt of the general assembly by a joint resolution to determine the present controversy in accordance with the claim of the plaintiffs in error presents an aspect of the case that was not there present. It should not need the citation of authorities to establish the proposition that a joint resolution is not an act of legislation, and that it cannot be 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

effective for any purpose for which an exercise of legislative power is necessary, and if a revesting of the title to these lands in the state had occurred by reason of the transactions between the city and the railway companies, it should be conceded that the exercise of legislative power would be necessary to waive the right so revesting. But the action of the legislature in the appointment of a committee to consider and report on the subject of the present controversy, the consideration given to the subject and the report of that committee, followed by the joint resolution, served very conclusively to show the knowledge of the state during all the period of its acquiescence in the assertion by the city of Cleveland and the plaintiffs in error of the rights that are now challenged.

In support of the judgment below, it is urged that an estoppel cannot be pleaded against the state, and very much of the brief of the defendant in error is devoted to supporting that proposition. This portion of the brief shows conclusively that by established law the statute of limitations does not bar an action of this character: that mere laches cannot be pleaded against its prosecution, and that all persons dealing with public officials must take notice of the extent of their authority; but none of these propositions, nor all of them combined, are equivalent to the proposition that when the general assembly of the state, which is vested with all legislative power, and which is the source of power in cases of this character, actively participates in the encouragement of a course of dealing resting upon an assumed state of facts, the state does not thereby become bound. Unquestionably the general assembly represented the state in this matter, and in both the original act and in the subsequent act under which the plaintiffs in error expended money for establishing the boundaries of the premises conveyed, its concurrence and acquiescence with the knowledge clearly imputed to it serves to bind the state, for in this respect the state was acting, not in its capacity as a sovereign, but in its proprietary capacity as the owner of lands, and when it acts in that capacity it is bound by the same rules as those which it applies to its citizens. Nothing presented casts doubt upon the correctness of the view thus comprehensively stated by Ranney, J., in State v. Butties, 3 Ohio St. 309: "We agree . . . when she [the state] appears as a suitor in her courts to enforce her rights of property, she comes shorn of her attributes of sovereignty, and as a body politic, capable of contracting, suing, and holding property, is subject to those rules of justice and right which in her sovereign character she has prescribed for the government of her people." In State ex rel. Richards v. Pittsburgh, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. supra, it was said: "This question of jurisdiction does not so much concern the ultimate rights of the parties as it does methods of procedure. The right of suitors respecting the subject-matter in dispute will be determined by applying to the facts, when ascertained, the same principles and rules of law, whether the action was commenced in this court in quo warranto or in the court of common pleas by a real action." A consequence which follows the application of this doctrine to the present case is that the state must fail in its action for want of a provision in the act and a stipulation in the deed for the reversion of title in the state, if the property should be used for a forbidden purpose.

The theory upon which the suit is prosecuted is that the designation of purposes for streets, etc., in the act providing for the grant to the city of Cleveland and carried into the terms of the governor's deed, operated as limitation upon the rights of the city and its assigns, to use the premises for other purposes, and that the devotion of the property to the uses contemplated by the lease of the city to the railway company operated as a perversion. But the state in its proprietary capacity is amenable—if we assume that there was a departure from the designated use—to the rule well established in this state that, however it may be with respect to deeds of gift, where deeds rest upon a valuable consideration, and a statement of inducements or purpose with respect to the use of property granted is disregarded, title will not revert in the grantor unless it be in pursuance of a stipulation in the grant that it shall revert.

In the case of Ashland v. Greiner, 58 Ohio St. 67, 50 N. E. 99, where in the opinion deeds of gift were expressly excluded from consideration, the case being one of grant upon consideration, it was said in the second proposition of the syllabus: "As said deed had no words of forfeiture or re-entry, the diverting of said lands to uses and purposes other than those expressed in the deed did not in legal effect revert title to said lands in the grantor or his heirs." Why should it have such effect in the present case? If by the terms of the grant to the city of Cleveland the state has divested itself of all interest in the lands conveyed, in what respect would it be benefited by an observance of the uses that were in mind at the time of the execution of the grant? But here is no perversion of a trust, or departure from the purposes in contemplation. For this conclusion, Malone 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643, is ample authority. That case arose out of the disposition of lands which the state had acquired for canal purposes, and which it originally held by a title differing in no sense from that by which it held those here in controversy. That title, as is there held, was a title in fee simple. As the basis of the decision in that case, notice was taken of the familiar use of premises by streets and railroads in common, and it was said railroads cross highways, and no one has ever supposed that this was such an abandonment of the highway as that the soil reverted to the original owner. All the uses to which it was expected at the time of the grant that these lands would be devoted, and all the uses to which they are now devoted, are uses of like character. This conclusion is supported by other cases cited, as well as by the reasons involved.

The original petition in the case and the brief of the defendant in error wholly ignore the real nature of the transaction between the state and the city of Cleveland. Very obviously the general assembly was of the opinion that the substituted connection of the canal with the Cuyahoga river, which the city was required to construct at its own expense, acquiring the right of way therefore, was the equivalent to the state of the connection over the lands granted to the city. The making of that substituted connection was a valuable consideration for the grant. It is not intimated that the state was in any way defrauded, or even that the legislature exercised an erroneous judgment upon that subject, and yet it is insisted that the state, retaining all that it received in the way of consideration for the grant, may revoke the grant. Of course, there is assigned no reason equal to such a conclusion. In Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. 420, 9 L. ed. 773, Mr. Justice Story said: "But what, I repeat, is most material to be stated is that all this doctrine in relation to the King's prerogative of having a construction in his own favor is exclusively confined to cases of mere donation, flowing from the bounty of the Crown. Whenever the grant is upon a valuable consideration, the rule of construction ceases; and the grant is expounded exactly as it would be in the case of a private grant, favorably in the grantee. Why is this rule adopted? Plainly, because the grant is a contract, and is to be interpreted according to its fair meaning. It would be to the dishonor of the government that it should pocket a fair consideration, and then quibble as to the obscurities and implications of its own contract."

All agree, and this court has repeated ly decided in the cases cited in the briefs, that the state became the owner in fee simple of all canal lands upon their construction. By the act of April 29, 1872, the general assembly authorized the governor to execute and deliver to the city of Cleveland a grant of all the interest of the state in the described portion of the canal, and thereupon the governor, being satisfied, according to the requirements of the act, that the city had done all things by it to be done, including the establishing of the substituted connection, executed to the city a deed whereby he did for divers considerations convey all the interest of the state to the city. There remains in the state no interest in the lands to be protected by quo warranto, the title of the city is an unqualified fee, and its lease to the railway company is valid. It cannot be necessary to point out other infirmities in the case of the state.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

The judgment will be reversed, the demurrer to the petition will be sustained, and the petition dismissed.

Davis, Ch. J., and Price, Johnson, and Donahue, JJ., concur.

Spear, J., dissents.

INDEX TO NOTES.

(The Index to Cases follows this.)

Accomplice.			Banks.
Who is accomplice in bribery case within rule requiring corroboration of testimony.	704		Liability of bank directors in case of bad loans or investments	173
Advertising.			When is a bank deposit special	847
Right of tenants to use walls for.	350		Right to preference for money paid to insolvent bank for draft	563
Alteration of instruments.			Bills and notes.
Presumption as to time of alteration	100		Set off, see SET-OFF AND COUNTER-CLAIM.
Necessity of consideration to sustain ratification of unauthorized alteration.	181		Right to refuse payment of draft the proceeds of which are used in an illegal transaction	1005
Animals.			Failure of consideration as a defense to action on a purchase price note	938
Power of municipality to prohibit keeping of	266		Bona fide purchaser.
Liability for killing or injuring live stock on track because of lack of proper headlight	271		Of check, see CHECKS.
Character of dog tax	155		Bonds.
Army and navy.			Of guardian, see GUARDIAN AND WARD.
Enlistment in, of minor without parent's consent	454		Liability of officer's bond for failure to return money deposited to avoid execution of writ	577
Assault and battery.			Liability of government or other public body for its own obligations, stolen from it	444
Forcing one to do an act under threat to kill as an assault with intent to kill	143		Payment of commissions for sale of bonds as violating requirement that bonds shall not be sold for less than par	248
Is one assisting relative in peril bound by the latter's act in bringing on the difficulty	671		Boundaries.
When verdict in action for, set aside for inadequacy of damages	487		Change of channel as change of state boundary	200
Attorneys.			Bribery.
Disqualification of judge to preside at disbarment proceedings	116		Who is accomplice in bribery case within rule requiring corroboration of testimony	704
Automobiles.			Bridges.
Liability of automobile owner for negligence of chauffeur furnished by third person	933		Interference by riparian owner with bridge	1213
Baggage.			Building contracts.
See CARRIERS.			Measure of damages for defects or omissions in performance of	591
Bail and recognizance.			Buildings.
Bail in capital cases	752		Measure of damages for wrongful injunction restraining erection of	180
Bankruptcy.			Liability for injuries caused by lack or insufficiency of fire escapes.	744
Double proof of claim against estate of firm and individual partner	391			1229
Right of creditor after promisor's bankruptcy to adopt and enforce his assumption of another's debt	374
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Bulk sales.

- Remedy of creditors where sale is made in violation of bulk sales law 374

Carriers.

- Liability for failure to notify passenger when and where to change cars 663
Carrier's liability for injury to passenger from door of vehicle. 378 Duty of carrier of passengers to keep steps of car free from slippery substances other than snow and ice 419
Liability of carrier for injury to pregnant woman by seeing lunatic on train 647
Duty to stop train or car for article dropped by passenger 313
Duty of carrier as to condition of place used as flag station 558
Household goods or supplies as baggage 634 Right of one who is to be notified of arrival of goods consigned to another, to maintain action against carrier 309
Duty of carrier to hasten shipment or take other precaution to prevent loss threatened without any antecedent fault on its part 640
Right to exclude undesirable hackmen, draymen, etc., from depot 126

Chattel mortgage.

- Foreclosure of chattel mortgage when property is out of state 627

Checks.

- Action by drawee essential to terminate drawer's right to stop payment of check 655
Bona fides of purchaser of check as affected by his knowledge that there are no funds to meet it 1207

Churches.

- Sale of liquors near, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.
In general, see RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Commerce.

- What constitutes an original or unbroken package 1051

Commercial traveler.

- See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Commissions.

- Payment of, for sale of bonds, as violating requirement that bonds shall not be sold for less than par 248

Community property.

- Liability to succession tax 1107

Comparative injury.

- See INJUNCTION.

Compensation.

- Of officers, see OFFICERS.

Confidence game.

- See FALSE PRETENSES.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Consideration.

- Failure of, as defense to action on a purchase price note 938

Constitutional law.

- Constitutionality of statute making owner personally liable to laborers or materialmen because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection 868
Constitutionality of statutes in relation to vital statistics 1015

Contempt.

- Refusal to restore money or property secured under judgment subsequently reversed or set aside, as contempt 1100

Contractors.

- Constitutionality of statute making owner personally liable to laborers or materialmen because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection. 868

Contracts.

- As to damages, see DAMAGES.
Who may maintain action on, see
PARTIES.
Liability of municipality or other public corporation on implied contract 72 Liability of municipality upon implied contract for labor performed or services accepted by it 43
Necessity of consideration to sustain ratification of unauthorized alteration 131
Validity of agreement by which compensation is dependent on success in procuring contract with public officer or board 747
Effect of landlord's knowledge that tenant intends to use premises in violation of law 1104 Right to refuse payment of draft the proceeds of which are used in an illegal transaction 1005
Salesmen's right to recover compensation as affected by employment of improper methods to make sales 1149 Termination of contract of employment by death 1187

Corporations.

- Liability for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority 122
Personal liability of officer or director of corporation for personal injuries form torts in connection with its business 901
Priority as between lien of corporation and pledgee or bona fide purchaser of corporate stock 292
Right of preferred stock to preference as to capital 1007
Inherent jurisdiction of equity, independently of statute, at the instance of stockholder, to appoint receiver or wind up a corporation because of mismanagement or fraud in its officers 1032

Counties.

- Division of, as affecting its assets and liabilities 285

Courts.

- Power of court to review action of governor in removing officer 788
- Jurisdiction of estate of inmate of Federal home or institution 586
- Jurisdiction of homicide where mortal wound is inflicted in one state or country and death occurs in another 822

Covenants.

- Liability of covenantor in conveyance of real property for expenses of successful defense 67

Criminal law.

- Bail in capital cases 752
- Presumption of guilt from flight 58
- Who is accomplice in bribery case within rule requiring corroboration of testimony 704
- Criminal responsibility of municipality for maintaining or permitting a nuisance 411
- Permitting hostile crowd in court room as denial of fair trial 667
- Acquittal of crime as a bar to a subsequent prosecution of defendant for perjury committed on the former trial 385
- Power of court to suspend sentence or stay execution of sentence 242

Damages.

- Remittitur, see TRIAL.
- Measure of damages for removal of telephone 651
- Measure of damages for defects or omissions in the performance of a building contract 591
- Measure of damages for wrongful injunction restraining erection of building 180
- When verdict in action for assault set aside for inadequacy of 487
- Is minor's right to damage for the negligent killing of parent limited to the period of minority 1156

Death.

- Is minor's right to damage for negligent killing of parent limited to period of minority 1156
- Termination of contract of employment by 1187

Descent and distribution.

- Effect of conveyance and reconveyance of estate acquired by inheritance upon its course of descent 955
- Upon whom does the liability of an heir or devisee for his decedent's debts devolve at his own death 689
- Homicide as affecting devolution of property 1088

Desertion.

- As ground for divorce, see DIVORCE.

District and prosecuting attorneys.

- Right of prosecuting attorney to compensation from individual 81

Divorce and separation.

- Effect of, on rights of beneficiary in insurance policy 370
- Effort by one spouse to induce the other to return home as a condition of desertion by the latter 1118
- Condonation of desertion 1181
- Desertion or cruelty as a recriminatory defense to subsequent adultery 1135
- Applicability of statutory provision for restoration of property in case of divorce, to voluntary gifts or conveyances 193

Dogs.

- Character of dog tax 155

Dower.

- Dower in conditional estates 307

Draft.

- Right to preference for money paid to insolvent bank for 563

Draymen.

- Exclusion of, from depot 126

Drugs and druggists.

- Does the fact that a drug clerk is a licensed pharmacist relieve his employer from liability for his negligence or lack of skill 275

Elections.

- Power to determine eligibility to office of one nominated at primary election 826

Electricity.

- Liability of electric company for injury by wire strung by a third person to connect with its system 1046

Eminent domain.

- Right to take private property for public use without compensation on the theory that it has been abandoned 1029

Equitable conversion.

- See WILLS.

Estoppel.

- Knowledge by vendor of falsity of his misstatements as to title as a condition of equitable estoppel against him 500

Evidence.

- May negligence be inferred from mere fact that a horse runs away 574
- Inference of intent to sell intoxicating liquor from possession 534
- Presumption as to time of alteration in written instrument and its effect on burden of proof 100
- Production of bill of sale as repelling inference or presumption of guilt from possession of recently stolen property 320
- Flight as creating presumption of guilt 58
- Who is accomplice in bribery case within the rule requiring corroboration of testimony 704

Executors and administrators.

- Jurisdiction of estate of inmate of Federal home or institution 586
- Right of domiciliary administrator to sue on judgment in another state 430

Exemptions.

- From taxes, see TAXES.

False imprisonment.

- Detention of one as witness as false imprisonment 503

False pretenses.

- Illegal intent of prosecutor as affecting guilt in obtaining property by false pretense or confidence game 428

Fire department.

- Firemen as servants or agents of owner of burning property 237

Fire escapes.

- See BUILDINGS.

Firemen.

- As servants or agents of owner of burning property 237

Fires.

- Duty of railroad or street railway company to avoid interference with extinguishment of fire 20
- Firemen as servants or agents of owner of burning property 237

Flag station.

- Duty of carrier as to 558

Flight.

- Presumption of guilt from 58

Food.

- Right to regulate time of payment therefor as incident to authority to make rules and regulations as to testing foods 686

Fraud and deceit.

- Estoppel by, see ESTOPPEL.
- May fraud be predicated of misstatement as to title to real property 1140

Fraudulent conveyances.

- Remedy of creditors where sale is made in violation of bulk sales law 874

Fright.

- Of passenger, see CARRIERS.

Gift.

- Restoration of, on divorce 198

Governor.

- Review by court of action in removing officer 788

Guaranty.

- When is a guaranty a continuing one 724

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Guardian and ward.

- Liability of sureties on guardian's bond for default prior to the execution thereof 961

Guilt.

- Presumption of, see EVIDENCE.

Hackmen.

- Exclusion of, from depot 126

Highways.

- Injury on otherwise than by defect, see NEGLIGENCE.
- Will breach of contract with municipality to keep a street or highway in repair sustain an action by a person injured directly against the contractor 1112
- Duty to remove snow or ice from cross walks 1167
- Liability of municipality for personal injuries by trees 405
- Care required from one of defective sight, in using streets 1055

Homicide.

- As affecting devolution of property 1088
- Jurisdiction of homicide where mortal wound is inflicted in one state or country and death occurs in another 822
- Is one assisting relative in peril bound by latter's act in bringing on difficulty 671

Horses.

- Presumption of negligence from runaway 574

Husband and wife.

- As to divorce, see DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.
- As witnesses, see WITNESSES.
- Lease as encumbrance or conveyance within statute requiring joinder or consent of spouse 675
- Liability of community property to succession tax 1107

Ice.

- Duty to remove from cross walks 1167

Incompetent persons.

- Power of court or guardian of incompetent or habitual drunkard to consent to conveyance by trustee under a trust requiring consent by cestui que trust 39

Infants.

- Authority to bind parent by contracts other than those for necessities 881
- Enlistment in army, navy, or militia without parent's consent 454
- Is minor's right to damage for negligent killing of parent limited to period of minority 1156
- Duty to guard against injury to trespassing children by fire 1058

Inheritance tax.

- See TAXES.

Injunction.

- Doctrine of comparative injury in suit to enjoin nuisance 580
- Doctrine of comparative injury in suit to enjoin infringement of patent 1
- Right to preliminary injunction which would have effect of transferring possession of property from defendant to plaintiff 81
- Measure of damages for wrongful injunction restraining erection of building 180

Innkeepers.

- What acts with respect to baggage of an intending guest will initiate the relation of innkeeper and guest so as to create liability for its loss or injury 1085

Insolvency.

Of bank, see BANKS.

Insurance.

- Duty to notify insurer of facts which develop after submission of application, but before delivery of policy or certificate 951
- From what time does notice of cancellation of fire insurance become effective 829
- Constructive total loss of insured building 1182
- Effect of divorce on rights of beneficiary under insurance policy or benefit certificate 370

Intoxicating liquors.

- Presumption of intent to sell, from possession 584
- Sale by others than retail saloon keepers as violation of statute forbidding sale within given distance of school or church 615

Inverse order of alienation.

See MORTGAGE.

Jeopardy.

See CRIMINAL LAW.

Judges.

- Membership in bar association as disqualification of judge to preside at disbarment proceedings instituted by association 116

Judgment.

- Refusal to restore money or property secured under judgment subsequently reversed or set aside, as contempt 1100
- Extraterritorial effect of judgment awarding custody of children upon divorce of parents 988
- Conclusiveness of judgment as affected by subsequent events disproving the ground on which it rested 972

Jury.

- Denial of jury trial simply because matters in issue are complicated 45
- Waiver of property qualification of juror 967

Labels.

- Law as to union labels 1190

Labor organizations.

- Law as to union labels 1190

Landlord and tenant.

- Effect of landlord's knowledge that tenant intends to use premises in violation of law 1104
- Right to shut off water from whole building because of one tenant's delinquency 814
- Right of tenants to use walls for advertising purposes 850
- Liability for rent as affected by fact that property cannot be devoted to use intended without alteration to conform to police regulations 894

Larceny.

- Production of bill of sale as repelling inference or presumption of guilt from possession of recently stolen property 820

Lease.

- In general, see LANDLORD AND TENANT.
- As encumbrance or conveyance within statute requiring joinder or consent of spouse 675

License.

- Warehouse used exclusively for owner's goods or products as subject of license tax 808

Licenseses.

Negligence toward, see NEGLIGENCE.

Liens.

- Mechanics' liens, see MECHANICS' LIENS.
- Right of one not in the storage business to a common-law lien for storage charge 1164

Limitation of actions.

- Effect of statutory bar of action for purchase money upon right to enforce vendor's lien 1171
- Concealment of identity by change of name as interrupting statute of limitations 741

Live stock.

- Liability for killing or injuring on railroad track 271
- Power of municipality to prohibit keeping of 266

Malicious prosecution.

- For wrongful search of premises 205
- When is an action sufficiently at an end to support a suit for malicious prosecution 1215

Mandamus.

- Mandamus to compel performance of continuous acts or control general course of official conduct 810

Marshaling assets and securities.

- Order of sale of parcels on foreclosure of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.
- Right of junior creditor to compel paramount creditor to resort primarily to property of third person which may be subjected to payment of his claim 1000

Master and servant.

- Termination of contract of employment by death of one of the parties 1187
- Constitutionality of statute making owner personally liable to laborers or materialmen because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection 868
- Liability of municipality for injury by employee engaged in removing refuse 649
- Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority 122
- Liability of automobile owner for negligence of chauffeur furnished by third person 933

Mechanics' liens.

- Mortgagee as owner within mechanics' lien laws 84

Merger.

- Of mortgage, see MORTGAGE.

Militia.

- Enlistment of minor without parent's consent in army, navy, or militia 454

Mortgage.

- Reformation of mortgage after foreclosure 90
- Mortgagee as owner within mechanics' lien laws 84
- Merger of mortgage by conveyance from mortgagor to mortgagee or revival thereof after such conveyance, where there are intermediate encumbrances upon the property 834
- Right of mortgagee to enforce purchaser's promise to pay the mortgage where the grantee or promisee was not himself liable 151
- Rule as to inverse order of alienation as affected by assumption of mortgage debt 359
- Effect of foreclosure of one of several simultaneous mortgages upon the others 524

Municipal corporations.

- Liability for injury on highway, see HIGHWAYS.
 - Division of territory of municipality, town, or county as affecting its assets and liabilities, in absence of statute on the point 285
 - Power of, to remove officer in absence of statute 519
 - Power of municipality to prohibit keeping of live stock 266
 - Liability of, upon implied contract 43, 72
- 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

- Liability of municipality for injury by employee engaged in removing refuse 649
- Liability for its own obligations stolen from it 444
- Criminal responsibility for maintaining or permitting a nuisance 411

Name.

- Change of, as interrupting statute of limitations 741

Negligence.

- Personal liability of corporate officers for, see CORPORATIONS.
- In sale of drugs, see DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.
- Presumption of, see EVIDENCE.
- Of person injured on defective street, see HIGHWAYS.
- Duty to guard against injury to trespassing children by fire 1058
- Duty of owner of land which licensees are accustomed to cross, to guard against injuries in consequence of changes in the conditions 217
- Forgetfulness of obstacle or defect as contributory negligence 896
- Duty of pedestrian when crossing or traveling public street to avoid passing teams 481

New trial.

- When verdict in action for assault set aside for inadequacy of damages 487

Nuisance.

- Doctrine of comparative injury in suit to enjoin 580
- Criminal responsibility of municipality for maintaining or permitting a nuisance 411

Officers.

- Bonds of, see BONDS.
- Mandamus to, see MANDAMUS.
- Validity of agreement by which compensation is dependent on success in procuring contract with public officer or board 747
- Right of prosecuting attorney to compensation from individual 81
- Review by court of governor's action in removing officer 788
- Power of town or municipality to remove officer in absence of statutory authority 519

Original packages.

- See COMMERCE.

Parent and child.

- Authority of child to bind parent by contracts other than those for necessities 881
- Enlistment of infant in army, navy, or militia without parent's consent 454
- Is minor's right to damage for negligent killing of parent limited to period of minority 1156

Parol trust. See TAUSTA.		Priority. Between lien of corporation and pledgee or bona fide purchaser of corporate stock	292
Parties. Will breach of contract with municipality to keep a street or highway in repair sustain an action by a person injured directly against the contractor	1112	Public improvements. Assessment for improvements made before property was included within the improvement district	548
Character of contract as affecting right of undisclosed principal to sue thereon	324	Railroads. Partition of right of way	538
Right of one who is to be notified of arrival of goods consigned to another, to maintain action against carrier	309	Duty to avoid interference with extinguishment of fire	20
Partition. Partition of railroad right of way	538	Rate of speed preventing stoppage of trains within distance disclosed by headlight	978
Partnership. Bankruptcy of, see BANKRUPTCY.		Liability for killing or injuring live stock on track because of lack of proper headlight	271
Patents. Doctrine of comparative injury in suit to enjoin infringement of	1	Ratification. Of unauthorized alteration, see ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.
Perjury. False swearing where no oath, or the particular one administered, was not required, as perjury	96	Receivers. Inherent jurisdiction of equity, independently of statute, at the instance of stockholder, to appoint a receiver or wind up a corporation because of mismanagement or fraud of its officers	1082
Pledge. Of corporate stock, see CORPORATIONS. Effect of surrender of pledged property upon rights of pledgee	886	Reformation of instruments. Reformation of mortgage after foreclosure	90
Police. Liability of private person or corporation for acts of special police officer appointed by public authority	122	Religious societies. Exemption of parsonage from taxation	437
Poor and poor laws. Right to compensation from public for relief furnished poor person, in cases not provided for by law, or where there has been no compliance with statutory prerequisites	161	Remittitur. See TRIAL.
Liability to poor person for failure to furnish, or negligence in furnishing, relief	168	Replevin. Right of one who intends to make an illegal use of property to invoke aid of court for recovery from one who has wrongfully taken the same	1098
Preference. In assets of insolvent bank, see BANKS. Of preferred stock, see CORPORATIONS.		Runaway. Presumption of negligence from	574
Presumptions. See EVIDENCE.		Sale. In bulk, see BULK SALES. When does title pass under consignment of goods for sale with provision in effect that consignee purchase balance of consignment	620
Principal and agent. Extent of a commercial traveler's implied or ostensible authority to warrant goods	1151	Salesman. Authority of, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.
Character of contract as affecting right of undisclosed principal to sue thereon	324	Schools. Sale of liquors near, see INTOXICATING LIQUORS.
Salesmen's right to recover compensation as affected by employment of improper methods to make sales	1149	Search. Malignant prosecution for wrongful search	205
Principal and surety. As to bonds generally, see BONDS. Extension of time by attorney as discharging surety	62

Set-off and counterclaim.

- Right to set off against transferee of negotiable paper after maturity, claim against original payee 658

Snow.

- Duty to remove snow or ice from crosswalks 1167

Soldiers' home.

- Jurisdiction of estate of inmate of 586

State.

- Change of channel as change of state boundary 200

Statistics.

- Constitutionality of statutes in relation to vital statistics 1015

Stopping payment.

- Of check, see CHECKS.

Storage.

- Right of one not in the storage business to a common-law lien for storage charge 1164

Street railways.

- Duty to avoid interference with extinguishment of fire 20

Succession tax.

- See TAXES.

Sunday.

- Receiving verdict on Sunday 844

Suspension.

- Of sentence, see CRIMINAL LAW.

Taxes.

- Character of dog tax 155
Right to extend tax over territory added to taxing district after tax voted 601
Exemption of parsonage from taxation 487
Liability of community property to succession tax 1107
Must property out of state be included in fixing exemptions under inheritance tax 1024

Telephones.

- Measure of damages for removal of 651
Liability of telephone company for failure to make connections for subscriber 402

Termination.

- Of action to support suit for malicious prosecution 1215

Theft.

- Liability of government or other public body for its own obligations stolen from it 444

Threats.

- Forcing one to do an act under threat to kill as an assault with intent to kill 148

Torts.

- Personal liability of corporate officers for, see CORPORATIONS.
In general, see NEGLIGENCE.

Towns.

- Division of territory of, as affecting its assets and liabilities 285
Power of, to remove officer in absence of statute 519

Trademarks.

- Law as to union labels 1190

Trees.

- Injury by, in highway, see HIGHWAYS.

Trial.

- Receiving verdict on Sunday 844
Power of trial court to cure an excessive verdict by requiring or permitting a reduction where true measure of damages not ascertainable by mere computation 1064

Trusts.

- Right to preference for money paid to insolvent bank for draft 563
Grantee's oral promise to grantor to hold in trust as giving rise to constructive trust 906

Union labels.

- Law as to 1190

Vendor and purchaser.

- Personal liability of purchaser of land on contract under which it is supplied with water 798
May fraud be predicated of misstatements as to title to real property 1140
Knowledge by vendor of falsity of his misstatements as to title as a condition of equitable estoppel against him 500
Grantee's oral promise to grantor to hold in trust as giving rise to constructive trust 906
May vendor be required to make good deficiency in tract sold out of other lands 785
Effect of statutory bar of action for purchase money upon right to enforce vendor's lien 1171

Verdict.

- Receiving on Sunday 844

Vital statistics.

- Constitutionality of statutes in relation to 1015

Warehouse.

- License for, see LICENSES.

Waters.

- Change of channel as change of state boundary 200
Interference by riparian owner with bridge 1213
Personal liability of purchaser of land on contract under which it is supplied with water 796

INDEX TO NOTES.

1237

Right to shut off water from whole building because of one tenant's delinquency	814	Conversion by directing sale after devising land	817
Wills.		Witnesses.
What amounts to a contest within forfeiture clause in will	1160	Detention of one as, as false imprisonment	508
Power to create remainder after life estate with absolute power of disposal	905	Competency of one spouse to testify as to misconduct of other spouse in action against a third person	315
39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

GENERAL INDEX

NOTES ARE INDEXED BY THE WORD "ANNOTATED" AFTER THE PARAGRAPHS TO WHICH THEY APPLY.

(Separate Index to Notes Precedes this.)

ABANDONMENT.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 3-6.
Of easement, see Easements, 3.

ABATEMENT.

Of nuisance, see Nuisances, 2-9.

ABUTTING OWNERS.

Right to have highway kept open, see Highways, 8.

ACCEPTANCE.

Of check, see Banks, 5.

ACCOMPLICE.

Corroboration of testimony of, see Appeal and Error, 18; Evidence, 33-36.
Question for court or jury as to whether witness is an accomplice, see Trial, 2.

ACTION OR SUIT.

Due process as to right of action, see Constitutional Law, 8.

Federal court following state decision as to right to waive tort and sue on contract, see Courts, 3.

By wife for alienation of husband's affections, see Husband and Wife, 4, 5.

Parties to action, see Parties.

1. That a passenger on a street car rode on the platform when he might have ridden inside the car will not preclude his holding the company liable for an injury inflicted upon him while he was attempting to alight from the car at his destination. Elliott v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 608, 122 Pac. 614, — Wash. —.

2. The right to waive the tort, and sue in contract for conversion of property, does not fail because the property is consumed rather than converted into money. Reynolds v. New York Trust Co. 39: 391, 188 Fed. 611, 110 C. C. A. 409.

ADMINISTRATION.

Of decedents' estates, see Executors and Administrators.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ADULTERY.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 5.

ADVERTISING.

Right of lessee to use walls of building for, see Landlord and Tenant, 2, 3.

AFFECTIONS.

Alienation of, see Husband and Wife, 4, 5.

AGENCY.

See Principal and Agent.

ALIBI.

Sufficiency of proof of, see Evidence, 32.

ALIENATION OF AFFECTIONS.

Presumptions and burden of proof in actions for, see Evidence, 3.
In general, see Husband and Wife, 4, 5.

ALIMONY.

See Divorce and Separation, 7.

ALTERATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Necessity of new consideration to validate ratification of alteration, see Contracts, 3.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 8.

Evidence to show that erasure was made before delivery, see Evidence, 30.

A material alteration in a promissory note may be ratified by any person affected by it so as to bind him as fully as though he had authorized it in the first instance. Holyfield v. Harrington, 39: 131, 115 Pac. 546, 84 Kan. 760.

AMENDMENT.

Suggested amendment as necessary part of record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2.

Of indictment, see Criminal Law, 1; Indictment, etc.

Of pleading, see Pleading.

ANCILLARY ADMINISTRATOR.

See Executors and Administrators, 2, 3.

ANIMALS.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 17.

Presumption of negligence from running away of horse, see Evidence, 6.

Presumption as to ownership of run-away horse, see Evidence, 7.

Stable for, see Livery Stable; Nuisances, 2, 3.

Ordinances regulating keeping of hogs, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

Injury to, by railroad train, see New Trial, 1; Railroads, 2.

Question for jury as to negligence of driver of horse, see Trial, 8.

A dog tax need not be uniform according to the value, when assessed by a municipality under charter authority to regulate dogs and impose a tax on them, since it is not a property tax, but is assessed under the police power for purposes of regulation. Paxton v. Fitzsimmons, 39: 155, 96 N. E. 675, 253 Ill. 355. (Annotated)

ANNULMENT.

Of marriage, see Marriage.

APPEAL AND ERROR.

Effect of death pending, of one of several attorneys who have agreed to share contingent fee, see Attorneys.

Effect of reversal on former jeopardy, see Criminal Law, 3.

Parties.

1. Although one holding a mortgage on property sought to be subjected to an improvement lien defaulted at the trial, which resulted in defeating the lien, he is a necessary party to an appeal from the judgment, since a reversal of the judgment would re-establish the lien, to his detriment. Trippier v. Clifton, 39: 522, 97 N. E. 791, — Ind. —.

Record.

2. A suggested amendment to a pleading not made part of the record by order of court or bill of exceptions cannot be considered on appeal. Lewis v. Bowling Green R. Co. 39: 929, 144 S. W. 377, 147 Ky. 460.

3. Where a vacation order of a judge certifies the presentation to him of bills of exception and a transcript of all the evidence, and certifies that, for identification, the bills were numbered and that the certificate of evidence was marked "certificate of evidence," and certifies that the bills were signed and that the certificate of evidence was also signed and ordered to be made a part of the record, the certificate of evidence which is found so marked in the record and referred to as such in the bill of exceptions, about which there is no question, is a part of the record and properly brings the evidence before the court. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 961, — W. Va. —.

Objections and exceptions; raising questions in lower court.

4. An objection to the admission of any evidence which is based upon and calls attention to substantial defects in a count of a complaint merely, will not reach a misjoinder of actions or formal defects in plead- 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

ing. Sleeper v. Baker, 39: 864, 134 N. W. 716, — N. D. —.

5. An objection to the introduction of any evidence, upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, must specially point out wherein the complaint is defective. Sleeper v. Baker, 39: 864, 134 N. W. 716, — N. D. —.

6. An exception to an instruction is sufficient to raise the question of its correctness, although no objection is made to it. Campbell v. Chillicothe, 39: 451, 144 S. W. 408, 239 Mo. 455.

7. An objection to the participation, on behalf of the prosecution, in a trial for homicide, of an attorney employed by private parties, made after an amendment to the information and resumption of the trial, is timely, and it is error to overrule the same. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

8. Objections to a pleading for duplicity can be raised only by motions to strike out or to compel the pleader to elect. Gately v. Taylor, 39: 472, 97 N. E. 619, 211 Mass. 60.

Presumptions.

9. Absence of a certificate that the printed case contains all the evidence in an attempt to review exceptions taken at the trial does not entitle the appellate court to assume that there was evidence at the trial sufficient to sustain the verdict, when the record does not disclose it, since such certificate is not necessary to raise such question. Dupont v. Port Chester, 39: 1167, 97 N. E. 735, 204 N. Y. 351.

10. A statutory provision that facts necessary to support a judgment founded on a special verdict shall be deemed to have been determined in conformity with the judgment, although omitted from the verdict, does not apply where there was a special request to submit the question to the jury. Habegger v. King, 39: 881, 135 N. W. 166, — Wis. —.

Discretionary matters.

11. Permitting an amendment of a plea of the statute of limitations so as to set out the subdivision of the section relied on is not an abuse of discretion where there is only one subdivision that is applicable so that the plea is sufficient without amendment. St. Paul Title & T. Co. v. Stensgaard, 39: 741, 121 Pac. 731, — Cal. —.

12. The granting of a preliminary injunction rests in the discretion of the trial court, not in its arbitrary, whimsical will, but in its sound judicial discretion, informed and guided by the established principles, rules, and practice of equity jurisprudence; and where the court has not departed from them, its injunctive orders may not be reversed without clear proof of an abuse of its discretion. Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. 39: 1, 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495.

13. It is error to deny a new trial where nominal damages only have been granted, to a woman against one who, after notice to refrain from doing so, sold intoxicating liquors to her husband, which resulted in his assaulting her, destroying her property, and materially damaging her means of support, and humiliating and disgracing her. Fleming v. Gemein, 39: 315, 134 N. W. 969, 168 Mich. 541.

Questions not raised below.

14. Failure to join a woman in an action to hold her husband liable for injury inflicted by her in driving an automobile cannot be questioned for the first time on appeal. Minor v. Mapes, 39: 214, 144 S. W. 219, — Ark. —.

15. Failure to raise the question of the effect of failure to prove payment of premium in an action on an insurance policy is within a statute providing that in no case shall the appellate court decide any question which does not plainly appear to have been raised and decided below. German Union F. Ins. Co. v. Fred G. Clarke Co. 39: 829, 82 Atl. 974, 116 Md. 622.

16. Where an action upon a municipal contract void because in excess of the charter authority of the municipality was tried on the theory that the want of power to make the contract was properly raised, a reversal cannot be secured on appeal on the theory that it was not so raised, if no contention is made that the contract had been validated. Perry Water, L. & I. Co. v. Perry, 39: 72, 120 Pac. 582, 29 Okla. 593.

Errors waived or cured below.

17. The refusal of a nonsuit for failure of proofs is not ground for reversal if said proofs are afterwards supplied by either party in the progress of the trial. Dennery v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 574, 81 Atl. 861, — N. J. —.

Review of facts.

18. An appellate court must consider whether or not a witness was an accomplice of accused, when an appeal from a conviction is upon the ground that the conviction was based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. People v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

19. The production by one found in possession of property recently stolen, of a signed and witnessed bill of sale of the property from a stranger, supported by unimpeached testimony of himself and the witnesses that he purchased and paid for it, is not sufficient to overcome the statutory presumption of larceny arising from such possession, so as to authorize the setting aside of a conviction for lack of evidence to support it. State v. Gurr, 39: 320, 120 Pac. 209, — Utah, —.

(Annotated)

Grounds for reversal.

20. The admission in evidence upon a trial for homicide, where the only question before the jury is whether or not the defendant committed the murder, of the clothing of the deceased, which in no way tends to identify the murderer, but tends merely to excite the passions and inflame the minds of the jurors, is error. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

21. It is error to take the right to recover against a municipal corporation for injury caused by a defect in a sidewalk depend upon actual notice of the defect, if there is evidence tending to show that it was chargeable with constructive notice. Campbell v. Chillicothe, 39: 451, 144 S. W. 408, 239 Mo. 455.

22. Instructing a jury to allow damages for pain suffered by one killed by another's negligence, if any is shown by the record, is not reversible error, although the evidence shows instant death, since evidence of pain being absent, it must be presumed that the jury did not allow anything for it. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 39: 978, 58 So. 471, — Miss. —.

23. Where after an arraignment and plea of not guilty to an information for homicide, an amendment is allowed to correct a defect in the date of the crime, which was alleged therein as subsequent to the filing of the information, it is error for the trial court to require the accused, over his objection, immediately to proceed with the trial without arraignment under, and plea to, such amended information, and without giving him the statutory time in which to plead thereto. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

Judgment.

24. A conviction of murder will be set aside on appeal for unfairness, where the court room was filled with a hostile crowd who threatened lynching, so that the counsel called upon to defend accused did not dare ask the customary time for preparation, and the space about the judge, counsel, and witnesses was so filled with people that counsel for accused could not see the witnesses, and failed to see the jury until he arose to address them. State v. Weldon, 39: 667, 74 S. E. 43, — S. C. —.

(Annotated)

25. A ruling by an appellate court that in assessing benefits for a change in a highway, the court should have considered the history of the change, the fact that the municipality contemplated the change made, and its effect upon abutting property, is the law of the case upon a second appeal. Park City Yacht Club v. Bridgeport, 39: 478, 82 Atl. 1035, 85 Conn. 366.

APPRAISAL.

Of insurance loss, see Insurance, 12.

APPURTENANCES.

Easements as, see Easements, 1, 2

ARREST.

Release from, on bail, see Bail and Recognizance.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 2, 3.

ASSAULT AND BATTERY.

On passenger, see Carriers, 1.

Evidence in prosecution for, see Evidence, 22.

Homicide in defending third person against, see Homicide.

New trial for inadequacy of damages, see New Trial, 2.

One is guilty of assault with intent to kill who points a loaded revolver at another to compel him to do a specified act which the assailant has no right to demand, under threat to kill him if he does not comply with the demand, although death may be avoided by such compliance. People v. Connors, 39: 143, 97 N. E. 643, 253 Ill. 266. (Annotated)

ASSENT.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

ASSESSMENT.

For insurance, see Insurance, 8, 9.

For public improvements, see Public Improvements.

ASSIGNMENT.

Draft as, see Bills and Notes, 1.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage, 3.

Right of set-off as against assignee, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 2.

Set-off in action on corporation's note of debt due president personally, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 3.

ASSUMPTION OF DEBT.

By grantee of land, see Mortgage, 1.

ATTACHMENT.

Liability of bond of constable for failure to return to defendant money paid to secure release of goods, see Bonds, 1.

Of mortgaged chattel, see Chattel Mortgage.

ATTORNEY GENERAL.

Right of governor to require attorney general to examine witnesses, see Governor, 1.

Construction of statute as to duty of attorney general to prosecute at request of governor, see Statutes, 5.

A proceeding for the examination of witnesses under the provisions of a prohibitory liquor law (Gen. Stat. 1909, § 4366) is a matter before an officer, in which the state is interested; and when required by the governor the attorney general has no discretion to refuse to prosecute in such a proceeding. State ex rel. Stubbs v. Dawson, 39: 993, 119 Pac. 360, 86 Kan. 180.

ATTORNEYS.

Objection to participation of special attorney in prosecution for homicide, see Appeal and Error, 7.

As to attorney general, see Attorney General.

Disqualification of judge to sit at disbarment proceedings, see Judges.

Right of attorney to whom client has assigned interest in action to attack judgment because of perjured testimony, see Judgment, 2.

Effect of slight indulgence to maker by attorney charged with collection of note, on surety's liability, see Principal and Surety, 3.

Liability of church for attorneys' fees, see Religious Societies.

The death pending appeal, of one of several attorneys who have agreed to share a contingent fee to be earned by the successful prosecution of a suit, will not deprive his estate of his share of the fee in case the judgment in favor of their client is affirmed, without allowance to the successors for their labor in the appellate court. Senneff v. Healy, 39: 219, 135 N. W. 27, — Iowa, —.

AUTHORITY.

Of agent, see Principal and Agent, 1.

AUTOMOBILES.

Objecting for first time on appeal to lack of parties in action for injury by, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Husband's liability for negligence of wife in driving, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Who is master of negligent chauffeur, see Master and Servant, 1.

Liability of father for negligence of son in operating, see Parent and Child, 2.

Authority of boy operating parent's machine to engage physician to attend person whom he injures, see Parent and Child, 1.

1. To sustain a recovery for injuries caused by being run down by an automobile owned by the defendant, while being operated by another, the plaintiff must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the person in charge of the machine was the defendant's servant, and was at the time of the accident engaged in the master's business or pleasure, with the master's knowledge and direction. Neff v. Brandeis, 39: 933, 135 N. W. 232, — Neb. —.

2. The driver of an automobile may be found to be negligent in running his machine at a speed of 10 or 12 miles an hour, on the parallel track past a street car which he has overtaken after it has stopped to discharge passengers from the front door, without taking precautions to ascertain if passengers will attempt to cross in front of the car, where there is a space of 60 feet between the car and the curb which the driver might have used. Minor v. Mapes, 39: 214, 144 S. W. 219, — Ark. —.

BAGGAGE.

In general, see Carriers, 14-16.

Innkeepers' liability for, see Innkeepers.

BAIL AND RECOGNIZANCE.

Burden of proof in habeas corpus proceeding for discharge on bail, see Habeas Corpus.

1. The fact that there is a conflict in the testimony at a hearing on the charge of a capital offense, before an examining magistrate, does not necessarily show that the proof of guilt is not evident or the presumption thereof not great, so that such magistrate may not refuse bail, but, if from the entire evidence a reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused is not generated, the proof is evident and bail should be denied. Re Thomas, 39: 752, 93 Pac. 980, 20 Okla. 167.

2. The burden of proof being on one committed for a capital offense by an examining magistrate, to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty, upon an application to the supreme court for bail by writ of habeas corpus, if, after hearing the whole evidence introduced on the application for bail, it is insufficient to generate in the mind of the court a reasonable doubt whether the accused committed the act charged and in so doing was guilty of a capital offense, such court will, in the absence of any exceptional circumstance, refuse bail. Re Thomas, 39: 752, 93 Pac. 980, 20 Okla. 167. (Annotated)

BAILMENT.

Liability of innkeeper as gratuitous bailee, see Innkeepers, 2.
Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 10.

BANKRUPTCY.

Federal bankruptcy court following state decisions, see Courts, 3.
Appointment of receiver in bankruptcy for insured as effecting change in title, see Insurance, 3.
When title passes so as to give trustee in bankruptcy, right to property, see Sale, 1.

1. One whose bonds have been converted and consumed by a brokerage firm cannot, upon the theory that the tort is both joint and several, so as to permit him to proceed in contract, prove his claim in bankruptcy proceedings both against the estate of the firm and that of an individual partner who is not shown to have participated in the conversion or benefited thereby. Reynolds v. New York Trust Co. 39: 391, 188 Fed. 611, 110 C. C. A. 409. (Annotated)

2. A contract, express or implied, for which claims may be filed under the bankruptcy act, includes quasi contracts to pay for property converted and consumed by the debtor. Reynolds v. New York Trust Co. 39: 391, 188 Fed. 611, 110 C. C. A. 409.

3. A bank cannot assent to the ratification by a partnership of the individual debt of a partner to it after the partnership has become insolvent, so as to be entitled to apply collateral held to secure firm obligations in satisfaction of such indebtedness. Blake v. Atlantic Nat. Bank, 39: 874, 82 Atl. 225, 33 R. I. 464. (Annotated)

BANKS.

Application of collateral held to secure firm obligations in satisfaction of individual debt of partner, see Bankruptcy, 3.

Negligence in acceptance of pledge, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Proximate cause of loss to bank accepting stolen paying tax certificates, see Proximate Cause.

Stockholders.

1. A purchaser of bank stock may compel, by bill in equity, the transfer of the same on the books of the corporation, or he may sue in conversion and damages for the failure to so transfer. Ardmore State Bank v. Mason, 39: 292, 120 Pac. 1080, — Okla. —.

2. By-laws of a bank prohibiting the sale of stock while the holder is indebted to the bank do not apply to a sale by a pledgee who took the pledge to secure a debt at a time when no indebtedness to the bank existed, although, with knowledge of the pledge, the bank subsequently made a loan to the stockholder. Ardmore State Bank v. Mason, 39: 292, 120 Pac. 1080, — Okla. —.

3. The statutory lien of a bank on its stock for indebtedness of its holder is subordinate to that of the pledgee of the stock, who takes it to secure a loan at a time when the holder is not indebted to the bank, where, to the knowledge of the bank, the pledge was in existence when it made the loan for which the lien is claimed. Ardmore State Bank v. Mason, 39: 292, 120 Pac. 1080, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

Payment of checks; forgeries.

As to rights and liabilities on checks of persons other than banks, see Checks.

4. A bank is liable for paying a check which is countermanded by the drawer before accepted by the bank, although it has been presented to the bank prior to countermand, in the absence of funds and a promise secured that it would be credited to the account of the payee. First Nat. Bank v. School Dist. No. 4, 39: 655, 120 Pac. 614, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

5. Checks are but inland bills of exchange and subject to all the rules applicable to instruments of that character, and impose no obligation upon the drawees until accepted; and, until presented and paid, are revocable by the drawer, who has the legal control of the money to his credit until actual acceptance or payment of the checks. First Nat. Bank v. School Dist. No. 4, 39: 655, 120 Pac. 614, — Okla. —.

6. The indorsement of a draft in his own name by one into whose hands it falls by mistake, being payable to another person bearing the same name, is a forgery, and will not protect a bank which innocently cashes it upon such indorsement against the claim of the true owner. Thomas v. First Nat. Bank, 39: 355, 58 So. 478, — Miss. —.

Certificate of deposit.

7. A bank is not bound to pay over to an administrator money deposited by a person since deceased, until the certificate of deposit executed by it is surrendered or impossibility of surrender is shown. Divine v. Unaka Nat. Bank, 39: 586, 140 S. W. 747, — Tenn. —.

Insolvency; trusts.

8. A bank which, while hopelessly insolvent, sells a draft when the statute prohibits it from receiving money, takes the money so paid if the draft is dishonored as a trustee ex maleficio. Widman v. Kellogg, 39: 563, 133 N. W. 1020, — N. D. —.

(Annotated)

9. Where an agent each day secures a bank draft to forward the receipts of the business, a finding that he deposited the receipts and secured drafts therefor means that he purchased drafts with the receipts. Widman v. Kellogg, 39: 563, 133 N. W. 1020, — N. D. —.

10. A receiver appointed for an insolvent bank which has sold a worthless draft takes the funds paid for it as a trustee. Widman v. Kellogg, 39: 563, 133 N. W. 1020, — N. D. —.

11. When funds received by an insolvent bank which goes into the hands of a receiver as a trust are not commingled with any of the assets of the bank except cash assets, the preference of the beneficiary is limited to the cash funds of which the receiver took possession, when distinguishable from the other assets of the estate going into his hands. Widman v. Kellogg, 39: 563, 133 N. W. 1020, — N. D. —.

12. A package of bills marked with the owner's initials, and delivered to a bank for safe-keeping, and for which a receipt stating that fact is executed by the cashier, is a special deposit, which the owner is entitled to have returned to him in case the assets of the bank pass into the hands of a receiver. Fogg v. Tyler, 39: 847, 82 Atl. 1008, — Me. —.

(Annotated)

13. That a package of bills delivered to a bank for safe-keeping as a special deposit cannot be identified when the assets pass into the hands of a receiver does not destroy the prior right of the owner to payment out of such assets, if the cash on hand never fell below the amount of the deposit after it was made. Fogg v. Tyler, 39: 847, 82 Atl. 1008, — Me. —.

Savings banks.

When limitations begin to run against liability, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Pleading in action to hold trustees personally liable, see Pleading, 3.

14. Trustees of a savings bank are personally liable for money lost through loans made without observing the limitations imposed by the rules and by-laws of the institution. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Abercrombie, 39: 173, 97 N. E. 897, 211 Mass. 252.

(Annotated)

15. Salaried trustees of a savings bank are personally liable for loss of its funds which they lend in excess of the statutory limit for the security furnished if, by the exercise of reasonable care and prudence, they ought to have known that they were exceeding the limit. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Abercrombie, 39: 173, 97 N. E. 897, 211 Mass. 252.

16. Statutory requirements that, in 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

lending money by a savings bank, only first mortgages shall be taken, after report on the value of the property, and that all applications for loans shall be in writing, are mandatory, and trustees will be personally responsible for money lost through loans made without observing these requirements. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Abercrombie, 39: 173, 97 N. E. 897, 211 Mass. 252.

BAR ASSOCIATION.

Disqualification of judge who is member of, to sit in disbarment proceedings, see Judges.

BARRIERS.

Failure to erect barriers in highway, see Trial, 6.

BASTARDY.

Requiring physician or midwife to certify as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, see Constitutional Law, 9.

BATTERY.

See Assault and Battery.

BAWDY HOUSE.

See Disorderly Houses.

BENEFITS.

Estoppel by receiving, see Estoppel, 2.

BEST AND SECONDARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 9.

BILL OF SALE.

Production of, by one accused of stealing property, see Appeal and Error, 19.

BILLS AND NOTES.

Alteration of, see Alteration of Instruments.

Payment of forged draft by bank, see Banks, 6.

As to certificate of deposit, see Banks, 7.

Taking money for draft by bank when insolvent, see Banks, 8-10.

As to checks, see Checks.

Necessity of new consideration for ratification altered note, see Contracts, 3.

Right to refuse payment of draft the proceeds of which are to be used in an illegal transaction, see Contracts, 7.

Right of one paying draft against bill of lading for goods shipped to another to maintain action against carrier, see Parties, 2.

Pleading as to, see Pleading, 7.

Surety on, see Principal and Surety. Set-off in action on, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1, 2.

Subrogation of indorsers of note given to pay judgment, to judgment, see Subrogation, 2.

Usury in, see Usury.

1. A draft drawn in the ordinary form does not constitute an equitable assignment pro tanto of funds in the hands of the drawee to the credit of the drawer, before such draft has been accepted or presented for payment. First Nat. Bank v. School Dist. No. 4, 39: 655, 120 Pac. 614, — Okla. —

Actions; defenses.

2. Payment of a promissory note cannot be avoided on the ground of failure of consideration, where the answer and proofs admit that there was not a total failure of consideration and that the maker in fact received and retains a part of the agreed consideration. Daniels v. Englehart, 39: 938, 111 Pac. 3, 18 Idaho, 548.

(Annotated)

3. The maker of a note as to which there has been a partial failure of consideration, in order to obtain relief, must either rescind the contract and return the consideration received, or claim damages for breach of the contract, or pursue some remedy whereby the holder of the note may be enabled to receive just compensation for the part of the consideration which actually passed. Daniels v. Englehart, 39: 938, 111 Pac. 3, 18 Idaho, 548.

BILLS OF LADING.

Right of one who is to be notified of arrival of goods consigned to another to maintain action against carrier, see Parties, 2.

BIRTHS.

Validity of statute as to registration of, see Constitutional Law, 9.

BLASTING.

Liability for negligence of independent contractor in, see Master and Servant, 8, 9.

BOARDS.

Validity of contract to pay for services in selling goods to public board, see Contracts, 6.

BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

Of checks, see Checks.

BONDS.

Bail bonds, see Bail and Recognizance. Conversion of, by bankrupt brokerage firm, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Constitutionality of statute as to contractor's bond see Constitutional Law, 5, 6; Statutes, 3.

Failure of town board to require bond upon making contract, see Contracts, 1.

Of guardian, see Guardian and Ward. Liability and release of surety on, generally, see Principal and Surety.

1. The bond of a constable is not subject to forfeiture, thereby subjecting the sureties to liability thereon, for failure to return to the defendant, upon the successful termination of an attachment suit, the amount of the plaintiff's claim, which the defendant paid to the officer at the time of the levy, to secure the release of the goods attached, and which the officer paid to the plaintiff's attorney, as this act was not performed in furtherance of the duty of such officer. Jersey City Use of Elliott v. Schoppe (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 577, 82 Atl. 913, — N. J. — (Annotated)
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

State bonds.

2. The burning of the state capitol building creates an emergency for the securing of money with which to replace it, within the provision of a Constitution authorizing the submission to the voters of a proposition to issue bonds in case of unforeseen emergencies. Church v. Hadley, 39: 248, 145 S. W. 8, — Mo. —

3. The fund commissioners may, after they have failed to sell the bonds by their own efforts, pay a commission to brokers to dispose of them, under a statute providing for the issuance of a certain amount of bonds to build a state capitol, which shall be sold for not less than par, and the proceeds, which are estimated by the statute to equal the aggregate amount of bonds authorized to be issued, "more or less," appropriated to the construction of the building. Church v. Hadley, 39: 248, 145 S. W. 8, — Mo. — (Annotated)

BONUS.

To purchasing agent to secure his business, see Contracts, 8; Evidence, 17 a.

BOUNDARIES.

The boundary and jurisdiction of a state which has been along the main channel of a stream is not changed by the construction by a railroad company, of a dam which throws the main channel to the other side of an island for the purpose of convenience in the construction of a bridge. State v. Bowen, 39: 200, 135 N. W. 494, — Wis. — (Annotated)

BRIBERY.

Corroboration of testimony of accomplice, see Evidence, 33-36.

Acceptance of a gift for prior official action without corrupt private understanding is not bribery. State v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

BRIDGES.

Change of channel of boundary stream by construction of, see Boundaries.

Require removal of building interfering with operation of drawbridge, see Estoppel, 1; Parties, 5; Waters, 1, 2.

BROKERS.

Proving claim in bankruptcy both against estate of brokerage firm and that of individual partner, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Right to pay commission to brokers for disposing of state bonds, see Bonds, 3.

Parol evidence to show agency, see Evidence, 14.

Parol evidence in action to recover secret profits, see Evidence, 14.

BUILDING CONTRACTS.

Measure of damages on, see Damages, 6.

BUILDINGS.

Building contracts, see Building Contracts.

Measure of damages for wrongfully enjoining erection of, see Damages, 12.

Removal of building interfering with drawbridge, see Estoppel, 1; Parties, 5; Waters, 1, 2.

Right of one wrongfully enjoined from erecting to damages, see Injunction, 5.

Demurrer to allegation that owner of building had failed to provide means for extinguishment of fire, see Pleading, 13.

Effect of landlord's failure to equip buildings with fire escapes on right to recover rent, see Landlord and Tenant, 5, 6.

1. A property owner who has provided statutory fire escapes and rented certain stores above the second story in the building to firms engaged in a legitimate manufacturing business is not bound to exercise supervision over the portions of the building rented, so as to insure that the passages or entrances to the fire escapes are at all times kept open. West v. Inman, 39: 744, 74 S. E. 527, 137 Ga. 822. (Annotated)

2. A property owner who has provided statutory fire escapes and rented stores above the second story in the building to firms engaged in legitimate manufacturing business is not liable in damages to an employee in the building working on a floor above the second, who suffers injuries from fire in consequence of obstructions placed in the passageway to the fire escape by a tenant who had rented that portion of the building around and about the escape. West v. Inman, 39: 744, 74 S. E. 527, 137 Ga. 822.

BULK SALES.

Regulation of, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

BURDEN OF PROOF.

See Evidence, 1-8.

BUSINESS.

Unfair competition, see Unfair Competition.

CANCELATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance, 2. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CANDIDATES.

Power of political committee to pass on eligibility of, see Elections.

CAPITOL.

Burning of state capitol as an emergency justifying issuance of state bonds, see Bonds, 2.

CARRIERS.

Injury by automobile to passenger alighting from street car, see Automobile, 2.

Damages in action against, see Damages, 4.

Liability for false imprisonment by special officer, see False Imprisonment.

Liability for act of station agent in instituting wrongful search, see Master and Servant, 5a.

Right of one who is to be notified of arrival of goods consigned to another to maintain action against carrier, see Parties, 2.

Instructions as to duty to protect passenger from insult, see Trial, 12.

Assault; arrest.

Evidence on question of damages for, see Evidence, 23.

Evidence as to authority of conductor to cause arrest, see Evidence, 26.

Instructions in action for false imprisonment, see Trial, 12, 16.

1. A street railway company is liable for the death of a boy whom the motorman in charge of the car has received for transportation to the police station, where he refuses to permit him to leave the car, and in attempting to restrain him from doing so the boy falls under the wheels and is killed, since the boy, being a passenger, is entitled to treatment as such, and to have the car stopped at his request to give him an opportunity safely to alight. Lewis v. Bowling Green R. Co. 39: 929, 144 S. W. 377, 147 Ky. 460.

2. Express authority to a conductor to cause the arrest and detention of a witness to disorderly conduct on the train is not necessary to render a railroad company liable for such arrest and detention of a passenger, as a witness against a passenger whom the conductor, while acting within the line of his duty, caused to be arrested. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441.

3. A railroad company is liable for false imprisonment, if its conductor, when directing officers to arrest a disorderly passenger, causes him to lock up another passenger who merely witnessed the disorder, as a witness against the guilty party. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441. (Annotated) Measure of care required; negligence generally.

Presumption and burden of proof as to negligence, see Evidence, 5.

4. The conductor is not bound to stop a car between stations in a subway to permit a passenger to alight to recover property accidentally dropped from the car, where to do so would involve risk of collision and place the passengers in peril. Bursteen v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 39: 313, 98 N. E. 27, 211 Mass. 459. (Annotated)

5. A railroad company is not liable for injury to a pregnant woman from sight of a lunatic in the car who was acting strangely, where its employees had no knowledge of her condition, and there was nothing in the conduct of the lunatic to apprise a person of ordinary prudence that danger to other passengers was to be anticipated. Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brewer, 39: 647, 143 S. W. 1014, 147 Ky. 166. (Annotated)

6. A carrier is liable to a passenger who holds a through ticket over its road but who must make a change of trains to reach her destination, for the failure and refusal of its employees to inform such passenger, upon her repeated requests for information, of the place where such change is to be made, by reason of which failure the passenger is carried past her destination, and is required to take passage upon another railroad and to expend an additional sum for fare, and is caused to suffer a loss of time and certain inconveniences. Lilly v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 39: 663, 122 Pac. 502, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

7. A street railway company which runs a car at high and dangerous speed without warning, past another which is so overcrowded that the passengers in moving about crowd one of their number, who is standing on the platform, over the line of safety between the two tracks, may be liable for injury to him through collision with the car so operated. Elliott v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 608, 122 Pac. 614, — Wash. —.

Duty as to vehicle or place of riding.

8. A street car company which by ordinance is bound to maintain gates upon the sides of car platforms next to parallel tracks is liable for injury to a passenger crowded off the platform and injured by a passing car, although the gate was opened by a fellow passenger. Elliott v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 608, 122 Pac. 614, — Wash. —.

9. A street car company is not liable for injury to a passenger who falls from the step of a car which is slippery because of tobacco juice which has been expectorated there, if there is nothing to show that it had been there any length of time, and the conductor is not shown to have been negligent in failing to discover it before the accident happened. Hotenbrink v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 39: 419, 97 N. E. 624, 211 Mass. 77. (Annotated)

Ejection of passenger.

10. One holding a return trip railroad ticket which must be validated at the intermediate terminal to be good for return, who applies to the proper officer for validation, and is referred to another official in another city, who refuses to validate the ticket because of alleged want of authority, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

informing the ticket holder that the ticket will not be honored, is not deprived of the right to hold the railroad company liable for his ejection from the train by presenting a local ticket to pass the gate keeper, who refuses to pass him on his invalidated ticket; and it is immaterial that the gate-keeper's refusal to honor the ticket was a breach of the carriage contract giving a right of action. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Lucas, 39: 512, 144 S. W. 1126, — Tex. —.

Injuries in getting on or off.

Fact that passenger rode on platform as defense in action for injury while alighting from car, see Action or Suit, 2.

Presumption of negligence of carrier, see Evidence, 5.

Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 5.

11. One is negligent as matter of law in attempting to board a street car when the vestibule doors are closed and it is in motion, so that all that he can do is to stand on the step and maintain his position by clinging to the hand-holds. Sigl v. Green Bay Traction Co. 39: 65, 135 N. W. 506, — Wis. —.

Stations; approaches; platforms.

12. A railroad company is not negligent in placing, in the daytime, a few ties necessary for repairing its tracks along the path between the car exit and the highway at a flag station. Fulghum v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 39: 558, 74 S. E. 584, 158 N. C. 555. (Annotated)

13. A passenger, in attempting to reach the highway from a car exit along a path upon which ties have been placed for repair purpose, is negligent in stepping upon one which is wet and slippery, and is lying in an inclined position, when he might have stepped over it, or gone around it in safety, and cannot therefore hold the railroad company liable for a resulting injury. Fulghum v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 39: 558, 74 S. E. 584, 158 N. C. 555.

Baggage.

14. The mere fact that articles tendered by a passenger for transportation as baggage are packed in a basket does not charge the carrier with notice of their character, so as to charge it with liability for their loss as baggage in case they are not properly checked. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Miller, 39: 634, 145 S. W. 889, — Ark. —.

15. Bed linen and other articles designed for use in his business by one moving from one locality to another to engage in the hotel business cannot be carried by him as baggage at the risk of the carrier. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Miller, 39: 634, 145 S. W. 889, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

16. A carrier which accepts for transportation as baggage, articles known by it to be freight, assumes the liability of a freight carrier, and may collect the regular transportation charge where the statute prohibits all discrimination in rates. St. Louis,

I. & M. & S. R. Co. v. Miller. 39: 634, 145 S. W. 889, — Ark. —
Carrying live stock.

17. A railroad company which has taken an animal for transportation on a regular freight schedule is not liable for its loss because it refuses to attach the car to a passenger train or otherwise hasten the shipment, upon receiving notice that the animal is ill, where the train carrying it is substantially on schedule time, and there is no faster freight train to which it could be attached. Pine Bros. v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39: 639, 133 N. W. 128, — Iowa, —
 (Annotated)

Discrimination; exclusion from premises.

18. A railway company has the right to exclude from its depots and warehouses persons who come there in an intoxicated condition, and who are turbulent and troublesome and disturb and interfere with the agents and employees of the company in the discharge of their work, and may also exclude therefrom those who are reported to be dishonest, and on account of whose past presence in and about its depots and warehouses freight had been removed without the company's consent, and for which it was compelled to pay the consignee the value thereof. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 39: 126, 120 Pac. 952, — Okla. —

19. A railroad company may justify the exclusion of a particular drayman from its premises, to the injury of his business, by showing that, if he was permitted upon the premises he would go about unattended, and that merchandise had disappeared for which the railroad was compelled to pay; while he was about the premises that he was frequently intoxicated; was quarrelsome and interfered with employees in the performance of their duties, and had been arrested for intoxication and theft. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Armstrong, 39: 26, 120 Pac. 952, — Okla. — (Annotated)

CARS.

Insurance of private railroad cars, see Insurance, 12, 13.

CARTMEN.

Discrimination between, by carrier, see Carriers, 19.

CASE.

Conspiracy to induce breach of contract, see Conspiracy, 2.

CATTLE.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 17.

CERTIFICATE.

Of judge to record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Effect of absence of certificate that printed case contains on the evidence, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Of deposit, see Banks, 7.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

Negligence of city officers in issuing duplicate paving tax certificates, see Evidence, 38.

Proximate cause of loss to bank accepting stolen paving tax certificates, see Proximate Cause.

CERTIORARI.

Certiorari is the proper remedy to review the decision of the governor in removing a county official from office. State ex rel. Kinsella v. Eberhart, 39: 788, 133 N. W. 857, 116 Minn. 313.

CHARITIES.

1. The fact that a public charitable hospital receives pay from a patient for lodging and care does not affect its character as a "charitable institution," nor its rights or liabilities as such in relation to such a patient. Taylor v. Protestant Hospital Asso. 39: 427, 96 N. E. 1089, 85 Ohio St. 90.

2. A public charitable hospital, organized as such and open to all persons, although conducted under private management, is not liable for injuries to a patient of the hospital, resulting from the negligence of a nurse employed by it. Taylor v. Protestant Hospital Asso. 39: 427, 86 N. E. 1089, 85 Ohio St. 90.

CHATTEL MORTGAGE.

Evidence in replevin suit to gain possession of mortgaged chattels, see Evidence, 10.

Right to jury trial in trover to recover possession of mortgaged chattel, see Jury, 3.

1. The attachment of a mortgaged chattel as the property of the mortgagor pending a suit for strict foreclosure of the mortgage is subject to the determination of the foreclosure suit, even though the attachment was levied and the foreclosure suit begun when the property was temporarily in another state. North Carolina Land & Lumber Co. v. Boyer, 39: 627, 191 Fed. 552, 112 C. C. A. 162.

2. The declaration of a forfeiture and institution of a proceeding strictly to foreclose a mortgage on chattels vest title in the mortgagee which, when judicially established by judgment, takes precedence of an attachment levied against the property as that of the mortgagor after the foreclosure suit was begun. North Carolina Land & Lumber Co. v. Boyer, 39: 627, 191 Fed. 552, 112 C. C. A. 162.

3. The fact that a mortgaged chattel is temporarily out of the state when a forfeiture is declared and proceedings for strict foreclosure instituted does not prevent the title from passing to the mortgagee, which he can assert against subsequent attachments of the property in the state where the property is found as that of the mortgagor. North Carolina Land & Lumber Co. v. Boyer, 39: 627, 191 Fed. 552, 112 C. C. A. 162. (Annotated)

CHATELS.

Mortgage on, see Chattel Mortgage.

CHAUFFEUR.

Negligence of, see Automobiles.

CHECKS.

As to duties and liability of bank with respect to, see Banks, 4, 5.

Sufficiency of pleading to show bona fides of purchase, see Pleading, 6.

1. The bona fides of one purchasing a check is not destroyed by the fact that he knows there are no funds on deposit to meet it. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —. (Annotated)

2. That one takes an overdue check from the payee does not, in the absence of other suspicious circumstances, subject him to equitable defense in an action against the drawer. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

3. One who takes from a payee, who indorses the instrument, a check with the understanding that he is to lend money to the drawer, with the check as security, is a first holder, and not entitled to the rights of a bona fide indorsee, and cannot use any part of the proceeds in satisfaction of his claim against the indorser. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

4. That the one attempting to raise a loan on a check for the benefit of its maker is willing to have a material portion of the proceeds applied on his own debt to the one to whom the paper is offered charges the latter with the duty of inquiring from the maker as to the facts of the transaction, and he can gain no rights in excess of the authority actually conferred on the agent. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

5. One who draws a check and places it in possession of another assumes, as against a bona fide purchaser, the risk of its being diverted from the purpose for which it was executed. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

CHURCHES.

See Religious Societies.

CIVIL DAMAGES.

Refusal of new trial because of inadequacy of damages in action for, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Competency of witness in action under civil damage act, see Witnesses, 1.

CLAIMS.

Against estates, see Bankruptcy.

CLASSIFICATION.

By statute, see Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

CLOTHING.

Admission of, in evidence, see Appeal and Error, 20.

COLLATERAL SECURITY.

See Pledge and Collateral Security.

COMBINATIONS.

Illegal Combinations, see Monopoly and Combinations.

COMITY.

See Conflict of Laws.

COMMERCE.

A package, to be unbroken within the meaning of a law permitting liquor to be delivered in unbroken packages in dry territory, need not necessarily be the one received by the wholesaler, but he may fill a smaller receptacle, as a demijohn, from a larger one, and deliver it in the unbroken form in which he prepares it. State v. Maire, 39: 1051, 120 Pac. 87, 66 Wash. 591. (Annotated)

COMMERCIAL TRAVELERS.

Authority of, see Principal and Agent.

COMMISSIONERS.

Validity of regulations by food commissioner, see Food.

COMMISSION GOVERNMENT.

See Municipal Corporations, 1.

COMMITTEE.

Of political party, see Elections.

COMMON CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

See Husband and Wife, 3a; Taxes, 3.

COMPARATIVE INJURY.

Doctrine of, in suit to enjoin infringement of patents, see Injunction, 2.

COMPENSATION.

Compensation of attorneys, see Attorneys.

Of attorney acting as special prosecutor for the state at request of private parties, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, 3.

Requiring physician or midwife to supply information without compensation, see Constitutional Law, 9.

For taking of property, see Eminent Domain.

Of officer generally, see Officers, 3.

COMPLAINT.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 2-10.

CONCEALMENT.

Effect of, on running of limitations, see Limitations of Actions, 3.

CONCLUSIONS.

In pleading, see Pleading, 13.

CONDEMNATION.

Of property, see Eminent Domain

CONDITION.

Of stockholder's right to maintain action, see Corporations, 4.

Relating to real property, see Covenants and Conditions.

In insurance contract, see Insurance.

Of revocation of grant of land by state, see State.

CONDONATION.

In divorce case, see Divorce and Separation, 6.

CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS.

What constitutes confidential relation which will sustain parol promise to hold property conveyed in trust, see Trusts, 1.

CONFLICT OF LAWS.

Admissibility of judgment of other state, see Evidence, 10.

Action by foreign administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 2, 3.

The courts of a state where gambling transactions are illegal will not enforce a contract growing out of such transaction made in another state, even though the transaction is valid there. Burrus v. Witcover, 39: 1005, 74 S. E. 11, 158 N. C. 384.

CONSENT.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 2.

Of parent to enlistment of son in militia, see Militia.

CONSIDERATION.

Failure of, as defense in action on note, see Bills and Notes, 2, 3.

Of contract, see Contracts, 3.

Illegality of consideration for contract, see Contracts, 5-7.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 12.

Necessity of return of, on revocation of grant of lands by state, see State.

CONSPIRACY.

Jurisdiction of equity in case of, see Equity, 1.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 3.

Giving perjured testimony in pursuance of, see Judgment, 2; Perjury, 1.

1. In order to sustain a civil action for conspiracy it is generally necessary that there shall be an averment and proof of the commission of an act which, if done by one alone, would at the common law constitute a ground for action on the case. Sleeper v. Baker, 39: 864, 134 N. W. 716. — N. D. —

2. The civil action of conspiracy is a tort action, and cannot in general be maintained for inducing a third person to break his contract with the plaintiff, except where direct fraud or force or coercion has been used: the consequence at law being only a broken contract, for which the party to the contract may have his remedy by suing 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

upon it. Sleeper v. Baker, 39: 864, 134 N. W. 716, — N. D. —

CONSTABLE.

Bond of, see Bonds, 1.

CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

Former jeopardy, see Constitutional Law, 1-3.

As to taking property for public use, see Eminent Domain.

As to enactment of statute, see Statutes.

Ex post facto laws.

1. A statute providing that a person acquitted of a criminal charge on the ground that he was insane when the offense was committed, shall be committed to the asylum for the dangerous insane, and shall not be liberated therefrom except as prescribed in the act, is not ex post facto as to a person tried and acquitted on that ground after the statute was enacted for an offense committed before its passage. Re Clark, 39: 680, 121 Pac. 492, 86 Kan. 539.

Equal protection and privileges.

See also infra, 5.

2. An employees' insurance act which applies to employers employing five or more workmen or operatives does not make an unjust or arbitrary classification. State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 39: 694, 97 N. E. 602, 85 Ohio St. 349.

3. A statute making it a misdemeanor to take usury on loans secured by household or kitchen furniture is not invalid as tending to deprive persons lending on such security of the equal protection of the laws, since such articles furnish a proper basis for classification in dealing with usurious loans. State v. Davis, 39: 136, 73 S. E. 130, 157 N. C. 648.

Due process of law.

4. No public policy of the state can be allowed to override the positive guaranties of the Constitution, or devalue persons of their title and property except in the way the law provides. Hill v. Woodward, 39: 538, 57 So. 294, — Miss. —

5. The attempt to make an owner who fails to take from one contracting to construct for him a ditch or reservoir a bond conditioned to pay all claims for materials, farm produce, provisions, or goods of any kind furnished the contractor or subcontractor, personally liable for such claims, is invalid, as taking property without due process of law, and denying him the equal protection of the laws, so far as it attempts to include claims for materials which do not go to enhance the value of his property. George Bolln Co. v. North Platte Valley Irrig. Co. 39: 868, 121 Pac. 22, — Wyo. — (Annotated)

6. Limiting the surety which a property owner may take from one contracting to do work for him to secure payment of laborers and materialmen to incorporated companies deprives him of his liberty to contract, and denies him the equal protection of the laws. George Bolln Co. v. North

Platte Valley Irrig. Co. 39: 868, 121 Pac. 22, — Wyo. —

7. A statute providing that when a person is acquitted of a criminal charge on the ground of insanity when the offense was committed, the jury shall so state in their verdict and shall pass specifically on the question of sanity, and thereupon such person shall be committed to asylum for the dangerous insane, and shall not be liberated except upon an order of the court committing him thereto, and until the superintendent of such asylum shall certify in writing to such committing court that in his opinion such person is wholly recovered, and that no person will be in danger by his discharge, is not unconstitutional as being a denial of due process of law within the provisions of the Federal or state Constitution relating thereto. Re Clark, 39: 680, 121 Pac. 492, 86 Kan. 539.

8. An employee is not deprived of his recourse to the courts by an employees' insurance act which provides that an employer of five or more workmen who pays a certain premium into the state insurance fund, and posts certain notices to this effect in his place of business, shall be relieved of liability to respond in damages to an employee for injury, except in case of wilful or statutory negligence, and which provides further for a board of awards to hear and determine questions concerning the payment of claims, and for an appeal from their determination in cases where the right of the claimant is denied upon any ground affecting the basis of the claim. State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 39: 694, 97 N. E. 602, 85 Ohio St. 349.

Police power.

9. The provisions of an act to establish a bureau of vital statistics, and to provide for a prompt and permanent registration of all births and deaths occurring within the state, which require a physician or midwife in attendance upon the birth of a child to certify, without compensation, as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, and, if legitimate, to supply information in regard to the parents of the child, are an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of the police power, and therefore unconstitutional and void. State v. Boone, 39: 1015, 95 N. E. 924, 84 Ohio St. 346. (Annotated)

10. A statute which provides that an employer of five or more workmen may pay a certain premium into a state insurance fund and, upon posting notices to this effect in his place of business, thereby be relieved from liability for injuries to his employees except in cases of wilful or statutory negligence, and provides further that in case of his failure to accept the benefit of such act he shall be liable to his employees for injuries resulting from negligence, and in such action the defenses of assumption of risk, contributory negligence, and fellow-servant rule shall not be available to him, is a valid and constitutional enactment authorized under the police power of a state. State ex rel. Yaple v. Creamer, 39: 694, 97 N. E. 602, 85 Ohio St. 349. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

CONSTRUCTION.

Of contract of employment, see Contracts, 4.

Of statute, see Statutes, 4, 5.

Of will, see Wills.

CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS.

See Trusts, 3.

CONTEMPT.

Contempt proceedings will not lie to enforce an order of restitution of money secured in satisfaction of a judgment which is subsequently reversed, if, when the order is passed, the money is no longer in possession of the judgment creditor. Dodson v. Butler, 39: 1100, 142 S. W. 503, — Ark. — (Annotated)

CONTEST.

Of will, see Wills, 2.

CONTINUING GUARANTY.

See Guaranty.

CONTRACTORS.

Validity of statute as to nature of bonds to be taken from, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6; Statutes, 3.

Liability of contractor not entitled to use union label for use of label on work, see Trademarks, 2.

CONTRACTS.

Whether action one on contract or in tort, see Action or Suit, 2.

Conflict of laws as to, see Conflict of Laws.

Action of conspiracy for inducing breach of contract, see Conspiracy, 2.

Restrictions on right of, see Constitutional Law, 6.

As to covenants, see Covenants and Conditions.

Punitive damages for breach of, see Damages, 3.

Measure of damages as to, see Damages, 5, 6.

Mental anguish as element of damages for, see Damages, 13, 14.

Duress, see Duress.

Power of equity to compel renewal of, see Equity, 1.

Requiring transfer of chattels between husband and wife to be in writing, see Husband and Wife, 2.

Of incompetent person, see Incompetent Persons.

As to insurance contracts, see Insurance.

Contract of employment, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

As to mortgages, see Mortgages.

Third party's right to sue for breach, see Parties, 3, 4.

Power of partners respecting, see Partnership.

Pleading as to, see Pleading, 6, 7.

Liability of agent on, see Principal and Agent, 2.

Reformation of, see Reformation of Instruments.

Of religious society, see Religious Societies.

Specific performance of, see Specific Performance.

Contracts as to real property generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Implied agreements.

1. A town board may audit and allow claims for services rendered under a contract for work and labor, which has been fully performed and the work approved and accepted, although the contract was invalid because no bond for the protection of the town and persons furnishing labor and material was given, as required by statute. State ex rel. Morris v. Clark, 39: 43, 134 N. W. 129, 116 Minn. 500. (Annotated)

2. A contract for the purchase of items of personalty by a city in excess of the charter limitation of the amount to be included in one contract is void, and no liability as upon an implied contract is created against the municipality. Perry Water, L. & I. Co. v. Perry, 39: 72, 120 Pac. 582, 29 Okla. 593. (Annotated)

Consideration.
3. No new consideration is necessary to validate the ratification of an alteration in a promissory note, under the provisions of the negotiable instruments act that, where a negotiable instrument is materially altered without the assent of all parties liable thereon, it is avoided, except as against the party who has himself made, authorized, or assented to the alteration and subsequent indorsements. Holyfield v. Harrington, 39: 131, 115 Pac. 546, 84 Kan. 760. (Annotated)

Construction.

4. A promoter of a corporation who undertakes, as part of the inducement to the undertaking, to devote his whole time and attention to the corporate business, without specifying the period over which the services are to extend, is not bound to continue such services for a reasonable time, but may cease to render them at pleasure, without liability to persons who invested their money on the faith of the promise, although the withdrawal of the service wrecks the corporation. Watson v. Gugino, 39: 1090, 98 N. E. 18, 204 N. Y. 535.

Validity; public policy.

Implied contract to pay for services rendered or goods obtained under invalid contract, see supra, 1, 2.

Effect of public policy on enforcement of contract of other state, see Conflict of Laws.

Validity of contracts between husband and wife, see Husband and Wife, 2.

Replevin to recover property intended for illegal use, see Replevin.

5. A lease is not rendered void by mere knowledge on the part of the lessor of intention to subject the premises for the purpose of running a bawdyhouse. Ashford v. Mace, 39: 1104, 146 S. W. 474, — Ark. —. (Annotated)

6. An agreement to pay for services in selling goods to a public board which does not contemplate the exercise of personal or political influence, and in the carrying out of which no such influence is in fact exerted, and which is otherwise unobjectionable, is not rendered void because the salesman's compensation is made to depend upon the success of his efforts, or because he makes a legitimate argument to one of the members of the board while the others are not present. Kansas City Paper House v. Foley R. Printing Co. 39: 747, 118 Pac. 1056, 85 Kan. 678. (Annotated)

7. That the acceptor of a draft the proceeds of which are to furnish margins in an illegal transaction in futures was not a party to the illegal transaction does not prevent his setting up the illegality of such transaction out of which the consideration for the acceptance grew, to defeat liability thereon. Burrus v. Witcover, 39: 1005, 74 S. E. 11, 158 N. C. 384. (Annotated)

8. No compensation can be recovered by a salesman for services rendered under a contract which contained a provision for reimbursing him a certain sum to be allowed purchasing agents for turning business his way. Smith v. David B. Crockett Co. 39: 1148, 82 Atl. 569, 85 Conn. 282. (Annotated)

CONTRADICTION.

Of witness, see Witnesses, 2.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

In general, see Negligence, 7-9.

CONVERSION.

By guardian, see Guardian and Ward.
Complaint in action to hold guardian liable for, see Pleading, 2.

In general, see Trover.

CONVICTS.

Ex post facto laws as to, see Constitutional Law, 1.

CORPORATIONS.

Interpretation of contract by promoter to devote his whole time and attention to corporate business, see Contracts, 4.

Setting aside transfer of stock because of duress, see Duress.

Oral evidence to show incumbency of office in private corporation by witness, see Evidence, 9.

Including railroad property in levee district as violation of charter rights, see Levees.

Venue of action against, see Venue, 2.

Liabilities.

1. A private corporation, like an individual, is liable for the acts of its agent, in instituting a malicious prosecution, if the same were done while acting within the scope of his authority. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holliday, 39: 205, 120 Pac. 927, — Okla. —.

2. A corporation cannot avoid liability upon a contract signed by its superintendent.

ent, who had authority to employ men, engaging a person to do a particular part of the work required by the corporation for a term of one year, because his authority was limited to employing help orally from day to day, since the other contracting party had a right to rely upon his apparent possession of the authority which he assumed to exercise. Slocum v. Seattle Taxicab Co. 39: 435, 121 Pac. 67, 67 Wash. 220.

Officers; liabilities.

Officers of savings bank, see Banks, 14-16.

3. A managing officer of a corporation which is engaged in the manufacture for general consumption of an article dangerous to use is personally liable for injury to a consumer by its use, if he knows of its dangerous character and actively promotes its manufacture and sale. Wines v. Crosby & Co. 39: 901, 135 N. W. 96, — Mich. — (Annotated)

Rights of shareholders; actions.

Stockholders in bank, see Banks, 1-3.

4. Where the officers, of whose mismanagement and misconduct a plaintiff stockholder complains, are in control of the corporation, both by being the officers thereof and the holders of a majority of the stock, it is not necessary for a complaining stockholder to show as a condition necessary to maintain his suit that he first made demand on said officers to proceed on behalf of the corporation to remedy the wrongs complained of. Exchange Bank v. Bailey, 39: 1032, 116 Pac. 812, 29 Okla. 246.

Insolvency; rights of creditors.

Insolvency of banks, see Banks, 8-13.

Receivers of insolvent corporation, see Receivers.

5. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation cannot enforce its redemption at par, as provided in his contract, if the assets of the company are not sufficient to pay its debts. Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co. 39: 1007, 140 S. W. 1011, 145 Ky. 634. (Annotated)

6. The claims of directors and holders of common stock of a corporation for money advanced to keep it a going concern will not be postponed in the winding up of the corporation to the retirement of preferred stock, because at the time they assumed the management, the assets were sufficient to pay preferred stockholders in full, had the concern been wound up at that time. Fryer v. Wiedemann, 39: 1011, 146 S. W. 752, 148 Ky. 379.

7. Directors and holders of common stock in a corporation, although occupying a position of trust towards preferred stockholders, do not, by lending money to the corporation to enable it to carry on its business, even as to such an amount as to render the preferred stock worthless, postpone their claims to repayment to the retirement of the preferred stock, which was issued under an agreement that no lien should be placed on the property of the corporation without consent of the preferred stockholders. Fryer v. Wiedemann, 39: 1011, 146 S. W. 752, 148 Ky. 379. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

8. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation, whose certificate provides that no lien shall be placed upon the corporate property without his consent, is not entitled to priority over corporate creditors in the distribution of its assets. Fryer v. Wiedemann, 39: 1011, 146 S. W. 752, 148 Ky. 379.

CORROBORATION.

Of accomplice, see Evidence, 33-36.

COSTS AND FEES.

Liability of grantor for costs of defending title against action by stranger, see Covenants and Conditions, 1.

COTENANCY.

Evidence to establish ownership of cotenant, see Evidence, 19.

Notice to mortgagee of interest of cotenant, see Notice.

Partition between cotenants, see Partition.

Conveyance of land to one in trust for himself and another, see Trusts, 2.

COUNSEL.

See Attorneys.

COUNSEL FEES.

See Attorneys.

COUNTERCLAIM.

See Set-Off and Counterclaim.

COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

Pretended sale of, see False Pretenses.

COUNTIES.

Estoppel of, see Estoppel, 1.

Action to compel removal of obstruction to operation of drawbridge, see Parties, 5; Waters, 1.

Liability for expense of relieving pauper, see Poor and Poor Laws, 1-3.

Liability for injury to pauper by failure to give aid to him, see Poor and Poor Laws, 4.

COUNTS.

In pleading, see Pleading, 4.

COUNTY ATTORNEY.

See District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

COURTS.

Depriving employee of recourse to, see Constitutional Law, 8.

Contempt of, see Contempt.

Aiding in enforcement of illegal contract, see Contracts, 7.

Power to suspend sentence, see Criminal Law, 4.

Power to authorize guardian of incompetent to consent to conveyance of real estate in another state. see Incompetent Persons.

Judicial proceedings on Sunday, see Sunday.

As to venue of action, see Venue.

1. Proceedings for the removal of a public officer from his office are of a judicial character, so that, although the power of removal is conferred by statute upon the governor, his action is subject to review by the courts. State ex rel. Kinsella v. Eberhart, 39: 788, 133 N. W. 857, 116 Minn. 313. (Annotated)

2. The proper court of the county in which is located land ceded by a state to the Federal government for a soldiers' home has jurisdiction to grant an administration on the estate of a soldier dying in the home. Divine v. Unaka Nat. Bank, 39: 586, 140 S. W. 747, — Tenn. —. (Annotated)

2a. The courts of one state have no jurisdiction to try one for the murder of a person who dies there as the result of an act done in another state after the performance of which the deceased removes from one state to the other. Com. v. Apkins, 39: 822, 146 S. W. 431, 148 Ky. 207. (Annotated)

3. A Federal bankruptcy court is not bound by the decisions of the courts of the state in which it is sitting, as to the right of one whose property has been converted and consumed, to waive the tort and sue in contract for its value. Reynolds v. New York Trust Co. 39: 391, 188 Fed. 611, 110 C. C. A. 409.

COVENANTS AND CONDITIONS.

Mitigation of damages for breach of covenant, see Damages, 15.

1. A grantor is not, under his covenant to warrant and defend title against all lawful claims, liable for costs of a successful defense against an attempt by a stranger to establish a lien on the property. Hoffman v. Dickson, 39: 67, 118 Pac. 737, 65 Wash. 556. (Annotated)

2. When the governor, in the exercise of authority expressly conferred upon him by statute, grants to a municipality "all the interest of the state" in lands which it owns in fee, to be used for streets and other purposes, the municipality, reserving the right to use the same for street purposes without compensation, may execute a valid lease of such lands to a railroad company for its general purposes. Cleveland Terminal & V. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Ellis, 39: 1219, 97 N. E. 967, 85 Ohio St. 251.

3. A covenant of general warranty of title is not broken by the existence of a visible easement upon the portion of land granted, consisting of a right to maintain a mill pond upon it. Bennett v. Booth, 39: 618, 73 S. E. 909, — W. Va. —.

4. The prima facie presumption established by a Code provision that separation walls betwixt buildings, or yard and garden in cities and town, are owned in common, does not apply to the division wall between a building and vacant lot; and therefore, where by law such a wall erected by the owner of the building remains his exclusive property until the owner of the adjoining lot makes it a wall in common by paying one half the cost of the construction thereof, the owner of such a vacant lot, who conveys the same "with the buildings and improvements thereon" by a deed of warranty, is not liable for the amount of money his vendee is forced to pay, to give him the right to use such wall in common. Cordill v. Israel, 39: 931, 57 So. 778, — La. —.

5. When land is granted to a city upon a valuable consideration, to be used for streets and other purposes, the title will not, in the absence of an express stipulation to that end, revert in the grantor because the land is subsequently used for street and railroad purposes. Cleveland Terminal & V. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Ellis, 39: 1219, 97 N. E. 967, 85 Ohio St. 251.

CREAM.

See Food.

CRIMINAL LAW.

Right of accused to statutory time in which to plead as amendment of indictment, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Employment of private counsel to assist prosecution, see Appeal and Error, 7; District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

Review of facts on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

Prejudicial evidence, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Reversal of conviction on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Duty of attorney general to prosecute liquor case at request of governor, see Attorney General.

Bail and recognizance, see Bail and Recognizance.

Ex post facto laws, see Constitutional Law, 1.

Constitutionality of statute providing for confinement of person acquitted of crime on ground of insanity, see Constitutional Law, 1, 7.

Jurisdiction in criminal case, see Courts, 2a.

Presumption and burden of proof, see Evidence, 4.

Evidence of threats, see Evidence, 22.

Corroboration of testimony of accomplice, see Evidence, 33-36.

Sufficiency of proof, see Evidence, 31, 32.

Habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

Right to trial by jury, see Jury, 5.

Waiver of disqualification of juror, see Jury, 6.

As to requisites, sufficiency of indictment, information, and complaint, see Indictment, etc.

Injunction to abate nuisance which is also a public offense, see Nuisances, 7.

Criminal liability for nuisance, see Nuisances, 7, 10.

Reception of verdict in criminal case on Sunday, see Sunday.

Questions for court or jury, see Trial, 2.

Necessity or propriety of instructions in criminal case, see Trial, 14.

Former jeopardy.

1. Where one accused of a felony is put upon trial under an information defective upon its face, and, after trial begun, the information is amended and the trial proceeded with, there being no change in the offense charged, the accused is not thereby placed in jeopardy a second time. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

2. Placing one on trial for perjury which secured his acquittal of another offense is not placing him twice in jeopardy for the same offense. Allen v. United States, 39: 385, 194 Fed. 664, — C. C. A. —. (Annotated)

3. The reversal for a new trial upon defendant's appeal of a conviction of manslaughter upon a charge of murder, subjects him to a retrial upon the original accusation. State v. Ash, 39: 611, 122 Pac. 995, — Wash. —.

Suspension or stay of sentence.

Estoppel of convict to assert invalidity of suspension of sentence, see Estoppel, 2.

4. A court has no inherent power to suspend the execution of a sentence pronounced upon one convicted of crime for the purpose of inducing good behavior on his part. Fuller v. State, 39: 242, 57 So. 6, — Miss. —. (Annotated)

CROSSINGS.

Duty of railroad company to keep safe, see Trial, 9.

CROSSWALK.

Accumulation of snow on, see Highways, 6, 7.

CUL DE SAC.

Change in highway causing, see Highways, 8.

CURE.

Of error in trial court, see Appeal and Error, 17.

DAMAGES.

Review of discretion as to refusal of new trial for inadequacy of, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Prejudicial error in instructions as to, see Appeal and Error, 22.

For failure to transfer on books bank stock purchased, see Banks, 1.

Retaining suit for injunction in order to assess damages, see Equity, 2.

Relevancy of evidence as to, see Evidence, 23, 24.

Interest as, see Interest.

Remittitur on motion for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

Remittitur by trial court, see Trial, 19.

Exemplary or punitive.

Duty of court to define punitive damages, see Trial, 13.

1. A wrongful act done under a bona fide claim of right, and without malice in any form, constitutes no basis for punitive damages. Jopling v. Bluefield Waterworks 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

& Improv. Co. 39: 814, 74 S. E. 943, — W. Va. —.

2. Punitive damages cannot be assessed against a telephone company for mere neglect to answer the call of the subscriber, in the absence of anything to show intentional wrong or wilfulness, or conscious indifference to consequences, from which malice may be inferred. Southern Teleph. Co. v. King, 39: 402, 146 S. W. 489, — Ark. —.

3. The malicious or wilful removal of a subscriber's telephone in wanton or reckless disregard of his rights may carry punitive damages. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 39: 651, 72 S. E. 619, 157 N. C. 21. (Annotated)

4. Where the employees of a carrier wilfully neglect and refuse to give a passenger information requested as to a change of trains necessary to reach her destination, such passenger may recover exemplary damages. Lilly v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. 39: 663, 122 Pac. 502, — Okla. —.

On contracts generally.

Mental anguish for, see infra, 13, 14.

Evidence on question of damages, see Evidence, 24.

5. The damages recoverable by a subscriber whose telephone is wrongfully removed after he has paid the rental are not limited, even in an action for breach of contract, to the amount of rent wrongfully exacted, but may include compensation for the inconvenience to which he is put by breach of the contract. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleph. Co. 39: 651, 72 S. E. 619, 157 N. C. 21. (Annotated)

6. The measure of damages for defects in the construction work of buildings substantially completed according to the plans and specifications is the cost of repairing the defects, and not the difference in value of the building as constructed and what it would have been if constructed strictly according to the plans and specifications. Graves v. Allert & Fuess, 39: 591, 142 S. W. 869, — Tex. —. (Annotated)

Personal injuries.

Right to interest on, see Interest.

Instructions as to, see Trial, 13, 15.

Remittitur by trial court, see Trial, 19.

7. The amount to be awarded plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injury cannot be affected by the suggestion or consideration that the defendant company has been placed in the hands of a receiver, and that the plaintiff will realize only a small per cent of his claim. Rogers v. Hiram J. Allen Lumber Co. 39: 202, 57 So. 166, 129 La. 899.

8. The damages to be recovered by a child for the wrongful death of its father are not limited to those suffered before attaining majority, under a statute giving heirs a right of action for death, and providing that if deceased leave no widow or issue, then his parents, sisters, or minor brothers who may be dependent upon him for support, may maintain the action, the jury to allow such damages as, under all the circumstances, may seem just. Roches- ter v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 1156, 122 Pac. 23, 67 Wash. 545. (Annotated)

9. The damages to be awarded the widow and children of one killed by another's negligence may include compensation for the injury due to loss of his companionship, under a statute providing that the person suing shall recover such damages as the jury may allow, taking into consideration all damages of every kind to any and all parties interested in the suit. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 39: 978, 58 So. 471, — Miss. —

10. Where a young man nineteen years of age who is dependent upon his physical labor for his livelihood loses his right hand through the negligence of his employer, a court is justified in allowing him $7,500 as damages and reducing the verdict of $10,000 to this amount. Rogers v. Hiram J. Allen Lumber Co. 39: 202, 57 So. 166, 129 La. 899.

11. The court will declare that the allowance of $38,750, for injury to a miner capable of earning $1,200 per year, which consists of the fracture of his collar bone, which shortened in knitting, and of three ribs, which failed to unite, so that normal protection is not given to certain vital parts, and he has to wear a belt to protect them, and the shortening of one leg a half inch, so that he is left slightly lame, is, because of its amount, the result of passion or prejudice, or of a total misconception by the jury of its duties and obligations. Tunnel Mining & Leasing Co. v. Cooper, 39: 1064, 115 Pac. 901, 50 Colo. 390.

Injunction cases.

Right to damages in injunction suit, see Injunction, 5.

12. The damages for wrongfully enjoining the erection of a dwelling on a parcel of real estate are the reasonable rental value of the property with the building upon it, during the time its enjoyment was prevented by the injunction, where the building would have been erected but for the injunction, and was actually built as soon as the injunction was dissolved. Stone v. Hunter Tract Improv. Co. 39: 180, 122 Pac. 370, — Wash. — (Annotated)

Mental anguish.

13. The damages to be awarded for wrongful removal by a telephone company of a subscriber's phone may include compensation for the necessary inconvenience and humiliation fairly attributable to the wrong done, and an allowance may be made for anxiety increased by loss of telephone communication with a relative sick in the hospital, of which fact the telephone company has notice. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Teleph. & Teleg. Co. 39: 651, 72 S. E. 619, 157 N. C. 21.

14. A statute rendering telegraph companies liable for mental suffering due to negligence in receiving, transmitting, and delivering messages does not apply in case of the negligence of telephone companies. Southern Teleph. Co. v. King, 39: 402, 146 S. W. 489, — Ark. —

Mitigation; reduction.

15. A grantor is not, in a suit for breach 30 L.R.A. (N.S.)

of covenant against encumbrances, because of the enforcement against the property of a lien for a share of the cost of a party wall between the property conveyed and that adjoining it, entitled to set off the value to the property of the easement rights acquired by the grantee in the adjoining property because of the party-wall agreement. Hoffman v. Dickson, 39: 67, 118 Pac. 737, 65 Wash. 556.

DAMS.

Change of channel of boundary stream by construction of, see Boundaries.

DANGEROUS PREMISES.

Liability for injury on, see Negligence, 4, 5.

DATE.

Mistake in indictment as to date of commission of offense, see Indictment, 1.

DEATH.

Effect of death pending appeal of one of several attorneys who have agreed to share contingent fee, see Attorneys.

Validity of statute as to registration of, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 8, 9.

Resulting from obstruction of highway by uncharged electric wire, see Electricity.

Effect to terminate contract for services, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

Instruction as to damages in action for death, see Trial, 13, 15.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR.

Insolvency of debtor, see Bankruptcy; Banks, 8-13; Corporations, 5-8.

Liability of heir or devisee for debts of ancestor, see Executors and Administrators, 4.

Conveyances fraudulent as to creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

DECEDENTS.

Administration of estates of, see Executors and Administrators.

DECEIT.

See Fraud and Deceit.

DECLARATIONS.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 18, 20, 21.

In pleading, see Pleading, 2-10.

DEEDS.

Effect of conveyance and reconveyance of estate acquired by inheritance upon its course of descent, see Descent and Distribution, 1.

Alteration of, see Evidence, 8.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 12, 13.

Confirmation of title in grantee from religious society, see Religious Societies, 2.

Rights of purchasers generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

DEFAULT.

Notice of, to guarantor, see Guaranty, 2.

DEFENSE.

In general, see Action or Suit, 1.
In action against drawer of check, see Checks, 2.
Illegality of contract as, see Contracts, 7.
To action for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 5, 6.
Burden of proving, see Evidence, 1.
To indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses, see False Pretenses.
To liability for interfering with extinguishment of fires, see Fires, 2.
To application for injunction, see Injunction, 2.
To action for rent under oil and gas lease, see Mines.
Negation of, see Pleading, 5.
Duty of court to give, see Trial, 13.

DELIVERY.

Of personalty sold, see Sale, 1, 2.

DEMURRER.

See Pleading, 11-14.

DEPENDENT.

Who is a dependent within meaning of insurance policy, see Insurance, 16.

DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION.

Survivor's rights in community property, see Husband and Wife, 3a.
Liability of personal representative who is also a devisee for debts of testator, see Executors and Administrators, 4.

1. The joining by one of several children in a deed of property inherited from their father, to a stranger, for the purpose of securing a title to himself in the whole property, which was done under the erroneous belief that he could not take title directly from the coheirs, does not change the character of the title held by him as heir from inheritance to purchase, and therefore it will descend under the statute providing for inherited land descending to heirs of the half blood as well as of the whole blood, and not under the provision for the descent of land secured by purchase; at least where the intention of the parties was that he should not alienate the property, but permit it to return to the cognators at his death. Dudrow v. King, 39: 955, 83 Atl. 34, — Md. — (Annotated)

2. A conviction of manslaughter does not come within a statute forbidding an heir to inherit any portion of the estate of an ancestor for whose murder he has been convicted, where by statute technical words are to receive their technical meaning in statutory construction. Re Kirby, 39: 1088, 121 Pac. 370, — Cal. — (Annotated)
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DESERTION.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 3-6.

DESTINATION.

Failure of passenger to reach, because of refusal of information by carrier's employees, see Carriers, 6; Damages, 4.

DETINUE.

See Replevin.

DISBARMENT.

Of attorney, see Attorneys.

DISCHARGE.

Of one joint tortfeasor by release of other, see Joint Debtors and Creditors.
Of surety, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

DISCONTINUANCE.

Of action, see Dismissal or Discontinuance.

DISCRETION.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 11-13.
Of attorney general when requested by governor to prosecute proceeding, see Attorney General.

DISCRIMINATION.

By carrier, see Carriers, 16, 18, 19.
Unconstitutionality of, see Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

DISHONEST PERSONS.

Exclusion of, from railway depots and warerooms, see Carriers, 18, 19.

DISMISSAL OR DISCONTINUANCE.

The discontinuance as to some of the defendants of an action against several joint tortfeasors has no effect upon the liability of the others. Matheson v. O'Kane, 39: 475, 97 N. E. 638, 211 Mass. 91.

DISOBEDIENCE.

As a contempt, see Contempt.

DISORDERLY HOUSES.

Validity of lease of premises for purposes of, see Contracts, 5.

DISTRICT AND PROSECUTING ATTORNEYS.

Employment of private counsel to assist prosecution, see Appeal and Error, 7.

As to attorney general, see Attorney General.

Removal of county attorney by governor, see Officers, 2.

1. An order made by a court at the opening of a trial for homicide, that an attorney employed by private parties be "permitted" to assist the county attorney, is not a compliance with a statutory provision that in the trial of a felony the county attorney may, under the direction of the district court, appoint such assistants as he may deem necessary. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

2. Under a statute making it the duty of a county attorney to prosecute and defend on behalf of the state and county all actions civil or criminal, and containing the further provision that in the trial of a person charged with felony the county attorney may, under the direction of the district court, appoint such assistants as he may deem necessary, it is error to allow an attorney employed by private parties to participate in the trial of a person charged with felony, without any appointment from the county attorney under direction of the district court. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

3. An attorney acting as special prosecutor for the state by appointment of court, in the absence of the public prosecutor, cannot recover compensation from individuals for his services, although he acted at their request and they expressly promised to pay him. Coggeshall v. Conner, 39: 81, 120 Pac. 559, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

DIVORCE AND SEPARATION.

Sufficiency of evidence on action for, see Evidence, 29.

Binding effect in other state of judgment giving father right to receive visits from child, see Judgment, 4.

Annulment of marriage, see Marriage.

The suit and jurisdiction thereof.

1. A wife who has separated from her husband and gone to the home of a relative to live, with the intention of making it her home, establishes there a residence so as to give the courts of the county jurisdiction of a suit by her for divorce. McClintock v. McClintock, 39: 1127, 144 S. W. 68, 147 Ky. 409.

Grounds.

2. Under a statute permitting the court to grant a separation for such cause as, in its discretion, it may deem sufficient, one may be granted, with separate maintenance, to a wife whose husband has treated her with indifference and neglect, and said and done things in the presence of strangers to annoy and humiliate her, has exhibited rage towards her without cause, and told her they must separate, the effect of which has been to make her ill. McClintock v. McClintock, 39: 1127, 144 S. W. 68, 147 Ky. 409.

3. The essence of a wilful, obstinate desertion by a wife consists in her refusing to live with her husband when he does his marital duty, and wants her to live with him. Hill v. Hill, 39: 1117, 56 So. 941, — Fla. —.

4. Where a very young wife, without her husband's consent, goes to her parents' home, and soon thereafter the first child of the couple is born at her parents' home, and the husband makes no proper effort in the discharge of his duty to the wife and child, 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

and the wife and child remain with her parents, he is not entitled to a divorce on the statutory ground of a wilful, obstinate desertion by his wife. Hill v. Hill, 39: 1117, 56 So. 941, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

Defenses.

5. That a man maliciously turned his wife out of doors is no defense to a suit by him for divorce on the ground of her subsequent adultery, where she could have maintained an action for separate maintenance. Ellett v. Ellett, 39: 1135, 72 S. E. 861, 157 N. C. 161. (Annotated)

6. Under a statute permitting divorce for desertion for three years next preceding the filing of the libel, renewal of cohabitation as man and wife, even for four days after the three years have expired, removes the cause of divorce, which is not revived by renewed desertion at the expiration of the four days. Laflamme v. Laflamme, 39: 1133, 96 N. E. 62, 210 Mass. 156. (Annotated)

Alimony; maintenance.

7. $100 per month may be awarded to a wife as support, upon granting her a separation from her husband, with the custody and care of her infant child, where he is worth from $20,000 to $40,000, and has an income from his business of from $2,000 to $3,000. McClintock v. McClintock, 39: 1127, 144 S. W. 68, 147 Ky. 409.

Other property rights.

Effect of, on interest in proceeds of insurance policy, see Insurance, 14, 15.

8. Property transferred by a man to his wife to defraud his creditors is not within the operation of a statute providing that in case of divorce any property which either party may have obtained from the other during marriage, in consideration or by reason thereof, shall be restored to the party from whom it was obtained. Coleman v. Coleman, 39: 193, 144 S. W. 1, 147 Ky. 383. (Annotated)

DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 10.

DOGS.

Tax on, see Animals.

DOMICIL.

For purposes of divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation, 1.

DOUBLE COUNTS.

In pleading, see Pleading, 4.

DOWER.

1. A widow is dowable to the extent of one third of the real estate whereof the husband, or anyone to his use, at any time during the coverture, was seised of an inheritance such as that issue of the marriage might inherit the same as heir to the husband, unless her right to dower therein has been lawfully barred or relinquished. Couch v. Eastham, 39: 307, 73 S. E. 314, 69 W. Va. 710.

2. Where one is seised of an estate in land that is limited only on his dying without lawful children, the estate, being one that can pass to heirs if lawful children are born, is an "estate of inheritance" in which the widow is dowable though it expire by failure of issue. Couch v. Eastham, 39: 307, 73 S. E. 314, 69 W. Va. 710.

(Annotated)

DRAFTS.

Payment of draft by bank on forged indorsement, see Banks, 6.

Taking money for, by bank when insolvent, see Banks, 8-10.

Right to refuse payment of draft the proceeds of which are to be used in an illegal transaction, see Contracts, 7.

In general, see Bills and Notes; Checks.

DRAINS AND SEWERS.

Liability of municipality to employee of one employed to construct, see Master and Servant, 6.

Liability for negligence of independent contractors in constructing, see Master and Servant, 9, 10.

DRAWBRIDGE.

See Bridges.

DRAYMEN.

Discrimination by carrier between, see Carriers, 19.

DRUGS AND DRUGGISTS.

Unlawful sale of liquors by druggist, see Intoxicating Liquors.

1. A druggist is not relieved from liability for injuries caused by the negligence of his clerk in compounding a prescription by the fact that the clerk is a licensed pharmacist. Tombari v. Connors, 39: 274, 82 Atl. 640, 85 Conn. 231. (Annotated)

2. A druggist, in the filling of prescriptions, must exercise the highest practicable degree of prudence, thoughtfulness, and vigilance, and the most exact and reliable safeguards, consistent with the reasonable conduct of the business. Tombari v. Connors, 39: 274, 82 Atl. 640, 85 Conn. 231.

3. A druggist who reads the name of a drug called for by an illegible Latin prescription, as one which he knows in the quantity specified is likely to do great harm, is bound to take reasonable precautions to ascertain that his reading is right. Tombari v. Connors, 39: 274, 82 Atl. 640, 85 Conn. 231.

DRUNKENNESS.

Exclusion of intoxicated person from railway depot, and warerooms, see Carriers, 18, 19.

Guardianship of habitual drunkard, see Incompetent Persons.

DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 4-8.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

DUES.

For member of benefit association, see Insurance, 8.

DUPLICITY.

In pleading, see Appeal and Error, 8.

DURESS.

A transfer of stock cannot be set aside for duress, because of a threat to imprison the son of the transferrer, who made the contract for the transfer, if it was not carried out. Sulzner v. Cappeau-Lemley & Miller Co. 39: 421, 83 Atl. 103, 234 Pa. 162.

EASEMENTS.

Existence of visible easement as breach of warranty, see Covenants and Conditions, 3.

1. If an owner of land erect a milldam upon it, for the purpose of operating a gristmill, and thereafter convey a portion of the land, including a part of the mill pond, there is an implied reservation of an easement upon the land granted, as appurtenant to the gristmill. Bennett v. Booth, 39: 618, 73 S. E. 909, — W. Va. —.

2. A conveyance by metes and bounds of a lot with buildings thereon does not carry with it by implication the right to the use of a hallway on adjoining property of the grantor, to reach the rear and upper stories of the building conveyed, if the building is located upon a street with an alley in the rear, so that the use of the hallway is not reasonably necessary to the full enjoyment of the property conveyed, although it had been used for the purpose claimed by the common owners of the property for more than thirty years. Bussmeyer v. Jablonsky, 39: 549, 145 S. W. 772, — Mo. —.

3. An easement appurtenant to land is not lost by failure of the owner to use it for a period less than ten years. Bennett v. Booth, 39: 618, 73 S. E. 909, — W. Va. —.

EJECTION.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 10.

ELECTION.

Between counts in pleading, see Appeal and Error, 8.

ELECTIONS.

Mandamus to parish committee, see Mandamus, 2.

Who may maintain action to test eligibility of candidate at primary election, see Parties, 6.

A Democratic parish committee has no power to pass upon the eligibility of candidates for public office, as they are not charged with judicial functions or clothed with juridical power. Roussel v. Dornier, 39: 826, 57 So. 1007, — La. —.

(Annotated)

ELECTRICITY.

An electrical company is not liable for the death of one driving in a highway, by his vehicle coming in contact with a wire negligently permitted to sag after being strung across the street by one to whom it has agreed, if such person will place the wires for reception of the current, and connect them with the poles of the electrical company, to furnish current free of charge for a celebration in a park, and the overturning of the seat thereby, if the company has no notice of the defective condition of the wire. San Antonio Gas & Electric Co. v. Ocon, 39: 1046, 146 S. W. 162, — Tex. —. (Annotated)

ELECTRIC WIRES.

See Electricity.

EMERGENCY.

Issue of bonds by state in case of, see Bonds, 2, 3.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

An amendment to a statute providing for removal of milldams in the course of improving a living stream of water, that, if the mill has become useless or has been destroyed and has so remained for a period of five years without attempt to repair or rebuild it, it shall be deemed abandoned, and the commissioners may, without bargain or compensation, cause such milldam to be removed,—is an attempt to authorize the taking of private property for public benefit without compensation and therefore void. Kiser v. Board of County Comrs. 39: 1029, 97 N. E. 52, 85 Ohio St. 129.

EMPLOYEES.

Statute as to bond to be taken from contractor to secure payment of, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Rights, duties, and liabilities generally, see Master and Servant.

EMPLOYEES' INSURANCE ACT.

See Jury, 4.

EMPLOYER'S LIABILITY.

Constitutionality of statute as to, see Constitutional Law, 2.

ENACTMENT.

Of statutes, see Statutes, 1, 2.

ENTIRETY.

Of insurance contract, see Insurance, 7.

EQUAL PROTECTION AND PRIVILEGES.

See Constitutional Law, 2, 3.

EQUITABLE CONVERSION.

By will, see Wills, 7.

EQUITY.

Compelling transfer of stock on books by bill in equity, see Banks, 1.

Injunction against nuisance, see Nuisances, 2-9.

Enforcement in, of vendor's lien, see Vendor and Purchaser, 5.

See also Injunction.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

1. A manufacturer is entitled to no equitable relief to compel a labor union to renew a contract for the continued services of its members in his business on the same terms accorded his competitors, although its refusal to do so is the result of a conspiracy between the union and his competitors to ruin his business, and his employees are willing to continue work on the basis of the old contract. Saulsberry v. Coopers' International Union, 39: 1203, 143 S. W. 1018, 147 Ky. 170.

2. Where equity is by statute denied jurisdiction of claims for injury to property involving unliquidated damages, it cannot retain a suit for injunction and damages for the maintenance of a nuisance, in order to assess the damages, if the right to the injunction fails. Union Planters' Bank & T. Co. v. Memphis Hotel Co. 39: 580, 139 S. W. 715, 124 Tenn. 649.

ERROR.

As to appellate review in general, see Appeal and Error.

ESTOPPEL.

Of insurer, see Insurance, 10, 11.

Of county.

1. Permitting a building to stand below high-water mark so as to interfere with the operation of a drawbridge for a period of fourteen months does not estop the county commissioners from requiring its removal. Lenoir County v. Crabtree, 39: 1213, 74 S. E. 105, 158 N. C. 357.

By assent.

2. A convict who assents to a void provision in his sentence, that it shall not be executed during good behavior, cannot take advantage of its invalidity when the sentence is sought to be enforced against him, nor of the fact that the original term of sentence has elapsed. Fuller v. State, 39: 242, 57 So. 6, — Miss. —.

By negligence or fraud.

3. Where false representations are made by a vendor in the sale of property, the application of the doctrine of equitable estoppel does not necessarily depend upon the knowledge of the vendor of the falsity of the representations, but may rest upon the principle that one who, by representing that a certain state of facts exists, has misled another, is precluded from denying the truth of such representations and from setting up a claim inconsistent with the facts as represented, where such claim would result in loss to the other and operate as a fraud upon him. Westerman v. Corder, 39: 500, 119 Pac. 868, 86 Kan. 239.

(Annotated)

EVIDENCE.

As part of record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 3.

Objection to admission of, because of defects in pleading, see Appeal and Error, 4, 5.

Prejudicial error in admission of, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Admissibility to impeach witness, see Witnesses, 2.

Presumptions and burden of proof.

Presumption on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 9, 10.

Sufficiency of evidence to overcome presumption of larceny arising from possession of stolen property, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Presumption that separation walls between buildings or yards are used in common, see Covenants and Conditions, 4.

Presumption that money of wife invested in land in husband's name is a gift, see Trusts, 4.

Burden of proof in habeas corpus proceeding, see Habeas Corpus.

Presumption where trustee mingles trust funds with his own, that subsequent payments are made from his own portion of fund, see Trusts, 5.

1. In an action in replevin to recover possession of intoxicating liquors it is not necessary for the plaintiff affirmatively to show that they were not seized under a statute which contains the provision that no liquors seized by virtue of any warrant issued under the provisions of the act shall be taken from the possession of the officer seizing the same, under any replevin or other process, where there is nothing in the record to show that the defendants in the replevin suit are officers, or that they had seized or had a right to seize the liquor by virtue of any authority. Blunk v. Waugh, 39: 1093, 122 Pac. 717, — Okla. —.

2. Malice may be inferred from want of probable cause, in an action to recover damages for malicious prosecution. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holliday, 39: 205, 120 Pac. 927, — Okla. —.

3. The presumption is that a father who is charged by his son's wife with alienation of her husband's affections, acted without malice, and with good faith, and the burden is on the wife to show malice and absence of such motive. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 861, — W. Va. —.

4. No presumption of guilt arises from flight after the commission of a crime. Territory v. Lucero, 39: 58, 120 Pac. 304, 16 N. M. 652. (Annotated)

5. The closing of the door of a street car upon a passenger as he is attempting to enter the car, to his injury, shows prima facie negligence on the part of the street car company, although a passenger may have intentionally started the mechanism which caused the door to close. Craft v. Boston Elevated R. Co. 39: 878, 97 N. E. 610, 211 Mass. 374. (Annotated)

6. The unexplained presence upon a public highway of a runaway horse harnessed to a wagon, unattended by the owner or other person, is prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the owner. Denney v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Company (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 574, 81 Atl. 861, — N. J. — (Annotated)
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

7. Evidence that the wagon which ran over the plaintiff was specifically marked with the defendant's name is sufficient to justify the inference that the defendant was the owner. Denney v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 574, 81 Atl. 861, — N. J. —.

8. One seeking to avoid the effect of a deed because of an alleged alteration has the burden of showing that it was made after delivery. Tharp v. Jamison, 39: 100, 134 N. W. 583, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)
Best and secondary.

9. Relation of a witness to the subject-matter of his testimony, such as his incumbency of an office in a private corporation on whose behalf, as a party to the suit, he is to testify, may be shown by his oral evidence. Star Grocer Co. v. Bradford, 39: 184, 74 S. E. 509, — W. Va. —.

Documentary evidence.

10. In a replevin suit to gain possession of mortgaged property attached in a suit against the mortgagor in one state, a record of a judgment of a court in another state where the property was located when mortgaged and from which it had been temporarily removed, strictly foreclosing the mortgage in a proceeding instituted before the attachment was levied, is admissible. North Carolina Land & Lumber Co. v. Boyer, 39: 627, 191 Fed. 552, 112 C. C. A. 162.

Parol evidence as to writings.

11. Evidence of a conversation between one who guaranteed another's account and the latter, in the absence of the one to whom the guaranty is addressed, is not admissible against the latter, for the purpose of showing the meaning in which the guarantor intended the instrument to be understood. Newcomb v. Kloeblen, 39: 724, 74 Atl. 511, 77 N. J. L. 791.

12. In a contest between heirs of the whole blood and heirs of the half blood of an intestate, oral evidence is admissible to prove that the sole consideration for a deed to the ancestor from his mother, whereby he was vested with title to the tract of land in controversy, was love and affection, notwithstanding the sole recitation in the deed of a consideration is a substantial, valuable consideration. Harman v. Fisher, 39: 157, 134 N. W. 246, 90 Neb. 688.

13. The effect of an absolute deed of church property by its trustees to a stranger cannot be controlled by parol evidence that the transfer was made upon the understanding that the grantee should take the property in trust in order to secure a revenue from it by leasing it for a purpose which the members of the church would not sanction. Lafayette Street Church Soc. v. Norton, 39: 906, 95 N. E. 819, 202 N. Y. 379.

14. In an action to recover from an agent to purchase real estate, the secret profit which he made by falsely representing that he was compelled to pay for the property the price paid him, parol evidence is admissible on the ground of fraud, to show that he had, in fact, been acting as agent, and promised to purchase as cheaply.

as possible, although the positive written contract to pay him a certain sum for the property as vendor is thereby contradicted. Lavalleur v. Hahn, 39: 24, 132 N. W. 877, 152 Iowa, 649.

15. The rule excluding parol evidence to contradict or vary a written contract does not exclude parol evidence to show that a person named in a written contract, or signing the same, was the agent of an undisclosed principal. Davidson v. Hurty, 39: 324, 133 N. W. 862, 116 Minn. 280.

16. Evidence as to the true ownership of real estate, a contract for the sale of which was entered into by a real estate company as agent for the owner, and approved by the owner's husband, the wife's name not appearing therein, does not necessarily vary or contradict the terms of the contract, since the husband's approval was consistent with his wife's ownership. Davidson v. Hurty, 39: 324, 133 N. W. 862, 116 Minn. 280.

17. A statute which prohibits contracts for the sale of real estate between husband and wife does not prevent the introduction of parol evidence in an action by a wife to enforce specific performance of a contract for the sale of her property, which was negotiated by a realty company and approved by the husband in his own name, to prove that the wife was the owner and that her husband acted with her authority. Davidson v. Hurty, 39: 324, 133 N. W. 862, 116 Minn. 280.

17a. In an action by a sales agent to recover compensation under a contract which contains a provision for reimbursing him for money paid unknown persons as bonuses, evidence is admissible that the bonuses were used to influence purchasing agents in order to secure their business. Smith v. David B. Crockett Co. 39: 1148, 82 Atl. 569, 85 Conn. 282.

Hearsay; declarations; res gestæ.

18. Preliminary proof of relationship is necessary to support declarations tending to establish pedigree. Vantine v. Butler, 39: 1177, 144 S. W. 807, — Mo. —.

19. Where the possession of land by two of three tenants in common, who are not the holders of the legal title, is shown, it is competent to prove the neighborhood notoriety of their claim of ownership. International Harvester Co. v. Myers, 39: 528, 121 Pac. 500, 86 Kan. 497.

20. Sufficient extrinsic proof of relationship to support declarations of a woman since deceased, that a child was the daughter of a man to whose estate she was attempting to establish heirship, exists where it is shown that the woman, who was the wife of the man, was driven from home pregnant, and shortly after bore a daughter, and that, after staying in the neighborhood of her former home for several years, disappeared with the announced intention of going to a certain place, and was never again seen in that community; that shortly afterwards a woman with her physical characteristics, habits, and beliefs appeared with 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

a child corresponding to the one which had disappeared, arrived at a town near where the woman announced she was going, and made the declarations in controversy, while the father and members of his family recognized that the missing child was living in the locality to which the woman went. Vantine v. Butler, 39: 1177, 144 S. W. 807, — Mo. —.

21. Evidence is not admissible in an action to hold one liable in damages for personal injuries due to his negligence, to the effect that two months after the accident the injured person complained to his physician that he was suffering from dizziness and sleeplessness. John J. Radel Co. v. Borches, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

22. Upon a prosecution for assault with intent to kill evidence is admissible that some days before the assault, threats had been made to the victim, if there is evidence tending to show that the persons making the threats were in the party which committed the assault. People v. Connors, 39: 143, 97 N. E. 643, 253 Ill. 266.

Relevancy and materiality.

23. Upon the question of damages for causing the arrest and detention of a passenger as a witness, evidence is admissible that he was taken to the jail and compelled to leave a cash deposit as bail. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441.

24. Upon the question of wilfulness in removing a telephone for nonpayment of rent, although the subscriber claimed that he had paid it and had a receipt, evidence is to be considered both that the phone was removed notwithstanding this claim, and that he had been in arrears before, and that the collecting agent had informed the company that only part of the amount due had been paid. Carmichael v. Southern Bell Tele. & Teleph. Co. 39: 651, 72 S. E. 619, 157 N. C. 21.

25. Although the fact that an electric light located near the place where an accident occurred on a public street, was not burning at the time of the accident, is not evidence of negligence on the part of the municipality, it may be considered by the jury as tending to show why the injured person did not avoid the obstruction. Campbell v. Chillicothe, 39: 451, 144 S. W. 408, 239 Mo. 455.

26. Evidence that the conductor had no authority to cause the detention of a passenger as a witness to a misdemeanor on the train is not admissible in an action to hold the railroad company liable for false imprisonment because of such detention. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441.

27. Receipts, statements, and other evidences of liability in the handwriting of the principal are admissible evidence against the sureties, and prove prima facie liability on their part. Star Grocer Co. v. Bradford, 39: 184, 74 S. E. 509, — W. Va. —.

Weight, effect, and sufficiency.

Presumption on appeal as to sufficiency of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 9.

Sufficiency of evidence to overcome presumption of larceny arising from possession of stolen property, see Appeal and Error, 19.

New trial for insufficiency of, see New Trial, 1.

Jury as judge of weight of evidence, see Trial, 1.

28. Where a railway track is laid across a traveled public street in a city, a duty arises on the part of the railway company using it to exercise ordinary care to discover and avoid injury to persons or property rightfully on such crossing, so that, where a fire hose laid by the fire department of such city across the crossing to extinguish a fire is cut by the railway running its locomotive over it, thereby interrupting the effort to extinguish the fire and causing destruction to the property, it is not necessary for the owner thereof, in order to recover damages for the loss, to plead and prove wanton negligence of the railway company in cutting the hose, or prove that the person operating the locomotive had actual knowledge of its presence on the crossing. It is sufficient to prove that the failure of the railway company to use ordinary care caused the cutting of the hose and resulted in the destruction of the property. Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. 39: 237, 135 N. W. 1129, 117 Minn. 348.

29. To justify a divorce for adultery, a preponderance of evidence of the fact is sufficient; it need not be clear, cogent, and convincing. Ellett v. Ellett, 39: 1135, 72 S. E. 861, 157 N. C. 161.

30. That an impression of the name of the grantee indorsed on the back of a deed, from which an initial had been erased, which was accidentally made upon a blank space on the paper, by exposure to the weather soon after the deed was delivered, shows the initial to be missing, is strong corroborative evidence that the erasure was made before delivery. Tharp v. Jamison, 39: 100, 134 N. W. 583, — Iowa, —.

31. That one is found on the street early in the morning with a suit case in which is found 57 half-pint bottles of whisky, with a corkscrew attached to each one, and appears frightened and attempts to get away when approached by an officer, does not warrant a conviction of having in possession intoxicating liquor with intent to sell or give it away in violation of law. McComb City v. Hill, 39: 534, 56 So. 348, — Miss. —. (Annotated)

32. An alibi sought to be established by one accused of crime on April 20, by showing that he had been taken ill about the middle of March and could not leave the house until after April 20, may be rejected where he is shown to have voted at elections on April 4 and 11, and subsequently, on cross-examination, fixed the time of his illness as beginning in December. People v. Connors, 39: 143, 97 N. E. 643, 253 Ill. 266. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

33. Liability to indictment for the same offense is not necessary to render one an accomplice with a person on trial for agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe, under a statute defining accomplices as all persons concerned in the commission of crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission. People v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

34. An intermediary representing one who desires to influence the action of a public board by bribery, who makes the bargain with the members and delivers their compensation, is an accomplice with one agreeing to receive and receiving the bribe, under a statute defining accomplices as all persons concerned in the commission of crime, whether they directly commit the act constituting the offense, or aid and abet in its commission, so that his uncorroborated testimony is not sufficient to convict the latter. People v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433. (Annotated)

35. Establishing the existence of a fund for bribery, and showing a general immunity contract with one accused of agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe, are not sufficient to corroborate testimony of an accomplice who secured the bargain to receive the bribe, so as to support a conviction; nor is the fact that the accomplice sought to secure an abandonment of the prosecution against accused. People v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

36. That an official voted for a proposition to support which he is accused of agreeing to receive and receiving a bribe does not corroborate the testimony of the accomplice that he entered into the agreement, so as to support a conviction. State v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

37. To sustain a conviction of perjury for giving evidence which secured the acquittal of accused upon another charge, the falsity of the oath must be proved by positive and direct testimony, circumstantial evidence alone not being sufficient. Allen v. United States, 39: 385, 194 Fed. 664, — C. C. A. —.

Variance.

38. An allegation that by gross negligence of city officers duplicate paving tax certificates were issued and placed on the market is not sustained by proof that they were never delivered by anyone having authority to deliver them, but that they were taken without right by one having no authority to deliver them. National Bank of Commerce v. Oklahoma City, 39: 444, 122 Pac. 644, — Okla. —.

39. An allegation of infringement of a label of a local trades council is not supported by proof of infringement of a label of an international union. People v. Dantuma, 39: 1190, 96 N. E. 1087, 252 Ill. 561

EXCAVATIONS.

Negligence as to, see Negligence, 9.

EXCEPTIONS.

See Appeal and Error, 4-8.

EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

Relation of, to court, see Courts, 1.

EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

Jurisdiction of suits affecting, see Courts, 2.

Duty of bank to pay to administrators money deposited, see Banks, 7.

Insurance as assets in hands of administrators, see Insurance, 16.

Effect of appointment to terminate prior contract for care of property, see Master and Servant, 3.

Disregarding official title in action which administrator has right to maintain in his own name, see Pleading, 1.

Description of, as parties, see Pleading, 1.

Fraud in use of name of decedent by executor in carrying on business, see Tradenames.

1. One appointed by a state court to administer the estate of one who died in a soldiers' home, land for which had been ceded by the state to the Federal government, may maintain an action against the officers of the home to recover possession of securities left by decedent. Divine v. Unaka Nat. Bank, 39: 586, 140 S. W. 747, — Tenn. —.

2. A judgment obtained by a domiciliary executor, at the place of his residence, is an asset located within that state; and he, in his individual capacity, and not an ancillary administrator appointed at the debtor's residence, in another state, has the right to sue in the courts of the latter state, to enforce the judgment. Hare v. O'Brien, 39: 430, 82 Atl. 475, 233 Pa. 330.

3. A statute declaring that foreign letters of administration shall not confer any of the powers or authority conferred by domestic letters does not prevent a domiciliary administrator who has obtained a judgment in the state of his residence from maintaining an action on it in the local courts. Hare v. O'Brien, 39: 430, 82 Atl. 475, 233 Pa. 330. (Annotated)

4. Under the New Jersey "act for the relief of creditors against heirs and devisees," which gives a right of action against the heirs or devisees of a deceased debtor, the personal representative of a deceased devisee, who is also a devisee of such devisee, is not liable, in her representative capacity, for the debts of the ancestor, where her decedent dies without selling or aliening the lands devised; and, in the absence of a showing that lands originally belonging to the debtor were devised to her, she is not liable as devisee. McCarthy v. Mullen (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 688, 82 Atl. 51, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

EXEMPLARY DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1-4.

EXEMPTIONS.

From taxation, see Taxes, 1.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

EXPLOSIONS AND EXPLOSIVES.

Liability of seller for injuries by, see Negligence, 1-3.

Question for jury as to nature of explosive substance, see Trial, 11.

Venue of action for damages from explosion of paint drier, see Venue, 2.

EX POST FACTO LAW.

See Constitutional Law, 1.

FACTS.

Review of, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 18, 19.

FALLING OBJECTS.

Injury to person in highway by, see Highways, 4, 5.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Liability of carrier for arrest of passenger, see Carriers, 2, 3.

Evidence in action for false imprisonment of passenger, see Evidence, 26.

Instruction in action for, see Trial, 12, 16.

A railroad company is liable for the act of a policeman in its employ who, under the state statutes, has the power of a public officer in criminal matters, in arresting a citizen in excess of authority conferred by an execution which had been issued in favor of the corporation in a civil action, and compelled to answer in damages for false imprisonment. Taylor v. New York & L. B. R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 122, 78 Atl. 169, 80 N. J. L. 282. (Annotated)

FALSE PRETENSES.

Fraudulent representations in civil action, see Fraud and Deceit.

Indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 2.

It is no defense to an indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses that the transaction in which the money was obtained was a pretended sale of counterfeit money. Horton v. State, 39: 423, 96 N. E. 797, 85 Ohio St. 13. (Annotated)

FEDERAL COURTS.

Following state court's decisions, see Courts, 3.

FELLOW SERVANTS.

See Master and Servant.

FERTILIZERS.

Imposing license on business of dealing in, see License, 3.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Members of, as servants of person whose property they attempt to save from fire, see Fires, 2.

FIRE ESCAPES.

On buildings, see Buildings.

FIRE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

FIRES.

Sufficiency of proof of negligence in interfering with extinguishment of, see Evidence, 28.

Liability for injury to infant by, see Negligence, 5.

Negation of contributory negligence in action for interference with extinguishment of, see Pleading, 8.

Demurrer to complaint in action for interfering with extinguishment of, see Pleading, 12.

Demurrer to allegation that owner of building had failed to provide means for extinguishing, see Pleading, 13.

1. A railroad company which permits a train to stand on a street crossing in violation of statute is liable for injury done to private property through the inability of the city fire apparatus to reach it because of such obstruction. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tauer, 39: 20, 96 N. E. 758, — Ind. —. (Annotated)

2. The firemen of a fire department in a city are not the servants or agents of the person whose property they attempt to save from fire, so that their negligence in failing to take the proper course in the extinguishment of the fire avails one who, by a negligent act, cut off the water supply by which the fire was being successfully subdued, and thereby proximately caused the destruction of the property. Erickson v. Great Northern R. Co. 39: 237, 135 N. W. 1129, 117 Minn. 348. (Annotated)

FLAG STATION.

Carrier's duty as to, see Carriers, 12, 13.

FLIGHT.

Presumption of guilt from, see Evidence, 4.

FOLLOWING TRUST PROPERTY.

See Trusts, 5.

FOOD.

Where a pure food statute provides that in testing milk or cream for commercial purposes the same shall be done in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the pure food commission, a criminal prosecution cannot be sustained against one for violation of a rule prescribed by the pure food commissioner in accordance with said statute, that payment for cream purchased for commercial purposes should be suspended until the day following the testing or the time of the next delivery. State v. Elam, 39: 686, 136 N. W. 59, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

FOREIGN EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

See Executors and Administrators, 2, 3.

FOREIGN JUDGMENT.

As evidence, see Evidence, 10.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

FORFEITURE.

For breach of condition, see Covenants and Conditions, 5.

Of insurance policy, see Insurance.

Of provision in will because of contest, see Wills, 2.

FORGERY.

Payment by bank of forged paper, see Banks, 6.

Of indorsement on paying tax certificates pledged as collateral, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

Of will, see Wills, 2.

FORGETFULNESS.

As negligence, see Negligence, 9.

FORMER JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law, 1-3.

FRAUD AND DECEIT.

By bank in taking money for draft when insolvent, see Banks, 8-10.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 3.

As to false pretense, see False Pretenses.

Transfers in fraud of creditors, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

Annulment of marriage for fraud in procuring, see Marriage.

Loss of right to use of tradename by, see Tradenames.

Rescission of land contract for, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

When a false representation is of a matter presumably within the knowledge of the person making it, not made in the way of commendation or as an opinion merely, but as a positive assertion of an existing fact, to induce the other party to enter into the contract, such party, having no knowledge to the contrary, may, if he act in good faith, accept the representation as true, and is not bound to make inquiries or examination for himself. Westerman v. Corder, 39: 500, 119 Pac. 868, 86 Kan. 239.

FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES.

Applicability of statutory provision for restoration of property in case of divorce, to property transferred to defraud creditors, see Divorce and Separation, 8.

Creditors of one who sells a stock of merchandise in bulk for an adequate consideration, without complying with the provisions of the bulk sales law, cannot hold the vendee liable for the value of the property, as trustee, although the statute provides that such sale shall be fraudulent and void as against creditors. McGreenery v. Murphy, 39: 374, 82 Atl. 720, 76 N. H. 338. (Annotated)

FREIGHT CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

FRIGHT.

Liability of carrier for injury to passenger by, see Carriers, 5.

FULL FAITH AND CREDIT.

To judgment of other state, see Judgment, 4.

FUNERAL.

Liability of undertaker furnishing carriages for funeral to occupants of carriages, see Master and Servant, 7; Parties, 3.

FUTURES.

Draft given to furnish margins on illegal transaction in futures, see Contracts, 7.

GAMING.

Enforcement of gaming contract, see Contracts, 7.

Enforcement in other state of gaming contract, see Conflict of Laws.

GAS.

As to gas in mines generally, see Mines.

GATES.

Obstruction of highway by, see Highways, 2.

Duty of carrier to keep gates on platform closed, see Carriers, 8.

GENERAL REPORT.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 19.

GIFT.

Acceptance of, by officer as bribery, see Bribery.

Validity of gift by husband to wife, see Husband and Wife, 2.

Presumption that money of wife invested in land in husband's name is a gift, see Trusts, 4.

GOOD FAITH.

Setting out facts in pleading to show, see Pleading, 6, 7.

GOVERNOR.

Duty of attorney general to prosecute liquor case at request of, see Attorney General.

Review of action of, by certiorari, see Certiorari.

Interference of court with, see Courts, 1.

Power of, to remove officer, see Officers, 2.

1. Where it appears that a newspaper correspondent has openly charged in his paper a violation of the liquor laws of a state, the governor, in the exercise of the power of his office, may require the attorney general to proceed to examine such correspondent as a witness, under a statute making the examination of witnesses a distinct proceeding. State ex rel. Stubbs, v. Dawson, 39: 993, 119 Pac. 360, 86 Kan. 180.

2. A constitutional provision vesting the supreme executive power of a state in the governor implies that the governor is the highest in authority in the executive department, with such power as will secure a faithful execution of the laws in the 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

manner and by the methods prescribed by the Constitution and statutes. State ex rel. Stubbs v. Dawson, 39: 993, 119 Pac. 360, 86 Kan. 160.

GRANT.

Conditions in grant by state, see Covenants and Conditions, 2, 5.

GUARANTY.

Oral evidence to show intention of guarantor, see Evidence, 11.

1. The promise to be responsible for any bill that a certain person may make is a continuing guaranty, and not limited to the purchase made at the time it is first presented, where the person named has a running account with the one to whom the paper is addressed, who refuses further credit unless the account is guaranteed. Newcomb v. Kloblen (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 724, 74 Atl. 511, 77 N. J. L. 791.

(Annotated)

2. One who guarantees another's account is not entitled to notice of the latter's default, before steps are taken to hold him liable on his guaranty. Newcomb v. Kloblen (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 724, 74 Atl. 511, 77 N. J. L. 791.

GUARDIAN AND WARD.

For incompetent person, see Incompetent Persons.

Complaint in action on bond of guardian, see Pleading, 2.

1. Sureties on the bond of a guardian, executed after he has converted property of his ward to his own use, are liable for the defalcation if, after the bond is executed, he continues solvent, so that he could have restored the funds to the trust, which he failed to do. Ætna Indemnity Co. v. State use of Gallaspy, 39: 961, 57 So. 980, — Miss.

(Annotated)

2. Sureties on a guardian's bond are not relieved from liability for an existing defalcation by an order, upon their petition for the execution of a new bond by the guardian, that a new bond be recorded, and that the petitioning sureties be relieved from further liability on the bond. Ætna Indemnity Co. v. State use of Gallaspy, 39: 961, 57 So. 980, — Miss. —

GUARDS.

On dangerous machinery, see Master and Servant, 4.

GUESTS.

At hotels, see Innkeepers.

GUILT.

Presumption of, see Evidence, 4.

HABEAS CORPUS.

Under a constitutional provision that all persons accused of crime shall be bailable except in case of one accused of a capital offense when the proof of guilt is evident or the presumption thereof great, upon an application to the supreme court for bail by writ of habeas corpus after commitment for a capital offense by a justice of the peace, bail not being demandable as a matter of right, the burden is on the petitioner to show that he is illegally deprived of his liberty. Re Thomas, 39: 752, 93 Pac. 980, 20 Okla. 167.

HALF BLOOD.

Inheritance by, see Descent and Distribution, 1.

HALLWAYS.

Easement in, see Easements, 2.

HARMLESS ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-23.

HAY.

Lien for storage of, see Liens.

HEADLIGHT.

Negligence in running engine without proper headlight, see Railroads, 2.

HEARSAY.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 18-22.

HEIRS.

As to descent and distribution to, see Descent and Distribution.

HIGHWAYS.

Decision on former appeal as law of the case in action for injury of change of grade, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Lease to railroad of lands granted to municipality for street purposes, see Covenants and Conditions, 2, 5.

Relevancy of evidence as to contributory evidence, see Evidence, 25.

Interference with extinguishment of fire by obstruction of street crossing, see Fires, 1; Pleading, 8; 12.

Who may maintain action on railroad's agreement to keep street in repair, see Parties, 4.

Allegations in petition for injunction against nuisance in, see Pleading, 10.

Rescission of land contract for breach of agreement to construct highway to property, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

Rights as to trees in street.

1. Forbidding the removal of trees standing in the street without a permit does not prevent the owner of the tree from removing branches therefrom which have become dangerous to persons using the street. Dyer v. Danbury, 39: 405, 81 Atl. 958, 85 Conn. 128.

Liability for injuries on.

Prejudicial error in instructions in action for injury, see Appeal and Error, 21.

Liability for injury by electric wires in highway, see Electricity.

Absence of light as evidence of negligence, see Evidence, 25.

Liability for injury due to negligent driving, see Negligence, 6.

Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 6.

Correctness of instructions as to negligence, see Trial, 18.

2. A municipal corporation is liable for injury to a pedestrian on a sidewalk by collision, in the night, with a gate which is so constructed that it will stand open across the walk so as to obstruct it, if the municipality had notice of, or, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have discovered, the defect in time to remedy it prior to the injury. Campbell v. Chillicothe, 39: 451, 144 S. W. 408, 239 Mo. 455.

3. A municipal corporation is not liable for injury to a traveler by its failure to remove a nuisance consisting of a dangerous limb on a tree in the street, since the duty to remove it is a governmental one. Dyer v. Danbury, 39: 405, 81 Atl. 958, 85 Conn. 128.

4. Statutes making a municipality liable for injuries caused by defective highways do not apply to those caused by the fall of limbs from trees in the street. Dyer v. Danbury, 39: 405, 81 Atl. 958, 85 Conn. 128. (Annotated)

5. Charter authority to regulate the planting and removal of trees, and an ordinance providing that no person shall remove or plant a tree in the street without a permit, do not impose upon the municipality the duty of removing dead limbs from trees, so as to render it liable for injury caused by its failure to do so, if under statutory authority a tree warden has been elected who is given the care and control of the public shade trees in the town. Dyer v. Danbury, 39: 405, 81 Atl. 958, 85 Conn. 128.

6. Under a charter duty to remove obstructions and encroachments from cross walks, a village is not bound to keep its cross walks free from accumulations of snow and ice, unless dangerous formations or obstacles have been created. Dupont v. Port Chester, 39: 1167, 97 N. E. 735, 204 N. Y. 351. (Annotated)

7. A village which is not required to remove the snow from its streets is not negligent in leaving the snow as it falls upon cross walks to facilitate driving in the street, unless there is something in the way in which it falls or the form which it subsequently takes which creates an encumbrance, obstruction, or special danger. Dupont v. Port Chester, 39: 1167, 97 N. E. 735, 204 N. Y. 351.

Vacation.

8. The owner of abutting property is entitled to damages for a change in a highway which results in raising a portion of its width to carry it over a bridge, leaving only a narrow strip terminating at the water in front of his property, the effect of which is to cut off travel past his property, and leave access to it only by a cul-de-sac which can be used by vehicles only when they back in one direction. Park City Yacht Club v. Bridgeport, 39: 478, 82 Atl. 1035, 85 Conn. 366.

HIRING.

Interpretation of contract of hiring, see Contracts, 4.

HOGS.

Ordinances regulating keeping of, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills, 1.

HOMICIDE.

Employment of private counsel to assist prosecution, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Reversal of conviction on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Release on bail, see Bail and Recognizance.

Jurisdiction of court, see Courts, 2a.

Retrial on charge of murder after reversal of conviction for manslaughter, see Criminal Law, 3.

As affecting right to inherit, see Descent and Distribution, 2.

Private counsel to aid prosecution, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, 1.

Habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

Indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 1.

Propriety of instruction as to manslaughter, see Trial, 14.

1. The use of more force than is necessary, which results in killing the assailant, will not render one guilty of murder, who goes to the defense of his child against an assault which threatens death or serious bodily injury. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

2. The culpability of one who kills an assailant in defense of his son is not measured by the rights which the son might have had to defend himself, but upon the appearance of conditions when the father appeared upon the scene, unless he knew, or might reasonably have known, the actual rights possessed by the son under the circumstances of the conflict. State v. Mayhew, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

(Annotated)

3. That one who kills another in defense of his son was informed and believed that deceased had made threats of bodily harm or death against the son will justify his acting, although the threats were not in fact made. State v. Mayhew, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

4. A concert of action between two persons assailing another with intent to kill him or do him great bodily harm is not necessary to justify the father of the latter in defending the son against the attacks of both or either, to the extent of taking life, if necessary. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

5. That one had, because of provocation, threatened to kill another, will not render him guilty of murder if, upon the latter's attacking his son, he goes to the aid of the son. L.R.A. (N.S.)

son and kills the assailant, for the sole purpose of protecting the son from death or great bodily injury. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

HORSES.

Presumption of negligence from running away of, see Evidence, 6.

Presumption as to ownership of runaway horse, see Evidence, 7.

Injury to occupant of hired carriage by running away of, see Livery Stable.

Negligent driving, see Negligence, 6.

New trial in action for killing of, on railroad track, see New Trial, 1.

Stable for, as nuisance, see Nuisances, 2, 3.

Question for jury as to negligence of driver, see Trial, 8.

HOSE.

Cutting of fire hose by railroad train, see Evidence, 28.

HOSPITAL.

Liability to action for damages, see Charities.

HOTELS.

See Innkeepers.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS.

As baggage, see Carriers, 15.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME.

See Disorderly Houses.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Objecting for first time on appeal for failure to join wife in action against husband, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Damages recoverable by widow for wrongful death of husband, see Damages, 9.

Right to inherit, see Descent and Distribution, 3.

As to divorce and separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Wife's right of dower, see Dower.

As to marriage, see Marriage.

Subrogation of children of wife who mortgages real estate as surety for husband, to rights of mortgagee against property of husband, see Subrogation, 1.

Liability of community property to succession tax, see Taxes, 3.

Husband purchasing land in his own name with wife's money as trustee, see Trusts, 4.

Competency of, as witnesses, see Witnesses, 1.

1. A man riding with his wife in her automobile, which she is driving, is answerable for injuries negligently inflicted by her upon pedestrians. Minor v. Mapes, 39: 274, 144 S. W. 219, — Ark. —.

2. A gift of a ring by a solvent man to his wife does not come within the operation of a statute providing that a transfer or conveyance of goods, or chattels between husband and wife shall not be valid as against any third person unless the transfer or conveyance be in writing, properly acknowledged and recorded. Kennington v. Hemingway, 39: 541, 57 So. 809, — Miss.

3. An option to explore land for oil and gas for a period of five years, with right of renewal, is not an encumbrance so as to require a man to join his wife in the granting thereof upon her land, under a statute giving her control of her separate estate with a right to its rents and profits, but providing that no conveyance or encumbrance of the property shall be made unless he joins in the conveyance. Kokomo Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Matlock, 39: 675, 97 N. E. 787, — Ind. — (Annotated)

3a. Under a statutory provision that upon the death of either husband or wife one half of the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, such survivor takes his or her half of the community property, not by succession, descent, or inheritance, but as survivor of the marital community or partnership. Kohny v. Dunbar, 39: 1107, 121 Pac. 544, 21 Idaho, 258.

Alienation of affections.

Burden of proof as to malice, see Evidence, 3.

4. A wife, though the husband be living, has the right of action in her sole name for wrongful Alienation of her husband's affection, causing his separation from her. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 961, — W. Va. —

5. A father who, moved by malice toward the wife of his son and without good faith and honest purpose and good motive for his son's welfare, alienates the affections of his son, is liable to the wife, but if his action is without malice, and springs only from what he honestly believes to be necessary for his son's welfare, he is not liable. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 961, — W. Va. —

ICE.

Interference by ice company with business of rival, see Unfair Competition.

IDENTIFICATION.

Of bills of exception and transcript of evidence, see Appeal and Evidence, 3.

ILLEGITIMATES.

Requiring physician or midwife to certify as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, see Constitutional Law, 9.

ILL TREATMENT.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 2.

IMPEACHMENT.

Of witness, see Witnesses, 2.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IMPLIED AGREEMENTS.

See Contract, 1, 2.

IMPRISONMENT.

Threat of, as duress, see Duress.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Fright of passenger by lunatic on train, see Carriers, 5.

Sentence and imprisonment of insane criminals, see Constitutional Law, 1, 7.

Propriety of instruction as to manslaughter in prosecution of alleged incompetent for murder, see Trial, 14.

1. One under guardianship as an habitual drunkard is not capable of giving his valid consent to the conveyance of property which has been placed in trust for him, and which may be conveyed by the trustees with his consent. Philadelphia Trust, S. D. & Ins. Co. v. Allison, 39: 39, 80 Atl. 833, 108 Me. 326.

2. A court having jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for an habitual drunkard may, if it also has full equity powers, authorize the guardian to consent to the conveyance of real estate situated in another state, and which has been placed in trust for the ward prior to his becoming incompetent, with authority in the trustee to convey it with the consent of the beneficiary. Philadelphia Trust, S. D. & Ins. Co. v. Allison, 39: 39, 80 Atl. 833, 108 Me. 326. (Annotated)

INDEBTEDNESS.

Of township, division of, as affecting, see Towns.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability for acts of, see Master and Servant, 6-10.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

Right of accused to statutory time in which to plead after amendment of indictment, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Amendment to indictment after trial begun as second jeopardy, see Criminal Law, 1.

1. An information for homicide, which charges the commission of the offense on a date subsequent to that upon which the information is filed, is defective. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

2. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses in that defendant represented that he was selling counterfeit money, which contains no averment that there was any attempt on the part of the defendant to induce the prosecuting witness to purchase such money, or that he did purchase such money, nor any averment that the defendant sold or agreed to sell or deliver any counterfeit money or any other thing to the prosecuting witness.

HIRING.

Interpretation of contract of hiring, see Contracts, 4.

HOGS.

Ordinances regulating keeping of, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2

HOLOGRAPHIC WILLS.

See Wills, 1.

HOMICIDE.

Employment of private counsel to assist prosecution, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Prejudicial error in admission of evidence, see Appeal and Error, 20.

Reversal of conviction on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 24.

Release on bail, see Bail and Recognizance.

Jurisdiction of court, see Courts, 2a.

Retrial on charge of murder after reversal of conviction for manslaughter, see Criminal Law, 3.

As affecting right to inherit, see Descent and Distribution, 2.

Private counsel to aid prosecution, see District and Prosecuting Attorneys, 1.

Habeas corpus, see Habeas Corpus.

Indictment for, see Indictment, etc., 1.

Propriety of instruction as to manslaughter, see Trial, 14.

1. The use of more force than is necessary, which results in killing the assailant, will not render one guilty of murder, who goes to the defense of his child against an assault which threatens death or serious bodily injury. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

2. The culpability of one who kills an assailant in defense of his son is not measured by the rights which the son might have had to defend himself, but upon the appearance of conditions when the father appeared upon the scene, unless he knew, or might reasonably have known, the actual rights possessed by the son under the circumstances of the conflict. State v. Mayhew, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

(Annotated)

3. That one who kills another in defense of his son was informed and believed that deceased had made threats of bodily harm or death against the son will justify his acting, although the threats were not in fact made. State v. Mayhew, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

4. A concert of action between two persons assailing another with intent to kill him or do him great bodily harm is not necessary to justify the father of the latter in defending the son against the attacks of both or either, to the extent of taking life, if necessary. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

5. That one had, because of provocation, threatened to kill another, will not render him guilty of murder if, upon the latter's attacking his son, he goes to the aid of the son. L.R.A.(N.S.)

son and kills the assailant, for the sole purpose of protecting the son from death or great bodily injury. Mayhew v. State, 39: 671, 144 S. W. 229, — Tex. —.

HORSES.

Presumption of negligence from running away of, see Evidence, 6.

Presumption as to ownership of runaway horse, see Evidence, 7.

Injury to occupant of hired carriage by running away of, see Livery Stable.

Negligent driving, see Negligence, 6.

New trial in action for killing of, on railroad track, see New Trial, 1.

Stable for, as nuisance, see Nuisances, 2, 3.

Question for jury as to negligence of driver, see Trial, 8.

HOSE.

Cutting of fire hose by railroad train, see Evidence, 28.

HOSPITAL.

Liability to action for damages, see Charities.

HOTELS.

See Innkeepers.

HOUSEHOLD GOODS.

As baggage, see Carriers, 15.

HOUSE OF ILL FAME.

See Disorderly Houses.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

Objecting for first time on appeal for failure to join wife in action against husband, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Damages recoverable by widow for wrongful death of husband, see Damages, 9.

Right to inherit, see Descent and Distribution, 3.

As to divorce and separation, see Divorce and Separation.

Wife's right of dower, see Dower.

As to marriage, see Marriage.

Subrogation of children of wife who mortgages real estate as surety for husband, to rights of mortgagee against property of husband, see Subrogation, 1.

Liability of community property to succession tax, see Taxes, 3.

Husband purchasing land in his own name with wife's money as trustee, see Trusts, 4.

Competency of, as witnesses, see Witnesses, 1.

1. A man riding with his wife in her automobile, which she is driving, is answerable for injuries negligently inflicted by her upon pedestrians. Minor v. Mapes, 39: 214, 144 S. W. 219, — Ark. —.

2. A gift of a ring by a solvent man to his wife does not come within the operation of a statute providing that a transfer or conveyance of goods, or chattels between husband and wife shall not be valid as against any third person unless the transfer or conveyance be in writing, properly acknowledged and recorded. Kennington v. Hemingway, 39: 541, 57 So. 809, — Miss.

3. An option to explore land for oil and gas for a period of five years, with right of renewal, is not an encumbrance so as to require a man to join his wife in the granting thereof upon her land, under a statute giving her control of her separate estate with a right to its rents and profits, but providing that no conveyance or encumbrance of the property shall be made unless he joins in the conveyance. Kokomo Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Matlock, 39: 675, 97 N. E. 787, — Ind. — (Annotated)

3a. Under a statutory provision that upon the death of either husband or wife one half of the community property shall go to the survivor, subject to the community debts, such survivor takes his or her half of the community property, not by succession, descent, or inheritance, but as survivor of the marital community or partnership. Kohny v. Dunbar, 39: 1107, 121 Pac. 544, 21 Idaho, 258.

Alienation of affections.

Burden of proof as to malice, see Evidence, 3.

4. A wife, though the husband be living, has the right of action in her sole name for wrongful alienation of her husband's affection, causing his separation from her. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 961, — W. Va. —

5. A father who, moved by malice toward the wife of his son and without good faith and honest purpose and good motive for his son's welfare, alienates the affections of his son, is liable to the wife, but if his action is without malice, and springs only from what he honestly believes to be necessary for his son's welfare, he is not liable. Gross v. Gross, 39: 261, 73 S. E. 961, — W. Va. —

ICE.

Interference by ice company with business of rival, see Unfair Competition.

IDENTIFICATION.

Of bills of exception and transcript of evidence, see Appeal and Evidence, 3.

ILLEGITIMATES.

Requiring physician or midwife to certify as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, see Constitutional Law, 9.

ILL TREATMENT.

As ground for divorce, see Divorce and Separation, 2.

IMPEACHMENT.

Of witness, see Witnesses, 2.
32 L.R.A. (N.S.)

IMPLIED AGREEMENTS.

See Contract, 1, 2.

IMPRISONMENT.

Threat of, as duress, see Duress.

INCOMPETENT PERSONS.

Fright of passenger by lunatic on train, see Carriers, 5.

Sentence and imprisonment of insane criminals, see Constitutional Law, 1, 7.

Propriety of instruction as to manslaughter in prosecution of alleged incompetent for murder, see Trial, 14.

1. One under guardianship as an habitual drunkard is not capable of giving his valid consent to the conveyance of property which has been placed in trust for him, and which may be conveyed by the trustees with his consent. Philadelphia Trust, S. D. & Ins. Co. v. Allison, 39: 39, 80 Atl. 833, 108 Me. 326.

2. A court having jurisdiction to appoint a guardian for an habitual drunkard may, if it also has full equity powers, authorize the guardian to consent to the conveyance of real estate situated in another state, and which has been placed in trust for the ward prior to his becoming incompetent, with authority in the trustee to convey it with the consent of the beneficiary. Philadelphia Trust, S. D. & Ins. Co. v. Allison, 39: 39, 80 Atl. 833, 108 Me. 326. (Annotated)

INDEBTEDNESS.

Of township, division of, as affecting, see Towns.

INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS.

Liability for acts of, see Master and Servant, 6-10.

INDICTMENT, INFORMATION, AND COMPLAINT.

Right of accused to statutory time in which to plead after amendment of indictment, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Amendment to indictment after trial begun as second jeopardy, see Criminal Law, 1.

1. An information for homicide, which charges the commission of the offense on a date subsequent to that upon which the information is filed, is defective. McKay v. State, 39: 714, 132 N. W. 741, 90 Neb. 63.

2. An indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses in that defendant represented that he was selling counterfeit money, which contains no averment that there was any attempt on the part of the defendant to induce the prosecuting witness to purchase such money, or that he did purchase such money, nor any averment that the defendant sold or agreed to sell or deliver any counterfeit money or any other thing to the prosecuting witness.

which induced him to pay money to the defendant, does not aver a crime with reasonable certainty so as to apprise the defendant of what he may expect to meet, and so that the court and jury may know what they are to try, and the court may determine without unreasonable difficulty what evidence is admissible. Horton v. State, 39: 423, 96 N. E. 797, 85 Ohio St. 13.

INFANTS.

Damages recoverable by child for wrongful death of father, see Damages, 8, 9.

Measure of damages for injury to, see Damages, 11.

Guardianship, see Guardian and Ward. Enlistment of in militia without consent of parent, see Militia.

Negligence toward, see Negligence, 5.

Negligence of, see Negligence, 7.

Relation of, to parent generally, see Parent and Child.

INFORMATION.

Refusal of, by employees to passenger, see Carriers, 6; Damages, 4.

In general, see Indictment, Information, and Complaint.

INFRINGEMENT.

Of trademarks, see Trademarks.

Of tradenames, see Tradenames.

INHERITANCE.

See Descent and Distribution.

INHERITANCE TAX.

See Taxes, 2, 3.

INJUNCTION.

Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 12.

Measure of damages in injunction case, see Damages, 12.

Retaining suit for, in order to assess damages, see Equity, 2.

Right to jury in injunction case, see Jury, 2.

Against nuisance, see Nuisances, 3-9.

1. One may not be enjoined from protecting and enforcing his rights by lawful means, unless his acts to that effect are done or threatened unnecessarily, not really for the purpose of protecting his rights, but maliciously to vex, annoy, and injure another. Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. 39: 1, 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495.

Injury or inconvenience to defendant.

2. It is a good defense to an application for an injunction against infringement of a patent, that the wrong and injury likely to be inflicted upon the opponent of the application by its issue will probably be greater than that which the applicant is likely to suffer from its denial. Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. 39: 1, 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495. (Annotated)

Illegal or tortious acts; crimes.

3. A manufacturer cannot enjoin a labor union from removing its stamp from his shop on failure to renew a contract for labor, although the result of the removal will be to prevent a sale of his product, and the failure to renew the contract is the result of a conspiracy between the union and his competitors to ruin his business. Saulsberry v. Coopers' International Union, 39: 1203, 143 S. W. 1018, 147 Ky. 170

As to patents.

4. A patentee will not be enjoined from prosecuting a suit for infringement against a retailer, and commencing other suits against other retailers, by the fact that he has sued the manufacturing infringer for infringement, taken his testimony, and then threatened the manufacturer's customers with infringement suits. Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. 39: 1, 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495.

Bond; damages.

5. One wrongfully enjoined from erecting a dwelling is not precluded from recovering damages therefor because he fails to move to discharge the injunction, where the whole controversy is over the right to erect the building because defendant is of negro blood, and the injunction is not merely ancillary to or in aid of the main issue. Stone v. Hunter Tract Improv. Co. 39: 180, 122 Pac. 370, — Wash. —.

INNKEEPERS.

Question for jury as to negligence, see Trial, 10.

1. One who goes into a hotel merely to pass the time and write letters, without registering or purchasing any accommodations, is not a guest so as to render the keeper responsible for the safe-keeping of his baggage. Baker v. Bailey, 39: 1085, 145 S. W. 532, — Ark. —.

2. The acceptance by a hotel porter of baggage from one who intends to become a guest at the hotel, but does not do so, establishes merely a gratuitous bailment, and the innkeeper is bound to use only slight care in protecting it. Baker v. Bailey, 39: 1085, 145 S. W. 532, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

INSANE PERSONS.

See Incompetent Persons.

INSOLVENCY.

As to bankruptcy, see Bankruptcy.

Of banks, see Banks, 8-13.

Of corporation, see Corporations, 5-8.

Right to consider insolvency of defendant in awarding damages for personal injuries, see Damages, 7.

Of independent contractors, effect on master's liability, see Master and Servant, 6.

As to receivers, see Receivers.

INSTRUCTIONS.

For instructions generally, and cross-references to same, see Trial, 12-18.

INSURANCE

Raising question for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 15.

Employees' insurance act, see Constitutional Law, 2, 8, 10.

1. A notification from an insurance company that it would protect until the application is acted upon does not place the insurance in force from that date, for the purpose of determining the truthfulness of statements in the application at the inception of the contract. Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —.

Cancellation.

See also infra, 9.

2. The mailing of a notice of an intention to cancel an insurance policy five days later, which is not received until two days after the mailing, is not, in case no notice of cancellation is given, sufficient to render valid the cancellation on the day named, under a provision in the policy permitting cancellation upon giving five days' notice thereof. German Union F. Ins. Co. v. Fred G. Clarke Co. 39: 829, 82 Atl. 974, 116 Md. 622. (Annotated)

Title and encumbrance.

3. No change in the interest, title, or possession of insured property is effected within the meaning of a provision on the policy avoiding it in case of such change, by the appointment of a receiver in bankruptcy proceedings, who, without dispossessing the owner, places a watchman upon the property, effects insurance thereon, and advertises the personal property for sale. Marcello use of South Side Trust Co. v. Concordia F. Ins. Co. 39: 366, 82 Atl. 1090, 234 Pa. 31.

Other insurance.

Waiver of provision as to, see infra, 10, 11.

4. The insertion by an insurance agent who has failed to secure all the insurance to be placed on a building, of a clause in the policy issued by him making it void if additional insurance is taken, will not prevent recovery on the policy in case of loss, although the intended amount was placed with other companies. Norfolk F. Ins. Corp. v. Wood, 39: 1020, 74 S. E. 186, — Va. —.

5. A representation in an application for insurance as to the existence of other insurance on the property must be true when the application is accepted, to comply with a requirement that all facts stated in the application must be true under penalty of avoiding the contract, and if untrue at that time, its truthfulness when made is immaterial. Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —. (Annotated)

6. Existing additional insurance upon property unknown to the one issuing a policy thereon avoids the latter policy, which provides that if assured now has or shall hereafter make any other insurance on the property without assent of the insurer, the policy shall be void. Carleton v. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —.

Severability.

7. A policy of insurance upon a building and contents, which is void as to building because of the existence of additional insurance contrary to its provisions, is void also as to the contents. Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —.

Premiums and assessments; rates.

8. Consent by a member of a mutual benefit society, to be bound by all present and future rules of the order, does not empower the society to make an increase in the rate of his assessment date from the inception of his policy, and deduct the amount owing by him under such arrangement from the face of his policy. Jaeger v. Grand Lodge of Order of Hermann's Sons, 39: 494, 135 N. W. 869, — Wis. —.

9. A tender or return of the unearned premium is necessary to effect the cancellation of an insurance policy, under a provision in a policy providing that when the policy is canceled by the company it shall retain only the pro rata premium. German Union F. Ins. Co. v. Fred G. Clarke Co. 39: 829, 82 Atl. 974, 116 Md. 622.

Waiver or estoppel of insurer.

10. The mere suggestion to an insurance agent that other insurance may be secured upon the property will not estop the insurer from contesting the validity of the policy issued by it if other insurance is obtained contrary to the terms of its policy, if neither it nor its agent had notice that additional insurance was in fact obtained. Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —.

11. An inadvertent assessment against the premium note of a mutual insurance policy will not waive an objection to the validity of the policy on the ground that other insurance existed upon the property contrary to its terms, nor amount to a ratification of the contract. Carleton v. Patrons' Androscoggin Mut. F. Ins. Co. 39: 951, 82 Atl. 649, — Me. —.

Appraisal of loss.

12. Under a statute requiring an insurance company to pay the full amount of the policy in case of a total loss, and in case of a partial loss the amount of loss so sustained, and another statutory provision that, if there is no valuation in the policy, the measure of indemnity in an insurance against fire is the full amount stated in the policy, although a policy covering a private car stipulates that, in case of a loss and disagreement in regard thereto, an appraisal shall be had to determine the loss, no appraisal is necessary to entitle the owner of the car, which was destroyed by fire so that there was nothing left but the iron and steel work, and this was so injured as to be incapable of use in another car, to recover the full amount of the policy. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Homewood, 39: 1182, 122 Pac. 106, — Okla. —.

Extent of injury.

See also supra, 12.

13. When all combustible material in an insured railroad car is destroyed by fire, leaving only the trucks and steel used in its construction, and that is so injured as not to be of use in rebuilding the car, there is a total loss, although the trucks and steel may be worth a small per cent of the original value of the car as old iron or scraps. Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Homewood, 39:1182, 122 Pac. 196, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

Interest in proceeds.

14. A woman who divorces her husband, who has named her as beneficiary in a mutual benefit certificate, forfeits her rights thereunder where the statute provides that payment of such certificate shall be only to families, heirs, blood relatives, affianced husband, or affianced wife, or to persons dependent on the member. Green v. Green, 39: 370, 144 S. W. 1073, 147 Ky. 608.

(Annotated)

15. Designation of a divorced wife who has promised to remarry a holder of a mutual benefit certificate, as beneficiary, is necessary to give her the right to the proceeds as an affianced wife, where the designation in her favor as wife was annulled by the divorce. Green v. Green, 39: 370, 144 S. W. 1073, 147 Ky. 608.

16. Brothers and sisters and nephews and nieces not living with or supported by assured are not legal dependents within the meaning of a provision making the proceeds of a benefit insurance policy payable to such persons, and the proceeds are therefore assets in the hands of the administrator. Caldwell v. Little. 39: 450, 74 S. E. 10, 158 N. C. 351.

INTENT.

As element of assault, see Assault and Battery.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 11.

Illegal intent of prosecutor as affecting guilt in obtaining money by false pretenses, see False Pretenses.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 3.

Of testator, see Wills, 3.

INTEREST.

Illegal interest, see Usury.

Interest cannot be allowed as damages for a personal injury, even as compensation for delay in settlement. Cochran v. Boston, 39: 120, 97 N. E. 1100, 211 Mass. 171.

INTERPRETATION.

Of contracts, see Contracts, 4.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

See Commerce.

39 L.R.A.(N.S.)

INTOXICATING LIQUOR.

Refusal of new trial because of inadequacy of damages in action for civil damages, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Duty of attorney general to prosecute at request of governor, see Attorney General.

Interstate commerce in, see Commerce.

Burden of proof in action in replevin to recover possession of, see Evidence, 1.

Sufficiency of evidence in prosecution, see Evidence, 31.

Right of governor to require attorney general to examine person charged with violation of liquor laws, see Governor, 1.

Injunction against liquor nuisance, see Nuisances, 7-9.

Removal of county attorney for failure to prosecute liquor cases, see Officers, 2.

Allegations as to liquor nuisance, see Pleading, 10.

Perjury in making false oath to secure saloon license, see Perjury, 2.

Replevin to recover possession of liquors intended for illegal purpose, see Replevin.

Wife as competent witness in action under civil damage act for selling liquor to husband, see Witnesses, 1.

A statute making it unlawful to sell intoxicating liquor, with or without a license, within a prescribed distance of a school, applies to a physician, who is a pharmacist, prescribing liquor for a patient, and filling the prescription from his stock, which is located within the prescribed distance of a school. State v. Pomeroy, 39: 615, 123 Pac. 514, — Wash. —.

(Annotated)

INVERSE ORDER OF ALIENATION.

See Marshaling Assets and Securities; Mortgage, 4.

IRRIGATION.

Personal liability of purchaser of land on contract with irrigation company under which it is supplied with water, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

ISLAND.

Effect of change of channel of boundary stream on jurisdiction over, see Boundaries.

JEOPARDY.

See Criminal Law, 1-3.

JOINT CREDITORS AND DEBTORS.

Effect of discontinuance as to some defendants in action against joint tort feors, see Dismissal or Discontinuance.

Right of one joint maker of note to set off against it indebtedness from payee due him individually, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1.

Question for jury as to whether money was received in satisfaction of claim, see Trial, 3.

1. A covenant not to sue one of several joint tortfeasors, upon receiving from him a consideration therefor, does not operate to discharge the others, who contribute no part of the consideration, from liability to suit. Matheson v. O'Kane, 39: 475, 97 N. E. 638, 211 Mass. 91.

2. A release of, and covenant for a valuable consideration not to sue, one of several joint tortfeasors, which expressly states that the sum received is merely a part satisfaction of the claim, will not prevent a suit against the other wrongdoer. Kropidlowski v. Pfister & Vogel Leather Co. 39: 509, 135 N. W. 839, — Wis. —.

JOINT TORT FEASORS.

See Debtors and Creditors.

JUDGES.

That a judge is an honorary member of a bar association does not disqualify him to sit in proceedings instituted by the association for the disbarment of an attorney. Bar Asso. v. Casey, 39: 116, 97 N. E. 751, 211 Mass. 187. (Annotated)

JUDGMENT.

Presumption on appeal as to finding of facts necessary to support, see Appeal and Error, 10.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 24, 25.

Contempt proceedings to enforce order of restitution of money secured in satisfaction of, see Contempt.

Former judgment of acquittal as bar to criminal prosecution, see Criminal Law, 2, 3.

Record of, as evidence, see Evidence, 10.

Action on, by executor or administrator, see Executors and Administrators, 2, 3.

Official title of administrator as surplusage in proceeding to enforce, see Pleading, 1.

Subrogation to, see Subrogation, 2.

Lien of judgment on property devised with direction for subsequent conversion into personalty, see Wills, 7.

Effect and conclusiveness.

1. A judgment denying relief in an action to recover the contract price and enforce a mechanics' lien for laying a tile floor, because the contract had not been substantially performed, is conclusive against another action to enforce the contract price, based upon evidence that since the former action the owner had completed the work at a nominal cost. Thompson v. Washington Nat. Bank, 39: 972, 122 Pac. 606, — Wash. —. (Annotated)

2. An attorney to whom his client has 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

assigned an interest in the property for which the suit is brought cannot maintain an action against defendants and the witness for conspiring to defeat the claim by perjured testimony, which is successful, although he is thereby deprived of the interest assigned to him since he is concluded by the former judgment in their favor. Schaub v. O'Ferrall, 39: 416, 81 Atl. 789, 116 Md. 131.

3. The owner of a patent cannot recover in a suit against a manufacturer of an infringing article which the latter sells to retailers, all the relief to which he is entitled in suits against the latter; and a suit or a decree for an injunction, gains, profits, and damages against the manufacturer is no bar to suits for infringement against those who purchase from him and use or sell the infringing article. Kryptok Co. v. Stead Lens Co. 39: 1, 190 Fed. 767, 111 C. C. A. 495.

Foreign judgments.

4. A judgment in a divorce proceeding giving the father the right to receive visits from a child of the marriage, which is awarded to the mother, is not, under the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution, binding upon the courts of another state to which the child and mother remove and where they take up their domicile. Re Alderman, 39: 988, 73 S. E. 126, 157 N. C. 507. (Annotated)

JUDICIAL SALE.

A purchaser of land at a judicial sale is privy in estate with him who owned it at the time of sale, and takes the land subject to its burdens. Bennett v. Booth, 39: 618, 73 S. E. 909, — W. Va. —.

JURISDICTION.

Of appellate court, see Appeal and Error.

Of courts generally, see Courts.

In divorce suit, see Divorce and Separation.

Retention of, in equity case, see Equity, 2.

JURY.

Functions of, on trial, see Trial, 1-11.

1. In an action to settle disputed questions of title to real estate and to recover possession thereof, either party is entitled to a jury as a matter of right, regardless of the form in which the action may be brought. Atkinson v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Min. Co. 39: 31, 102 Pac. 50, 80 Kan. 161.

2. In an action permanently to restrain a person in the actual, exclusive, and peaceable possession of real estate under claim of ownership, who has forcibly prevented another person, who claims to be the owner of the coal and mineral in such land and to have a right to use the surface for mining purposes,—which claim is denied by the person in possession,—from entering thereon, from interfering with the mining and removing of the coal,—the defendant is, as a matter of right, entitled to a trial by jury. Atkinson v. J. R. Crowe Coal & Min. Co. 39: 31, 102 Pac. 50, 80 Kan. 161.

3. In trover by the holder of a chattel mortgage to recover possession of the chattels from one denying his title because of subsequent conveyances, the court cannot deny defendant a jury trial because the matters are so complicated and involved that they cannot be clearly understood by a jury, where no accounting, marshaling, or other equitable relief is necessary. Daley v. Kennett, 39: 45, 78 Atl. 123, 75 N. H. 536. (Annotated)

4. An employee is not deprived of his right to trial by jury by an employees' insurance act which provides that an employer of five or more workmen who pays a certain premium into the state insurance fund, and posts certain notices to this effect in his place of business, shall be relieved of liability to respond in damages to an employee for injury, except in case of wilful or statutory negligence, and which provides further for a board of awards to hear and determine questions concerning the payment of claims, and for an appeal from their determination in cases where the right of the claimant is denied upon any ground affecting the basis of the claim. State ex rel. Yapple v. Creamer, 39: 694, 97 N. E. 602, 85 Ohio St. 349.

5. The constitutional right to trial by jury is not afforded where a hostile crowd are permitted to pass within the bar to such an extent as to overawe the jury and destroy its impartiality. State v. Weldon, 39: 667, 74 S. E. 43, — S. C. —.

6. The statutory property qualification for a trial juror may be waived in a criminal case, and is waived by failing to object to his serving until after verdict. People v. Cosmo, 39: 967, 98 N. E. 408, 205 N. Y. 91. (Annotated)

KNOWLEDGE.

Of vendor of falsity of representations, see Estoppel, 3.

Necessity of showing actual knowledge of presence of fire hose on railroad track in action for damages resulting from cutting of, see Evidence, 28.

Of retailer selling stove polish which is really naphtha, see Negligence, 2.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 4.

LABELS.

Of labor organizations, see Evidence, 39; Trademarks.

LABOR ORGANIZATIONS.

Conspiracy by, see Equity, 1.

Compelling labor union to renew contract with manufacturer for services of members, see Equity, 1.

Proof of allegation of infringement of label, see Evidence, 39.

Injunction against, see Injunction, 3. 3d L.R.A. (N.S.)

Injunction against removal of union stamps from shop, see Injunction, 3.

Trademark of, see Trademarks.

LACHES.

Estoppel by, see Estoppel, 1.

LAND CONTRACT.

See Vendor and Purchaser.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Landlord's liability for obstruction of fire escape, see Buildings.

Lease for immoral purpose, see Contracts, 5.

Revocation by lessee of license, see License, 1, 2.

Injury to tenant falling into excavation made by licensee, see Negligence, 9.

Question for jury as to landlord's knowledge of dangerous condition, see Trial, 4.

Shutting off water from entire building because one tenant fails to pay, see Waters, 4.

1. As a general rule all preceding negotiations relating to a lease of land are merged in the written lease and, in the absence of fraud or mistake, the writing is the controlling evidence of the terms and conditions upon which the property was demised. Salinger v. North American Woolen Mills, 39: 350, 73 S. E. 312, — W. Va. —.

2. The lessee of a storeroom, unless restrained by the terms of his lease, has the exclusive right to the use of the outside walls of that portion of the building covered by his lease, for advertising signs, to the exclusion of a lessee of another part of the same building, but he has no right to occupy with such signs, or for any purpose, the outside wall not inclosing his part of the leased premises. Salinger v. North American Woolen Mills, 39: 350, 73 S. E. 312, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

3. The knowledge of a landlord, or of one of his tenants, and his or their acquiescence in the use by another tenant, without consideration, of the outside walls of a portion of the building not inclosing the part occupied by or leased to him, but leased to and occupied by another tenant, amounts simply to a license, revocable at pleasure by the licensor, whether such licensor be the landlord or a tenant. Salinger v. North American Woolen Mills, 39: 30, 73 S. E. 312, — W. Va. —.

Liability of landlord.

4. Where a nuisance dangerous to life is created by the owner on his premises, or through his gross negligence is suffered to remain there, he cannot, by leasing the property to another, avoid his own liability to any person who is rightfully upon the premises, and who, without fault, is injured by reason of such nuisance; and this liability extends to a servant of the tenant, notwithstanding the tenant, by reason of his own fault or neglect or knowledge of the danger, could not have maintained an action against the owner for any injury suffered by himself. Bailey v. Kelly, 39: 378, 122 Pac. 1027, 86 Kan. 911.

Rent.

Oil and gas lease, see Mines.

Negation of defense in action to recover rent, see Pleading, 5.

5. The owner of a building who, during the term of a lease thereof, unlawfully fails to equip such building with fire escapes, cannot maintain an action upon such lease for rent. Leuthold v. Stickney, 39: 231, 133 N. W. 856, 116 Minn. 299.

6. One leasing a portion of a building for a moving picture show cannot, upon surrendering the lease, recover from the lessor rent paid in advance, and for time when he had no use of the premises, and the cost of necessary alterations, upon the refusal of the police department to permit him to operate the establishment for the intended purpose because it lacked the fire escapes prescribed by the municipal ordinances, on the theory that the lessor knew that the building could not be used for the purpose intended, and neglected to inform him of the fact. Rockwell v. Eiler's Music House, 39: 894, 122 Pac. 12, 67 Wash. 478. (Annotated)

LARCENY.

Sufficiency of evidence to warrant setting aside of conviction on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 19.

Review of facts on appeal from conviction, see Appeal and Error, 19.

LAW OF CASE.

Decision on former appeal as, see Appeal and Error, 25.

LEASE.

For immoral purposes, see Contracts, 5.

As encumbrance or conveyance within statute requiring joinder or consent of spouse, see Husband and Wife, 3.

Lease in general, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

LEGISLATURE.

Power of, to provide for registration of union label, see Trademarks.

LEVEES.

Entitling proceeding to include property in levee district in name of district, see Parties, 1.

Assessment on property in district, see Public Improvements.

Including railroad property in a levee district does not violate its charter rights, on the theory that the railroad company was not organized to reclaim overflowed lands. Des Moines & M. Levee Dist. No. 1 v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39: 543, 145 S. W. 35, — Mo. —.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LIBERTY.

Guaranty of right to, see Constitutional Law, 6, 7.

LICENSE.

Negligence as to licensee, see Negligence, 4.

Negligence of licensee, see Negligence, 9.

Revocation.

Revocation of license to use walls of leased building for advertising, see Landlord and Tenant, 3.

1. The rule giving the right to the owner of a fee to revoke at pleasure a mere license to another to occupy his land, or any portion thereof, is equally applicable to his lessee where such lessee is the licensor, unless the latter be restrained by the terms of his lease from granting such license. Salinger v. North American Woolen Mills, 39: 350, 73 S. E. 312, — W. Va. —.

2. An agreement in writing by the tenant of a building, granting to another the right to use the outside walls of the part leased by him, is a revocation of a license, without consideration, to another tenant of the same building to use such walls. Salinger v. North American Woolen Mills, 39: 350, 73 S. E. 312, — W. Va. —.

From public.

3. A statute imposing a tonnage tax for purposes of inspection on fertilizers, and forbidding "any other tax to be levied by county, city, or town," does not forbid a municipality from imposing a license tax on the business of dealing in such products. Pocomoke Guano Co. v. New Bern, 39: 803, 74 S. E. 2, 158 N. C. 354.

4. Charter authority to impose a tax on trades permits the imposition of a tax on the maintenance by a foreign manufacturer of a warehouse for the storage, within the municipality, of its products pending deliveries by agents, to whom the orders are forwarded from the home office in another state. Pocomoke Guano Co. v. New Bern, 39: 803, 74 S. E. 2, 158 N. C. 354.

(Annotated)

LIENS.

Parties on appeal in action to subject property to, see Appeal and Error, 1.

On bank stock, see Banks, 3.

Of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage.

Liability of grantor warranting title for costs of defending attempt to establish lien on property, see Covenants and Conditions, 1.

Of mechanic or materialman, see Mechanic's Liens.

Of pledge, see Pledge and Collateral Security.

Of vendor, see Vendor and Purchaser, 4, 5.

The owner of a farm who permits hay to be stored on it under an agreement for the payment of storage charges has not, unless the contract provides therefor, any lien upon the property to secure payment of the charges. Lewis v. Gray, 39: 1164, 83 Atl. 1, — Me. —.

(Annotated)

LIFE ESTATE.

Creation of, by will, see Wills, 4-6.

LIFE INSURANCE.

See Insurance.

LIFE TENANTS.

Venue of action by remainderman for waste, see Venue, 1.

LIGHTS.

Absence of, in highway, see Evidence, 25.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

Review of discretion, in permitting amendment of plea of, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Bar of prior or other claim or portion of claim or defense.

Demurrer to claim where debt is barred by limitations, see Pleading, 14.

1. A vendor's lien is a right created by law as an incident to the debt, and ceases to be available in equity when the debt is not enforceable at law. Shaylor v. Cloud, 39: 1171, 57 So. 666, — Fla. —.

(Annotated)

When statute runs.

2. The statute of limitations does not begin to run against liability of trustees of a savings bank for money lost through loans made by them in contravention of statute and the rules of the institution, until the facts are learned by the institution. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Abercrombie, 39: 173, 97 N. E. 897, 211 Mass. 252.

3. A mere change of name without fraudulent intent, after one against whom a judgment has been entered in one state takes up his residence in another state, will not prevent the statute of limitations running in his favor in the latter state. St. Paul Title & T. Co. v. Stensgaard, 39: 741, 121 Pac. 731, — Cal. —.

(Annotated)

LIVERY STABLES.

Scope of employment of driver of hired vehicle, see Master and Servant.

An occupant of a hired carriage cannot hold the owner liable for injury due to the running away of the team during the absence of the driver, leaving the team unattended, if the driver acted at the request, or with the consent, of the occupant. John J. Radel Co. v. Borches, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

LIVE STOCK.

Transportation of, see Carriers, 17.

LOAN.

Usury in loans by agent or broker, see Usury.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

LOSS.

Of insured property, extent of, see Insurance, 12, 13.

LUMBER.

Sufficiency of delivery of lumber sold, see Sale, 2.

LUNATICS.

See Incompetent Persons.

MACHINERY.

Injury to employee by, see Master and Servant, 4.

MALICE.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 2, 3.

In interfering with business of rival, see Unfair Competition.

In instigating action for removal of building obstructing navigation, see Waters, 1.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

Liability of corporation for act of agent in instituting, see Corporations, 1.

Presumption of malice, see Evidence, 2.

As to false imprisonment, see False Imprisonment.

Allegations as to, see Pleading, 9.

Instructions in action for, see Trial, 17.

Probable cause as question for court, see Trial, 17.

1. It is no defense, in an action for malicious prosecution for a wrongful search of a dwelling house, that the affidavit of the party by whom the search warrant was secured did not, in law, authorize its issuance. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holiday, 39: 205, 120 Pac. 927, — Okla. —.

2. A nolle prosequi, with leave, after which the prosecution is never renewed, is sufficient termination of the proceeding to support an action for malicious prosecution. Wilkerson v. Wilkerson, 39: 1215, 74 S. E. 740, — N. C. —.

(Annotated)

MANDAMUS.

1. The proper function of a writ of mandamus is to compel the doing of a specific thing, something which can be neither diminished nor subdivided, and is not an appropriate remedy to compel a general course of official conduct or a long series of continuous acts, as it is impossible for the court to oversee the performance of such duties. McAlester-Edwards Coal Co. v. State ex rel. Marshall, 39: 810, 122 Pac. 194, — Okla. —.

(Annotated)

2. Mandamus will not lie to compel a parish committee, which has no legislative authority, to decide questions of eligibility of candidates at primary elections, to make such a decision. Roussel v. Dornier, 39: 826, 57 So. 1007, — La. —.

3. Mandamus is a proper remedy to compel the treasurer of a town to pay valid orders issued by the board of supervisors, and the validity of such orders may be determined in such proceeding. State ex rel. Morris v. Clark, 39: 43, 134 N. W. 129, 116 Minn. 500.

MANDATORY PROVISIONS.

In Constitution, see Statutes, 1.

In statute, see Statutes, 5.

MANSLAUGHTER.

See Homicide.

MANUFACTURERS.

Liability for injury due to defects in articles manufactured, see Negligence, 1.

MARGINS.

Draft given to furnish margins in illegal transaction, see Contracts, 7.

MARRIAGE.

Divorce or separation, see Divorce and Separation.

A marriage cannot be annulled for fraud because the man entered into it to prevent the woman from appearing against him in a prosecution for seduction, with the intention of abandoning her afterwards. Johnson v. Johnson, 39: 518, 58 So. 418, — Ala. —.

MARRIED WOMEN.

See Husband and Wife.

MARSHALING ASSETS.

One having a second mortgage lien on property of a man alone cannot, under the doctrine of marshaling, compel a prior mortgagee having a lien on that property and also on property of the debtor's wife as security for the husband's debt, to resort primarily to the wife's property, so as to permit him to make his claim out of that of the husband. Gaines v. Hill, 39: 999, 144 S. W. 92, 147 Ky. 445.

(Annotated)

MASTER AND SERVANT.

Landlord's liability for injury to employee in building because of obstruction of fire escape, see Buildings, 2.

Equal protection and privileges as to, see Constitutional Law, 2.

Employees' insurance act as depriving employee of recourse to courts, see Constitutional Law, 8.

Employees' insurance act as exercise of police power, see Constitutional Law, 10.

Statute abolishing fellow servant rule, see Constitutional Law, 10.

Constitutionality of statute making owner personally liable to laborers of contractors because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

Authority of agent or officer of corporation to employ help, see Corporations, 2.

Liability of corporation for act of agent, see Corporations, 1.

Measure of damages for injury to servant, see Damages, 10.

Firemen as servants of person whose property they attempt to save, see Fires, 2.

Employees' insurance act as depriving employee as to right of jury trial, see Jury, 4.

Authority of boy to engage physician at parent's expense, see Parent and Child, 1.

When relation exists.

1. The owner of an automobile who lends it for a trip is not liable for the negligent act of the chauffeur, who was sent to run the car by the keeper of the garage where the machine was kept and cared for, for hire which was to include services of chauffeurs, in colliding with a vehicle on the highway, while returning to the garage after termination of the trip, since the chauffeur was not at the time in his service. Neff v. Brandeis, 39: 933, 135 N. W. 232, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

Termination of relation.

2. The death of the employer within the year will not terminate a contract for the services, for a year, of one to do the annual assessment work on mining claims and take care of the camp and other property of the employer, the services not to be rendered under the direction of the employer. Dumont v. Heighton, 39: 1187, 123 Pac. 306, — Ariz. —. (Annotated)

3. A statute requiring the personal representative to take into possession all the property of the decedent does not terminate a contract for the care, for a year, of the decedent's mining camp and other property, and the doing of the assessment work on the mining claims. Dumont v. Heighton, 39: 1187, 123 Pac. 306, — Ariz. —.

Duty as to place and appliances.

4. A mill owner who has allowed a lever operating a saw, and a casing for such saw, to become out of repair, and who has employed a careless workman on an edger near by, is liable to the operator of such saw, who was not guilty of contributory negligence and had not assumed the risk either of the defendant's or the edger operator's negligence, for injuries resulting from his arm being struck and forced upon the saw by a piece of timber carelessly thrown by the edger operator, who was not a fellow servant. Rogers v. Hiram J. Allen Lumber Co. 39: 202, 57 So. 166, 129 La. 899.

Master's liability for acts of servant or independent contractor.

Carrier's liability for arrest of passenger, see Carriers, 2, 3.

Liability of charitable institution, see Charities.

Liability of druggist for negligence of clerk, see Drugs and Druggists, 1.
 Liability for false arrest of employee, see False Imprisonment.

Negligence of driver of hired carriage in leaving team with consent of occupant, see Livery Stable.

Liability of city for negligence of its officers or agents, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

5. The owner of a hired vehicle is not relieved from liability for injury to an occupant due to the running away of the horses, by the fact that the driver had left the team to visit a saloon, on the theory that by so doing he was acting outside the scope of his employment. John J. Radel Co. v. Borches, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

5a. A railroad company is liable for the acts of its station agent in securing a warrant by which the dwelling of an innocent person was wrongfully searched without probable cause, in furtherance of an attempt to recover property of the company which had been feloniously taken from the possession of the agent, whose duty was to care for it. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holliday, 39: 205, 120 Pac. 927, — Okla. — (Annotated)

6. The employee of one who has undertaken to construct a sewer for a municipality cannot hold it liable for injuries inflicted upon him because of the incompetence of the contractor, even though the incompetence consists of inability to respond in damages for injuries negligently inflicted upon him. Salmon v. Kansas City, 39: 328, 145 S. W. 16, — Mo. —

7. An undertaker who contracts to furnish carriages for a funeral cannot escape liability to an occupant of a carriage injured by negligence of the driver, on the ground that he sublet the contract to an independent contractor, if the employers did not consent to the subcontract. John J. Radel Co. v. Borches, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

8. The rule that a municipal corporation cannot avoid liability for injuries caused by blasting which it permits in its streets, by letting the work to an independent contractor, does not apply in favor of the latter's employees; at least not in case the injury is to one drilling the holes, from negligence of the foreman in failing to discover an unexploded charge. Salmon v. Kansas City, 39: 328, 145 S. W. 16, — Mo. —

9. A municipal corporation is not liable for injury to the employee of an independent contractor for sewer construction which requires blasting in a public street, because it did not require the contractor to secure a license which its ordinances make a requisite to the doing of that kind of work. Salmon v. Kansas City, 39: 328, 145 S. W. 16, — Mo. —

10. A contract for the construction of a sewer for a lump sum is not prevented from being independent, so as to relieve the municipality from liability for injuries 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

to the contractor's employees, by the fact that the city engineer is given general supervision over the work, with power to require the discharge of incompetent employees, since such provisions are inserted in the contract merely for the protection of the city. Salmon v. Kansas City, 39: 328, 145 S. W. 16, — Mo. —

MATERIALITY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 23-27.

MATERIALMEN.

Statute making owner personally liable to, because of noncompliance with provisions for their protection, see Constitutional Law, 5, 6.

MAXIMS.

1. Consensus tollit errorem. Fuller v. State, 39: 242, 57 So. 6, — Miss. —

2. Salus populi suprema lex. State v. Boone, 39: 1015, 95 N. E. 924, 84 Ohio St. 346.

3. Verba intentioni debent inservire. Kennington v. Hemingway, 39: 541, 57 So. 809, — Miss. —

4. Violenti non fit injuria. Salmon v. Kansas City, 39: 328, 145 S. W. 16, — Mo. —

MEANING.

Parol evidence as to, see Evidence, 11.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Conclusiveness of judgment denying release as affected by subsequent events disproving the ground on which it rested, see Judgment, 1.

1. A mortgagee out of possession is not an "owner" within the meaning of a statute permitting a mechanics' lien for lumber and materials furnished by consent of the owner, so as to charge his interest with a lien in case he knowingly permits materials to be furnished without protest. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. 39: 84, 111 C. C. A. 428, 190 Fed. 700.

(Annotated)

Priorities.

2. That the money had not actually been paid on bonds secured by mortgage on real estate before work was done on the property which would support a mechanics' lien does not postpone the mortgage to the lien claimants, if, prior to the origin of the alleged lien, binding agreements had been made to improve the property in consideration of a transfer of the bonds, and to pay the contractor cash for his interest in them. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. 39: 84, 111 C. C. A. 428, 190 Fed. 700.

3. One who furnishes material or performs labor for improving property which he knows to be subject to a recorded mortgage has no equity to have his claim made superior to that of the mortgagee which will justify a court of equity in displacing vested liens or broadening the language of mechanics' lien statutes by construction, so as to afford a priority. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. 39: 84, 111 C. C. A. 428, 190 Fed. 700.

4. That funds for the improvement of property were raised by mortgage thereon does not estop the mortgagees from asserting a priority of lien over persons claiming liens for lumber and materials supplied for the improvement. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. 39: 84, 111 C. C. A. 428, 190 Fed. 700.

5. The lien rights of a subcontractor do not relate back to the time of the execution of the principal contract, so as to give him a priority over a mortgage upon the property, executed to secure bonds delivered to the principal contractor to pay for work to be done by him after the date of the principal contract, where no work was done under the subcontract until after the rights of the mortgagee had become perfected. Allis-Chalmers Co. v. Central Trust Co. 39: 84, 111 C. C. A. 428, 190 Fed. 700.

MENTAL ANGUISH.

Damages for, see Damages, 13, 14.

MERGER.

Of prior negotiations in lease, see Landlord and Tenant, 1.

Of mortgage, see Mortgage, 2.

MIDWIFE.

Requiring certificate from, as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, see Constitutional Law, 9.

MILITIA.

The consent of parents is not necessary to render valid the enlistment into state militia of an eighteen-year-old boy, where the Constitution and statutes provide that a militia shall consist of able-bodied men between the ages of eighteen and forty-five years. Acker v. Bell, 39: 454, 57 So. 356, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

MILK.

See Food.

MILLDAMS.

Right to compensation for milldams removed in improving navigation, see Eminent Domain.

MILL POND.

Existence of easement of, as breach of warranty, see Covenants and Conditions, 3.

Implied reservation of easement of, see Easements, 1.

MINES.

Right to jury in action to restrain interference with mining and removal of coal, see Jury, 2.

Effect of death to terminate contract for doing assessment work, see Master and Servant, 2, 3.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Option to explore wife's separate property for oil and gas as an encumbrance or conveyance requiring husband's joinder, see Husband and Wife, 3.

Negation of defense in action to recover rent, see Pleading, 5.

That the lessee never took possession of land under an oil and gas lease does not defeat an action for the compensation provided by the lease to be paid for the right to explore the property for these substances. Kokomo Natural Gas & Oil Co. v. Matlock, 39: 675, 97 N. E. 787, — Ind. —.

MINORITY.

Rights of minority members of religious society, see Religious Societies, 1.

MISJOINDER.

Of counts in pleading, see Pleading, 4.

MISTAKE.

As to date in indictment, see Indictment, etc., 1.

Reformation of instrument for, see Reformation of Instruments.

In designating number of bill, see Statutes, 2.

MITIGATION.

Of damages, see Damages, 15.

MONEY.

Contempt in refusing to pay over, see Contempt.

MONOPOLY AND COMBINATIONS.

A contract by a telephone company doing only long-distance business, with a local company doing no long-distance business, by which the former undertakes to furnish apparatus to the latter, and requires it not to extend its lines so as to transact long-distance business or make long-distance connections with other companies without the consent of the contracting party, does not violate a statute making unlawful any combination or contract in restraint of trade, or which shall monopolize or attempt to monopolize the production, management, or control of any kind of business. Cumberland Teleph. & Teleg. Co. v. State ex rel. Hudson, 39: 277, 54 So. 670, — Miss. —.

MORTGAGE.

Mortgagee as necessary party to appeal in action to enforce improvement lien, see Appeal and Error, 1.

As to chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage.

Mortgagee as owner within meaning of mechanics' liens law, see Mechanics' Liens, 1.

Priority as to mechanics' liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 2-5.

Notice to mortgagee from possession of land, see Notice.

Reformation of, see Reformation of Instruments.

Subrogation to rights of mortgagee, see Subrogation.

Grantee's liability to mortgagee.

See also infra, 4-6.

1. An assumption of an agreement to pay a mortgage, in a deed from a grantor who was not personally liable on the instrument, imposes no liability on the grantee in favor of the mortgagee, where there is nothing to show an intention to benefit him by the contract, which is necessary under the statute to enable him to sue upon it. Fry v. Ausman, 39: 150, 135 N. W. 708, — S. D. —. (Annotated)

Merger.

2. Although one cannot be, at the same time, owner and mortgagee of the same property, if the title which apparently conveys perfect ownership and which is supposed to destroy the mortgage, by confusion turns out to be no title, the mortgage thus apparently destroyed, revives, as the cause of its suspension and supposed destruction no longer exists. Pugh v. Sample, 39: 834, 49 So. 526, 123 La. 791. (Annotated)

Parties to foreclosure.

3. The foreclosure of one of two simultaneous mortgages by the same person, to the same mortgagee, to secure different debts, which were recorded at the same instant, and one of which has been assigned to a stranger, without making the latter a party, has no effect upon the lien of the assigned mortgage. Dahlstrom v. Unknown Claimants, 39: 524, 135 N. W. 567, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

Order of sale of parcels.

See also Marshaling Assets and Security.

4. Where the purchaser of parts of mortgaged premises has on the first purchase assumed the entire mortgage debt and purchased the other parcels subject to said debt, the land so purchased is liable for the mortgage debt before the portion thereof remaining unconveyed by the mortgagor or his estate can be sold in satisfaction thereof. Chancellor of New Jersey v. Towell (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 359, 82 Atl. 861, — N. J. —.

5. Where the purchaser of parts of mortgaged premises has on the first purchase assumed the entire mortgage debt and purchased the other parcels subject to such debt, and the balance remains in the estate of the original owner, the rule in equity that the aliened portions shall be sold in the inverse order of their alienation does not apply. Chancellor of New Jersey v. Towell (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 359, 82 Atl. 861, — N. J. —. (Annotated)

6. In order to avoid circuity of action, equity will not apply the rule that aliened portions of property shall be sold in the inverse order of alienation to pay a mortgage debt, where the first alienee has assumed the payment of the entire debt on his first purchase and subsequently purchased other parts subject to such debt. Chancellor of New Jersey v. Towell (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 359, 82 Atl. 861, — N. J. —.

MOTIONS AND ORDERS.

Raising question for consideration on appeal by motion, see Appeal and Error, 8.

MOTIVE.

Of one instigating removal of building obstructing navigation, see Waters, 1.

MOVING PICTURE SHOW.

Liability for rent of building leased for, where property cannot be devoted to intended use because of lack of fire escapes, see Landlord and Tenant, 6.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS.

First raising objection on appeal in action on municipal contract, see Appeal and Error, 16.

Implied contract to pay for services rendered or articles purchased, see Contracts, 1, 2.

Restrictions in grant to, by state as to use of property, see Covenants and Conditions, 2, 5.

Proof of allegation of negligence in issuing duplicate paving tax certificates, see Evidence, 38.

For defects or obstructions in streets, see Highways, 2-7.

Power as to license, see License.

Liability for negligence of independent contractor, see Master and Servant, 8, 8-10.

Criminal liability for nuisance, see Nuisances, 10.

Power to remove elective officers, see Officers, 1.

Forgery of indorsement on paying tax certificates pledged as collateral, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

Proximate cause of loss to bank accepting stolen paving tax certificates, see Proximate Cause.

1. Statutory authority to exercise police power over territory outside their corporate limits is applicable to municipal corporations which are under commission form of government with initiative, referendum, and recall. State v. Rice, 39: 266, 74 S. E. 582, 158 N. C. 635.

2. Statutory authority to make rules for the preservation of health includes power to forbid the keeping of hogs within the territory over which the municipal authority has jurisdiction. State v. Rice, 39: 266, 74 S. E. 582, 158 N. C. 635. (Annotated)

3. The acceptance by a municipality of a charter imposing upon it the duty of removing nuisances does not create a contract between it and the state that it will do so, a breach of which gives a right of action to one injured by its failure. Dyer v. Danbury, 39: 405, 81 Atl. 958, 85 Conn. 128.

4. The driver of a city cart engaged in removing trash or dirt for the city is not engaged in a governmental duty which will relieve the municipality from liability for injuries inflicted by his negligence in managing the outfit. Pass Christian v. Fernandez, 39: 649, 56 So. 329, — Miss. —.

(Annotated)

MURDER.

See Homicide.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

See Insurance.

MUTUALITY.

As affecting set-off, see Set-Off and Counterclaim, 1.

NAME.

Effect of charge of, on running of limitations, see Limitation of Actions, 3.

As to tradename, see Tradenames.

NAPHTHA.

Injury to purchaser by explosion of naphtha sold as stove polish, see Negligence, 2, 3.

NAVIGATION.

Taking of private property for improvement of, see Eminent Domain.

NEAR SIGHTEDNESS.

As defense to charge of contributory negligence, see Street Railways, 4.

NECESSITY.

Easement by, see Easements, 2.

NEGATIVE.

In pleading, see Pleading, 5.

NEGLIGENCE.

Prejudicial error in instructions as to damages, see Appeal and Error, 22.

In payment of check or draft, see Banks, 4-6.

Of, or toward, passengers, see Carriers.

Liability of charitable institution for, see Charities.

Measure of damages for negligence causing personal injury or death, see Damages, 7-11.

Of druggists, see Drugs and Druggists. As to electricity, see Electricity.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 5, 6.

Necessity of proof of wanton negligence of railroad company in cutting fire hose, see Evidence, 28.

Evidence of complaints by person injured, see Evidence, 21.

Sufficiency of proof of, see Evidence, 28. As to fires, see Fires.

Of innkeepers, see Innkeepers.

Interest on amount allowed as damages for personal injury, see Interest.

Of master or servant, see Master and Servant.

Of independent contractor, see Master and Servant, 8-10.

Parent's liability for child's negligence, see Parent and Child, 2.

Liability of undertaker furnishing carriages for funeral to occupants of carriages, see Parties, 3.

Of pledgee in accepting forged collateral, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

Of municipal officers in signing duplicate paving tax certificates, see Proximate Cause.

Of railroad, see Railroads.

Of street railways, see Street Railways. Question for jury as to, see Trial, 6-10.

Remittitur of damages in action for personal injury, see Trial, 19.

Impeachment of witness in action for personal injury, see Witnesses, 2.

Liability of seller or manufacturer.

Personal liability of officer of corporation manufacturing dangerous article, see Corporations, 3.

In sale of drugs, see Drugs and Druggists.

Venue of action for damages from explosion of paint drier, see Venue, 2.

Question for jury as to whether stove polish was naphtha, see Trial, 11.

1. A wholesale dealer who buys a standard paint dryer in the open market without knowledge that it is explosive or inflammable if used with ordinary care is not bound to ascertain its qualities or warn consumers of possible danger in its use, or liable to one for injury by an explosion when he attempts to transfer it from one receptacle to another by artificial light. Peaslee-Gaulbert Co. v. McMath, 39: 465, 146 S. W. 770, 148 Ky. 265.

2. A retailer who sells a stove polish which is merely naphtha under an assumed name, the sale of which is prohibited by a statute, is liable for injury caused by its attempted use, although he had no knowledge of the constituent parts of the article. Gately v. Taylor, 39: 472, 97 N. E. 619, 211 Mass. 60.

3. A merchant cannot escape liability for injuries caused by his selling naphtha as stove polish contrary to statute, by the fact that other dealers did the same thing. Gately v. Taylor, 39: 472, 97 N. E. 619, 211 Mass. 60.

Dangerous premises; injuries to children.

4. A railroad company in cutting, for drainage purposes, a ditch across a path on its right of way, which has been used by the public for many years, is under no obligation to leave it safe for licensees, so as to render it liable for injury to one who, in attempting to use the path in the dark, falls to his injury from a pile of dirt left in the path. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Payne, 39: 217, 146 S. W. 487, — Ark. — (Annotated)

5. A railroad company which does not know of the presence of children on its track, and is not charged with knowledge that they are likely to be there because of their habit of using it as a playground, is not, when burning the grass off the right of way, bound to anticipate the presence of children, and warn them away, under penalty of being liable for injury to one who trespasses upon the track and is burned. Madden v. Boston & M. R. Co. 39: 1058, 83 Atl. 129, 76 N. H. 379. (Annotated)

On highway.

In use of automobiles, see Automobiles.

Presumption of negligence from running away of horse, see Evidence, 6.

As to defects in highways, see Highways, 2-7.

Liability of city for negligence of agent in driving, see Municipal Corporations, 4.

6. One who drives a vehicle rapidly and negligently upon the street is liable for the injuries proximately resulting from striking a person who is properly walking along or across the street and is in the exercise of ordinary care. Mugge v. Bracken, 39: 481, 58 So. 128, — Fla.— (Annotated)

Contributory.

Of passenger, see Carriers, 11, 13.

Relevancy of evidence as to, see Evidence, 25.

Of occupant of hired carriage, see Livery Stable.

Allegation of freedom from, see Pleading, 8.

At railroad crossing, see Railroads, 3.

Of person crossing street car track, see Street Railways.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 5, 7.

7. A four-year-old child is incapable of contributory negligence which will prevent its recovery for injury to it by a vehicle while it is playing in the street. Pass Christian v. Fernandez, 39: 649, 56 So. 329, — Mich. —

8. One who attempts to cross a street diagonally at a point other than a cross walk, having his ears covered and looking straight ahead, without heed to traffic on the street, is negligent, and cannot recover for injuries receive by being run down by a passing team. Peterson v. P. Ballantine & Sons, 39: 1147, 98 N. E. 202, 205 N. Y. 29. (Annotated)

9. Forgetfulness by an aged tenant whose faculties were unimpaired, of a trench which had been made upon the property by a licensee during the day, when returning to the house after doing an errand in the evening, which results in her falling into the excavation, is negligence as matter of law, which will prevent her holding the licensee liable for the resulting injury. Reynolds v. Los Angeles Gas & Electric Co. 39: 896, 122 Pac. 962, — Cal. — (Annotated)

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

NEGOTIABLE INSTRUMENTS.

See Bills and Notes; Checks.

NEW TRIAL.

Review of discretion as to, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 13.

Grounds for, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 24.

1. Where in an action against a railroad company for running over and killing a horse astray upon its tracks, in the night-time, the evidence is such that the jury may reasonably infer that, had there been a proper headlight on the tender in front of the moving train, the enginemmen, in the exercise of due and reasonable care, would probably have discovered the horse in time to avoid injuring him, the question of negligence is one of mixed law and fact for the jury; and the court should not, for want of sufficient evidence, set aside a verdict in favor of the owner of the horse and award defendant a new trial. Hanger v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 39: 271, 73 S. E. 713, — W. Va. —

2. Where, in an action for damages for assault and battery, the testimony showed that the defendant, without legal justification, struck the plaintiff, causing injury to his nose, followed for over two months by pain and clogging up of the nose, and the defendant admitted the assault and introduced no evidence, and the jury were instructed that, if they found the plaintiff had been unlawfully assaulted, they should allow reasonable compensation, a verdict of $1 is inadequate and should be set aside. Sundgren v. Stevens, 39: 487, 119 Pac. 322, 86 Kan. 154. (Annotated)

3. The court cannot enter judgment upon a verdict after remittitur, which was excessive as a result of passion or prejudice, where the statute provides for a new trial in such cases. Tunnel Mining & L. Co. v. Cooper, 39: 1064, 115 Pac. 901, 50 Colo. 390. (Annotated)

NONSUIT.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 17.

NONUSER.

Loss of easement by, see Easements, 3.

NOTICE.

To municipality of defect in street, see Appeal and Error, 21.

Of default to guarantor, see Guaranty, 2.

For cancelation of insurance policy, see Insurance, 2.

Of sale of pledged property, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 3.

One who has accepted a mortgage from the holder of the legal title, relying on the record title of such mortgagor, and upon his statement that he is the owner of the premises, and that those in possession of the land are in possession as his tenants, is not entitled to enforce his mortgage as against those in possession of the land, who are in fact tenants in common with the mortgagor, when a very slight investigation and inquiry in the neighborhood would have disclosed the interest of those in possession. International Harvester Co. v. Myers, 39: 528, 121 Pac. 500, 86 Kan. 497.

NUISANCES.

Municipal liability for injury due to nuisance in highway, see Highways, 3.

Landlord's liability for injury by, see Landlord and Tenant, 4.

Municipal regulation as to, see Municipal Corporations, 2.

Municipal liability for, see Municipal Corporations, 3.

Allegations as to, see Pleading, 10.

Question for jury as to knowledge of existence of, see Trial, 4.

What are.

1. At the common law acts done in violation of law, or which are against good morals, constitute public nuisances. State v. Rabinowitz, 39: 187, 118 Pac. 1040, 85 Kan. 841.

2. A barn located in a thickly settled residence part of a city, in which a large number of horses are stabled, though not per se a nuisance, may become such by reason of the manner in which the same is managed and conducted. Lead v. Inch, 39: 234, 134 N. W. 218, 116 Minn. 467.

3. If the owner of a barn in a thickly settled residence part of a city so manages the same that noxious and offensive odors escape therefrom, to the detriment, annoyance, and discomfort of adjoining property owners, it is a nuisance, and may be restrained in equity. Lead v. Inch, 39: 234, 134 N. W. 218, 116 Minn. 467.

Abatement.

Retaining suit for assessment of damages where right to injunction fails, see Equity, 2.

4. Injunction will not lie to prevent a property owner in a densely populated portion of the city, from causing smoke to issue from the chimneys of his building at an elevation lower than the roofs of neighboring buildings, although permitting it to issue at a lower level constitutes a nuisance to the occupants of such buildings. Union Planters' Bank & T. Co. v. Memphis Hotel Co. 39: 580, 139 S. W. 715, 124 Tenn. 649.

5. Equity will interfere to protect offended third persons against a continuing nuisance, although the person responsible for the nuisance be solvent and able to respond in damages. Lead v. Inch, 39: 234, 134 N. W. 218, 116 Minn. 467.

6. The injury resulting from a nuisance continuing in character, the annoyance and discomfort of which is incapable of even approximately accurate measurement in money, is irreparable whether the damage be great or small, and equity will interfere to prevent its continuance. Lead v. Inch, 39: 234, 134 N. W. 218, 116 Minn. 467.
39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

7. The fact that the selling and delivery of intoxicating liquors on the streets and alleys of a city may constitute a public offense is no bar to the maintenance of an equitable action to enjoin it as a nuisance. State v. Rabinowitz, 39: 187, 118 Pac. 1040, 85 Kan. 841.

8. The selling and delivery of intoxicating liquors on the streets and alleys of a city publicly, repeatedly, and persistently is a common nuisance, and may be enjoined by a court of equity under a statutory provision authorizing the granting of an injunction in the name of the state to enjoin and suppress the keeping and maintaining of a common nuisance. State v. Rabinowitz, 39: 187, 118 Pac. 1040, 85 Kan. 841.

9. Under the provisions of a prohibitory law that all places where intoxicating liquors are sold, or given away, or kept for sale or delivery in violation of law, or where persons are permitted to resort for the purposes of drinking intoxicating liquors as a beverage, are common nuisances which may be enjoined and abated at the instance of the state, the occupation and use of a street or alley or other public ground by the defendant for such purpose may be enjoined. State v. Rabinowitz, 39: 187, 118 Pac. 1040, 85 Kan. 841.

Criminal liability.

See also supra, 7.

10. A city is criminally liable if its officers permit one of its streets, which it is required by statute to maintain, to become so out of repair that it constitutes a public nuisance. Ludlow v. Com. 39: 411, 145 S. W. 406, 147 Ky. 706. (Annotated)

NUMBER.

Mistake in numbering bill, see Statutes, 2.

NURSE.

Liability of hospital for negligence of, see Charities, 2.

OATH.

Perjury in making false oath when oath is not required, see Perjury, 2.

OBJECTIONS.

To raise question on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 4-8.

OBSTRUCTION.

Of highways, see Highways, 2, 3.

OFFICERS.

Attorney general, see Attorney General.

Bonds of, see Bonds, 1.

Right to pay commission to brokers for sale of state bonds, see Bonds, 3.

Bribery of, see Bribery.

Certiorari to review action of, see Certiorari.

Certiorari to review discretion in removing, see Certiorari.

Validity of contract affecting official action, see Contracts, 6.

Of private corporation, see Corporations.

Review by court of action of governor in removing, see Courts, 1.

District and prosecuting attorneys, see District and Prosecuting Attorney.

Power of political committee to pass on eligibility of candidates for office, see Elections.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus.

Liability for injury to pauper through failure to furnish him aid, see Poor and Poor Laws, 4.

Of church, see Religious Societies.

1. A municipal corporation has no inherent power to remove its elective officers, where the legislature has made provision for the removal of such officers by judicial proceedings, and it has been given authority to remove nonelective ones. Legault v. Board of Trustees, 39: 519, 118 Pac. 706, 161 Cal. 197. (Annotated)

2. Evidence tending to support the charges that a county attorney neglected to give proper legal advice to the county commissioners, that he neglected and refused to prosecute liquor cases, and that indictments had been returned against him for libel and circulating obscene literature, is sufficient to sustain the action of the governor in removing such officer from office. State ex rel. Kinsella v. Eberhart, 39: 788, 133 N. W. 857, 116 Minn. 313.

3. A public officer cannot recover compensation from third persons for the performance of acts within the scope of his official duty, even though the acts were performed at their requests, or though they may have expressly promised to pay him. Coggeshall v. Conner, 39: 81, 120 Pac. 559, — Okla. —.

OIL.

As to mines generally, see Mines.

OPTION.

To explore wife's separate estate for oil and gas, see Husband and Wife, 3.

ORAL EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 9, 11-17.

ORDINANCES.

In general, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

Interstate commerce in, see Commerce.

OWNERSHIP.

Presumption and burden of proof as to, see Evidence, 7.

Evidence on question of, see Evidence, 19.

Of insured property, see Insurance, 3.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PAINT DRYER.

Injury to purchaser by explosion of, see Negligence, 1.

Venue of action for damages from explosion of, see Venue, 2.

PARENT AND CHILD.

Damages recoverable by child for wrongful death of father, see Damages, 8, 9.

Liability of parent for alienating affections of child from spouse, see Evidence, 3; Husband and Wife, 5.

Homicide in defending child against assault, see Homicide.

Right of divorced father to receive visits from child awarded to mother, see Judgment, 4.

Enlistment of, in militia without consent of parent, see Militia.

Instructions as to damages in action by minor child for death of parent, see Trial, 15.

1. A boy operating his father's automobile for his own pleasure or convenience has no implied authority to engage a physician at his father's expense, to attend a person whom he accidentally injured by the vehicle. Habegger v. King, 39: 881, 135 N. W. 166, — Wis. —. (Annotated)

2. A son who has the right to use an automobile which his father provided for the comfort and pleasure of the family is acting as the servant of the father, so as to make him liable for injuries caused by his negligent act when he takes the car without special permission for the entertainment of his sister and her friends. Stowe v. Morris, 39: 224, 144 S. W. 52, 147 Ky. 386.

PARKS.

Liability of electric company furnishing electricity free of charge for celebration in, see Electricity.

PAROL EVIDENCE.

See Evidence, 11-17.

PAROL TRUSTS.

See Trusts, 1, 2.

PARSONAGE.

Exemption of, from taxation, see Taxes, 1.

PARTIES.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 1.

Objecting to lack of, for first time on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 14.

Effect of discontinuance as to some defendants, see Dismissal or Discontinuance.

Who are affected by judgment, see Judgment, 3.

On foreclosure, see Mortgage, 3.

Description of, in pleading, see Pleading, 1, 2.

Plaintiffs.

Action by stockholder of corporation, see Corporations, 4.

Action on behalf of estate generally, see Executors and Administrators, 1-3.

Action by wife for alienation of husband's affections, see Husband and Wife, 4.

1. Entitling a proceeding to include property in a levee district, in the name of the district, which is a public corporation, is not prevented by a statutory provision that it shall be filed by the board of supervisors of the county. Des Moines & M. Levee Dist. No. 1 v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39: 543, 145 S. W. 35, — Mo. —.

2. The drawee who pays a draft against bill of lading of a carload of coal shipped to consignor's order, with directions to notify the drawee, has no right of action against the railroad company for shortage in tonnage, where the draft was not paid until arrival of the shipment, so that the shortage occurred before his interest accrued. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Allen, 39: 309, 120 Pac. 1090, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

3. Although a contract for carriages for a funeral is made by a member or friend of the family, and the undertaker knows only in a general way the number and names of those who are to be transported, his contract duty of care exists in favor of each passenger. John J. Radel Co. v. Borches, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

4. A railway company that has accepted the terms of a city ordinance granting it the right to construct, maintain, and operate its railway upon the streets and upon and over certain viaducts and bridges, which ordinance contains a provision that the company should repair and keep in repair all parts of such bridges, viaducts, and approaches thereto so as to be safe for public travel, is directly liable to one who is injured through the negligence of such company in permitting a sidewalk, not in any way used by the railway company, but forming part of one such viaduct, to become out of repair, notwithstanding another section of such ordinance providing that such railway company shall respond to the city and save it harmless from damages resulting from the acts and negligence of the railway company.; Jenree v. Metropolitan Street R. Co. 39: 1112, 121 Pac. 510, 86 Kan. 479. (Annotated)

5. An action to compel removal of an obstruction to the operation of a county drawbridge is within a statute permitting actions to be brought in the name of the county. Lenoir County v. Crabtree, 39: 1213, 74 S. E. 105, 158 N. C. 357.

6. If one who is ineligible has received the majority of votes in a primary election, his right to hold office cannot be tested in a suit brought by an unsuccessful candidate, seeking to be declared entitled to the office, but the question of his eligibility 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

must be tested in a suit brought in the name of the state. Roussel v. Dornier, 39: 826, 57 So. 1007, — La. —.

7. A resident taxpayer cannot maintain an action to annul an independent school district for irregularity in organization, if the proceedings purported to be under color of law. Crabb v. Celeste Independent School Dist. 39: 601, 146 S. W. 528, — Tex. —.

PARTITION.

A railroad company which has secured a deed for its right of way from one only of two tenants in common cannot resist partition of the property at the suit of the other tenant, on the theory that it would be contrary to public policy to permit it. Hill v. Woodward, 39: 538, 57 So. 294, — Miss. —. (Annotated)

PARTNERSHIP.

Proving claim in bankruptcy both against estate of firm and that of individual partner, see Bankruptcy.

Assent to ratification to individual debt of partner after partnership has become insolvent, see Bankruptcy, 3.

That a contract signed by one partner was in fact a partnership matter is established by testimony of the one who signed it that it was intended as such, and a letter signed by the other partner agreeing that such partner's signature shall be assumed as that of the firm. Blake v. Atlantic Nat. Bank, 39: 874, 82 Atl. 225, 33 R. I. 464.

PARTY WALL.

Liability of vendor for amount vendee is forced to pay to give him right to use, see Covenants and Conditions, 4.

Set-off against damages for breach of covenant because of enforcement against property of lien for share of cost of, see Damages, 15.

PASSENGER CARRIERS.

See Carriers.

PATENTS.

Injunction against infringement, see Injunction, 2.

Injunction against suit for infringement, see Injunction, 4.

Decrees in suit against manufacturer of infringing article as bar to suits against purchaser from him, see Judgment, 3.

PAUPERS.

See Poor and Poor Laws.

PAYMENT.

Of checks or drafts by banks, see Banks, 4-6.

Regulating payment for cream purchased for commercial purposes, see Food.

Guaranty of, see Guaranty.

Presumption where trustee mingles trust funds with his own, that subsequent payments are made from his own portion of fund, see Trusts, 5.

PEDIGREE.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 18, 20.

PENALTIES.

Failure of statute as to contractor's bond to fix method for ascertaining penalty of bond, see Statutes, 3.

For use of union label, see Trademarks.

PERJURY.

Trial for perjury which secured acquittal of another offense, as second jeopardy, see Criminal Law, 2.

Sufficiency of proof of, see Evidence, 37.
As ground for lateral attack on judgment, see Judgment, 2.

1. A witness is not liable in a civil action for giving perjured testimony in pursuance of a conspiracy which deprives one of property and injures him in his business. Schaub v. O'Ferrall, 39: 416, 81 Atl. 789, 116 Md. 131.

2. Falsely to make oath before a notary public in order to obtain a saloon license is not perjury, when the law governing the issuance of such licenses does not require such an oath. State v. Parrish, 39: 96, 56 So. 503, 129 La. 547. (Annotated)

PERSONAL INJURIES.

Measure of damages for, see Damages, 7-11.

Evidence of complaints by person injured, see Evidence, 21.

In highways, see Highways, 2-7.

Interest on amount allowed as damages for, see Interest.

Remittitur of damages in action for, see Trial, 10.

Impeachment of witness in action for, see Witnesses, 2.

PERSONAL PROPERTY.

Mortgage on, see Chattel Mortgage.

PETITION.

Of plaintiff, see Pleading, 2-10.

PHARMACISTS.

See Drugs and Druggists.

PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS.

Requiring certifying of, as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Evidence of complaints to, see Evidence, 21.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Right of physician who is also a pharmacist to prescribe liquor for patient and fill prescription from his stock, see Intoxicating Liquors.

Authority of boy to engage physician at father's expense, see Parent and Child, 1.

PLATFORM.

Duty of carrier to passenger riding on, see Carriers, 8.

PLEADING.

Motion to compel pleader to elect in case of duplicity, see Appeal and Error, 8.

Suggested amendment as necessary part of record on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2.

Review of discretion as to, see Appeal and Error, 11.

Raising objection to pleading for duplicity by motion to strike out, see Appeal and Error, 8.

Variance between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 38, 39.

Surplusage.

1. That a domiciliary administrator having a right to enforce in his own name, in the courts of another state, a judgment obtained in the courts of his appointment, institutes the suit in his representative capacity, is immaterial, since the official title is surplusage and may be disregarded. Hare v. O'Brien, 39: 430, 82 Atl. 475, 233 Pa. 330.

Declaration or complaint.

Sufficiency of objection to, see Appeal and Error, 4, 5.

Necessity of pleading wanton negligence of railroad company in cutting fire hose, see Evidence, 28.

2. That one seeking to hold the bond of a guardian liable to restore to the ward money converted by the guardian to his own use designates himself as guardian ad litem, rather than as next friend, will not defeat the action. Aetna Indemnity Co. v. State use of Gallaspy, 39: 961, 57 So. 980, — Miss. —.

3. Allegations that loans were made to assist transactions in which defendants were interested, and that they received considerations for making them, are proper in a bill seeking to hold savings-bank trustees personally liable for losses of funds through loans made by them. Greenfield Sav. Bank v. Abercrombie, 39: 173, 97 N. E. 897, 211 Mass. 252.

4. As against a motion to exclude all evidence because the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, one count, although misjoined, if otherwise stating a cause of action, will be allowed to stand. Sleeper v. Baker, 39: 864, 134 N. W. 716, — N. D. —.

5. One suing for the rental to be paid for an option to explore land for oil and gas need not allege that no well had been completed which would change the measure of compensation, since such fact would be matter of defense. Kokomo Natural Gas &

Oil Co. v. Matlock, 39: 675, 97 N. E. 787, — Ind. —.

6. Failure to allege that a note given for a check was negotiable does not show absence of value, so as to destroy the bona fides of the purchase, if it is alleged that the note was paid. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

7. A complaint in an action to recover on a negotiable instrument may set out facts tending to show plaintiff to be a bona fide holder, for the purpose of anticipating a defense of fraudulent inception of the instrument. Johnson v. Harrison, 39: 1207, 97 N. E. 930, — Ind. —.

8. A complaint, to hold a railroad company liable for injury to property by fire because of its wrongful obstruction of a highway crossing so as to delay the fire apparatus, is insufficient if it does not show freedom from negligence on the part of complainant, bringing about the fire, contributing to its spread, or in removing goods, for which purposes a general allegation that the loss was the proximate result of defendant's acts is not sufficient. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tauer, 39: 20, 96 N. E. 758, — Ind. —.

9. A petition, in order to state a cause of action for malicious prosecution, must charge: First, that a prosecution was commenced against plaintiff; second, that it was instituted or instigated by defendant; third, that it was malicious; fourth, that it has been legally and finally terminated in plaintiff's favor; fifth, that it was without probable cause. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holliday, 39: 205, 120 Pac. 927, — Okla. —.

10. An averment in a petition for injunction that the defendant had been using and was still continuing to use the streets and alleys of a certain city for the sale and delivery of intoxicating liquors in violation of the law is a sufficient description of the place within the provision of a statute that all places where intoxicating liquors are sold, or given away, or kept for sale or delivery in violation of law, or where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking intoxicating liquors as a beverage, may be enjoined. State v. Rabinowitz, 39: 187, 118 Pac. 1040, 85 Kan. 841. Demurrer.

11. Where a general demurrer is filed to a petition, if any paragraph states a cause of action, the demurrer should be overruled. Ardmore State Bank v. Mason, 39: 292, 120 Pac. 1080, — Okla. —.

12. A complaint, to hold a railroad company liable for injury to private property by fire because of its unlawful obstruction of a highway crossing to the delay of the fire apparatus, is not demurrable for failure to show that the wrong was the proximate cause of the loss, if the facts alleged do not show as a necessary inference that such was not the fact. Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Tauer, 39: 20, 96 N. E. 758, — Ind. —.

13. An allegation that the owner of a building had negligently failed to provide ample means of extinguishing fire is demurrable as a mere conclusion of the pleader, and may be required to be more specific as to what means of extinguishing fires are actually provided. West v. Inman, 39: 744, 74 S. E. 527, 137 Ga. 822.

14. Where, in a suit to enforce a vendor's implied lien, it clearly appears by the specific allegations of the bill of complaint, admitted by the demurrer, that the remedy for recovery of the debt for the purchase price of land conveyed is barred by the statute of limitations, the vendor's implied lien will not be enforced; and, in the absence of other equities to sustain the bill of complaint, it is subject to appropriate demurrer. Shaylor v. Cloud, 39: 1171, 57 So. 666, — Fla. —.

PLEDGE AND COLLATERAL SECURITY.

Application of collateral held to secure firm obligations in satisfaction of individual debt of partner, see Bankruptcy, 3.

Of bank stock, see Banks, 2, 3.

Sale by pledgee of bank stock, see Pledge, 2.

1. In the absence of fraud or a special bailment, a pledge will be deemed to be waived or lost by the surrender of the pledged property by the pledgee. First Nat. Bank v. Bradshaw, 39: 886, 135 N. W. 830, — Neb. —. (Annotated)

2. A bank is negligent in accepting paving tax certificates which had been issued in duplicate and on which the indorsement of the payee had been forged, from a city employee, as collateral for a loan, without investigation as to the delivery or genuineness. National Bank of Commerce v. Oklahoma City, 39: 444, 122 Pac. 644, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

3. The statute requiring the pledgee, before the sale of pledged property, to give notice and sell same at public auction, was enacted for the benefit of the pledgor; and he may waive, by stipulation, both the notice and the public sale, and in that event a private sale is valid. Ardmore State Bank v. Mason, 39: 292, 120 Pac. 1080, — Okla. —.

POLICE.

Liability for false imprisonment by special police officer, see False Imprisonment.

POLICE POWER.

In general, see Constitutional Law, 9, 10.

Exercise of, by municipality, see Municipal Corporations, 1, 2.

POLITICAL COMMITTEES.

In general, see Elections.

Mandamus to, see Mandamus, 2.

POOR AND POOR LAWS.

1. A county is under no implied duty to reimburse another county for expense incurred in relieving paupers who first become in need of aid within its borders. Cerro Gordo County v. Boone County, 39: 161, 133 N. W. 132, 152 Iowa, 692.

2. To render a county liable for aid furnished to a pauper it must be supplied at the instance of the officers designated by statute to have charge of the relief of the poor. Cerro Gordo County v. Boone County, 39: 161, 133 N. W. 132, 152 Iowa, 692. (Annotated)

3. That a county in which a nonresident pauper was found in need of aid did not perform its statutory duty to furnish it, but furnished him with transportation into another county, does not amount to a request to the latter to furnish the aid at its expense, so as to render it liable to reimburse such other county for expense incurred in furnishing the relief. Cerro Gordo County v. Boone County, 39: 161, 133 N. W. 132, 152 Iowa, 692.

4. Neither a county nor its overseer of poor is liable for the loss by a transient pauper of his feet because it failed to give him proper attention when he came into its borders with frozen feet, although the statute requires relief to be furnished under such circumstances, at least if the overseer did not know that it was dangerous to send a pauper on his way, as he was empowered by statute to do, without relief. Wood v. Boone County, 39: 168, 133 N. W. 377, — Iowa, —. (Annotated)

POSSESSION.

Notice from, see Notices.

POWERS.

Of disposal in will, see Wills, 4.

PRACTICAL CONSTRUCTION.

Of statute, see Statutes, 4.

PREFERENCES.

By insolvent corporation, see Corporations, 5-8.

PREFERRED STOCK.

Rights of holder of, see Corporations, 5-8; Receivers, 2.

PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-23.

PREMIUMS.

For insurance, see Insurance, 8, 9.

PRESUMPTIONS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 9, 10. Presumption that money of wife invested in land in husband's name is a gift, see Trusts, 4.

Presumption where trustee mingles trust funds with his own, that subsequent payments are made from his own portion of fund, see Trusts, 5.

In general, see Evidence, 1-8.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

Officer of savings bank, see Banks, 14-16.

Validity of contract as to compensation, see Contracts, 8; Evidence, 17 a.

Agents of corporation, see Corporations.

Parol evidence of agency, see Evidence, 14-17.

Liability for false imprisonment by agent, see False Imprisonment.

Firemen as agents of person whose property they attempt to save, see Fires, 2.

As to insurance agent, see Insurance.

Authority of attorney to extend time of payment of note, see Principal and Surety, 3.

Guaranty by agent to effect sale of product, see Sale, 3.

When does title pass under consignment of goods to agent for sale with provision in effect that agent shall purchase balance of consignment at termination of certain period, see Sale, 1.

Right of principal to maintain action for specific performance, see Specific Performance.

1. A traveling agent for the sale of talking machines, who carries printed order blanks, has no implied authority to warrant that one buying a large number of machines to be given away for advertising purposes will sell a certain number of records for each machine within a given time after it is given out, and the purchaser therefore has no right of action for breach of such warranty, if authority to make it had not been actually conferred upon the agent. Johns v. Jaycox, 39: 1151, 121 Pac. 854, 67 Wash. 403. (Annotated)

2. One contracting as agent without authority, but making no representations as to his authority that were untrue or that he had reason to believe were untrue, and none that deceived the other contracting party, is not liable in an action against him personally upon the contract, which contains no apt words to bind him personally. American Surety Co. v. Morton, 39: 702, 122 Pac. 1103, — Okla. —.

PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

On bond of public officer, see Bonds, 1. Surety on bail bonds, see Bail and Recognizance.

Relevancy of evidence against surety, see Evidence, 27.

As to guaranty, see Guaranty.

Liability on bond of guardian, see Guardian and Ward.

Subrogation of surety, see Subrogation, 2.

1. Failure of the principal to execute a bond when he is bound by law or a collateral contract recited in the bond, for the performance of the obligation, imposes upon the obligee no duty to inquire as to whether it was delivered by the sureties on condition that the principal should execute it, nor to require him to do so, since the sureties suffered no substantial prejudice from such omission. Star Grocer Co. v. Bradford, 39: 184, 74 S. E. 509, — W. Va. —.

2. Sureties in a bond are not released by omission of the principal to execute it, if he is bound by law or a collateral contract recited in the bond, for the performance of the duty recited in the condition thereof. Star Grocer Co. v. Bradford, 39: 184, 74 S. E. 509, — W. Va. —.

3. A slight indulgence by an attorney charged with the collection of a note to the maker, not authorized or ratified by the holder, will not release the sureties on the instrument, if no security for the payment of the note is thereby lost or impaired. Hall v. Presnell, 39: 62, 72 S. E. 985, 157 N. C. 290. (Annotated)

PRIORITY.

Between lien of bank on its stock and that of pledgee, see Banks, 3.

Of chattel mortgage, see Chattel Mortgage.

In payment of obligations by insolvent corporation, see Corporations, 6-8.

Between mechanics' liens and other liens, see Mechanics' Liens, 2-5.

Between mortgages, see Mortgage, 3.

PROBABLE CAUSE.

Question for jury as to, see Trial, 17.

PROMOTERS.

Interpretation of contract of promoter with corporation, see Contracts, 4.

PROPERTY.

Guaranty of right to, see Constitutional Law, 4-8.

Condemnation of, see Eminent Domain.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

See District and Prosecuting Attorneys.

PROSTITUTION.

Lease of premises for, see Contracts, 5.

PROXIMATE CAUSE.

The proximate cause of loss to a bank from accepting paying tax certificates which had been signed in duplicate and on which the indorsement of the payee had been forged, from a city employee who had no authority to deliver such certificates, is the fraudulent act of the city employee, and not the fact that duplicate certificates were signed by the city officers. National Bank of Commerce v. Oklahoma City, 39: 444, 122 Pac. 644, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

PUBLIC CHARITIES.

See Charities.

PUBLIC CONTRACT.

See Contracts, 1.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

Decision on former appeal as to method of assisting benefits, see Appeal and Error, 25.

Property taken into a levee district cannot be assessed for work done and paid for by the assessment of property within the district prior to the taking in of the new property. Des Moines & M. Levee Dist. No. 1 v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 39: 543, 145 S. W. 35, — Mo. —. (Annotated)

PUBLIC NUISANCE.

See Nuisances.

PUBLIC POLICY.

Effect of, on enforcement of foreign law, see Conflict of Laws.

Overriding positive guaranties of Constitution, see Constitutional Law, 4.

As affecting contracts, see Contracts, 5-7.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

See Schools.

PUBLIC WATER SUPPLY.

See Waters, 3, 4.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES.

See Damages, 1-4.

PURE FOOD LAW.

See Food.

QUANTITY.

Of land sold, see Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

QUASI CONTRACT.

Proof of claim for, against bankrupt estate, see Bankruptcy, 2.

QUESTION FOR JURY.

See Trial, 1-11.

RAILROADS.

Change of channel of boundary stream by construction of dam by, see Boundaries.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Lease to railroad of lands granted to municipality for street purposes, see Covenants and Conditions, 2, 5.

Interference by, with extinguishment of, see Evidence, 28; Fires, 1; Pleading, 8, 12.

Liability for false imprisonment by special officer, see False Imprisonment.

Including railroad property in levee district, see Levees.

Liability for wrongful search by agent, see Master and Servant, 5a.

New trial in action for killing horse, see New Trial, 1.

Duty to keep premises safe for license, see Negligence, 4.

Liability to trespassing children, see Negligence, 5.

Liability of railroad company agreeing to keep street in repair to third person injured by lack of repair, see Parties, 4.

Partition of railroad right of way, see Partition.

Question for jury as to negligence of railroad as to condition of crossing, see Trial, 9.

1. A railroad company is reckless in running a train so rapidly through a town on a foggy night that it could not be stopped by the use of the ordinary means and appliances within the distance in which an object could be discovered on the track by the glare of the headlight. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 39: 978, 58 So. 471, — Miss. — (Annotated)

2. It is negligence per se for a railroad company to run an engine backwards over its main track in the nighttime, without the proper headlight on the tender sufficient to enable the enginemen, in the exercise of reasonable and ordinary care, to see ahead a reasonable distance, so as to avoid doing injury to animals astray upon the track. Hanger v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 39: 271, 73 S. E. 713, — W. Va. — (Annotated)

3. The mere attempt of one on foot to cross over a railroad track at a highway crossing when the gates are down, in doing which he is injured, does not raise a conclusive presumption that "he took all chances of the injury and cannot recover;" but the fact that the gates were closed is a circumstance to be taken into account in determining whether, under all the facts, he was negligent in not observing the warning thereby conveyed. Samkiewicz v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 571, 81 Atl. 833, — N. J. —

RATES.

Of carrier, see Carriers, 16.

For water, see Waters, 4.

RATIFICATION.

Of alteration in instrument, see Alteration of Instrument; Contracts, 3.

Of contract of partner, see Partnership.

By religious society of conveyance of property, see Religious Societies, 2.

REAL PROPERTY.

Covenants and conditions as to, see Covenants and Conditions.

Easement in, see Easements.

Mortgage on, see Mortgage.

Partition of, see Partition.

Rights, duties, and liabilities on transfer of, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Estates or interest created by will, see Wills, 4-6.

Lien of judgment on, see Wills, 7.

Conversion into personalty, see Wills, 7.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

RECEIVERS.

Following trust funds into hands of bank receiver, see Banks, 8-13.

1. Where the property of a corporation is being mismanaged, or is in danger of being lost to the stockholders and creditors through mismanagement, collusion, or fraud of its officers and directors, a court of equity has inherent power to appoint a receiver for the property of such corporation, and to require the officers to make an accounting, upon petition of a minority stockholder therefor. Exchange Bank v. Bailey, 39: 1032, 116 Pac. 812, 24 Okla. 246. (Annotated)

2. A holder of preferred stock in a corporation, whose contract entitles him to have his stock redeemed at par, is not entitled to have the concern placed in the hands of a receiver, in a proceeding to enforce his contract right of redemption, by showing that it is a losing venture, and that its assets are not sufficient to pay its debts, where his right to redemption fails because of insufficiency of assets. Rider v. John G. Delker & Sons Co. 39: 1007, 140 S. W. 1011, 145 Ky. 634.

RECOGNIZANCE.

See Bail and Recognizance.

RECORDS AND RECORDING LAWS.

On appeal, see Appeal and Error, 2, 3.

Validity of statute as to registration of births and deaths, see Constitutional Law, 9.

Records as evidence generally, see Evidence, 10.

Necessity of recording gift of ring by man to his wife, see Husband and Wife, 2.

REDEMPTION.

Of preferred stock, see Corporations, 6-7; Receivers, 2.

REDUCTION.

Of damages, see Damages, 15.

REFERENCE.

Where a referee sustains a motion to strike out certain testimony that has been introduced at the trial, and no order is made reinstating it, such testimony cannot be considered by the court in determining whether there was any evidence to sustain the finding of the referee. Kansas City Paper House v. Foley R. Printing Co. 39: 747, 118 Pac. 1056, 85 Kan. 678.

REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS.

1. Where the owner of two lots of land intended to execute a mortgage upon a certain lot, but described therein a different lot, after foreclosure of the mortgage and a sale of the property described therein, a court of equity may cancel the master's deed to the property actually mortgaged, sold, and conveyed, and reform the mortgage, upon sufficient showing, so as to embrace the land intended to be mortgaged. Fisher v. Villamil, 39: 90, 56 So. 559, — Fla. —. (Annotated)

2. When a mortgage misdescribes the property intended to be mortgaged, the mistake may be corrected by a proper proceeding before judicial foreclosure; but, if the mistake has been carried into a bill filed for the purpose of foreclosure of such mortgage, into the decree ordering foreclosure, into the advertisement, and into the deed, the purchaser at such foreclosure sale cannot maintain a bill in equity to correct the description of the land as contained in the mortgage, in the decree, and in the deed. Fisher v. Villamil, 39: 90, 56 So. 559, — Fla. —.

RELATIONSHIP.

Necessity of proof of, to support declarations tending to establish pedigree, see Evidence, 18, 20.

RELEASE.

Of one joint tortfeasor, see Joint Debtors and Creditors.

Of surety, see Principal and Surety, 2, 3.

Of joint tortfeasor, question for jury as to, see Trial, 3.

RELEVANCY.

Of evidence, see Evidence, 23-27.

RELIANCE.

On false representations, see Fraud and Deceit.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

Parol evidence that transfer of property was made in trust, see Evidence, 13.

Exemption from taxation, see Taxes, 1.

Grantee of property of, as trustee, see Trusts, 1, 3.

1. The trustees and majority members of a religious corporation who in good faith have attempted to make a use of the property which the minority allege to be a diversion from the trust for which it was acquired may bind the corporation for counsel fees in defending their position against the attack of the minority, although the minority are successful and the contemplated diversion is enjoined. Kanneberg v. Evangelical Creed Congregation, 39: 138, 131 N. W. 353, 146 Wis. 610.

2. Confirmation in the grantee of title to property conveyed by the trustees of a religious society, which conveyance was made in consideration of the execution of mortgages for the full value, and is claimed to have been in trust, is effected by the acceptance at the expiration of the mortgage of a partial payment thereon, and the extension of the time for paying the balance, with promise to make payments in instalments. Lafayette Street Church Soc. v. Norton, 39: 906, 95 N. E. 819, 202 N. Y. 379.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

REMEDIES.

In case of illegality of contract, see Contracts, 7.

REMITTITUR.

On motion for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

By trial court, see Trial, 19.

REMOVAL.

Of officers, see Officers.

RENT.

Liability for generally, see Landlord and Tenant, 5, 6.

As to water rents, see Waters, 4.

REPLEVIN.

Presumption and burden of proof, see Evidence, 1.

Admissibility of evidence, see Evidence, 10.

An action in replevin cannot be maintained to recover possession of an interstate shipment of intoxicating liquors, by the consignee, who claimed not to be the owner but merely the distributing agent for certain people whose names were marked on the various parcels and to whom he was to deliver same, where such transaction would constitute a violation of the laws of the state. Blunk v. Waugh, 39: 1093, 122 Pac. 717, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

REPUTATION.

Evidence of general repute, see Evidence, 19.

RESCISSION.

Of grant of land by state, see State.

Of land contract, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

RES JUDICATA.

See Appeal and Error, 25; Judgment, 1-3.

RESULTING TRUSTS.

See Trusts, 4.

RETAINING JURISDICTION.

See Equity, 2.

RETIREMENT.

Of preferred stock, see Corporations, 5-7; Receivers, 2.

REVERSIBLE ERROR.

See Appeal and Error, 20-23.

REVERSION.

Of title for breach of condition as to use of land granted, see Covenants and Conditions, 5.

REVIVAL.

Of mortgage which has merged by conveyance, see Mortgage, 2.

REVOCATION.

Of license generally, see License, 1, 2.

RING.

Validity of gift of, by husband to wife, see Husband and Wife, 2.

RULES.

Of water company, see Waters, 3, 4.

RUNAWAY.

Presumption of negligence from, see Evidence, 6.

Presumption as to ownership of runaway horse, see Evidence, 7.

Running away of hired horses, see Livery Stable; Master and Servant, 5.

Question for jury as to negligence of driver, see Trial, 8.

SALARY.

Of public officers, see Officers, 3.

SALE.

Validity of contract to pay for services in selling goods to public board, see Contracts, 6.

Sale in bulk, see Fraudulent Conveyances.

Of pledged property, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 3.

Of land generally, see Vendor and Purchaser.

Passing of title; delivery.

1. In a contract by which one undertakes to act as sales agent for another, for a definite period of time, and to buy and pay for at certain prices all stock on hand at the expiration of such period, title to the property passes at such expiration, and a bankruptcy trustee of the agent will be entitled to it as against the claims of the principal. Parlett v. Blake, 39: 620, 188 Fed. 200, 110 C. C. A. 72.

(Annotated)

2. Sufficient delivery of lumber stacked in the mill yard to pass the title as against subsequent purchasers is effected by the agent of the buyer, upon paying a portion of the purchase price, estimating the quantity and marking the stacks with the name of the purchaser, the intention of both parties being thereby to transfer the title, and that the balance of the purchase money shall be paid when the lumber is smoothed and barked. McDermott v. Kimball Lumber Mfg. Co. 39: 461, 144 S. W. 524, — Ark. —.

Rights and remedies of parties generally.

3. That when a customer learns that the seller repudiates a guaranty made by his agent to effect the sale of his product, he has placed himself in a position where he must have the goods, does not affect the effect of his ordering them to be shipped with knowledge of the repudiation, as a waiver of the warranty. Johns v. Jaycox, 39: 1151, 121 Pac. 854, 67 Wash. 403. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

SALESMAN.

Authority as to warranty, see Principal and Agent, 1.

SAVINGS BANKS.

See Banks, 14.

SCHOOLS.

Sale of liquors near, see Intoxicating Liquors.

Private action to annul district for irregularity in organization, see Parties, 7.

A tax voted by the taxpayers of the school district in the manner provided by the Constitution cannot be extended over territory added to the district after the vote was taken, without giving the taxpayers of such addition an opportunity to adopt or reject it in the manner provided by the Constitution, if the proceedings for the addition of the territory did not meet the constitutional requirements for the adoption of the tax. Crabb v. Celeste Independent School Dist. 39: 601, 146 S. W. 528, — Tex. —. (Annotated)

SEARCH AND SEIZURE.

Action for malicious prosecution for wrongful search, see Malicious Prosecution, 1.

Master's liability for wrongful search by servant, see Master and Servant, 5a.

SECOND APPEAL.

See Appeal and Error, 25.

SECRET PROFITS.

Parol evidence in action to recover, from agent, see Evidence, 14.

SEDUCTION.

Annulment of marriage entered into by man to prevent woman from appearing against him in prosecution for seduction, see Marriage.

SEPARATE PROPERTY.

What constitutes encumbrance of, see Husband and Wife, 3.

SEPARATION.

See Divorce and Separation.

SERVICES.

Interpretation of contract for, see Contracts, 4.

Validity of contract to pay for services in selling goods to public board, see Contracts, 6.

SET-OFF AND COUNTERCLAIM.

Setting off benefits from easement against damages for breach of covenant against encumbrances, see Damages, 15.

1. One joint maker of a note can set off against it an indebtedness from the payee due him individually. McKay v. Hall, 39: 658, 120 Pac. 1108, — Okla. —.

2. A defendant may set off a debt arising upon a contract due him from the payee of a negotiable note, against the note in the hands of a person to whom the payee transfers it after maturity. McKay v. Hall, 39: 638, 120 Pac. 1108, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

3. The request by the president of a corporation, that an account owing him personally by the holder of the corporation's note be credited on such note, amounts to a transfer of the account by the president to the corporation, and in an action upon the note the plaintiff cannot object to the account being used as an offset on the ground that no formal assignment had been made. Kansas City Paper House v. Foley R. Printing Co. 39: 747, 118 Pac. 1056, 85 Kan. 678.

SEVERABILITY.

Of insurance contract, see Insurance, 7.

SHADE TREES.

In highways, see Highways, 1.

SHELLEY'S CASE.

Rule in, see Wills, 5, 6.

SIGNATURE.

Of presiding officer of each house to statute, see Statutes, 1.

Of testator, see Wills, 1.

SIGNS.

Use of walls of leased building for, see Landlord and Tenant, 2, 3.

SIMULTANEOUS MORTGAGES.

Effect of foreclosure of one upon the other, see Mortgage, 3.

SMOKE.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 4.

SNOW.

On street or sidewalk, liability for injury by, see Highways, 6, 7.

SOLDIERS' HOME.

Jurisdiction to grant administration on estate of soldier dying in, see Courts, 2.

Action by administrator of estate of one dying in, to recover assets from, see Executors and Administrators, 1.

SPECIAL DEPOSIT.

As trust fund, see Banks, 12, 13.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

An undisclosed principal who has carried out all provisions of a contract for the sale of real estate and tendered a properly executed deed may maintain an action for specific performance of the contract. Davidson v. Hurty, 39: 324, 133 N. W. 862, 116 Minn. 280. (Annotated) 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

SPEED.

Injury to passenger because of excessive speed, see Carriers, 7.

Of railroad train, see Railroads, 1.

STABLES.

As nuisance, see Nuisances, 2, 3.

As to livery stables, see Livery Stables.

STAMPS.

Injunction against removal of union stamp from shop, see Injunction, 3.

STATE.

Bonds of, see Bonds, 2, 3.

Boundaries of, see Boundaries.

Restrictions in grant by, to municipality as to use of property, see Covenants and Conditions, 2, 5.

Necessity of suit in name of, to test eligibility of candidate in primary election, see Parties, 6.

In conducting transactions with respect to its lands, the state acts in a proprietary, and not in a sovereign, capacity, and, being amenable to all the rules of justice which it prescribes for the conduct of its citizens, it will not be permitted to revoke a grant of lands made upon a valuable consideration which it retains. Cleveland Terminal & V. R. Co. v. State ex rel. Ellis, 39: 1219, 97 N. E. 967, 85 Ohio St. 251.

STATE COURTS.

Federal courts following decisions of, see Courts, 3.

STATIONS.

Carrier's duty as to station, see Carriers, 12, 13.

STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

As to parol trust, see Trusts, 1, 2.

STATUTES.

Enactment.

1. A constitutional provision requiring the presiding officer of each house, in the presence of the house over which he presides, to sign all bills passed immediately after their titles have been publicly read, and the fact of the signing to be at once entered upon the journal, is mandatory. George Bolln Co. v. North Platte Valley Irrig. Co. 39: 868, 121 Pac. 22. — Wyo. —.

2. An erroneous number of original bill, employed by mistake of the clerk in attempting to give a double description to a bill signed by the presiding officer of a legislative body, while giving its correct number as enrolled bill, will be rejected as surplusage if the records show that the specified number of original bill was not passed, but that the enrolled bill mentioned was passed, duly signed, and filed in the proper archives. George Bolln Co. v. North Platte Valley Irrig. Co. 39: 868, 121 Pac. 22. — Wyo. —.

Validity.

3. A statute requiring a property owner to take a good and sufficient bond from one contracting to do work for him, to pay claims of laborers and materialmen, is insufficient which does not fix any method for ascertaining the penalty of the bond. George Bolln Co. v. North Platte Valley Irrig. Co. 39: 868, 121 Pac. 22, — Wyo. —. Construction; operation; effect.

4. In the absence of ambiguity in a statute, the practice of the taxing officers with respect to the levying of inheritance taxes cannot be taken into consideration in ascertaining the meaning of the statute. Swift ex rel. State Treasurer v. Barney, 39: 1024, 97 N. E. 750, 211 Mass. 134.

5. A statute making it the duty of the attorney general, when required by the governor, to appear for the state and prosecute in any court or before any officer, in any cause or matter, civil or criminal, in which the state may be a party or interested, is mandatory. State ex rel. Stubbs v. Dawson, 39: 993, 119 Pac. 360, 86 Kan. 180.

STOCKHOLDERS.

In banks, see Banks, 1-3.

STORAGE.

Imposing license tax on storage warehouse, see License, 4.

Liens for storage of hay, see Liens.

STOVE POLISH.

Injury to purchaser of, see Negligence, 2, 3; Trial, 11.

STREAMS.

As state boundary, see Boundaries.

STREET RAILWAYS.

Injury by automobile to passenger alighting from street car, see Automobile, 2.

As carriers, see Carriers.

Question for jury as to negligence of person when crossing track, see Trial, 7.

Rescission of land contract for breach of promise to build electric railway to property, see Vendor and Purchaser, 3.

Nearsightedness will not relieve one from the charge of contributory negligence, who steps upon a street car track immediately in front of a moving car, where the view of the track is unobstructed. Flynn v. Pittsburgh R. Co. 39: 1055, 83 Atl. 207. 234 Pa. 335. (Annotated)

SUBROGATION.

1. Children of a wife who mortgaged her real estate as surety for her husband's debt may, in case the mortgagee resorts to her property, be subrogated to the right of the mortgagee against property of the husband on which he also had a lien, as against the claim of a second mortgagee of the husband's property alone. Gaines v. Hill, 39: 999, 144 S. W. 92, 147 Ky. 445. 39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

2. When a principal against whom a judgment has been obtained executes his note, indorsed by other parties, who are condemned by the same judgment as his sureties, for the purpose of borrowing money with which to pay the judgment, the proceeds of the discount are as if loaned to the maker, and the payment of such proceeds in satisfaction of the judgment as payment by the maker, so that the indorsers are not subrogated to the judgment. Pugh v. Sample, 39: 834, 49 So. 526, 123 La. 791.

SUBWAY.

Duty to stop car in, to permit recovery of property dropped from car, see Carriers, 4.

SUCCESSION TAX.

See Taxes, 2, 3.

SUFFRAGE.

Right of, see Elections.

SUNDAY.

A verdict in a criminal case, which was found by the jury on a secular day, is not rendered invalid by reason of the fact that it was returned into and received by the court on Sunday, notwithstanding a statute which authorizes the impaneling of a jury or the taking of evidence on a trial, to be continued by order of the court, upon a legal holiday, if not a Sunday or Christmas Day, since such statute adds nothing to the pre-existing prohibitions against the performance of judicial acts on Sunday, and has no application to mere ministerial acts. State v. Keatine, 39: 844, 58 So. 139. — La. —. (Annotated)

SURETYSHIP.

See Principal and Surety.

SURPLUSAGE.

In pleading, see Pleading, 1.

SURVIVOR.

Rights of survivor in community property, see Husband and Wife, 3a.

SUSPENSION.

Of sentence, see Criminal Law, 4; Eschoppel, 2.

TALKING MACHINES.

Authority of agent to warrant that one buying talking machines to be given away as advertisement will sell certain number of records, see Principal and Agent, 1.

TAXES.

On dogs, see Animals.

Negligence of city officers in issuing duplicate paving tax certificates, see Evidence, 38.

Accepting forged paving tax certificates as collateral for loan, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

Proximate cause of loss to bank accepting stolen paving tax certificates, see Proximate Cause.

Matters peculiar to school taxes, see Schools.

Exemptions.

1. An exemption from taxation of property used exclusively for religious work does not include a parsonage used as a residence for the pastor of a church and his family, and such religious work as naturally would center around the pastor's residence. First Congregational Church v. Board of Review, 39: 437, 98 N. E. 275, 254 Ill. 220.

(Annotated)

Succession tax.

Construction of inheritance tax statute, see Statutes, 4.

2. Under a statute imposing an inheritance tax upon all property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, and providing that no bequest, devise, or distributive share shall be subject to the provisions of the act unless its value exceeds a certain amount, only property within the commonwealth is to be considered in determining whether or not the specified amount is exceeded, and if such property does not exceed the amount no tax can be imposed, although the sum received by the beneficiary from portions of the estate located in other jurisdiction exceeds the specified limit. Swift ex rel. State Treasurer v. Barney, 39: 1024, 97 N. E. 750, 211 Mass. 134.

(Annotated)

3. Under the provisions of an inheritance tax law that all property which shall pass by will or by the intestate laws of the state from any person who may die seised or possessed of the same while a resident of the state shall be subject to an inheritance tax, the one half of the community property which vests in the survivor of a community, subject to the community debts, is not subject to such tax. Kohny v. Dunbar, 39: 1107, 121 Pac. 544, 21 Idaho, 258.

(Annotated)

TAXPAYER'S SUIT.

Right to maintain, see Parties, 7.

TELEGRAPHS.

Recovery for mental anguish from delay, see Damages, 14.

TELEPHONES.

Punitive damages for failure to answer call of subscriber, see Damages, 2.

Punitive damages for removal of subscriber's telephone, see Damages, 3.

Measure of damages for wrongfully discontinuing services, see Damages, 5.

Mental suffering as element of damages for wrongful removal of telephone, see Damages, 13.

Mental suffering as element of damages from delay in transmitting telephone message, see Damages, 14.

Evidence on question of wilfulness in removing telephone, see Evidence, 24.

Combinations between telephone companies, see Monopoly and Combinations.

A telephone subscriber cannot hold the company, which fails to answer his call, liable for injury caused by going to the central office in a sick and weakened condition to obtain medical aid for a member of his family, where it had no notice that such injury was likely to result from its negligence. Southern Teleph. Co. v. King, 39: 402, 146 S. W. 489, — Ark. —.

(Annotated)

TENANTS IN COMMON.

See Cotenancy.

THEFT.

Exclusion from railroad premises of person arrested for, see Carriers, 19.

Of duplicate paving tax certificates issued by city officers, see Evidence, 38; Proximate Cause.

Pledge of stolen property, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 2.

THREATS.

As duress, see Duress.

Evidence of, see Evidence, 22.

Effect on liability of parent for killing person making assault on child, see Homicide, 3, 5.

TICKETS.

Ejection of passenger because of defective ticket, see Carriers, 10.

TIME.

For taking exception, see Appeal and Error, 7.

Denial of statutory time in which to plead to amended information, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Mistake in indictment as to time of commission of offense, see Indictment, 1.

TITLE.

Covenant as to, see Covenants and Conditions, 1, 3.

Of insured, see Insurance, 3.

Right to jury in action to settle question of, see Jury, 1, 2.

Of personal property, passing of, see Sale, 1, 2.

TOBACCO JUICE.

On street car step, see Carriers, 9.

TORTS.

Whether action on contract or in tort, see Action or Suit, 2.

Liability of corporation for, see Corporations, 1.

Husband's liability for torts of wife, see Husband and Wife, 1.

Master's liability for, see Master and Servant, 5-11.

Matters as to negligence generally, see Negligence.

Parent's liability for torts of child, see Parent and Child, 2.

TOWNS.

Implied contract of, to pay for services rendered, see Contracts, 1.

Mandamus to compel treasurer to pay town orders, see Mandamus, 3.

1. Where a new township is created out of a part of the territory of an old one, unless some provision is made in the act creating the new, or exists under the statute, respecting the property and existing liabilities of the old township, the old township retains the title to all the public property, except such as may be located in the detached territory, and is responsible for the debts contracted before the division. Union Twp. v. Oakdale Twp. 39: 284, 120 Pac. 968, — Okla. —.

2. A portion of an existing township cut off from it and organized into a new township is not, in the absence of statute or order of the commissioners making the division, entitled to share in the cash in the treasury or in taxes collected from levies made prior to the division. Union Twp. v. Oakdale Twp. 39: 284, 120 Pac. 968, — Okla. —. (Annotated)

TRADEMARK.

As to trademark, see Tradenames.

Proof of allegation of infringement, see Evidence, 39.

1. The legislature may provide for the registration of a union label, and make the unauthorized use thereof a misdemeanor. People v. Dantuma, 39: 1190, 96 N. E. 1087, 252 Ill. 561.

2. One not entitled to use a union label, who contracts to do a job of printing, is not subject to a penalty for use of the label on the work if it is placed there by a subcontractor who has a right to use it, and to whom the job was sublet in good faith with nothing in the contract to prevent it. People v. Dantuma, 39: 1190, 96 N. E. 1087, 252 Ill. 561. (Annotated)

TRADE NAMES.

The personal representative of one who has established a trade right in the use of his own name in connection with a manufactured product may lose the right of protection in the use of such name in the business continued by him, if he leads the public to believe that the originator of the business is still alive, and his personality was a factor in the creation and retention of the good will which the product enjoyed. Hazlett v. Pollack Stogie Co. 39: 632, 195 Fed. 28, — C. C. A. —.

TRADE UNIONS.

See Labor Organizations.

TREES.

In street, rights as to, see Highways, 1.
Obstruction of highway by limb on, see Highways, 3.

Injury by fall of limb from, in highway, see Highways, 4, 5.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

TRESPASS.

Negligence as to, see Negligence, 5.

TRIAL.

Prejudicial error in conduct of, see Appeal and Error, 23.

Questions of law and fact.

1. While the jury are conclusive judges of the credibility of witnesses, they are not authorized arbitrarily, or from partiality or caprice, to disregard uncontradicted and unimpeached testimony, or facts shown beyond question both by testimony and by admission. Sundgren v. Stevens, 39: 487, 119 Pac. 322, 86 Kan. 154.

2. Whether or not a witness is an accomplice of accused is for the determination of the jury on conflicting evidence, but for the court where his acts and conduct are admitted. People v. Coffey, 39: 704, 119 Pac. 901, 161 Cal. 433.

3. The jury must determine the effect of evidence tending to show that money received from one of several joint tortfeasors was not intended as a satisfaction of the claim. Matheson v. O'Kane, 39: 475, 97 N. E. 638, 211 Mass. 91.

4. When a landlord is sought to be held liable to the tenant's servant because of injury due to a nuisance on the property, it is for the jury to determine whether or not the owner knew of the dangerous condition of the premises at the time of the letting, or in time to have abated the nuisance before the injury occurred, or should have known it by the exercise of ordinary care. Bailey v. Kelly, 39: 378, 122 Pac. 1027, 86 Kan. 911.

5. Whether or not a street car passenger is negligent in attempting to alight on the left side of the car is for the jury, under evidence tending to show that the car was so crowded that he could not reach the right-hand exit. Elliott v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 608, 122 Pac. 614, — Wash. —.

6. Delay for four hours by a municipality in placing barriers at a small ditch or gully washed by an unprecedented storm in a park road, which is not extraordinarily dangerous, to prevent injury to travelers, is as matter of law not negligence where the locality is neither central nor much traveled. Cohen v. New York, 39: 985, 97 N. E. 866, 204 N. Y. 424.

7. The jury must determine whether or not a passenger who alights from a street car is negligent in attempting to cross the street in front of a standing car without looking to see if vehicles are coming on the parallel track which may render the crossing dangerous. Minor v. Mapes, 39: 214, 144 S. W. 219, — Ark. —.

8. Where there is proof that the driver of a young horse which he was driving for the first time drove it up to a railroad crossing where the gates were down and upon which a freight train was drilling at the time, and left it a short time with its head toward the gates and with the hitching weight attached, and then returned and took the hitching weight off, and, in order:

to see that all was right with the goods in the wagon, went to the rear thereof, so that he did not reach the reins when the horse took fright at the noise of the train and ran away, it is a question for the jury as to whether or not the driver was negligent. Dennery v. Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 574, 81 Atl. 861, — N. J. —.

9. Under a statute making it the duty of a railroad company controlling a right of way to provide and keep in repair a safe and sufficient passageway over it where any public highway shall cross the same, where it appears that the edge of a plank used to provide a crossing is so worn as to permit the foot of a person crossing the same to slip between the worn plank and the rail so that release could not be obtained by any reasonable effort in time to avoid injury by a train passing along the rail, an inference may be drawn that the crossing was not in good order, and the question as to whether the company negligently omitted to maintain a safe crossing was for the jury. Samkiwicz v. Atlantic City R. Co. (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 571, 81 Atl. 833, — N. J. —.

10. Whether or not an innkeeper who has assumed the obligation of a gratuitous bailee for the care of baggage has performed his duty is, in case of an attempt to hold him liable for its loss, a question for the jury. Baker v. Bailey, 39: 1085, 145 S. W. 532, — Ark. —.

11. The jury must determine whether or not stove polish composed of naphtha, colored and slightly thickened so as to make the mixture adhesive when applied, is merely naphtha under an assumed name, the sale of which is prohibited by statute. Gately v. Taylor, 39: 472, 97 N. E. 619, 211 Mass. 60.

Instructions.

Sufficiency of objection and exception, see Appeal and Error, 6.

Prejudicial error as to, see Appeal and Error, 21, 22.

12. An instruction that it is the carrier's duty to use reasonable care to protect its passenger from personal injury and insult, in an action to hold it liable for causing his false imprisonment, is not abstract, because not based on any state of facts in the case. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441.

13. The court need not define punitive damages in authorizing the jury to allow such damages for wrongfully causing death. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore, 39: 978, 58 So. 471, — Miss. —.

14. If one accused of murder is, on the facts, guilty of that offense unless, by reason of his mental condition, he was not responsible for his acts, an instruction of manslaughter is erroneous. State v. Ash, 39: 611, 122 Pac. 995, — Wash. —.

15. Whether or not the jury should be instructed to allow a minor such damages as they find he would suffer after majority, because of the wrongful killing of his father, will depend upon the character of the evidence, indicating the probability of such loss because of the character of the father. Rochester v. Seattle, R. & S. R. Co. 39: 1156, 122 Pac. 23, 67 Wash. 545.

16. The assumption in an instruction in an action to hold a railroad company liable for false imprisonment of a passenger, that the conductor telegraphed for "officers," is not error, although the evidence tends to show that he telegraphed for an officer, if more than one met the train in response to the message. New York, P. & N. R. Co. v. Waldron, 39: 502, 82 Atl. 709, 116 Md. 441.

17. The question of what is probable cause in an action for malicious prosecution being one of law, the court must, in instructing the jury, point out what facts which the evidence tends to support would, if found to exist, constitute probable cause. Wilkerson v. Wilkerson, 39: 1215, 74 S. E. 740, — N. C. —.

18. The court need not make use of the word "nuisance" in instructing the jury as to what will render a city liable for permitting one of its streets to become so out of repair as to constitute a public nuisance, but it is sufficient if it tells the jury that the city may be found guilty if it finds certain facts with respect to the condition of the street. Ludlow v. Com. 39: 411, 145 S. W. 406, 147 Ky. 706.

Verdict.

Presumption as to finding the facts necessary to support judgment founded on special verdict, see Appeal and Error, 10.

New trial for errors in verdict, see New Trial, 1, 2.

Remittitur on motion for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

Findings by referee, see Reference.

19. A finding by a court that the verdict in a personal-injury action was excessive, and its direction of a remittitur, amounts, as matter of law, to a finding that it was the result of passion or prejudice, where, under the statute, the court has no authority to interfere with the verdict except for such cause, although the court may expressly declare that it is not able to see that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice. Tunnel Mining & L. Co. v. Cooper, 39: 1064, 115 Pac. 901, 50 Colo. 390.

TROVER.

Right to waive tort and sue in contract for conversion, see Action or Suit, 2.

Conversion of bonds by brokerage firm, see Bankruptcy, 1.

Proof against bankrupt estate of claim of property converted, see Bankruptcy, 2.

Suing in conversion for failure to transfer bank stock on books, see Banks, 1.

Federal court following state decision as to right to waive tort and sue on contract, see Courts, 3.

Denial of jury trial in action of trover, see Jury, 3.

TRUSTEES.

Personal liability of trustees of savings banks, see Banks, 14-16.

Of religious society, see Religious Societies.

TRUSTS.

Property left in trust for incompetent person, see Incompetent Persons.

Limitations of actions as to, see Limitation of Actions, 2.

Conveyance in trust by religious society, see Religious Societies, 2.

Parol trusts.

Parol proof of trust, see Evidence, 13.

1. The fact that one taking a conveyance of property from a religious association is a brother and partner of one of the trustees does not prevent his becoming a purchaser of the property, or establish a relation of confidence between the parties which would uphold a parol promise to hold the property in trust for the association, against the terms of the absolute conveyance. Lafayette Street Church Soc. v. Norton, 39: 906, 95 N. E. 819, 202 N. Y. 379.

2. An express trust with respect to real estate may not be created or declared by parol, but, if a parent conveys a tract of land to her son for his benefit and also the benefit of his brother, and for more than ten years subsequently they occupy the land as tenants in common, the brother tilling the farm and making lasting and valuable improvements thereon under a claim of ownership, the grantee conceding during that period that his brother owns one-half the land, the heirs of the grantee will not be permitted to disturb the brother in his possession and title to an undivided one-half of the real estate, notwithstanding there is no written evidence of a trust or of the brother's title, and none was ever executed. Harman v. Fisher, 39: 157, 134 N. W. 246, 90 Neb. 688.

Constructive trusts.

Bank taking money for draft when insolvent as trustee ex maleficio, see Banks, 8.

3. A transaction by which a religious society, for the purpose of disposing of unused and unproductive property, which it has been unable to do otherwise, conveys it to a stranger, taking mortgages for its full value, upon condition that he shall care for and rent the property, pay the rent to the society, and reconvey it in case he cannot effect a lease, is not so unconscionable as to require him to account as trustee for the profits in case, after caring for the property for a number of years, he sells it at a large advance in price. Lafayette Street Church Soc. v. Norton, 39: 906, 95 N. E. 819, 202 N. Y. 379. (Annotated)

Resulting trusts.

4. Money of a wife invested in land in the husband's name is presumptively a gift; and, in the absence of facts and circumstances rebutting the presumption, such as violation of a prior or contemporaneous agreement to take the title in the wife's name, ignorance of its having been taken in the husband's name, subsequent expenditure of the wife's money in improvements thereon, an effort on her part to obtain the title after discovery of its condition, control of the property as her own against the husband, or the like, there is no resulting trust in her favor. Whitten v. Whitten, 39: 1026, 74 S. E. 237, — W. Va. —.

Following trust property.

Money for draft taken by bank while insolvent, see Banks, 7-10.

Trust funds in insolvent bank generally, see Banks, 11-13.

5. When a trustee mingles trust funds with his own and subsequently pays out a portion of the commingled funds, it will be presumed that he made his payments from that portion of the fund belonging to himself and retained the funds which did not belong to him; and, except in so far as he may distinguish what is his own, the whole fund will be treated as the trust property. Widman v. Kellogg, 39: 563, 133 N. W. 1020, — N. D. —.

UNDERTAKERS.

Liability of undertaker contracting to furnish carriages for injury, see Master and Servant, 7; Parties, 3.

UNFAIR COMPETITION.

1. An ice company and its general manager are liable in damages to another dealer in ice for malicious interference with his customers by representations that he was not a member of the ice dealers' association, and would be unable to secure ice after his supply was exhausted, and that the defendants and the ice dealers' association would refuse to furnish those who remained his customers with ice, and they would therefore be unable to obtain it. Schonwald v. Ragains, 39: 854, 122 Pac. 203, — Okla. —.

2. It is not necessary, in order to render the action of an ice company and its general manager malicious, that they be actuated by motives of ill-will toward a dealer with whose business they interfered; it is sufficient that the acts complained of were done intentionally and without just cause or excuse. Schonwald v. Ragains, 39: 854, 122 Pac. 203, — Okla. —.

UNIFORMITY.

Of dog tax, see Animals.

USURY.

Denial of equal protection by statute as to, see Constitutional Law, 3.

That the security did not in fact sell for the amount of the loan does not purge the usury in a transaction by which for a loan of $10 only $8.25 of which was advanced, a note is executed for $16.75 payable in thirty days, and secured on property worth $25. State v. Davis, 39: 136, 73 S. E. 130, 157 N. C. 648.

VACATION.

Of highways, see Highways, 8.

VALIDATION.

Of passenger's ticket, see Carriers, 10.

VALIDITY.

Of contract, see Contracts, 5-7.

Of statute, see Statutes, 3.

VARIANCE.

Between pleading and proof, see Evidence, 38, 39.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Covenants between, see Covenants and Conditions.

Estoppel of vendor by false representations, see Estoppel, 3.

Sale under execution or attachment, see Judicial Sale.

Sale of incompetent's property, see Incompetent Persons.

Rights and liabilities of purchaser of land subject to mortgage, see Mortgage, 4-6.

Confirmation of title in grantee from religious society, see Religious Societies, 2.

Specific performance of contract, see Specific Performance.

Grant of lands by state, see State.

Grantee as trustee, see Trusts, 1, 3.

1. A purchaser of land from one who holds a water-right contract thereon with an irrigation company, and who takes title thereto by a deed containing the ordinary covenants of warranty, with no reference to the question of water rights, and who refuses to accept water from the company, is not personally liable for the maintenance fee mentioned in the water-right contract between his grantor and the irrigation company; and an action cannot be maintained against him to recover a personal judgment therefor. Farmers' & M. Irrig. Co. v. Hill, 39: 798, 134 N. W. 929, 90 Neb. 847. (Annotated)

Deficiency in quantity.

2. When there is a deficiency of land in a sale per aversionem, the court cannot order the vendor to supply the deficiency out of land not included in the tract intended to be sold. Adams v. Porter, 39: 785, 57 So. 528, 129 La. 1085. (Annotated)

Rescission of contract.

3. That a purchaser might have ascertained the untruthfulness of the representation does not prevent his rescinding a contract for purchase of real estate because the vendor falsely represented that he had a good title, that the land was in a recorded plat to which the deed referred, and that he would build an electric railway line and a highway to the property. Fischer v. Hillman, 39: 1140, 122 Pac. 1016, — Wash. —. (Annotated)

Vendor's lien.

Bar of debt as bar to enforcement of vendor's lien, see Limitation of Actions, 1.

Demurrer to complaint in suit to enforce vendor's lien, see Pleading, 14.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

4. A vendor's lien upon land conveyed by him does not result from agreement, but it is a right given by implication of law and enforceable in equity where the vendor is entitled to it. Shaylor v. Cloud, 39: 1171, 57 So. 666, — Fla. —.

5. Where land is conveyed and a note is taken for the purchase price without any collateral security or contract mortgage upon the property to secure the payment of the purchase price, the law by implication gives to the vendors a right in the nature of a lien upon the property for the purchase price, which right, if not waived or abandoned, may be enforced in equity at any time before the remedy by action on the note is barred by the statute of limitations. Shaylor v. Cloud, 39: 1171, 57 So. 666, — Fla. —.

VENUE.

1. A statutory action brought by a remainderman against a life tenant, to declare a forfeiture for waste, is a suit "respecting titles to land" the venue of which is in the county in which the land involved is located. Brown v. Martin, 39: 16, 73 S. E. 495, 137 Ga. 338.

2. An action to recover damages for injury caused by the explosion of a paint dryer because of failure to put a caution signal on the package may be brought in the county where the injury occurred, under a statute permitting actions in tort against corporations to be brought in the county where the tort was committed, although the package was sold at defendant's place of business in another county. Penslee-Gaulbert Co. v. McMath, 39: 465, 148 S. W. 770, 148 Ky. 265.

VERDICT.

Presumption as to, on appeal, see Appeal and Error, 10.

New trial for errors in, see New Trial, 1, 2.

Remittitur from, on motion for new trial, see New Trial, 3.

In general, see Trial, 19.

VITAL STATISTICS.

Validity of act to establish bureau of, see Constitutional Law, 9.

VOTERS AND ELECTIONS.

See Elections.

WAIVER.

Of pledge by surrender of pledged property, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 1.

Of notice of sale of pledged property, see Pledge and Collateral Security, 3.

By insurer, see Insurance, 10, 11.

Of disqualification of juror, see Jury, 6.

Of warranty on sale of personalty, see Sale, 3.

WARD.

See Guardian and Ward.

WAREHOUSE.

Imposing tax on maintenance of warehouse by foreign manufacturer for storage of its own products within municipality, see License, 4.

WARNING.

Duty to warn purchaser of possible danger in use of article, see Negligence, 1.

WARRANTY.

Covenant of, see Covenants and Conditions, 1, 3.

Agent's authority as to, see Principal and Agent, 1.

On sale of personalty, see Sale, 3.

WASTE.

Venue of action for, see Venue, 1.

WATERS.

Compensation for property taken in improving navigation, see Eminent Domain.

Estoppel to require removal of building interfering with operations of drawbridge, see Estoppel, 1.

As to levees, see Levees.

Who may maintain action to compel removal of obstruction, see Parties, 5.

Personal liability of purchaser of land on contract with irrigation company under which it is supplied with water, see Vendor and Purchaser, 1.

1. That a rival merchant instigated the action of county commissioners to require the removal of a building which interferes with the free operation of a public drawbridge is no ground for interfering with such removal. Lenoir County v. Crabtree, 39: 1213, 74 S. E. 105, 158 N. C. 357.

2. A riparian owner having a qualified title to the land between high and low water mark of a navigable river cannot place a building thereon in such a manner as to interfere with the free operation of a public drawbridge over the stream. Lenoir County v. Crabtree, 39: 1213, 74 S. E. 105, 158 N. C. 357. (Annotated)
Public water supply.

3. The rules of a waterworks company, adopted for the government of its relations with its patrons, do not become parts of a contract between it and a patron, made in terms and upon conditions not contemplated by such rules and regulations, and radically different therefrom. Jopling v. Bluefield Waterworks & Improv. Co. 39: 814, 74 S. E. 943, — W. Va. —.

4. A rule of a water company making the property owner liable for water supplied to tenants through a common service pipe and authorizing it to cut off the water from the building upon failure to pay for water furnished any tenant, does not apply in case of a contract to furnish water to one tenant, so as to permit the cutting off of the water upon failure of another to pay his rental. Jopling v. Bluefield Water-works & Improv. Co. 39: 814, 74 S. E. 943, — W. Va. —. (Annotated) works & Improv. Co. 39: 814, 74 S. E. 943, — W. Va. —. (Annotated)

WATER SUPPLY.

See Waters, 3, 4.

WILFULNESS.

Evidence on question of, see Evidence, 24.

WILLS.

Matters concerning executors and administrators, see Executors and Administrators.

Signature of testator.

1. A holographic will executed on a printed blank is properly subscribed by the testator at the end of it, if the signature appears in the proper place in the blank, although in the blank left for the disposing clause testator states that he disposes of his property as per the provisions of the pages attached and consecutively numbered to a number specified, which sheets are then pinned in the blank, one on top of the other, with writing on one side only, and when read as though inserted where pinned, the will reads logically and consecutively. Re Field, 39: 1060, 97 N. E. 881, 204 N. Y. 448. Contest.

2. Contesting a will upon probable cause for alleged forgery does not work a forfeiture under a provision therein that if anyone mentioned in the will shall attempt to break it, he shall have only a nominal sum, and his share shall be divided amongst other persons mentioned. Rouse v. Branch, 39: 1160, 74 S. E. 133, — S. C. —. (Annotated)

Construction generally.

3. A will that is clear and unambiguous in its terms must be interpreted by those terms. The true inquiry is not what the testator meant, but what the terms used by him express. Couch v. Eastham, 39: 307, 73 S. E. 314, 69 W. Va. 710.

Nature of estate or interest created.

4. A devise of property to one for life, and then "to dispose of as she sees proper," does not convey a fee. Chewning v. Eason, 39: 805, 74 S. E. 357, 158 N. C. 578. (Annotated)

5. Where there is a devise in trust to pay the net income to A for life, with a discretionary power in trustees to use part of such income to pay off the mortgage encumbrance upon the land, and after the death of A a devise in fee simple to her heirs at law, the words "heirs at law" are used to designate the persons who at the time of A's death would be her heirs at law, and consequently the rule in Shelley's Case does not apply. Shugrue v. Long (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 257, 82 Atl. 905, — N. J. —.

6. Where the particular estate for life devised is equitable and the remainder in fee is the legal estate, the rule in Shelley's Case cannot operate to increase the equitable life estate into a legal estate in fee simple. Shugrue v. Long (N. J. Err. & App.) 39: 257, 82 Atl. 905, — N. J. —. Equitable conversion.

7. Where a will contains a provision purporting to devise real estate to several persons, followed by a direction that it be sold by the executor and that the proceeds be divided equally among them, the right with respect to such property acquired by one of them is subject to the lien of a judgment existing against him at the time of the testator's death. Penalosa State Bank v. Murray, 39: 817, 121 Pac. 1117, 86 Kan. 766. (Annotated)

WITNESSES.

Duty of attorney general to examine at request of governor, see Attorney General.

Arrest by conductor of passenger as witness against other passenger arrested, see Carriers, 2.

Secondary evidence to show relation of, to subject-matter of his testimony, see Evidence, 9.

Corroboration of testimony of accomplice, see Evidence, 33-36.

39 L.R.A. (N.S.)

Detention of passenger as witness to misdemeanor on train, see Evidence, 28.

Right of governor to require attorney to examine, see Governor.

Perjury by, see Perjury.

Question whether witness is an accomplice, see Trial, 2.

Jury as judges of credibility of witnesses, see Trial, 1.

1. A woman is a competent witness in an action under the civil damage act against one who sold intoxicating liquor to her husband after notice not to do so, to show his acts and conduct towards her during times of intoxication through liquor sold him by defendant. Fleming v. Gemein, 39: 315, 134 N. W. 969, 168 Mich. 541. (Annotated)

2. In an action to hold the owner of a vehicle liable for injury to an occupant through the driver's negligence, a statement by the driver after the accident is admissible in evidence to contradict statements made by him as a witness. John J. Radel Co. v. Borchas, 39: 227, 145 S. W. 155, 147 Ky. 506.

E ~~XXXXXXXXXX~~ 4

3 6105 063 244 805

